This section will consider first the 1993 Directive itself, which remains central to an understanding of the provisions in both the 1999 Regulations and the 2015 Act which implement it; secondly, it will discuss the 1999 Regulations, together with English case-law interpreting them and case-law of the European Court of Justice interpreting the Directive. Thirdly, it will set out the new general scheme for the control of unfair terms in Pt 2 of the 2015 Act. This section of the chapter refers to the Explanatory Notes accompanying the Consumer Rights Act 2015.¹³⁰⁹ The 2015 Act’s provisions preventing the exclusion of the consumer’s rights arising under contracts for the supply of goods, digital content and services will be considered later in the context of the provisions setting out the rights themselves.¹³¹⁰ Fourthly, a final part of this section will consider three particular cases of control required by the Consumer Rights Directive 2011 in relation to the imposition by traders of monetary charges on consumers, whether or not any contract term provides for these charges: payment charges, “additional payments” and helpline charges.¹³¹¹

¹²⁶⁷. See above, paras 1-026 et seq. See notably, the rule that consideration need not be adequate: Vol.I, para.4-014.

¹²⁶⁸. Nicholson v Willan (1804) 5 East 507.

¹²⁶⁹. This is clear a fortiori from the effectiveness of non-contractual notices to this effect: e.g. White v Blackmore [1972] 3 All E.R. 158.

¹²⁷⁰. Vol.I, paras 13-008 et seq. and see especially Interfoto Picture Library Ltd v Stiletto Visual Programmes Ltd [1989] 1 Q.B. 433.

¹²⁷¹. Vol.I, paras 15-007 et seq.

- 1272. Vol.I, para.7-143.
- 1273. Vol.I, paras 26-178 et seq.
- 1274. See Consumer Credit Act 1974, and Vol.II, para.39-100.
- 1275. e.g. Landlord and Tenant Act 1985 s.8 (implied terms as to fitness for human habitation).
- 1276. See Vol.II, paras 40-217 et seq.
- 1277. The protections were provided for persons “dealing as consumer”: Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.3-7, 12, Vol.I paras 15-073—15-079.
- 1278. See above, Vol.I, para.15-062.
- 1279. Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.4 and see above, Vol.I, paras 15-088—15-090.
- 1280. Directive 93/13/EEC on unfair terms in consumer contracts [1993] O.J. L95/21 (“1993 Directive”).
- 1281. 1993 Directive arts 3, 4(1) and 6, below, paras 38-220 et seq.
- 1282. 1993 Directive art.4(2), on which see below, paras 38-224 et seq.; 38-363 et seq. Terms which reflect legislation or the common law are also excluded from the scope of the Directive as a whole: 1993 Directive art.1(2), below, paras 38-214—38-219 and 38-357.
- 1283. 1993 Directive art.5.
- 1284. 1993 Directive art.7.
- 1285. 1993 Directive art.8. On “minimum harmonisation” and its significance see above, paras 38-020—38-021. For the difficulties caused by the relationship of the 1993 Directive and the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005, see below, paras 38-389—38-394.
- 1286. SI 1994/3159. The 1994 Regulations came into force on July 1, 1995 but were revoked and replaced by the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999 (SI 1999/2083). The 1994 Regulations applied to contracts made on or after July 1, 1995 (though the 1993 Directive art.10(1) required national implementing measures to govern contracts concluded after December 31, 1994) and the 1999 Regulations apply to contracts made on or after October 1, 1999, and before the coming into force of the provisions governing unfair contract terms in the Consumer Rights Act 2015, as explained below, para.38-196.
- 1287. SI 1999/2083. The 1999 Regulations were subject to minor amendments noted at the relevant paragraphs of this section.
- 1288. This may be seen in certain definitional provisions of the 1999 Regulations, in their implementation of art.1(2) of the Directive and in their lack of an exclusion of certain types of contract which appears in the preamble to the Directive, but not in its text see 31st edn (2012) of the present work, Vol.I, paras 15-017, 15-023 and 15-038.
- 1289. See below, para.38-323.
- 1290. This is most obviously the case as regards contracts where one party “deals as consumer” (Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 ss.3-7, 12) but is also the case as regards the controls on liability for negligence under the 1977 Act s.2: on which see Vol.I, paras 15-073—15-078 and 15-081 et seq.
- 1291. Law Commission, Scottish Law Commission, Unfair Terms in Contracts (Law Com. No.292, Scot Law Com. No.199, 2005).

- 1292. Proposal for a Directive on Consumer Rights of October 8, 2008 COM(2008) 614/3 final whose arts 30-39 concerned unfair contract terms; the principle of “full harmonisation” was set by art.4. On the significance of “full harmonisation” see above, paras 38-023—38-024.
- 1293. Directive 2011/83/EU on consumer rights [2011] O.J. L304/64. Its main requirements concern information and cancellation rights in off-premises and distance contracts (on which see above, para.38-056), implemented in UK law by the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 (SI 2013/3134), on which see above, paras 38-057 et seq. Other provisions in the 2011 Directive are implemented by the Consumer Rights Act 2015 ss.28 and 29 (on which see below, paras 38-489 and 38-450) and the Consumer Rights (Payment Charges) Regulations 2012 (SI 2012/3110): below, para.38-396. The provisions on unfair contract terms in consumer contracts in the Proposal for a Directive on Consumer Rights appeared in a somewhat modified form in the Commission’s Proposal for a Regulation on a Common European Sales Law Com(2011) 635 final, Annex, arts 79-85 CESL, but this proposal was withdrawn by the EU Commission in December 2014: Vol.I, para.1-013.
- 1294. See above, para.38-034.
- 1295.  The Consumer Rights Act 2015 is accompanied by a set of Explanatory Notes prepared by the Department for Business, Innovation and Skills (“Explanatory Notes 2015”). See also Conway, Consumer Rights Act, Briefing Paper (House of Commons Library, SN 6588, October 1, 2015).
- 1296. Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977; Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999.
- 1297. Explanatory Notes 2015, paras 5-9. Law Commission, Scottish Law Commission, Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts (2005) Law Com No.292, Scot Law Com No.199 (“Law Com. Unfair Terms (2005)”; Law Commission, Scottish Law Commission, Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts: Advice to the Department for Business, Innovation and Skills (March 2013) (“Law Com. Advice (2013)”; BIS, Enhancing Consumer Confidence by Clarifying Consumer Law (July 2012) (“BIS, Clarifying Consumer Law”). See also BIS, Enhancing Consumer Confidence through Effective Enforcement, Consultation on consolidating and modernising consumer law enforcement powers (March 2012).
- 1298. Above, para.38-195.
- 1299. The Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 as amended by the 2015 Act applies only to exemption clauses and other clauses falling within s.3(2)(b) of the 1977 Act: see Vol.I, paras 15-080 et seq.
- 1300. See generally below, paras 38-431 et seq.
- 1301. Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.79; Sch.7 above, para.38-129.
- 1302. See below, paras 38-339—38-343.
- 1303. Below, para.38-431 et seq.
- 1304. These are detailed in 2015 Act Sch.4, on which see below, para.38-388.
- 1305.  2015 Act ss.31(7), 47(5), 57(7), 70 and Sch.3, on which see Vol.II, para.38-343. In addition, the provisions in Pt 2 of the 2015 Act which implement the 1993 Directive have been designated as a specified UK law for the purposes of s.212 of the Enterprise Act 2002 (“Community infringements”), and acts or omissions in respect of any provision in Pt 2 of the 2015 Act are specified as possible “domestic infringements” for the purposes of s.211 of the Enterprise Act 2002. For the details and more general discussion of these powers see Vol.II, paras 38-388—38-394.
- 1306.  The Consumer Rights Act 2015 (Commencement No.3, Transitional Provisions, Savings and Consequential Amendments) Order 2015 (SI 2015/1630) art.3(a)-(c). (An exception is made as regards Pt 1 Ch.4's provisions governing services contracts which do not apply to "consumer transport services" (as defined by the Order) until October 1, 2016: 2015 Order arts 4 and 6(2) as amended by the Consumer Rights Act 2015 (Commencement No.3, Transitional Provisions, Savings and Consequential Amendments) (Amendment) Order 2016 (SI 2016/484) art.2). But see further below, para.38-403. Section 100(1) and (2) provides that ss.96-98 ("this chapter") which create powers in the Secretary of State to make consequential provisions, to make transitional, transitory and saving provisions, for financial provision come into force on the day on which the Act is passed, i.e. March 26, 2015 (Royal Assent). See also below, para.38-335.

1307. 2015 Act s.88.

1308.  Consumer Rights Act 2015 (Commencement No.3, Transitional Provisions, Savings and Consequential Amendments) Order 2015 (SI 2015/1630) art.6(1) provides that the provisions of Pts 1 and 2 brought into force on October 1, 2015 do not apply to any contract entered into before October 1, 2015 which would, apart from its provisions, be covered by Pts 1 or 2 nor to any notice provided or communicated before October 1, 2015 which would constitute a "consumer notice" and so be covered by Pt 2 of the Act. Article 6(3) of the 2015 Order therefore preserves the effect of the amendments to the law required by the Sale and Supply of Goods to Consumers Regulations 2002 (on which see below, paras 38-405 et seq.) in relation to any contract entered before October 1, 2015 despite the revocation of those Regulations by the Act; and art.6(4) preserves the effect of the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999 (on which see above, paras 38-201 et seq.) in relation to "any contract or notice relating to any contract" entered into before October 1, 2015 which is provided or communicated before October 1, 2015 and which would otherwise be covered by Pts 1 or 2 of the Act, despite the revocation of those Regulations by the 2015 Act. Similarly, the provisions brought into force on October 1, 2016 in Pt 1 of the 2015 Act in relation to any "contract to supply a consumer transport service" do not apply to contracts entered before that date and the provisions in the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 therefore still apply to those contracts until that date: SI 2015/1630 arts 4 and 6(2) (as amended by SI 2016/484 art.2(3)). On the temporal application of the enforcement provisions of the 2015 Act, see below, para.38-335.

1309. These were prepared by the Department of Business, Innovation and Skills ("Explanatory Notes 2015").

1310. Below, paras 38-492—38-493, 38-524 and 38-546.

1311. Below, paras 38-395—38-398.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts
Section 6. - The Control of Unfair Contract Terms
(b) - The Directive on Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts

Introduction

38-199

On April 5, 1993 the EC Council enacted a directive on Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts ("the Directive"). ¹³¹² It was made under art.95 of the EC Treaty (now art.114 TFEU), which empowered the European legislator to issue directives for the approximation of provisions laid down by laws, regulations or administrative action which have as their object the establishment and functioning of the common market, making particular mention of proposals in the field of consumer protection which must "take as a base a high level of protection". ¹³¹³ The preamble to the Directive makes clear that its purposes are: (i) to reduce distortions in competition between sellers of goods ¹³¹⁴ and suppliers of services caused by differences in rules governing terms in consumer contracts; (ii) to create effective uniform legal protection for consumers from the imposition of unfair contract terms, ¹³¹⁵ especially (but not exclusively) where this concerns transactions with suppliers in Member States other than their own ¹³¹⁶; and (iii) to enhance the awareness of consumers as to the rules of law which govern consumer contracts in Member States other than their own, for otherwise they may be deterred from entering direct transactions with suppliers in other Member States. ¹³¹⁷ The Directive requires only minimum requirements for the control of fairness of terms in consumer contracts, it being expressly acknowledged that Member States are free to retain or to introduce systems of control which are more protective of consumers. ¹³¹⁸ This means, inter alia, that decisions of courts of other Member States concerning the interpretation of their legislation implementing the Directive have to be treated with considerable care, as their interpretation may be of national legislation which (lawfully) goes further than the Directive requires. ¹³¹⁹

Significance of the Directive for English law

38-200

As earlier explained, the Directive remains important even after its implementation into UK law by the 1999 Regulations or the 2015 Act, as English courts must wherever possible give effect not merely to the terms but also the purposes of the Directive, and to decisions of the Court of Justice interpreting its provisions. ¹³²⁰ In the following discussion, therefore, while reference will be made to the terms of the Regulations and the 2015 Act, where necessary reference will be made to the Directive itself. For this purpose, the Court of Justice will normally take "autonomous" interpretations of its concepts, and has done so in respect of some of the key concepts. ¹³²¹ More generally, the Court of Justice has developed two important areas of case-law governing the Directive, recognising a duty in national courts to address the issue of the fairness of a term falling within the Directive's controls of their own motion ¹³²² and providing national courts with considerable and increasingly elaborate "guidance" as to the proper application of the notion of "fairness" itself and of the related requirement that a term be plain and intelligible. ¹³²³ The significance of this case-law for the UK's implementation of the Directive will be found in the exposition of the provisions of the 1999 Regulations and in the commentary made on the provisions of the 2015 Act.

- 1312. Directive 93/13 on unfair terms in consumer contracts [1993] O.J. L95/21 (“1993 Directive”). For discussion of the Directive or the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations, see Dean (1993) 56 M.L.R. 581; Collins (1994) 14 O.J.L.S. 229; Macdonald (1994) J.B.L. 441; Hondius (1994) 7 Journal of Contract Law 34; Willett (1994) Con. L.J. 114; Beale, Good Faith and Fault in Contract Law (1995), Ch.9; Bright and Bright (1995) 111 L.Q.R. 655; Weatherill (1995) 3 European Review of Private Law 307, especially 316 et seq. cf. Joerges at 175; Collins at 353; de Moor at 257; Weatherill, E.C. Consumer Law and Policy (2005), pp.115 et seq.; Howells and Wilhelmsson, E.C. Consumer Law (1997), pp.88 et seq.; Cartwright, Anson’s Law of Contract, 28th edn (2002), pp.200-203, 300 et seq.; Macdonald [1999] C.L.J. 413; Whittaker (2000) 116 L.Q.R. 95; Bright (2000) 20 L.S. 331; Whittaker (2004) ZEuP 75; Whittaker (2010) 73 M.L.R. 106.
- 1313. EC Treaty art.95(3) (now art.114(3) TFEU).
- 1314. But see discussion, below, paras 38-023 et seq.
- 1315. Directive 1993 recital 9.
- 1316. This is clear from recital 2’s use of the phrase “notably, when [sellers or suppliers] sell or supply in other Member States” (emphasis added) and in recital 7 (“both at home and throughout the internal market”).
- 1317. Directive 1993 recital 5.
- 1318. Directive 1993 art.8 and see Caja de Ahorros y Monte de Piedad de Madrid v Asociación de Usuarios de Servicios Bancarios (Ausbanc) [2010] 3 C.M.L.R. 43 (in relation to art.4(2) of the Directive, on which see above, para.38-020), Pereni#ová v SOS finance, spol. sro [2012] 2 C.M.L.R. 28 paras 34-36 (in relation to art.6(1) in fine of the Directive). The Proposal for a Directive on Consumer Rights of October 8, 2008 Com(2008) 614/3 final art.4 (full harmonisation) sought to change this position as regards the 1993 Directive, but the relevant provisions (arts 30-39 of the Proposal) were not present in the Directive as enacted: Directive 2011/83/EU on consumer rights [2011] O.J. L304/64.
- 1319. e.g. the decision of the French Cour de Cassation in Civ.(1) March 15, 2005, Bulletin civil I No.135 which held that the French legislation protecting consommateurs ou non-professionnels against unfair contract terms could apply for the protection of a corporation as included within the term non-professionnel as long as it acted outside its business, even though both the Directive itself and the ECJ make clear that “consumer” refers only to human persons: 1993 Directive art.2(b) and above, para.38-030.
- 1320. Above, paras 38-013 et seq.
- 1321. See, notably, in respect of the concepts used in art.4(2) of the 1993 Directive: below, paras 38-229—38-232.
- 1322. Below, paras 38-304—38-306.
- 1323. Below, paras 38-246—38-248.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 6. - The Control of Unfair Contract Terms

(c) - The Old Law: the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999

Temporal application of the 1999 Regulations

38-201

The 1999 Regulations apply to contracts made on or after October 1, 1999 and before October 1, 2015, when the provisions governing unfair contract terms in the Consumer Rights Act 2015 were brought into force so as to apply to contracts made on or after that date. ¹³²⁴

Summary of impact of the 1999 Regulations

38-202

⚠ The 1999 Regulations subject a very wide range of types of terms in consumer contracts to two requirements: (i) that the terms should be “fair”; and (ii) that when in writing they should be written in “plain, intelligible language” (the latter being sometimes referred to as a requirement of “transparency”). There are two levels of effect in respect of any failure to fulfil these requirements. At the level of the relationship between the parties to a contract, a term which fails the requirement of fairness is not binding on the consumer, while a term which fails the requirement of transparency is to be interpreted contra proferentem and may be subjected to the test of fairness even if it relates to the contract’s price or main subject matter. ¹³²⁵ At a more general level, the 1999 Regulations empower the Competition and Markets Authority (CMA) (formerly the Office of Fair Trading (OFT) ¹³²⁶) and a number of other bodies to bring proceedings for an injunction to prevent a person using a term which they consider is unfair or unclear. ¹³²⁷ The OFT published guidance on its approach to its powers under the Regulations and on why it considered that certain kinds of standard terms used in contracts with consumers have the potential for unfairness under the Regulations, some of which is general and some of which specific to certain market sectors. ¹³²⁸ ⚠ These publications provide useful guidance as to the likely application of the test of unfairness, but the OFT’s views have not always been followed by the courts. ¹³²⁹

^{1324.} Above, para.38-197.

^{1325.} Below, paras 38-311—38-316, 38-239 and 38-321.

^{1326.} As from April 1, 2014, the OFT was abolished and its functions under the 1999 Regulations taken over by the CMA: Enterprise and Regulatory Reform Act 2013 (Competition) (Consequential, Transitional and Saving Provisions) (No.2) Order 2014 (SI 2014/549) Sch.1(2) para.26; Public Bodies (The Office of Fair Trading Transfer of Consumer Advice Scheme Function and Modification of Enforcement Functions) Order 2013 (SI 2013/783) art.10. See further below, paras 38-323 et seq.

1327. 1994 Regulations reg.8; 1999 Regulations reg.12 (as amended), and see below, paras 38-323 et seq.

1328.

⚠ See notably, OFT, Unfair contract terms guidance (2008) OFT311 available at <http://www.oft.gov.uk/about-the-oft/legal-powers/legal/unfair-terms/guidance>. These guidance notes replaced regular “unfair contract terms bulletins”, to which reference is on occasion still made as they provided more context for the examples which they set out. The OFT’s guidance remains available on the CMA’s website: <https://www.gov.uk/government/collections/cma-consumer-enforcement-guidance>. The CMA has published guidance setting out its understanding of the Consumer Rights Act 2015: Unfair contract terms guidance, Guidance on the unfair contract terms provisions in the Consumer Rights Act, (July, 2015) available at https://www.gov.uk/government/uploads/system/uploads/attachment_data/file/450440/Unfair_Terms_Main_Guid. See also CMA, Consumer law compliance review: cloud storage, Findings report (May 27, 2016), esp. Ch.5, available at https://www.gov.uk/government/uploads/system/uploads/attachment_data/file/526447/cloud-storage-findingsreport.

1329. Director General of Fair Trading v First National Bank Plc [2001] UKHL 52, [2002] 1 A.C. 481 and see below, para.38-225 and see also OFT v Abbey National Plc [2009] UKSC 6, [2010] 1 A.C. 696 below, paras 38-226—38-227 and cf. Office of Fair Trading v Ashbourne Management Services Ltd [2011] EWHC 1237 (Ch), [2011] E.C.C. 32.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 6. - The Control of Unfair Contract Terms

(c) - The Old Law: the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999

(i) - The Types of Contracts Governed by the 1999 Regulations

All types of consumer contracts

38-203

! The 1999 Regulations (following the English version of the 1993 Directive) provide that they apply in relation to “unfair terms in contracts concluded between a seller or supplier and a consumer”, ¹³³⁰ but they define “seller or supplier” without reference to the types of contracts involved. ¹³³¹ Moreover, the terminology of sale and supply is not used at the same points in the Directive in a number of its other language versions, which instead use words translatable as “trader” (such as the French, professionnel) instead of “seller and supplier” and recital 10 of the Directive explains that its rules “should apply to all contracts concluded between sellers or suppliers and consumers”. ¹³³² The general view of commentators has been that the 1993 Directive applies to all types of consumer contracts defined by reference only to the status of their parties: the “seller and supplier” and the “consumer”. ¹³³³ This has now been put beyond doubt by the Court of Justice of the EU in Brusse v Jahani BV ¹³³⁴ and Šiba v Dev#nas. ¹³³⁵ In Brusse v Jahani BV the Court of Justice of the EU considered a question on the proper interpretation of the definition of “seller or supplier” in the context of Dutch law, given that, like the English version, the Dutch version of the Directive uses “seller” to describe the business party to the contract. ¹³³⁶ Having reviewed the various language versions of the Directive, the Court noted that, whatever the terminology used in the different versions, they all defined the business party in the same way (as reflected in the definition in the 1999 Regulations reg.3(1)) and that therefore:

“beyond the term used to designate the other party to the contract with the consumer, the legislature’s intention was not to restrict the scope of the directive solely to contracts concluded between a seller and a consumer.” ¹³³⁷

Noting the reference in recital 10 to “all contracts” concluded between sellers and suppliers and consumers, ¹³³⁸ the Court concluded that:

“it is therefore by reference to the capacity of the contracting parties, according to whether or not they are acting for purposes relating to their trade, business or profession that the directive defines the contracts to which it applies.” ¹³³⁹

This view of the scope of the Directive reflects the purpose of the Directive in the protection of consumers as “weaker parties” as regards both their bargaining power and their level of knowledge. ¹³⁴⁰ As a result, the Court held that a contract of residential tenancy concluded between a landlord acting for purposes relating to his trade, business or profession and a tenant acting for purposes which do not relate to his trade, business or profession fell within the scope of the Directive. ¹³⁴¹ In Šiba v Dev#nas ¹³⁴² the Court of Justice followed its earlier view in Brusse and therefore held that contracts for the supply of legal services fell within the scope of the Directive, even though the lawyer supplying those services exercised a “liberal profession” (which is distinguished from a business in the laws of some Member States). ¹³⁴³ In Tarc#u v Banca Comercial# Intesa Sanpaolo România SA, the Court of Justice followed this earlier case-law and therefore held that the 1993 Directive could apply to a contract of guarantee undertaken by a natural person acting other than in the course of business under which he or she guaranteed the obligations of a debtor company to a commercial lender. ¹³⁴⁴ ! According to the Court of Justice “[t]he purpose of the contract is ... subject to the exceptions listed in the recital 10 of the Directive ... , irrelevant in determining the scope of the directive”. ¹³⁴⁵ ! As a result, the Directive (and therefore the 1999 Regulations) do not restrict the categories of contract to which they apply in the sense of the types of subject matter with which they are concerned; the contracts to which they apply are defined exclusively by reference to the status of the two parties: “seller and supplier” and “consumer”. ¹³⁴⁶ On the other hand, in Šiba v Dev#nas the Court held that the nature of the subject matter of the contract would be relevant to the assessment of the fairness of its terms. ¹³⁴⁷

Examples

38-204

The Directive’s Annex setting out an indicative list of terms which may be unfair (appearing in Sch.2 to the 1999 Regulations) assumes that it applies to non-physical property, including transactions in transferable securities, financial instruments and to the purchase or sale of foreign currency, traveller’s cheques or international money orders denominated in foreign currency. ¹³⁴⁸ This being so, then contracts of assignment or of the licensing of contractual rights (for example, a right to use computer software) are also included within the ambit of the Regulations; and English courts have held or assumed that the Regulations apply to a wide variety of types of consumer contract, notably, contracts of residential tenancy ¹³⁴⁹, contracts for the supply of a newly-built house, ¹³⁵⁰ contracts for the provision of financial services, ¹³⁵¹ and contracts of membership of a gymnasium. ¹³⁵²

“Sellers or suppliers”

38-205

Regulation 3(1) of the 1999 Regulations provides that:

“... “seller or supplier” means any natural or legal person who, in contracts covered by these Regulations, is acting for purposes relating to his trade, business or profession, whether publicly owned or privately owned.” ¹³⁵³

Restricting consumer protection to situations where the other party is acting “in the course of a business” is familiar to English lawyers from the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977, many of whose controls are restricted to exemption clauses governing “business liability”, ¹³⁵⁴ but the proper interpretation for the purposes of the Directive (and therefore the Regulations) may differ. As explained earlier in relation to the proper EU approach to the definition of the non-consumer party to consumer contracts generally, ¹³⁵⁵ in BKK Mobil Oil ¹³⁵⁶ the Court of Justice held that the concept of “trader” and “business” (which are identical) for the purposes of the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005 are broadly defined and must include public bodies even if they conclude contracts in the course of pursuing a task in the public interest ¹³⁵⁷; the significance of these terms:

“must be determined in relation to the related but diametrically opposed concept of “consumer”, which refers to any individual not engaged in commercial or trade activities.” ¹³⁵⁸

And in Šiba v Dev#nas the Court of Justice followed this case-law in relation to “seller or supplier” under the 1993 Directive, holding therefore that the public or private nature of the specific task which forms the subject matter of the contract cannot determine that Directive’s application. ¹³⁵⁹ This view also precludes any requirement that the “seller or supplier” acts with a view to profit as public bodies providing services to citizens/consumers will often not do so. Finally, it is submitted that, once the parties to the contract satisfy the definitions of “seller or supplier” and “consumer” under the 1993 Directive (and therefore the 1999 Regulations), there is no need to establish that the particular contract concluded between them formed a regular part of the seller or supplier’s business activity. ¹³⁶⁰

“Consumer”

38-206

Regulation 3(1) of the 1999 Regulations provides that:

“... “consumer” means any natural person who, in contracts covered by these Regulations, is acting for purposes which are outside his trade, business or profession.” ¹³⁶¹

Unlike the definition in the Consumer Rights Act 2015 which refers to acting for purposes which are “wholly or partly” outside his trade etc, ¹³⁶² this follows exactly the definition in the 1993 Directive. ¹³⁶³ As earlier explained, it therefore restricts consumers to “natural persons” and rules out the possibility of a company relying on the provisions of the Regulations even if it acts “for purposes which are outside [its] business”. ¹³⁶⁴ The possibly wider significance of “consumer” in the Directive (and therefore the 1999 Regulations) has been discussed earlier, ¹³⁶⁵ as has the English case-law on the Regulations themselves ¹³⁶⁶ and the possible relevance of the concept of the “average consumer” for these purposes. ¹³⁶⁷

“Consumers” as “suppliers”?

38-207

❗ The general question whether a person who supplies, other than in the course of his or her business, goods or services to a business (as, for example, in the case of selling a used car or jewellery) can count as a “consumer” for the purposes of EU consumer protection law has been raised earlier, but the question must be addressed specifically in relation the 1993 Directive. ¹³⁶⁸ ❗ In this respect, the English version of arts 1 and 2 of the Directive, which describe the business party to the contract as the “seller or supplier” may be thought to support an understanding of a consumer as “recipient”. Also in favour of this view is the concern of the Directive with enhancing the fairness of competition of the supply of property and services, which may be thought to make sense only where the latter are indeed competing, i.e. where their provision is by “businesses”. ¹³⁶⁹ And in general, as has been seen, the European Court has taken a restrictive interpretation of the notion of “consumer” even in the context of consumer protection legislation. ¹³⁷⁰ On the other hand, other language versions of arts 1 and 2 of the 1993 Directive do not assume a sale or supply by the business, instead using terms to describe the non-consumer party to the contract such as professionnel in the French and Gewerbetreibender in the German. ¹³⁷¹ Moreover, as earlier noted, ¹³⁷² the justification for the protection of consumers against unfair terms accepted by the Court of Justice of the EU is that “consumers” are weaker than traders in their bargaining power and level of knowledge and that this leads to their agreeing to terms whose content they cannot influence and this justification applies with equal force to “consumers” who supply as to those who receive. The view that the Directive does not apply to contracts by which a consumer sells or supplies is not shared by the European Commission, which has observed that:

“Although contracts for the sale of products or the provision of services are those most frequently concluded between professionals and consumers, the Directive also covers other contracts such as contracts pertaining to guarantees for the benefit of a financial institution or even cases in which the consumers themselves are sellers (provided the buyer is acting in the course of business).” ¹³⁷³

On balance, it is submitted that the Court of Justice is likely to follow this broader interpretation, applying the Directive to cases where consumers “supply” as well as receive. ¹³⁷⁴  A key example of a person who satisfies the Regulations’ definition of a consumer (in terms of a natural person acting for purposes which are outside his trade, business or profession), ¹³⁷⁵ but who provides rather than receives a service, would be a non-business surety guaranteeing the debts of her husband’s company to a bank, thereby providing a “financial service”. ¹³⁷⁶  In this context, more recently the English courts have accepted that the 1999 Regulations can in principle apply to a bank guarantee given by a consumer, at least where the guarantor and the principal debtor each entering into their respective contracts are natural persons and are not acting in the course of their trade and profession. ¹³⁷⁷

“Consumers” as agents for non-consumers

38-208

Where an individual (A) makes a contract outside his trade, business or profession with a person (B) for the supply of goods or services within the course of the latter’s business but A does so as agent for a third person (C) who acts in the course of his business, then the contract thereby formed between B (the supplier) and C (the principal) ¹³⁷⁸ does not count as a consumer contract and so falls outside the controls of the 1999 Regulations. However, where in such circumstances A also undertakes personal liabilities under the contract which he makes on behalf of the principal, ¹³⁷⁹ then the contract may qualify as a consumer contract and so fall within the Regulations for this purpose. So, it has been held that where after a fire an owner of a house (A) entered a contract for its reinstatement with a builder (B) as agent for his insurer (C) (which had exercised its contractual right to repair the property rather than pay an indemnity) but under which he (A) also undertook personal liabilities in respect of payment for the building work, then the terms of the contract could be assessed for fairness under the Regulations. ¹³⁸⁰

Third parties and consumers

38-209

 Under the Contracts (Rights for Third Parties) Act 1999 the parties to a contract may create a right of enforcement in a third party, subject to a series of conditions. ¹³⁸¹ Where such a contract is a “consumer contract” within the meaning of the 1999 Regulations, then in principle its terms would be subject to their controls in the normal way and therefore could extend to the assessment of fairness of a term which, for example, sought to exclude or limit the extent to which the consumer could invoke the liability of a third party (such as a manufacturer) or otherwise sue a third party. On the other hand, where parties to a contract (whether or not it is a consumer contract) seek to create a right in a third party (a “consumer” in the sense that he or she is not acting in a course of business), but also sought to limit that right (for example, by a limitation clause) it would appear that that third party could not invoke the controls of the 1999 Regulations. This follows from the fact that the 1999 Regulations (following the 1993 Directive) apply only for the protection of consumers who are party to the contract with the trader, as reflected in the definition of “consumer” itself as “any natural person who, in contracts covered by these Regulations, is acting for purposes which are outside his trade [etc]”. ¹³⁸²

An autonomous view of “contract”?

38-210

So far in this discussion it has been assumed that the transaction which is (arguably) within the ambit of the 1999 Regulations qualifies as a “contract” within the meaning of this notion in English law. However, the question arises whether the Court of Justice of the EU would indeed rely on the classifications of the domestic laws of the Member States for this purpose, or would instead adopt an autonomous view of this concept. ¹³⁸³ The Court of Justice would decide between these two positions on the basis of which of them is likely to be most effective in enabling the Directive to achieve its purposes ¹³⁸⁴ and on the difficulty of constructing a European conception of contract for the purposes of the Directive. ¹³⁸⁵ As regards the latter, it is to be noted that the Court has already embarked on such an undertaking for the purposes of European instruments on international jurisdiction. ¹³⁸⁶ As regards the purposes of the Directive, both reduction in distortions in competition and the protection of consumers would be enhanced by the Court’s taking an autonomous view of “contract” for the purposes of the Directive, for such a view would clearly enhance the harmonising purpose of the Directive and thereby make more effective its policy of consumer protection within the EU.

38-211

❗ If the Court of Justice were to take such an autonomous view of contract, it is likely that it would do so on the basis of an agreement between the parties. ¹³⁸⁷ Such a view would sometimes require an English court to classify as contractual for the purposes of the Directive a transaction which in English law is considered non-contractual. ¹³⁸⁸ ❗ Three examples may be given. First, the laws of most of the Member States contain no requirement conceptually equivalent to English law’s doctrine of consideration. ¹³⁸⁹ This raises the possibility of including within the ambit of the Directive the terms on which professional services are provided gratuitously. Secondly, the relationship between the beneficiary of a trust and the trustee may sometimes be considered “contractual” for the purposes of the Directive (and therefore the Regulations), even though it is not in the general English law. ¹³⁹⁰ Thirdly, some provisions of public services, such as water and electricity, may be held to be “contractual” for the purposes of the Regulations even though they are non-contractual under general English law. ¹³⁹¹ In this respect, the European Commission has drawn attention to its statement in the Council’s minutes in connection with the adoption of the common position concerning art.2 of the Directive on the notion of the contract which “points out that the notion of contract also includes transactions involving supplies of goods or services in a regulatory framework”. ¹³⁹² Moreover, in Schulz & Egbringhoff ¹³⁹³ Advocate General Wahl distinguished in the context of the exclusion from the 1993 Directive of contract terms required by legislation, ¹³⁹⁴ between contracts under which electricity or gas was supplied under contracts by suppliers under a legal “universal service obligation” some of whose terms were set by legislation, which he referred to as “contracts, which are governed by national legislation, [which] do not fall within the sphere of freedom of contract” ¹³⁹⁵ and those made in the absence of such an obligation under “special contracts” which are “concluded on the basis of freedom of contract”. ¹³⁹⁶ ❗ This approach therefore distinguishes between two categories of contract, those which are closely regulated by law (both as regards an obligation to conclude the contract in the supply and some of its terms) and those not so regulated, and thereby assumes that the fact of such regulation does not preclude the transaction from being classed as a contract for the purposes of the 1993 Directive. ¹³⁹⁷ On the other hand, where terms of a consumer contract are required by law in this way they fall within the exclusion from the scope of the 1993 Directive as being terms which reflect “mandatory statutory or regulatory provisions”. ¹³⁹⁸

Differences from the ambit of the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977

38-212

It will be apparent that the types of contracts governed by the Regulations differ significantly from those governed by the provisions of the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 before their amendment by the Consumer Rights Act 2015. ¹³⁹⁹ First, while the ambit of the Regulations is restricted to consumer contracts, a significant number of provisions of the 1977 Act apply to non-consumer contracts, notably, as regards any exclusion of liability for negligence, ¹⁴⁰⁰ of contractual liability in general where it arises from breach of a written standard term ¹⁴⁰¹ and as regards the implied terms as to title, quality, etc. in sale of goods.¹⁴⁰² Secondly, on the other hand, as regards consumer contracts, the net of the Regulations is rather wider than the 1977 Act, notably in their inclusion of contracts of insurance,¹⁴⁰³ sale at auction of second-hand goods,¹⁴⁰⁴ contracts which relate to the creation or transfer of a right or interest in intellectual property,¹⁴⁰⁵ and contracts for the sale, etc. of land.¹⁴⁰⁶ Thirdly, the 1977 Act may apply to noncontractual notices,¹⁴⁰⁷ whereas the Regulations apply only to contract terms, though it has been noted that “contract” may be given for this purpose a meaning different from its general significance in English law.¹⁴⁰⁸

^{1330.} 1999 Regulations reg.4(1); 1993 Directive art.1. The 1994 Regulations reg.3(1) and Sch.1(a)-(d) were expressed as not applying to contracts relating to employment, contracts relating to succession rights, any contract relating to rights under family law and any contract relating to the incorporation and organisation of companies or partnerships. This reflected 1993 Directive recital 10, as noted below, n.1280.

^{1331.} 1999 Regulations reg.3(1), “seller or supplier”.

^{1332.} (Emphasis added): “que ces règles doivent s’appliquer à tout contrat conclu entre un professionnel et un consommateur”. Similar formulations are found in the Italian, Spanish and German versions of the Directive; 1993 Directive art.2.

^{1333.} On the 1993 Directive see Tenreiro (1993) 7 Contrats-Concurrence-Consommation 1; Trochu (1993) D.S. Chron 315, 317; Weatherill, EU Consumer Law and Policy (2005) p.117; Calais-Auloy and Steinmetz, Droit de la consommation, 7th edn (2006), para.179 (although referring to the French legislation implementing the Directive). The arguments in favour of this position have been rehearsed in successive editions of the present work, Vol.I, Ch.15 since its 27th edition.

^{1334.} C-488/11, May 30, 2013.

^{1335.} C-537/13, January 15, 2015 [2015] Bus. L.R. 81.

^{1336.} C-488/11 paras 25-27 (“verkoper”).

^{1337.} C-488/11 para.28. On the definition in the Regulations see below, para.38-205.

^{1338.} 1993 Directive recital 10 notes that, “as a result” of its application to “all contracts concluded between sellers or suppliers and consumers”, it does not apply to “contracts relating to employment, contracts relating to succession rights, contracts relating to rights under family law and contracts relating to the incorporation and organization of companies and partnership agreements”. Generally, these exclusions (which were reflected in the text of the 1994 Regulations reg.3(1), Sch.1) are straightforward given that the parties to these types of contract would not qualify as “seller or supplier” and “consumer” within the meaning of the 1993 Directive, but there is a particular difficulty with this interpretation as regards contracts of employment. While normally these will not count as “consumer contracts” as neither the “supplier of the service” (the employee) nor the wouldbe recipient of the service (the employer) act for purposes outside their “trade, business or profession”, there may be circumstances in which the employer could appear to count as a “consumer”, e.g. in the case of a private individual employing a nanny for his or her children (perhaps using for this purpose the standard terms of the nanny’s professional association), where it could be argued that the individual does so as a consumer of the professional services of the nanny. In theory, there could here be both a “consumer contract” and a contract of employment, but it may be that the CJEU could read recital 10 as reflecting an understanding that the existence of a contract of employment is incompatible with there being a “consumer contract” within the meaning of the 1993 Directive.

^{1339.} C-488/11 para.30.

^{1340.} C-488/11 para.31.

- 1341. C-488/11 para.34.
- 1342. C-537/13, January 15, 2015.
- 1343. C-537/13 at paras 17, 20–24.
- 1344.  C-74/15 Order of CJEU November 19, 2015 (“Tarc#u (C-74/15)”) (an “order” is made by the CJEU where it considers that the question for a preliminary ruling admits of no reasonable doubt). See similarly Bucura v SC Bancpost SA (C-348/14) July 9, 2015 (available only in French) paras 35–38 (1993 Directive may apply where the alleged “consumer” contracted as “co-debtor” to a person concluding a contract of consumer credit). See also Air Berlin Plc & Co. Luftverkehrs KG v Bundesverband der Verbraucherzentralen und Verbraucherverbände—Verbracherzentrale Bundesverband eV (C-290/16) of July 6, 2017 at para.44 (1993 Directive is a “general directive for consumer protection, intended to apply to all sectors of economic activity”). National legislation implementing the 1993 Directive could therefore apply to the contracts of air transport falling within the scope of Regulation (EC) 1008/2008 of the European Parliament and of the Council on common rules for the operation of air services in the Community the absence of express provision in the Regulation (which there is not).
- 1345.  Tarc#u (C-74/15) at para.22. On the status of these “exceptions” see para.38-203 n.1280.
- 1346. See below, paras 38-205—38-208 on the definitions of these terms.
- 1347. 1993 Directive art.4(1); C-537/13 at paras 33-35, below, para.38-258.
- 1348. 1999 Regulations Sch.2 para.2(c). On the role of this Schedule more generally, see below, paras 38-273 et seq.
- 1349. London Borough of Newham v Khatun [2004] EWCA Civ 55, [2005] Q.B. 37 and see Peabody Trust Governors v Reeve [2008] EWHC 1432 (Ch) at [30], [2009] L. & T.R. 6; Shaftsbury House (Developments) Ltd v Lee [2010] EWHC 1484 (Ch) at [54], Rochdale BC v Dixon [2011] EWCA Civ 1173, [2012] H.L.R. 6.
- 1350. Zealand v Laing Homes Ltd (2000) 2 T.C.L.R. 724. The CJEU has assumed that the 1993 Directive applies to contracts for the purchase of immovable property by a consumer from a builder: Constructora Principado SA v Menéndez Álvarez (C-226/12) January 16, 2014.
- 1351. Director General of Fair Trading v First National Bank [2001] UKHL 52, [2002] 1 A.C. 481 (below, para.38-225); Abbey National Plc v Office of Fair Trading [2009] UKSC 6, [2010] 1 A.C. 696 (the “Bank Charges” case) (below, paras 38-226—38-227). The 1993 Directive recital 19 assumes that the contracts of insurance may fall within its scope. As will be seen, contracts of loan to a consumer secured by mortgage on property have recently formed a significant part of the CJEU’s case-law: below, para.38-247.
- 1352. Office of Fair Trading v Ashbourne Management Services Ltd [2011] EWHC 1237 (Ch), [2011] E.C.C. 31.
- 1353. cf. 1994 Regulations reg.2 “sellers”, “suppliers” and “business”.
- 1354. Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 ss.1(3) (as amended) and 14.
- 1355. Above, paras 38-047—38-054.
- 1356. BKK Mobil Oil Körperschaft des öffentlichen Rechts v Zentrale zur Bekämpfung unlauteren Wettbewerbs eV (C-59/12) of October 3, 2013, above para.38-050.
- 1357. BKK Mobil Oil Körperschaft des öffentlichen Rechts v Zentrale zur Bekämpfung unlauteren Wettbewerbs eV (C-59/12) of October 3, 2013 at paras 32–33, above para.38-050.

- 1358. BKK Mobil Oil (C-59/12) para.33.
- 1359. Šiba v Dev#nas (C-537/13) para.28.
- 1360. Above, para.38-052.
- 1361. cf. 1994 Regulations reg.2, “consumer”. No burden of proof as to being a “consumer” is set by the 1999 Regulations, following the 1993 Directive art.2(b).
- 1362. Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.2(3), above paras 38-038—38-039 and below, para.38-353.
- 1363. 1993 Directive art.2(b).
- 1364. Cape Snc v Idealservice Srl (C-541/99 and C-542/99) [2001] E.C.R. I-09049. For English law, the 1999 Regulations are extended to consumer arbitration agreements including as “consumer” for this purpose legal as well as natural persons: Arbitration Act 1996 s.90; Heifer International Inc v Christiansen [2007] EWHC 3015 (TCC), [2008] All E.R. (D) 120 (Jan) and see below, para.38-276.
- 1365. Above, paras 38-033—38-034. Neither the 1993 Directive nor the 1999 Regulations set a burden of proof as to “consumer”.
- 1366. Above, paras 38-035—38-037.
- 1367. Above, paras 38-041—38-042. As explained below, the “average consumer” has been made relevant by the CJEU to the requirement of plain, intelligible language in 1993 Directive arts 4(2) and 5 (below, paras 38-239 and 38-320).
- 1368.  Above, para.38-044. cf. the position under the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 in relation to which it has been stated that “a person can “deal as consumer” in disposing of goods, no less than in acquiring goods or services”: Peel, Treitel on The Law of Contract, 14th edn (2015), para.7–054.
- 1369. cf. the change of phrasing used in defining consumer contracts under the Rome Convention of June 19, 1980 on the law applicable to contractual obligations and its successor in Rome I Regulation (Regulation (EC) 593/2008 on the law applicable to contractual obligations). Under art.5(1) Rome Convention a consumer contract is defined as “[a] contract the object of which is the supply of goods or services to a person (‘the consumer’) for a purpose which can be regarded as being outside his trade or profession, or a contract for the provision of credit for that object”, whereas under art.6(1) Rome I the special provisions governing consumer contracts apply to “a contract concluded by a natural person for a purpose which can be regarded as being outside his trade or profession (the consumer) with another person acting in the exercise of his trade or profession (the professional)”.
- 1370. Above, para.38-032.
- 1371. cf. above, para.38-203.
- 1372. Above, para.38-032.
- 1373. European Commission, Report on Directive 93/13/EEC on unfair terms in consumer contracts COM(2000) final of April 27, 2000, p.8, No.19. See also Calais-Auloy and Steinmetz, Droit de la consommation, 7th edn (2006), para.14, noting the extension in French law of the protection of the Directive to “non-professionnels” as well as “consommateurs” in art.L.132–1 Code de la consommation which allows the inclusion of persons supplying goods and services.
- 1374.  The view taken by this paragraph that the 1993 Directive can apply to contracts under which “consumers” supply persons acting in the course of business was recently confirmed explicitly by the Court of Justice in its decision in Tarc#u v Banca Comercial# Intesa Sanpaolo România

SA (C-74/15) Order of CJEU November 19, 2015 (“Tarc#u (C-74/15)”). In that case, the national court had considered that the 1993 Directive applied only to contracts for the supply of goods or services to consumers, but the Court of Justice held the Directive applies to “all contracts” between consumers and sellers or suppliers and that “[t]he purpose of the contract is thus, subject to the exceptions listed in the recital 10 of the Directive ... , irrelevant in determining the scope of the directive”: Tarc#u (C-74/15) at para.22 and on the status of these “exceptions” see para.38-203 n.1280. According to the Court of Justice:

“It is therefore by reference to the capacity of the contracting parties, according to whether or not they are acting for purposes relating to their trade, business or profession, that the directive defines the contracts to which it applies” (Tarc #u v Banca Comercial# (C-74/15) at para.23).

The Court therefore further held that whether a natural person who agrees to secure the contractual obligations owed by a commercial company to a banking institution under a credit agreement is to be regarded as a “consumer” depends on whether he “acted for purposes relating to his trade, business or profession or because of functional links he has with that company, such as a directorship or non-negligible shareholding” or whether instead “he acted for purposes of a private nature”: Tarc#u (C-74/15) at para.29.

1375. Above, para.38-206.

1376.  See Tarc#u v Banca Comercial# Intesa Sanpaolo România SA (C-74/15) Order of CJEU November 19, 2015 (discussed above, para.38-207, n.1314).

1377. Barclays Bank Plc v Kufner [2008] EWHC 2319, [2009] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 1 at [28]–[29] Field J. (guarantor acting for purposes of trade or business); Royal Bank of Scotland v Chandra [2010] EWHC 105 (Ch), [2010] 1 Lloyd’s Rep. 677 at [102] (affirmed [2011] EWCA Civ 192, [2011] Bus. L.R. D149 on other grounds) (principal debtor not consumer); United Trust Bank Ltd v Dohil [2011] EWHC 3302 (QB) at [73] (guarantor acting for purposes of trade or business) not following The Governor and Co of the Bank of Scotland v Singh Unreported June 17, 2005 (QBD Mercantile Ct, Manchester), at [85]–[90]; Manches LLP v Freer [2006] EWHC 991 (QB); Williamson v Governor of the Bank of Scotland [2006] EWHC 1289 (Ch) at [42]–[46]. On this see below, paras 45-156—45-158.

1378. See Vol.II, para.31-054.

1379. See Vol.II, para.31-084.

1380. Domsalla v Dyason [2007] EWHC 1174 (TCC) at [92], [2007] B.L.R. 348.

1381. For the details see Vol.I paras 18-090 et seq.

1382.  1999 Regulations reg.3(1); 1993 Directive art.2(b). This was the view of the Law Commission: Privity of Contract: Contracts for the Benefit of Third Parties Law Com. No.242 (1996) Cm 3329 para.13.10. cf. the position under the Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.72, below, paras 38-370—38-372. For the position of a third party assignee of the consumer’s rights in relation to contract terms “not binding” on the consumer as unfair, see below, para. 38-315.

1383. On “autonomous” interpretations generally, above, para.38-014. For this issue in relation to the 1993 Directive and development of the consequences noted in the following discussion, see Whittaker (2000) 116 L.Q.R. 95. cf. the position under the Consumer Rights Directive 2011 art.3(5) which would apparently allocate the question of what constitutes a “contract” for its purposes to national general contract laws: above, paras 38-059—38-061, 38-065.

1384. cf. the approach of Att-Gen Sir Gordon Slynn in Arcado SPRL v Haviland SA (9/87) [1988] E.C.R. 1539 at 1548.

1385. Industrie Tessili Italiana Como v Dunlop AG [1976] E.C.R. 1473.

1386. Brussels Convention on jurisdiction and the enforcement of judgements in civil and commercial matters 1968 art.5(1), whose equivalent provision is provided by Regulation (EU) 1215/2012 of 12 December 2012 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters (recast) (“the Brussels Ibis Regulation”): Martin Peters Bauunternehmung GmbH v Zuid Nederlandse Aannemers Vereniging (34/82) [1983] E.C.R. 987 and Jakob Handt & Co GmbH v Traitements Mécano-chimiques des Surfaces SA (26/91) [1992] E.C.R. I-3967. However, care is needed in using this case-law by analogy, since the ECJ adopted a very wide approach to “matters relating to contract” for these purposes see, e.g. Engler v Janus Versand GmbH (C-27/02) [2005] E.C.R. I-00481 at para.51 (the sending of a prize notification by a trader which was not followed by the ordering of any goods by the consumer to whom it was addressed fell within art.5(1) as a “matter relating to contract” as based on a “legal obligation freely consented to by one person towards the other and on which the claimant’s action is based”, even though no contract had been concluded for the purposes of art.13 of the Convention).

1387. cf. the definition of contract found in the proposed Common European Sales Law art.2 as “an agreement intended to give rise to obligations or other legal effects”: Proposal for a Regulation on a Common European Sales Law Com(2011) 635 final (proposal withdrawn by the Commission in December 2014), on which see above, paras 1-013 and 1-020. cf. Jakob Handt & Co GmbH v Traitements Mécano-chimiques des Surfaces SA [1992] E.C.R. I-3967 and see Whittaker (2000) 116 L.Q.R. 95.

1388.  On the other hand, some legal relationships which involve elements of agreement in one or both parties may nevertheless be properly characterised as “non-contractual” owing to the nature or extent of their regulation: e.g. the relationship between a student on the Bar Professional Training Course and the Bar Council: R. (on the application of Prescott) v General Council of the Bar [2015] EWHC 1919 (Admin) at [79].

1389. There is no more than a superficial conceptual similarity between la cause in French law and the doctrine of consideration and there is no similarity in terms of their respective overall functions: see Whittaker, Principles of French Law, 2nd edn (2008), pp.321–322; H. Kötz and A. Flessner, European Contract Law (trans. Weir, 1997), Vol.I, pp.54 et seq.

1390. cf. Gray v Taylor [1998] 1 W.L.R. 1093 in which the Court of Appeal held that a person occupying an almshouse under a charitable trust was not a tenant.

1391. For the non-contractual nature of the supply of electricity and water to domestic consumers (even though they pay), see the Electricity Act 1989 ss.16, 22 and Norweb v Dixon [1995] 1 W.L.R. 636 and the Water Industry Act 1991 ss.53–56 and Read v Croydon Corp [1938] 4 All E.R. 631. cf. the position in relation to gas under the Gas Act 1995 ss.7 and 8 amending Gas Act 1986 ss.7 and 8.

1392. European Commission, Report on Directive 93/13/EEC on unfair terms in consumer contracts, COM(2000) final, p.15.

1393. A.G. Opinion, Schulz v Technische Werke Schussental GmbH und Co KG, Egbrinshoff v Stadwerke Ahaus GmbH (C-359 and C-400/11) of May 8, 2014. The CJEU’s decision of October 23, 2014 did not reflect on the differences between the two categories of contract.

1394. 1993 Directive art.1(2), below, paras 38-214—38-219.

1395. A.G. Opinion, C-359 and C-400/11 at para.34.

1396.  A.G. Opinion, C-359 and C-400/11 at para.38 (as in the earlier decision of the CJEU in RWE Vertrieb AG v Verbraucherzentrale Nordrhein-Westfalen eV (C-92/11) March 21, 2013, below, para.38-215. cf. Roundlistic Ltd v Jones [2016] UKUT 325 (LC) at [100], where it was held that a lease of residential premises granted by a landlord to its tenant was a contract concluded between those parties, despite the fact that it was concluded within the context of the obligation on the landlord to grant a new lease pursuant to the Leasehold Reform, Housing and Development Act 1993, though it was further held that these terms of the new lease were excluded from the scope of the 1999 Regulations on the basis that they reflected “mandatory statutory provisions” within the meaning of reg.4(2), on which see below, para.38-217A.

- 1397. For the A.G., therefore, the terms of the contracts before the Court (which did not reflect freedom of contract) fell within the special provisions on the transparency of contract terms in the relevant Energy Directives and not the 1993 Directive: C-359 and C-400/11 at para.47.
- 1398. 1993 Directive art.1(2) and see below, paras 38-214—38-219.
- 1399. See generally for these amendments Vol.I, paras 15-062 et seq.
- 1400. Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.2 and see Vol.I, paras 15-081—15-083.
- 1401. s.3, and see Vol.I, paras 15-084—15-087.
- 1402. s.6, above, para.14-078 and see Vol.I, para.15-093.
- 1403. These are excluded from ss.2–4 of the 1977 Act by s.1(2) and Sch.1 para.1(a).
- 1404. This is by virtue of the more restricted definition of consumer in this respect in s.12 of the 1977 Act, see Vol.I, paras.15-076.
- 1405. This type of contract is excluded from ss.2–4 of the 1977 Act by s.1(2) Sch.1 para.1(c) and see Vol.I, para.15-117.
- 1406. These are excluded from ss.2–4 of the 1977 Act by s.1(2) Sch.1 para.1(b), see Vol.I, para.15-117.
- 1407. ss.2 and 14, and see Vol.I, para.15-081.
- 1408. See above, para.38-210 and below, para.38-357 n.2104.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 6. - The Control of Unfair Contract Terms

(c) - The Old Law: the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999

(ii) - Contract Terms Excluded From the 1999 Regulations

General

38-213

Unlike the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 (whose controls principally affect exemption clauses) ¹⁴⁰⁹ the types of contract terms caught by the Regulations are very varied; indeed, the starting point of the Regulations (following the Directive) is that their controls apply to all types of terms, the legislation referring simply to “unfair terms in contracts concluded between a seller or a supplier and a consumer”. ¹⁴¹⁰ From this starting point, there are two sets of derogations. First, the Regulations exclude altogether from their controls contract terms which reflect “mandatory statutory or regulatory provisions” and those which reflect “the provisions of international conventions”. ¹⁴¹¹ These exclusions (and the question as to whether the Regulations apply to implied terms) will be considered in the following paragraphs. Secondly, the two requirements created by the Regulations differ somewhat in the range of terms which they govern. So, the requirement that terms be in “plain, intelligible language” applies to any written term of the contract, ¹⁴¹² whereas the requirement of fairness applies to any term (whether written or oral) ¹⁴¹³ “which has not been individually negotiated”, unless that term defines the subject matter of the contract in a “plain, intelligible” way etc. under the “core exclusion”. ¹⁴¹⁴ These qualifications on the general starting point will be considered with the treatment of the requirements themselves. ¹⁴¹⁵

Terms which reflect “mandatory statutory or regulatory provisions” of English law

38-214

Regulation 4(2)(a) of the 1999 Regulations, ¹⁴¹⁶ following closely art.1(2) of the 1993 Directive, excludes from their scope:

“... contractual terms which reflect ... mandatory statutory or regulatory provisions (including such provisions under the law of any Member State or in EU legislation having effect in the United Kingdom without further enactment).” ¹⁴¹⁷

For this purpose recitals 13 and 14 of the Directive explain that:

“Whereas the statutory or regulatory provisions of the Member States which directly or indirectly determine the terms of consumer contracts are presumed not to contain unfair terms; whereas, therefore, it does not appear to be necessary to subject the terms which reflect mandatory statutory or regulatory provisions ...; whereas in that respect the wording ‘mandatory statutory or regulatory provisions’ in Article 1(2) also covers rules which, according to the law, shall apply between the contracting parties provided that no other arrangements have been established;

Whereas Member States must however ensure that unfair terms are not included, particularly because this Directive also applies to trades, businesses or professions of a public nature.”

Recital 13 therefore makes clear that the adjective “mandatory” does not restrict the category of legal rules which impose terms on the parties to a contract to those whose effect is incapable of exclusion by agreement, rules which are, therefore, “mandatory” in the normal sense, i.e. belonging to ius cogens.¹⁴¹⁸ Instead, the term includes rules which simply apply in the absence of any express contractual provision, but which may be the subject of contrary contractual exclusion, i.e. rules belonging to ius dispositivum.¹⁴¹⁹ This is therefore a potentially wide category of exclusion of terms from the ambit of the controls of the Regulations, and one of particular importance in the provision of public services, where some or even many of the terms are set by legislation. This is certainly the context of the application of the exclusion found in art.1(2) of the Directive in other European national laws where the practice is more widespread of the setting of standard terms for certain services by administrative decree.¹⁴²⁰

Case-law of the CJEU

38-215

In RWE Vertrieb AG v Verbraucherzentrale Nordrhein-Westfalen eV,¹⁴²¹ the Court of Justice of the EU clarified the interpretation of the exclusion of terms provided by art.1(2) of the 1993 Directive.¹⁴²² In that case, the German law governing the supply of natural gas to consumers distinguished between supplies by gas suppliers under “standard tariff contracts”, where the supplier was under a legal obligation to conclude contracts with consumers, and “special contracts”, where they were not. German legislation set the general terms and conditions of supply of the standard tariff contracts, but did not do so for the special contracts. However, the wording of the standard conditions of the special contracts concluded by the supplier in the main proceedings corresponded to those required for the tariff contracts by the legislation, and in this sense, they “reflected” those legal provisions. The issue before the Court was whether the contract terms in the special contracts of supply of natural gas to consumers fell under the controls of unfairness in the German legislation implementing the 1993 Directive or whether they fell instead within the exclusion in that legislation foreseen by art.1(2) of that Directive. Referring to recital 13 of the Directive, the Court of Justice considered that this exclusion is justified by the fact that “it may legitimately be supposed that the national legislature struck a balance between all the rights and obligations of the parties to certain contracts”,¹⁴²³ and held that this reasoning does not apply to the situation where a consumer contract merely reproduces a rule of national law applicable to another category of contracts to which the national legislation in question does not apply:

“[a]n intention of the parties to extend the application of those rules to a different contract cannot be equated to the establishment by the national legislature of a balance between all the rights and obligations of the parties to the contract.”¹⁴²⁴

The Court of Justice concluded, therefore, that the Directive applies to terms such as those in the “special contracts” of supply of gas to consumers before it.¹⁴²⁵ The Court therefore held that art.1(2) does not apply to contract terms in a legislative scheme where the scheme does not apply to the contract in question,¹⁴²⁶ but it assumed that the exclusion found in art.1(2) does apply to terms in a contract which copy out legislative or other legal rules which would otherwise apply to that contract, even where those legislative rules do not themselves require to be so expressed in the contract, as art.1(2)

“extends to terms which reflect provisions of national law that apply between the parties to the contract independently of their choice or those that apply by default in the absence of other arrangements established by the parties.” ¹⁴²⁷

In Kušionová ¹⁴²⁸ the Court of Justice followed its earlier approach to art.1(2) in RWE Vertrieb AG, noting that this exclusion should be interpreted strictly ¹⁴²⁹ and that it is for the national court to determine whether a particular contract term falls within this test. On the other hand, the Court of Justice in RWE Vertrieb AG did not consider directly the question whether art.1(2)'s exclusion applies to contract terms which are not directly determined by national legislation but which are approved or otherwise regulated under a legislative scheme or to contract terms which are varied under a lawful exercise of a statutory power in the seller or supplier. A significant example of the former would be where the terms of supply of a public service are drawn up by the (commercial) supplier of that service, but then subjected either to a requirement of approval by an administrative body or to a structure of review by a “watchdog” institution. If this approval or review were undertaken under “legislative or regulatory provisions” the latter could be said to “determine indirectly” the content of the contracts, as foreseen by recital 13 of the Directive. On the other hand, the Court of Justice could instead distinguish between those provisions which determine and those which provide for approval of the terms on which services are provided, only the former being within the terms of art.1(2). This distinction could be supported by the clearly restrictive approach of the Court of Justice to the exclusion in art.1(2) in RWE Vertrieb AG, following its general approach to exclusions from schemes for the protection of consumers. ¹⁴³⁰

Optional terms and mandatory content

38-215A

However, in Engilbertsson the EFTA Court took a more extensive view of the exclusion in art.1(2) of the 1993 Directive despite its formal recognition “that derogations from EEA consumer protection law must be interpreted strictly”. ¹⁴³¹ In that case, which considered a reference from an Icelandic court, a consumer contract for a mortgage loan contained an indexation clause to govern repayments by the consumer. Under national law such a clause was not mandatory, but, if used, the parties were “bound to a substantial extent by the scheme set out in regulatory and statutory provisions of national law”. ¹⁴³² In these circumstances, the EFTA Court held that the exclusion in art.1(2) of the 1993 Directive applies to a term in a consumer contract “whose inclusion in the category of contract is optional but whose substance is mandatory”, as the inequality of bargaining power between the parties does not influence the content of the terms to the detriment of the consumer. ¹⁴³³ As a result, the national court must assess “whether and to what extent the regulatory scheme is exhaustive and that the seller or supplier therefore has no right to unilaterally set out certain aspects in terms and conditions at a contractual level”. ¹⁴³⁴ However, the EFTA Court recognised that, where a national court found that certain aspects of the subject-matter of a term were set by national legal provisions and so excluded from the scope of the Directive, the trader must nevertheless make the consumer aware of the content of those provisions so that the consumer can “foresee, on the basis of clear, intelligible criteria, the alterations that may occur to the principal of the loan”. ¹⁴³⁵

“Legislative provisions” and common law rules

38-216

Article 1(2) refers to “contractual terms which reflect mandatory statutory or regulatory provisions” and this suggests that it is not concerned with contract terms which reflect the position at common law. ¹⁴³⁶ As has been seen, however, the Court of Justice has assumed that art.1(2) applies to terms in a contract which copy out legislative rules which would otherwise apply to that contract, even where those legislative rules do not themselves require to be so expressed in the contract. ¹⁴³⁷ If this is indeed the case, then it is submitted that art.1(2) should equally apply so as to exclude contract terms which mirror the otherwise applicable legal rule whether its source is found in statute or the common law, for art.1(2)'s reference to “legislative” as opposed to “legal” provisions ¹⁴³⁸ (the latter of which could equally refer to the common law as to legislation) can be explained by the fact that the vast majority of the national laws of Member States at the time of the enactment of the directive set out their legal rules governing contracts in legislation rather than by way of common law. Moreover, the reason for the exclusion as set out in recital 13 and noted in RWE Vertrieb AG that “it may legitimately be supposed that the national legislature struck a balance between all the rights and obligations of the parties to certain contracts”, ¹⁴³⁹ applies equally to regulation by the common law.

Statutory power in party to vary term

38-217

The question also arises whether art.1(2) of the Directive (and therefore reg.4(2)(a) of the 1999 Regulations) applies to a term inserted into a contract by exercise of a power enjoyed by a party to the contract under statute, or to a term in a contract varied by a party in the same circumstances. In Rochdale BC v Dixon the Court of Appeal considered whether a term in a public sector secure periodic tenancy which had been varied by the lawful exercise of the public authority’s statutory power under ss.102 and 103 of the Housing Act 1985 was unfair within the meaning of the 1999 Regulations. ¹⁴⁴⁰ If valid, the term in question as so varied enabled the local authority landlord to collect the tenant’s water charges for the water company and, therefore, to subject the tenant to the risk of eviction on non-payment of these charges. The Court of Appeal held that such a term was not unfair for a number of reasons, including that any exercise of the statutory power was taken by the democratically elected councillors of the local authority and possessed its own consultation procedure. ¹⁴⁴¹ While the point was not before the Court of Appeal, it could be argued that a term varied under a lawful exercise of a statutory power should be seen as falling within the exclusion in art.1(2) of the Directive as a term which reflects a legislative provision, but it is submitted that the Court of Justice of the EU would be unlikely to agree: art.1(2) is to be strictly construed ¹⁴⁴² and such a variation by the “seller or supplier” would not fall squarely within the justification for the exclusion, that is, that:

“it may legitimately be supposed that the national legislature struck a balance between all the rights and obligations of the parties to certain contracts.” ¹⁴⁴³

Statutory obligation to grant contract on same terms

38-217A

⚠ In Roundlistic Ltd v Jones, ¹⁴⁴⁴ ⚠ a new lease had been granted to a tenant by her landlord under its obligation imposed by the Leasehold Reform, Housing and Development Act 1993. ¹⁴⁴⁵ ⚠ The Upper Tribunal (Lands Chamber) noted that the terms upon which the landlord was obliged to grant the new lease were provided by the Act and that, while there was scope for some alternations in the terms, the Act’s startingpoint was that the new lease was to be on the same terms as the existing lease subject to certain limited modifications. ¹⁴⁴⁶ ⚠ In these circumstances, the Upper Tribunal concluded that the 1999 Regulations did not apply to the terms of the new lease as they fell within the exclusion in reg.4(2) concerning “mandatory statutory provisions”. ¹⁴⁴⁷ ⚠ It is submitted, however, that this decision extends the scope of application of reg.4(2) beyond the likely interpretation by the Court of Justice of the EU of art.1(2) of the 1993 Directive which reg.4(2) implements ¹⁴⁴⁸ ⚠: art.1(2) is to be strictly construed ¹⁴⁴⁹ ⚠ and there is a difference between contract terms required by legislation itself (where “it may legitimately be supposed that the national legislature struck a balance between all the rights and obligations of the parties to certain contracts” ¹⁴⁵⁰ ⚠) and contract terms which reflect an earlier contract between the parties whose content has not been the object of any legislative consideration or imposition.

Terms which reflect “the provisions of international conventions”

38-218

⚠ The Regulations also provide that their requirements do not apply to:

“contractual terms which reflect ... the provisions or principles of international conventions to which the Member States or the European Union are party.” ¹⁴⁵¹

As the 1993 Directive makes clear, this exclusion is particularly concerned to exclude terms in conventions “in the transport area”, ¹⁴⁵² notably the Warsaw Convention on international carriage by air. ¹⁴⁵³ It should be noted that the exception applies to terms which reflect national legislation which uses the principles of international conventions to which the Member States or the Community are party, such as in the area of domestic carriage of goods. ¹⁴⁵⁴ ⚠

No application to implied terms

38-219

In Baybut v Eccle Riggs Country Park Ltd the High Court noted that the Regulations are not expressly limited to express contract terms, ¹⁴⁵⁵ but nevertheless considered that they do not apply to implied terms of any type: not to terms implied by statute, as these fall within the exclusion of terms which reflect “mandatory statutory or regulatory provisions” or the “provisions of international conventions” ¹⁴⁵⁶; nor to terms implied at common law, whether in law or “to make contracts work by filling a technical lacuna in the contract” on the basis that it is difficult to see how these terms (which are implied only where they are reasonable ¹⁴⁵⁷) could ever be found unfair within the meaning of the Regulations. ¹⁴⁵⁸ The court also noted that all the examples given in the “indicative list” of terms which may be regarded as unfair in the Schedule to the 1999 Regulations are express terms, ¹⁴⁵⁹ to which it may be added that the exclusion from the requirement of fairness of individually negotiated terms makes little sense except in the context of express terms. ¹⁴⁶⁰ Finally, while the English version of the 1993 Directive is no more explicit on the question of implied term than the UK Regulations, some of its other language versions use words which are more appropriate to describe what an English lawyer would see as an express term: so the French version of art.1(1) of the Directive refers to its application to “clauses abusives”; the German version to “mißbräuchliche Klauseln”. Overall, the better view is indeed that the Regulations have no application to implied terms as understood by English law. ¹⁴⁶¹

¹⁴⁰⁹. See Vol.I, para.15-062.

¹⁴¹⁰. 1999 Regulations reg.4(1); 1993 Directive arts 2(a), 3(1).

¹⁴¹¹. 1999 Regulations reg.4(2)(a).

¹⁴¹². 1999 Regulations reg.7; 1993 Directive art.5 and recital 11.

¹⁴¹³. It is perhaps unusual for an oral term to be other than “not individually negotiated”, but it is conceivable, particularly given the rule as to the burden of proof as to this issue (on which see below, para.38-222), for example, where a trader simply stipulates orally that a particular non-refundable deposit must be paid for goods or where a trader’s standard terms are read by its agents to the consumer over the telephone.

¹⁴¹⁴. 1999 Regulations regs 5(1), 6(2) and see below, paras 38-224 et seq.

- 1415. Below, paras 38-317 et seq. and 38-220 et seq. respectively.
- 1416. The Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.73 retains this exclusion from the controls on unfair terms in Pt 2 of the Act, below, para.38-357.
- 1417. cf. 1994 Regulations reg.3(1) Sch.1 para.(e)(i) which omitted “mandatory”.
- 1418. This also rules out any association with the meaning found in private international law: see, e.g. Regulation (EC) 593/2008 on the law applicable to contractual obligations (“Rome I”) [2008] O.J. L177/6 art.9.
- 1419. This is made clear by French jurists for whom the distinction between ius cogens (loi impérative) and ius dispositivum (loi supplétive) is traditional: see notably Ghestin and Marchessaux-Van Melle J.C.P. 1995 I.3854 at No.6.
- 1420. e.g. the standard terms on which passengers travel by train on the French national carrier, SNCF, on which see Whittaker, The Public Law/Private Law Divide (2006), pp.243, 249 et seq.
- 1421. C-92/11, March 31, 2013.
- 1422. RWE Vertrieb AG v Verbraucherzentrale Nordrhein-Westfalen eV (C-92/11) of March 21, 2013.
- 1423. RWE Vertrieb AG (C-92/11) at para.29.
- 1424. RWE Vertrieb AG (C-92/11) at para.29.
- 1425. RWE Vertrieb AG (C-92/11) at para.38.
- 1426. cf. Peabody Trust Governors v Reeve [2008] EWHC 1432 (Ch), [2009] L. & T.R. 6 at [40]–[62], where it was said that a variation clause which successfully incorporated the power of variation provided by s.103 in a tenancy contract to which that provision did not apply would be unfair within the meaning of the 1999 Regulations.
- 1427. RWE Vertrieb AG (C-92/11) para.26; Kušionová v SMART Capital a.s. (C-34/13) of September 10, 2014 para.79.
- 1428. Kušionová v SMART Capital a.s. (C-34/13) of September 10, 2014.
- 1429. Kušionová v SMART Capital a.s. (C-34/13) para.77.
- 1430. C-92/11.
- 1431. Engilbertsson v Ílandsbanki hf (E-25/13) of August 28, 2014 (“Engilbertsson (E-25/13)”) at para.77. The EFTA Court decided under the Agreement between the EFTA States on the Establishment of a Surveillance Authority and a Court of Justice art.34. Under art.3(2) of the same Agreement, the EFTA Court “shall pay due account to the principles laid down by the relevant rulings by the Court of Justice of the European Communities given after the date of signature of the EEA Agreement and which concern the interpretation of that Agreement or of such rules of the Treaty establishing the European Economic Community ... in so far as they are identical in substance to the provisions of the EEA Agreement or to the provisions of Protocols 1 to 4 and the provisions of the acts corresponding to those listed in Annexes I and II to the present Agreement”.
- 1432. Engilbertsson (E-25/13) at para.74.
- 1433. Engilbertsson (E-25/13) at para.75.
- 1434. Engilbertsson (E-25/13) at para.78.
- 1435. Engilbertsson (E-25/13) at paras 78, 142–143, citing the CJEU's case-law on variation clauses under the 1993 Directive in Nemzeti Fogyasztóvédelmi Hatóság v Invitel Távközlési Zrt (C-472/10) of April 26, 2012 paras 24, 26, 28–29 on which see below, para.38-288.

- 1436. Emphasis added. This question does not arise if art.1(2) of the 1993 Directive is restricted to terms which are determined by the law, as the common law does not require any express terms to be included in consumer contracts. For the position as regards implied terms, see below, para.38-219.
- 1437. Above, para.38-215.
- 1438. For this purpose, no reliance can be made on the reference in recital 13 to “rules which, according to the law” as other language versions make clear that here “the law” translates legislation rather than “law” (for example, it appears in French as la loi rather than le droit).
- 1439. RWE Vertrieb AG (C-92/11) at para.29.
- 1440. [2011] EWCA Civ 1173, [2012] H.L.R. 6.
- 1441. [2011] EWCA Civ 1173 at [68] (Rix L.J. with whom Rimer and Elias L.JJ. agreed).
- 1442. Kušionová v SMART Capital a.s. (C-34/13) of September 10, 2014 para.77.
- 1443. RWE Vertrieb AG (C-92/11) at para.29, above, para.38-215.
- 1444.  [2016] UKUT 325 (LC).
- 1445.  i.e. ss.43, 56 and 57.
- 1446.  [2016] UKUT 325 (LC) at [101].
- 1447.  [2016] UKUT 325 (LC) at [101]. It had been held that the new lease was a “contract” for the purposes of the 1999 Regulations despite its compulsory elements: see above, para.38-321.
- 1448.  See notably RWE Vertrieb AG v Verbraucherzentrale Nordrhein-Westfalen eV (C-92/11) March 21, 2013 (“RWE Vertrieb AG (C-92/11)”) discussed in Vol.II, para. 38-215.
- 1449.  Kušionová v SMART Capital a.s. (C-34/13) September 10, 2014 para.77.
- 1450.  RWE Vertrieb AG (C-92/11) at para.29. See also the explanation of the exclusion in art.1(2) in recital 13 of the 1993 Directive that “the statutory or regulatory provisions of the Member States which directly or indirectly determine the terms of consumer contracts are presumed not to contain unfair terms”.
- 1451. 1999 Regulations reg.4(2)(b).
- 1452. 1993 Directive art.1(2).
- 1453. See above, paras 35-002 et seq.
- 1454.  On the other hand, a term of a contract which is governed by an international convention but which does not reflect the provisions of that convention remains subject to the controls in the 1993 Directive: cf. Air Berlin Plc & Co Luftverkehrs KG v Bundesverband der Verbraucherzentralen und Verbraucherverbände—Verbraucherzentrale Bundesverband eV (C-290/16) of July 6, 2017 at paras 44–45 (emphasising the applicability of the 1993 Directive to international contracts of carriage of passengers by air, though not addressing this point).

- 1455. Unreported November 2, 2006 Ch D at [20], referring to 1999 Regulations regs 4, 5 and 6(2).
- 1456. Unreported November 2, 2006 Ch D at [22] and see above, para.38-218.
- 1457. See Vol.I, para.14-012.
- 1458. Unreported November 2, 2006 Ch D at [22].
- 1459. Unreported November 2, 2006 Ch D at [23] and see below paras 38-273 et seq. It is submitted that this would apply also to the statutory terms which Pt 1 of the Consumer Rights Act 2015 “treats as included” in the contracts to which it applies: see, e.g. in relation to “goods contracts” below, paras 38-458 et seq.
- 1460. Unreported November 2, 2006 Ch D at [23].
- 1461. This view was endorsed by Andrew Smith J. in OFT v Abbey National Plc [2008] EWHC 875 (Comm), [2008] 2 All E.R. (Comm) 625 at [102] (decision upheld by Court of Appeal, which itself was overturned by SC on other grounds in [2009] UKSC 6, [2010] 1 A.C. 696, below, paras 38-226—38-227).

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts
Section 6. - The Control of Unfair Contract Terms
(c) - The Old Law: the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999
(iii) - The Requirement of Fairness

Introduction

38-220

It has been noted that the Regulations make two requirements of contract terms, that they be fair and that they be expressed in plain, intelligible language and that the range of terms to which these two requirements apply differs to a degree. ¹⁴⁶² In this section, the first of these requirements will be examined.

¹⁴⁶². See above, para.38-213.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 6. - The Control of Unfair Contract Terms

(c) - The Old Law: the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999

(iii) - The Requirement of Fairness

(aa) - The Exclusion of Terms Which Have Been “Individually Negotiated”

In general

38-221

In addition to the exclusion from the scope of the 1999 Regulations as a whole of contract terms required by legislation or international convention, ¹⁴⁶³ the 1999 Regulations—unlike the new law under the Consumer Rights Act 2015—exclude from the test of unfairness contract terms which have been “individually negotiated”. ¹⁴⁶⁴ This exclusion reflects a view strongly urged at the time that the inclusion within the scope of the proposed directive on unfair contract terms of “individually negotiated terms” would represent “a drastic restriction of the autonomy of the individual”. ¹⁴⁶⁵ Clearly, there is considerable practical similarity between this exclusion and the restriction of the requirement of reasonableness to “written standard terms of business” found in s.3 of the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977, ¹⁴⁶⁶ but there are also some technical differences. First, the test in the Regulations includes within the requirement of fairness a non-standard term as long as it was drafted in advance and presented or imposed on the consumer; secondly, unlike the restriction found in s.3 where the “written standard terms” must be “the other’s” (i.e. those of the person acting in the course of a business and relying on a contract term falling within the section’s controls), under the Regulations the exclusion of “individually negotiated terms” leaves within the control of fairness standard terms other than those belonging to the seller or supplier, for example, terms proposed or promoted by a trade association or third party intermediary. And, thirdly, there is no requirement equivalent to s.3’s restriction to “terms of business”, a restriction which has led the courts to exclude from the test of reasonableness under the 1977 Act a standard term of employment of a bank on the basis that its relevant business for this purpose was banking. ¹⁴⁶⁷

“Individual negotiation”

38-222

Moreover, the 1999 Regulations weight the issue of individual negotiation firmly in favour of the consumer, providing that:

“... a term shall always be regarded as not having been individually negotiated where it has been drafted in advance and the consumer has therefore not been able to influence the substance of the term.” ¹⁴⁶⁸

The Regulations place the burden of proof as to the issue of individual negotiation on the person who claims that a term has been so negotiated. ¹⁴⁶⁹ In UK Housing Alliance Ltd v Francis ¹⁴⁷⁰ the Court of Appeal held that the mere fact that a consumer had instructed solicitors in relation to the conclusion of the contract and that these had the opportunity of considering and therefore of influencing the allegedly unfair terms did not mean that any individual term had been individually negotiated: the supplier must prove that the relevant term was individually negotiated and reg.5(2) “imposes an absolute prohibition on a finding of individual negotiation if there has not been an ability to influence the substance of a term”, and “it does not follow from the existence of the ability to influence the substance of a term that the term has, in fact, been individually negotiated”. ¹⁴⁷¹ Finally, the Regulations also provide that:

“Notwithstanding that a specific term or certain aspects of it in a contract has been individually negotiated, these Regulations shall apply to the rest of a contract if an overall assessment of it indicates that it is a pre-formulated standard contract.” ¹⁴⁷²

Thus, the presence of an individually negotiated term in a consumer contract does not necessarily exclude the application of the Regulations to the rest of the contract. This means that, for example, the general terms of a standard form contract of consumer sale whose delivery date for the goods, price or other particular aspect of the contract has been “individually negotiated” will not escape the requirement of fairness altogether.

Standard terms put forward by the consumer

38-223

In Bryen & Langley Ltd v Boston the question arose as to how, if at all, the 1999 Regulations affected standard terms (here, terms of one of the JCT standard building contracts) put forward by a consumer (or rather by his professional advisers) and incorporated into a consumer contract. ¹⁴⁷³ In the Court of Appeal Rimer J. noted that the consumer before him had had:

“... the opportunity to influence the terms on which the contractors were being invited to tender, even though he may not have taken it up; and [that] there is therefore at least an argument” that the terms were not therefore “not individually negotiated”; but he expressed no view on this point which had not been argued, it being held instead that in these circumstances any term of the standard contract would not fail the requirement of fairness as it would not cause a significant imbalance in the rights and obligations of the parties to the detriment of the consumer contrary to the requirement of good faith. ¹⁴⁷⁴ It is submitted with respect that the latter reflects the correct approach. There is nothing in the provisions of the 1999 Regulations or the 1993 Directive to support the proposition that standard terms put forward by a consumer fall for that reason within their exclusion of individually negotiated terms, particularly bearing in mind that this exclusion is to be interpreted strictly following the general approach of the Court of Justice of the EU to exceptions to European legislative schemes of consumer protection. ¹⁴⁷⁵ For while a consumer who proposes a set of standard terms may sometimes have “been able to influence the substance of the term” (by amending or deleting the standard terms which he himself proposes), this will not always be the case. Moreover, the exclusion from the requirement of fairness affects contract terms which have been the object of “individual negotiation”, whereas a term in a set of standard terms proposed by the consumer remains standard (and often unknown to, or not understood by, the consumer and possibly even his professional advisers) and not therefore (at least normally) “individually negotiated”. For these reasons, the putting forward of standard terms by a consumer should be dealt with in terms of the requirement of good faith, rather than in terms of their “individual negotiation”. ¹⁴⁷⁶

¹⁴⁶³. Above, paras 38-214—38-220.

¹⁴⁶⁴. 1999 Regulations reg.5(1); 1993 Directive art.3; Engilbertsson v Ílandsbanki hf (E-25/13) (EFTA Court) of August 28, 2014 at paras 125-126. On the Consumer Rights Act 2015 see below, para.38-358.

- 1465. Brandner and Ulmer (1991) 29 C.M.L.R. 647 at 652; Howells and Wilhelmsson, EC Consumer Law (1997), p.91.
- 1466. On which cf. Vol.I, para.15-084. This requirement in s.3(1) of the 1977 Act is an alternative to the case where the party “deals as consumer”: Vol.I, para.15-084.
- 1467. Keen v Commerzbank AG [2006] EWCA Civ 1536, [2007] I.C.R. 623 at [103]–[104].
- 1468. 1999 Regulations reg.5(2).
- 1469. 1999 Regulations reg.5(4).
- 1470. [2010] EWCA Civ 117, [2010] Bus. L.R. 1034. cf. Khurana v Webster Construction Ltd [2015] EWHC 758 (TCC) at [52] (a term presented by a party in a letter as an offer for consideration and possible acceptance by the other where there is no evidence that it had been drafted prior to the production of the letter in question was not “drafted in advance”).
- 1471. [2010] EWCA Civ 117 at [19], per Longmore L.J. (applied by Harrison v Shepherd Homes Ltd [2011] EWHC 1811 (TCC), [103]–[105]).
- 1472. 1999 Regulations reg.5(3).
- 1473. [2005] EWCA Civ 973, [2005] All E.R. (D) 507 (Jul) on appeal from [2004] EWHC 2450 (TCC), 98 Con. L.R. 82.
- 1474. [2005] EWCA Civ 973 at [46] and cf. [2004] EWHC 2450 (TCC) at [43] (Judge Richard Seymour Q.C.).
- 1475. 1993 Directive art.3(1) and (2); 1999 Regulations reg.5(1)–(4). On the strict interpretation of exceptions to EU schemes of consumer protection see above para.38-216 and below, para.38-229.
- 1476. See below, para.38-267.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts
Section 6. - The Control of Unfair Contract Terms
(c) - The Old Law: the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999
(iii) - The Requirement of Fairness
(bb) - The “Core Exclusion”

The “core exclusion” in the 1999 Regulations

38-224

Regulation 6(2) of the 1999 Regulations (reflecting very closely art.4(2) of the Directive) provides that:

“In so far as it is in plain intelligible language, the assessment of fairness of a term shall not relate—to the definition of the main subject matter of the contract, or to the adequacy of the price or remuneration, as against the goods or services supplied in exchange.” ¹⁴⁷⁷

(a)

(b)

This is an important provision, reflecting the focus of concern of the Directive on unfair terms, rather than on unfair contracts and so ruling out (in principle) from its ambit any review of contracts on the basis that they represent a bad bargain for the consumer: to this extent, the exclusion contained in art.4(2) reflects the general principle of freedom of contract. ¹⁴⁷⁸ However, both its interpretation and its application have caused considerable difficulty, this stemming in part from the awkwardness of the drafting of the Directive, which does not make clear whether it seeks to exclude a category of terms from the test of fairness or whether instead it seeks to exclude certain types of issue from the evaluation of the fairness of terms. ¹⁴⁷⁹ The Directive itself recognises the potential difficulty in applying the exclusion found in art.4(2) and attempts to explain how it may apply in the context of one particular example, contracts of insurance. ¹⁴⁸⁰ While the exclusion in reg.6(2) of the Regulations has been considered and applied by the House of Lords in DGFT v First National Bank Plc ¹⁴⁸¹ and the Supreme Court in the Abbey National Plc v The Office of Fair Trading, ¹⁴⁸² later decisions of the Court of Justice of the EU, notably in Kásler ¹⁴⁸³ and Matei ¹⁴⁸⁴ have clarified the proper interpretation of art.4(2) of the Directive and have provided guidance to national courts on the application of national legislation which implements it in a way which departs considerably from the Supreme Court's views in Abbey National Plc. English courts are bound to follow this case-law of the Court of Justice in their decisions on reg.6(2) of the Regulations as it implements art.4(2) of the Directive without amendment.

1485

The First National Bank Plc decision

38-225

In Director General of Fair Trading v First National Bank Plc 1486 the House of Lords took a restrictive approach to the interpretation of the exclusion from the test of fairness now found in reg.6(2) of the 1999 Regulations. There, a contract of consumer credit contained a term by which:

“... interest on the amount which becomes payable [on default] shall be charged in accordance [with rates stipulated by the contract] ... until payment after as well as before any judgment (such obligation to be independent of and not to merge with the judgment).”

The effect of this agreement (if valid) would be that where the bank obtains judgment against a borrower, interest would be payable at the contractual rate on the outstanding principal plus accrued interest unpaid at the date of judgment until the judgment is discharged by payment. It would prevent the independent obligation to pay interest to merge in the judgment, the provision for interest at the contractual rate continuing to apply after judgment. The bank argued that this contract term did not fall to be assessed for fairness under the Regulations because it concerned the adequacy of the bank's remuneration as against the services supplied, namely the loan of money. 1487 The House of Lords disagreed. In the view of Lord Bingham of Cornhill:

“The object of the Regulations and the Directive is to protect consumers against the inclusion of unfair and prejudicial terms in standard-form contracts into which they enter, and that object would plainly be frustrated if reg.3(2)(b) were so broadly interpreted as to cover any terms other than those falling squarely within it. In my opinion the term, as part of a provision prescribing the consequences of default, plainly does not fall within it. It does not concern the adequacy of the interest earned by the bank as its remuneration but is designed to ensure that the bank's entitlement to interest does not come to an end on the entry of judgment.” 1488

In this respect, the fact that the contract term before them was a “default provision” clearly weighed with the House. 1489 Having said this, though, in applying the test of fairness to this contract term, for the House of Lords the fact that it related to the payment of interest which was part of the “essential bargain” between the parties argued in favour of its fairness. 1490 In the result, the House of Lords held that the term in question did not fall within the exclusion found in art.4(2) of the Directive, but nevertheless “carries into effect what the parties themselves would regard as the essence of the transaction” and was held valid. 1491

OFT v Abbey National Plc

38-226

In OFT v Abbey National Plc, 1492 the question arose as to whether the OFT was entitled to consider the unfairness of certain terms of contracts between banks and their current account consumer customers under which the banks imposed charges when the customer requested or instructed the bank to make a payment for which they did not hold the necessary funds in the account and which was not covered by an arranged facility (the “relevant terms”). As regard the nature of the exclusion, at first instance, Andrew Smith J. expressed the view that reg.6(2)(b) excludes an assessment relating to the adequacy of the price from a term to which it applies 1493; and, on appeal, the banks adopted this position with the result that the question to be determined by the Supreme Court was whether, in assessing the fairness of the terms, the OFT was entitled to take into account “the adequacy of the price or remuneration, as against the goods or services supplied in exchange”, on the ground that “[a]ny assessment based on matters not relating to the appropriateness in amount of the price or remuneration is not excluded by regulation 6(2)(b)”. ¹⁴⁹⁴ The Supreme Court therefore considered whether the relevant terms provided for the “price or remuneration in exchange for the services” supplied by the bank so as to fall within this exclusion. For this purpose, it held, first, that the banks provided a “package of services” to their customers, which:

“include the collection and payment of cheques, other money transmission services, facilities for cash distribution ... and the provision of statements in printed or electronic form.” ¹⁴⁹⁵

Secondly, the Supreme Court held that the payments for which the terms provided constituted part of the “price or remuneration” in exchange for this package of services so as to attract the application of the exclusion, rejecting the Court of Appeal's view that in deciding whether a term provided for the “price or remuneration” a court should adopt the point of view of the typical consumer and consider whether the relevant terms provided for the “essential bargain” between the parties. ¹⁴⁹⁶ According to the Supreme Court, the Court of Appeal's reference to the view of the typical consumer was not supported by the travaux préparatoires of the Directive, whose concern with the protection of the parties' consent was amply reflected in its distinct exclusion from review of terms which are “individually negotiated” and by the proviso to the exclusion found in art.4(2) that the terms in question be in plain and intelligible language. ¹⁴⁹⁷ Instead, “the identification of the price or remuneration ... is a matter of objective interpretation by the court”. ¹⁴⁹⁸

38-227

Applying this view of reg.6(2)(b), the Supreme Court agreed that the bank charges in issue before it constituted part of the price or remuneration for the package of services provided by the banks. According to Lord Walker (with whom Baroness Hale and Lord Neuberger agreed):

“[t]hey are an important part of the banks' charging structure, amounting to over 30 per cent of their revenue stream from all personal current account customers. The facts that the charges are contingent, and that the majority of customers do not incur them, are irrelevant”. ¹⁴⁹⁹

With respect, this comes close to saying that the fact that the banks made a good deal of money out of the charges generated by the relevant terms means that they provided for part of the price or remuneration for the package of services, so adopting the position of the supplier of the goods or services, rather than an objective view. Lord Mance J.S.C. (with whom Baroness Hale J.S.C. and Lord Neuberger M.R. also agreed) took a somewhat different approach:

“viewing the matter at the level of the banking contracts, the comparison is between, on the one hand, the package of services offered by the banks (some or all of which may or may not be used by any particular customer) and, on the other, the customer's commitment to pay such charges as may arise from whatever facilities he does use. At this level, the banks' case is that price or remuneration is or includes the customer's potential liability for charges, rather than the payments which he or she has actually to make if and when such charges are incurred.” ¹⁵⁰⁰

Lord Mance therefore viewed the OFT's challenge to the proportionality of the relevant charges to the cost of providing particular services (as opposed to the overall package of services) as beside the point ¹⁵⁰¹.

“[i]f the agreement to incur the relevant charges is part of an overall package contract, its vulnerability to challenge and, if permissible, any assessment of its fairness under the Directive and the Regulations must ... depend upon an analysis of such agreement as part of the package contract.” ¹⁵⁰²

He held, in conclusion, that “the concepts of ‘price or remuneration’ must ... be capable in principle of covering, under a banking contract, an agreement to make a payment in a particular event”. ¹⁵⁰³ So, while Lord Mance accepted that some terms providing for the payment of money did not fall within reg.6(2)(b) even though they could not be said to be “default terms”, ¹⁵⁰⁴ the relevant charges clearly did so fall. The Supreme Court further held that, even if the Court of Appeal had been right in requiring reg.6(2)(b) to be applied from the point of view of the typical consumer so as to focus on what was or was not “ancillary” to the main bargain, the relevant terms would still fall within its exclusion. For this purpose, Lord Walker could not see how “charges amounting to 30 per cent of the revenue stream were ‘not part of the core or essential bargain’”. ¹⁵⁰⁵ Lord Mance agreed:

“[t]he uneconomic nature of the relevant charges from the customers’ viewpoint constitutes the importance of the charges from the banks’ viewpoint, and the plain intelligible language of the banking contracts made evident that there must be a considerable element of cross-subsidy in respect of customers where they remained in credit”. ¹⁵⁰⁶

This view enabled the Supreme Court to hold that, quite apart from the doctrine of acte clair (on which the Supreme Court was divided ¹⁵⁰⁷) it did not need to refer the question of the proper interpretation of art.4(2) of the Directive to the Court of Justice of the EU since the application of reg.6(2) was a matter for itself as a national court. ¹⁵⁰⁸

European case-law

38-228

Since the decision of the Supreme Court in OFT v Abbey National Plc, the Court of Justice of the EU has considered the exclusion contained in art.4(2) of the 1993 Directive on six occasions. ¹⁵⁰⁹ This European case-law takes a very different view of the interpretation of art.4(2) from that adopted by the Supreme Court in OFT v Abbey National Plc and provides significant guidance on its application which must be used by English courts. ¹⁵¹⁰ Of these cases, the most important are Kásler, Matei and Van Hove. ¹⁵¹¹

Kásler and Matei

38-229

These cases both concerned terms of contracts of consumer credit, the details of which will be noted later, ¹⁵¹² its ruling in Kásler being followed closely by Matei. The Court of Justice held that the exclusion in art.4(2) of the Directive must be strictly interpreted as it provides an exception to the test of unfairness ¹⁵¹³ and that its terms require an “autonomous and uniform interpretation throughout the European Union” taking into account its context and the purpose of the legislation. ¹⁵¹⁴ Moreover, while it is for national courts alone to rule on the classification of a term in a contract (as falling within or outside these terms), the Court of Justice can “elicit [from art.4(2)] the criteria that the national court may or must apply when examining a contractual term”. ¹⁵¹⁵ The Court further held that art.4(2) distinguished clearly between two categories of contract term, which are concerned respectively with terms that concern the main subject matter of the contract and terms relating to the “adequacy of the price and remuneration on [the] one hand, as against the services or goods supplied, on the other”. ¹⁵¹⁶

38-230

First, where a term concerns the “main subject matter of the contract” the Court of Justice considered that it should not be examined as to its unfairness at all. According to the Court:

“contractual terms falling within the notion of the ‘main subject-matter of the contract’ ... must be understood as being those that lay down the essential obligations of the contract and, as such, characterise it. By contrast, terms ancillary to those that define the very essence of the contractual relationship cannot fall within the notion of the ‘main subject-matter of the contract’ within the meaning of Article 4(2).” ¹⁵¹⁷

For this purpose, the fact that a term has been individually negotiated cannot constitute a relevant criterion given that, if the term was so negotiated, it would fall outside the scope of the Directive. ¹⁵¹⁸ The Court in Kásler then explained that in identifying the terms covered by the first limb of art.4(2) national courts should have regard to a wide range of circumstances (in the context, “the nature, general scheme and the stipulations of the loan agreement, and its legal and factual context”), but in doing so it did not echo the language used by Advocate General Wahl, who had advised that “the [national] court must decide in each individual case the essential obligation(s) which must objectively be regarded as essential in the general scheme of the contract”, asking itself whether a term “contributes objectively, in one way or another, to the legal or commercial definition of the essential characteristics of the contract”. ¹⁵¹⁹ In this way, the Court of Justice required courts to take a broad contextual approach to the identification of the main subject matter of the contract, rather than the more abstract approach based on the legal definition of the contract which its Advocate General advocated.

38-231

Secondly, the second limb of art.4(2) of the Directive covers terms relating to “the adequacy of the price and remuneration on [the] one hand, as against the services or goods supplied, on the other” ¹⁵²⁰ and so the starting point for the application of this exclusion is also the identification of a contract term which has this characteristic. However, in the view of the Court of Justice:

“it is clear from the wording of Article 4(2) of Directive 93/13 that the second category of terms that cannot be examined as regards unfairness is limited in scope, for that exclusion concerns only the adequacy of the price or remuneration as against the services or goods supplied in exchange.” ¹⁵²¹

The explanation for this exclusion is that “no legal scale or criterion exists that can provide a framework for, and guide, such a review”. ¹⁵²² So, where a term describes “the quality/price ratio of the goods or services supplied” then it is excluded from the review of unfairness only as regards this issue. As a result of this restricted significance of the second limb of the exclusion:

“Terms relating to the consideration ¹⁵²³ due by the consumer to the lender or having an impact on the actual price to be paid to the latter by the consumer thus do not, in principle, fall within the second category of terms, except as regards the question whether the amount of consideration or the price as stipulated in the contract are adequate as compared with the service provided in exchange by the lender.” ¹⁵²⁴

38-232

Thirdly, a term falling within one of the examples in the “indicative list” of terms in the Annex to the Directive will not fall within the exclusion contained in art.4(2) of the Directive, since, given the purpose of this list is to “serve as a ‘grey list’ of terms which may be regarded as unfair”, such an inclusion would “to a large extent be deprived of its effectiveness if they were excluded from the outset from an assessment of their unfairness pursuant to Article 4(2)”. ¹⁵²⁵

Guidance on the application of the exclusion

38-233

In Kásler a contract of consumer credit denominated in a foreign currency set the exchange rate for repayment of the loan by the consumer at the creditor bank's "selling rate" by one term, whereas another term set the exchange rate for payment of the original sums lent by the bank to the consumer at the bank's "buying rate". The loan was denominated in the foreign currency (there, Swiss francs) to ensure stability of the repayment advanced and did not make available any foreign currency to the consumer borrower. In these circumstances, and applying its interpretation of art.4(2) of the Directive, ¹⁵²⁶ the Court of Justice held that it was for the national referring court:

"to determine, having regard to the nature, general scheme and the stipulations of the loan agreement, and its legal and factual context, whether the term setting the exchange rate for the monthly repayment instalments constitutes an essential element of the debtor's obligations, consisting in the repayment of the amount made available by the lender." ¹⁵²⁷

However, the Court of Justice held that the second limb of the exclusion in art.4(2) could not apply to the term before the national referring court:

"such a term, in so far as it contains a pecuniary obligation for the consumer to pay, in repayment instalments of the loan, the difference between the selling rate of exchange and the buying rate of exchange of the foreign currency, cannot be considered as 'remuneration', the adequacy of which as consideration for a service supplied by the lender cannot be subject of an examination as regards unfairness under Article 4(2)." ¹⁵²⁸

This was the case on the basis that this difference could not constitute something in return ("consideration") for any foreign exchange service supplied by the lender in this respect. ¹⁵²⁹

38-234

These views of the Court of Justice therefore differ from those expressed by the Supreme Court in OFT v Abbey National Plc ¹⁵³⁰ in two ways. First, the Court of Justice considered that contract terms relating to the calculation of moneys payable by the consumer should be considered in relation to each limb of the exclusion in art.4(2) (so, for example, a price term may define the very essence of the contractual relationship so as to fall within the "main subject matter of the contract"), whereas the Supreme Court in OFT v Abbey National Plc assumed that the relevant terms setting bank charges would fall only under the second limb of the exclusion. ¹⁵³¹ It may be added that it would be difficult to argue that the relevant terms in OFT v Abbey National Plc constituted an "essential element" of the bank customer's contract as understood by the Court of Justice, especially given that their contingent nature meant that they would not apply to all customers. Secondly, the Supreme Court in OFT v Abbey National Plc considered whether the sums arising under the relevant terms constituted part of the price or remuneration for "the package of services provided by the banks", ¹⁵³² whereas the Court of Justice in Kásler held that the difference between the selling rate of exchange and the buying rate of exchange of the foreign currency, could not be considered as "remuneration" as there was nothing done by the creditor in exchange for this difference, thereby rejecting an approach which would have instead looked at the difference as forming part of the remuneration for the package of financial services provided by the creditor. So, for the Court of Justice, the exclusion in the second limb of art.4(2) applies only where there is something specifically in return for the "price or remuneration" provided by the term in question.

38-235

In Matei the Court of Justice offered guidance to a Romanian court on the application of legislation implementing art.4(2) of the Directive to two terms in a contract of consumer credit: a term under which the consumer debtor could be required to pay the creditor a “risk charge” calculated on the basis of the balance of the loan and payable monthly throughout its duration, and a term authorising the creditor to alter the rate of interest “in the event of significant changes on the financial markets” (the variation clause). ¹⁵³³ As regards the variation clause, the Court of Justice saw four reasons why such a clause should fall outside the scope of the exclusion in art.4(2): first, the Court so held in the earlier case of Invitel in relation to a similar term ¹⁵³⁴; secondly, such a clause is included in the first paragraph of the Annex to the Directive as a term which may be considered unfair unless it satisfies certain conditions set by its second paragraph and this inclusion would be deprived of its effectiveness if it were excluded from the outset from the test of unfairness by way of art.4(2) ¹⁵³⁵; thirdly, the term looks “ancillary” as it contains an adjustment mechanism for the interest rate which is set by a term which is likely to be part of the main subject matter of the contract ¹⁵³⁶; and, fourthly, the second limb of the exclusion did not appear to be in issue before the national court, as the latter was concerned rather with

“the conditions and criteria enabling the lender to make that alteration, in particular on the ground of alleging ‘significant changes in the money market’ and so was not concerned with the limited issue of any alleged inadequacy of the level of the altered interest rate as against any consideration that may have been supplied in exchange for the alteration.” ¹⁵³⁷

So, the view of the Court of Justice was very clearly that the interest variation term fell outside the scope of art.4(2), though it was careful to add that this view was “subject to verification by the referring court”. ¹⁵³⁸

38-236

In the case of the terms providing for a “risk charge” to be applied by the lender, according to the Court of Justice “several elements suggest that they do not fall within the exclusion laid down by Article 4(2)”. ¹⁵³⁹ As regards the first limb of the exclusion, in deciding whether the terms defined the “very essence of the contractual relationship” or are instead “ancillary”, the national court must take into account:

“the essential aim pursued by the ‘risk charge’ which consists in ensuring repayment of the loan. That clearly constitutes an essential obligation on the part of the consumer in exchange for making available the amount of the loan.” ¹⁵⁴⁰

For this purpose, the Court considered that

“taking account of the objective of protecting consumers which must guide the interpretation of the provisions of [the 1993 Directive] ... the mere fact that the ‘risk charge’ may be regarded as representing a relatively important part of the APR and, therefore, the income received by the lender from the credit agreements concerned is in principle irrelevant for the purposes of determining whether the terms providing for that charge define the ‘main subject-matter’ of the contract.” ¹⁵⁴¹

In deciding whether the term providing for the “risk charge” fell within the second limb of the exclusion, in the view of the Court of Justice “certain information in the documents submitted to the Court seems rather to indicate that this is not the case”, though it remained for the referring court to decide whether the term does fall within the exclusion. ¹⁵⁴² The information in question suggests that the dispute below

“does not concern the adequacy of the amount of the risk charge as compared with a service provided by the lender (of whatever kind) since it is submitted that the lender does not provide any actual service which could constitute consideration for that charge, so that the question of the adequacy of that charge does not arise.” ¹⁵⁴³

Instead,

“the dispute ... essentially covers the grounds justifying the terms in question, and in particular, whether, in so far as they require the consumer to pay commission of a substantial amount which aims to ensure the repayment of the loan, even though it is argued that that risk is already guaranteed by a mortgage and that, in exchange for that charge, the bank does not provide a real service to the consumer solely in the consumer's interests, those terms must be regarded as unfair, within the meaning of Article 3 of [the 1993 Directive].” ¹⁵⁴⁴

So, if the national court were to hold that this was the case, the exclusion in the second limb of art.4(2) would not be in issue as the challenge to the term would not concern the adequacy of the remuneration in relation to a service supplied in return by the creditor.

38-237

Of these elements of guidance in the application of art.4(2), two contrast clearly with the approach taken by the Supreme Court in OFT v Abbey National Plc: the first, is that in common with its approach in Kásler, ¹⁵⁴⁵ for the application of the second limb of the exclusion the Court requires a distinct service to be identified in exchange for which the “price or remuneration” is to be paid ¹⁵⁴⁶; the second is that for the application of the first limb, the Court of Justice specifically ruled it to be “in principle irrelevant” that the “risk charge” generated a relatively important part of the income received by the creditor from their contracts with consumers, whereas three members of the Supreme Court in OFT v Abbey National Plc saw the fact that the relevant terms imposing bank charges generated an important part of the banks' revenue stream as relevant to the question whether the charges amounted to part of the “price or remuneration” for the package of services under the second limb. ¹⁵⁴⁷

Van Hove

38-238

Recital 19 of the 1993 Directive sought to explain the exclusion in art.4(2) by stating that:

“it follows [from the exclusion in art.4(2)] inter alia, that in insurance contracts, the terms which clearly define or circumscribe the insured risk and the insurer's liability shall not be subject to such assessment since these restrictions are taken into account in calculating the premium paid by the consumer.”

In Van Hove v CNP Assurances SA ¹⁵⁴⁸ the Court of Justice considered the significance of this in a reference from a French court concerning the application of the core exclusion in relation to a consumer contract of insurance. There the consumer had concluded two contracts of loan with a lender and at the same time had concluded with an insurer a contract of insurance which guaranteed cover of all the loan repayments “due from the borrowers to the contracting party in the event of death, permanent and absolute invalidity or 75% of such loan repayments in the event of total incapacity for work”. A further term stated that the insured “shall be regarded as being in a state of total incapacity for work if, after 90 consecutive days' interruption of activity following an accident or illness (‘the waiting period’), he finds himself unable to take up any activity, paid or otherwise”. ¹⁵⁴⁹

After suffering a work-related accident, the consumer was assessed by the national social security authorities as having a permanent partial incapacity at 72 per cent, but the insurer's doctor advised it that the consumer's state of health allowed him to carry on appropriate employment on a part-time basis and the insurer therefore refused to cover his loan repayments as he was no longer "unable to take up any activity, paid or otherwise" within the meaning of the contract. The consumer claimed that these terms were unfair, and the French court therefore asked the Court of Justice whether art.4(2) should be interpreted as covering such terms in a contract of insurance. The Court of Justice, following faithfully its early approach to art.4(2) in Kásler and Matei, held that in deciding whether a term falls within the "main subject-matter of the contract" a national court should consider whether it lays down "the essential obligations of the contract" which "characterise it" or whether it is an ancillary term. ¹⁵⁵⁰ For this purpose, the Court felt able to draw on its own case-law which held for the purposes of EU provisions on VAT, that:

"the essentials of an insurance transaction are that the insurer undertakes, in return for prior payment of a premium, to provide the insured, in the event of materialisation of the risk covered, with the service agreed when the contract was concluded." ¹⁵⁵¹

Having cited recital 19 of the Directive, the Court held that the contract term in issue which defines the concept of "total incapacity for work" and other conditions which the consumer must meet to receive cover for the loan may circumscribe the insurer's risk and "lay down the essential obligations of the insurance contract at issue", but whether or not it did was for the national court to decide, taking into account the "nature, general scheme and the stipulations of the contract and its legal and factual context". ¹⁵⁵² However, the Court of Justice then considered the significance of the condition for the application of the exclusion in art.4(2) that the term be in "plain, intelligible language" as discussed more generally in the following paragraph.

The condition that the "terms are in plain intelligible language" ¹⁵⁵³

38-239

⚠ The exclusions from the assessment of unfairness contained in art.4(2) of the Directive and reflected in reg.6(2) of the 1999 Regulations are subject to the condition that they are expressed in plain and intelligible language: where they are not the terms are for this reason subject to the test of unfairness. ¹⁵⁵⁴ The Court of Justice has made clear both the importance and the demanding character of this condition. First, in Pohotovost' sro v Korckovská ¹⁵⁵⁵ the Court of Justice held that the omission of the APR (which, together with other "essential terms of the contract" ¹⁵⁵⁶ was required by the Consumer Credit Directive of 1987 ¹⁵⁵⁷) from a term of a contract of consumer credit which concerned the cost of the loan could be seen by a national court as having a decisive impact on the question whether that term was "in plain intelligible language", and, if it was so held, the term failed the condition for the application of art.4(2) and fell to be assessed for its fairness under art.3 of the

Directive. ¹⁵⁵⁸ ⚠ This decision has considerable implications given the breadth of scope of application and the extent of information requirements imposed by the law (and EU law in particular) in relation to consumer contracts. ¹⁵⁵⁹ Secondly, in Kásler the Court of Justice explained more generally the significance of the condition that the "terms are in plain intelligible language", holding that it has the same scope as the requirement of plain intelligible writing in art.5 of the 1993 Directive, ¹⁵⁶⁰ and that the latter includes a requirement that the consumer should actually be given an opportunity of examining all the terms of the contract. ¹⁵⁶¹ The Court then noted that it had previously held in the context of art.5 that pre-contractual information on the terms of the contract and the consequences of concluding it is of "fundamental importance for a consumer" as it provides the basis on which "he decides whether he wishes to be bound by the terms previously drawn up by the seller or supplier". ¹⁵⁶² For this reason, "the requirement of transparency" of contract terms in the 1993 Directive (including in art.4(2)) cannot be "reduced merely to their being formally and grammatically intelligible", but must be understood in a broad sense given that the Directive is based on the idea that the consumer is in a position of weakness compared to the trader "in particular as regards his level of knowledge". ¹⁵⁶³ As a result, the requirement of transparency requires that the "consumer is in a position to evaluate, on the basis of clear, intelligible criteria, the economic consequences for him which derive from" the term in question; the reasons for the trader using the term and its relationship with other contractual terms should be clear and intelligible.¹⁵⁶⁴ In the context of the terms before it, which concerned the application of different exchange rates to different aspects of the contract of consumer credit,¹⁵⁶⁵ the national referring court must therefore “determine whether, having regard to all the relevant information, including the promotional material and information provided by the lender in the negotiation of the loan agreement, the average consumer, who is reasonably well informed and reasonably observant and circumspect, would not only be aware of the difference, generally observed on the securities market, between the selling rate of exchange and the buying rate of exchange of a foreign currency, but also be able to assess the potentially significant economic consequences for him resulting from the application of the selling rate of exchange for the calculation of the repayments for which he would ultimately be liable and, therefore, the total cost of the sum borrowed.”¹⁵⁶⁶

It will be seen therefore, that the Court of Justice requires national courts to consider as a condition for the application of the exclusion in art.4(2) not merely whether a term is formally or grammatically clear but also whether (in its context) it allows the average consumer to understand its practical significance for himself or herself.¹⁵⁶⁷ For this purpose, Van Hove provides an example of how very demanding the requirement of transparency may be. There, a contract of insurance contained a term which restricted cover for the consumer to the situation where he suffered from “total incapacity for work” where “after 90 consecutive days’ interruption of activity following an accident or illness ... he finds himself unable to take up any activity, paid or otherwise”.¹⁵⁶⁸ The French court had considered that while “plain and precise”, this term is capable of being understood in various ways, including that it does not rule out payment other than where the consumer is not fit to carry on any activity whatsoever¹⁵⁶⁹ so that it cannot be ruled out that, even though grammatically intelligible, “the scope of that term was not understood by the consumer”.¹⁵⁷⁰ The notion of “activity, paid or otherwise” is, in the view of the Court of Justice, “extremely broad and vague”; moreover, the consumer may not necessarily have been aware of the difference between the concept of “total incapacity for work” under the contract and “partial permanent incapacity” within the meaning of French social security law.¹⁵⁷¹ It was, therefore, for the national court to assess all the information available to the consumer as well as the contract itself, in deciding whether an average consumer would have understood this difference and its potentially significant economic consequences.¹⁵⁷² Moreover, the fact that the insurance contract was related to loan contracts could also be relevant as:

“[t]he consumer cannot be required ... to have the same vigilance regarding the extent of the risks covered by that insurance contract as he would if he had concluded that contract and the loan contracts separately.”¹⁵⁷³

It will be seen that, in this way, the understanding of the average consumer of the significance of a contract term is crucial to the application of the exclusion in art.4(2), though it is relevant to the condition of transparency rather than to the identification of the terms subject to the exclusion.¹⁵⁷⁴ As will be seen, the Consumer Rights Act 2015 follows this approach in its provision implementing art.4(2) of the Directive by expressly referring to the “average consumer” for the purpose of its condition that the term be prominent as well as transparent.¹⁵⁷⁵

A variable objective test

38-240

It has been seen from its treatment by the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive, that the test of the “average consumer” is not necessarily uniform, but can instead be a test which (while objective) varies according to context.¹⁵⁷⁶ It is submitted that similar distinctions could helpfully be drawn in the context of the fairness or transparency of contract terms especially as regards the extent to which a consumer could be expected to read and understand the terms of the contract, for while a national court would generally be justified in assessing these questions bearing in mind an “average consumer” (neither very sophisticated and careful nor, conversely, of under average intelligence or careless), where a trader has targeted its goods or services (and therefore its contract terms) towards a particular group of consumers, then this standard should be varied so as to take this into account. It is submitted, moreover, that in the context of contract terms, this standard could be varied in either direction. So, if a business targets particularly vulnerable consumers (for example, offering loans to low-income or poor-credit would-be borrowers), then the “average consumer” should be to an extent lowered; but if a business targets its sophisticated financial products towards high-income individuals (who may be independently advised), then the “average consumer” should be to this extent raised. As the General Court has observed in the context of EU legislation on trade marks, “the average consumer’s level of attention is likely to vary according to the category of goods or services in question”.¹⁵⁷⁷ In this way, the “average consumer” is an objective standard variable according to its context.

OFT v Abbey National Plc viewed in the light of the European case-law

38-241

In earlier paragraphs, it has been explained that the approaches to the interpretation and proper application of the exclusion in art.4(2) of the Directive (reg.6(2) of the Regulations) taken by the Supreme Court in OFT v Abbey National Plc and by the Court of Justice of the EU in its later case-law differ significantly.¹⁵⁷⁸ Under the approach of the Court of Justice, there are three questions for a court considering the possible application of reg.6(2) to terms such as those considered by the Supreme Court in OFT v Abbey National Plc (i.e. terms in a contract for a current account which imposed charges on consumer customers when they requested or instructed the bank to make a payment without sufficient funds or credit).¹⁵⁷⁹ First, under the first limb of the exclusion in reg.6(2), the court should consider whether the terms could be said to “lay down the essential obligations of the contract and, as such, characterise it”.¹⁵⁸⁰ It is submitted that it would be most unlikely that a court would so decide, particularly given the contingent nature of the terms in question.¹⁵⁸¹ Secondly, under the second limb of the exclusion, the court should consider whether any payments to be made under the terms constitute the “remuneration” in exchange for a specific service provided by the bank (rather than as part of the remuneration for a wider package of services). Here, it could be argued that the banks provided a “specific service” to customers when or before the charge was levied by processing their instruction to pay and then paying,¹⁵⁸² but it is submitted that Andrew Smith J.’s view on this question in OFT v Abbey National Plc is correct, that is, that the such charges are not payments in exchange for those services, but charges levied because the services are supplied in particular circumstances.¹⁵⁸³ If this view is correct, then the exclusion in reg.6(2) would not apply to terms imposing such bank charges, without reference to the third question. Thirdly, even if in principle the terms imposing bank charges were to fall within the exclusion in reg.6(2), they would do so only if they passed the requirement of transparency. For this purpose, the Court of Justice requires not merely that the terms are grammatically intelligible, but that the average consumer would be able to evaluate the economic consequences of the term for his or her own position. The answer to this question would depend not merely on the clarity or even prominence of the drafting of the terms in question but on how any particular term would be viewed by the average consumer given the wider context in which the contract in question was made.¹⁵⁸⁴

¹⁴⁷⁷. And cf. 1994 Regulations reg.3(2).

¹⁴⁷⁸. This view was pressed strongly at the time of the travaux préparatoires of the Directive in relation to the EC Commission’s Proposal for a Council Directive on unfair terms in consumer contracts COM(90) 322 final, which did not restrict the control of unfair contract terms in this way: see notably, Brandner and Ulmer (1991) 28 C.M.L.R. 645 especially at 655–657; Niglia, The Transformation of Contract in Europe (2003) pp.119–145.

¹⁴⁷⁹. The position of art.4(2) of the Directive suggests that it excludes certain types of issue from the evaluation of the fairness of terms, as does the first part of its text (“assessment of the unfair nature of the terms shall relate neither to the definition of the subject matter”) and it may be thought unusual for a particular term itself to “relate ... to the adequacy of the price or remuneration, as against the goods or services supplied in exchange”. On the other hand, the last phrase of art.4(2) suggests the exclusion of a category of term (“in so far as these terms are in plain intelligible language”) and this is supported by recital 19, according to which “assessment shall not be made of terms which describe the main subject matter of the contract nor the quality/price ratio of the goods or services supplied” continuing that “the main subject matter of the contract and the price/quality ratio may nevertheless be taken into account in assessing the fairness of other terms”. As will be seen, the CJEU has recently held that the way in which the exclusion in art.4(2) applies differs according to its two limbs, see below, paras 38-229—38-231.

- 1480. 1993 Directive recital 19 states that “... it follows [from the exclusion in art.4(2)] inter alia, that in insurance contracts, the terms which clearly define or circumscribe the insured risk and the insurer’s liability shall not be subject to such assessment since these restrictions are taken into account in calculating the premium paid by the consumer”. There is no equivalent explanatory provision in either the 1994 or the 1999 Regulations. cf. Bankers Insurance Co Ltd v South [2003] EWHC 380, [2003] P.I.Q.R. P28 at [21] (exclusion in travel insurance agreed as defining “main subject matter of the contract”) and see below, paras.38-238 discussing Van Hove v CNP Assurances SA (C-96/14) of April 23, 2015.
- 1481. [2001] UKHL 52, [2002] 1 A.C. 481, below, para.38-225.
- 1482. [2008] EWHC 875 (Comm), [2009] EWCA Civ 116, [2009] 2 W.L.R. 1286, [2009] UKSC 6, [2010] 1 A.C. 696; Whittaker (2010) 73 M.L.R. 106 and see below, paras 38-226—38-227.
- 1483. Kásler v OTP Jelzálogbank Zrt (C-26/13) of April 30, 2014, paras 38-228 et seq.
- 1484. Matei v SC Volksbank România SA (C-143/13) of February 26, 2015.
- 1485. European Communities Act 1972 s.3(1). Under the “minimum harmonisation” clause in the 1993 Directive art.8 UK law is entitled to narrow the core exclusion provided by art.4(2) of the Directive in the interests of more extensive consumer protection and this has apparently been effected by the Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.64, below, paras 38-363—38-371.
- 1486. [2001] UKHL 52, [2002] 1 A.C. 481 and see Whittaker (2004) ZEuP 75.
- 1487. [2001] UKHL 52 at [10].
- 1488. [2001] UKHL 52 at [12] See similarly [2001] UKHL 52 at [34] (Lord Steyn). References to reg.3(2)(b) refer to the earlier Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1994 (SI 1994/3159).
- 1489. [2001] UKHL 52 at [11]–[12], [34], [43].
- 1490. [2001] UKHL 52 at [20] and see below, para.38-249.
- 1491. [2001] UKHL 52 at [56], per Lord Millett and see below, para.38-249.
- 1492. [2008] EWHC 875 (Comm), [2009] EWCA Civ 116, [2009] 2 W.L.R. 1286, [2009] UKSC 6, [2010] 1 A.C. 696; Whittaker (2011) 74 M.L.R. 106.
- 1493. [2008] EWHC 875 at [423]–[424]. cf. above, para.38-224 n.1405.
- 1494. [2009] UKSC 6 at [95], per Lord Mance J.S.C.; similarly, at [57]–[60], per Lord Phillips P.S.C. While Lord Walker of Gestingthorpe J.S.C. was “inclined to agree” that for the purposes of the appeal the dispute as to the nature of the exclusion was a distraction, he also saw that “in the long run it may become an issue of great practical importance”: [2009] UKSC 6 at [29] and see at [61] (Lord Phillips).
- 1495. [2009] UKSC 6 at [40], per Lord Walker J.S.C. and cf. at [80] and [81] (where this view is apparently taken by Lord Phillips P.S.C.), and at [98] (Lord Mance J.S.C.).

- 1496. [2009] EWCA Civ 116 at [91]–[92].
- 1497. [2009] UKSC 6 at [45] (Lord Walker J.S.C.); similarly at [78] (Lord Phillips P.S.C.), [108], [112] and [115] (Lord Mance J.S.C.). In relation to this particular issue, OFT v Foxtons Ltd [2009] EWHC 1681 (Ch), [2009] 29 E.G. 98 (C.S.) (which was decided on the basis of the CA's decision in OFT v Abbey National Plc) is overtaken by the decision of the SC in the latter case.
- 1498. [2009] UKSC 6 at [113] per Lord Mance J.S.C.
- 1499. [2009] UKSC 6 at [47] and see at [88] (Lord Phillips J.S.C.).
- 1500. [2009] UKSC 6 at [98] (emphasis added).
- 1501. [2009] UKSC 6 at [99].
- 1502. [2009] UKSC 6 at [100].
- 1503. [2009] UKSC 6 at [104].
- 1504. [2009] UKSC 6 at [101].
- 1505. [2009] UKSC 6 at [47].
- 1506. [2009] UKSC 6 at [117].
- 1507. Lord Walker ([2009] UKSC 6 at [49]), Lord Mance ([2009] UKSC 6 at 115) and Baroness Hale ([2009] UKSC 6 at [91]) considered that the doctrine of acte clair would have applied; Lord Phillips ([2009] UKSC 6 at [91]) and Lord Neuberger ([2009] UKSC 6 at [120]) would have held that it did not. On the general division of function between national courts and the CJEU see above, para.38-016.
- 1508. [2009] UKSC 6 at [50] (Lord Walker), [117] (Lord Mance) and at [120] (Lord Neuberger).
- 1509. Caja de Ahorros y Monte de Piedad de Madrid v Asociación de Usuarios de Servicios Bancarios (Ausbanc) (C-484/08) of June 3, 2010 [2010] 3 C.M.L.R. 43; Pohotovost' sro v Korckovská (C-76/10) of November 16, 2010 (available only in French); Nemzeti Fogyasztóvédelmi Hatóság v Invitel Távközlési Zrt (C-472/10) of April 26, 2012 ("Invitel (C-472/10)"); Kásler v OTP Jelzálogbank Zrt (C-26/13) of April 30, 2014 ("Kásler (C-26/13)"); and Matei v SC Volksbank România SA (C-143/13) of February 26, 2015 ("Matei (C-143/13)"); Van Hove v CNP Assurances SA (C-96/14) of April 26, 2015 ("Van Hove (C-96/14)").
- 1510. For this reason, it is submitted that the reasoning of English courts which have applied the interpretation of art.4(2) of the 1993 Directive by the SC in OFT v Abbey National Plc or otherwise without reference to the recent case-law of the CJEU as described in the text should not be relied on or should be relied on only in the light of the case-law of the CJEU: for these earlier decisions see Office of Fair Trading v Ashbourne Management Services Ltd [2011] EWHC 1237 (Ch), [2011] E.C.C. 31 (terms which set a minimum duration for gym membership of one year with either no or only a very limited possibility of cancellation without liability fell within the main subject matter of the contract but remained reviewable for fairness on other grounds); Foxtons Ltd v O'Reardon [2011] EWHC 2946 (QB) (term in exclusive estate agency contract for sale of property provided that agent's fee was payable on exchange of contracts fell within reg.6(2)(a) as it defined the main subject matter of the contract). cf. Financial Services Authority v Asset L.I. Inc (t/a Asset Land Investment Inc) [2013] EWHC 178 (Ch) at [132] (terms in contracts for the sale of land under a collective investment scheme which described services undertaken by the seller held not to relate to the main subject matter of the contract, which was the sale and purchase of land). On appeal, the Court of Appeal considered that the issue of the unfairness of the terms was unnecessary for the issues before the court, but it would have agreed with the court below: [2014] EWCA Civ 435, [2015] 1 All E.R. 1 at [96]–[99].
- 1511. Below, para.38-229 et seq.

- 1512. Below, paras 38-236—38-237.
- 1513. Kásler (C-26/13) at para.42; Matei (C-143/13) para.49.
- 1514. Kásler (C-26/13) at paras 37–38; Matei (C-143/13) para.50.
- 1515. Kásler (C-26/13) at para.45; Matei (C-143/13) para.53.
- 1516. Kásler (C-26/13) at paras 43–51 and 52–58 respectively; Matei (C-143/13) paras 54–55.
- 1517. Kásler (C-26/13) at [49]–[50]; similarly Matei (C-143/13) para.54. Subsequent editions of the present work have explained art.4(2) on the basis that it draws a distinction between the term or terms which express the substance of the bargain and “incidental” (if important) terms which surround them, a formulation quoted with apparent approval by Lord Bingham of Cornhill in Director General of Fair Trading v First National Bank Plc [2001] UKHL 52 at [12]: see, most recently, 31st edn, Vol.I, para.15-060.
- 1518. Kásler (C-26/13) at [47]–[48], referring to 1993 Directive art.3(1).
- 1519. Kásler (C-26/13) A.G. Wahl, Opinion of February 12, 2014 at [49] (original emphasis) and [53] (emphasis added).
- 1520. Kásler (C-26/13) at para.52; Matei (C-143/13) para.55.
- 1521. Kásler (C-26/13) at para.54 and 55; Matei (C-143/13) para.55.
- 1522. Kásler (C-26/13) at para.54.
- 1523. In the French version of this judgment, “consideration” appears as “la contrepartie” and in the German as “Gegenleistung”, that is in both cases, something in return.
- 1524. Matei (C-143/13) para.56.
- 1525. Matei (C-143/13) para.60. Under the Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.64(6), this position is made explicit as this provides that the section providing for the “core exclusion” “does not apply to a term of a contract listed in Part 1 of Schedule 2”, i.e. the indicative list of terms foreseen by the Annex to the 1993 Directive: see below, para.38-366.
- 1526. Above, paras 38-229—38-230.
- 1527. Kásler (C-26/13) at para.54.
- 1528. Kásler (C-26/13) at para.59 (emphasis added).
- 1529. Kásler (C-26/13) at para.58.
- 1530. [2009] UKSC 6, above, paras 38-226—38-227.
- 1531. i.e. 1999 Regulations reg.6(2)(b).
- 1532. [2009] UKSC 6 at [40], per Lord Walker J.S.C. and cf. at [80] and [81] (where this view is apparently taken by Lord Phillips P.S.C.), and at [98] (Lord Mance J.S.C.), above, para.38-226.
- 1533. Matei (C-143/13) paras 26–27.
- 1534. Nemzeti Fogyasztóvédelmi Hatóság v Invitel Távközlési Zrt (C-472/10) of April 26, 2012 at para.23; Matei (C-143/13) para.58 and see below, para.38-288.
- 1535. Matei (C-143/13) paras 59–61 referring to 1993 Directive Annex paras 1(j) and 2(b).

- 1536. Matei (C-143/13) para.62.
- 1537. Matei (C-143/13) para.63.
- 1538. Matei (C-143/13) para.63.
- 1539. Matei (C-143/13) para.64.
- 1540. Matei (C-143/13) para.67.
- 1541. Matei (C-143/13) para.68.
- 1542. Matei (C-143/13) para.69.
- 1543. Matei (C-143/13) para.70 referring by analogy to Kásler (C-26/13) at para.58, above, para.38-233.
- 1544. Matei (C-143/13) para.71.
- 1545. Kásler (C-26/13) at para.59, above, para.38-234.
- 1546. cf. [2009] UKSC 6 at [40], per Lord Walker J.S.C. and cf. at [80] and [81] (where this view is apparently taken by Lord Phillips P.S.C.) and at [98] (Lord Mance J.S.C.), above, para.38-226.
- 1547. [2009] UKSC 6 at [47] (Lord Walker, with whom Baroness Hale and Lord Neuberger agreed), above, para.38-227.
- 1548. C-96/14 of April 23, 2015 (“Van Hove (C-96/14)”).
- 1549. Van Hove (C-96/14) paras 11–12.
- 1550. Van Hove (C-96/14) paras 31, 33 referring to Kásler (C-26/13) para.50; Matei (C-143/13) para.54 above, para.38-230.
- 1551. Van Hove (C-96/14) para.34 referring to Card Protection Plan (CCP) Ltd v Commissioners of Customs & Excise (C-349/96) [1999] E.C.R. I-973 para.17; Skandia (C-240/99) [2001] E.C.R. I-01951 para.37; and Commission v Greece (C-13/06) [2006] E.C.R. I-11563 para.10.
- 1552. Van Hove (C-96/14) para.36–37, following Kásler at paras 50 and 51, above, para.38-230.
- 1553. Under the Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.64, this condition has apparently been extended so as to impose a condition that a term is both “transparent and prominent”: see below, paras 38-367—38-368.
- 1554. For examples in the English courts see Bankers Insurance Co Ltd v South [2003] P.I.Q.R. P.28 at [24] (exclusion in travel insurance held “plain and intelligible”); Financial Services Authority v Asset L.I. Inc (t/a Asset Land Investment Inc) [2013] EWHC 178 (Ch), [2013] 2 B.C.L.C. 480 at [132] (terms in contracts for the sale of land under a collective investment scheme which described services undertaken by seller held not to be in “plain, intelligible” language and so reviewable for unfairness even if they otherwise fell within the exclusion of reg.6(2) of the 1999 Regulations). On appeal, the Court of Appeal considered that the issue of the unfairness of the terms was unnecessary for the issues before the court, but it would have agreed with the court below: [2014] EWCA Civ 435, [2015] 1 All E.R. 1 at [96]–[99].
- 1555. C-76/10 of November 16, 2010 (available only in French). The decision was an “order” (ordonnance) made under art.104(3) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice, according to which a “question referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling is identical to a question on which the Court has already ruled, or where the answer to such a question may be clearly deduced from existing case-law, the Court may, after hearing the Advocate General, at any time give its decision by reasoned order in which reference is made to its previous judgment or to the relevant case-law”.

- 1556. Directive 87/102 on consumer credit [1987] O.J. L42/48 art.4(3).
- 1557. Directive 87/102 on consumer credit [1987] O.J. L42/48 art.4(2)(a).
- 1558.  C-76/10 para.72, citing Caja de Madrid (C-484/08) para.32. The CJEU also held that the national court could find that the term was unfair as a result of the omission of the APR: C-76/10 para.73. See similarly Bucura v SC Bancpost SA (C-348/14) July 9, 2015 at paras 57–63.
- 1559. See above, paras 38-055 et seq., especially in respect of “on-premises contracts”, off-premises contracts and distance contracts.
- 1560. Kásler (C-26/13) at para.69. On art.5 see below paras 38-317 et seq. (1999 Regulations reg.7) and paras 38-382—38-385 (Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.68).
- 1561. Kásler (C-26/13) at para.67 referring to 1993 Directive recital 12.
- 1562. Kásler (C-26/13) at para.70 referring to RWE Vertrieb AG v Verbraucherzentrale Nordrhein-Westfalen eV (C-92/11) March 21, 2013 at para.44, below, para.38-320.
- 1563. Kásler (C-26/13) at paras 71-72.
- 1564. Kásler (C-26/13) at para.75.
- 1565. Above, para.38-233.
- 1566. Kásler (C-26/13) at para.74 (emphasis added).
- 1567. On the wider significance of the “average consumer” in EU law see above, paras 38-041—38-043.
- 1568. Van Hove v CNP Assurances SA (C-96/14) of April 23, 2015, on which see above, para.38-238.
- 1569. Van Hove (C-96/14) para.42.
- 1570. Van Hove (C-96/14) para.43.
- 1571. Van Hove (C-96/14) paras 45-46.
- 1572. Van Hove (C-96/14) para.47.
- 1573. Van Hove (C-96/14) para.48.
- 1574. cf. the approach of the Court of Appeal in OFT v Abbey National Plc (reversed by the SC in the same case) which adopted the viewpoint of an average consumer to distinguish between those contract terms which set the “price or remuneration” and other terms, as suggested by earlier editions of the present Work: [2009] EWCA Civ 116, [2009] 2 W.L.R. 1286 at [72] referring to the present work (30th edn, 2008) Vol.I para.15-058, reversed [2009] UKSC 6, [2010] 1 A.C. 696 at [113]. On the decision of the SC, see above, paras 38-226—38-227.
- 1575. Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.64(2)-(5) below, paras 38-364—38-369.
- 1576. Above, paras 38-041 and 38-157.
- 1577. Tifosi Optics Inc v Office for Harmonisation in the Internal Market (Trade Marks and Designs) (OHIM) (T-531/12) para.36; Mundipharma v Office for Harmonisation in the Internal Market (Trade Marks and Designs) OHIM - Altana Pharma (RESPICUR) (T-256/04) [2007]

E.C.R.II-449 at para.42.

1578. See above, paras 38-234 and 38-237.

1579. See above, paras 38-229—38-232.

1580. Kásler (C-26/13) at para.49 and see above, para.38-230.

1581. cf. above, para.38-226.

1582. cf. the Court of Appeal in OFT v Abbey National Plc [2009] EWCA Civ 116, [2009] 2 W.L.R. 1286 at [17] referring to the discussion of Andrew Smith J. [2008] EWHC 875 (Comm), [2008] 2 All E.R. (Comm) 625 at [373] et seq. and especially at [402]-[413]. The Court of Appeal did not require to decide this issue: at [113].

1583. OFT v Abbey National Plc [2008] EWHC 875 (Comm), [2008] 2 All E.R. (Comm) 625 at [406]. It is true that Andrew Smith J. referred to the understanding of the typical consumer for this purpose (and this does not form part of the approach of the CJEU at this stage of its analysis), but Andrew Smith J. considered that it rested equally on the substance and reality of the matter. The Supreme Court did not take a view on this issue as it held that payments made under the terms formed part of the remuneration for a package of services: [2009] UKSC 6, [2010] 1 A.C. 696 especially at [42], [47], [81], [89], [100]-[104], and [104], above, para.38-226.

1584. cf. above, paras 38-239—38-240.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts
Section 6. - The Control of Unfair Contract Terms
(c) - The Old Law: the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999
(iii) - The Requirement of Fairness
(cc) - The Composite Test of Unfairness

The test in the Regulations

38-242

Regulation 5(1) of the 1999 Regulations provides that:

“A contractual term which has not been individually negotiated shall be regarded as unfair if, contrary to the requirement of good faith, it causes a significant imbalance in the parties’ rights and obligations arising under the contract, to the detriment of the consumer.” ¹⁵⁸⁵

Regulation 6(1) further provides that:

“Without prejudice to regulation 12, ¹⁵⁸⁶ the unfairness of a contractual term shall be assessed, taking into account the nature of the goods ¹⁵⁸⁷ or services for which the contract was concluded and by referring, at the time of the contract, to all the circumstances attending the conclusion of the contract and to all the other terms of the contract or another contract on which it is dependent.” ¹⁵⁸⁸

These provisions reflect accurately the test of fairness in the 1993 Directive ¹⁵⁸⁹ and provide the framework for a sophisticated and composite test of unfairness, its combination of different ideas and considerations being clearly aimed at reducing the degree of uncertainty and discretion which is given to a court in requiring it to judge the fairness of a term. This test can be broken down into two principal elements: the basic test of unfairness (including the significance of the requirement of good faith and the range of considerations relevant to its application); and the significance and contents of the “indicative” or “grey list” of terms found in Sch.2 of the 1999 Regulations, ¹⁵⁹⁰ to which may be added other illustrations of potentially unfair terms, which will be discussed in the following paragraphs.

The basic test

38-243

The basic test of unfairness of a term is that:

“... contrary to the requirement of good faith it causes a significant imbalance in the parties’ rights and obligations under the contract, to the detriment of the consumer.”

The significance of this test gave rise to considerable comment,¹⁵⁹¹ and for some its use of the notion of good faith introduced into English law a new and somewhat alien concept. In this respect, it is helpful to bear in mind the origins of the reference to good faith, this flowing from its use in the German legislation which significantly influenced the Directive.¹⁵⁹² In turn, this German legislation can be seen as the legislative recognition of existing judicial controls on unfair contract terms, this law-making being justified by the Civil Code’s general provision requiring good faith of parties to contracts¹⁵⁹³. “good faith” in this context can be seen as little more than a convenient legal pigeon-hole in which to have placed within the structure of the Civil Code judicial developments which took into account a range of considerations deemed appropriate to the control in hand.¹⁵⁹⁴ For this reason, it could be thought that the reference to “good faith” in the Directive is no more than a bow in the direction of these origins. Indeed, such a very limited significance to the phrase “contrary to the requirement of good faith” has been adopted by some French writers¹⁵⁹⁵ and this was reflected in its omission from France’s implementing legislation.¹⁵⁹⁶ For a French lawyer it is unnecessary for two reasons: first, because the French Civil Code already makes a general requirement of the performance of contracts in good faith¹⁵⁹⁷ (an argument of no significance for English law), but, secondly, because a business supplier could not be considered to remain in good faith if he were to seek to enjoy the disproportionate advantages set out in the contract concluded with the consumer.¹⁵⁹⁸ From this perspective, the requirement that the term “causes a significant imbalance in the parties’ rights and obligations under the contract to the detriment of the consumer” is sufficient in itself.

“Significant imbalance” and the role of good faith

38-244

However, this French view of good faith misunderstands the particular function of the requirement of good faith in the scheme of the Directive. According to this scheme, the first and basic element of the requirement of fairness is that the term “causes a significant imbalance in the parties’ rights and obligations arising under the contract, to the detriment of the consumer”. However, not all contract terms which cause such a significant imbalance are to be held unfair. Recital 16 of the Directive explains, therefore, the special role of the requirement of good faith.

*“Whereas the assessment, according to the general criteria chosen, of the unfair character of the terms, in particular in sale or supply activities of a public nature providing collective services which take account of solidarity among users, must be supplemented by a means of making an overall evaluation of the different interests involved; whereas this constitutes the requirement of good faith; whereas, in making an assessment of good faith, particular regard shall be had to the strength of the bargaining positions of the parties, whether the consumer had an inducement to agree to the term and whether the goods or services were sold or supplied to the special order of the consumer; whereas the requirement of good faith may be satisfied by the seller or supplier where he deals fairly and equitably with the other party whose legitimate interests he has to take into account.”*¹⁵⁹⁹

38-245

So, according to recital 16, the role of the requirement as to good faith is to ensure that the test of “significant imbalance” (“the general criteria chosen”) is not applied in any sense mechanically, but rather the court should in making its assessment of a contract term look to “an overall evaluation of the interests involved”. It is interesting, for this purpose, that while some of the factors which the recital mentions as being significant to this evaluation are familiar to English lawyers from the assessment of “reasonableness” under the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977¹⁶⁰⁰ and may indeed be thought to represent an attempt to interpret good faith particularly for the benefit of common lawyers, the recital gives as a first and particular context for this supplementary requirement of good faith as “sale or supply activities of a public nature providing collective services which take account of solidarity among users”. ¹⁶⁰¹ This inclusion shows that the function of the requirement of good faith is to ensure that all possible relevant considerations may be taken into account in making the overall assessment of the fairness of a term, even where these considerations relate to the public interest and therefore not necessarily to the position of either of the parties to the contract. ¹⁶⁰² Furthermore, two of the other circumstances mentioned by the recital as possible elements in this “overall evaluation” illustrate circumstances in which a “significant imbalance in the parties’ rights and obligations arising under the contract to the detriment of the consumer” may be justified and therefore fair, where:

“... the consumer had an inducement to agree to the term [or] ... the goods or services were sold or supplied to the special order of the consumer.”

Another element draws attention to the significance of the relative bargaining power of the parties (which will normally rest with the seller or supplier but which may exceptionally rest with the consumer). The final circumstance re-emphasises the inclusive nature of the requirement of good faith, stating that this may be satisfied:

“... by the seller or supplier where he deals fairly and equitably with the other party whose legitimate interests he has to take into account.”

This is clearly related to the requirement in art.4(1) of the Directive that in assessing the fairness of a term, a court should consider “all the circumstances attending the conclusion of the contract”.

38-246

What all this means, therefore, is that the Directive does require an autonomous interpretation of the concept of good faith, but not one drawn from the significances or uses to which the concept (or related concepts) have been put in the laws of the Member States generally. ¹⁶⁰³ The concept of good faith is autonomous in the sense that it is specifically European (rather than to be left to the interpretation of national law or national courts), but it is also autonomous in the sense that it is particular to the context of the control of unfair contract terms. This can be seen in recent case-law in the Court of Justice in Aziz ¹⁶⁰⁴ and Menéndez Álvarez. ¹⁶⁰⁵

Aziz and Menéndez Álvarez

38-247

In Aziz the Court of Justice explained the test of “significant imbalance” and the proper approach to the condition that this imbalance must arise “contrary to the requirement of good faith” in a reference from a Spanish court asking for guidance as to whether three terms in a contract of loan secured by a mortgage of residential property to be repaid over 33 years were unfair within the meaning of the Directive. ¹⁶⁰⁶ First, as the Court had previously explained, “the system of protection introduced by the directive is based on the idea that the consumer is in a weaker position vis-à-vis the seller or supplier, as regards both his bargaining power and his level of knowledge” and the Directive’s provision that unfair terms are not binding on the consumer “aims to replace the formal balance which the contract establishes between the rights and obligations of the parties with an effective balance which re-establishes equality between them”. ¹⁶⁰⁷ The Court then held that:

“in order to ascertain whether a term causes a ‘significant imbalance’ in the parties’ rights and obligations arising under the contract, to the detriment of the consumer, it must in particular be considered what rules of national law would apply in the absence of an agreement by the parties in that regard. Such a comparative analysis will enable the national court to evaluate whether and, as the case may be, to what extent, the contract places the consumer in a legal situation less favourable than that provided for by the national law in force. To that end, an assessment should also be carried out of the legal situation of that consumer having regard to the means at his disposal, under national legislation, to prevent continued use of unfair terms.” ¹⁶⁰⁸

The Court continued:

“With regard to the question of the circumstances in which such an imbalance arises ‘contrary to the requirement of good faith’, having regard to the sixteenth recital in the preamble to the directive ... the national court must assess for those purposes whether the seller or supplier, dealing fairly and equitably with the consumer, could reasonably assume that the consumer would have agreed to such a term in individual contract negotiations.” ¹⁶⁰⁹

The Court of Justice therefore requires national courts to make a hypothetical judgment as to what the seller or supplier could reasonably assume as to the agreement of the consumer, an approach which links the judicial control of the fairness of contract terms to the condition that the terms in question were not “individually negotiated”, ¹⁶¹⁰ seeing the court’s control as a substitute for the consumer’s own decision-making. For this purpose, Advocate General Kokott, to whose Opinion the Court had referred with approval, added that:

“In this connection, it is important inter alia whether such contractual terms are common, that is to say they are used regularly in legal relations in similar contracts, or are surprising, whether there is an objective reason for the term and whether, despite the shift in the contractual balance in favour of the user of the term in relation to the substance of the term in question, the consumer is not left without protection.” ¹⁶¹¹

The Court of Justice, by way of “guidance” to the national court, then explained the proper question for it to consider in relation to an acceleration clause in a contract of loan under which the lender would have been entitled to call in the totality of the loan on expiry of the 33 years where the consumer borrower failed to pay any of the principal or the interest on the loan. ¹⁶¹² Where a borrower under a long-term loan defaulted over a “limited specific period”, the national court should:

“assess in particular ... whether the right of the [lender] to call in the totality of the loan is conditional upon the non-compliance by the consumer with an obligation which is of essential importance in the context of the contractual relationship in question, whether that right is provided for in cases in which such non-compliance is sufficiently serious in the light of the term and amount of the loan, whether that right derogates from the relevant applicable rules and whether national law provides for adequate and effective means enabling the consumer subject to such a term to remedy the effects of the loan being called in.” ¹⁶¹³

So, while the Court did indeed refer to the position under the national law applicable in the absence of the relevant term, it first took a view as to the proper position in respect of the operation of such a clause, that is, that the obligation is “of essential importance” and/or the consumer’s non-compliance “is sufficiently serious”. Here, therefore, the Court of Justice requires the national court to compare the position under the contract term and the position which should be the case given what it considers to be these proper considerations. The Court of Justice, following its Advocate General’s advice, also found the “indicative list” in the Annex to the Directive (and found in the 1999 Regulations Sch.2) particularly helpful in setting out the considerations the national court should take into account. ¹⁶¹⁴

Similarly, in Menéndez Álvarez ¹⁶¹⁵ the Court of Justice held that in general the notion of “significant imbalance” in the test of unfairness of contract terms in the 1993 Directive “cannot be limited to a quantitative economic evaluation based on a comparison between the total value of the transaction which is the subject of the contract and the costs charged to the consumer” under the term which is challenged, and instead must extend to consideration of a comparison between the parties’ rights and obligations under that term and under the national law rules which would apply in the absence of any such agreement. ¹⁶¹⁶ According to the Court:

“a significant imbalance can result solely from a sufficiently serious impairment of the legal situation in which the consumer, as a party to the contract in question, is placed by reason of the relevant national provisions, whether this be in the form of a restriction of the rights which, in accordance with those provisions, he enjoys under the contract, or a constraint on the exercise of those rights, or the imposition on him of an additional obligation not envisaged by the national rules.” ¹⁶¹⁷

As a result, the national court should assess the fairness of a contract term which imposed on a consumer purchaser of residential property from a builder the liability to pay national capital gains tax which would otherwise lie on the builder as vendor of the property which had benefited from the increase in the value of the property, taking account, in particular, the information which the consumer purchaser had received about this before the contract was made. ¹⁶¹⁸ For these purposes, the Court of Justice further held that the fact that the contract term in question stated that “the consumer’s assumption of responsibility for payment of the capital gains tax [had] been taken into account in determining the sale price does not itself constitute proof of consideration [i.e. something in return] which the consumer would have benefited from”, although it assumed that proof of an actual reduction in price would be relevant to the fairness of the term. ¹⁶¹⁹

Fairness and good faith in First National Bank Plc

38-249

In Director General of Fair Trading v First National Bank Plc ¹⁶²⁰ decided some 10 years before the judgments of the Court of Justice in Aziz ¹⁶²¹ and Menéndez Álvarez, ¹⁶²² the House of Lords discussed the requirement of good faith and the test of unfairness more generally for the purposes of the Directive as implemented by the 2004 Regulations. ¹⁶²³ As to good faith, Lord Bingham of Cornhill observed:

“The requirement of good faith in this context is one of fair and open dealing. Openness requires that the terms should be expressed fully, clearly and legibly, containing no concealed pitfalls or traps. Appropriate prominence should be given to terms which might operate disadvantageously to the customer. Fair dealing requires that a supplier should not, whether deliberately or unconsciously, take advantage of the consumer’s necessity, indigence, lack of experience, unfamiliarity with the subject matter of the contract, weak bargaining position or any other factor listed in or analogous to those listed in Schedule 2 to the [1994] Regulations. ¹⁶²⁴ Good faith in this context is not an artificial or technical concept; nor, since Lord Mansfield ¹⁶²⁵ was its champion, is it a concept wholly unfamiliar to British lawyers. It looks to good standards of commercial morality and practice. Regulation 4(1) lays down a composite test, covering both the making and the substance of the contract, and must be applied bearing clearly in mind the objective which the Regulations are designed to promote.” ¹⁶²⁶

Clearly, then, Lord Bingham saw good faith as an extremely inclusive concept, potentially comprising elements of both procedural and substantive fairness. ¹⁶²⁷ However, with the greatest respect, the idea of a business “taking advantage” of the consumer (even if unconsciously) is potentially restrictive, having overtones of bad faith which is clearly unnecessary ¹⁶²⁸ and is not reflected in the later caselaw of the Court of Justice in Aziz ¹⁶²⁹ and Menéndez Álvarez. ¹⁶³⁰

West v Ian Finlay & Associates

38-250

In West v Ian Finlay & Associates, ¹⁶³¹ the Court of Appeal took a rather different approach to the requirement of “significant imbalance in the parties’ rights and obligations arising under the contract” than the Court of Justice in Aziz and Menéndez Álvarez, neither of which were discussed even though they preceded the Court of Appeal’s decision. ¹⁶³² West concerned, inter alia, the fairness of a “net contribution clause” in a contract of appointment between a house-owner and the defendant architectural firm for the alteration and renovation of their house. The Court of Appeal held that, as a matter of construction, the effect of the clause was to limit the defendant’s loss or damage to the amount that it was reasonable for it to pay having regard to “the contractual responsibilities of other consultants, contractors and specialists appointed by [the claimants]”. ¹⁶³³ Its practical effect was to place on the claimants the risk of the insolvency of the contractors engaged to undertake the work done on the houses, a risk which had transpired; the clause also meant that the claimant would have to bring proceedings against any defaulting contractor who may be jointly and severally liable with the defendant, and to await the outcome of any contribution proceedings before obtaining full satisfaction. ¹⁶³⁴ Having set out the test of the unfairness of contract terms in the 1999 Regulations and having referred to examples of exclusions of liability in the “indicative list” in Sch.2, the Court of Appeal relied on passages from the speeches in the House of Lords in the First National Bank case on the test of unfairness, ¹⁶³⁵ and concluded that “in evaluating the application of regulation 5(1) of the UTCC Regulations, it is necessary to consider significant imbalance and good faith separately as well as together in making the ultimate overall assessment”. ¹⁶³⁶ The Court of Appeal then noted a range of considerations which it thought relevant on the facts to this assessment, including the fact that the clause would make the claimants bear the insolvency risk of contractors which they had chosen, that the clause is “by no means unusual” in the context, that other terms of the contract stipulated that the defendant did not warrant the solvency of others, and that the claimants should hold the contractors which they appointed responsible for the performance of their services. ¹⁶³⁷ The Court of Appeal then turned to the requirement of good faith which it saw, following dicta in the First National Bank case, as requiring that the defendants should not take advantage of the claimants nor set any “a concealed trap or pitfall”. ¹⁶³⁸ Nor were the claimants in a weak bargaining position, given their financial experience. ¹⁶³⁹ On the other hand, although the clause was presented in an open way, it did not draw the reader’s attention to the fact that it was shifting the insolvency risk of the other contractors from the defendant to the claimants, and nor did the defendant itself, despite RIBA guidelines to this effect. ¹⁶⁴⁰ Overall, balancing out all these elements, the Court concluded, therefore, that the requirement of good faith had been satisfied on the facts. ¹⁶⁴¹ Moreover, while the clause plainly caused an imbalance in the parties’ rights and obligations, the Court of Appeal did not consider this “so weighted” in favour of the defendants as to cause a significant imbalance given:

“(a) The prevalence of the usage of the [clause] in standard RIBA forms, (b) the fact that the clause would be regarded as not unusual in a commercial contract, and (c) the fact that it was the [claimants] who in this case would be taking the final decision on the future choice of main contractor, very likely being alive (bearing in mind [one of the claimant’s] banking background) to the fact that that contractor’s financial stability was a matter of importance.” ¹⁶⁴²

The Court of Appeal therefore held the clause was not unfair under the 1999 Regulations, principally on the ground that there was no failure to fulfil the requirement of good faith, though secondarily on the ground that it did not cause a significant imbalance in the parties’ rights and obligations to the detriment of the consumer.

38-251

Many of the elements which the Court of Appeal took into account in coming to its overall evaluation of the term were properly relevant given the guidance given both by the Directive itself and by the Court of Justice Aziz and Menéndez Álvarez, although, with respect, the fact that the net contribution clause is not unusual in a commercial contract should not have been considered relevant. ¹⁶⁴³

Moreover, the Court of Appeal's emphasis on the need to evaluate the significance of the imbalance in the rights and obligations of the parties is consistent with the guidance in Menéndez Álvarez, as the Court of Justice there accepted that “[a] significant imbalance can result solely from a sufficiently serious impairment of the legal situation in which the consumer, as a party to the contract in question, is placed by reason of the relevant national provisions”. ¹⁶⁴⁴ On the other hand, while the Court of Appeal accepted that the requirement of good faith required the evaluation of “all possible relevant considerations ... in making the overall assessment of the fairness of a term”, ¹⁶⁴⁵ it did not “assess for those purposes whether the seller or supplier, dealing fairly and equitably with the consumer, could reasonably assume that the consumer would have agreed to such a term in individual contract negotiations” as required by the Court of Justice in Aziz, although its reference to the common usage of the clause could be thought of as a relevant to such a hypothetical assessment. ¹⁶⁴⁶

ParkingEye Ltd v Beavis

38-251A

⚠ In ParkingEye Ltd v Beavis ¹⁶⁴⁷ ⚠ the Supreme Court considered how the test of unfairness in the 1999 Regulations would apply to a term in a contract under which a consumer could park for free in a car park for up to two hours, but would incur a charge of £85 for overstaying this permitted period or for breaking other rules set by the management company of the car park, such as parking only within marked bays. ¹⁶⁴⁸ ⚠ A notice to this effect in “large, prominent and legible” print was displayed on signs at the entrance of the car park and around it. ¹⁶⁴⁹ ⚠ A user of the car park (the “consumer”) overstayed the two-hour limit by nearly an hour and the management company sought to recover the charge from him. The Supreme Court considered that contract was a licence to park cars on the terms posted at its entrance, that the charge was not a charge for the right to park or even to overstay at the car park, but arose only on certain breaches of the contract by the user. ¹⁶⁵⁰ ⚠ The car park was operated in this way as its owner was concerned to ensure that motorists should park for free to attract customers for the retailers to which it had leased other parts of its site, but that these customers should not overstay their parking period so as to increase the potential number of customers. The purposes of the charge were therefore to manage the efficient use of parking spaces in the interests of the owner, the retailers and other would-be customers and to provide an income stream for the car park's managers to meet its costs and make a profit. ¹⁶⁵¹ ⚠ In considering the fairness of the term imposing the charge under the 1999 Regulations, the Supreme Court followed the guidance of the Court of Justice of the EU in Aziz, ¹⁶⁵² ⚠ which it saw as the “leading case on the topic” provided by that court. ¹⁶⁵³ ⚠ It noted Advocate General Kokott's advice in Aziz, which was followed by the Court of Justice, that the requirement that the “significant imbalance” in the contracting parties' rights and obligations to the detriment of the consumer should be contrary to good faith allows account to be taken of the legitimate interests of the parties to organise their own legal relationship even in a way which derogates from national legal rules otherwise applicable. ¹⁶⁵⁴ ⚠ In this respect, the Supreme Court noted the formula used by the Court of Justice to assess good faith by reference to the hypothetical test of whether the seller or supplier “could reasonably assume that the consumer would have agreed to such a term in individual negotiations” and the views of Advocate General Kokott on the relevant circumstances for this purpose, such as whether or not the term would be surprising. ¹⁶⁵⁵ ⚠ A majority of the Supreme Court therefore held that the contract term on which the £85 charge was based was fair within the meaning of the Regulations. While the term did create an imbalance in the parties' rights and obligations to the detriment to the consumer, both the management company and the owners of the car park had a legitimate interest in imposing a liability on consumers in excess of any damages recoverable in inducing them to observe the two-hour time limit: indeed “charging overstayers £85 underpinned the business model which enabled members of the public to park free of charge for two hours” and was “fundamental to the contractual relationship created by [consumers'] acceptance of the terms of the notice, whose whole object was the efficient management of the car park”. ¹⁶⁵⁶ ⚠ In the view of the majority of the Supreme Court, the hypothetical test was objective:

“the question is not whether [the defendant consumer] himself would in fact have agreed to the term imposing the £85 charge in a negotiation, but whether a reasonable motorist in his position would have done so. In [its] view, a reasonable motorist would have agreed.” ¹⁶⁵⁷

Motorists generally and the defendant in particular did accept the term and while this would not usually have much weight as regards standard terms, the term in question “could not have been briefer, simpler or more prominently proclaimed”. ¹⁶⁵⁸  Moreover, objectively, they had every reason to accept the terms, as they were allowed to park free for two hours in return for the risk of the £85 charge if they overstayed. ¹⁶⁵⁹  The terms were beneficial to motorists themselves as they freed up parking spaces, as well as being beneficial to the management company, the site owner and the retailers and the level of the charge was not exorbitant: the terms were therefore “objectively reasonable”. ¹⁶⁶⁰  In this respect, Lord Mance’s view was more nuanced, considering that the Court of Justice of the EU in Aziz could not be taken to have identified the hypothetical test as conclusive, but rather relevant to the assessment of fairness of a term, given that the Directive requires a court to take into account all circumstances for these purposes. ¹⁶⁶¹  Lord Mance found the argument that the management company could not reasonably have assumed that customers in the defendant’s position would have agreed to the scheme in individual contractual negotiation “less easy to address”, as such a customer, if asked, would have been satisfied with the proposal of two hours of free parking, but would probably have asked for “some form of graduated payment in the event of overstaying”. ¹⁶⁶²  Nevertheless, Lord Mance concluded that the term was not unfair within the meaning of the Regulations, as a term of this sort is simple and familiar and clear notice was given; there is no significant imbalance in the parties’ rights and obligations given that the consumer is given a valuable privilege (the free parking) in return for a promise to pay a sum in the event of overstaying; and, finally, the charge is not disproportionately high. ¹⁶⁶³  By contrast, Lord Toulson dissented on this issue, and would have held the term unfair under the 1999 Regulations. In his view, the term on which the charge was based did create a significant imbalance in the parties’ rights and obligations to the detriment of the consumer as the charge far exceeded any amount which was otherwise likely to be recoverable as damages. ¹⁶⁶⁴  Moreover, he considered that the hypothetical test which Aziz used to explain the requirement of good faith is “significantly more favourable to the consumer” than is the general common law governing penalty clauses, as its starting point is the special protection of consumers rather than that parties should be kept to their bargains. ¹⁶⁶⁵  In his view, no assumption can fairly be made that a consumer would have agreed to the term in individual negotiations and the burden of proof is on the trader to establish that he or she would have done as it makes no allowance for circumstances, allows period of grace and provides no room for adjustment. ¹⁶⁶⁶  He therefore concluded that the term was unfair. ¹⁶⁶⁷

“Unfairness” under the 1993 Directive and “unfair commercial practices”

38-252

 In Pereni#ovà the Court of Justice of the EU considered the relationship between a finding of an “unfair commercial practice” within the meaning of the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005 ¹⁶⁶⁸ and a finding of the unfairness of a contract term within the meaning of the 1993 Directive. ¹⁶⁶⁹ The particular significance of this relationship before the Court was that, under the 2005 Directive, a finding of an “unfair commercial practice” has no impact on the validity of any contract or contract term to which the unfair practice relates, ¹⁶⁷⁰ whereas under the 1993 Directive, an unfair contract term is not binding on the consumer and may invalidate the contract as a whole. ¹⁶⁷¹ The Court noted that the definition of an “unfair commercial practice” is “particularly wide” ¹⁶⁷² and “applies to unfair business-to-consumer commercial practices, before, during or after a commercial transaction relating to goods or service”. ¹⁶⁷³ The 2005 Directive provides a general test for the unfairness of a commercial practice, ¹⁶⁷⁴ which is supplemented by three particular examples of unfair commercial practices, ¹⁶⁷⁵ including “misleading actions”, ¹⁶⁷⁶ and a blacklist of practices which “shall in all circumstances be regarded as unfair”. ¹⁶⁷⁷ In Pereni#ovà a consumer credit agreement had misstated the APR, as the lender had not included within its calculation some charges relating to the loan. ¹⁶⁷⁸ In the view of the Court of Justice this would constitute a “misleading commercial practice” within the meaning of the 2005 Directive if the national court were to find that it “causes or is likely to cause the average consumer to take a transaction decision that he would not have taken otherwise”, ¹⁶⁷⁹ but the referring court wished to know whether such a finding would mean that the APR term in question would also be unfair under the 1993 Directive. For this purpose, the Court of Justice observed that art.4(1) of the 1993 Directive

“gives a particularly wide definition of the criteria for making such an assessment, by expressly including ‘all the circumstances’ attending the conclusion of the contract in question ... In those circumstances, ... a finding that a commercial practice is unfair is one element among others on which the competent court may base its assessment of the unfairness of contractual terms under Article 4(1) of Directive 93/13. That element, however, is not such as to establish, automatically and on its own, that the contested terms are unfair. It is for the referring court to decide on the application of the general criteria set out in Articles 3 and 4 of Directive 93/13 to a specific term, which must be considered in the circumstances of the particular case.” ¹⁶⁸⁰

In the result, “a finding that a commercial practice is unfair has no direct effect on whether the contract is valid” under the 1993 Directive. ¹⁶⁸¹

Particular elements within the test of unfairness

38-253

It has been seen that the basic test on which courts must review the terms of consumer contracts comprises a number of elements. The overall requirement is that a term is judged unfair and for this purpose the starting point is the criterion of “significant imbalance”, this then being qualified by the need to ensure the evaluation of all interests involved (under the requirement of good faith). The Directive (and the Regulations) then go further and specify a number of factors to be taken into account in determining the issue of fairness (the nature of the goods or services, all the circumstances attending the conclusion of the contract and all the other terms of the contract or of another contract on which it is dependent) and finally provide a list of illustrative terms which may be unfair. ¹⁶⁸² The following paragraphs will look at these elements in turn. In doing so, reference will sometimes be made to the views of the former Office of Fair Trading (OFT), as expressed in its published guidance and bulletins. ¹⁶⁸³ While a court was “in no sense bound by the guidance provided by the Office of Fair Trading”, it can provide “helpful commonsense indications of what is likely to be considered to be fair”. ¹⁶⁸⁴ As from March 31, 2014 the OFT was abolished and from April 1, 2014 its role under the 1999 Regulations transferred to the Competition and Markets Authority (CMA). The CMA has continued to make available the guidance on the 1999 Regulations issued by the OFT, ¹⁶⁸⁵ and has issued some new guidance of its own. ¹⁶⁸⁶

“A significant imbalance in the parties’ rights and obligations arising under the contract, to the detriment of the consumer”

38-254

As earlier noted, this phrase encapsulates the key idea of the notion of unfairness for the purposes of both sets of Regulations, requiring that the term creates an imbalance in the parties’ legal rights and obligations and that this imbalance pass a threshold of significance. Two aspects of this definition have become clear as a result of the OFT’s work in policing terms in consumer contracts.

Potential for unfairness

38-255

⚠ First, a clause will be judged according to its potential unfairness: if a clause could give rise to a “significant imbalance in the parties’ rights”, etc. (given the particular and concrete factors to be outlined below), then it is no answer for a seller or supplier wishing to rely on it to say that on the facts it does not do so nor that it was never intended to be relied on so as to do so. ¹⁶⁸⁷ So, for example, if a price variation clause gives a supplier an unlimited discretion to vary the price (a term which can for this purpose be assumed to be potentially unfair given its lack of limitation or justification ¹⁶⁸⁸), then it would not be binding on the consumer with the result that even a moderate variation of the price (itself not in the context apparently unfair) would not be effective against the consumer: the unfairness of the term makes it “not binding” on the consumer. ¹⁶⁸⁹ ⚠ And, as Advocate General Szpunar has observed, reasonable behaviour on the part of the trader under an unfair contract cannot deprive a term of its unfair character. ¹⁶⁹⁰ ⚠ On the other hand, as Advocate General Wahl has observed, the significant imbalance in the rights and obligations of the parties should be assessed by reference to the circumstances and information available at the date of conclusion of the contract, so that changes occurring after its conclusion which make the contract excessively onerous to the consumer are irrelevant to the fairness of a contract term. ¹⁶⁹¹ ⚠.

The significance of imbalance

38-256

⚠ Secondly, the OFT attached very considerable significance to the notion of balance, so that a term which may look, prima facie, severely prejudicial to the rights of a consumer may yet be considered fair if it is counterbalanced by a corresponding term which could act to the consumer’s advantage. Various examples of this thinking are given in the OFT’s reports, such as a seller’s right to increase prices being coupled with a realistic right in the consumer to get out of the contract without penalty. ¹⁶⁹² In the context of cancellation rights, for example, in the view of the OFT:

“[f]airness and balance require that consumers and suppliers should be on an equal footing as regards rights to end or withdraw from the contract. The supplier’s rights should not be excessive, nor should the consumer’s be over-restricted. This does not, however, mean a merely formal equivalence in rights to cancel, but rather that both parties should enjoy rights of equal extent and value.” ¹⁶⁹³

An example of the importance of imbalance for the determination of the fairness of a term may be found in Spreadex Ltd v Cochrane. ¹⁶⁹⁴ There a consumer had agreed to use a trader’s online platform for the making of spread bets with the trader, a spread betting bookmaker. On the premise (which the court rejected) that this agreement was in principle contractually binding, ¹⁶⁹⁵ a term of the contract under which the consumers were deemed to have authorised all trading under their account number was held unfair within the meaning of the Regulations: under the agreement for use of the online platform, the bookmaker assumed no obligations and the customer was granted no rights, whereas under this term, the consumer would be liable for any trade on the account not made or authorised by him. “The result is ... and most clearly, a significant imbalance in the parties’ rights and obligations”. ¹⁶⁹⁶ ⚠

Factors in fairness

38-257

While in principle the 1999 Regulations are concerned with the unfairness of contract terms, rather than with the fairness of the parties' behaviour more generally, certain aspects of their mutual behaviour may be relevant in the assessment of fairness. For, as has been seen, ¹⁶⁹⁷ the Regulations require that in assessing the fairness of a term account shall be taken of the nature of the goods or services, all the circumstances attending the conclusion of the contract and all other terms of the contract or of a contract on which it is dependent. ¹⁶⁹⁸ While formally this provision requires certain factors to be taken into account (raising the possibility of arguing that only these should be), it is submitted that, quite apart from the inherent openness of the concept of fairness itself, other considerations may be taken into account in assessing fairness by way of application of the requirement of good faith which forms an element within the assessment of fairness. ¹⁶⁹⁹

"The nature of the goods or services"

38-258

In certain types of case, the nature of the goods or services could argue for the fairness of a term which in other contexts would clearly be unfair. So, for example, in Bryen & Langley Ltd v Boston ¹⁷⁰⁰ it was considered material to the issue of fairness of a term that the transaction before the court was not of a "normal 'consumer' type, like buying a television set", but, for the individual or individuals concerned, a major project such as the costly construction of a building which would be undertaken only with the benefit of appropriate professional advice. A second example may be found in the context of clauses allowing the forfeiture of a purchaser's deposit in contracts of sale of land. Here, at first sight the loss of ten per cent of the purchase price if the purchaser withdraws from the contract suggests that such a clause is unfair, but it may not be given the need of the seller to cover transaction costs and also to be indemnified for likely loss of profit on the transaction. Indeed, a term allowing a person (the alleged consumer) who had agreed to participate in a world voyage by clipper to cancel the contract at a charge of 75 per cent of the price was held to be fair as not disproportionate in the context since that person's commitment to the venture was important. ¹⁷⁰¹ It may be under this heading that a court could properly consider the impact of (good) industry practice in relation to the type of contract in question in assessing a term's fairness.

"All the circumstances attending the conclusion of the contract"

38-259

⚠ This is clearly a very inclusive formulation. ¹⁷⁰² ⚠ Here, two possible factors will be mentioned, both of which can be thought of as circumstances relating to the conclusion of the contract ¹⁷⁰³ ⚠. First, the fact that a seller or supplier has put pressure on a consumer to conclude the contract or to do so in haste and without time to think about its significance would point strongly against the fairness of any term which prejudices the consumer, even if this pressure did not amount to either duress or undue influence within the meaning of the general law ¹⁷⁰⁴ or an unfair commercial practice within the meaning of the 2008 Regulations. ¹⁷⁰⁵ Secondly, the degree of genuine opportunity for the consumer to read, understand, consider and decide upon the terms of a contract is also an important factor in their overall fairness. This may be supported by reference to recital 20's statement that "the consumer should actually be given an opportunity to examine all the terms" ¹⁷⁰⁶ and the Schedules' inclusion in the "indicative list" of a term which has the object or effect of "irrevocably binding the consumer to terms with which he had no real opportunity of becoming acquainted before the conclusion of the contract". ¹⁷⁰⁷ Now, a term which irrevocably binds a consumer to the contract is typically to be found in any contract which does not provide for a consumer to withdraw from the contract and so, absent such a provision, the terms of any contract which the consumer did not have a real opportunity of being acquainted are vulnerable to a charge of unfairness. Positively, therefore, a seller or supplier whose explanatory pre-contractual brochure ¹⁷⁰⁸ makes clear the otherwise surprising terms on which he deals or whose staff follow a practice of advising their customers of the terms in a clear and intelligible manner may be more likely to succeed in arguing that the terms in question are fair. This links in with the common law's traditional concern with notice of terms, ¹⁷⁰⁹ but it goes further in that a "real opportunity" is referred to and it may be thought that the more theoretical the opportunity, the more likely a term is to be held to be unfair. ¹⁷¹⁰ ⚠

This approach to fairness is related to the Regulations' requirement that the contract terms themselves be expressed in plain and intelligible language ¹⁷¹¹ and it is therefore submitted that a lack of plainness or intelligibility is relevant to the assessment of a term under the Regulations' requirement of fairness. So, for example, a term which provided that:

"Should any other disagreement arise in connection with or out of this contract the matters in dispute shall be referred in accordance with the Arbitration Act 1950 or any statutory modification or re-enactment therefore for the time being in force" has been held insufficient to set out clearly its intended nature and effect as an arbitration clause in the circumstances, this being a factor in the court's holding the clause unfair within the meaning of the Regulations. ¹⁷¹² And the Court of Justice has emphasised the importance of the quality of pre-contractual information relating to contract terms for the assessment of their fairness, relating this to the requirement of plain intelligible language in art.5 of the 1993 Directive (implemented by reg.7 of the 1999 Regulations). ¹⁷¹³ So, where, for example, the fact that the amount of a tax imposed by law on a vendor of property was made payable by a consumer purchaser of residential property by a term of the contract of sale was unknown at the date on which the contract was concluded and was "to be determined only ex post by the relevant [tax] authority", would argue for the unfairness of that term, for "if that is the case, this could lead to uncertainty on the part of the consumer as to the extent of the commitment undertaken". ¹⁷¹⁴ On the other hand, the fact that a term is plain and intelligible does not rule out a finding that it is unfair. ¹⁷¹⁵ For this purpose, it is submitted that while generally the Court of Justice will adopt the variable objective standard of the "average consumer", ¹⁷¹⁶ where a business knows (or, possibly, can reasonably foresee) that a particular consumer with whom it deals has a lesser likely understanding of its contract terms, then this should be relevant to the assessment of the fairness of the terms, notably, as a result of the requirement of good faith. ¹⁷¹⁷

Lack of plainness or intelligibility sufficient?

38-260

⚠ What is more open to contention is whether a lack of plainness or intelligibility (sometimes referred to as transparency) can render a term unfair within the meaning of the Regulations without more. ¹⁷¹⁸ The key hurdle to allowing it to do so is the first element of the composite test of unfairness, viz that the term must cause "a significant imbalance in the parties' rights and obligations arising under the contract, to the detriment of the consumer". ¹⁷¹⁹ Clearly, a case can be imagined where a term (while not plain and intelligible) does not attempt to create such an imbalance (notably, where any imbalance is to the benefit of the consumer) and so would not be rendered unfair by the Regulations; but in this situation it is difficult to see why the consumer would wish to argue that such a term was "not binding" on him (though a body entrusted with a policing role in relation to unfair contract terms may nevertheless wish to intervene). ¹⁷²⁰ However, where a contract term either seeks to bind a consumer to a particular duty or seeks to create rights which do not benefit him (notably, as compared to his existing rights or the rights of the seller or supplier under the contract more widely), a court could find that such an "imbalance" in the rights and obligations of the parties was "significant" merely on the ground that the consumer was not able to appreciate its extent: as the Director General of Fair Trading observed:

"... it would clearly be difficult to maintain that unintelligible or ambiguous terms were not unfair if they had some potential for detriment to the consumer." ¹⁷²¹

The final step in this direction (noted without comment by the European Commission) is that courts in some Member States have held that a failure in the requirement of transparency itself constitutes "unfairness" within the meaning of the Directive. ¹⁷²² However, this equating of the two requirements contained in the Directive does not accord with the way in which they are set out in the Directive as distinct both in their content and even more in their effects. ¹⁷²³ Indeed, if a mere failure in transparency would lead without more to a failure in fairness this would render the distinctive treatment of the requirement of transparency entirely otiose. For this reason, the Law Commissions' view that "nontransparent terms" are not automatically unfair, though the lack of transparency is an important factor in the evaluation of their fairness ¹⁷²⁴ is to be supported. On the other hand, in Verein für Konsumenteninformation v Amazon EU Sàrl, ¹⁷²⁵  the Court of Justice of the EU came close to saying that an express choice of law clause in a consumer contract will be unfair if the trader does not explain that its effect is limited by the restrictions imposed by art.6(2) of the Rome I Regulation on the law applicable to contractual obligations, on the basis that this means that the term fails the requirement of plain intelligible language. ¹⁷²⁶

"All the other terms of the contract"

38-261

The Regulations require courts to take into account the other terms of the contract before them in assessing the unfairness of a term. It is to be noticed that all the terms should be looked at, including terms which may fall within the "core exclusion" as relating to the contract's main subject matter or price/quality ratio. ¹⁷²⁷ In the view of the Director General of Fair Trading, an example of "another term" of a contract which may argue for the fairness of a term which by itself looks unfair may be found in a term which provides the consumer with a cooling-off period during which he may decide to cancel the contract without penalty. ¹⁷²⁸

"The ... terms ... of another contract on which it is dependent"

38-262

It would seem from the general formulation of this phrase that there is no requirement that the other contract on which the consumer contract is dependent must itself be a consumer contract within the meaning of the Regulations (though in the vast majority of situations it will be) nor even that the other contract be between the same parties as the one whose term is to be assessed. ¹⁷²⁹ A situation in the consumer context in which two contracts are related may be found in the context of the financing of a consumer sale. Here, it would seem that whatever controls already exist on the fairness of the terms of either the sale or the financing contract, ¹⁷³⁰ the terms of the one may go to the fairness of the terms of the other. For example, the fairness of the terms of purchase of a house could be assessed taking into account the terms of a mortgage contract taken out by a consumer mortgagor. However, this example shows the difficulties that would arise in this respect, where the mortgagee is not also the seller, for it may be thought unfair for a mortgagee to be prejudiced by the terms of the sale of which it may know nothing and have even less control. This may lead a court to imply into the phrase "another contract" a requirement that this contract be between the parties to the consumer contract whose terms are to be assessed.

The test of unfairness applied in the First National Bank Plc case

38-263

In Director General of Fair Trading v First National Bank Plc ¹⁷³¹ the Director General of Fair Trading challenged the fairness of a term in a contract of consumer credit the effect of which (if valid) would be that where the bank obtains judgment against a borrower, interest would be payable at the contractual rate on the outstanding principal plus accrued interest unpaid at the date of judgment until the judgment is discharged by payment. The Court of Appeal held that the term was unfair as the borrower's attention is not specifically drawn to the point of payment of interest at the contractual rate beyond judgment in instalments by the bank at or before the conclusion of the contract—nor indeed at any later stage. ¹⁷³² In its view, the existence of the court's powers by statute to order payment by instalments and to modify the contractual rate of interest as a result does not prevent the term from operating unfairly "in a majority of cases where instalment orders are made without the consideration by the courts of those provisions". ¹⁷³³ The bank has the stronger bargaining position and the clause comes as an "unfair surprise". However, the House of Lords unanimously reversed this decision and held that the term was fair within the meaning of the Regulations. So, for Lord Bingham of Cornhill:

“The essential bargain is that the bank will make funds available to the borrower which the borrower will repay, over a period, with interest. Neither party could suppose that the bank would willingly forgo any part of its principal or interest. If the bank thought that outcome at all likely, it would not lend. If there were any room for doubt about the borrower’s obligation to repay the principal in full with interest, that obligation is very clearly and unambiguously expressed in the conditions of contract. There is nothing unbalanced or detrimental to the consumer in that obligation; the absence of such a term would unbalance the contract to the detriment of the lender.” ¹⁷³⁴

The unfairness of the situation in which consumer borrowers relied on the terms of judgments made against them for payment of their debt to lenders and were later surprised by a demand for payment of contractual interest under a term such as the one in issue was caused by the absence of procedural safeguards provided for a consumer on default by the applicable primary and secondary legislation rather than by the contract term itself. ¹⁷³⁵

Other factors in the assessment of good faith or fairness

38-264

Other factors have been suggested as relevant to determining whether the requirement of good faith is satisfied, though most could equally well be thought of simply as going to the issue of fairness in general.

Price/quality ratio

38-265

A notable example is found in the preamble to the Directive which allows the “price/quality” ratio of the contract to be taken into account in assessing a term other than one which itself describes the main subject matter of the contract or the quality/price ratio of the goods or services supplied. ¹⁷³⁶ The relevance of the price/quality ratio to the fairness of incidental terms may be seen to be reflected in recital 16’s reference to the consumer’s receipt of an inducement as an element within the application of the requirement of good faith.

EU recommendations

38-266

It has been suggested that EU recommendations in the field of consumer protection may be referred to by a court in assessing the fairness of a term. ¹⁷³⁷

Consumer benefiting from advice, well-informed or experienced

38-267

Where a consumer’s professional agent put forward a standard set of terms which were held to have been incorporated into the contract, and thereby “imposed these terms” on the supplier of a service, the Court of Appeal regarded:

“... the suggestion that there was any lack of good faith or fair dealing by [the supplier] with regard to the ultimate incorporation of these terms into the contract as repugnant to common sense ... It was not for [the suppliers] to take the matter up with [the consumer] and ensure that he knew what he was doing: they knew that he had the benefit of the services of a professional ... to advise him on the effects of the terms.” ¹⁷³⁸

In this way, even if a particular term of the standard contract (here, an arbitration clause) were found to cause a “significant imbalance in the parties’ rights and obligations under the contract, to the detriment of the consumer” as envisaged by reg.5(1) of the 1999 Regulations, this would not be “contrary to the requirement of good faith”, with the result that the contract term would not be unfair within the meaning of the Regulations. Similarly, where it is shown that the consumers were independently wealthy, experienced in business and legally advised, that the negotiation of the contract was conducted aggressively on their behalf, that significant changes were procured to the seller or supplier’s usual terms and that the terms challenged were expressed fully, clearly and legibly, and given appropriate prominence “with no concealed pitfalls”, a court may conclude that the requirement of good faith is satisfied and so the terms are not unfair under the 1999 Regulations. ¹⁷³⁹ Even in the absence of legal advice, the financial experience of the consumer may be relevant to the application of the test of unfairness in the circumstances, as it makes it more likely that he or she will understand the significance of the term. ¹⁷⁴⁰ But the mere fact that a consumer benefits from legal advice in relation to a term does not necessarily tip the balance in favour of their fairness. So, for example, in Harrison v Shepherd Homes Ltd ¹⁷⁴¹ consumer purchasers, concluding a standard contract of purchase with builders, were legally advised, but while this “opportunity for them to be advised [had] to be weighed in the overall assessment of good faith”, in fact they were “not alerted to any problems with the terms” and so this did not detract sufficiently from other circumstances so as to establish the “fair and open dealing” which the Regulations require. ¹⁷⁴²

Particularly vulnerable consumers

38-268

It has been seen that the Court of Justice has developed the notion of the “average consumer” for a number of legal purposes and that the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005 gave it a prominent role for the purposes of its general scheme of regulatory control of commercial practices business-to-consumer, so to ensure, inter alia, the protection of consumers who are vulnerable “because of their mental or physical infirmity, age or credulity in a way which the trader could reasonably be expected to foresee”. ¹⁷⁴³ And while not mentioned in the 1993 Directive, the Court of Justice has recently used the standard of the “average consumer” as the proper standpoint for the assessment of the requirement of plain intelligible language under that Directive. ¹⁷⁴⁴ It is submitted that the taking advantage by a business of the vulnerability of a consumer understood in the sense earlier noted would clearly be relevant to the issue of the business’s failing to have “dealt fairly and equitably with the consumer” and therefore the requirement of good faith, ¹⁷⁴⁵ even though the consumer possessed the requisite legal capacity to conclude the contract in question under the law governing minors’ contracts or the law governing lack of mental capacity. ¹⁷⁴⁶

The language type of the contract

38-269

In general, a domestic consumer contract governed by English law is normally to be expressed in the English language and where reference is made to the “intelligibility” of the language used this normally refers to the style of language rather than to its type. However, it should not be universally assumed that English should be the only language in which such a contract should be expressed: for if a seller or supplier contracts with consumers whose first language is known or can be foreseen by it to be other than English, then it may be “contrary to the requirement of good faith” for the business to rely entirely on terms set out in English. ¹⁷⁴⁷ And where, for example, a contract for the provision of financial services was made with consumers who were Greek and non-resident in the UK, the court considered that the term under consideration “called for translation and careful explanation”. ¹⁷⁴⁸ A similar approach could also be taken in the case of a cross-border contract concluded via the internet and on terms set out on the seller or supplier's website. ¹⁷⁴⁹

Terms deemed to be unfair within the meaning of the Regulations

38-270

While generally the question whether a contract term is "unfair" within the meaning of the Regulations is a matter for the composite test described in the preceding paragraphs, on occasion legislation has deemed a particular type of term in consumer contracts to be unfair within the meaning of the Regulations. This is true of arbitration clauses where they relate to claims for a "modest amount" ¹⁷⁵⁰ and also of contract terms:

"... providing that a consumer bears the burden of proof in respect of showing whether a distance supplier or an intermediary complied with any or all of the obligations placed upon him resulting from the Directive" of 2002 ¹⁷⁵¹ concerning the distance marketing of consumer financial services. ¹⁷⁵²

"Fairness" under the Regulations and "reasonableness" under the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 ¹⁷⁵³

38-271

It has been noted that some of the considerations to be taken into account by a court in assessing the fairness of a term for the purposes of the Regulations (in particular in relation to the requirement of good faith) are the same or very similar to those to be taken into account in assessing the "reasonableness" of a term under the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977. ¹⁷⁵⁴ Moreover, while the specific factors which are to be taken into account may differ somewhat, the "definitions" of the two concepts are both very inclusive, allowing a court to take into account whatever factors it thinks right in judging whether a term should be enforced, as long as these relate to the term (as opposed to post-contractual dealings between the parties). ¹⁷⁵⁵ There is, therefore, a profound similarity in the two tests in that they both require a court to decide whether a particular contract term should be enforceable according to a range of considerations, some of which relate to the contract itself and some of which relate to the relative positions of the parties to the contract or the circumstances in which the contract was made. All this does not mean, however, that the two tests have the same significance, but their differences do not stem from use of the language, on the one hand, of "reasonableness" and, on the other, of "fairness" and "good faith". Instead, they flow from the differences in ambit of the two pieces of legislation, in particular as regards the types of term to be tested. For while the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 deals almost exclusively with exemption clauses, the requirement of fairness in the Regulations affects any type of contract term as long as it is "ancillary" ¹⁷⁵⁶ and has not been "individually negotiated". ¹⁷⁵⁷ Clearly, the considerations which are appropriate in judging the "fairness" of terms other than exemption clauses are likely to differ considerably from those which are appropriate to that context. There are indeed existing parallels for this in wider English law: so, for example, the factors which are to be taken into account by a court in judging the "reasonableness" of a term of a contract which is in restraint of trade are not the same as those in judging the "reasonableness" of an exemption clause: the terminology of reasonableness is shared but the impact of this requirement differs according to the type of term in question, and the factors in determining reasonableness differ according to the reasons for which the term is viewed with suspicion (whether excluding a person's claim which would otherwise exist or unduly fettering a person's freedom). ¹⁷⁵⁸ In a similar way, the application of the requirement of fairness for the purposes of the 1999 Regulations differs according to its context. In the result, therefore, while the application of the test of "fairness" for the purposes of the Regulations to exemption clauses is unlikely to differ from the application of the test of "reasonableness" under the 1977 Act, its application to other clauses will differ appropriately to the context of both the type of term and the type of contract in question. ¹⁷⁵⁹

Procedural issues

38-272

! In Tew v Bank of Scotland ¹⁷⁶⁰ a number of claimants sought to establish the unfairness of terms in a particular category of mortgage (“shared appreciation mortgages”) made with them by certain lenders, including the defendants to the proceedings. The question before Mann J. was whether the court should make a Group Litigation Order (GLO) in relation to these claims. Under Pt 19.10 to 19.15 CPR such an order is available so as “to provide for the case management of claims which give rise to common or related issues of fact or law”. Mann J. held that while some issues arising from claims by a number of consumers that the terms of their contracts of a particular type were unfair within the meaning of the 1999 Regulations could be the object of a GLO (such as whether or not the relevant terms fell within the exclusion in reg.6(2) ¹⁷⁶¹), the determination of the fairness of the terms could not.

“On the face of the legislation, the facts of individual cases are capable of affecting the assessment of fairness, and they cannot be disregarded as such.” ¹⁷⁶²

The learned judge added that:

“This is not a case where one of necessity has to hypothesise a typical consumer, as one does in a regulatory challenge. ¹⁷⁶³ There are real consumers, with real transactions, who are complaining that the transactions are unfair to them. It is in their particular contexts that the unfairness falls to be assessed, and it is not a sensible exercise to divide that exercise up in the way suggested” ¹⁷⁶⁴

so as to construct “common issues”. In the particular context of the case before him, Mann J. instead gave directions for the trial of lead cases in order to get the fairness issue decided. ¹⁷⁶⁵ !

¹⁵⁸⁵. cf. Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.62(4), below, para.38-359.

¹⁵⁸⁶. See below, paras 38-323 et seq.

¹⁵⁸⁷. On the appropriateness of this limitation to goods, see above, para.38-203.

¹⁵⁸⁸. cf. Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.62(5), below, para.38-359.

¹⁵⁸⁹. 1993 Directive arts 3 and 4(1).

¹⁵⁹⁰. See below, paras 38-273 et seq. cf. Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.63 and Sch.2, below, para.38-360.

¹⁵⁹¹. Collins at 229; Beale, Ch.9 pp.242 et seq.; Weatherill (1995) 3 European Review of Private Law 307; Howells and Willhemson at p.88, pp.96 et seq.; Beatson pp.200-203, 300 et seq., pp.291 et seq.; Bright, Contract Terms (2007), Ch.9.

¹⁵⁹². i.e. Gesetz zur Regelung des Rechts der Allgemeinen Geschäftsbedingungen (“Standard Contract Terms Act”) of 1976, translated in part by Dannemann in Markesinis, Lorenz and Dannemann, at pp.908 et seq. (The German Standard Contracts Act 1976 itself was abrogated and replaced by a revised BGB para.307(1).) The first draft of the Directive was much closer to the German legislation, applying to commercial as well as to consumer contracts. Apart from the German law, the laws of some other Member States law had used the notion of good faith in their control of unfair contract terms, for example, Spanish law: Paisant, Recueil Dalloz Sirey, 1995 Chronique p.99, p.100.

- 1593. BGB para.242 and see Zimmermann, The New German Law of Obligations (2005), pp.173-178.
- 1594. Zimmermann and Whittaker, Good Faith in European Contract Law (2000), Ch.1. It is noteworthy that the German Standard Terms Act of 1976 did not attempt to explain the requirement of good faith by reference to the already elaborate case-law based on para.242 BGB, but instead listed the clauses which are either necessarily void or are void if they fail a test of “reasonableness”: see Standard Contract Terms Act 1976 paras 9-11.
- 1595. See Larroumet, Droit Civil, Les obligations Le contrat, 5th edn (2003), Tome 3, p.422; Paisant, at p.100.
- 1596. Loi 95/96 of February 1, 1995, now art.L.132-1 al. 1 Code de la consommation (as amended) Again, this reflects French legislative and judicial tradition which preferred to use the notion of the abuse of rights (hence, “clauses abusives”) rather than the (admittedly closely related) notion of good faith.
- 1597. art.1134 al. 3 C.civ.
- 1598. Paisant at p.100.
- 1599. Emphasis added.
- 1600. Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.11(1) and Sch.2. The elements specified by recital 16 were included in Sch.2 of the 1994 Regulations, expressly to be taken account of in the assessment of good faith. However, their omission from the text of the 1999 Regulations makes no substantive change as their presence in the preamble to the Directive requires them to be taken into account in the interpretation of its text and, therefore, the text of the 1999 Regulations.
- 1601. This reference to taking account of “solidarity among users” has little resonance for English lawyers, but it may allude to the idea found, for example, in French administrative law which requires that those who use a public service must have equal access to it and be equally treated by it: Bell, Boyron and Whittaker, Principles of French Law, 2nd edn (2008), pp.170-171. This degree of inclusiveness in the evaluation of the fairness of contract terms would also allow a court to take into account their effect on the “Convention rights” of third parties as well as of the parties themselves under the Human Rights Act (cf. Vol.I, para.1-090; Whittaker (2001) 21 O.J.L.S. 193, 213. This suggestion finds some support from reference to “fundamental rights” and, more recently, the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU in the context of the 1993 Directive: see Opinion A.G. Tizzano in Mostaza Claro v Centro Móvil Milenium SL (C-168/05) [2007] 1 C.M.L.R. 222 at [59] quoting Krombach v Bamberski (C-7/98) [2000] E.C.R. I-0193 (relevance of “fundamental rights” to fairness of arbitration clause); Morillo v Banco Bilbao Vizcaya Argentaria, SA (C-169/14) of July 17, 2014 especially at para.50 (relevance of Charter of Rights art.47 to national procedural law on the consumer’s right of appeal and the effectiveness of the consumer’s protection under 1993 Directive art.7).
- 1602. The words “the function of the requirement of good faith ... fairness of a term” in the text were quoted with approval by the Court of Appeal in West v Ian Finlay & Associates [2014] EWCA Civ 316, [2014] B.L.R. 324 at [45].
- 1603. On the difficulties of identifying a practical meaning of “good faith” and its linguistic equivalents see Zimmermann and Whittaker, Good Faith in European Contract Law (2000), p.690 and see above, Vol.I, paras 1-042—1-043.
- 1604. Aziz v Caixa d’Estalvis de Catalunya, Tarragona i Manresa of March 14, 2013 (“Aziz (C-415/11)”) On the question of the compatibility of Spanish procedural law and the effectiveness of the Directive’s protection of consumers, see below, para.38-306.
- 1605. Constructora Principado SA v Menéndez Álvarez (C-226/12) of January 16, 2014 (“Menéndez Álvarez (C-226/12)”).

- 1606. Aziz (C-415/11).
- 1607. Aziz (C-415/11) at paras 44-45, referring to Banco Español de Crédito, SA v Calderón Camino (C-618/10) of June 14, 2012 at paras 39-40.
- 1608. Aziz (C-415/11) at para.68.
- 1609. Aziz (C-415/11) at para.69. The approach in Aziz was followed closely in the order of the CJEU in Sebestyén v Kovári (C-342/13) of April 3, 2014 at paras 27-28.
- 1610. 1993 Directive art.3, especially 3(2), above, paras 38-221—38-223.
- 1611. Aziz (C-415/11) Opinion of A.G. Kokott, at para.75.
- 1612. See also below, para.38-281 (default interest clause).
- 1613. Aziz (C-415/11) at para.73.
- 1614. Aziz (C-415/11) at para.74 and see below, paras 38-273 et seq.
- 1615. Constructora Principado SA v Menéndez Álvarez (C-226/12) of January 16, 2014.
- 1616. Menéndez Álvarez (C-226/12) at paras 21-22.
- 1617. Menéndez Álvarez (C-226/12) at para.23.
- 1618. Menéndez Álvarez (C-226/12) at paras 26-27.
- 1619. Menéndez Álvarez (C-226/12) at para.29.
- 1620. [2001] UKHL 52, [2002] 1 A.C. 481; Macdonald (2002) 65 M.L.R. 763; Dean (2002) 65 M.L.R. 773; Whittaker (2004) ZEuP 75.
- 1621. Aziz v Caixa d'Estalvis de Catalunya, Tarragona i Manresa (C-415/11) of March 14, 2013 (“Aziz (C-415/11)”), above, para.38-247.
- 1622. Constructora Principado SA v Menéndez Álvarez (C-226/12) of January 16, 2014, above, para.38-248.
- 1623. Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1994 (SI 1994/3159).
- 1624. The 1994 Regulations Sch.2 listed the elements found in recital 16 of the 1993 Directive.
- 1625. See Carter v Boehm (1766) 3 Burr. 1905, 1910, quoted Vol.I, para.1-039.
- 1626. [2001] UKHL 52 at [17], with whom Lord Steyn (at [39]), Hope of Craighead (at [40]), Millett (at [53]) and Rodger of Earlsferry (at [62]) agreed.
- 1627. Beale, Good Faith and Fault in Contract Law (1995), Ch.9, p.245.
- 1628. cf. Macdonald (2002) 65 M.L.R. 763 at p.769.
- 1629. Aziz v Caixa d'Estalvis de Catalunya, Tarragona i Manresa (C-415/11) of March 14, 2013 (“Aziz (C-415/11)”).
- 1630. Constructora Principado SA v Menéndez Álvarez (C-226/12) of January 16, 2014 (“Menéndez Álvarez (C-226/12)”).
- 1631. [2014] EWCA Civ 316, [2014] B.L.R. 324. Vos L.J. delivered a judgment to which all members of the Court of Appeal contributed.

- 1632. Aziz v Caixa d'Estalvis de Catalunya, Tarragona i Manresa (C-415/11) of March 14, 2013; Constructora Principado SA v Menéndez Álvarez (C-226/12) of January 16, 2014, on which see above paras 38-247—38-248. West v Ian Finlay & Associates was heard on appeal on February 25, 2014 and judgment was handed down by the Court of Appeal on March 27, 2014.
- 1633. [2014] EWCA Civ 316 at [30]. There was, therefore, no room for the application of the required interpretation of ambiguous contract terms in favour of the consumer set out in 1999 Regulations reg.7(2): [2014] EWCA Civ 316 at [32] and see below, para.38-317.
- 1634. [2014] EWCA Civ 316 at [49].
- 1635. Director General of Fair Trading v First National Bank Plc [2001] UKHL 52, [2002] 1 A.C. 481 especially at [17], [24], [54] and [56], on which see above, para.38-249.
- 1636. [2014] EWCA Civ 316 at [46].
- 1637. [2014] EWCA Civ 316 at [51], [52] and [53] respectively.
- 1638. [2014] EWCA Civ 316 at [55] and [57].
- 1639. [2014] EWCA Civ 316 at [56] and [59].
- 1640. [2014] EWCA Civ 316 at [57]-[58].
- 1641. [2014] EWCA Civ 316 at [58] and [59].
- 1642. [2014] EWCA Civ 316 at [59].
- 1643. On this guidance, see above, paras 38-247—38-248. It is surprising that the Court of Appeal found this relevant as it had earlier noted that, while a commercial party commissioning building work would protect its interests by insurance or the taking of a performance bond from the main contract, in the consumer context “it is common practice for the architect to protect his position by insurance, but uncommon for a consumer client to obtain insolvency insurance protection or a performance bond from a contractor”: [2014] EWCA Civ 316 at [52].
- 1644. Menéndez Álvarez (C-226/12) at [23] (emphasis added).
- 1645. [2014] EWCA Civ 316 at [45] quoting the 31st edition of this work, Vol.I, para.15-074; and [57]-[58].
- 1646. C-415/11 at [69] and see above, para.38-247.
- 1647.  [2015] UKSC 67, [2015] 3 W.L.R. 1373. Subsequent to the decision of the SC (but without reference to it) it has been said that a term of a new lease granted pursuant to the landlord's obligation under the Leasehold Reform, Housing and Development Act 1993 and therefore replicating a term in an earlier lease not subject to the 1999 Regulations, was not “contrary to the requirement of good faith”, though it had earlier been held that that the 1999 Regulations did not apply to the term as it fell within the exclusion in reg.4(2): Roundlistic Ltd v Jones [2016] UKUT 325 (LC) at [101] and [104]; see above, para.38-217A.
- 1648.  [2015] UKSC 67 at [90] and [123].
- 1649.  [2015] UKSC 67 at [91].
- 1650.  [2015] UKSC 67 at [94].
- 1651.  [2015] UKSC 67 at [97]–[98].

- 1652. ! Aziz v Caixa d'Estalvis de Catalunya, Tarragona i Manresa (C-415/11) March 14, 2013 discussed in Vol.II, para.38-247.
- 1653. ! [2015] UKSC 67 at [105] (Lord Neuberger of Abbotsbury P.S.C., Lord Sumption and Lord Carnwath J.J.S.C.) (with whom Lord Hodge J.S.C. (at [289]) and Lord Clarke of Stone-cum-Ebony J.S.C. (at [291]) agreed on these points); [204] and [208] (Lord Mance J.S.C.); Lord Toulson J.S.C. agreed on the importance of the Aziz decision (at [306]–[308]), but dissented on its significance on the facts of ParkingEye Ltd: see below. The SC also held that the term imposing the charge was not a penalty clause at common law as the management company had a legitimate interest in imposing these charges which could not be satisfied by damages even though the amount did not represent any loss caused to them by the breaches by the user and, secondly, the sum was not out of all proportion to its interest or the owner's interests: [2015] UKSC 67 at [99]–[101] (Lord Neuberger, Lord Sumption and Lord Carnwath); [197]–[199] (Lord Mance); Lord Toulson did not express a decided view on this issue: at [316]. ParkingEye Ltd v Beavis was joined with Cavendish Square Holding BV v Makdessi which concerned the common law regarding contractual penalty clauses in a commercial context, on which see above, paras 26-178 et seq.
- 1654. ! [2015] UKSC 67 at [106], referring to A.G. Kokott's Opinion at paras 73 and 87. Recital 16 of the 1993 Directive itself explains the requirement of good faith as allowing "an overall evaluation of the different interests involved" as noted in Vol.II, para.38-244.
- 1655. ! [2015] UKSC 67 at [106]; A.G. Kokott's Opinion, Aziz v Caixa d'Estalvis de Catalunya, Tarragona i Manresa (C-415/11) at para.75 quoted in Vol.II, para.38-247.
- 1656. ! [2015] UKSC 67 at [106] (Lord Neuberger, Lord Sumption and Lord Carnwath, with whom Lord Hodge (at [289]) and Lord Clarke (at [291]) agreed on this point).
- 1657. ! [2015] UKSC 67 at [108] (referring for this purpose to A.G. Kokott's Opinion in Aziz at para.75, though her reference was to "an objective reason for the term" rather than specifically an objective approach to the hypothetical test).
- 1658. ! [2015] UKSC 67 at [108].
- 1659. ! [2015] UKSC 67 at [109].
- 1660. ! [2015] UKSC 67 at [109]. See also at [111]–[113] rejecting further arguments as to the unfairness of the term.
- 1661. ! [2015] UKSC 67 at [208], having noted (at [202]–[203]), the 1999 Regulations reg.6(1) and the 1993 Directive recital 16 to this effect.
- 1662. ! [2015] UKSC 67 at [209].
- 1663. ! [2015] UKSC 67 at [212], adopting the conclusions of Judge Maloney Q.C. at trial.
- 1664. ! [2015] UKSC 67 at [307].
- 1665. ! [2015] UKSC 67 at [308].
- 1666. ! [2015] UKSC 67 at [309]–[310].

- 1667.  [2015] UKSC 67 at [314].
- 1668. Directive 2005/29 concerning unfair business-to-consumer commercial practices in the internal market [2005] O.J. L149/22 (“2005 Directive”), implemented in UK law by the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1277). On the 2005 Directive and these implementing regulations, see above, paras 38-145—38-191.
- 1669. Pereni#ová v SOS finance, spol. sro (C-453/10) [2012] 2 C.M.L.R. 28.
- 1670. Directive 2005/29 art.3(2). This was also the position in UK law when the 2005 Directive was first implemented in UK law by the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1277), but changed by the Consumer Protection (Amendment) Regulations 2014 (SI 2014/870) inserting, notably, new Pt 4A Consumers’ Rights to Redress in the 2008 Regulations. On these amendments see above, paras 38-160—38-191.
- 1671. 1993 Directive art.6(1) on which see below, paras 38-311 et seq.
- 1672. Plus Warenhandels-gesellschaft (C-304/08) [2010] E.C.R. I-217 at para.36; Mediaprint Zeitungs- und Zeitschriftenverlag (C-540/08) [2011] 1 C.M.L.R. 48 at para.17.
- 1673. Pereni#ová v SOS finance, spol. sro (C-453/10) para.39.
- 1674. 2005 Directive art.5(1).
- 1675. 2005 Directive art.5(4).
- 1676. 2005 Directive art.6.
- 1677. 2005 Directive art.5(5), Annex I.
- 1678. Pereni#ová (C-453/10) para.22.
- 1679. Pereni#ová (C-453/10) para.41, following art.5(2)(b) as explained by art.2(b) and 2(k) of the 2005 Directive.
- 1680. Pereni#ová (C-453/10) paras 42-44.
- 1681.  Pereni#ová (C-453/10) para.46. A.G. Kokott has argued that, where relevant to the fairness of a term of a consumer contract under the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Directive 1993, a national court has an obligation to raise the unfairness of any relevant commercial practice within the meaning of the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005: Margarit Panicello v Hernández Martínez (C-503/15) A.G. Opinion of September 15, 2016 at [127]–[128]. The CJEU (judgment of February 16, 2017) did not comment on these issues as it ruled that it had no jurisdiction to hear the request for a preliminary ruling.
- 1682. See below, paras 38-273 et seq.
- 1683. Notably, OFT, Unfair contract terms (2008) OFT311 available at <https://www.gov.uk/government/publications/unfair-contract-terms-guidance-2>. Further guidance is available as regards particular market sectors. It is to be noted that the way in which the test of unfairness will apply in disputes between the parties to a contract will differ in certain respects from the way in which it is to be applied in preventative proceedings (on which, see below, para.38-326), but these are not significant for present purposes.
- 1684. Peabody Trust Governors v Reeve [2008] EWHC 1432 (Ch), [2009] L. & T.R. 6 at [54], per G. Moss Q.C., referring to OFT, Guidance on Unfair Terms in Tenancy Agreements (November 2001).
- 1685. The CMA has also published guidance on the provisions in the Consumer Rights Act 2015 governing unfair contract terms: CMA, Unfair contract terms guidance, Guidance on the unfair terms provisions in the Consumer Rights Act (July 2015).

- 1686. e.g. CMA, Guidance for lettings professionals on consumer protection law; Helping you comply with your obligations (June 13, 2014, CMA31).
- 1687. OFT, Unfair Contract Terms, Bulletin No.1 (May 1996), paras 1.2, p.5; Bulletin No.3 (March 1997), p.7; Financial Services Authority v Asset L.I. Inc (t/a Asset Land Investment Inc) [2013] EWHC 178 (Ch), [2013] 2 B.C.L.C. 480 at [135]; [2014] EWCA Civ 435, [2015] 1 All E.R. 1 at [99]; cf. Stewart Gill Ltd v Horatio Myer & Co Ltd [1992] Q.B. 600 (in relation to the reasonableness test under the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.11).
- 1688. And see 1999 Regulations Sch.2 para.1(l), below, paras 38-286—38-292.
- 1689.  In Banco Bilbao Vizcaya Argentaria SA v Quintano Ujeta (C-602/13) Order of June 11, 2015 paras 47-50 (available only in French) an acceleration clause in a contract of consumer credit secured on the consumer's residence created a right in the lender to call in the principal and interest immediately on non-payment of interest even though the default position in national law subjected this right to three months of lateness. The national court held the acceleration unfair on this ground and the CJEU held that the fact that the trader had chosen to wait for three months to call in the principal and interest did not affect the fact that the effect of unfairness is to render the clause "not binding" on the consumer. See similarly Radlinger v Finway a.s. (C-377/14) April 21, 2016 at para.95 (potential cumulative effect of all penalty clauses on consumer the basis for assessment of fairness). On the inability of the trader to rely on the default position in national law in these circumstances, see below, para.38-313A.
- 1690.  Banco Primus SA v Gutiérrez García (C-421/14) A.G. Opinion February 2, 2016 para.85 (paraphrase from the French by the editor) (judgment of the CJEU pending at the time of writing).
- 1691.  Andriciuc v Banca Românească (C-186/16) Opinion of A.G. Wahl of April 26, 2016, paras 73-90 (the judgment of the CJEU pending)
- 1692. OFT, Unfair Contract Terms, Bulletin No.1 (May, 1996), paras 1.5, p.6.
- 1693. OFT, Unfair Contract Terms (2008) OFT311, para.6.1.1.
- 1694. [2012] EWHC 1290 (Comm), [2012] Info. T.L.R. 1.
- 1695. [2012] EWHC 1290 (Comm) at [14]-[16] (absence of consideration) and see below, n.1698.
- 1696.  [2012] EWHC 1290 (Comm) at [17], per David Donaldson Q.C. referring also to other factors to the same end, notably the inadequate manner in which the potential customer's agreement was sought: at [21]. cf. Roundlistic Ltd v Jones [2016] UKUT 325 (LC) at [103] where it was held that the fact that the terms of a new long lease (subject to the 1999 Regulations) granted on the same terms as a lease for which it was substituted (which had 80 years remaining and which was not subject to the 1999 Regulations) meant that a term of the new lease could not be said to "cause" a significant imbalance in the rights and obligations of the contracting parties: "[i]f there was a significant imbalance it already existed". See also Abbott v RCI Europe [2016] EWHC 2602 (Ch) at [45]-[47] (term of a contract under which consumers "deposited" their own timeshare rights with a company so as to enable them to exchange those rights for access to other properties held fair as creating no significant imbalance given the fetters imposed by law on the company's exercise of its discretion under the term and the power in the consumers to cancel the contract without penalty).
- 1697. See above, para.38-242.
- 1698. 1999 Regulations reg.6(1).

- 1699. See above, paras 38-244—38-247.
- 1700. [2004] EWHC 2450 (TCC), 98 Con. L.R. 82 at [45]; [2005] EWCA Civ 973, [2005] All E.R. (D) 507 (Jul) (appeal allowed on other grounds).
- 1701. Boyde v Clipper Ventures Plc 2013 S.C.L.R. 313, 2013 G.W.D. 12-243.
- 1702.  Pereni#ová (C-453/10) para.42, above, para.38-252; e.g. Financial Services Authority v Asset L.I. Inc (t/a Asset Land Investment Inc) [2013] EWHC 178 (Ch) at [134]-[137] (terms seeking to restrict the seller's liability in contracts for the sale of land under a collective investment scheme held unfair given, inter alia, the "telesales pitch" by the sellers). On appeal, the Court of Appeal considered that the issue of the unfairness of the terms was unnecessary for the issues before the court, but it would have agreed with the court below: [2014] EWCA Civ 435, [2015] 1 All E.R. 1 at [96]-[99]. The CJEU has held that national legislation cannot therefore apply a restricted legal standard for the assessment of a contract term, such as a restriction on the rate of default interest to three times the interest otherwise owed under the contract: Ibercaja Banco SAU v Cortés González (C-613/15) March 17, 2016 (available only in French) at para.33.
- 1703.  In Banco Primus SA v Gutiérrez Garcia (C-421/14), A.G. Szpunar in his Opinion of February 2, 2016 at para.70 advised the CJEU that the "circumstances attending the conclusion of the contract" can include circumstances that were easily foreseeable by the parties at the time of its conclusion even though they occur afterwards and circumstances already existing but known only to one of the contracting parties (for example, likely market changes known to the trader but unknown to the consumer). At the time of writing, the CJEU had not given judgment in this case.
- 1704. See above, Vol.I, Ch.8.
- 1705. cf. above, para.38-147 et seq.
- 1706. See Nemzeti Fogyasztóvédelmi Hatóság v Invitel Távközlési Zrt (C-472/10) of April 26, 2012 at para.27, referring to the requirement of "plain, intelligible writing" in art.5 of the Directive, on which see below, paras 38-317 et seq.
- 1707. 1999 Regulations Sch.2 para.1(i). See further RWE Vertrieb AG v Verbraucherzentrale Nordrhein- Westfalen eV (C-92/11) March 21, 2013 paras 43-44 referring to 1993 Directive art.5 and recital 20, and emphasising the importance of the provision of pre-contractual information for the fairness of a variation clause, below, para.38-289.
- 1708. OFT, Unfair Contract Terms, Bulletin No.2 (September 1996), para.2.22, p.12 (though considering this to be particularly a matter for the good faith of the trader).
- 1709. See Vol.I, paras 13-008 et seq.
- 1710.  The common law approach appears, by contrast, to distinguish between the general law of notice, where the unusual or onerous nature of a contract term is relevant to the degree of notice required (Interfoto Picture Library Ltd v Stiletto Visual Programmes Ltd [1989] Q.B. 433) and the rule governing signed documents, where it is not: L'Estrange v Graucob [1934] 2 K.B. 394. See Peel, Treitel on The Law of Contract, 14th edn (2015), paras 7-004—7-010.
- 1711. See below, paras 38-317—38-321.
- 1712. Mylcrist Builders Ltd v Buck [2008] EWHC 2172 (TCC), [2009] 2 All E.R. (Comm) 259 at [56].
- 1713. Nemzeti Fogyasztóvédelmi Hatóság v Invitel Távközlési Zrt . (C-472/10) [26]-[28], below, paras.38-288; RWE Vertrieb AG v Verbraucherzentrale Nordrhein-Westfalen eV (C-92/11) of March 21, 2013 at [44], below, para.38-289; Constructora Principado SA v Menéndez Álvarez (C-226/12) of January 16, 2014 at para.26.

- 1714. Menéndez Álvarez (C-226/12) at para.27.
- 1715. Sebestyén v Kovári (C-342/13) of April 3, 2014 at para.34.
- 1716. Above, paras 38-041 and 38-239 and below, para.38-320.
- 1717. Below, paras 38-244 et seq.
- 1718. cf. Study Group on a European Civil Code and Research Group on EC Private Law (Acquis Group), Principles, Definitions and Model Rules of European Private Law, Interim Outline edn (2008), Draft Common Frame of Reference art.II.-9:402(2) which provides that “[i]n a contract between a business and a consumer a term which has been supplied by the business in breach of the duty of transparency ... may on that ground alone be considered unfair”. No similar provision was contained in the Proposal for a Regulation for a Common European Sales Law COM(2011) 635 final, Annex I, arts 79-83 CESL.
- 1719. 1999 Regulations reg.5(1), above, para.38-243 and see Bright, Contract Terms (2007), p.172 at 184-86.
- 1720. On this see below, paras 38-323 et seq.
- 1721. OFT, Unfair Contract Terms, Bulletin No.2 (September 1996), p.8.
- 1722. EC Commission, Report on the Implementation of Directive 93/13/EEC on unfair terms in consumer contracts COM(2000) 248 final, p.18.
- 1723. Below, paras 38-311—38-321.
- 1724. Law Com., Scottish Law Com., Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts: Advice to the Department for Business, Innovation and Skills (March 2013), para.S.34; para.6.60.
- 1725.  C-191/15, July 28, 2016 (“Amazon EU Sàrl (C-191/15)”).
- 1726.  Amazon EU Sàrl (C-191/15) at para.68 and see further below, para.38-295A.
- 1727. 1993 Directive recital 19. On the “core exclusion” see above, paras 38-224—38-241.
- 1728. OFT, Unfair Contract Terms, Bulletin No.2 (September 1996), p.12.
- 1729. cf. Domsalla v Dyason [2007] EWHC 1174 (TCC) at [77] (wide range of contracts related to the consumer contract in question considered as part of “all the circumstances”).
- 1730. Notably, under the Consumer Credit Act 1974 on which see below, Ch.39.
- 1731. [2001] UKHL 52, [2002] 1 A.C. 481; Whittaker (2004) ZEuP 75.
- 1732. [2000] Q.B. 672, 688.
- 1733. [2000] Q.B. 672, per Peter Gibson L.J. The powers are contained in Consumer Credit Act 1974 ss.129, 136.
- 1734. [2001] UKHL 52 at [20]. Lords Steyn, Hope of Craighead, Millett and Rodger of Earlsferry agreed.
- 1735. [2001] UKHL 52 at [23], [61], [66].
- 1736. 1993 Directive recital 19.
- 1737. Howells and Wilhelmsson, E.C. Consumer Law (1997) at p.103.

- 1738. Bryen & Langley Ltd v Boston [2005] EWCA Civ 973, [2005] All E.R. (D) 507 (Jul) at [46], per Rimer J. (with whom Clarke ([56]) and Pill L.J.J. [56] agreed). This decision has been treated as holding generally that the arbitration provisions in the JCT Minor Works Contract “even if proffered by the contractor in circumstances which would make it procedurally unfair for the contractor to rely on them vis-à-vis a consumer, do not cause a significant imbalance in the parties’ rights and obligations”: Domsalla v Dyason [2007] EWHC 1174 (TCC) at [92], per H.H.J. Thornton Q.C. On the issue whether terms in these circumstances remain not “individually negotiated” see above, para.38-223.
- 1739. Deutsche Bank (Suisse) SA v Khan [2013] EWHC 482 (Comm) at [372]–[380].
- 1740. West v Ian Finlay & Associates [2014] EWCA Civ 316, [2014] B.L.R. 324 at [60] and see above para.38-250.
- 1741. [2011] EWHC 1811 (TCC), (2011) 27 Const. L.J. 709.
- 1742. [2011] EWHC 1811 (TCC), at [113], per Ramsey J. (and similarly at [116] and [119]).
- 1743. Directive 2005/29/EC concerning unfair business-to-consumer commercial practices art.5(3) and see above, para.38-157.
- 1744. 1993 Directive arts 4(2), 5; Kásler v OTP Jelzálogbank Zrt (C-26/13) of April 30, 2014 para.74, above, paras 38-239 and below, para.38-320.
- 1745. Above, paras 38-244 et seq.
- 1746. See Vol.I, paras 9-005 et seq. and 9-075 et seq. respectively.
- 1747. See further Whittaker, Cambridge Yearbook of European Studies (2006), Vol.8, Ch.10. Legislation sometimes makes requirements as to the language of pre-contractual information and the contract itself, as in the case of timeshare and related contracts where the required information and the contract must be provided in an official language of the EEA State in which the consumer is resident or is a national: Timeshare, Holiday Products, Resale and Exchange Contracts Regulations 2010 (SI 2010/2960) regs 12(4)–(7) and 17, above, paras 38-138–38-139. cf. Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.30(4) (guarantees to consumers in relation to goods offered within UK must be in English), below, para.38-491.
- 1748. Standard Bank London Ltd v Apostolakis (No.2) [2001] Lloyd’s Rep. Bank 240, 250 (emphasis added).
- 1749. On which see Whittaker, Cambridge Yearbook of European Studies (2006), Vol.8, Ch.10, passim.
- 1750. Arbitration Act 1996 ss.89, 90; Unfair Arbitration Agreements (Specified Amount) Order 1999 (SI 1999/2167) which came into force on January 1, 2000 and see below, para.38-276.
- 1751. Directive 2002/65 concerning distance marketing of consumer financial services [2002] O.J. L271/16.
- 1752. The Financial Services (Distance Marketing) Regulations 2004 (SI 2004/2095) reg.24, amending 1999 Regulations regs 3(1) and (5). On these Regulations see above, para.38-131.
- 1753. See above, para.38-196 and Vol.I, paras 15-062 et seq. on the effect of the Consumer Rights Act 2015 on the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977.
- 1754. See above, para.38-245 and Vol.I, paras 15-096 et seq.
- 1755. This is made clear by the phrase in 1999 Regulations reg.6(1) directing the court to refer “at the time of the conclusion of the contract, to all the circumstances attending the conclusion of the contract”: and see above, paras 38-242 and 38-259.

- 1756. i.e. not falling within the first limb of the “core exclusion” in 1999 Regulations reg.6(2)(a): see above, paras 38-224 et seq. especially at 38-230.
- 1757. See above, paras 38-221—38-223
- 1758. cf. Vol.I, para.15-096 and paras 16-102 et seq.
- 1759. cf. though, the differences in relation to the burden of proof discussed below, paras 38-308 et seq.
- 1760. [2010] EWHC 203 (Ch) unreported.
- 1761. [2010] EWHC 203 (Ch) at [36]–[37].
- 1762. [2010] EWHC 203 (Ch) at [25], per Mann J.
- 1763. See 1999 Regulations regs 12–14 and below, paras 38-323 et seq.
- 1764. [2010] EWHC 203 (Ch) at [27], per Mann J.
- 1765.  [2010] EWHC 203 (Ch) at [37]. See also below, para.38-306A in relation to Sales Sinués v Caixabank SA, Drame Ba v Catalunja Caixa SA (Joined Cases C-381/14 and C-385/14) April 14, 2016 concerning stays of individual claims by consumers.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 6. - The Control of Unfair Contract Terms

(c) - The Old Law: the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999

(iii) - The Requirement of Fairness

(dd) - The “Indicative List” of Terms

Introduction

38-273

Following the list in the Annex to the 1993 Directive exactly, Sch.2 of the 1999 Regulations contains an identical “indicative and non-exhaustive list of the terms which may be regarded as unfair”. ¹⁷⁶⁶ This list has been termed a “grey list”, ¹⁷⁶⁷ for the terms which it contains are not necessarily to be held unfair (a “black list”), but this terminology may be misleading as inclusion within the list does not formally give rise to any presumption that a term will be unfair. ¹⁷⁶⁸ On the other hand, the Court of Justice has emphasised the list’s importance, observing that:

“If the content of the annex [to the Directive] does not suffice in itself to establish automatically the unfair nature of a contested term, it is nevertheless an essential element on which the competent court may base its assessment as to the unfair nature of that term.” ¹⁷⁶⁹

Given its merely illustrative nature, it may appear odd that the second part of Sch.2 purports to restrict the scope of particular examples of terms found in the first part, but this reinforces the importance which was attached by the drafters of the Directive to the illustrative list. ¹⁷⁷⁰ Even so, it needs to be emphasised that a type of term included on the list may be held by a court to be fair in the circumstances before it. Moreover, as earlier explained, the appearance of a contract term on the list has a second significance, for where it does so it will be held to fall outside the “core exclusion” set by art.4(2) of the Directive and provided by reg.6(2) of the 1999 Regulations. ¹⁷⁷¹

38-274

The list in Pt 1 of Sch.2 of the 1999 Regulations includes a wide variety of terms and these not merely illustrate the application of the requirement of fairness, but also the range of types of terms which are subject to the Regulations’ controls (in particular in contrast to the limited ambit of the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977). In the following paragraphs, these terms will be noted and briefly discussed, the examples retaining the letter which they bear in Pt 1 of the Schedule.

Exclusion or limitation clauses

38-275

 Terms which have the object or effect of:

“(a)

excluding or limiting the legal liability of a seller or supplier in the event of the death of a consumer or personal injury to the latter resulting from an act or omission of that seller or supplier; inappropriately excluding or limiting the legal rights of the consumer vis-à-vis the seller or supplier or another party in the event of total or partial nonperformance or inadequate performance by the seller or supplier of any of the contractual obligations, including the option of offsetting a debt owed to the seller or supplier against any claim which the consumer may have against him; excluding or hindering the consumer's right to take legal action or exercise any other legal remedy, particularly by requiring the consumer to take disputes exclusively to arbitration not covered by legal provisions, unduly restricting the evidence available to him or imposing on him a burden of proof which, according to the applicable law, should lie with another party to the contract.”

(b)

...

(q)

Many of the terms within these examples would be classed as exemption clauses within the meaning of the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977, ¹⁷⁷² or would come within the broader category of contract term falling within s.3(2) of that Act, ¹⁷⁷³ but, as earlier noted, the ambit of the controls in the 1977 Act is sometimes narrower than the ambit of the Regulations. ¹⁷⁷⁴ So, for example, a clause in a contract for the purchase of new homes by which the builders/sellers alleged that they were not liable for any failure to carry out the design of the works with proper skill and care was held unfair within the meaning of the 1999 Regulations, even though the purchasers were legally advised. ¹⁷⁷⁵ Moreover, the Regulations are not restrained by any such limiting definitions as are found in the 1977 Act, and, as the OFT has put it:

“If a term achieves the same effect as an unfair exemption clause, it will be unfair whatever its form or mechanism. This applies, for instance, to terms which ‘deem’ things to be the case, or get consumers to declare that they are—whether they really are or not—with the aim of ensuring no liability arises in the first place.” ¹⁷⁷⁶

An example of a term which requires a declaration may be found in the case of a contract for the provision of medical services under which the consumer/patient declares that he knows medical facts which could only be known with any certainty by experts. ¹⁷⁷⁷ The High Court has found (in circumstances described as unusual) a “withholding notice clause” in the JCT Minor Works standard contract by which the consumer/employer's right of set off can be exercised only if the appropriate notice has been served in time to the building contractor to be unfair within the meaning of the Regulations. ¹⁷⁷⁸ Moreover, the OFT interpreted the impact of clauses which limit the consumer's right to offset a debt broadly. So, in its view:

“There is no objection to terms which state the consumer's normal legal obligation to pay promptly and in full what is properly owing—that is, the full price, on satisfactory completion of the contract. But suspicion falls on terms which say, or clearly imply, that the consumer must in all cases complete his payment of the whole contract price, without any deduction, as soon as the supplier chooses to regard his side of the bargain as finished. They are likely to be seen as excluding the right of set-off even if they do not actually mention that right.” ¹⁷⁷⁹

Moreover, in Aziz ¹⁷⁸⁰ the Court of Justice of the EU saw para.1(q) of the Annex to the Directive ¹⁷⁸¹ as relevant to the fairness of a term under which a lender under a long-term contract of loan secured by a mortgage of residential premises was able unilaterally to determine the amount of debt unpaid, this having considerable procedural advantages under the national procedural law applicable. In these circumstances, the national court

“must in particular assess whether and, if appropriate, to what extent, the term in question derogates from the rules applicable in the absence of agreement between the parties, so as to make it more difficult for the consumer, given the procedural means at his disposal, to take legal action and exercise rights of the defence.” ¹⁷⁸²

Arbitration and adjudication clauses

38-276

Paragraph 1(q) quoted above, ¹⁷⁸³ refers to a term which requires a “consumer to take disputes exclusively to arbitration not covered by legal provisions”. ¹⁷⁸⁴ This may refer to arbitration or adjudication clauses which give no option to the consumer. Here, it has been specifically provided that an arbitration clause in a “consumer contract” ¹⁷⁸⁵ is deemed necessarily unfair where it relates to a claim for a “modest amount” set at the time of writing at £5,000. ¹⁷⁸⁶ However, even where a claim for more than this amount is subject under a consumer contract to arbitration or adjudication the relevant term may be held unfair. ¹⁷⁸⁷ So, for example, in Zealand v Laing Homes Ltd ¹⁷⁸⁸ the claimant had contracted to buy a new house and certain other items from the defendant, this house being covered in part by the National House Builders Council “Build Mark” Agreement, which contained a compulsory arbitration clause. The Technology and Construction Court refused to stay his claim for damages in respect of defects in the house, holding that the clause was unfair within the meaning of the Regulations in that it created a “significant imbalance” between the parties since the claimant, who had been in a position of disparity with the defendant builder, would have to take separate proceedings for the matters covered by the “Build Mark” Agreement and those falling outside it, which would put the claimant at a financial disadvantage. Similarly, in Picardi v Cuniberti, ¹⁷⁸⁹ the same court held unfair a clause in a contract between two consumers and their architect under which either party could refer any dispute or difference to adjudication, the adjudicator to be appointed by the parties or, absent their agreement, nominated by the architect’s own professional body. Applying the approach of Lord Bingham of Cornhill in Director General of Fair Trading v First National Bank Plc, ¹⁷⁹⁰ the court held that:

“... a procedure which the consumer is required to follow, and which will cause irrecoverable expenditure in either prosecuting or defending it, is something which may hinder the consumer’s right to take legal action. The fact that the consumer was deliberately excluded by Parliament from the statutory regime of the [Housing Grants Construction Regeneration Act 1996] reinforces this view.” ¹⁷⁹¹

On the other hand, in Westminster Building Co Ltd v Beckingham ¹⁷⁹² a private individual (the “consumer”) who had commissioned a firm of builders to renovate his property under a contract falling outside the Housing Grants, Regeneration and Construction Act 1996 was held bound by an adjudication clause which it contained since this clause was not unfair in the circumstances: its terms were couched in plain and intelligible language and had been decided upon by the consumer’s professional agents, chartered surveyors, who could have given him competent and objective advice as to its existence and effect. ¹⁷⁹³ Moreover, in Du Plessis v Fontgary Leisure Parks Ltd ¹⁷⁹⁴ the Court of Appeal held that a term of a contract between the owner of a holiday caravan park and the owner of a caravan in respect of use of a designated pitch for 10 years under which any dispute about an increase in pitch fee under a term of the contract could be referred to arbitration only with the support of 51 per cent or more of the park's caravan owners was not unfair under the Regulations, the Court seeing the “good sense of permitting arbitration only if it was requested by a substantial body of caravan owners. Pitch fees had to be set consistently for the whole park. It would not be practicable to administer the leisure park if pitch fees were negotiated or determined on an individual basis.” ¹⁷⁹⁵

Choice of jurisdiction clauses ¹⁷⁹⁶

38-277

⚠ In Océano Grupo Editorial SA v Murciano Quintero the European Court of Justice held that a choice of local jurisdiction clause in a consumer contract which purported to give jurisdiction to the court where the business supplier was established even though the consumers were domiciled in another part of Spain was unfair within the meaning of art.3 of the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Directive 1993, the European Court seeing this type of term as falling within the category set out in subpara.(q) of para.1 of the Annex to that Directive. ¹⁷⁹⁷ While this aspect of the European Court's decision has no direct significance for English law, in Standard Bank London Ltd v Apostolakis (No.2) its impact was extended by analogy to a choice of national jurisdiction clause. ¹⁷⁹⁸ In that case, the defendants were two wealthy individuals resident in Greece who had entered foreign exchange contracts with a bank in Athens and who had commenced proceedings on the contracts in Athens. The claimant bank failed in its proceedings in England for an injunction to restrain the defendants from continuing their proceedings in Greece. Steel J. expressed the view that, whether or not the case fell within art.13 of the Brussels Convention so as to give the Greek courts exclusive jurisdiction, ¹⁷⁹⁹ the term which gave exclusive jurisdiction to the English courts was unfair within the meaning of the Regulations given the cost and inconvenience of requiring the defendants to defend an action in England, the contrast with this requirement and the claimant's reservation to itself of a right to sue the defendants in England or in any country where they had assets or were amenable to suit and the fact that the defendants had been faced with “potentially confusing sets of jurisdiction clauses calling for translation and careful explanation”, neither of which had taken place. ¹⁸⁰⁰ However, the decision in Apostolakis (No.2) was distinguished in Chopra v Bank of Singapore Ltd on the basis that the clause in the latter case conferred only nonexclusive jurisdiction, the contract was in a language (English) known to the consumers and was “fairly simple and straightforward”: there was, moreover, no evidence that if they had known about the clause they would not have entered the contract. ¹⁸⁰¹ ⚠

“Potestative conditions”

38-278

Terms which have the object or effect of:

“(c)

... making an agreement binding on the consumer whereas provision of services by the seller or supplier is subject to a condition whose realisation depends on his own will alone.”

It may be thought that in English law such a term may render the contract as a whole void for uncertainty or lack of consideration, in that it appears to give the seller or supplier an effective choice whether or not to do anything under the contract, ¹⁸⁰² a term which in the Romanist terminology is known as a “potestative condition”. ¹⁸⁰³ This term’s presence in the list may be explained by the fact that this result is not uniformly shared throughout the Member States. ¹⁸⁰⁴

Unbalanced forfeiture clauses

38-279

Terms which have the object or effect of:

“(d)

... permitting the seller or supplier to retain sums paid by the consumer where the latter decides not to conclude or perform the contract, without providing for the consumer to receive compensation of an equivalent amount from the seller or supplier where the latter is the party cancelling the contract.”

The type of terms described in this paragraph include terms under which either a part-payment or deposit paid by a consumer may be forfeited and proved to be a significant object of the OFT’s work. In this respect, important factors in the fairness of such a term are the proportion between the sum to be forfeited and any loss to be suffered by the seller or supplier by the consumer’s cancellation ¹⁸⁰⁵ and, as para.(d) mentions, the existence of any counter-balancing provision in the contract for the benefit of the consumer.

Penalty clauses

38-280

⚠ Terms which have the object or effect of:

“(e)

requiring any consumer who fails to fulfil his obligation to pay a disproportionately high sum in compensation”.

The type of term described in this paragraph bears a considerable similarity to the common law understanding of a “penalty clause”, since the disproportionately high nature of a sum to be paid on breach is an element within the distinction between a penalty and a (valid) liquidated damages clause ¹⁸⁰⁶ ⚠. Clearly, though, clauses which are penal in their potential effect may be subjected to the test of fairness under the Regulations, whether or not they count as penalties in the technical common law sense. ¹⁸⁰⁷ So, for example, it has been held that a clause which requires a consumer to pay interest at 8 per cent over the Bank of England current base rate on sums due to the business under the contract 30 days after the issue of an account is unfair within the meaning of the 1999 Regulations, even though it constituted a genuine pre-estimate of damage likely to be suffered by the claimant in the event of non-payment and therefore not a penalty clause at common law, ¹⁸⁰⁸ this decision on the unfairness of the term resting principally on the grounds that the term was unusual and not balanced by a similar term governing unpaid monies such as damages which may fall due to the consumer. ¹⁸⁰⁹ In Office of Fair Trading v Ashbourne Management Services Ltd, ¹⁸¹⁰ one standard form consumer contract for gym club membership of a year's duration with monthly payments by the consumer contained an express term allowing the business to terminate on the ground of the consumer's breach where the term was not a technical condition and the breach did not require to be repudiatory. Where the term further provided that the consumer was liable for all sums which would have fallen due if the contract had not been terminated early on the ground of breach, it was held to be both a penalty at common law and unfair. ¹⁸¹¹ By contrast, in another standard form contract for gym membership before the court, a plain and intelligible term allowed termination only for repudiatory breach, and its requirement for accelerated payment of sums which would have fallen due (subject to a discount for this acceleration) was held to be neither a penalty at common law nor unfair within the meaning of the Regulations. ¹⁸¹²

38-281

⚠ The question whether the sum to be paid by the consumer is disproportionate depends on the nature of the contract and the context more generally. So, a term allowing a person (the alleged consumer) who had agreed to participate in a world voyage by clipper to cancel the contract at a charge of 75 per cent of the price was held to be fair as not disproportionate in the context since that person's commitment to the venture was important. ¹⁸¹³ ⚠ In Aziz ¹⁸¹⁴ the Court of Justice of the EU considered the proper approach to a term in a long-term contract of loan secured by a mortgage of residential premises which set an annual default interest of 18.75 per cent automatically to sums not paid when due without the need for notice to the debtor. In these circumstances, the European Court advised that the national court must assess the national legal rules which would otherwise apply and compare the rate of default interest (if any) set by law and set by the contract term "in order to determine whether [the latter] is appropriate for securing the attainment of the objectives pursued by it in the Member State concerned and does not go beyond what is necessary to achieve them". ¹⁸¹⁵ Finally, it should be recalled that the example in paragraph (e) merely sets out a term which "may be regarded as unfair". ¹⁸¹⁶ For example, as earlier noted, in ParkingEye Ltd v Beavis ¹⁸¹⁷ ⚠ the Supreme Court held that a term in a contract under which a consumer parked for free in a car park for up to two hours, but who incurred a charge of £85 for overstaying this permitted period was not unfair even though this amount did not reflect the potential loss caused by its breach to the managers of the car park, ¹⁸¹⁸ ⚠ as the amount was not disproportionate to the legitimate interest of the managers of the car park, its owners and its other users in the efficient management of the car park. ¹⁸¹⁹ ⚠

Cancellation clauses

38-282

Terms which have the object or effect of:

"(f)

... authorising the seller or supplier to dissolve the contract on a discretionary basis where the same facility is not granted to the consumer, or permitting the seller or supplier to retain the sums paid for services not yet supplied by him where it is the seller or supplier himself who dissolves the contract."

It could be argued that an executory contract which contains a term permitting either party to “dissolve” it without any prejudicial consequence (such as the payment of expenses or the loss of a deposit) is itself void for lack of consideration, for consideration is illusory where it is alleged to consist of a promise the terms of which leave performance entirely to the discretion of the promisor (unless something else of value in the eyes of the law is required instead). ¹⁸²⁰ However, this is clearly not the assumption of the Regulations (nor indeed of the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 ¹⁸²¹), which is that such clauses are, in principle, valid. Moreover, from the point of view of consumer protection, it does not help a consumer to say that a clause which allows a seller or supplier to cancel without prejudicial consequence renders the contract as a whole void, for this releases the seller or supplier just the same, whereas a holding that the clause is unfair means merely that the clause does not bind the consumer, thereby leaving the contract binding for both. Conversely, however, a term which allows a seller or supplier to retain a deposit when the consumer cancels the contract may well be held fair. So, for example, a clause requiring the parents of a pupil accepted at an independent school to give a term’s written notice when cancelling their acceptance of a place, failing which a term’s fees would be payable has been held fair within the meaning of the Regulations. ¹⁸²²

Terms relating to notice in contracts of indeterminate duration

38-283

Terms which have the object or effect of:

“(g)

... enabling the seller or supplier to terminate a contract of indeterminate duration without reasonable notice except where there are serious grounds for doing so.”

Terms in a contract of indefinite duration which allow one or other party to terminate it are, in principle, valid in English law, as may be seen from the law governing contracts of employment and partnerships. ¹⁸²³ Paragraph 1(g) describes a term which seeks to provide for the termination of a contract of indefinite duration without reasonable notice (a concept familiar to the common law) unless there are serious grounds for doing so. The OFT applied this example to a contract for the provision of estate agency services which allowed the agency to cancel the contract at any time, preferring its replacement with a term which allowed termination only on 14 days’ notice. ¹⁸²⁴ It is to be noted, though, that Pt 2 of Sch.2 of the 1999 Regulations excludes from the scope of para.1(g) a range of terms in contracts for the supply of financial services, transactions in transferable securities, etc. ¹⁸²⁵

“Automatic extension clauses”

38-284

! Terms which have the object or effect of:

“(h)

... automatically extending a contract of fixed duration where the consumer does not indicate otherwise, when the deadline fixed for the consumer to express this desire not to extend the contract is unreasonably early.”

Thus, for example, a term in a contract for the provision of a vehicle declamping service which stipulated that the annual contract was to be renewed unless the consumer gave notice not less than four weeks before its expiry was considered potentially unfair by the OFT (it being coupled with a clause requiring the payment of a very high percentage of the annual fee if the period for notice was not observed). 1826

Binding terms and the relevance of notice

38-285

Terms which have the object or effect of:

“(i) irrevocably binding the consumer to terms with which he had no real opportunity of becoming acquainted before the conclusion of the contract.”

As has already been noted, this example of a possible unfair term has very important implications. 1827 For the vast majority of consumer contracts written standard terms contain a term which binds the consumer irrevocably to the contract, although some rely simply on a requirement of a consumer's signature. Where a contract does contain such a term, then para.1(i) suggests that this term may be unfair in the absence of a real opportunity of knowing about other terms of the contract and if it is, this term (and therefore the contract as a whole) will not be binding on the consumer. 1828 In this way, the Regulations allow a court to make more onerous requirements of notice than has been the case at common law. 1829

Variation clauses 1830

38-286

 Terms which have the object or effect of:

“(j)

... enabling the seller or supplier to alter the terms of the contract unilaterally without a valid reason which is specified in the contract;

(k) enabling the seller or supplier to alter unilaterally without a valid reason any characteristics of the product or service to be provided; providing for the price of goods to be determined at the time of delivery or allowing a seller of goods or supplier of services to increase their price without in both cases giving the consumer the corresponding right to cancel the contract if the final price is too high in relation to the price agreed when the contract was concluded.”

(l)

These three examples of possibly unfair terms are clearly related, each allowing a seller or supplier to vary an aspect of the contract (whether its terms, its subject matter or its price) to the possible prejudice of the consumer. ¹⁸³¹  First, para.2(b) of Sch.2 to the 1999 Regulations provides that para.1(j) is:

“... without hindrance to terms under which a seller or supplier reserves the right to alter unilaterally the conditions of a contract of indeterminate duration, provided that he is required to inform the consumer with reasonable notice and that the consumer is free to dissolve the contract.”

So, it would seem that a term which allows variations of contract terms under these conditions is likely to be considered to be fair, but this will depend on the circumstances. So, in Peabody Trust Governors v Reeve, ¹⁸³² a term in a standard contract of tenancy used by a registered social landlord which purported to reserve to itself:

“... almost carte blanche in the field of variations, apart from the areas of rent and statutory protection, so as to provide in effect that the terms of the tenancy agreement will be whatever the [landlord] says they are to be from time to time” was held unfair: the tenant's right to walk away from the contract in such a context is illusory as he or she has no real choice. ¹⁸³³ More generally, the OFT considered that:

“[a]

right in a party to alter the terms of the contract after it has been agreed, regardless of the consent of the other party, is under strong suspicion of unfairness ... If a term could be used to force the consumer to accept increased costs or penalties, new requirements, or reduced benefits it is likely to be considered unfair whether or not it is meant to be used in that way.” ¹⁸³⁴

On the other hand, a term is more likely to be found fair if it has a narrow effect, for example, allowing variations to reflect changes in the law or where it can be exercised only for clear reasons which are stated in the contract. ¹⁸³⁵ Finally, it is to be noted that paras 1(j) and 1(l) are stated as being limited in their scope in various ways regarding certain terms in contracts for the provision of financial services, transactions in transferable securities, etc. ¹⁸³⁶

Du Plessis v Fontgary Leisure Parks Ltd ¹⁸³⁷

38-287

In Du Plessis v Fontgary Leisure Parks Ltd the Court of Appeal considered the fairness under the 1999 Regulations of a term in a licence agreement between the owner of a holiday caravan park and the owner of a holiday caravan (from which the caravan was purchased) in respect of use of a designated pitch for 10 years for a period of just over 10 months each year. Under the contract, the caravan owner paid a pitch fee reviewable every year under a procedure complying with an industry-wide code of practice, this procedure including a possibility of referring the proposed fee increase to a special arbitrator if 51 per cent or more of the caravan owners on the site objected to it. Under the relevant term, any review of the pitch fee by the park owner was to be made having regard to five specified criteria (including changes to the costs of living and sums spent on the facilities) or to “any other relevant factor”. A year after the conclusion of the contract, the park owner sought to introduce a grading of pitches so as to charge different fees according to their size and location and it notified all caravan owners (including the claimant) of this intention. The increases were not sent to arbitration as the claimant did not have the support of more than 51 per cent of the caravan owners to do so. After grading, the claimant’s pitch fell into the highest grade and her fee chargeable increased from £1,895 to £2,160 and, on her refusal to pay the increase, her contract was terminated and she sold her caravan at a loss. Before the Court of Appeal, the claimant argued that the term of the contract under which the park owner had purported to increase her pitch fee did not as a matter of construction allow increases on the ground of site grading and that, if it did, it was unfair and not binding on her under the 1999 Regulations. The Court held, first, that the increases caused by the introduction of grading fell within the words “any other relevant factor” in the relevant term as a matter of construction, there being no room for application of reg.7(2)’s contra proferentem rule as this phrase was not ambiguous.¹⁸³⁸ Secondly, the Court held that this aspect of the relevant term was not unfair under the Regulations as it did not create an imbalance in the parties’ rights and obligations to the detriment of the claimant consumer: it formed part of a carefully balanced review procedure, any increase could be challenged by the courts even in the absence of arbitration, and the relevant term did not fall within the paragraphs in the Schedule to the Regulations on which the claimant relied,¹⁸³⁹ noting in particular that “the method by which the pitch fee would be varied was ‘explicitly described’, as required by paragraph 2(d) of Schedule 2 to the 1999 Regulations”.¹⁸⁴⁰

Invitel case

38-288

Subsequently, in *Invitel*¹⁸⁴¹ the Court of Justice of the EU set out the criteria to be taken into account by a national court in considering a term in a contract for the supply of telephone services which imposed a fee in respect of payment of invoices by “money order” (or postal order) without specifying the method of the calculation of these fees. The Court of Justice treated such a term as being one which allowed the service provider to amend the fees charged for the service, as it meant that “the consumer pay[s] fees which had not initially been agreed between the parties”.¹⁸⁴² Having considered the examples in the “indicative list” of terms in the Annex to the Directive, paras 1(j), 1(l) and 2(b) and (d), the Court held that:

“in assessing the unfair nature of a term such as that at issue in the main proceedings, the question whether the reasons for, or the method of, the variation of the fees connected with the service provided were specified and whether the consumer had the right to terminate the contract is particularly relevant.”¹⁸⁴³

The actual opportunity of the consumer to examine the terms and their consequences and the service provider’s obligation under art.5 of the Directive to draft the terms in plain intelligible language were also relevant.¹⁸⁴⁴ Overall,

“the possibility for the consumer to foresee, on the basis of clear, intelligible criteria, the amendments, by a seller or supplier, of the [general business conditions] with regard to the fees connected to the service to be provided is of fundamental importance.”¹⁸⁴⁵

Where certain aspects of the method of amendment of fees are required by “mandatory statutory or regulatory provisions” within the meaning of art.1(2) of the Directive,¹⁸⁴⁶ or where those provisions provide a right for the consumer to terminate the contract, then the consumer must be informed of these provisions.¹⁸⁴⁷ Although the Court of Justice’s guidance in Invitel was given in the context of a different type of consumer contract and a different type of variation clause,¹⁸⁴⁸ it is submitted that, had the Court of Appeal in *Du Plessis v Fontgary Leisure Parks Ltd*¹⁸⁴⁹ the benefit of the guidance given by the Court of Justice in Invitel, ¹⁸⁵⁰ it might have reached a different conclusion on the fairness of the tariff review clause before it in that case. For, while the circumstances taken into account by the Court of Appeal would still have argued in favour of the fairness of the term, ¹⁸⁵¹ it could have been argued that the term which provided for an increase in the fee payable by the caravan owner (the consumer) having regard to “any other relevant factor” (even though it describes the method of variation explicitly) did not allow the caravan owner “to foresee, on the basis of clear, intelligible criteria, the amendments” of the fees, a possibility which the Court of Justice in Invitel considered to be of “fundamental importance”. ¹⁸⁵²

RWE Vertrieb AG

38-289

In RWE Vertrieb AG ¹⁸⁵³ the Court of Justice followed its earlier approach in Invitel ¹⁸⁵⁴ in the context of a standard term in a contract for the supply of gas to consumers which allowed the supplier unilaterally to vary the gas supply price without indicating the grounds, conditions or scope of such a variation. ¹⁸⁵⁵ While accepting that the decision as to the fairness of such a term is for the national court to decide, the Court of Justice emphasised the importance for this purpose of the information provided to the consumer before the contract was made, for

“[i]t is on the basis of that information in particular that he decides whether he wishes to be bound by the terms previously drawn up by the seller or supplier.” ¹⁸⁵⁶

In the context of assessing a price variation clause, the national court must consider whether the seller or supplier set out in a transparent fashion the reason for and method of the variation of the charges for the service to be provided, so that the consumer can foresee the alterations that may be made and, secondly, whether the consumer has the right to terminate the contract if the charges are in fact altered. ¹⁸⁵⁷ While the Annex to the Directive at several points acknowledges that in contracts of indeterminate length the supplier has a legitimate interest in being able to alter the charge for the service, ¹⁸⁵⁸ a lack of information for the consumer before contract:

“cannot, in principle, be compensated for by the mere fact that consumers will, during the performance of the contract, be informed in good time of a variation of the charges and of their right to terminate the contract if they do not wish to accept the variation.” ¹⁸⁵⁹

In this way, the strict requirements as to the provision of information for consumers and the acceptance of the possibility of a right in the seller unilaterally to vary the terms of the contract “correspond to a balancing of the interests of the two parties”. ¹⁸⁶⁰ Finally, it is also “of fundamental importance ... that the right of termination given to the consumer is not purely formal but can actually be exercised” and, for this purpose, various circumstances should be taken into account, including whether or not the market concerned is competitive. ¹⁸⁶¹

“Supplier’s discretion” clauses

38-290

Terms which have the object or effect of:

“(m)

... giving the seller or supplier the right to determine whether the goods or services supplied are in conformity with the contract, or giving him the exclusive right to interpret any term of the contract.”

For example, according to the OFT, a term which allows a supplier of goods to undertake his own test or inspection to determine whether they are faulty would be likely to be unfair, though a term which provides for an independent test or inspection would be more likely to be fair, provided that its cost is not borne by the consumer if a complaint is well-founded. ¹⁸⁶²

“Entire agreement clauses”

38-291

Terms which have the object or effect of:

“(n)

... limiting the seller's or supplier's obligation to respect commitments undertaken by his agents or making his commitments subject to compliance with a particular formality.”

The first part of this paragraph describes an important group of contract terms, often termed “entire agreement clauses”. ¹⁸⁶³ These clauses are of various kinds, but in general their aim is to ensure that a court concludes that it was the intention of the parties that a written document contains all the terms of the contract, for in the absence of such a finding a court will look at the oral as well as the written agreement of the parties. ¹⁸⁶⁴ Here, the OFT took a strong view against the fairness of such terms:

“Good faith demands that each party to a contract is bound by his or her promises and by any other statements which help secure the other party's agreement. If a standard form contract excludes liability for words that do not appear in it, there is scope for consumers to be misled with impunity.” ¹⁸⁶⁵

For example, the OFT considered unfair the following term:

“All the terms of the Contract between the Company and the Customer are contained in the Contract and in these conditions and no oral or written arrangements between the Customer and any agent or representative of the company not contained in the Contract shall be in any way binding upon the Company.” ¹⁸⁶⁶

38-292

As will be seen in this illustration, sometimes an entire agreement clause will seek to avoid liability in a seller or supplier by unreasonably restricting or purporting to restrict the authority of its agent. ¹⁸⁶⁷ So, it has been held that where in the context of a particular type of contract (such as for the supply of replacement doors and windows) there is a very clear risk of statements being made by agents which do not conform to the contract's written terms, this risk is:

“... sufficiently great to make it unfair and contrary to the requirement of good faith for a supplier of such products to make use of a term which restricts liability for such statements”, e.g. by requiring any representation or promise made before or at the time of conclusion of the contract to be added to the contract and signed by both parties. ¹⁸⁶⁸ On the other hand, in Shaftsbury House (Developments) Ltd v Lee ¹⁸⁶⁹ an entire agreement clause excluding liability for any representations or statements not included in the written agreement in a contract of sale by a developer of an apartment “off plan” was held not unfair within the meaning of the Regulations, although on the facts this decision was hypothetical given that the court had found no actionable misrepresentations in the circumstances.

“Unequal opt out clauses”

38-293

⚠ Terms which have the object or effect of:

“(o) obliging the consumer to fulfil all his obligations where the seller or supplier does not perform his”.

An example of such a term may be found in a contract for the provision of airtime by a mobile telephone service which allowed its provider “from time to time without notice to suspend the Network service”, but further provided that:

“Notwithstanding any suspension of the Network service ... the Customer shall remain liable for all charges due throughout the period of suspension unless [the supplier] at its sole discretion determines otherwise.” ¹⁸⁷⁰

Not surprisingly, given its width, the OFT considered that this particular example of an “unequal opt out clause” was potentially unfair, and negotiated its replacement with a clause which advised the consumer to arrange insurance to cover any monthly charges and provided for a refund by the provider of the service if the consumer is unable to use the services in certain circumstances for a continuous period of three days. ¹⁸⁷¹ ⚠

Assignment clauses

38-294

Terms which have the object or effect of:

“(p)

... giving the seller or supplier the possibility of transferring his rights and obligations under the contract, where this may serve to reduce the guarantees for the consumer, without the latter's agreement."

According to the OFT:

"If a supplier sells ('assigns') his business, consumers will find themselves dealing with someone else if the contract is a continuing one (like an insurance contract) or, when it is for a single transaction, if any problem arises with the goods or services supplied to them. Their legal position should be unaffected by the 'assignment'. A term is unlikely to be fair if it allows the supplier to sell on to someone else who offers a poorer service." ¹⁸⁷²

One possible solution is for the consumer to be consulted and the assignment to be permitted only if he or she consents or for the supplier's assignment clause to be without prejudice to the consumer's rights. ¹⁸⁷³ While para.1(p) does not concern assignment of rights by the consumer, a supplier's assignment clause is particularly likely to be unfair if the contract prevents the consumer from transferring his own rights under the contract, given the reference in the general test of unfairness to the need for rights to be balanced. ¹⁸⁷⁴ And the OFT intervened so as to prevent certain consumer contracts from preventing the assignment by the consumer of his rights under the contract more generally, this being most common as regards guarantees. In its view:

"Guarantees, while they remain current, can add substantial value to the main subject matter of the contract. If consumers cannot sell something still under guarantee with the benefit of that guarantee, they are effectively deprived of part of what they have paid for." ¹⁸⁷⁵

On the other hand, the OFT accepted that suppliers have a legitimate interest in ensuring that they are not subject to baseless claims under guarantees and so there is no objection to terms which require the purchaser (or "assignee") of goods, if he or she wishes to rely on the guarantee, to establish that it was properly assigned or that the transfer is subject to the reasonable consent of the supplier. ¹⁸⁷⁶ In a different context, "non-transferable ticketing" in air-travel contracts was the subject of criticism by the OFT. ¹⁸⁷⁷

Other potentially unfair terms

38-295

The guidance of the OFT (adopted by the CMA ¹⁸⁷⁸) contains a number of types of terms found in consumer contracts which it considers are likely to be considered to be unfair within the meaning of the Regulations. ¹⁸⁷⁹ These include terms which allow the supplier to impose unfair financial burdens, such as a right to demand payment of unspecified amounts by way of security deposit, ¹⁸⁸⁰ put on the consumer the onus to judge technical matters in which the supplier is expert but in which the consumer is not (for example, placing on a consumer the determination whether a driveway was ready for resurfacing with tarmacadam) ¹⁸⁸¹; terms where the apparent supplier of the service states in small print that he acts only as agent for another person (for example, in the provision of a holiday cottage) ¹⁸⁸²; and "unfair enforcement clauses", for example, a term which grants to a seller of goods a right to enter the consumer's home and repossess the goods in certain circumstances without recourse to the court. ¹⁸⁸³

38-296

Apart from these examples, an important type of term which may be thought of as vulnerable under the Regulations is one which allows the seller or supplier to terminate the contract on a minor breach by the consumer, whether this stems from a very slight breach of a significant term or the breach of a very minor term of the contract (notably, where the contract classes the terms in question as “conditions” as opposed to warranties). ¹⁸⁸⁴ Other types of clauses which may be thought to be potentially unfair are those which restrict a consumer’s legal or equitable rights, such as in relation to discharge of a guarantee on variation of the contract or negligence in relation to the security ¹⁸⁸⁵; a term which permits the supplier to pass on information about the consumer more freely or widely than would otherwise be allowed under the Data Protection Act. ¹⁸⁸⁶ Moreover, it has been held that a contract term which provides that the consumer must indemnify the business in respect of its legal or other costs in any action or proceedings and pay it a reasonable sum in respect of time spent in connection with such an action or proceedings was unfair within the meaning of the 1999 Regulations, even though the court saw the force of the argument that such a term could protect the business against unfair treatment by the customer who could use the business’s unrecoverable costs to negotiate a discount on the unpaid contract price: the term remained unbalanced by any similar provision for the benefit of the consumer. ¹⁸⁸⁷ Terms under which an estate agent charged commission on the renewal of a lease by the tenant and on the sale of the property to the tenant have been held unfair, although the court was careful to state that its decision did not mean that all renewal commission clauses were unfair since the clauses in question were capable of operating onerously and not enough had been done to draw them to the attention of the consumer. ¹⁸⁸⁸ On the other hand, it has been held that a term in a sale and leaseback contract under which the tenant/consumer loses the right to the final part of the purchase price (constituting a third of the total figure) on termination of the lease by the landlord under the tenancy agreement (where this final part would otherwise have been payable on expiry of ten years or the giving up of the tenancy by the tenant) was not unfair within the meaning of the Regulations on the ground that the term did not create a significant imbalance in the rights and obligation of the parties to the detriment of the consumer and was not contrary to the requirement of good faith. ¹⁸⁸⁹ According to Longmore L.J., while it is possible to conceive of circumstances where such a term might create such an imbalance,

“especially if the original contract price was below the market price and the rental market (or perhaps the sale market) was buoyant at the time of the possession ... the matter has to be judged at the time when the contract is made and it would be equally possible to envisage a stagnant market in which the landlord would find it difficult to re-let the property or even re-sell it. In those circumstances the retention of what is less than one third of the price does not cause any imbalance let alone a significant one”. ¹⁸⁹⁰

And it has been held that a term in a loan agreement under which the lender was entitled to recover the legal and other costs of enforcing its terms and recovering the money did not cause any significant imbalance in the parties’ rights and obligations to the detriment of the consumer and was not unfair. ¹⁸⁹¹

Choice of law clauses

38-296A

⚠ In Verein für Konsumenteninformation v Amazon EU Sàrl the question arose as to the fairness under the 1993 Directive of a standard contract term in an online trader’s contracts which designated the law of Luxembourg (which was the place of the trader’s “seat”) as “applicable to the exclusion of the United Nations Convention on the international sale of goods”. ¹⁸⁹² ⚠ While arts 3(1) and 6(1) of the Rome I Regulation recognise that in principle the parties to a consumer contract may choose the law applicable to it, art.6(2) provides that, subject to certain conditions, any such choice of law does not “have the result of depriving the consumer of the protection afforded to him by provisions that cannot be derogated from by agreement” under the law of his habitual residence ¹⁸⁹³ ⚠ and this may include national law implementing the 1993 Directive even where they ensure a higher level of protection for the consumer than the Directive requires. ¹⁸⁹⁴ ⚠ In Amazon EU Sàrl, the Court of Justice of the EU noted the position governing choice of law clauses in consumer contracts under the Rome I Regulation, and that therefore:

“a pre-formulated term on the choice of the applicable law designating the law of the Member State in which the seller or supplier is established is unfair only in so far as it displays certain specific characteristics inherent in its wording or context which cause a significant imbalance in the rights and obligations of the parties.” ¹⁸⁹⁵

For this purpose, the Court noticed that the unfairness of a such a term may result from its failure to conform to the requirement of plain and intelligible language by the trader failing to inform the consumer that the effects of a term are affected by mandatory statutory provisions for the consumer's protection (as in the case of art.6(2) of the Rome I Regulation). ¹⁸⁹⁶  And if the national court finds that the trader has failed to do so and “so leads the consumer into error by giving him the impression that only the law of [the Member State chosen] applies to the contract”, then the choice of law clause would itself be an unfair term. ¹⁸⁹⁷

^{1766.} 1999 Regulations reg.5(5), Sch.2 para.1; 1993 Directive, Annex. For the role of the list of terms under the Consumer Rights Act 2015 see below, para.38-360.

^{1767.} Matei v SC Volksbank România SA (C-143/13) of February 26, 2015 para.60.

^{1768.} cf. the position under the Proposal for a Regulation on a Common European Sales Law COM(2011) 635 final, Annex I art.84 CESL (a list of “contract terms which are always unfair”) and art.85 CESL (a list of “contract terms which are presumed to be unfair”). On the proposal, see Vol.I, para.1-013.

^{1769.} Nemzeti Fogyasztóvédelmi Hatóság v Invitel Távközlési Zrt (C-472/10) April 26, 2012 para.26, and see below para.38-288; Sebestyén v Kovári (C-342/13) of April 3, 2014 at para.32.

^{1770.} 1999 Regulations Sch.2 Pt 2. The ECJ held that national legislation implementing the 1993 Directive need not itself include the list in the Directive's Annex. However: “Inasmuch as [it] is of indicative and illustrative value, it constitutes a source of information both for the national authorities responsible for applying the implementing measures and for individuals affected by those measures”, and so its “form and method of implementation [must] offer a sufficient guarantee that the public can obtain knowledge of it”. The Court held that the European Commission had failed to show that this requirement was not satisfied where (in Sweden) the Annex had been included in the travaux préparatoires of the implementing legislation and where these constitute an important aid to legislative interpretation: Commission v Sweden (C-478/99) [2002] E.C.R. I-0414.

^{1771.} Above, para.38-232.

^{1772.} s.13 and see above, Vol.I, para.15-069.

^{1773.} See above, Vol.I, paras 15-070, 15-084—15-086

^{1774.} Above, para.38-212.

^{1775.} Harrison v Shepherd Ltd [2011] EWHC 1811 (TCC) at [111]–[113]; affirmed on other grounds [2012] EWCA Civ 904.

^{1776.} OFT, Unfair Contract Terms Guidance OFT311 (2008), para.1.5. See also CMA, Consumer law compliance review: cloud storage, Findings report (May 27, 2016), paras 5.59–5.66 (on exclusions or limitations of liability in contract for the provision of “cloud computing” services), available at https://www.gov.uk/government/uploads/system/uploads/attachment_data/file/526447/cloud-storage-findings-report.pdf

- 1777. OFT, Unfair Contract Terms Guidance OFT311, Annex A, p.8.
- 1778. Domsalla v Dyason [2007] EWHC 1174 (TCC), at [94]–[97]. cf. West v Ian Finlay and Associates [2014] EWCA Civ 316, [2014] B.L.R. 324 (“net contribution clause” whose effect was to limit the liability of an architect to its own reasonable responsibility for the loss or damage suffered by its employer not unfair in the circumstances): see above, para.38-250.
- 1779. Unfair Contract Terms Guidance OFT311 (2008) para.2.5.3.
- 1780. Aziz v Caixa d’Estalvis de Catalunya, Tarragona i Manresa (C-415/11) of March 14, 2013.
- 1781. Implemented in UK law by the 1999 Regulations Sch.2 para.1(q).
- 1782. Aziz (C-415/11) at para.75.
- 1783. See above, para.38-275.
- 1784. On the timing of challenge to the validity of an arbitration clause on the grounds of its unfairness, see Mostaza Claro v Centro Móvil Milenium SL (C-168/05) [2006] E.C.R. I-10421; Asturcom Telecomunicaciones SL v Rodriguez Nogueira (C-40/08) [2009] E.C.R. I-9579 below, paras 38-304 and 38-306.
- 1785. The definition of “consumer contract” is somewhat wider for this purpose than for the purposes of the Regulations in general as it is provided that the consumer may be a legal person as well as a natural one: Arbitration Act 1996 s.90.
- 1786. Arbitration Act 1996 ss.89, 90; Unfair Arbitration Agreements (Specified Amount) Order 1999 (SI 1999/2167) which came into force on January 1, 2000. Under Directive 2013/11/EU on alternative dispute resolution for consumer disputes [2013] O.J. L165/63 (the “ADR Directive”) art.10 Member States must ensure that an agreement between a consumer and a trader to submit complaints to an ADR entity (as defined by art.4(1)(h)) is not binding on the consumer if it was concluded before the dispute has materialised and if it has the effect of depriving the consumer of his right to bring an action before the courts for the settlement of the dispute and that in ADR procedures which aim at resolving the dispute by imposing a solution the solution imposed may be binding on the parties only if they were informed of its binding nature in advance and specifically accepted this. This requirement is implemented in UK law by the Alternative Dispute Resolution for Consumer Disputes (Competent Authorities and Information) Regulations 2015 (SI 2015/542) reg.14B (as inserted by SI 2015/1392 reg.2(8)) (in force on July 9, 2015) and see further above, para.38-143.
- 1787. cf. Mostaza Claro v Centro Móvil Milenium SL (C-168/05) [2006] E.C.R. I-10421 where a Spanish court considered unfair an arbitration clause in a consumer mobile telephone contract which referred all disputes to arbitration and gave the consumer a period of 10 days in which to refuse arbitration or, if she did not, to file submissions and present evidence in her defence. While the ECJ reaffirmed that the question whether a term is unfair within the meaning of the Directive is for national courts (below, para.38-302), A.G. Tizziano noted (at paras [32]–[37] and [49] of his Opinion) that this clause “severely limited” the consumer’s fundamental right to a fair hearing.
- 1788. (2003) 19 Const. L.J. 350. See also Mylcrist Builders Ltd v Buck [2008] EWHC 2172 (TCC), [2009] 2 All E.R. (Comm) 259 at [54]–[60], the court taking into account, inter alia, the low level of the sums involved relative to the costs of arbitration, the clause’s lack of transparency as to its effect, and the lack of involvement of the consumer’s professional advisers in drafting the contract.
- 1789. [2002] EWHC 2923. This decision was strictly obiter given that the court held that the term was not incorporated into the contract at common law.
- 1790. [2001] UKHL 52, [2002] 1 A.C. 481, above, para.38-249.

- 1791. [2002] EWHC 2923 at [131]. The court also noted that the guidance of the RIBA whose standard form the architect had used, clearly required its members individually to negotiate such an adjudication clause.
- 1792. [2004] EWHC 138 (TCC) at [31]. See similarly Lovell Projects Ltd v Legg (TCC) [2003] B.L.R. 452. cf. Bryen & Langley Ltd v Boston [2005] EWCA Civ 973, [2005] All E.R. (D) 507 (Jul) (arbitration clause in JCT standard contract held binding where the consumer imposed it on the supplier); Heifer International Inc v Christiansen [2007] EWHC 3015 (TCC), [2008] All E.R. (D) 120 (Jan) (Danish arbitration clause fair as inserted by consumer's own lawyers: the Regulations were "not intended to protect clients from their own legal advisers": at [299], per H.H.J. Toulmin Q.C.); and see above, para.38-223.
- 1793. See similarly Khurana v Webster Construction Ltd [2015] EWHC 758 (TCC) at [53].
- 1794. [2012] EWCA Civ 409 and see also below, para.38-287.
- 1795. [2012] EWCA Civ 409 at [57], per Jackson L.J. (with whom Lloyd and Ward L.JJ. agreed).
- 1796. cf. the position as regards choice of law clauses discussed below, para.38-395A.
- 1797. Océano Grupo Editorial SA v Murciano Quintero (C-240/98 to C-244/98) [2000] E.C.R. I-4941, especially at [22] and see below, para.38-304.
- 1798. [2001] Lloyd's Rep. Bank 240.
- 1799. This was the main ground of the decision: Apostolakis (No.2) [2001] Lloyd's Rep. Bank 240 at [40]. The equivalent provision of art.13 of the Brussels Convention is now found in Regulation (EU) 1215/2012 of December 12, 2012 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters (recast) ("the Brussels Ibis Regulation") and see especially arts 17-19.
- 1800. [2001] Lloyd's Rep. Bank 240, 250. It had previously been held that these contracts were "consumer contracts" for the purposes of the 1999 Regulations: Standard Bank London Ltd v Apostolakis (No.1) [2000] I.L. Pr. 766 and see above, para.38-036.
- 1801.  [2015] EWHC 1549 (Ch) at [139]–[140].
- 1802. de Moor (1995) 3 European Review of Private Law 257, 269, at n.62 and cf. below, para.38-282. cf. Spreadex Ltd v Cochrane [2012] EWHC 1290 (Comm), [2012] Info. T.L.R. 1 at [14]–[16] where it was held that an agreement under which a consumer had access to an online interactive platform for the making of "spread bets" in commodities was not contractually binding for lack of consideration since on its terms the spread betting bookmaker made no commitment as to the provision of the online service, the holding of the consumer's account or the acceptance of any bet made.
- 1803. Thomas, Textbook of Roman Law (1976), p.237.
- 1804. For example, while such a term may lead to the annulment of a contract in French law (being termed a condition potestative, see art.1174 C. civ. and Nicholas, The French Law of Contract, 2nd edn (1991), pp.159 et seq.), it would not necessarily do so in German law (cf. German Standard Contract Terms Act 1976 para.10(3), replaced from 2000 by BGB para.308(3)).
- 1805. OFT, Unfair contract terms guidance (2008) OFT311 (above, n.1270) para.6.2.
- 1806.  See, however, the reformulation of the common law of penalty clauses in Cavendish Square Holding BV v Makdessi, ParkingEye Ltd v Beavis [2015] UKSC 67, [2015] 3 W.L.R. 1373, discussed above, para.26-197. The decision of the SC in ParkingEye Ltd in relation to the 1999 Regulations is noted below, para.38-281 and also above, para.38-251A.

- 1807. cf. Vol.I, paras 26-178 et seq. In Kindlance v Murphy Unreported December 12, 1997 NI Ch D an “interest acceleration clause” in a contract of mortgage was held unfair within the meaning of the 1994 Regulations. For an example of the upholding as fair of a clause requiring a consumer to pay a sum on his own termination of the contract, see Gosling v Burrard-Lucas [1999] 1 C.L. 197. For a further decision on allegedly penalty-like terms in financial services contracts see Evans v Cherry Tree Finance Ltd Unreported April 13, 2007 Ch D (early redemption clause with six-month deferment unfair in the circumstances).
- 1808. Munkenbeck & Marshall v Harold [2005] EWHC 356 (TCC), [2005] All E.R. (D) 227.
- 1809. [2005] EWHC 356 (TCC) at [12] and [15].
- 1810. [2011] EWHC 1237 (Ch), [2011] E.C.C. 32.
- 1811. [2011] EWHC 1237 (Ch) at [188]-[190] referring to Financings Ltd v Baldock [1963] 2 Q.B. 104.
- 1812. [2011] EWHC 1237 (Ch) at [207] referring to Lombard North Central Plc v Butterworth [1987] Q.B. 527.
- 1813.  Boyde v Clipper Ventures Plc 2013 S.C.L.R. 313; 2013 G.W.D. 12-243. The CJEU has held that where more than one term in a consumer contract requires the consumer to pay sums in compensation for failure to perform his obligation, the national court should assess the cumulative effect of all such terms in assessing their disproportionate effect, whether or not the trader actually insists on their enforcement: Radlinger v Finway a.s. (C-377/14) April 21, 2016 at paras 92-95.
- 1814. Aziz v Caixa d’Estalvis de Catalunya, Tarragona i Manresa (C-415/11) March 14, 2013.
- 1815. Aziz (C-415/11) at para.74. Where such a term is held unfair and not binding on the consumer, the court must not instead apply the national rules otherwise applicable: below, para.38-313A discussing Banco Bilbao Vizcaya Argentaria SA v Quintano Ujeta (C-602/13) Order of June 11, 2015.
- 1816. 1999 Regulations reg.5(5) (emphasis added); Sch.2 para.1(e).
- 1817.  [2015] UKSC 67, [2015] 3 W.L.R. 1373 on which see above, para.38-251A.
- 1818.  [2015] UKSC 67, [2015] 3 W.L.R. 1373 at [97] (concession by the car park’s managers).
- 1819.  See above, para.38-251A.
- 1820. See above, para.38-278.
- 1821. s.3(2)(b)(ii).
- 1822. Broadwater Manor School v Davis [1999] C.L.Y. 1801 Worthing County Court. See also OFT, Unfair contract terms guidance (2008) OFT311 above, n.1270, paras 6.1-6.2.
- 1823. See below, paras 40-161 et seq. as regards employment and the Partnership Act 1890 s.26(1) as regards partnerships.
- 1824. OFT, Unfair contract terms guidance (2008) OFT311 above, n.1270, para.7 and Annex I, p.71.
- 1825. 1999 Regulations Sch.2 para.2(a) states that: “Paragraph 1(g) is without hindrance to terms by which a supplier of financial services reserves the right to terminate unilaterally a contract of indeterminate duration without notice where there is a valid reason, provided that the supplier is required to inform the other contracting party or parties thereof immediately”. Para.2(c) provides that para.1(g) does not apply to: “[T]ransactions in transferable securities, financial instruments and other products or services where the price is linked to fluctuations in a stock exchange quotation or index or a financial market rate that the seller or supplier does not control; and contracts for the purchase or sale of foreign currency, traveller's cheques or international money orders denominated in foreign currency".

1826.

!OFT, Unfair Contract Terms, No.2 (September 1996), p.18 and see OFT, Unfair contract terms guidance (2008) OFT311, above, n.1270, para.8. See also CMA, Consumer law compliance review: cloud storage, Findings report (May 27, 2016), paras 5.50–5.58 (on terms which automatically renew fixed-term contract for the provision of "cloud computing" services), available at https://www.gov.uk/government/uploads/system/uploads/attachment_data/file/526447/cloud-storage-findings-report

1827.

See above, para.38-259.

1828.

See below, para.38-312.

1829.

See above, Vol.I, paras 13-008 et seq.

1830.

cf. the position under the Consumer Rights Act 2015, which provides that certain categories of information provided by the trader about goods or digital content are to be treated as included as a term of the relevant contract and that "any change to any of that information, made before entering into the contract or later, is not effective unless expressly agreed between the consumer and the trader" (2015 Act ss.11(4)–(5) and 12(2)–(3) (goods contracts); ss.36(3)–(4) and 37(2)–(3) (digital content contracts)) and which makes similar provision in respect of information provided by the trader in respect of a services contract (2015 Act s.50(2) and (3)). On these provisions see Vol.II, para. 38-100.

1831.

!The CMA has expressed concern as to the fairness of contract terms under which the provider of "cloud computer" services reserves to itself broad powers of unilateral variation of the terms of the contract or the characteristics of the services: see CMA, Consumer law compliance review: cloud storage, Findings report (May 27, 2016), paras 5.24–5.38, available at

https://www.gov.uk/government/uploads/system/uploads/attachment_data/file/526447/cloud-storage-findings-report

. In addition to the general controls on variation clauses put in place by the 1999 Regulations and discussed in the text, the Package Travel, Package Tours and Package Tours Regulations 1992 (SI 1992/3288) regs 12 and 13 make special provision for the variation of the package travel, etc. contracts to which they apply: see above, para.38-133.

1832.

[2008] EWHC 1432 (Ch), [2009] L. & T.R. 6.

1833.

[2008] EWHC 1432 (Ch) at [56]-[57], per Mr G. Moss Q.C.

1834.

OFT, Unfair contract terms guidance (2008) OFT311, above, n.1270), paras 10.1-10.2.

1835.

OFT, Unfair contract terms guidance (2008) OFT311, above, n.1270), para.10.3

1836.

1999 Regulations Sch.2 Pt 2 states that: "(b) Paragraph 1(j) is without hindrance to terms under which a supplier of financial services reserves the right to alter the rate of interest payable by the consumer or due to the latter, or the amount of other charges for financial services without notice where there is a valid reason, provided that the supplier is required to inform the other contracting party or parties thereof at the earliest opportunity and that the latter are free to dissolve the contract immediately; ... (c) Paragraphs 1(g), (j) and (l) do not apply to: transactions in transferable securities, financial instruments and other products or services where the price is linked to fluctuations in a stock exchange quotation or index or a financial market rate that the seller or supplier does not control; contracts for the purchase or sale of foreign currency, traveller's cheques or international money orders denominated in foreign currency; (d) Paragraph 1(l) is without hindrance to price indexation clauses, where lawful, provided that the method by which prices vary is explicitly described". For an example of guidance on the application of the Directive to a price indexation clause see Engilbertsson v Íslandsbanki hf (E-25/13) of August 28, 2014 (EFTA Court) at paras 97-98, 141-146 (emphasising the importance of the clarity and quality of information provided to the consumer about such a clause).

1837. [2012] EWCA Civ 409 (April 2, 2012).

1838. [2012] EWCA Civ 409 at [37]-[42] and cf. below, paras 38-317—38-321.

1839. i.e. 1999 Regulations Sch.2 paras 1(i), (j), (k) and (l).

1840. [2012] EWCA Civ 409 at [51], per Jackson L.J. (with whom Lloyd and Ward L.JJ. agreed). See further the comment, below, para.38-288.

1841. Nemzeti Fogyasztóvédelmi Hatóság v Invitel Távközlési Zrt (C-472/10) of April 26, 2012 (“Invitel (C-472/10)”).

1842. Invitel (C-472/10) at para.17.

1843. Invitel (C-472/10) at para.26.

1844. Invitel (C-472/10) at para.27.

1845. Invitel (C-472/10) at para.28.

1846. Above, para.38-214.

1847. Invitel (C-472/10) at para.28. See also Engilbertsson v Íslandsbanki hf (E-25/13) of August 28, 2014 at paras 77, 142-143 and above, para.38-215A.

1848. In Du Plessis [2012] EWCA Civ 409 (April 2, 2012), above, para.38-287, the relevant term allowed the trader to vary the fee payable on various grounds according to a prescribed process; in Invitel (C-472/10), the relevant term allowed the trader to impose a fee in respect of payments made by money order without specifying the method of calculation of the fee or its amount.

1849. [2012] EWCA Civ 409 (April 2, 2012), above, para.38-287.

1850. Invitel (C-472/10).

1851. [2012] EWCA Civ 409 at [47]-[52], above, para.38-287.

1852. Invitel (C-472/10) para.28 (emphasis added).

1853. RWE Vertrieb AG v Verbraucherzentrale Nordrhein-Westfalen eV (C-92/11), March 21, 2013.

1854. Invitel (C-472/10), above, para.38-288.

1855. For the CJEU's decision on the possible application of art.1(2) of the 1993 Directive to the term in question, see above, para.38-215.

1856. RWE Vertrieb AG (C-92/11) at para.44. This importance was emphasised as regards the particular category of contract by the legislative duties with respect to transparency regarding contract terms and conditions imposed on the suppliers of gas by Directive 2003/55 of June 26, 2003 concerning common rules for the internal market in natural gas and repealing Directive 98/30/EC [2003] O.J. L176/57 art.3(3). The CJEU referred to the “requirements of good faith, balance and transparency” laid down by the 1993 and 2003 directives: RWE Vertrieb AG (C-92/11) at para.47.

1857. RWE Vertrieb AG (C-92/11) at paras 48–49, citing Invitel (C-472/10) at paras 24, 26 and 28.

- 1858. RWE Vertrieb AG (C-92/11) at para.40 referring to the 1993 Directive, Annex, point 1(j), point 2(b) and also Directive 98/30/EC (above, n.1747) art.3(3), Annex A, points (a) and (b).
- 1859. RWE Vertrieb AG (C-92/11) at para.51.
- 1860. RWE Vertrieb AG (C-92/11) at para.53.
- 1861. RWE Vertrieb AG (C-92/11) at para.43.
- 1862. OFT, Unfair contract terms guidance (2008) OFT311, above, n.1270, paras 13.2–13.3.
- 1863. OFT, Unfair contract terms guidance (2008) OFT311, above, n.1270, para.14.
- 1864. See Vol.I, para.13-107 in relation to the “parol evidence rule”.
- 1865. OFT, Unfair contract terms guidance (2008) OFT311, above, n.1270, para.14.1.1.
- 1866. OFT, Unfair contract terms guidance (2008) OFT311, above, n.1270, Annex I, p.96 which notes the substitute term which was considered fair, which allowed the company to state, inter alia, that it “intends to rely upon the written terms set out here and on the other side of this document. If you require any changes, please make sure you ask for these to be put in writing”.
- 1867. OFT, Unfair contract terms guidance (2008) OFT311 (above, n.1270), para.14.1.2. Such a clause attempts to denude the agents of their apparent or ostensible authority: cf. above, paras 31-057 et seq.
- 1868. Office of Fair Trading v MB Designs (Scotland) Ltd [2005] S.L.T. 691 at [46], per Lord Drummond Young (OH of the Ct of Sess, in the context of granting an interim order under Pt 8 of the Enterprise Act 2002, on which see para.38-330).
- 1869. [2010] EWHC 1484 (Ch) at [64]. See similarly Harrison v Shepherd Ltd [2011] EWHC 1811 (TCC) at [118]–[120]; affirmed on other grounds [2012] EWCA Civ 904.
- 1870. OFT, Unfair Contract Terms, Bulletin No.3 (March 1997), p.77 and see generally OFT, Unfair contract terms guidance (2008) OFT311 (above, n.1270), para.15.
- 1871.  OFT, Unfair Contracts Terms, Bulletin No.3, p.77. cf. CMA, Consumer law compliance review: cloud storage, Findings report (May 27, 2016), paras 5.39–5.49 available at https://www.gov.uk/government/uploads/system/uploads/attachment_data/file/526447/cloud-storage-findingsreport (terms allowing the trader to suspend or terminate the service in the context of cloud computing).
- 1872. OFT, Unfair contract terms guidance (2008) OFT311 (above, n.1270), para.16.1.
- 1873. OFT, Unfair contract terms guidance (2008) OFT311 (above, n.1270), para.16.2.
- 1874. See above, paras 38-242—38-248.
- 1875. OFT, Unfair contract terms guidance (2008) OFT311 (above, n.1270) para.18.4.2.
- 1876. OFT, Unfair contract terms guidance (2008) OFT311 (above, n.1270), para.18.4.3.
- 1877. OFT, Unfair Contract Terms, Bulletin (July 1999), para.1.8.
- 1878. Above, para.38-203, n.1270.
- 1879. OFT, Unfair contract terms guidance (2008) OFT311 para.18.
- 1880. OFT, Unfair contract terms guidance (2008) OFT311 para.18.1.2.

- 1881. OFT, Unfair Contract Terms, Bulletin No.3 (March 1997), p.24.
- 1882. OFT, Unfair Contract Terms, Bulletin No.3, p.28.
- 1883. OFT, Unfair contract terms guidance (2008) OFT311 para.18.3.3.
- 1884. See Vol.I, paras 13-019 et seq. and see Whittaker, Contract Terms (2007), 255, 262–63.
- 1885. This example depends on the wider interpretation being given to “consumer contract” as explained above, para.38-207. (Such a term would not come within Sch.2 para.1(b) of the 1999 Regulations as it would not relate to a right in respect of the other party’s inadequate performance.)
- 1886. OFT, Unfair contract terms guidance (2008) OFT311 Annex I, p.122.
- 1887. Munkenbeck & Marshall v Harold [2005] EWHC 356 (TCC), [2005] All E.R. (D) 227 at [12]–[15].
- 1888. The Office of Fair Trading v Foxtons Ltd [2009] EWHC 1681 (Ch), [2009] 29 E.G. 98 (C.S.) at [91]–[95], [101], [103]–[106]. The decision on unfairness of the renewal commission clauses was taken after the court had held that they did not fall within the exclusion of reg.6(2) on the ground that they were not “plain and intelligible” (at [70], [74]), even if they formed part of the “core bargain”.
- 1889. UK Housing Alliance (North West) Ltd v Francis [2010] EWCA Civ 117, [2010] Bus. L.R. 1034, especially at [27]–[29]. cf. Solitaire Property Management Co Ltd v Holden [2012] UKUT 86 (LC) at [34] (term under which landlord holds funds supplied by tenant in case of “temporary deficiency” in moneys available to meet service charge expenses found fair).
- 1890. [2010] EWCA Civ 117 at [27].
- 1891. Shaw v Nine Regions Ltd [2009] EWHC 3553 (QB).
- 1892.  C-191/15, July 28, 2016 (“Amazon EU Srl (C-191/15)”).
- 1893.  Regulation (EC) 593/2008 on the law applicable to contractual obligations (“Rome I”) [2008] O.J. L177/6.
- 1894.  Amazon EU Srl (C-191/15) at para.59 (noting art.8 of the Directive).
- 1895.  Amazon EU Srl (C-191/15) at para.67.
- 1896.  Amazon EU Srl (C-191/15) at paras 68-70.
- 1897.  Amazon EU Srl (C-191/15) at para.71.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 6. - The Control of Unfair Contract Terms

(c) - The Old Law: the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999

(iii) - The Requirement of Fairness

(ee) - The Timeframe for Assessment of the Fairness of a Term

General

38-297

While it was common ground in the First National Bank case that:

“... fairness must be judged as at the date the contract is made, although account may properly be taken of the likely effect of any term that is then agreed and said to be unfair ...” 1898

on examination the issue of the relevant time for the assessment of fairness is not without difficulty and a distinction needs to be drawn between the assessment of a term as between the parties to a consumer contract (termed an “assessment in concreto” by the European Court) and assessment of a term in the context of preventive measures (termed an “assessment in abstracto” by the European Court). 1899

Assessment as between the parties: the timeframe

38-298

As between the parties to a consumer contract, the court assesses the fairness of the terms included in the contract before it and, as earlier explained, the basic test of unfairness focuses on the (purported) effect of the term on the relative rights and obligations of the parties to the contract. 1900 In doing so, the assessment is “concrete” in the sense that it can take into account the particular circumstances of the making of the individual contract: were any terms not easily comprehensible actually explained to the consumer? Did the business bring any pressure to bear on the consumer? More broadly, did the business “deal fairly and equitably with the other party”? 1901 The facts relevant to these questions would typically precede the point at which the contract itself is concluded. In this respect, it is perhaps surprising that reg.6(1) of the 1999 Regulations provides that:

“... the unfairness of a contractual term shall be assessed taking into account the nature of the goods or services for which the contract was concluded and by referring, at the time of conclusion of the contract, to all the circumstances attending the conclusion of the contract,” following here exactly the wording of the Directive. 1902 It is submitted, however, that the purpose of setting “the time of conclusion of the contract” as the relevant point of reference is not to exclude prior circumstances but rather to exclude circumstances which occur after the conclusion of the contract: in principle the Directive is concerned with the fairness of contract terms not with the fairness of the behaviour of business parties in the course of performance or non-performance of the contract. ¹⁹⁰³ On the other hand, the test of unfairness does have a forward-looking aspect, for, as earlier explained, a contract term must be assessed according to its potential for unfairness, that is, whether it permits the business party to the contract to act in a way which would be unfair to the consumer. ¹⁹⁰⁴

Assessment as between the parties: “the conclusion of the contract”

38-299

Given what has just been said, the question arises of when a contract is to be held concluded for this purpose. As was noted by the High Court in OFT v Abbey National Plc, ¹⁹⁰⁵ the meaning or application of the expression “the conclusion of the contract” may give rise to particular difficulty where “new” terms are introduced into the relationship between parties to a contract concluded earlier. It is submitted that the Court of Justice of the EU could wish to take an autonomous view of this issue and could for this purpose draw on European contract law instruments, such as the Principles of European Contract Law. ¹⁹⁰⁶ However, it may instead consider that this issue should fall to be determined by national contract laws, taking a lead from the provision with this effect in the Consumer Rights Directive 2011. ¹⁹⁰⁷

Assessment in preventive proceedings: the timeframe

38-300

However, the timeframe for the assessment of terms in proceedings brought by the CMA or by “qualifying bodies” under the 1999 Regulations may well differ. ¹⁹⁰⁸ For the purpose of preventive measures taken under reg.12 of the 1999 Regulations, the 1993 Directive provides that:

“Member States shall ensure that, in the interests of consumers and of competitors, adequate and effective means exist to prevent the continued use of unfair terms in contracts concluded with consumers by sellers or suppliers.” ¹⁹⁰⁹

It adds that this shall include action before courts or administrative bodies:

“... for a decision as to whether contractual terms drawn up for general use are unfair, so that they can apply appropriate and effective means to prevent the continued use of such terms” ¹⁹¹⁰ and it makes clear that action can be taken against trade associations to the same end. The European Court described the assessment of contract terms in this way as “in abstracto” ¹⁹¹¹ and this refers to the characteristic of these proceedings that they do not concern the terms of an individual contract, but rather the terms applicable to contracts of a particular type or types made by a particular business, several businesses or merely recommended for use by a trade association. This “abstract” character means that individual circumstances of the conclusion of a contract cannot be taken into account by a court in its assessment of fairness as they will differ from case to case. On the other hand, a court should take into account the general and likely circumstances surrounding the making of contracts in the area concerned and this suggests that the timeframe for the assessment of the terms of contracts in preventive proceedings is a present and future one, the court looking at the fairness of the terms of the contract (under the basic test) as at the date of the proceedings taking into account the likely future circumstances of the actual conclusion of contracts under the terms in question. ¹⁹¹²

“Continued use”

38-301

What is meant by “continued use” for the purposes of the preventive measures under the Regulations: does this refer to the continued use of terms in contracts already concluded between consumers and businesses or only to the continued use of terms for the making of future contracts? It may be thought that the wording of art.7 of the Directive (on which these preventive measures rest) suggests the latter, as does the way in which the European Court has described these measures (although in a case not addressed to this issue).¹⁹¹³ However, in The Office of Fair Trading v Foxtons Ltd the Court of Appeal held that the preventive measures foreseen by art.7 of the 1993 Directive were intended to cover existing as well as future contracts, so that an injunction could be granted under reg.12 of the 1999 Regulations so as to prevent a business from relying on a term found unfair for their purposes in contracts already existing between that business and consumers.¹⁹¹⁴

^{1898.} Director General of Fair Trading Plc v First National Bank Plc [2001] UKHL 52, [2002] 1 A.C. 481 at [13], per Lord Bingham, quoted by Andrew Smith J in OFT v Abbey National Plc (Bank Charges) [2008] EWHC 875 (Comm), [2008] 2 All E.R. (Comm) 625 at [442]. See similarly [2009] EWCA Civ 116, [2009] 2 W.L.R. 1286 at [106] (though the CA’s decision was reversed on other grounds [2009] UKSC 6, [2010] 1 A.C. 696, above, paras 38-226—38-227). Lord Bingham’s proviso accords with the relevance of a term’s potential for unfair results in determining its unfair nature: above, para.38-255.

^{1899.} Commission v Spain (C-70/03) [2004] E.C.R. I-0799 at para.16.

^{1900.} Above, para.38-243.

^{1901.} Above, paras 38-243 et seq.

^{1902.} 1993 Directive art.4(1) (emphasis added).

^{1903.} cf. Directive 2005/29 concerning unfair business-to-consumer commercial practices in the internal market [2005] O.J. L149/22 which “applies to unfair business-to-consumer commercial practices, before, during or after a commercial transaction relating to goods or service”: see above, para.38-154 and Pereni#ovà v SOS finance, spol. sro (C-453/10) para.39, above, para.38-252.

^{1904.} Above, para.38-255.

^{1905.} OFT v Abbey National Plc (Bank Charges) [2008] EWHC 875 (Comm) at [442]. While upheld by the Court of Appeal, the latter’s decision was reversed by the SC on other grounds: [2009] UKSC 6, [2010] 1 A.C. 696, above, paras 38-226—38-227.

^{1906.} Lando and Beale, Principles of European Contract Law Pts I and II (1999), Lando, Clive, Prüm and Zimmermann, Principles of European Contract Law Pt III (2003) arts 2:101–2:211; Principles, Definitions and Model Rules of European Private Law, Draft Common Frame of Reference (DCFR) prepared by the Study Group for a European Civil Code and the Research Group on EC Private Law (Acquis Group) (OUP, 2010, 6 vols), Vol.I, arts II.-4:101–II.-4:211.

^{1907.} art.3(5), above, para.38-059.

^{1908.} 1999 Regulations regs 10–13, below, paras 38-323 et seq. The timeframe in respect of the assessment of the fairness or the “plain, intelligible” character of terms in the context of proceedings by “enforcers” under the Enterprise Act 2002 appears to be clear as these proceedings are aimed at orders against persons to stop breaking legislation enacted for consumers where it harms their collective interest: see below, para.38-330.

- 1909. 1993 Directive art.7(1).
- 1910. 1993 Directive art.7(2).
- 1911. Commission v Spain (C-70/03) [2004] E.C.R. I-0799 at para.16.
- 1912. And see below, para.38-326.
- 1913. Commission v Spain (C-70/03) [2004] E.C.R. I-0799 at para.16 (referring to the task of courts under art.7 “to assess in abstracto the unfair character of a term which may be incorporated into contracts which have not yet been concluded”).
- 1914. [2009] EWCA Civ 288, [2010] 1 W.L.R. 663 and see below, para.38-327.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 6. - The Control of Unfair Contract Terms

(c) - The Old Law: the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999

(iii) - The Requirement of Fairness

(ff) - The Relative Roles of the Court of Justice of the EU, National Courts and the Parties

The relative roles of the Court of Justice of the EU and national courts in relation to the issue of fairness

38-302

In Océano Grupo Editorial SA v Murciano Quintero the European Court itself ruled that a domestic jurisdiction clause in a consumer contract was unfair within the meaning of the 1993 Directive with the result that the Spanish court applying for a preliminary ruling and seized of a claim by the business against the consumer was entitled to deny jurisdiction on the ground of the unfairness of this term.¹⁹¹⁵ However, when in *Freiburger Kommunalbauten GmbH Baugesellschaft & Co KG v Hofstetter*¹⁹¹⁶ the Court of Justice was asked directly by a national court to decide whether a clause in the consumer contract before it was unfair within the meaning of the 1993 Directive, it refused to do so, noting that:

“... in referring to concepts of good faith and significant imbalance between the rights and obligations of the parties, Art.3 of the [1993] Directive merely defines in a general way the factors that render unfair a contractual term that has not been individually negotiated.”¹⁹¹⁷

Given the range of factors which the Directive requires to be taken into account in assessing the fairness of a contract term:

“... the consequences of the term under the law applicable to the contract must also be taken into account. This requires that consideration be given to the national law.”¹⁹¹⁸

So, while the Court of Justice:

“... may interpret general criteria used by the Community legislation in order to define the concept of unfair terms ... it should not rule on the application of these general criteria to a particular term, which must be considered in the light of the particular circumstances of the case in question.”¹⁹¹⁹

As a result, following the general principle that it is for national courts to apply EU law to the facts before them,¹⁹²⁰ it is generally for a national court to decide whether a contract term satisfies the requirements for it to be regarded as unfair within the meaning of art.3(1) of the Directive.¹⁹²¹ This starting point has been reaffirmed by the Court of Justice in subsequent cases, but, starting with Invitel,¹⁹²² the Court has proved very willing to give guidance to the national court of referral as to the

“indications which [that court] may or must apply when examining a contractual term” under the test of fairness in the Directive ¹⁹²³ and, in doing so, has sometimes drawn factors from the illustrative list of terms which may be unfair in the Annex to the Directive. ¹⁹²⁴ The Court of Justice has also explained the significance of the reference to good faith. ¹⁹²⁵

Judicial discretion and domestic appeals

38-303

❗ In the context of the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977, it has been said that while a decision on the reasonableness of a contract term is not merely an exercise of judicial discretion (and so in practice all but immune to appeal) ¹⁹²⁶ there “will sometimes be room for a legitimate difference of judicial opinion”, ¹⁹²⁷ this indicating a judicial desire to discourage appeals on the issue of reasonableness. ¹⁹²⁸

❗ While the test of unfairness for the purposes of the Regulations has a number of features in common with the test of reasonableness under the 1977 Act, ¹⁹²⁹ the composite character of the former requires courts to take into account a number of elements, each of which may require “interpretation” and not merely application. And English appellate courts have not appeared unwilling to reverse first instance decisions on the fairness of a term where they disagreed with their application of the test. ¹⁹³⁰

The power and duty of national courts to intervene of their own initiative

38-304

❗ In Océano Grupo Editorial SA v Murciano Quintero, ¹⁹³¹ which concerned proceedings brought by suppliers against consumers, the European Court of Justice held that, at least where a term in a consumer contract was clearly unfair within the meaning of the Directive, the national court is entitled to raise the issue of fairness of its own initiative, this being necessary to ensure that the consumer enjoys effective protection in view of the real risk that he is unaware of his rights or encounters difficulties in enforcing them. ¹⁹³² In the particular circumstances of the case, the term in question was a choice of local jurisdiction within Spain which chose the court of the place of establishment of the seller or supplier: here, the Spanish court was entitled to refuse jurisdiction on the basis that the clause was unfair within the meaning of the Directive. While in Océano Grupo Editorial SA ¹⁹³³ the Court of Justice was careful to express its view in terms of a power in national courts to intervene of their own initiative, ¹⁹³⁴ in Mostaza Claro v Centro Móvil Milenium SL ¹⁹³⁵ the Court of Justice went further, holding that national courts have a duty to intervene of their own initiative in order to ensure that the protection promised by the Directive is effectively ensured for consumers. In that case, the Court ruled that a national court faced with a claim by a consumer for annulment of an arbitral award against her must annul the award if it considers that the arbitration clause on the basis of which the arbitration took place was invalid as an unfair term in a consumer contract within the meaning of the Directive, even though the consumer had not raised the issue of invalidity in the course of the arbitral proceedings and would normally be prevented from raising the issue by a subsequent action for annulment of the award as a matter of national procedural law. According to the Court:

“The nature and importance of the public interest underlying the protection which the Directive confers on consumers justify ... the national court being required to assess of its own motion whether a contractual term is unfair, compensating in this way for the imbalance which exists between the consumer and the seller or supplier.” ¹⁹³⁶

In Pannon GSM Zrt v Erzsébet Sustikné Györfi ¹⁹³⁷ the Court of Justice confirmed that a national court bears an obligation to examine of its own motion the issue of the possible fairness of a contract term within the meaning of the Directive, but it restricted this obligation to the situation “where it has available to it the legal and factual elements necessary for that task”. ¹⁹³⁸ ❗ This qualification, whose language echoes the formulation used by the Court in Freiburger Kommunalbauten ¹⁹³⁹ to describe the role of national courts in assessing the fairness of terms under art.3 of the Directive, recognises that in some situations a national court will not be in a position to come to a view as to the fairness of a term in the circumstances, possibly in part owing to the absence of consumer's own representations or evidence adduced for this purpose. Moreover, the Court of Justice added that:

"In carrying out that obligation, the national court is not ... required under the Directive to exclude the possibility that the term in question may be applicable, if the consumer, after having been informed of it by that court, does not intend to assert its unfair or non-binding status." ¹⁹⁴⁰

So, a national court's obligation to assess the fairness of a contract term does not mean that it should refuse to apply the term where the consumer itself wishes it, a position which fits entirely with art.6(1)'s provision that an unfair term will "not be binding on the consumer". ¹⁹⁴¹ Indeed, where a national court, having raised the issue of its own motion, considers that a term in a consumer contract in proceedings before it is unfair within the meaning of the Directive, it must as a general rule inform the parties to the dispute of that fact and invite them to set out their views on the matter by way of application of the principle of audi alteram partem found in art.47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union. ¹⁹⁴²

"National procedural autonomy" and its limits

38-305

In VB Pénzügyi Lizing Zrt v Schneider the Court of Justice of the EU was asked whether a national court's duty to address the fairness of a term in a consumer contract meant that it is obliged to undertake, of its own motion, an examination with a view to establishing the factual and legal elements necessary for this purpose. ¹⁹⁴³ In the view of A.G. Trstenjak, EU law does not require:

"the national court to undertake an investigation of its own motion for the purpose of obtaining the legal and factual elements necessary to assess the unfairness of a contractual term where it does not have such elements available to it. The powers of the national court are determined rather by national procedural law ... [I]n the laws of the Member States, civil law is characterised by the principle that it is for the parties to take the initiative, under which the parties are responsible for submitting all relevant facts on which the court must then base its decision." ¹⁹⁴⁴

The Court of Justice acknowledged its earlier case-law under which the guarantee of protection intended by the Directive may require positive action by the court unconnected with the actual parties to the contract, but it then identified a two-stage process. So:

"In the exercise of the functions incumbent upon it under the provisions of the Directive, the national court must ascertain whether a contractual term which is the subject of the dispute before it falls within the scope of that Directive. If it does, that court must assess that term, if necessary, of its own motion, in the light of the requirements of consumer protection laid down by that Directive." ¹⁹⁴⁵

Given that the Directive:

"applies to any term conferring exclusive territorial jurisdiction which was not individually negotiated appearing in a contract concluded between a seller or supplier and a consumer"

Then:

“the national court must ... in all cases and whatever the rules of its domestic law, determine whether or not the contested term was individually negotiated.” ¹⁹⁴⁶

For this purpose, the force of the burden of proof as to individual negotiation being on the business would appear to mean that a national court would be entitled to assume that a term was not individually negotiated unless the business established otherwise. ¹⁹⁴⁷ The Court of Justice continued that:

“As regards the second stage of that examination, it must be found that the contractual term which is the subject of the dispute in the main proceedings provides, as the referring court states, for the exclusive territorial jurisdiction of a court which is not the court in whose jurisdiction the defendant lives or the one with jurisdiction for the place where the applicant has its registered office but the one which is situated close to the registered office of the appellant both geographically and in terms of transport links.” ¹⁹⁴⁸

Since it had determined in Océano Grupo Editorial that a national jurisdiction clause “must be regarded as unfair within the meaning of the Article 3 of the Directive”, ¹⁹⁴⁹ the Court of Justice did not consider it necessary to address the wider implications of the question addressed to it and, in particular, whether a national court has a power or a duty to examine facts not available to it on the face of the documents put before it by the business. ¹⁹⁵⁰

38-306

⚠ Behind this case-law of the Court of Justice is an implicit recognition of the principle that national courts “know the law” (this principle being known widely under the Latin tag “iura novit curia”) and specifically that they therefore are on notice as to the ambit of the protection required by the Directive so as to enable them—and indeed to require them—to intervene of their own initiative. ¹⁹⁵¹ On the other hand, the laws of civil procedure differ very considerably between Member States in terms of the relative roles of the courts and the parties to litigation in the identification of the facts on the basis of which they claim and their characterisation in legal terms, and this realisation forms one reason for the Court’s acceptance of the “principle of the procedural autonomy of the Member States”. ¹⁹⁵² However, while this principle provides the starting point for the Court of Justice, it then subjects national rules in question to the double test of the principle of effectiveness and the principle of equivalence. ¹⁹⁵³ So, for example, in Asturcom Telecomunicaciones SL v Rodriguez Nogueira ¹⁹⁵⁴

⚠ the Court of Justice of the EU considered whether a national court seized with a claim to enforce an arbitral award against a consumer where the arbitrators acted under an arbitration clause in a consumer contract can and/or must consider the unfairness of that arbitration clause within the meaning of the 1993 Directive, even where the consumer was neither present in the arbitration proceedings nor applied to the appropriate court for the annulment of the arbitrators’ decision (as she was entitled under the applicable national law). The Court of Justice took as its starting point “the principle of res judicata”:

“[i]n the absence of Community legislation in this area, the rules implementing the principle of res judicata are a matter for the national legal order, in accordance with the principle of the procedural autonomy of the Member States. However, those rules must not be less favourable than those governing similar domestic actions (principle of equivalence); nor may they be framed in such a way as to make it in practice impossible or excessively difficult to exercise the rights conferred by Community law (principle of effectiveness).” ¹⁹⁵⁵

Applying this to the particular circumstance,

“... the need to comply with the principle of effectiveness cannot be stretched so far as to mean that, in circumstances such as those in the main proceedings, a national court is required not only to compensate for a procedural omission on the part of a consumer who is unaware of his rights, as in the case which gave rise to the judgment in Mostaza Claro,¹⁹⁵⁶ but also to make up fully for the total inertia on the part of the consumer concerned who, like the defendant in the main proceedings, neither participated in the main proceeding nor brought an action for annulment of the arbitration award, which therefore became final.”¹⁹⁵⁷

As regards the principle of equivalence, the Court of Justice held that:

“... the conditions imposed by domestic law under which the courts and tribunals may apply a rule of Community law of their own motion must not be less favourable than those governing the application by those bodies of their own motion of rules of domestic law of the same ranking.”¹⁹⁵⁸

Given that art.6(1) of the 1993 Directive (which holds unfair terms “not binding on the consumer”) is a mandatory rule, where a national court seized with an action for enforcement of a final arbitral award would, under domestic rules of procedure, assess of its own motion whether an arbitration clause was in conflict with domestic rules of this character, then it would be obliged to do so for the purposes of the 1993 Directive, as long as it has available the legal and factual elements necessary for this task.¹⁹⁵⁹ In this way, the Court of Justice sought to balance the policy of protection of the consumer pursued by the 1993 Directive and the policy of promoting the finality of decision-making (even of private arbitral decisions), and, at a more general level, to balance the demands of EU legal principle (or principles) and the so-called principle of the “autonomy” (and therefore integrity of approach) of national procedural laws. By doing so, in this context to an extent the Court has drawn back from its apparently greater willingness to intervene in (and override) national approaches to the relative roles of national courts and the parties to civil litigation previously revealed in *Océano Grupo Editoriale*¹⁹⁶⁰ and Mostaza Claro.¹⁹⁶¹ On the other hand, very recently in Faber in the context of the Consumer Sales Directive 1999, the Court of Justice has shown a greater willingness to use the principle of effectiveness to override national procedural law, notably so as to require a national court to request parties to clarify the facts which they put forward so as to enable it to determine whether or not national law implementing EU consumer protection legislation is applicable.¹⁹⁶² !

Collective actions and stays of proceedings

38-306A

! Under the Civil Procedure Rules, the courts possess a power to stay the whole or part of any proceedings or judgment either generally or until a specified date or event.¹⁹⁶³ ! This power was used to stay the many thousands of proceedings relating to “bank charges” which had been brought by consumers against their banks until the general legal issues relating to the contract terms on the basis of which these charges were imposed were resolved by the courts in proceedings between the OFT against eight major banks for a declaration as to the ambit of the “core exclusion” allowed by art.4(2) of the 1993 Directive.¹⁹⁶⁴ ! However, in *Sales Sinués and Drame Ba*¹⁹⁶⁵ ! the Court of Justice of the EU considered the lawfulness of the staying of individual actions brought by consumers pending the outcome of “collective proceedings” on a preliminary reference from a Spanish court. There, individual proceedings had been brought by consumers for the annulment of a particular category of allegedly unfair terms (“interest rate floor clauses”) in their contracts of consumer credit with banks, and the latter had asked the courts seized of these proceedings to stay them under a national provision allowing the staying of proceedings with the same subject-matter pending the outcome of “collective proceedings” brought by a consumers’ association under art.7 of the 1993

Directive. Under Spanish law, the individual consumers could join the collective proceedings, but only subject to various constraints not imposed in respect of the individual proceedings. The Court of Justice explained the different purposes and legal effects of individual actions by consumers and collective actions under art.7, and that the principle of procedural autonomy allows national laws to establish the rules applicable to those collective actions subject to the principles of equivalence and effectiveness. ¹⁹⁶⁶  As regards the latter, the Court held that it was clear from the national court's reference that the provision of national law under which the consumers' individual actions may be stayed would lead to the consumer no longer being able individually to assert the rights which the 1993 Directive recognises other than by joining the collective proceedings. ¹⁹⁶⁷  This “is liable to undermine the effectiveness of the protection intended by that directive, in view of the differences in the purpose and nature of the consumer-protection mechanisms given specific expression by those actions.” ¹⁹⁶⁸

For if the consumer joins the collective proceedings, national civil procedure rules would prevent the court hearing them from considering the circumstances relating to the individual consumer contract, the individual consumer would be dependent on the period set for the collective proceedings without consideration of his particular circumstances and he or she would be subject to further procedural constraints: these rules therefore do not constitute an adequate or effective means of bringing the continued use of unfair terms to an end contrary to art.7 ¹⁹⁶⁹ ; and as regards the consumer's individual proceedings that would be stayed,

“the need to ensure consistency between judicial decisions cannot justify such a lack of effectiveness since ... the difference in nature between judicial control exercised in the context of a collective action and that exercised in the context of an individual action should, in principle, prevent the risk of incompatible judicial decisions.” ¹⁹⁷⁰

Moreover, the “need to avoid overburdening the courts” cannot justify the effective exercise of a consumer's own individual (“subjective”) rights. ¹⁹⁷¹  While the decision in Sales Sinués and Drame Ba has no direct application in the English context, it does emphasise that any power under the English Civil Procedure Rules to stay consumers' individual proceedings must not be exercised in a way which undermines the practical exercise of their own individual rights under the UK legislation implementing the 1993 Directive.

The burden of proof as to fairness

38-307

In English law, the decision of an issue such as the reasonableness of a contract term is a matter requiring the allocation of a burden of proof. ¹⁹⁷² So, s.11(5) of the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 provides that “[i]t is for those claiming that a contract term or notice satisfies the requirement of reasonableness to show that it does”. This provision reverses the normal burden of proof in civil cases at common law according to which burdens of proof rest on a person claiming something to establish it. ¹⁹⁷³ By contrast with the 1977 Act, neither the 1999 Regulations nor the 1993 Directive provide a rule for the burden of proof as to the issue of the fairness of a term, ¹⁹⁷⁴ in contrast to the position as to the “individual negotiation” of a term where the burden is placed on the seller or supplier to show that a term is individually negotiated. ¹⁹⁷⁵ In theory, there are three possible approaches which the Court of Justice of the EU could take if the question as to the proper burden of proof as to the fairness of a term were to be submitted to its decision: (i) that the issue of burden of proof as to fairness is a matter for national law; (ii) that an autonomous European view must be taken as to the issue of burden of proof; and (iii) that the assessment of the fairness of a contract term for the purposes of the 1993 Directive is not itself a matter for the imposition of any burden of proof.

A national or an autonomous rule of burden of proof?

38-308

It is submitted that the case-law of the Court of Justice already noted which holds that it is the duty of national courts to address the question of the fairness of a term in a consumer contract of their own initiative ¹⁹⁷⁶ is incompatible with a simple imposition of the burden of proof on consumers as to the issue of fairness in the normal common law sense, since it assumes that there is no need for the consumer to allege, let alone to establish, its unfairness. Moreover, the European Court's view that the role of national courts in this respect is a matter for EU law (rather than for national law by way of the principle of subsidiarity or under the principle of the procedural autonomy of Member States) suggests that the Court would also see the issue of burden of proof as to unfairness as one on which an autonomous view should be taken, subject to any extension of the protection for consumers which the 1993 Directive allows to Member States. ¹⁹⁷⁷ In this respect, the general rule in the national laws of Member States is that it is for a person to establish what he alleges, ¹⁹⁷⁸ but to this it could be countered that the effectiveness of the protection of consumers requires that the burden of proof should lie on the seller or supplier, as it does in the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 ¹⁹⁷⁹ and as it does under the 1993 Directive as to the "individual negotiation" of terms. ¹⁹⁸⁰

"Neutral" assessment of fairness

38-309

However, it is submitted that the Court of Justice is more likely to hold that the issue of the fairness of a contract term is not itself an issue proper for the imposition of a burden of proof on either party to the contract, but rather for a neutral judicial assessment. ¹⁹⁸¹ This is the position of the European Commission, which has expressed the view that:

"... strictly speaking there is no problem concerning the burden of proof, because the unfair nature of a clause is not a matter of facts to be substantiated by the parties concerned, but a matter of law which the court must independently decide upon according to the rules of law (jura novit curia). ¹⁹⁸² Unfairness is therefore very much a matter of law, but potentially may depend on elements of fact which the court may not know and this becomes for burden of proof for one or the other side which may want the clause to be declared unfair or not unfair as the case may be." ¹⁹⁸³

This position may be supported at a textual level by noting the contrast between the Directive's provision of a rule governing the burden of proof as to the "individual negotiation" of a term ¹⁹⁸⁴ (a predominantly factual issue) and the issue of unfairness (an issue for judicial assessment). If this way of thinking were followed by the Court of Justice, then a national court would have to decide the issue of the fairness of a contract term (whether this issue were raised by the consumer or of its own initiative) on the basis of the facts brought to its attention by the parties. These facts themselves (for example, as to the circumstances in which the contract was concluded ¹⁹⁸⁵) would remain subject to burdens of proof following the normal rules of the national laws of the Member States (and thereby preserving to this extent the general principle of the procedural autonomy of Member States). ¹⁹⁸⁶ Against this position, however, is the fact that in two recent EU legislative proposals, the treatment of the control of unfair terms has distinguished between three categories of situation: first, terms (as listed) which are always unfair; secondly, terms (as listed) which are presumed to be unfair (where it would be for the trader to establish that a term is fair); and, thirdly, other terms (under a general provision) which are unfair if they cause "a significant imbalance in the parties' rights and obligations arising under the contract, to the detriment of the consumer, contrary to good faith and fair dealing". ¹⁹⁸⁷ This tri-partite scheme would suggest that, as regards terms falling within the general test of unfairness, it is for the consumer to establish that a term is unfair.

38-310

Finally, it is submitted that the view that the issue of the fairness of a contract term under the Regulations is in principle a matter for a neutral assessment by the court, rather than being itself the object of a burden of proof is equally suitable to proceedings brought by the CMA or by one of the “qualifying bodies” for an injunction in their preventive roles.¹⁹⁸⁸ One practical difference between the two types of way in which the issue of unfairness arises is that as between contracting parties there is likely to be more discussion as to the facts surrounding the making of the contract (which remain subject to burden of proof), whereas proceedings brought to prevent the continued use or recommendation for use of unfair terms are relatively more “abstract”¹⁹⁸⁹ and by their nature less likely to require the consideration of facts which need to be established.¹⁹⁹⁰

^{1915.} C-240/98 to C-244/98 [2000] E.C.R. I-4941 and see below, para.38-304.

^{1916.} C-237/02 [2004] 2 C.M.L.R. 13.

^{1917.} [2004] 2 C.M.L.R. 13 at [19]–[21].

^{1918.} [2004] 2 C.M.L.R. 13 at [21]; e.g. Director General of Fair Trading Plc v First National Bank Plc [2001] UKHL 52, [2002] 1 A.C. 481, above, para.38-249.

^{1919.} [2004] 2 C.M.L.R. 13 at [22] distinguishing (at [23]) its earlier decision in Océano Grupo Editorial SA v Murciano Quintero [2000] E.C.R. I-4941 on the basis that the clause there satisfied all the criteria necessary for it to be judged unfair without consideration of all the circumstances in which the contract was concluded or the advantages and disadvantages which the term would have under the applicable national law. On the general division of functions between the CJEU and national courts, see above, para.38-016.

^{1920.} Above, para.38-016.

^{1921.} [2004] 2 C.M.L.R. 13 at [25]. See also Mostaza Claro v Centro Móvil Milenium SL (C-168/05) [2006] E.C.R. I-10421 at [22]–[23].

^{1922.} Nemzeti Fogyasztóvédelmi Hatóság v Invitel Távközlési Zrt (C-472/10) of April 26, 2012 paras 21–22, above, para.38-288; Aziz v Caixa d’Estalvis de Catalunya, Tarragona i Manresa (C-415/11) of March 14, 2013 at paras 66–67, above, para.38-247; RWE Vertrieb AG v Verbraucherzentrale Nordrhein-Westfalen eV (C-92/11) of March 21, 2013 at paras 48–54, above, para.38-289; Constructora Principado SA v Menéndez Álvarez (C-226/12) of January 16, 2014 at paras 20–25, above, para.38-248; Sebestyén v Kovári (C-342/13) of April 3, 2014 at paras 25–35.

^{1923.} Constructora Principado SA v Menéndez Álvarez (C-226/12) of January 16, 2014 at para.20.

^{1924.} C-472/10 of April 26, 2012 at paras 24–28 and see above, para.38-288.

^{1925.} Aziz v Caixa d’Estalvis de Catalunya, Tarragona i Manresa (C-415/11) of March 14, 2013; Constructora Principado SA v Menéndez Álvarez (C-226/12) of January 16, 2014, above, paras 38-247–38-248.

^{1926.} See, e.g. the approach of the courts to the exercise of judicial discretion in relation to the award of a “just sum” under the Law Reform (Frustrated Contracts) Act 1943 s.1(3): Vol.I, para.23-090.

^{1927.} George Mitchell (Chesterhall) Ltd v Finney Lock Seeds Ltd [1983] 2 A.C. 803, 816, per Lord Bridge.

^{1928.}  Peel, Treitel on The Law of Contract, 14th edn (2015), para.7–082.

^{1929.} Above, para.38-271.

- 1930. e.g. Director General of Fair Trading v First National Bank Plc [2001] UKHL 52, [2002] 1 A.C. 481 reversing the Court of Appeal [2000] Q.B. 672 which itself had reversed the HC; Bryen & Langley Ltd v Boston [2005] EWCA Civ 973, [2005] All E.R. (D) 507 (Jul).
- 1931. C-240/98 to C-244/98 [2000] E.C.R. I-4941.
- 1932. [2000] E.C.R. I-4941 at [26].
- 1933. See also Cofidis SA v Fredout (C-473/00) [2002] E.C.R. I-10875.
- 1934. Whittaker (2001) 117 L.Q.R. 215, 217-218 (arguing for recognition of such a duty).
- 1935. C-168/05 [2006] E.C.R. I-10421.
- 1936. C-168/05 at [38] (emphasis added).
- 1937. C-243/08 [2009] E.C.R. I-4713.
- 1938.  C-243/08 at [32]; Bucura v SC Bancpost SA (C-348/14) July 9, 2015 para.44. In Tomášová v Republic of Slovakia (C-168/15) July 28, 2016 at paras 33-34 (available only in French), the CJEU held that only on its decision in Pannon had it made clear that national courts have an obligation to consider the fairness of terms in consumer contracts and that therefore before the date of this decision a national court could not be said to have committed a sufficiently serious breach of EU law by its failure to do so for the purpose of State liability under the Francovich principle (on which see Craig and de Búrca, EU Law, 6th edn (2015) pp.251 et seq.).
- 1939. Kommunalbauten GmbH Baugesellschaft & Co KG v Hofstetter (C-237/02) [2004] 2 C.M.L.R. 13 at [21] and [22] and see above, para.38-302.
- 1940. C-243/08 at [33] and see similarly at [35].
- 1941. 1993 Directive art.6(1), below, para.38-311.
- 1942. Banif Plus Bank Zrt v Csipai (C-472/11) [2013] W.L.R. (D) 76 at [29]; Brusse v Jahani BV (C-488/11), May 30, 2013 at para.52.
- 1943. C-137/08 at [45] (although the national court's question had earlier (para.[25]) been expressed in permissive rather than mandatory terms).
- 1944. A.G. Trstenjak, Opinion paras 107-116, especially at para.110 (original emphasis) and 115.
- 1945. C-137/08 at para.49. It is for a national court to ascertain whether the terms which are the subject of the dispute pending before it fall within the exclusion of “terms which reflect mandatory statutory or regulatory provisions” so as to fall outside the scope of the Directive: Brusse v Jahani BV (C-488/11), May 30, 2013, at para.33 referring to 1993 Directive art.1(2) and see above, paras 38-214—38-219.
- 1946. C-137/08 at [51].
- 1947. See above, para.38-222.
- 1948. C-137/08 at [52].
- 1949. C-137/08 at [53] (emphasis added) and [54].
- 1950. Pénzügyi in cf. A.G. Trstenjak's interpretation of Banco Español de Crédito, SA v Calderón Camino (C-618/10) (Opinion of February 14, 2012) para.32, considering that the Court there “imposed on the national court an obligation under EU law to investigate in order to establish the necessary facts and law ... In the absence of precise indications from the Court, it could be assumed that regard should be had to the procedural law of each individual Member State" in determining how precisely this was to be done. For the decision of the CJEU, see below, n.1839.

1951. Whittaker (2001) 117 L.Q.R. 215; Whittaker, The Involvement of EU Law in Private Relationships (2013) Ch.6. See also above, para.38-018A discussing Faber v Autobedrijf Hazet Ochten BV (C-497/13) of June 4, 2015.

1952. Cofidis SA v Fredout (C-473/00) at para.28; Asturcom Telecomunicaiones SL v Rodriguez Nogueira (C-40/08) [2009] E.C.R. I-9579 at para.38.

1953. See generally Craig and de Búrca, EU Law, Text, Cases and Materials, 6th edn (2015), pp.239 et seq.

1954.  C-40/08 [2009] E.C.R. I-9579. See also Banco Español de Crédito, SA v Calderón Camino (C-618/10), June 14, 2012. This case concerned, inter alia, the question whether, under a national order for payment procedure a national court must consider the fairness of the terms of a consumer contract on which the basis of which payment is claimed, the term in question being a term fixing the interest rate for late payment. The CJEU distinguished Pannon (C-243/08), above para.38-304 and Pénzügyi (C-137/08), above, para.38-305 on the basis that the case before it concerned the national court's responsibilities in the context of an order for payment procedure before the consumer lodged an objection, holding that the national procedure before it breached the principle of effectiveness as it completely prevented the national court from assessing the fairness of a term relating to late payments in a contract of consumer credit: C-618/10 at paras 45, 49-57; see similarly, Finanmadrid EFC SA v Albán Zambrano (C-49/14) February 18, 2016. See also Aziz v Caixa d'Estalvis de Catalunya, Tarragona i Manresa (C-415/11) March 14, 2013 at paras 50, 59-64; Sánchez Mortillo v Banco Bilbao Vizcaya Argentaria, SA (C-169/14) of July 17, 2014; Banco Santander SA v Sánchez López (C-598/15) Opinion of A.G. Wahl of June 29, 2017 (all three concerning Spanish procedures for the enforcement of mortgages); Jörös v Aegeon Magyarorszag Hitel Zrt (C-397/11) of May 30, 2013 at paras 29-38 and Brusse v Jahani BV (C-488/11), May 30, 2013 paras 42-46 (both concerning national rules and the role of appellate courts in circumstances where the unfairness of term had not been raised at first instance); Baczó v Raiffeisen Bank Zrt (C-567/13) of February 12, 2015 (national rules governing competent national court to hear consumer claims); ERSTE Bank Hungary Zrt v Sugár (C-32/14) October 1, 2015 (effectiveness of the protection of consumers in context of national law governing notaries); BBVA SA v Peñalva López (C-8/14) October 29, 2015 (time-limit for relying on unfairness of terms specified by transitional legislation); Radlinger v Finway a.s. (C-377/14) April 21, 2016 at paras 51-59 (court's duty applies to insolvency proceedings).

1955. C-40/08 at para.38.

1956. C-168/05 [2006] E.C.R. I-10421.

1957. C-40/08 at para.47.

1958. C-40/08 at para.49.

1959. C-40/08 paras 50-55. In English law under the Arbitration Act 1996 a person subject to an arbitral award may bring proceedings challenging the substantive jurisdiction of that award, whether or not he participated in the arbitral proceedings, but he must normally do so within certain timelimits and subject to certain restrictions: see above, paras 32-156—32-160. Where a person alleged to be a party to arbitral proceedings took no part in them, that person may challenge the arbitral award on the ground that there was no valid arbitral agreement by bringing court proceedings for a declaration or injunction or other appropriate relief, or he may challenge the award on the ground of the arbitral tribunal's lack of substantive jurisdiction: Arbitration Act 1996 ss.72(1)(a) and 67(1)(a) respectively. And where the other party seeks to enforce any such arbitral award by permission of the court, this permission will not be granted where the person against whom it is sought to be enforced shows that the tribunal lacked substantive jurisdiction to make the award, though any such an objection to jurisdiction must be made timeously: Arbitration Act s.73(2), below para.32-183. It is submitted that this national system of challenges to the jurisdiction of an arbitral award (including one grounded on the “non-binding” nature of an arbitration clause unfair within the meaning of the 1993 Directive) would satisfy the principle of effectiveness as explained by the European Court in the Asturcom Telecomunicaciones SL case. Moreover, for the purposes of this system of challenges, no distinction is to be made by an English court (whether in proceedings challenging the award or in considering defences to an application to enforce an award) as between a challenge on the ground of the non-binding nature of the arbitration agreement under the 1993 Directive and on any other legal ground which challenges the validity of the arbitration agreement and, in this way, the principle of equivalence is also satisfied.

1960. C-240/98 to C-244/98 [2000] E.C.R. I-4941.

1961. C-168/05 [2006] E.C.R. I-10421.

1962.  Faber v Autobedrijf Hazet Ochten BV (C-497/13) of June 4, 2015 on which see above, para.38-018A. cf. A.G. Kokott’s argument that, where relevant to the fairness of a term of a consumer contract under the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Directive 1993, a national court has an obligation to raise the unfairness of any commercial practice within the meaning of the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005: Margarit Panicello v Hernández Martínez (C-503/15) A.G. Opinion of September 15, 2016 at [127]–[128]. The CJEU (judgment of February 16, 2017) did not comment on these issues.

1963.  CPR r.3.1(f).

1964.  Office of Fair Trading v Abbey National Plc [2009] UKSC 6, [2010] 1 A.C. 696 at [17] and [61]. For general discussion of this case, see Vol.II, paras 38-226—38-227 and 38-241.

1965.  Sales Sinués v Caixabank SA, Drame Ba v Catalunja Caixa SA (Joined Cases C-381/14 and C-385/14) April 14, 2016.

1966.  Joined Cases C-381/14 and C-385/14 at paras 30-32.

1967.  Joined Cases C-381/14 and C-385/14 at para.35.

1968.  Joined Cases C-381/14 and C-385/14 at para.36.

1969.  Joined Cases C-381/14 and C-385/14 at paras 37-39.

1970.  Joined Cases C-381/14 and C-385/14 at para.41.

1971.  Joined Cases C-381/14 and C-385/14 at para.42. The judgment of the Court of Justice is expressed in terms of the precluding of a national provision which requires the national court automatically to suspend the consumer’s individual action without considering its effect on the protection of the consumer and without that consumer being able to dissociate himself from the collective proceedings, even though (as A.G. Szpunar made clear at paras 29, 45 and 74) the national provision itself appears to provide a discretion rather than impose a duty. This is apparently explained by the existence of uncertainty at the national level of the proper force of the provision in question.

1972. At common law, the reasonableness of a covenant in restraint of trade is considered an issue attracting a burden of proof, it being for the person seeking to rely on it to show its reasonableness: above, Vol.I, para.16-105. Some of the laws of other Member States treat issues such as the fairness of a contract term as one for burden of proof. So, e.g. the French legislation implementing the 1993 Directive expressly places the burden of proof on the issue of fairness on the consumer: art.L.132-1, al. 3 Code de la consommation.

1973. See above, Vol.I, para.15-100.

1974. This remains the case under general rules governing unfair terms the Consumer Rights Act 2015, below, para.38-362.

1975. 1993 Directive art.3(2) para.3 and see above, para.38-222.

1976. See above, para.38-304.

1977. 1993 Directive art.8 and see above, para.38-199.

1978. “Actori incumbit probatio”. See, for example, French law: art.1315 C. civ. and Ghestin and Goubeaux, Droit civil, Introduction générale, 3rd edn (1990), p.536; and German law: Stadler, Introduction to German Law (1996), Ch.13, pp.357, 367.

1979. s.11(5).

1980. 1993 Directive art.3(2); 1999 Regulations reg.5(4), above, para.38-222.

1981. cf. the approach of English law to the issue of reasonableness in unfair dismissal. For while an employer bears the burden of proof of showing that dismissal took place for reasons which were “potentially fair”, once this has been shown, the tribunal assesses whether or not the employer “acted reasonably or unreasonably” as a “neutral issue”, although the parties may adduce facts or arguments in support of their positions: Boys and Girls Welfare Society v McDonald [1996] I.R.L.R. 129, 132.

1982. i.e. “The court knows the law” and sometimes found as curia novit legem. The idea behind this maxim is that while in civil cases it is for the parties to bring the facts to the court, it is for the courts to apply the law to those facts, even in the absence of any legal submissions by the parties.

1983. Proceedings of the Conference, “The Unfair Terms Directive: 5 years On” (July 1999), The Implementation of Directive 93/13 into the National Legal Systems, Final Report to Workshop 3, “The definition of ‘unfairness’”, pp.141-142, available at http://ec.europa.eu/consumers/archive/cons_int/safe_shop/unf_cont_terms/event29_en.htm.

1984. 1993 Directive art.3(2), para.3.

1985. See above, para.38-259.

1986. On this principle and its qualifications see above, paras 38-305—38-306.

1987. This is the position under the Proposal for a Regulation on a Common European Sales Law COM(2011) 635 final, Annex I, arts 83-85 CESL (withdrawn by the Commission in December 2014), itself following the scheme of the earlier Directive on Consumer Rights of October 8, 2008 COM(2008) 614/3 final whose principal provisions on unfair terms (arts 30-39) did not appear in the Directive as enacted in 2011: Directive 2011/83/EU on consumer rights [2011] O.J. L304/64.

1988. See below, paras 38-323 et seq.; cf. Director General of Fair Trading v First National Bank Plc [2000] 1 W.L.R. 98, 112 where it is noted that counsel for the DGFT conceded that it was for him to show that the term used by the defendant bank was unfair.

1989. In Commission v Spain (C-70/03) [2004] E.C.R. I-0799 at para.16 the ECJ distinguished between proceedings between parties to a consumer contract (“assessment in concreto”) and “actions for cessation which involve persons or organisations representative of the collective interest of consumers” (under art.7 of the 1993 Directive) (“assessment in abstracto”).

1990. Even here, however, facts may be relevant: e.g. a particular contract term may be more intelligible (and therefore more likely to be fair) if the business which uses it explains its significance either by a brochure or the practice of its agents.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 6. - The Control of Unfair Contract Terms

(c) - The Old Law: the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999

(iii) - The Requirement of Fairness

(gg) - The Effects of a Finding That a Term is Unfair

“Not binding on the consumer”

38-311

Article 6(1) of the Directive provides that:

“Member States shall lay down that unfair terms used in a contract concluded with a consumer by a seller or supplier shall, as provided for under their national law, not be binding on the consumer and that the contract shall continue to bind the parties upon those terms if it is capable of continuing in existence without the unfair terms.”

The wording of reg.8 of the 1999 Regulations follows this formulation closely, except that understandably it omits reference to national law. ¹⁹⁹¹ The idea of an unfair contract term being “not binding” on a consumer was deliberately adopted by the European legislator as a “neutral” way of expressing the effect of a finding of “unfairness”, making clear the practical effect which it sought to achieve without adopting any one of the various terminologies or techniques used by national laws in similar circumstances (such as holding the term invalid, a nullity, void or “deemed not to have been written”). ¹⁹⁹² Moreover, art.6(1)’s reference to an unfair term being “not binding on the consumer” means that a consumer may choose that the term in question should apply. ¹⁹⁹³ So, for example, the European Court has held that where a national court holds unfair a term which determines internal territorial jurisdiction, it may nevertheless apply that term and take jurisdiction “if the consumer opposes [its] non-application”. ¹⁹⁹⁴ Apart from this situation, where a national court has found a term to be unfair of its own motion, it must not apply it. ¹⁹⁹⁵ As a result, a court must be able to establish all the consequences of the finding of the unfairness of a term without waiting for the consumer, who has been fully informed of his rights, to submit a statement requesting that the term be declared invalid. ¹⁹⁹⁶

Examples of the “non-bindingness” of unfair terms

38-312

In the vast majority of cases which concern the unfairness of “incidental terms” the effect of a finding of unfairness is straightforward and unproblematic. So, for example, a consumer is not affected by any purported exercise of any power granted by the term (such as a variation of the price or subject matter of the contract by the seller or supplier); not prejudiced by any allocation of risk indicated by the term (such as contained in an exemption clause); nor is the consumer obliged to conform to a procedure stipulated by the term (such as in the case of an arbitration clause or choice of jurisdiction clause). By contrast, in principle, the seller or supplier remains bound by the term, even if it is unlikely that a consumer would wish to hold him to it (given that ex hypothesi the term purports to cause a significant imbalance in his rights or obligations to his detriment). However, in some cases the “non-bindingness” of a contract term may sometimes lead to the failure of the contract itself ¹⁹⁹⁷ and, in other cases, the effect of “non-bindingness” of a term must be complemented by the non-application of any national law rules which would (in the absence of that term) otherwise apply. ¹⁹⁹⁸

“The contract shall continue to bind the parties upon those terms if it is capable of continuing in existence without the unfair terms”

38-313

! The Court of Justice of the EU has held that the purpose of the 1993 Directive:

“consists in restoring the balance between the parties while in principle preserving the validity of the contract as a whole, not in abolishing all contracts containing unfair terms ... As regards the criteria for assessing whether a contract can indeed continue to exist without the unfair terms, it must be noted that both the wording of article 6(1) ... and the requirements concerning the legal certainty of economic activities plead in favour of an objective approach in interpreting that provision, so that ... the situation of one of the parties to the contract, in this case the consumer, cannot be regarded as the decisive criterion determining the fate of the contract.” ¹⁹⁹⁹

As a result, under the Directive itself, a national court cannot base its decision on the continuance of the contract solely on a possible advantage for the consumer of its annulment, ²⁰⁰⁰ although it may do so if national law so provides owing to the minimum nature of the harmonisation required by art.8 of the Directive. ²⁰⁰¹ By contrast, the Court of Justice has held that a national provision which empowers a national court to replace unfair terms with a modified (and fair) term is not compatible with art.6(1) of the Directive. ²⁰⁰² However, a national court is not precluded “in accordance with the principles of the law of contract, from deleting an unfair term and substituting for it a supplementary provision of national law” (i.e. a national legal rule applicable to the issue governed by the term in the absence of other or contrary agreement ²⁰⁰³) where this would enable “real balance between the rights and obligations of the parties to be restored” and where otherwise the invalidity of the unfair term would require the court to annul the contract in its entirety with disadvantageous consequences to the consumer. ²⁰⁰⁴ A key example could be found in the case of a term relating to the main subject matter of the contract which fails the condition set by art.4(2) that it must be “plain and intelligible” and which is found to be unfair and so not binding on the consumer ²⁰⁰⁵; if a supplementary rule allows a court to govern the issue of the main subject matter, then reliance on it could rescue the contract from overall invalidity. ²⁰⁰⁶ A possible example in English law may be found in the position as regards the price in a contract for the sale of goods. If a term setting the price of the goods falls outside the exclusion in reg.6(2) of the 1999 Regulations and is found to be unfair and not binding on the consumer, it could be argued that the court could substitute a “reasonable price” for the price fixed under that contract term by way of s.8 of the Sale of Goods Act 1979, for in this situation the price could be said not to have been “fixed by the contract”, left by the contract to be fixed in a manner agreed by the contract or have been determined by the course of dealing between the parties as foreseen by that section. ²⁰⁰⁷ On the other hand, it could be countered that, where a contract term fixing the price has been found unfair and “not binding” on the consumer, it nevertheless cannot be said that there is no price “fixed by the contract” so as to allow the application of s.8(3). ²⁰⁰⁸ !

No application of national “supplementary rules” more generally

38-313A

! As has been noted above, the Court of Justice of the EU allows a national court to apply a national supplementary rule (that is, one applicable in the absence of other or contrary agreement ²⁰⁰⁹) to govern an issue regulated by a contract term found unfair and therefore not binding on the consumer, where otherwise the contract would fail to the prejudice of the consumer, subject to the condition that such an application would enable a “real balance between the rights and obligations of the parties to be restored”. ²⁰¹⁰ However, the Court of Justice has recently emphasised that this acceptance of the application of national rules in substitution for a contract term held unfair is limited to these particular circumstances. ²⁰¹¹ In Banco Bilbao Vizcaya Argentaria SA the strictness of this position for the trader was confirmed by the Court in considering whether a Spanish court could apply its general rules governing interest on late payments of debts provided by the Spanish Civil Code for the situation where no contract term setting a rate of interest has been fixed instead of an express term in a consumer contract of loan setting default interest found unfair under national legislation implementing the 1993 Directive. ²⁰¹² In its Order, ²⁰¹³ the Court held that the effect of art.6(1) of the Directive is that:

“national courts are bound solely to exclude the application of the unfair contract term so that it produces no binding effects on the consumer, without their being empowered to revise its content. Indeed, the contract must in principle subsist without any modification other than the suppression of the unfair contract terms to the extent to which such a survival of the contract is legally possible under the rules of national law.” ²⁰¹⁴

As a result, where a court declares a penalty clause in a consumer contract to be unfair, art.6(1) “cannot be interpreted as allowing the national court ... to reduce the amount of the penalty imposed on the consumer instead of excluding entirely the application of the clause” ²⁰¹⁵; such a power of revision would “contribute to the elimination of the deterrent effect exercised on traders by the pure and simple non-application of such unfair contract terms as regards consumers”, to the extent to which traders would be tempted to use them knowing that, if they were later invalidated, they could still look to the court to protect the interest with which the term was concerned. ²⁰¹⁶ Moreover, in the case of a penalty clause such as the default interest clause before it, its annulment would not have any negative consequences for the consumer as the amounts which he or she would have to pay would necessarily be less. ²⁰¹⁷ This decision has some potentially radical consequences in the context of English law. First, in the particular context of Banco Bilbao Vizcaya Argentaria SA, where a term in a consumer contract imposing a contractual rate interest for late payment of any sum owed by the consumer is held unfair and not binding on the consumer under the 1999 Regulations, a court could not award the trader actual interest losses caused by this late payment even if pleaded and proved as is generally possible at common law, ²⁰¹⁸ nor, apparently, could a court exercise a statutory discretion to impose interest in respect of any such late payment. ²⁰¹⁹ Secondly, the approach of the Court of Justice to “supplementary provisions of national law” is not restricted to the context of late payments of sums of money. For example, where a term in a consumer contract imposes on the consumer liability to pay a sum of money on breach of contract is held unfair and not binding on the consumer under the 1999 Regulations, ²⁰²⁰ the trader would not be entitled to recover damages for any loss actually caused by the consumer's breach under the general common law, as here the common law rules on damages must be viewed as “supplementary rules” which would substitute for the (unfair) term in the consumer contract. Such an effect of a finding of unfairness of a contract term under the 1999 Regulations contrasts strikingly with the effect of a finding that a term is a penalty clause at common law, as such a finding does not prevent the injured party from recovering damages at common law against the party in breach in respect of proven and legally recoverable losses. ²⁰²¹  It is difficult to foresee, however, how far the approach of the Court of Justice in Bilbao Vizcaya Argentaria SA should be taken. For example, if a term in a consumer contract providing a power of termination in the trader for breach of contract by the consumer in certain circumstances were found unfair under the 1999 Regulations, it could be argued that such a finding prevents the trader from relying on the general common law of repudiatory breach so as to terminate the contract in respect of the circumstances foreseen by the term in question. Certainly, such a result would have a strong deterrent effect on traders including unfair termination clauses, and thus contribute to the effectiveness of the protection of consumers. However, even if this were the case, it is submitted that such a result should not prevent the trader from terminating the contract on the grounds of breach by the consumer on grounds not foreseen by the unfair contract term, whether under a fair (and therefore binding) express term or at common law.

Restitution of money paid by the consumer

38-314

⚠ Neither the 1993 Directive nor the 1999 Regulations make express provision regarding any possible restitutionary consequences of a finding that a term is “not binding” on the consumer on the ground of its unfairness. In this respect, art.6(1) of the Directive refers to an unfair term not binding the consumer “as provided for under their national law” and this neutrality as between the conceptual mechanisms of “non-bindingness” (such as invalidity or nullity) could suggest that other possible consequential effects of “non-bindingness” (notably, as to the availability of restitution and its incidents) are similarly a matter for national law. However, in Gutiérrez Naranjo the Court of Justice of the EU made clear that the restitutionary consequences of non-bindingness are, in principle, a matter for EU law. ²⁰²² ⚠ The background to judgment case was that in 2013 the Spanish Supreme Court had held contract terms providing that the variable interest rate in a mortgage loan would not go below a certain threshold (“floor clauses”) were not transparent and were unfair under Spanish legislation implementing the 1993 Directive, but the same court later held that while the effect of this unfairness was to render the terms invalid, this did not affect claims for restitution in respect of which a judgment with the force of res judicata had been given nor claims in respect of monies paid under the clauses after the date of its judgment on unfairness, the latter on the basis of “considerations of legal certainty, good faith and risk of serious economic difficulties”. ²⁰²³ ⚠ Advocate General Mengozzi had advised the Court that this limitation on the temporal effect of its judgment was a matter for Spanish law subject to the principles of equivalence and effectiveness, the latter of which was not infringed as the national court was entitled (exceptionally) to balance the purposes of the 1993 Directive (including its deterrent effect) and “the macroeconomic challenges to the already weakened banking system of a Member State”. ²⁰²⁴ ⚠ However, the Court of Justice disagreed. Taking into account, in particular, that art.6(1) of the 1993 Directive is a “mandatory provision that is intended to replace the formal balance established by the contract between the rights and obligations of the parties with an effective balance that re-establishes equality between them”, ²⁰²⁵ ⚠ art.6(1)

“must be interpreted as meaning that a contractual term held to be unfair must be regarded, in principle, as never having existed, so that it cannot have any effect on the consumer. Therefore, the determination by a court that such a term is unfair must, in principle, have the consequence of restoring the consumer to the legal and factual situation that he would have been in if that term had not existed.

It follows that the obligation for the national court to exclude an unfair contract term imposing the payment of amounts that prove not to be due entails, in principle, a corresponding restitutory [sic] effect in respect of those same amounts.” ²⁰²⁶ ⚠

⚠ The Court of Justice therefore considered that while the reference to national law in art.6(1) means that Member States may define “the detailed rules under which the unfairness of a contractual clause is established and the actual legal effects of that finding are produced”, the consumer must be allowed “a right of restitution of advantages wrongly obtained”. ²⁰²⁷ ⚠ While exceptions to this position may be made in respect of claims subject to res judicata and while reasonable time-limits may be imposed for the bringing of proceedings, only the Court of Justice of the EU itself is entitled to decide upon temporal limitations to be placed on its own interpretations of a rule of EU law. ²⁰²⁸ ⚠ By contrast, the Spanish Supreme Court’s restriction of claims by consumers to payments made before its own decision on the unfairness of the relevant terms was tantamount to depriving the consumers affected of their rights to obtain repayment in full of the amounts overpaid. ²⁰²⁹ ⚠ The national court therefore had failed to provide the adequate and effective means of preventing the continued use of the relevant unfair terms as required by art.7(1) of the 1993 Directive. ²⁰³⁰ ⚠

38-314A

⚠ The particular issues presented to the Court of Justice in Gutiérrez Naranjo are not directly relevant to the context of the interpretation and application of the 1999 Regulations (nor indeed the Consumer Rights Act Pt 2 ²⁰³¹ ⚠) by the English courts. However, the decision of the Court of Justice in Gutiérrez Naranjo makes clear that EU law requires in principle that a consumer who has paid money under a contract term found unfair has a right to recovery of that money, as in the case of penalty clause, an unfair variation of price clause or an unintelligible ²⁰³² ⚠ and unfair price clause. However, the exact legal nature of this recovery and its incidents (for example, as regards limitation period or even any defence of change of position by the seller or supplier or contributory fault in the consumer) could still be thought to be a matter for national (and therefore English) law, as being “detailed rules” governing the effect of the non-bindingness of the term in question, subject to the qualification that the practical effect of the nature and incidents of the recovery must not prejudice the effectiveness of the consumer’s protection. ²⁰³³ ⚠ In this respect, in Chesterton Global Ltd v Finney the court held that a consumer who had paid sums under a term later found unfair within the meaning of the 1999 Regulations could recover these sums under Kleinwort Benson Ltd v Lincoln City Council ²⁰³⁴ ⚠ that is, under a mistake of law. ²⁰³⁵ ⚠

Terms “not binding” on consumer and third parties

38-315

⚠ Where a contract term does not bind a consumer by reason of the 1999 Regulations, this may in certain circumstances have legal consequences for third parties to the contract. For example, if a term in a consumer contract which stipulates that the rights under it may not be transferred (e.g. a non-transferable air ticket ²⁰³⁶ ⚠) is found unfair within the meaning of the Regulations, then if these rights would otherwise be transferable ²⁰³⁷ the consumer would be entitled to assign them to a third party and the third party would receive valid assigned rights under the contract; and if the third party had incited the consumer to assign his rights under the contract knowing of the non-assignment clause, then that third party would nonetheless not be guilty of the tort of inducing breach of contract as the contract would not have been broken. ²⁰³⁸ In the very different context of contingency fee agreements, if a litigant (the consumer) were not bound by a term of a contingency fee agreement setting his advocate’s success fee (on the basis that the term was both not “plain and intelligible” and unfair ²⁰³⁹), then no costs order could be made by a court against a losing defendant (third party to the agreement) in respect of this fee since the court’s statutory power to do so is restricted to “fees payable under a conditional fee agreement (including one which provides for a success fee)”: if the term is not binding against the consumer, then the success fee would not be payable under the agreement. ²⁰⁴⁰ On the other hand, in principle the protection of the 1999 Regulations extends only to the consumer party of a consumer contract. So, for example, in Mayhook v National Car Parks ²⁰⁴¹ a term in a contract of car parking under which the person who contracted was deemed to do so on behalf of the legal owner of the vehicle as well as of himself was held unfair under the 1999 Regulations in that it caused a significant imbalance in the relationship of the car park with the owner of the vehicle with the result that the car park was liable to that owner in damages for the wrongful detention of the vehicle for unpaid parking charges. With respect, however, the 1999 Regulations do not protect persons other than the consumer party to a consumer contract, whereas in the above situation the vehicle owner (who may or may not be a “consumer”) is not party to the contract of parking and cannot be made so by a term of the contract to which he or she is not in privity under the general English law of privity of contract and agency. The position would be different if the vehicle owner had given its driver actual or ostensible authority to conclude the contract of parking (this not being the case in Mayhook), as this would allow the formation of a consumer contract between the car park and the vehicle owner to which the 1999 Regulations could then apply. Finally, more difficult is the position of a person who, while not party to the original contract, enjoys rights under the contract by way of assignment or grant. For example, a landlord (the “trader”) may grant a long lease to a tenant (the “consumer”), the contract of tenancy constituting a “consumer contract” for the

⚠ If the tenant sells the lease to a third party, the question could arise as to whether that third party can claim the benefit of the controls of the 1999 Regulations on the fairness of its terms, even though not party to the original contract and, in some situations, even though not himself a “consumer”. ²⁰⁴³

⚠ It could be argued that the protections which the 1993 Directive (and therefore the 1999 Regulations) provide are personal to the consumer party to the contract with the trader and therefore cannot be enjoyed by a third party. However, it is submitted that in principle where under the contract of transfer the third party enjoys the contractual rights of the consumer, then he should also be able to claim the benefit of the protections of the 1999 Regulations which his own transferor would have enjoyed: the purpose of the requirement of fairness under the 1999 Regulations is to “re-balance” the parties’ rights and obligations under the consumer contract and it is these “rebalanced” rights which the third party acquires. ²⁰⁴⁴ ⚠

Other consequences

38-316

Apart from the above consequences as between the parties to a consumer contract, the unfairness of a term in a consumer contract may attract preventive measures being taken by the CMA and a number of other “qualifying bodies”. ²⁰⁴⁵

^{1991.} See similarly Consumer Rights Act 2015 ss.62(1) and (3), 67, below, para.38-369.

^{1992.} Tenreiro (1995) European Review of Private Law 273, 280 et seq.

^{1993.} This is explicitly stated by the Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.62(3), below, para.38-369.

^{1994.} Pannon GSM Zrt v Erzsébet Sustikné Györfi (C-243/08) [2009] E.C.R. I-4713 at [35].

^{1995.} Pannon GSM (C-243/08) [2009] E.C.R. I-4713 at para.35; Jorös v Aegeon Magyarország Hitel Zrt (C-397/11) May 30, 2013 at para.41.

^{1996.} Jorös v Aegeon Magyarország Hitel Zrt (C-397/11) May 30, 2013 at para.42.

^{1997.} Below, para.38-313.

^{1998.} Below, para.38-313A.

^{1999.} Pereni#ová v SOS finance, spol. sro (C-453/10) [2012] 2 C.M.L.R. 28 paras 31-32; Jorös v Aegeon Magyarország Hitel Zrt (C-397/11) May 30, 2013 at paras 44-48.

^{2000.} Pereni#ová v SOS finance, spol. sro (C-453/10) para.33.

^{2001.} Pereni#ová v SOS finance, spol. sro (C-453/10) at paras 34-35.

^{2002.} Banco Español de Crédito, SA v Calderón Camino (C-618/10), June 14, 2012, paras 69-73. See also Brusse v Jahani BV (C-488/11), May 30, 2013 at paras 54-60; Kásler v OTP Jelzálogbank Zrt (C-26/13) of April 30, 2014 at paras 76-79; Unicaja Banco, SA v Hidalgo Rueda (C-482/13, C-484/13, C-485/12 and C-487/13) of January 21, 2015 at paras.28-32.

^{2003.} In English law, in principle such a supplementary rule may be fixed by statute (as in the case of rules governing contracts of sale of goods under the Sale of Goods Act 1979) or at common law, whether expressed in terms of a general legal position (such as the law governing termination for repudiatory breach) or by way of implied term.

^{2004.} Kásler v OTP Jelzálogbank Zrt (C-26/13) of April 30, 2014 at para.82-84; Unicaja Banco, SA v

Hidalgo Rueda (C-482/13, C-484/13, C-485/12 and C-487/13) of January 21, 2015 at para.33.

2005. See above, para.38-239.

2006. Kásler (C-26/13) at paras 81-83.

2007. Sale of Goods Act 1979 s.8(1) and (2) and see below, paras 44-050—44-051.

2008.  Peel, Treitel on The Law of Contract, 14th edn (2015), para.7–120. cf. Bridge, The Sale of Goods, 3rd edn (2014), para.9.44 who notes (without referring to s.8(3) of the 1979 Act) that in these circumstances the absence of a power in the court to rewrite the contract means that the contract cannot continue and so must be unwound. Similar issues would arise in relation to price terms found unfair and not binding in contracts for the provision of services in relation to the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 s.15.

2009. The French expression used is “une disposition de droit national à caractère supplétif”. This invokes the classic civil law distinction between legal provisions applying subject to other or contrary agreement (les lois supplétives de volonté or ius dispositivum) and legal provisions applying irrespective of the parties’ agreement (les lois impératives or ius cogens).

2010. Kásler v OTP Jelzálogbank Zrt (C-26/13) of April 30, 2014 at paras 82-84; Unicaja Banco SA v Hidalgo Rueda (C-482/13, C-484/13, C-485/12 and C-487/13) of January 21, 2015 (“Unicaja Banco, SA (C-482/13 etc.)”) at para.33.

2011. Unicaja Banco SA (C-482/13 etc.) at para.33.

2012. Banco Bilbao Vizcaya Argentaria SA v Quintano Ujeta (C-602/13) Order of June 11, 2015 (available only in French) (“Bilbao Vizcaya Argentaria SA (C-602/13)”). The CJEU followed this ruling closely in very similar circumstances in Banco Grupo Cajatres SA v Manjón Pinilla (C-90/14) of July 8, 2015 at paras 33-38.

2013. The fact that the CJEU decided in the form of an Order rather than a judgment reflects its view that its response to the national court’s question could clearly be deduced from its existing case-law: Bilbao Vizcaya Argentaria SA (C-602/13), para.29 referring to art.99 of the Court’s own rules of procedure.

2014. Bilbao Vizcaya Argentaria SA (C-602/13) at para.33. The translations from the French text of the CJEU’s Order here and in the remainder of this paragraph are the editor’s.

2015. Bilbao Vizcaya Argentaria SA (C-602/13) at para.34.

2016. Bilbao Vizcaya Argentaria SA (C-602/13) at para.36.

2017. Bilbao Vizcaya Argentaria SA (C-602/13) at para.39. The CJEU accepted that this lack of negative effect would be “subject to verification by the referring court”.

2018. cf. Vol.I paras 26-228—26-230 explaining the general common law position. See also Vol.I, para.26-194 on the common law approach to default rates of interest and the law on penalties.

2019. See Vol.I, paras 26-236—26-241, referring notably to the Senior Courts Act 1981 s.35A.

2020. Such a contract term is foreseen as one which “may be regarded as unfair” by the 1999 Regulations reg.5(5); Sch.2 para.1(e), see above, paras 38-280—38-281. An example may be found in Munkenbeck & Marshall v Harold [2005] EWHC 356 (TCC), [2005] All E.R. (D) 227, above, para.38-280.

2021.  McGregor on Damages, 19th edn (2014), paras 15-026—15-027. And see Cavendish Square Holding BV v Makdessi, ParkingEye Ltd v Beavis [2015] UKSC 67, [2015] 3 W.L.R. 1373 at [9].

- 2022. ! Gutiérrez Naranjo v Cajasur Banco SAU, Palacios Martinez v Banco Bilbao Vizcaya Argentaria SA (BBVA), Banco Popular Español, SA v Irlés López (Joined Cases C-154/15, C-307/15 and C-308/15) of December 21, 2016 (“Gutiérrez Naranjo (Joined Cases C-154/15, C-307/15 and C-308/15)”).
- 2023. ! Opinion of A.G. Mengozzi, Gutiérrez Naranjo (Joined Cases C-154/15, C-307/15 and C-308/15) at para.21 and see also decision of CJEU in Gutiérrez Naranjo (Joined Cases C-154/15, C-307/15 and C-308/15) paras 18-26.
- 2024. ! Opinion, Gutiérrez Naranjo (Joined Cases C-154/15, C-307/15 and C-308/15) at para.72.
- 2025. ! Gutiérrez Naranjo (Joined Cases C-154/15, C-307/15 and C-308/15) at para.55.
- 2026. ! Gutiérrez Naranjo (Joined Cases C-154/15, C-307/15 and C-308/15) at paras 61-62.
- 2027. ! Gutiérrez Naranjo (Joined Cases C-154/15, C-307/15 and C-308/15) at paras 64-66.
- 2028. ! Gutiérrez Naranjo (Joined Cases C-154/15, C-307/15 and C-308/15) at paras 67-71.
- 2029. ! Gutiérrez Naranjo (Joined Cases C-154/15, C-307/15 and C-308/15) at para.72.
- 2030. ! Gutiérrez Naranjo (Joined Cases C-154/15, C-307/15 and C-308/15) at para.73.
- 2031. ! On which see Main Work, Vol.II paras 38-334 et seq.
- 2032. ! This further requirement stems from the condition of the “core exclusion” from the test of unfairness: see Main Work, Vol.I, para.38-239.
- 2033. ! Gutiérrez Naranjo (Joined Cases C-154/15, C-307/15 and C-308/15) at paras 66 and 69. On limitation of actions cf. Cofidis CA v Fredout (C-473/00) [2002] E.C.R. I-10875 (national limitation period held unable to prevent court intervening as regards the fairness of a contract term) and Hamilton v Volksbank Filder eG (C-412/06) [2008] E.C.R. I-2383 especially A.G. Maduro’s Opinion at para.24 (“The existence of a general principle of limitation should therefore be recognised, while leaving the Member States the necessary discretion to implement it in their respective legal systems”).
- 2034. ! [1992] 2 A.C. 349 and see further Main Work, Vol.I, paras 29-047—29-049.
- 2035. ! Chesterton Global Ltd v Finney Unreported, April 30, 2010 (Lambeth County Ct) and on this ground of restitutionary recovery see Main Work, Vol.I, paras 29-044—29-049. (Lambeth County Ct) and on this ground of restitutionary recovery see Main Work, Vol.I, paras 29-044—29-049. See also Re Welcome Financial Services Ltd [2015] EWHC 815 (Ch) at [106], where the court accepted (in the context a scheme of arrangement under Pt 26 of the Companies Act 2006) that a consumer who had paid money under a contract term held unfair under the 1999 Regulations could recover it.
- 2036. ! cf. above, para.38-294. cf. also the treatment of contract terms in contracts of sale of tickets for recreational, sporting and cultural events in the UK which provide for the cancellation of the ticket or blacklisting of the buyer on resale of the ticket by the “secondary ticketing” provisions in the Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.91(2), (3), (7) and (8) (in force on May 26, 2015: 2015 Act s.100(4) and see the Consumer Rights Act 2015 (Consequential Amendments) Order 2015 (SI 2015/1726) arts 2–4; Sch. paras 2–5).

- 2037. So, for example, the rights in question are not too personal for this purpose: see Vol.I, paras 19-055—19-056.
- 2038. On the need for breach of contract (and not mere interference with contract) for this tort see OGB Ltd v Allan, Douglas v Hello! Ltd, Mainstream Properties Ltd v Young [2007] UKHL 21, [2008] 1 A.C. 1 at [34] et seq. where the tort was described as being an “accessory” liability to breach of contract.
- 2039. See above, para.38-239, but cf. above, para.38-313.
- 2040. Courts and Legal Services Act 1990 s.58A(6) (emphasis added) and see CPR Pt 44.3A, Practice Direction about Costs supplementing Pts 43-47 CPR para.9.1.
- 2041. Cambridge CC, Unreported November 29, 2012.
- 2042.  London Borough of Newham v Khatun [2004] EWCA Civ 55, [2005] Q.B. 37 and see Vol.II, paras 38-203—38-204.
- 2043.  cf. the position in Roundlistic Ltd v Jones [2016] UKUT 325 (LC) where, however, these points were not raised: on this case, see above, para.38-211.
- 2044.  On the idea that the purpose of the requirement of fairness is to re-balance the parties' rights, see Aziz v Caixa d'Estalvis de Catalunya, Tarragona i Manresa (C-415/11) March 14, 2013 at paras 44-45, on which see Vol.II, para.38-247.
- 2045. See below, paras 38-323 et seq.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 6. - The Control of Unfair Contract Terms

(c) - The Old Law: the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999

(iv) - The Requirement of Plain and Intelligible Language

38-317

Regulation 7 of the 1999 Regulations provides that:

“(1)

A seller or supplier shall ensure that any written term of a contract is expressed in plain, intelligible language.

(2)

If there is any doubt about the meaning of a written term, the interpretation which is most favourable to the consumer shall prevail except in proceedings brought under regulation 12.” 2046

There are two aspects of this requirement, which is often termed the requirement of transparency: first, relating to its content and, secondly, relating to its effects.

The place of the requirement in the Regulations

38-318

It was earlier seen that the transparency of the terms of consumer contracts (whether written or otherwise) is relevant to their assessment under the test of fairness, even though the more likely position is that a mere failure in “plainness” or “intelligibility” does not without more render a contract term unfair. 2047 However, the requirement in reg.7 of the 1999 Regulations is clearly distinct from the wider test of unfairness and at first sight it appears to focus on the form of drafting of the terms, rather than either their intended legal effect or their accessibility. The requirement has two limbs: terms must be both plain and intelligible. These are distinct as:

“A term might be obscure and difficult to understand at all, but bear only one meaning for anyone who manages to fathom it.” 2048

The OFT indicated what it viewed as the virtues towards which the drafter of a consumer contract should strive and which its own work was aimed at promoting. 2049 Its starting point was that the contracts should normally be comprehensible by the consumer without recourse to legal advice. ²⁰⁵⁰ As a result, the contract should avoid legal jargon (such as, for example, “representation”, “warranty”, “consequential damages”, “force majeure”) and references to a consumer’s “statutory rights”; it should express itself in direct and ordinary language, notably by using the first and second person rather than by naming and defining the parties to the contract; and it should minimise the number of crossreferences. Headings in the contract may be helpful, and the size of the print should be large enough to be legible without difficulty. ²⁰⁵¹

38-319

⚠ English courts have accepted that the “plain and intelligible” character of a contract term is to be assessed from the standpoint of the typical (or average) consumer. ²⁰⁵² So, for example, it has been held that a term which uses a vague word may not be “plain and intelligible” even though it is not so vague as to render the term void for legal uncertainty. ²⁰⁵³ ⚠ In this respect:

“Any lawyer worth his salt can usually contrive possible alternative meanings of contractual words, and the fact that this can be done does not of itself make any given language insufficiently plain and intelligible. For that to result the alternative wording, or uncertain effect, must be one of substance or significance, and not merely of legal contrivance.” ²⁰⁵⁴

It has also been accepted that reg.7(2)’s rule governing “doubt about the meaning of a written term” extends to the case where two sub-clauses in a contract term are entirely contradictory, with the result that the sub-clause which is most favourable to the consumer must prevail as reflecting “the interpretation most favourable to the consumer”. ²⁰⁵⁵ On the other hand, the mere fact that a term may arguably be implied into a written contract does not mean that there is doubt as to the meaning of the written terms themselves. ²⁰⁵⁶

Broad approach to the requirement of transparency in the CJEU

38-320

⚠ However, the Court of Justice of the EU has held that the requirement that contract terms are in plain, intelligible language in art.5 of the Directive (which has the same scope as the condition for the “core exclusion” in art.4(2) ²⁰⁵⁷) “cannot be ... reduced merely to their being formally and grammatically intelligible”. ²⁰⁵⁸ First, in RWE Vertrieb ²⁰⁵⁹ the Court linked the requirement of plain, intelligible language in art.5 of the Directive to recital 20’s explanation that “the consumer must actually be given an opportunity to examine all the terms of the contract”. ²⁰⁶⁰ It then added that:

“Information, before concluding a contract, on the terms of the contract and the consequences of concluding it is of fundamental importance for a consumer. It is on the basis of that information in particular that he decides whether he wishes to be bound by the terms previously drawn up by the seller or supplier.” ²⁰⁶¹

Later, in Kásler the Court held that the requirement meant that a court must determine whether, having regard to all the information provided by the business, including any promotional material or information provided in advance of the conclusion of the contract, “the average consumer, who is reasonably well informed and reasonably observant and circumspect” ²⁰⁶² would understand not merely the grammatical sense of the words used by the contract term in question but also its practical consequences for him in his or her own context. ²⁰⁶³ This very demanding and substantive (as opposed to merely formal) approach to the requirement of plain intelligible language clearly has very close links with the Court of Justice’s approach to the requirement of fairness for the purposes of art.3 of the Directive as seen, notably, in Invitel. ²⁰⁶⁴ ⚠

The effects of failure to comply with the requirement of transparency

38-321

Regulation 7 of the 1999 Regulations refers only to one of the effects of a failure in a term to fulfil the requirement of use of plain and intelligible language: that where there is as a result doubt as to its meaning it shall be interpreted in a way most favourable to the consumer. ²⁰⁶⁵ This effect does not seem to add much to the general position at common law, which has long recognised a rule of construction that an ambiguous written instrument shall be construed against the person who made it: construction is contra proferentem. ²⁰⁶⁶ Apart from this effect, any failure to fulfil the requirement of plain and intelligible language will attract preventive measures under Pt 8 of the Enterprise Act 2002 and may also attract preventive measures under the 1999 Regulations themselves. ²⁰⁶⁷ Moreover, as has been noted, a contract term which fails the requirement of transparency will not fall within the “core exclusion” in respect of the test of unfairness. ²⁰⁶⁸

^{2046.} On proceedings brought under reg.12, see below, paras 38-323 et seq.

^{2047.} Above, paras 38-259—38-260.

^{2048.} OFT v Abbey National Plc (Bank Charges) [2008] EWHC 875 (Comm) at [87], per Andrew Smith J.

^{2049.} OFT, Unfair contract terms guidance (2008) OFT311, above, n.1270, paras 19.1 et seq. As from April 1, 2014, the OFT was abolished and its functions under the 1999 Regulations taken over by the Competition and Markets Authority (“CMA”), on which see below, paras 38-323 et seq.

^{2050.} OFT, Unfair contract terms guidance (2008) OFT311, above, n.1270, para.19.3.

^{2051.} OFT, Unfair contract terms guidance (2008) OFT311, above, n.1270, para.19.4-19.8. It is submitted that the requirement of “plain, intelligible writing” does not affect the language type in which it is to be drawn up, but that this type may be relevant to the test of unfairness: see Whittaker, Cambridge Yearbook of European Studies (2006), Vol.8, Ch.10, above para.38-269.

^{2052.} See above, para.38-041.

^{2053.} Office of Fair Trading v Foxtons Ltd [2009] EWHC 1681 (Ch), [2009] 29 E.G. 98 (C.S.), (2009) 106(30) L.S.G. 14 [60]-[75] especially at [62]; Office of Fair Trading v Ashbourne Management Services Ltd [2011] EWHC 1237 (Ch), [2011] E.C.C. 31 at [155]; Allproperty Claims Ltd v Tang [2015] EWHC 2198 QB at [45].

^{2054.} Office of Fair Trading v Foxtons Ltd [2009] EWHC 1681 (Ch) at [73], per Mann J. (in the context of the proviso concerning “plain intelligible language” in reg.6(2) of the 1999 Regulations).

^{2055.} Peabody Trust Governors v Reeve [2008] EWHC 1432 (Ch), [1009] L. & T.R. 6 at [30] and [33]; cf. West v Ian Finlay and Associates [2014] EWCA Civ 316, [2014] B.L.R. 324 at [30]-[32] where it was held that the relevant term was not ambiguous as the “normal meaning of the words [was] crystal clear”. As a result, the interpretative presumption in reg.7(2) of the 1999 Regulations did not apply.

^{2056.} The County Homeseach Co (Thames & Chilterns) Ltd v Cowham [2008] EWCA Civ 26, [2008] 1 W.L.R. 909 at [21]. Regulation 7(2) of the 1999 Regulations has no application where the term is not ambiguous: Du Plessis v Fontgary Leisure Parks Ltd [2012] EWCA Civ 409 at [40], above, para.38-287.

^{2057.} Kásler v OTP Jelzálogbank Zrt (C-26/13) of April 30, 2014 (“Kásler (C-26/13)”) at para.69.

- 2058. Kásler (C-26/13) at para.71.
- 2059. RWE Vertrieb AG v Verbraucherzentrale Nordrhein-Westfalen eV (C-92/11), March 21, 2013 (“RWE Vertrieb (C-92/11)”) and see above, para.38-289.
- 2060. RWE Vertrieb (C-92/11) at para.43.
- 2061. RWE Vertrieb (C-92/11) at para.44.
- 2062. On the significance of the “average consumer” see above, para.38-041.
- 2063. Kásler (C-26/13) at paras 71-75 especially at 74 and see para.38-239 et seq.
- 2064.  Nemzeti Fogyasztóvédelmi Hatóság v Invitel Távközlési Zrt (C-472/10) of April 26, 2012 and see above, para.38-288. See also Verein für Konsumenteninformation v Amazon EU Sàrl (C-191/15) July 28, 2016 at paras 67-71 and above, para.38-260.
- 2065. AJ Building and Plastering Ltd v Turner [2013] EWHC 484 (QB), [2013] Lloyd’s Rep. IR at [53]; Khurana v Webster Construction Ltd [2015] EWHC 758 (TCC) at [56].
- 2066. cf. Vol.I, paras 13-083 et seq.
- 2067. Below, paras 38-324 and 38-330.
- 2068. 1999 Regulations reg.6(2), above, para.38-239.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts
Section 6. - The Control of Unfair Contract Terms
(c) - The Old Law: the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999
(v) - Choice of Law Clauses

Choice of law clauses ineffective

38-322

 It is to be noted that, in keeping with the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 though subtly differently, ²⁰⁶⁹ the 1999 Regulations contain a provision aimed at preventing the avoidance of their provisions by an express choice of law. Regulation 9 of the 1999 Regulations provides that:

“These Regulations shall apply notwithstanding any contract term which applies or purports to apply the law of a non-Member State, if the contract has a close connection with the territory of the Member States.” ²⁰⁷⁰

While this provision clearly disallows an express choice of law to avoid the application of the Regulations where the law chosen belongs to a non-Member State, it does not control the choice of the law of a Member State, relying in this respect on the effect of the Directive to ensure a minimum protection for consumers throughout the European Union. ²⁰⁷¹ The European Court of Justice noted that art.6(2) of the 1993 Directive (implemented in English law by reg.9 of the 1999 Regulations) “merely states that the contract is to have a close connection with the territory of the Member States” in order to attract the application of the 1993 Directive’s provisions. ²⁰⁷² This “deliberately vague”, “general expression seeks to make it possible to take account of various ties depending on the circumstances of the case” and so while the legislature of a Member State may properly seek to give it concrete effect by the use of presumptions, it cannot circumscribe it by:

“... a combination of predetermined criteria for ties such as the cumulative conditions as to residence and conclusion of the contract referred to in Art.5 of the Rome Convention.” ²⁰⁷³

However, an express choice of law clause may be held unfair under the national law applicable to its assessment under the Rome I Regulation, as explained earlier. ²⁰⁷⁴

²⁰⁶⁹. s.27 and see Vol.I, para.30-008.

²⁰⁷⁰. cf. Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.74, below, para.38-386.

²⁰⁷¹. cf. the provisions governing choice of law in consumer contracts in EC Regulation 593/2008 on the law applicable to contractual obligations ("Rome I") [2008] O.J. L177/6 arts 3 and 6 see below, Vol.I, paras 30-176 et seq., 30-231 et seq.

2072. Commission v Spain (C-70/03) [2004] E.C.R. I-0799 at [32]. Article 5 of the Rome Convention was replaced by Regulation (EC) 593/2008 (above, n.1922) art.6, which introduced new conditions for the protection of consumers against loss of the protection of rules of the law of their habitual residence by choice of applicable law: below, Vol.I, paras 30-231 et seq.

2073. [2004] E.C.R. I-0799 at [32] and [33].

2074.  See above, para.38-295A.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts
Section 6. - The Control of Unfair Contract Terms
(c) - The Old Law: the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999
(vi) - The Prevention of Unfair Terms

Introduction

38-323

Article 7 of Directive of 1993 requires Member States to:

“... ensure that, in the interests of consumers and of competitors, adequate and effective means exist to prevent the continued use of unfair terms in contracts concluded with consumers by sellers or suppliers.”

And it further provides that these:

“... means ... shall include provisions whereby persons or organizations, having a legitimate interest under national law in protecting consumers, may take action according to the national law concerned before the courts or before the competent administrative bodies for a decision as to whether contractual terms drawn up for general use are unfair, so that they can apply appropriate and effective means to prevent the continued use of such terms.”

These requirements were first implemented into English law by imposing duties and granting powers in relation to the policing of unfair terms to the Director General of Fair Trading, ²⁰⁷⁵ but, while retaining this role for the Director General of Fair Trading, the 1999 Regulations also created similar duties and powers in a number of other bodies (“qualifying bodies”), entrusted with “watch-dog” roles for particular commercial sectors, but one of which—the Consumers’ Association—is a private body with a very general concern with the protection of the interests of consumers. Subsequently, there have been a number of adjustments to the measures available to prevent the use of unfair contract terms. First, the office of the Director General of Fair Trading was replaced with a body corporate, the OFT, ²⁰⁷⁶ but in 2014 the OFT was itself abolished and its powers under the 1999 Regulations transferred to the Competition and Markets Authority (CMA). ²⁰⁷⁷ Secondly, Pt 8 of the Enterprise Act 2002 put in place a further layer of support for the protection of consumers by giving a number of “enforcers” strengthened powers to obtain courts orders (known as “enforcement orders”) against businesses which do not comply with their legal obligations to consumers and it included failures by businesses to fulfil the requirements of fairness and of transparency under 1999 Regulations for this purpose. ²⁰⁷⁸ One effect of these changes has been to create the possibility of the cross-border policing of unfair contract terms, as “Community enforcers” recognised by other Member States and published at the European level are empowered to bring proceedings before UK courts. ²⁰⁷⁹ Finally, the enactment of the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 ²⁰⁸⁰ raises the possibility of preventive measures or criminal offences under these Regulations being used to sanction the use of unfair contract terms. ²⁰⁸¹

Policing measures and written contract terms which fail the requirement of “plain and intelligible writing”

38-324

While both art.7 of the 1993 Directive and the 1999 Regulations themselves ²⁰⁸² on their terms restrict the availability of these policing measures to unfair contract terms, the Director General of Fair Trading interpreted the policing role imposed on him by the Regulations as including a concern with their formal as well as their substantive fairness. ²⁰⁸³ Often, such a role can be justified on the basis that any failure in plainness or intelligibility of contract terms forms an element within their wider unfairness. ²⁰⁸⁴ However, the Director General took the view that these policing measures extend to written contract terms which fail the requirement of “plain and intelligible writing” in and of itself. The main argument in favour of this position rests on the following reasoning. Article 5(2) of the Directive provides that:

“... the rule on interpretation [contra proferentem which applies where a term fails as not plain and intelligible] shall not apply in the context of the procedures laid down in Article 7(2),” and art.7(2) imposes on Member States the duty to provide for action to be taken by “persons or organisations, having a legitimate interest under national law in protecting consumers” to prevent the continued use of “unfair terms”; so, although art.7 refers expressly only to “unfair terms”, art.5(2)’s exclusion of one aspect of its application under art.7 assumes that it will otherwise figure in the role accorded to persons by Member States under art.7. The main difficulty with this line of argument is that it appears to run contrary to the approach of the European Court of Justice in Commission v Spain, where it held that the reason why the rule of interpretation contra proferentem of ambiguous terms found in art.5 should not apply in proceedings under art.7 lies in the need to enhance the effectiveness of preventive proceedings against unfair terms ²⁰⁸⁵ since otherwise a potentially unfair term could be rescued by interpretation. This reasoning appears to assume, therefore, that proceedings under art.7 cannot be founded merely on a failure of term to be plain and intelligible and this position has apparently been accepted at first instance. ²⁰⁸⁶ Whatever the proper view as to the question of the availability of policing measures under art.7 of the 1993 Directive, the various “enforcers” acting under Pt 8 of the Enterprise Act 2002 enjoy certain powers to intervene under that Act on the basis of a failure to fulfil the requirement of plain and intelligible writing in the 1993 Directive since the Consumer Injunctions Directive ²⁰⁸⁷ (which Pt 8 implemented) required the introduction of injunctions aimed at the protection of the collective interests of consumers where there is “any act contrary” to the directives listed in its annex, and this annex includes the 1993 Directive in toto. ²⁰⁸⁸

The role of the Competition and Markets Authority (CMA) and “qualifying bodies”

38-325

Until March 28, 2013 the 1999 Regulations imposed on the OFT a duty to consider any complaint made to it that any contract term drawn up for general use is unfair, unless the complaint appeared to it to be frivolous or vexatious or unless a “qualifying body” had notified it that it would consider the complaint. ²⁰⁸⁹ However, as from that date a new regime has applied to preventive measures taken under the 1999 Regulations and, from April 1, 2014, the OFT was abolished and the lead role in respect of the regulatory control of unfair terms in consumer contracts placed in the hands of the newly-formed Competition and Markets Authority (CMA). ²⁰⁹⁰ Under this regime, the CMA or a “qualifying body” may consider complaints that any contract term drawn up for general use is unfair. ²⁰⁹¹ Where the CMA agrees to consider a complaint, it comes under a duty to do so; similarly, where a qualifying body agrees to consider a complaint, it comes under a duty to do so, but it must also notify the CMA of its agreement to do so. ²⁰⁹² The Regulations empower the CMA or, subject to certain conditions, a qualifying body to apply to a court for an injunction against any person appearing to them to be using, or recommending for use, an unfair term drawn up for general use in contracts concluded with consumers. ²⁰⁹³ They specify that the decision by either the CMA or a qualifying body whether or not to apply for an injunction under reg.12 is subject to a requirement of giving reasons where it has resulted from a complaint which it was under a duty to consider. ²⁰⁹⁴ In deciding whether or not to apply for an injunction, they may, if they consider it appropriate to do so, have regard to any undertaking given to them by or on behalf of any person as to the continued use of such a term in contracts concluded with consumers. ²⁰⁹⁵ The 1999 Regulations empower a court to which the CMA or a qualifying body has applied to grant an injunction on such terms as it thinks fit, and this may relate not only to use of a particular contract term drawn up for general use but to any similar term or term having like effect used or recommended for use by any person. ²⁰⁹⁶ They also give to the CMA and qualifying bodies powers to obtain documents and information from any person in order to facilitate the consideration of a complaint submitted to them as to an unfair term or to ascertain whether a person has complied with an undertaking or court order as to the continued use of a term in contracts concluded with consumers. ²⁰⁹⁷ Finally, the Regulations require the CMA to publish details of any undertakings made to it or to a court, or order or other outcome of any application made by a court and empowers it to arrange for the dissemination of information and advice concerning the operation of the Regulations. ²⁰⁹⁸

Application of the fairness test in preventive proceedings

38-326

There are some differences in the way in which a court undertakes the assessment of a term under the Regulations for the purposes of preventive proceedings and for the purposes of proceedings where the issue of the unfairness of a term arises between a seller or supplier and a consumer. So, in particular, art.5 of the Directive provides that:

“In the case of contracts where all or certain terms offered to the consumer are in writing, these terms must always be drafted in plain, intelligible language. Where there is doubt about the meaning of a term, the interpretation most favourable to the consumer shall prevail. This rule on interpretation shall not apply in the context of the procedures laid down in Article 7(2).” ²⁰⁹⁹

In Commission v Spain ²¹⁰⁰ the European Court held that:

“The distinction made in Article 5 of the directive concerning the applicable rule of interpretation, as between actions involving an individual consumer and actions for cessation which involve persons or organisations representative of the collective interest of consumers may be accounted for by the different aims pursued by those actions. In the former case, the courts or competent bodies are required to make an assessment in concreto of the unfair character of a term contained in a contract which has already been concluded, while in the latter case it is their task to assess in abstracto the unfair character of a term which may be incorporated into contracts which have not yet been concluded. In the former case, an interpretation favourable to the individual consumer concerned benefits him or her immediately. By contrast, in the latter case, in order to obtain, by way of prevention, the most favourable result for consumers as a whole, it is not necessary, where there is doubt, to interpret the term in a manner favourable to them. Accordingly, an objective interpretation makes it possible to prohibit more frequently the use of an unintelligible or ambiguous term, which results in wider consumer protection.” ²¹⁰¹

So, the CMA or qualifying body (and, ultimately, a court) in considering preventive proceedings under the 1999 Regulations must assess the unfair character of a term which may be incorporated into contracts which have not yet been concluded in the abstract. Given that in this type of proceedings it is not possible to have regard to all the actual circumstances attending the conclusion of any particular contract, nor to have regard to other terms of any particular contract (or contract to which it is related), the court should take “into account the effects of contemplated or typical relationships between the contracting parties”. ²¹⁰² For this purpose, it is submitted that the standard of the “average consumer” is an appropriate viewpoint from which to assess the potential for unfairness as well as the plain and intelligible character of the terms. ²¹⁰³

Nature of relief: injunctions and declarations

38-327

❗ In Office of Fair Trading v Foxtons Ltd ²¹⁰⁴ the Court of Appeal considered the ambit, nature and appropriate content of relief to be granted by a court on the success of proceedings brought by the OFT (and, therefore, other “qualifying bodies”). ²¹⁰⁵ It held, first, that the preventive measures foreseen by art.7 of the 1993 Directive and provided for by reg.12 of the 1999 Regulations were intended to cover existing as well as future contracts. ²¹⁰⁶ Secondly, it held that the decision whether or not to grant an injunction will depend on the circumstances of the case. ²¹⁰⁷ In this respect, Waller L.J. observed that:

“... in a situation where on a general challenge a court has found a term or terms in a set of standard conditions in use in current contracts unfair, it must be a proper exercise of its power to grant an injunction to prevent enforcement of that term or terms in existing contracts.” ²¹⁰⁸

Arden L.J. took a rather more qualified approach, noting that the granting of an injunction in this context must accord with the general principles of Community law and so be both effective and proportionate (so that the interference with the rights of the business by the grant of the injunction is justified by the need to protect the consumer interests). ²¹⁰⁹ Thirdly:

“[t]he terms of the injunction (or declaration) can only ultimately be worked out against the background of precisely what the court has found to be unfair.” ²¹¹⁰

Fourthly, a court’s decision in relation to preventive proceedings does not bind a subsequent court by way of res judicata in deciding an individual challenge to the fairness of a term by a consumer, ²¹¹¹ so that a term not found unfair generally in preventive proceedings may be held unfair in the particular circumstances of the case in relation to an individual consumer. ²¹¹² On the other hand:

“... if there is an injunction which extends to existing contracts, the ability of the supplier to initiate or participate in [individual] proceedings will be governed by the terms of that injunction.” ²¹¹³

Finally, a finding in preventive proceedings that a term or terms in standard consumer contracts is or are unfair may appropriately be the subject of a declaration by the court, even though this may necessarily have an effect on non-parties to those proceedings. ²¹¹⁴ It is submitted that the approach of the Court of Appeal is consistent with the later decision of the Court of Justice of the EU in Invitel.

²¹¹⁵ ❗ There the Court of Justice held that effective implementation of the “deterrent nature and dissuasive purpose” of the preventive measures under art.7 of the Directive requires that a term in a set of standard terms used by a seller or supplier with a number of consumers which is declared unfair in an action for an injunction brought against that seller or supplier should:

“not [be] binding on either the consumers who are parties to the actions for an injunction or on those who have concluded with that seller or supplier a contract to which the same [standard terms] apply.” ²¹¹⁶

It is submitted that this result can be effected by an English court in exercising its discretion under reg.12(3) and (4).

Burden of proof in proceedings

38-328

It has been argued that the better view is that, as between the parties to a consumer contract, there is no burden of proof as to the issue of the fairness of a contract term as normally understood, but rather that the court should make a neutral assessment of this issue on the basis of those facts adduced by the parties to the proceedings. ²¹¹⁷ It is submitted that this should also be the case as regards an application brought by the CMA or one of the “qualifying bodies” for the grant of an injunction. ²¹¹⁸ Indeed, this is a context where a neutral assessment is even more appropriate given that the assessment is made “in the abstract” (for the generality of circumstances in which the allegedly unfair term is used or recommended for use) than is the case as between the parties to the consumer contract, where the particular circumstances of the conclusion of the contract in question may be relevant. ²¹¹⁹ On the other hand, it is submitted that a court will not grant an injunction against a business on such an application unless it is satisfied that the term in question is unfair, whether or not this is expressed in terms of placing a burden of proof on the applicant body.

“Qualifying bodies”

38-329

The 1999 Regulations extend the power to police unfair terms in consumer contracts to a range of bodies other than the CMA, these being termed “qualifying bodies”. Rather than providing a general definition or set of criteria by which a body may qualify for the purpose of bringing proceedings for an injunction under the 1999 Regulations, the latter simply list in Sch.1 those bodies or classes of body which in law do so. ²¹²⁰ Apart from the Consumers’ Association, the list includes regulators of former public utilities, such as the Gas and Electricity Markets Authority but also, at a local level, every weights and measures authority (known as “Trading Standard Service”). ²¹²¹ Where a qualifying body agrees to consider a complaint, it comes under a duty to consider that complaint and must notify the CMA of its agreement to consider that complaint. ²¹²² A qualifying body is empowered to bring proceedings for an injunction against any person appearing to that body to be using, or recommending for use, an unfair term drawn up for general use in contracts with consumers, subject to a condition of prior notification of 14 days to the CMA unless the CMA consents to a shorter period of notification. ²¹²³ In deciding whether or not to apply for an injunction, a qualifying body may take into account any undertaking given to it as to the continued use of the term and bears a duty to give reasons for its decision. ²¹²⁴ Qualifying bodies enjoy very similar powers to obtain documents and information as does the CMA ²¹²⁵ and the courts’ power to grant injunctions or declarations is the same as for proceedings brought by the CMA. ²¹²⁶

“Enforcement orders” under the Enterprise Act 2002

38-330

In addition to the powers provided by the 1999 Regulations, the CMA and other persons or bodies may enjoy powers of enforcement under the Enterprise Act 2002. Under Pt 8 of that Act a number of bodies, termed “enforcers”, may apply to the court for an “enforcement order” against a person to stop breaking legislation enacted for the benefit of consumers. ²¹²⁷ These powers have been noted earlier. ²¹²⁸

Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008

38-331

As has been seen, these Regulations implement in UK law the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005. ²¹²⁹ They set a very broad standard of commercial behaviour for traders in relation to consumers in a general provision which prohibits practices which contrary to “professional diligence” “materially distort or are likely to materially distort the economic behaviour of the average consumer with regard to the product”, ²¹³⁰ (“product” here meaning “any goods or service” ²¹³¹). This standard is fleshed out by the setting of two main examples of unfair commercial practices (misleading actions and misleading omissions and aggressive practices ²¹³²) and is supplemented by a black list of particular commercial practices which “are in all circumstances considered unfair”. ²¹³³ “Unfair commercial practices” are prohibited and the 2008 Regulations create a series of offences relating to unfair commercial practices and a number of enforcement powers in public bodies. ²¹³⁴ In the result, where, for example, a trader

“knowingly or recklessly engages in a commercial practice which contravenes the requirements of professional diligence ... and the practice materially distorts or is likely to materially distort the economic behaviour of the average consumer with regard to the product”, then the trader is guilty of a criminal offence and for this purpose

“a trader who engages in a commercial practice without regard to whether the practice contravenes the requirements of professional diligence shall be deemed recklessly to engage in the practice, whether or not the trader has reason for believing that the practice might contravene those requirements.” ²¹³⁵

In 2014 the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 were amended so as to create rights to (civil) redress in consumers in respect of certain categories of unfair commercial practices, i.e. “misleading actions” and “aggressive commercial practice”. ²¹³⁶ The consumer's right of redress may include a “right to unwind” the contract after rejection of goods or services (where the consumer has a general right to refund), a right to a discount and a right to damages. ²¹³⁷

Use or recommendation for use of contract terms as a “commercial practice”

38-332

The Court of Justice has noted that “commercial practice” is given a “particularly wide definition” by the 2005 Directive ²¹³⁸ and the 2005 Directive makes clear that such a commercial practice may take place “before, during and after a commercial transaction in relation to a product”. ²¹³⁹ This strongly suggests that the use or recommendation for use by a trader of contract terms with consumers may constitute a business-to-consumer “commercial practice” for the purposes of the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005, ²¹⁴⁰ and this has been assumed by the Court of Justice in Pereni#ová ²¹⁴¹ and decided by the UK High Court. ²¹⁴² In particular, the use of standard terms which fail the requirement of transparency may be held to constitute a misleading action within the meaning of the 2008 Regulations. ²¹⁴³

38-333

If the use or recommendation for use of unfair terms by a business in their dealings with consumers is held to constitute an unfair commercial practice, then the preventive measures and, subject to their own conditions, criminal offences provided for the policing of unfair commercial practices would apply ²¹⁴⁴ in addition to the particular consequences foreseen by the 1999 Regulations themselves. This is compatible with the “full harmonisation” required by the 2005 Directive ²¹⁴⁵ since the requirements of the 1999 Regulations reflect exactly and do not go beyond the substantive requirements of the 1993 Directive and therefore fall within the rule in the 2005 Directive which allows special EU rules to derogate from the general rules in 2005 “framework” Directive. ²¹⁴⁶ However, as has been noted, since their amendment in 2014, the commission of a misleading action may also attract “rights to redress” in consumers, these including, inter alia, a right to unwind a contract where the trader with which he has made it has engaged in an unfair commercial practice in relation to the goods or services provided under the contract. ²¹⁴⁷ This possible consequence of the use by a trader of unfair standard terms is compatible with the 2005 Directive as the latter does not affect national contract law. ²¹⁴⁸ Where such a right to redress exists, a consumer who has concluded a contract containing an unfair contract term may be able to escape the binding force of the contract as a whole, and not merely the binding force of the particular term in question (which is the normal consequence of a finding that a term is unfair). ²¹⁴⁹ For this purpose, however, it must be recalled that both the scope of protection for consumers and the tests of unfairness of commercial practices and of contract terms are distinct under the two sets of Regulations (following the Directives which they implement) so that, in particular, the mere finding of an unfair commercial practice will not render any related contract term unfair. ²¹⁵⁰

^{2075.} 1994 Regulations reg.8.

^{2076.} Enterprise Act 2002 ss.1, 2. This change came into effect on April 1, 2003: Enterprise Act 2002 (Commencement No.2, Transitional and Transitory Provisions) Order 2003 (SI 2003/766) art.2.

^{2077.} Below, para.38-325. As will later be explained, on the bringing into force of Pt 2 of the Consumer Rights Act 2015 on October 1, 2015, the 1999 Regulations are revoked and the CMA and other bodies (termed “regulators”) enjoy a new set of powers of enforcement of the new law governing unfair terms in consumer contracts which the 2015 Act contains: below, paras 38-387 et seq. For discussion of the temporal application of these new powers see below, para.38-335.

^{2078.} See further below, para.38-330.

^{2079.} Below paras 38-330 and above 38-128—38-129.

^{2080.} SI 2008/1277.

^{2081.} See below, paras 38-331—38-333.

^{2082.} 1999 Regulations regs 12-14.

^{2083.} OFT, Unfair Contract Terms, Bulletin No.2 (September, 1996), p.9.

^{2084.} Above, paras 38-259—38-260

^{2085.} Commission v Spain (C-70/03) [2004] E.C.R. I-0799 at paras 16 and 17.

^{2086.} OFT v Abbey National Plc [2008] EWHC 875 (Comm), [2008] 2 All E.R. (Comm) 625 at [86]. While upheld by the Court of Appeal, the latter’s decision was reversed by the SC on other grounds [2009] EWCA Civ 116, [2009] 2 W.L.R. 1286; [2009] UKSC 6, [2010] 1 A.C. 696 (above, paras 38-226—38-227). The point referred to in this paragraph was not in issue before either the Court of Appeal or the Supreme Court: [2009] EWCA Civ 116 at [38].

^{2087.} Directive 98/27 on injunctions for the protection of consumers’ interests [1998] O.J. L166/51, which was repealed and replaced by codified Directive 2009/22/EC on injunctions for the protection of consumers’ interests, O.J. L110/30 (in force December 29, 2009).

^{2088.} Directive 98/27 art.1(2); Annex, No.9; Directive 2009/22/EC art1(2), Annex 1, No.5.

^{2089.} 1999 Regulations reg.10(1) as in force before March 28, 2013. On the earlier work of the OFT, see Bright (2000) 20 L.S. 331.

^{2090.} Enterprise and Regulatory Reform Act 2013 (Competition) (Consequential, Transitional and Saving Provisions) (No.2) Order 2014 (SI 2014/549) (“Order 2014/549”) Sch.1(2) para.26;

Public Bodies (The Office of Fair Trading Transfer of Consumer Advice Scheme Function and Modification of Enforcement Functions) Order 2013 (SI 2013/783) ("Order 2013/783") art.10.

- 2091. 1999 Regulations reg.10(1) and 10(2) (as amended by Order 2013/783 art.10; Order 2014/549 Sch.1(2) para.26). Order 2013/783 art.10(4) revoked 1999 Regulations reg.11 (which had governed the consideration of complaints by qualifying bodies).
- 2092. 1999 Regulations reg.10(3) (as amended by Order 2013/783 art.10; Order 2014/549 Sch.1(2) para.26).
- 2093. 1999 Regulations reg.12(1) and (2) (as amended by Order 2014/549 Sch.1(2) para.26).
- 2094. 1999 Regulations reg.10(4) (as amended by Order 2013/783 art.10; Order 2014/549 Sch.1(2) para.26).
- 2095. 1999 Regulations reg.10(5) (as amended by Order 2013/783 art.10; Order 2014/549 Sch.1(2) para.26).
- 2096. 1999 Regulations reg.12(3) and (4).
- 2097. 1999 Regulations reg.13 (as amended by Order 2013/783 art.10; Order 2014/549 Sch.1(2) para.26).
- 2098. 1999 Regulations reg.15 (as amended by Order 2014/549 Sch.1(2) para.26). A qualifying body must notify the CMA of any undertakings given to it by a person as to the continued use of a term which it considers unfair in contracts concluded with consumers, the outcome of any application made by it to a court under reg.12 and of the terms of any undertaking given to, or order made by, the court and of the outcome of any application made by it to enforce a previous order of the court: 1999 Regulations reg.14 (as amended by Order 2014/549 Sch.1(2) para.26).
- 2099. 1993 Directive art.5.
- 2100. Commission v Spain (C-70/03) [2004] E.C.R. I-0799.
- 2101. C-70/03 at [16].
- 2102. Director General of Fair Trading v First National Bank Plc [2001] UKHL 52, [2002] 1 A.C. 481 at [33], per Lord Steyn.
- 2103. Above, paras 38-041 and 38-320.
- 2104. [2009] EWCA Civ 288, [2010] 1 W.L.R. 663.
- 2105. Below, para.38-329 and cf. above, para.38-325.
- 2106. [2009] EWCA Civ 288 at [43]–[44], [63]–[70] (Waller and Arden L.JJ. respectively). cf. [2009] EWCA Civ 288 at [86] (Moore-Bick L.J.). On the replacement of the OFT by the CMA for these purposes, see above, para.38-325. On the position of "qualifying bodies" see below, para.38-329.
- 2107. [2009] EWCA Civ 288 at [73] (Arden L.J.) and [49] (Waller L.J.).
- 2108. [2009] EWCA Civ 288 at [48].
- 2109. [2009] EWCA Civ 288 at [73] (Arden L.J.) and see [99] (Moore-Bick L.J.).
- 2110. [2009] EWCA Civ 288 at [51] (Waller L.J.) and similarly at [73] (Arden L.J.).
- 2111. [2009] EWCA Civ 288 at [71] (Arden L.J.).

- 2112. [2009] EWCA Civ 288 at [46] (Waller L.J.).
- 2113. [2009] EWCA Civ 288 at [71], per Arden L.J. cf. [2009] EWCA Civ 288 at [86] and [96] Moore-Bick L.J.
- 2114. [2009] EWCA Civ 288 at [71], per Arden L.J. cf. [2009] EWCA Civ 288 at [86] and [96], per Moore-Bick L.J. Subsequently, Mann J. held that certain categories of terms in the contracts concluded by the defendant in these earlier proceedings (Foxtons Ltd, an estate agent supplying management services under “letting only service contracts” to non-business (“consumer”) landlords) were unfair within the meaning of the Regulations: [2009] EWHC 1681 (Ch), [2009] 29 E.G. 98 (C.S.). The final order made by Mann J. identified these categories of terms, declared them unfair and not binding on the consumers with whom they had already been made and forbade the defendant from using or recommending them for use, save with the prior permission of the OFT and from relying on these same categories of terms appearing in existing contracts with their consumer customers: http://webarchive.nationalarchives.gov.uk/20140402142426/http://www.offt.gov.uk/shared_offt/reports/Foxtons/Se.
- 2115.  Nemzeti Fogyasztóvédelmi Hatóság v Invitel Távközlési Zrt (C-472/10) of April 26, 2012 and cf. above, para.38-288. cf. Biuro podróży ‘Partner’ sp. z o.o. sp.k. w D#browie Górnicej v Prezes Urz#du Ochrony Konkurencji i Konsumentów (C-119/15) of December 25, 2016 at para.40 (trader fined for use of terms equivalent to a standard condition of business declared unlawful in other proceedings and placed on a national register must have a right to challenge the assessment of unfairness and the penalty as a result of the right to an effective judicial remedy under art.47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union).
- 2116. C-472/10 of April 26, 2012 at paras 37–38.
- 2117. See above, paras 38-307—38-310.
- 2118. cf. Director General of Fair Trading v First National Bank Plc [2001] 1 W.L.R. 98, 112 where counsel for the DGFT conceded that it was for him to show that the term used by the defendant bank was unfair.
- 2119. Above, para.38-309.
- 2120. 1999 Regulations reg.1 “qualifying body”.
- 2121. The full list is as follows: the Information Commissioner; the Gas and Electricity Markets Authority; the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation (which took over the functions of the Director General of Electricity Supply for Northern Ireland and the Director General of Gas for Northern Ireland); the Water Services Regulation Authority; the Office of Rail Regulation; every weights and measures authority in Great Britain; the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment in Northern Ireland; the Financial Conduct Authority (FCA, which took over the powers and role of the Financial Services Authority; the functions of the FCA under the 1999 Regulations are to be treated as functions of the FCA under the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000: 1999 Regulations reg.16 (as amended)); the Consumers’ Association: 1999 Regulations Sch.1 as amended.
- 2122. 1999 Regulations reg.10(3) (as amended by Order 2013/783 art.10; Order 2014/549 Sch.1(2) para.26).
- 2123. 1999 Regulations reg.12(2) (as amended by Order 2014/549 Sch.1(2) para.26).
- 2124. 1999 Regulations regs 10(4) and (5) (as amended by Order 2013/783 art.10; Order 2014/549 Sch.1(2) para.26).
- 2125. 1999 Regulations reg.13(2)–(5) (as amended by Order 2013/783 art.10; Order 2014/549 Sch.1(2) para.26).

- 2126. 1999 Regulations reg.12(3).
- 2127. 2002 Act Pt 8 came into force on June 20, 2003: The Enterprise Act 2002 (Commencement No.3, Transitional and Transitory Provisions and Savings) Order 2003 (SI 2003/1397) art.2. It replaced the Fair Trading Act 1973 Pt III and the Stop Now Orders (EC Directive) Regulations 2001 (SI 2001/1422). Its provisions concerning “community infringements” implemented into UK law Directive 98/27 on injunctions for the protection of consumers’ interests (itself repealed and replaced by Directive 2009/22/EC on injunctions for the protection of consumers’ interests (in force December 29, 2009)). It has been held that the conduct of a person taking place before the coming into force of Pt 8 of the Enterprise Act 2002 can form the basis of granting an order under it: Office of Fair Trading v MB Designs (Scotland) Ltd [2005] S.L.T. 691 at [23] OH of the Ct of Sess, where Pt 8 is discussed more generally. The powers contained in the Enterprise Act 2002 were extended by the Enterprise Act 2002 (Amendment) Regulations 2006 (SI 2006/3363) implementing arts 4(6) and 13(4) of the Regulation 2006/2004 on co-operation between national authorities responsible for the enforcement of consumer protection laws (“the Regulation on consumer protection co-operation”), as amended by Directive 2005/29.
- 2128. Above, paras 38-128—38-129.
- 2129. Directive 2005/29/EC concerning unfair business-to-consumer commercial practices [2005] O.J. L149/22 and see above, paras 38-147 et seq.
- 2130. Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1277) reg.3(1)–(3). The Regulations came into force on May 26, 2008.
- 2131. SI 2008/1277 reg.2(1) “product”.
- 2132. SI 2008/1277 regs 3(2), 3(4)(a)–(d) and 5–7.
- 2133. SI 2008/1277 reg.3(4)(d); Sch.1.
- 2134. SI 2008/1277 Pts 3 and 4 respectively.
- 2135. SI 2008/1277 reg.8. Regulation 13 sets the penalties for these offences as being “on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum and, on conviction on indictment, to a fine or imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years or both”.
- 2136. See generally above, para.38-160. These amendments came into force on October 1, 2014: SI 2014/870 reg.1(3).
- 2137. SI 2014/870 reg.2 inserting regs 27E–27K into the 2008 Regulations.
- 2138. Total Belgium & Galatea (C-261/07 and C-299/07) at para.49.
- 2139. 2005 Directive art.3(1).
- 2140. It would appear that the question whether such a “commercial practice” may consist of an isolated event would not or would only rarely arise in the context of use or recommendation for use of unfair contract terms which have not been individually negotiated, as such a use would normally rest on a continuing practice of the business using standard terms in their dealings with consumers on more than one isolated occasion: cf. above, para.38-155.
- 2141. Pereni#ová v SOS finance, spol. sro (C-453/10) paras 37–41 (although the issue before the CJEU was whether the finding of an unfair commercial practice under the 2005 Directive would in itself render a term unfair and so not binding on the consumer under the 1993 Directive, on above, para.38-252). A.G. Trstenjak in her opinion in Pereni#ová of November 29, 2011 at para.90 in the course of a wider discussion of the 1993 and 2005 directives observed that “it is conceivable that the unfairness of a commercial practice consists in the very use in consumer contracts of unfair terms within the meaning of Directive 93/13. [citation] The trader’s use of such terms is likely to be seen as a misleading act, since false information is provided or the consumer is unclear as to the actual scale of the contractual rights and obligations, especially with regard to rights and obligations arising from the clauses which are unfair and so invalid for the consumer”.

2142. OFT v Ashbourne Management Services Ltd [2011] EWHC 1237 (Ch), [2011] E.C.C. 31 especially at [227] and [240].

2143. On “misleading actions” see above, paras 38-167—38-169; on the significance of the requirement of transparency, see above, paras 38-317 et seq.

2144. Above, para.38-158.

2145. Above, para.38-147.

2146. Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005 art.3(4), above, para.38-149 where it is explained that this applies only to national rules implementing the requirements of a EU directive without exercise of the power to extend the protection for consumers under a “minimum harmonisation” clause, as where the latter applies there is a six-year transitional rule in the 2005 Directive art.3(5). cf. the position under the Consumer Rights Act 2015 which (to an extent) extends the protection foreseen by the 1993 Directive: see below, paras 38-388—38-394.

2147. See above, paras 38-160 et seq.

2148. Directive 2005/29 art.3(2), recital 9, above, para.38-148.

2149. 1999 Regulations reg.8(1) and (2), above, para.38-111 et seq which explains that where a term is held unfair and not binding under the 1999 Regulations the contract as a whole continues to bind the parties as long as it is capable of continuing in existence without the unfair term.

2150. Pereni#ová v SOS finance, spol. sro (C-453/10) para.41, above para.38-252.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts
Section 6. - The Control of Unfair Contract Terms
(d) - The New Law: The Consumer Rights Act 2015
(i) - Introduction and Overview

Background

38-334

As earlier explained, the Consumer Rights Act 2015 ²¹⁵¹ ("the 2015 Act" or "the Act") revokes and replaces the 1999 Regulations as well as removing from the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 provisions that could apply to the parties to a consumer contract. ²¹⁵² The Act is also concerned to introduce significant reforms to the law governing the enforcement of consumer protection laws, domestic and European, with amendments, inter alia, of Pt 8 of the Enterprise Act 2002 so as to create a new possibility for courts to order "enhanced consumer measures" to individuals affected by breach of a consumer protection measure. ²¹⁵³ These changes affect the powers of regulators in respect of the prevention of unfair contract terms.

Temporal application of the 2015 Act's provisions on unfair terms

38-335

 The Act received Royal Assent on March 26, 2015; its substantive provisions governing unfair contract terms were brought into force generally on October 1, 2015. ²¹⁵⁴ The Act provides that the Secretary of State may make "transitional, transitory or saving provision in connection with the coming into force of any provision of this Act" by order made by statutory instrument. ²¹⁵⁵ Parts 1 and 2 of the Act were brought into force so as to apply to contracts made on or after October 1, 2015. ²¹⁵⁶

Overview of the 2015 Act

38-336

In order to give effect to the policies pursued by the Act, Pt 1 first defines a new, consistent terminology to be used to describe the "consumer" and the "trader" ²¹⁵⁷ and then sets out the principal substantive rights to be enjoyed by consumers under each of a series of types of contract: "contracts to supply goods" or "goods contracts" (which are "sales contracts", contracts for the hire of goods, hire-purchase agreements and "contracts for the transfer of goods") (Ch.2) ²¹⁵⁸; "contracts to supply digital content" or "digital content contracts" (Ch.3) ²¹⁵⁹; and "contracts to supply a service" or "services contracts" (Ch.4). ²¹⁶⁰ So, for example, Ch.2 governing contracts to supply goods provides for the inclusion of terms in these contracts that the goods are of satisfactory quality, fit for any particular purpose made known to the trader by the consumer, and are as described, these terms being modelled closely on the wellknown statutory implied terms found, inter alia, in the Sale of Goods Act 1979 and the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982. ²¹⁶¹ Chapters 2 to 4 of the Act are discussed in detail later in this chapter. ²¹⁶² The following paragraphs refer to the Explanatory Notes accompanying the Consumer Rights Act 2015. ²¹⁶³

38-337

Part 2 of the Act contains provisions which seek to re-implement the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Directive 1993 ("the 1993 Directive") in the UK, replacing (and revoking) the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999 ("1999 Regulations") ²¹⁶⁴ and, in doing so, making limited but significant changes to the ambit of the controls on unfair terms in consumer contracts.

38-338

Part 3 of the Act makes "miscellaneous and general" provision on various matters, of which its clauses governing enforcement powers of regulatory authorities are most significant for present purposes, their details being contained in Sch.5 (investigatory powers) and Sch.7 (which provides, inter alia, for "enhanced consumer measures" under Pt 8 of the Enterprise Act 2002). ²¹⁶⁵ Both these changes affect the law governing the control on unfair terms in consumer contracts, as will appear in the following paragraphs.

The strategies of the 2015 Act in relation to contract terms

38-339

⚠ There are four principal strategies adopted by the Act in relation to the control of unfair terms in consumer contracts. ²¹⁶⁶ ⚠

38-340

First, as earlier noted, implementation of the Directive on unfair terms in consumer contracts of 1993, earlier effected by the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999, is effected by the Act, principally by Pt 2. In general, and following the pattern set by the 1999 Regulations, these provisions follow closely the language of the 1993 Directive, but the Act extends its protection, notably as regards the category of persons protected by the requirements of fairness and plain, intelligible language by broadening the definition of "consumer", ²¹⁶⁷ by including individually negotiated terms under the test of unfairness, ²¹⁶⁸ and by imposing an additional requirement for the application of the exclusion from the test of unfairness of terms relating to the main subject matter of the contract or the price/quality ratio allowed by art.4(2) of the 1993 Directive in response to its interpretation by the Supreme Court in the Abbey National Plc v The Office of Fair Trading. ²¹⁶⁹ Moreover three further examples are included in the "indicative list" of terms which may be unfair, ²¹⁷⁰ and all these terms are thereby specifically excluded from the possible application of the exemption for terms on the main subject matter and relating to the price provided by s.64 of the Act. ²¹⁷¹

38-341

Secondly, the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 is amended so as no longer to apply to terms in "consumer contracts" or "consumer notices" as defined by the 2015 Act: the 1977 Act is to apply only to other notices and to terms in other contracts, i.e. those between traders and those between individuals who are neither traders nor consumers. ²¹⁷² The provisions so amended are of two types. First, there are provisions expressly governing contracts between a person seeking to exclude or limit their "business liability" as against a person "dealing as consumer", where the provisions governing, and references to, contracts within this category are deleted, as is the definition of "dealing as consumer" for this purpose. ²¹⁷³ Secondly, there are provisions governing contracts between a person seeking to exclude or limit their "business liability" for negligence as against any person, whether in respect of death or personal injury or other loss or damage. ²¹⁷⁴ Moreover, s.2 of the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 is amended so as not to apply to a "consumer notice", ²¹⁷⁵ i.e. "a notice to the extent that it relates to rights or obligations as between a trader and a consumer, or purports to exclude or restrict a trader's liability to a consumer". ²¹⁷⁶ Similarly, s.3 of the Misrepresentation Act 1967 is amended so as no longer to apply to "a term in a consumer contract within the meaning of Pt 2 of the Consumer Rights Act 2015". ²¹⁷⁷ The details of these amendments are discussed in Vol.I Ch.15 Exemption Clauses ²¹⁷⁸ and Ch.7 Misrepresentation respectively. ²¹⁷⁹ Here, though, it should be noted that, while this strategy has the effect of placing most (though not all) of the law governing the validity of terms in consumer contracts within the Consumer Rights Act, ²¹⁸⁰ it has also the effect of making the application of the legislation (the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 or the Misrepresentation Act 1967 s.3 on the one hand, the Consumer Rights Act on the other) turn on the distinction between a person who contracts as a “consumer” with a “trader” within the meanings of the 2015 Act and otherwise. As will be seen, the definition of “consumer” provided by the Act is fact-sensitive and, therefore, in some cases the relevant legislation applicable will be difficult to determine. ²¹⁸¹

38-342

Thirdly, Pt 1 of the Act provides very widely that a term in the types of contract to which it applies (i.e. “contracts to supply goods”, “contracts to supply digital content”, and “contracts to supply a service”) ²¹⁸² is not binding on the consumer to the extent that it would exclude or restrict the trader's liability arising under a number of the substantive provisions which it sets out ²¹⁸³ (such as in respect of breach of the terms as to description, quality or fitness for purpose, etc. of goods inserted into contracts to supply goods ²¹⁸⁴ or under rules on delivery of goods or the passing of risk ²¹⁸⁵). These provisions will be discussed in the context of the new provisions to which they relate. ²¹⁸⁶

38-343

❗ Fourthly, the Act extends the enforcement measures (injunctions against and undertakings by traders) which it puts in place for the control of unfair terms in Pt 2 of the Act (and detailed in Sch.3) to contract terms rendered not binding on consumers under Pt 1 of the Act, as well as “consumer notices” also rendered not binding on consumers under Pt 2 of the Act. ²¹⁸⁷ ❗

38-344

It will be seen, therefore, that the Consumer Rights Act 2015 seeks to extend the framework governing terms in consumer contracts well-known from the 1999 Regulations (and reflecting closely the 1993 Directive) so as to cover “consumer notices” and the framework of the enforcement measures at present provided for unfair terms in consumer contracts by the 1999 Regulations so as to cover a range of invalid exclusions of liability in traders to consumers. By contrast, it subsumes the control of the exclusion of liability for misrepresentation (formerly specially governed by the Misrepresentation Act 1967 s.3) in traders to consumers under the general scheme of control of unfair terms and unfair notices which it provides. The following paragraphs will discuss the treatment by the Act of unfair contract terms under the following headings: the relationship of the Act's provisions on unfair terms to EU law ²¹⁸⁸; the scope of the controls on contract terms and notices in Pt 2 of the Act ²¹⁸⁹; contract terms and notices not binding on the consumer where assessed as unfair ²¹⁹⁰; contract terms and notices not binding on the consumer in all circumstances ²¹⁹¹; the requirement for transparency ²¹⁹²; choice of law ²¹⁹³; and the enforcement of rules governing unfair contract terms and notices. ²¹⁹⁴

^{2151.} The Act is accompanied by a set of Explanatory Notes prepared by the Department for Business, Innovation and Skills (“Explanatory Notes 2015”).

^{2152.} Above, para.38-196.

^{2153.} Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.79; Sch.7 and see above, para.38-129 and below, para.38-389.

^{2154.} The Consumer Rights Act 2015 (Commencement No.3, Transitional Provisions, Savings and Consequential Amendments) Order 2015 (SI 2015/1630) art.3(a)–(c) and see above, para.38-197. The Act's provisions in Pt 3 Ch.3 imposing a duty on letting agents to publicise fees were brought into force from May 27, 2015: Consumer Rights Act 2015 (Commencement) (England) Order 2015 (SI 2015/965). See also the Consumer Rights Act 2015 (Commencement No.1) Order 2015 (SI 2015/1333) (bringing into force on May 27, 2015 ss.77 and Sch.5 insofar as they relate to Ch.5 of Pt 3 (investigatory powers in relation to secondary ticketing) to the extent that they are not already in force and 82 (appointment of judges to Competition Appeal Tribunal)); Consumer Rights Act 2015 (Commencement No.2) Order 2015 (SI 2015/1584) (bringing into force certain empowering provisions in relation to s.81 (private actions in competition law) on August 3, 2015); the Consumer Rights Act 2015 (Commencement No.2 and Transitional Provision) (England) Order 2015 (SI 2015/1575) (bringing into force Ch.4 of Pt 3 of the Act (higher education and student complaints) on September 1, 2015 with transitional provisions).

2155. 2015 Act s.88.

2156.  The Consumer Rights Act 2015 (Commencement No.3, Transitional Provisions, Savings and Consequential Amendments) Order 2015 (SI 2015/1630) (the “2015 Order”) arts 3(a)–(c), 6(1), (3) and (4). The exception to this general position is found in relation to “consumer transport services” where the relevant provisions in the Act apply only from October 1, 2016: 2015 Order arts 4 and 6(2) as amended by the Consumer Rights Act 2015 (Commencement No.3, Transitional Provisions, Savings and Consequential Amendments) (Amendment) Order 2016 (SI 2016/484) art.2; and for further likely future qualifications, see above, para.38-403. The position is more complex as regards the temporal application of the new enforcement powers regarding a person’s use, proposal for use or recommendation for use of unfair contract terms foreseen by s.70(1) of the Act and contained in Sch.3, these provisions being brought into force by the Order as from October 1, 2015: 2015 Order art.3(a)–(c). As will be seen (below, para.38-388) the powers themselves concern the actions of a trader expressed in the present tense (“using, or proposing, or recommending the use” of a term or notice: 2015 Act Sch.3 para.3(1)(a)) and this indicates that, as regards conduct by the trader falling within these categories which takes place on or after October 1, 2015, the new powers in Sch.3 of the 2015 Act apply, even though the 2015 Order makes no explicit provision to this effect. However, the 2015 Order makes special transitional and saving provision in respect of investigatory powers in relation to Schs 5 and 6 of the Act: 2015 Order art.8. Moreover, in the case of the amendments to the Enterprise Act 2002 effected by s.79(1) and Sch.7 of the 2015 Act (providing for a power in a court to order “enhanced consumer measures” and brought into force on October 1, 2015 by the 2015 Order art.3(e)), s.79(2) provides expressly that they “have effect only in relation to conduct which occurs, or which is likely to occur, after the commencement of [s.79]”.

2157. 2015 Act s.2(2)–(7) “trader” and “consumer”, on which see below, paras 38-352 and 38-353—38-354 respectively. The 2015 Act s.2(1) restricts these definitions to Pt 1, but s.76(2) adopts them for the purposes of interpretation in Pt 2.

2158. 2015 Act s.3. While the Act’s provisions refer throughout Ch.2 to contracts to supply goods, the following paragraphs will use the shorter (equivalent) terminology used by the Act of “goods contracts”.

2159. 2015 Act s.33.

2160. 2015 Act s.48, which does not, however, define “service contract”.

2161. 2015 Act ss.9–11 and see Sale of Goods Act 1979 ss.13–14; Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 ss.3, 4, 8 and 9.

2162. See below, paras 38-399, 38-402 and 38-431 et seq.

2163. These were prepared by the Department of Business, Innovation and Skills (“Explanatory Notes 2015”).

2164. 2015 Act s.75; Sch.4 para.34. On the 1999 Regulations, see above, paras 38-201 et seq.

2165. See above, para.38-129 and below, para.38-388. 2015 Act Pt 3 also sets out various new rules, including for private actions in competition law (s.81); a new duty of letting agents to publicise fees (ss.83–88); and concerning “secondary ticketing” (ss.90–95).

- 2166.  The CMA has published guidance on the unfair contract terms provisions in the 2015 Act: Unfair contract terms guidance, Guidance on the unfair terms provisions in the Consumer Rights Act 2015 (CMA37, July 2015).
- 2167. 2015 Act s.2(3) and (4) as applied to Pt 2 by s.76(2), below, para.38-353.
- 2168. 2015 Act s.62 below, para.38-358.
- 2169. [2009] UKSC 6, [2010] 1 A.C. 696 on which see above, paras 38-226—38-277 and see below, paras 38-363—38-368.
- 2170. 2015 Act Sch.2 Pt 1(5), (12) and (14) and see below, para.38-360 and cf. above, para.38-273 et seq.
- 2171. 2015 Act s.64(6) and see below, para.38-367.
- 2172. Law Com. Advice (2013) S. 44 (noting that the 1977 Act may also apply to “employment contracts”).
- 2173. 2015 Act s.75; Sch.4 para.5 (amending 1977 Act s.3 “liability arising in contract”); para.6 (deleting 1977 Act s.4 “unreasonable indemnity clauses”); para.7 (deleting 1977 Act s.5 “guarantees” of consumer goods”); para.8 (amending 1977 Act s.6 “sale and hire purchase”); para.9 (amending 1977 Act s.7 “Miscellaneous contracts under which goods pass”); para.10 (deleting 1977 Act s.9 “effect of breach”) and para.11 (deleting 1977 Act s.12 “dealing as consumer”). As regards “consumers”, under the 2015 Act these terms are either governed by particular provisions (e.g. liability of seller to consumer in goods contracts by s.31, on which see below paras 38-492) or are subject to the general test of unfairness provided by s.62, on which see below, paras 38-358 et seq.
- 2174. 2015 Act s.75; Sch.4 para.4 (amending 1977 Act s.2 “negligence liability”). These terms are subject to control under ss.62 and 65 of the 2015 Act: see below, paras 38-359 and 38-377.
- 2175. 2015 Act s.75; Sch.4 para.4 (amending 1977 Act s.2 “negligence liability”). “Consumer notices” are controlled by ss.62(2), (6)–(7) and 65 of the 2015 Act, on which see below, paras 38-374—38-375, 38-377.
- 2176. 2015 Act s.61(4) and see below, para.38-356.
- 2177. 2015 Act s.75; Sch.4 para.1. These terms are controlled under the 2015 Act by the general test of unfairness provided by s.62, on which see below, paras 38-358 et seq.
- 2178. See Vol.I, paras 15-062 et seq.
- 2179. See Vol.I, para.7-147.
- 2180. It does not include all the law, either at common law (such as the rule rendering ineffective an attempted exclusion of liability for personal fraud: see Vol.I, para.7-143) or in legislation creating rules governing consumer contracts whose effect cannot be excluded or restricted (or only subject to conditions) (e.g. the Package Travel, Package Tours and Package Tours Regulations 1992 (SI 01992/3288) reg.15 (3) and (5) (“consumer” being given an extended definition for their purposes: reg.2(2)) or the Timeshare, Holiday Products, Resale and Exchange Contracts Regulations 2010 (SI 2010/2960) reg.19: see above, paras 38-134 and 38-141 respectively). Moreover, provisions in other UK legislation make the rules (or some of the rules) which they set out incapable of exclusion by contract: e.g. Consumer Protection Act 1987 s.7 (no exclusion of product liability imposed by Pt 1 of that Act).
- 2181. See Below, para.38-353.
- 2182. 2015 Act Chs 2, 3 and 4.

- 2183. 2015 Act s.31 (contracts to supply goods); s.47 (contracts to supply digital content); s.57 (contracts to supply services).
- 2184. 2015 Act ss.9–17.
- 2185. 2015 Act ss.28–29.
- 2186. Below, For discussion of the controls of exemption clauses contained in Pt 1 of the 2015 Act, see below paras 38-492, 38-524, and 38-546. As there set out, there are qualifications on this broad picture in the case of contracts for the hire of goods (s.31(5)–(6), below, para.38-492) and contracts for services (s.57 of the Act, below, para.38-546).
- 2187.  2015 Act s.70; Sch.3. In addition, acts or omissions in respect of any provision in Pts 1 and 2 of the 2015 Act are specified as possible “domestic infringements” for the purposes of s.212 of the Enterprise Act 2002: Enterprise Act 2002 (Part 8 Domestic Infringements) Order 2015 (SI 2015/1727) art.2. On the compatibility of such an extension, see below, paras 38-389—38-394.
- 2188. Below, paras 38-345 et seq.
- 2189. Below, paras 38-351 et seq.
- 2190. Below, paras 38-358 et seq.
- 2191. Below, paras 38-376 et seq.
- 2192. Below, paras 38-382 et seq.
- 2193. Below, paras 38-386 et seq.
- 2194. Below, paras 38-387 et seq.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts
Section 6. - The Control of Unfair Contract Terms
(d) - The New Law: The Consumer Rights Act 2015
(ii) - The Relationship of the Consumer Rights Act to EU Law

Interpretation of provisions in the 2015 Act implementing the 1993 Directive

38-345

As earlier explained, ²¹⁹⁵ the Court of Justice has held that the terms used by the provisions of the 1993 Directive must normally be given an “autonomous” European interpretation ²¹⁹⁶ and this means that, following the principle of the “indirect effect” of directives (sometimes known as the principle of conforming interpretation of national legislation implementing EU directives), English courts are under a duty to interpret the provisions of the 2015 Act seeking to implement the 1993 Directive “as far as possible” in a way so as to give proper effect to the UK’s obligations under the Directive. ²¹⁹⁷ As a result, the decisions of the Court of Justice on the 1993 Directive which have explained its own interpretative role relative to the roles of national courts, ²¹⁹⁸ which have ruled on the proper interpretation of concepts used by the 1993 Directive or have provided guidance on their application by national courts, ²¹⁹⁹ have explained the duty of national courts to raise the issue of the unfairness of a term in a consumer contract of their own motion, ²²⁰⁰ and the relationship between the test of unfairness of contract terms under the 1993 Directive and the unfairness of commercial practices under the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005 ²²⁰¹ are relevant equally to the UK’s reimplementation of that Directive by the 2015 Act as they are under the 1999 Regulations. This continuing relevance also holds good as regards case-law of the Court of Justice on other European legislative instruments on which it may draw in any future interpretation of the Directive’s concepts, as in its case-law on the concept of “consumer”. ²²⁰² However, this last example raises a different issue, as the 2015 Act defines “consumer” in a way which may be broader in one respect than the interpretation of the Court of Justice to “consumer” ²²⁰³, and this raises the question whether UK law is entitled as a matter of EU law to extend its legislative controls on unfair terms drawn from the 1993 Directive beyond those required by that Directive.

“Minimum harmonisation” and “full harmonisation” in the EU law governing unfair contract terms

38-346

The question whether EU law permits national legislation controlling unfair contract terms beyond the requirements of the 1993 Directive is a complex one, turning on the relationship between three EU legislative instruments: the 1993 Directive itself, the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005, and the Consumer Injunctions Directive 2009. ²²⁰⁴ In summary, the 1993 Directive requires Member States to put in place national measures to ensure that unfair contract terms are “not binding” on consumers and also to prevent the use of unfair terms in consumer contracts, ²²⁰⁵ but requires only “minimum harmonisation” and therefore in principle allows Member States to retain or enact measures within the scope of the Directive which are more protective of consumers. ²²⁰⁶ Secondly, the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005 requires Member States to prohibit “unfair business-to-consumer commercial practices” within its scope, but requires “full harmonisation” and so forbids Member States from maintaining or putting in place measures within its scope which are more protective of consumers. ²²⁰⁷ In principle, as has been explained, the use or recommendation for use of an unfair term in a consumer contract may constitute an “unfair commercial practice” so as to fall within the scope of the 2005 Directive, but the 2005 Directive states that it is “without prejudice to contract law, and in particular the rules on the validity, formation or effect of a contract”, whether this law is EU or national. ²²⁰⁸ Thirdly, the 2009 Directive requires Member States to allow national “qualified entities” (whether designated public bodies or consumers’ associations) to bring proceedings for an injunction aimed at the protection of the collective interests of consumers in support of a list of European legislative instruments, including, inter alia, the 1993 Directive and the 2005 Directive and these injunctions are available in respect both of domestic infringements (that is, where all elements of the infringement take place within one Member State) and cross-border (“intra-Community”) infringements, where an infringement in one Member State affects the collective interests of consumers in another. ²²⁰⁹ This Directive appears to assume that these injunctions can and should be available to prevent the use of terms which are unfair in national law even where the latter has extended the protection of the 1993 Directive under its “minimum harmonisation” clause. ²²¹⁰ For present purposes, it will be seen that a broad distinction can be drawn between national provisions which affect the relative rights of contracting parties (and notably the binding character of the contract terms in question) which belong to “contract law” as understood by (and as excluded from) the 2005 Directive and enforcement measures (and notably injunctions) to prevent the use or recommendation for use of unfair terms at the request of the CMA and other regulators.

English law before the Consumer Rights Act 2015

38-347

Under the law as it stood before the enactment of the 2015 Act, the implementation in UK law of the 1993 Directive by the 1999 Regulations did not seek to go beyond the requirements of that Directive: the general approach was to “copy-out” the European provisions. ²²¹¹ The 1999 Regulations provide both that unfair terms are not binding on consumers and for preventive measures to be taken by the CMA and other qualifying bodies. ²²¹² By contrast, while English law more widely controls unfair terms beyond those required by the 1993 Directive (notably, by the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 ²²¹³), it did not provide for preventive measures in respect of the use or recommendation for use of contract terms so controlled. The 2005 Directive is implemented in UK law by the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008, which, inter alia, create a series of criminal offences relating to unfair commercial practices. ²²¹⁴ And the 2009 Directive is implemented in UK by Pt 8 of the Enterprise Act 2002, which provides for “enforcement orders” in respect, inter alia, of “Community infringements”, and the latter include infringements of the 1993 Directive and the 2005 Directive. ²²¹⁵ This means that the use by a trader of unfair terms in its dealings with consumers may attract the preventive measures provided by the 1999 Regulations, an “enforcement order” under Pt 8 of the Enterprise Act 2002 and/or a criminal sanction in respect of an “unfair commercial practice” (where the latter’s conditions are satisfied). ²²¹⁶

Extension of controls on unfair contract terms under the Consumer Rights Act

38-348

While the main purpose of the 2015 Act in relation to unfair contract terms is the placing of the law in a single legislative instrument (rather than being found in part in the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 and in part in the 1999 Regulations), ²²¹⁷ the Act also extends the law governing unfair terms beyond UK law’s existing position in a number of ways. The question whether EU law permits the law of a Member State to extend its law governing unfair contract terms in this way depends on whether this law concerns the relative rights of contracting parties under the contract (“contract law”, so as to escape the 2005 Directive’s “full harmonisation”) or whether it prohibits practices by traders in relation to the use or recommendation for use of contract terms (whether this prohibition is effected by injunction, criminal sanction or other enforcement measures) so as possibly to fall foul of the 2005 Directive’s “full harmonisation”. At this stage, the position regarding the first of these will be noted, leaving the latter for discussion in the context of the 2015’s Act treatment of enforcement measures more generally. ²²¹⁸

More extensive controls of unfair contract terms by national law than required by the 1993 Directive

38-349

The general position (which certainly applies to “contract law” ²²¹⁹) is that the laws of Member States may in principle provide for the control of unfair contract terms beyond those required by the 1993 Directive, either (within its scope) under its “own minimum harmonisation clause” or (outside its scope) under the Member States’ general competence in this area.

Extension of controls on the validity of contract terms beyond the 1993 Directive

38-350

The 2015 Act makes a number of extensions to the protections regarded by the 1993 Directive but within its material scope. First, in general the Act renders terms which seek to exclude or limit liability in a trader for breach of the terms inserted in contracts to supply goods, digital content or services not binding on consumers, whether or not they were individually negotiated and without any assessment of their fairness under the general test provided by the 1993 Directive. ²²²⁰ Secondly, the general scheme for the control of unfair terms in Pt 2 of the Act goes beyond the protection for consumers required by the 1993 Directive by including “individually negotiated” terms under the test of unfairness, ²²²¹ by imposing a second condition for the application of the exemption that they be “prominent” as well as transparent (that is, expressed in plain and intelligible language, which is required explicitly by the 1993 Directive), ²²²² by adding three examples to the “indicative list” of terms, ²²²³ and by extending the protection for consumers against the choice of law applicable to the contract other than the law of an EEA State. ²²²⁴ Moreover, the 2015 Act also extends the controls on unfair contract terms beyond the scope of the 1993 Directive, for example, by defining “consumer” as an individual “acting for purposes that are wholly or mainly outside that individual’s trade” etc. ²²²⁵

²¹⁹⁵. See above, para.38-014.

²¹⁹⁶. Kásler v OTP Jelzálogbank Zrt (C-26/13) of April 30, 2014 at [37].

²¹⁹⁷. Above, para.38-016.

²¹⁹⁸. Above, para.38-302.

²¹⁹⁹. See above, paras 38-229—38-239, 38-247—38-248 and 38-288—38-289 and especially Kásler v OTP Jelzálogbank Zrt (C-26/13) of April 30, 2014 at para.37 in relation to art.4(2) of the 1993 Directive.

²²⁰⁰. See, notably, Océano Grupo Editorial SA v Murciano Quintero (C-240/98 to C-244/98) [2000] E.C.R. I-4941; Mostaza Claro v Centro Móvil Milenium SL (C-168/05) [2006] E.C.R. I-10421 on which above, paras 38-304—38-305. The 2015 Act seeks to give legislative recognition to this caselaw in s.71 “Duty of court to consider fairness of term” on which see below, para.38-361.

²²⁰¹. Directive 2005/29 concerning unfair business-to-consumer commercial practices in the internal market [2005] O.J. L149/22 (“2005 Directive”) and see above, para.38-252 and, notably, Perenšová v SOS finance, spol. s r.o. (C-453/10).

²²⁰². Above, paras 38-032—38-033.

²²⁰³. 2015 Act s.2(3) (applicable to Pt 1, and applied to Pt 2 by s.76(2)) and see below para.38-353.

²²⁰⁴. Directive 2009/22/EC on injunctions for the protection of consumers’ interests, [2009] O.J. L110/30 (“2009 Directive”). These questions were not fully addressed by the Law Commissions, which relied on the “minimum harmonisation” character of the 1993 Directive to allow the UK to provide more protection to consumers than is required by that directive, without considering the possible impact of the 2005 Directive on preventive measures: Law Com., Scottish Law Com.,

Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts: Advice to the Department for Business, Innovation and Skills (March 2013), para.S5.

- 2205. 1993 Directive arts 6 and 7.
- 2206. 1993 Directive art.8, above, para.38-020.
- 2207. 2005 Directive arts 4 (full harmonisation); arts 5–9 and see above, paras 38-147—38-148.
- 2208. Above, para.38-332; 2005 Directive art.3(2), recital 9, above, para.38-148.
- 2209. 2009 Directive arts 1–2, 4, recitals 3, 7.
- 2210. 2009 Directive recital 4 and see below, para.38-393.
- 2211. Above, paras 38-202 et seq.
- 2212. 1999 Regulations reg.8; regs 10, 12–15 respectively.
- 2213. In particular, Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 (“1977 Act”) ss.2, 6(3) and 7(2).
- 2214. Above, paras 38-153 et seq.
- 2215. Enterprise Act 2002 s.212 (as amended) and see above, para.38-330.
- 2216. See, e.g. OFT v Ashbourne Management Services Ltd [2011] EWHC 1237 (Ch), [2011] E.C.C. 31 and above, paras 38-323—38-333.
- 2217. Above, para.38-193.
- 2218. See below, paras 38-389 et seq.
- 2219. Above, para.38-346. cf. below paras 38-389—38-394 on controls which do not belong to “contract law”.
- 2220. 2015 Act s.31 referring to ss.9–17, 28–29 (contracts to supply goods); s.47 (referring to ss.34–36, 41 and 46 (contracts to supply digital content); s.57, referring to ss.49–52 (contracts to supply services). For the most part, this position reflects the present position in English law: Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.6(2) and 7(2). Some, but not all, of the cases so regulated reflect particular rules in EU law which have the same effect: see below, paras 38-492, 38-524 and 38-546.
- 2221. 2015 Act s.62 thereby not following 1993 Directive art.3(1) and 3(2).
- 2222. 2015 Act s.64, on which see below, paras 38-363—38-368 and cf. 1993 Directive art.4(2) in fine.
- 2223. 2015 Act Sch.2 Pt 1 paras 5, 12 and 14 on which see below, para.38-360.
- 2224. 2015 Act s.74 on which see below, para.38-386.
- 2225. 2015 Act s.2(3) and 76(2) and see below, para.38-353. This is an apparent extension as the position of the CJEU on the definition of “consumer” for the purposes of the 1993 Directive is not certain: above, para.38-033. A further example of an extension beyond the requirements of the 1993 Directive may be found in the Act’s treatment of “secondary contracts”: s.72, below, paras 38-370—38-373.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts
Section 6. - The Control of Unfair Contract Terms
(d) - The New Law: The Consumer Rights Act 2015
(iii) - Scope of Controls on Contract Terms and Notices in Pt 2 of the Consumer Rights Act

“Terms in consumer contracts” and “consumer notices”

38-351

Part 2 of the Consumer Rights Act 2015 applies to the terms of consumer contracts (implementing the 1993 Directive and replacing the 1999 Regulations and making certain other provision in consequence of the deletion of protections for consumers from the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977).²²²⁶ Secondly, Pt 2 extends its controls to certain terms of “secondary contracts”, whether or not the latter count as “consumer contracts”.²²²⁷ And, thirdly, Pt 2 applies to “consumer notices” (in general, replacing s.2 of the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 in relation to a trader’s liability to consumers). The Act defines “trader” and “consumer” for these purposes.

“Trader”

38-352

Under Pt 2 of the Act “trader” means:

“a person acting for purposes relating to that person’s trade, business, craft or profession, whether acting personally or through another person acting in the trader’s name or on the trader’s behalf.”²²²⁸

“Business” is then defined to include “the activities of any government department or local or public authority”.²²²⁹ Taken together these definitions follow the definition of “trader” in the Consumer Rights Directive 2011²²³⁰ but also reflect the definition of “seller or supplier” in the 1993 Directive.²²³¹ One consequential advantage of using “trader” is that it avoids the implication that contracts by which consumers supply goods or services to traders are necessarily excluded from the controls on unfair contract terms.²²³² As has been earlier explained,²²³³ the Court of Justice of the EU has held that the very similar definition of “trader” for the purposes of the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005²²³⁴ is “particularly broad”, not excluding “either bodies pursuing a task of public interest or those which are governed by public law” and must be determined “in relation to the related but diametrically opposed concept of ‘consumer’, which refers to any individual not engaged in commercial or trade activities”.²²³⁵ Moreover, in *Šiba v Dev#nas*²²³⁶ the Court of Justice applied this earlier approach to the definition of “trader” for the purposes of the 1993 Directive. As a result, “trader” is wide enough to include not-for-profit organisations, such as charities, mutual and cooperatives, where they carry on a business.²²³⁷

“Consumer”

38-353

Under Pt 2 of the Act “consumer” means “an individual acting for purposes that are wholly or mainly outside that individual’s trade, business, craft or profession”.²²³⁸ This definition reflects accurately the wording of the definitions of “consumer” in the 1993 Directive, and, therefore, the 1999 Regulations, with the significant exception of the reference to the individual’s purposes being mainly outside that individual’s trade etc.²²³⁹ As a matter of policy, this refinement was recommended by the Law Commissions in response “to a concern that many consumers occasionally use products such as mobile phones or home computers for work purposes”.²²⁴⁰ As earlier explained, the new wording follows the UK’s implementation of the Consumer Rights Directive 2011,²²⁴¹ and reflects a wider UK legislative strategy in defining “consumer” for contract law purposes.²²⁴² To the extent to which the redefinition extends the scope of protection of the 1993 Directive,²²⁴³ it is compatible with EU law. On the other hand, the protections provided for persons “dealing as consumer” contained in the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 are repealed by the Act,²²⁴⁴ and this means principally that persons falling within this category but outside the new definition of “consumer”, such as a company concluding a contract which is neither an integral part of its business nor, if only incidental to it, of a type which it regularly concludes,²²⁴⁵ are no longer protected on this basis.²²⁴⁶ Unlike the 1977 Act’s definition of “dealing as consumer”, the definition of “consumer” under the 2015 Act does not exclude a person in fact acting wholly or mainly outside his trade but holding himself out as acting in the course of a trade,²²⁴⁷ but it is submitted that the likely view of the Court of Justice in this situation is that such a person should not be allowed to take advantage of the protection provided for consumers as the trader would legitimately consider that he or she was acting for business purposes.²²⁴⁸ The 2015 Act has not taken a position on the question whether a person acting other than in the course of a business who supplies goods or services may count as a “consumer” for the purposes of Pt 2’s provisions and so this question must follow the proper interpretation of the 1993 Directive in this respect.²²⁴⁹

Burden of proof as to “consumer”

38-354

Following the pattern set by the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 (rather than the position under the 1999 Regulations), the 2015 Act provides that a trader claiming that an individual was not acting for purposes wholly or mainly outside the individual’s trade etc. must prove it.²²⁵⁰

“Consumer contract”

38-355

A “consumer contract” is defined as a “contract between a trader and a consumer”,²²⁵¹ and it is specifically provided that this does not include a contract of employment or apprenticeship.²²⁵² In the case of Pt 2’s controls on unfair contract terms, this reflects the likely exclusion from the scope of the 1993 Directive of “contracts relating to employment”.²²⁵³ “Consumer contract” should otherwise be interpreted as including all types of contracts concluded between “traders” and “consumers”, including, for example, contracts for the sale etc. of an interest in land, following the proper interpretation of the 1993 Directive.²²⁵⁴ This does not mean, however, that all the provisions in Pt 2 of the 2015 Act apply to terms in all types of consumer contracts, for certain types of contract are excluded or certain types of liability are excluded from its provisions barring the exclusion or restriction of liability for death or personal injury resulting from negligence, following the position set out by the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977.²²⁵⁵

“Consumer notice”

38-356

Unlike the 1999 Regulations, Pt 2 of the 2015 Act subjects “consumer notices” to a test of fairness and a requirement of transparency modelled on the similar tests set out by the 1999 Regulations (following the 1993 Directive) for contract terms. In part, this reflects the need to protect consumers under the 2015 Act as much as they were protected under s.2 of the Unfair Contract Terms Act (which applies to the exclusion of liability for negligence by “notice” as well as by contract term), but the new provisions go further in several respects. ²²⁵⁶ Thus, s.61(4) of the Act provides that Pt 2 of the Act applies to a notice (a “consumer notice” ²²⁵⁷) to the extent that it:

- “(a)
relates to rights or obligations as between a trader and a consumer, or
- (b)
purports to exclude or restrict a trader’s liability to a consumer.”

For this purpose, it does not matter:

“whether the notice is expressed to apply to a consumer, as long as it is reasonable to assume it is intended to be seen or heard by a consumer.” ²²⁵⁸

For these purposes, “notice” is defined to include “an announcement, whether or not in writing, and any other communication or purported communication”. ²²⁵⁹ On the other hand, in keeping with the Act’s definition of “consumer contract”, the Act excludes from the definition of “consumer notice” “a notice relating to rights, obligations or liabilities as between an employer and an employee.” ²²⁶⁰

Terms or notices reflecting “mandatory statutory or regulatory provisions” or international conventions

38-357

The Consumer Rights Act 2015 adopts the exclusion from the scope of the controls set out by art.1(2) of the 1993 Directive and included in the 1999 Regulations ²²⁶¹ by excluding from Pt 2 terms which reflect “mandatory statutory or regulatory provisions” or the provisions or principles of an international convention to which the UK or the EU is a party, ²²⁶² but it extends this exclusion to “consumer notices”. So, s.73 of the Act provides that Pt 2 governing unfair contract terms and notices:

“does not apply to a term of a contract, or to a notice, to the extent that it reflects—mandatory statutory or regulatory provisions, or

- (a)
- (b)
the provisions or principles of an international convention to which the United Kingdom or the EU is a party.” ²²⁶³

The Act explains that for this purpose “mandatory statutory or regulatory provisions” includes rules which, according to law, apply between the parties on the basis that no other arrangements have been established". ²²⁶⁴ The interpretation of the exclusion in art.1(2) of the 1993 Directive as reflected in s.73 of the Act has been set out by the Court of Justice in case-law earlier discussed. ²²⁶⁵

²²²⁶. See below, paras 38-358 et seq.

²²²⁷. See below, paras 38-370—38-374.

²²²⁸. 2015 Act s.2(2) applied to Pt 2 by s.76(2).

²²²⁹. 2015 Act s.2(7) applied by reference to Pt 2 by s.76(2).

²²³⁰. Directive 2011/83/EU on consumer rights [2011] O.J. L304/64 art.2(2); Explanatory Notes 2015, para.34.

²²³¹. 1993 Directive art.2(c) and see above, para.38-205. One difference between the two definitions is that the Act refers expressly to a trader acting either "personally or through another person acting in the trader's name or on the trader's behalf", but it is submitted that such a situation should also be read into the definition in 1993 Directive art.2(c). A "person" is sufficiently broad to include both a "natural" and "legal" person as specified by art.2(c).

²²³². cf. above, para.38-207.

²²³³. See generally, above, paras 38-047 et seq.

²²³⁴. 2005 Directive art.2(b).

²²³⁵. BKK Mobil Oil Körperschaft des öffentlichen Rechts v Zentrale zur Bekämpfung unlauteren Wettbewerbs eV (C-59/12) of October 3, 2013 at [32]–[33] citing by analogy Shearson Lehman Hutton (C-89-91) [1993] E.C.R. I-139 para.22 on art.13 of the Brussels Convention on jurisdiction and the enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters: see above, para.38-050.

²²³⁶. C-537/13 of January 15, 2015, above, para.38-050.

²²³⁷. Explanatory Notes 2015, para.35.

²²³⁸. 2015 Act s.2(3) as applied to Pt 2 by s.76(2).

²²³⁹. 1993 Directive art.2(b).

²²⁴⁰. Law Com. Advice (2013), para.7.100; cf. BIS, Clarifying Consumer Law, paras 4.25–4.31.

²²⁴¹. Directive 2011/83/EU on consumer rights [2011] O.J. L304/64 art.2(1), recital 17.

²²⁴². See above, paras 38-038—38-039.

²²⁴³. This depends on the interpretation to be given to "consumer" by the CJEU, on which see above, para.38-034.

²²⁴⁴. 2015 Act s.75, Sch.4 paras 5–11.

²²⁴⁵. R. & B. Customs Brokers Co Ltd v United Dominions Trust Ltd [1988] 1 W.L.R. 321, on which see Vol.I, para.15-074.

²²⁴⁶. Such a person may still be protected on other grounds, notably, on the ground that it is acting on the other party's "written standard terms of business" under the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.3 (exemption clauses and related clauses), on which see Vol.I, paras 15-084—15-087.

The Law Commissions considered that this change “carries with it only a negligible loss of protection” and would avoid “a very complicated piece of legislation carrying little benefit for businesses”: Law Com. Advice (2013) para.7.115.

2247. Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.12(1)(a); 2015 Act s.2(3).

2248. cf. above, para.38-033; Gruber v Bay Wa AG (C-464/01) [2005] E.C.R. I-439 at para.54.

2249. On which see above, para.38-207. The controls on contract terms in Pt 1 of the 2015 Act are restricted to the protection of consumers who receive goods or services as the contracts to which that Part relates are all expressed in terms of the supply of goods, digital content or services by traders to consumers: 2015 Act s.1(3).

2250. 2015 Act s.2(4) as applied to Pt 2 by s.76(3). The position as regards persons “dealing as consumer” is found in Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.12(3) (which, together with the rest of s.12) is deleted by the 2015 Act (s.75; Sch.4 para.11). No burden of proof as to “consumer” is set by the 1999 Regulations reg.3(1), following in this respect the 1993 Directive art.2(b): above, paras 38-045—38-206.

2251. 2015 Act ss.61(1), (3) and 76(1).

2252. 2015 Act s.61(2).

2253. 1993 Directive, recital 10; art.1 and see above, para.38-203 n.1280. Employees remain protected from the exclusion of liability for negligence by their employers under the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.2 and from the effect of exemption clauses and certain related clauses contained in their employers’ “written standard terms of business” under s.3 of the same Act, as foreseen by Law Com. Advice (2013) para.7.120: Vol.I, paras 15-081—15-087.

2254. Above, paras 38-203—38-204.

2255. Consumer Rights Act ss.65 and 66; Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 ss.1(3) and 2(1) and see below, para.38-377.

2256. It has earlier been argued that the concept of “contract” in the 1993 Directive requires an autonomous European interpretation and that, if one were taken by the CJEU, it would be based on the agreement of the parties without any requirement such as the English law doctrine of consideration: above, paras 38-210—38-211. The effect of non-contractual notices to exclude liability of an occupier of premises if sufficiently drawn to the claimant’s (licensee’s) attention is well established at common law, and based on the acceptance of the risk by entering the premises subject to this condition: Ashdown v Samuel William & Sons Ltd [1957] 1 Q.B. 409. This legal position was confirmed by the Occupiers’ Liability Act 1957 s.2, though then controlled by the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.2. While the exclusion of liability by notice is not to be equated with the defence of volenti non fit injuria, it could nonetheless be said to rest on an implied non-contractual agreement between the visitor and the occupier of the premises who relies on the exclusion notice. In this way, notices (which are seen as non-contractual by English law) could be seen as “contractual terms” under a European concept of contract as agreement. This would in turn mean that the 2015 Act’s provisions which subject “consumer notices” to the controls set out by the 1993 Directive would not in principle go beyond that Directive’s requirements.

2257. 2015 Act s.61(7).

2258. 2015 Act s.61(6).

2259. 2015 Act s.61(8).

2260. 2015 Act s.61(5).

2261. 1999 Regulations reg.4(2).

2262. See above, paras 38-214—38-219.

2263. 2015 Act s.73(1).

2264. 2015 Act s.73(2); 1993 Directive recital 13.

2265. See above, para.38-215.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts
Section 6. - The Control of Unfair Contract Terms
(d) - The New Law: The Consumer Rights Act 2015
(iv) - Contract Terms and Notices Not Binding on the Consumer Where Assessed as Unfair
(aa) - Terms of Consumer Contracts

Contract terms subject to the test of unfairness; “individually negotiated terms” included

38-358

Apart from the exclusion of terms which reflect mandatory statutory provisions or the provisions of international conventions as explained above, ²²⁶⁶ under the Consumer Rights Act 2015 there is only one exclusion from the test of unfairness of terms in consumer contracts, i.e. the “core exclusion” allowed by art.4(2) of the 1993 Directive. ²²⁶⁷ In particular, the Act does not subject the application of the test of unfairness to a condition that the term be “individually negotiated” as foreseen by the 1993 Directive and as enacted by the 1999 Regulations. ²²⁶⁸ The inclusion of terms in consumer contracts which have been “individually negotiated” under the test of unfairness reflects the position under the Unfair Contract Terms Act, and the Law Commissions considered it desirable in the interest of simplicity that all the controls on unfair terms should have the same scope. ²²⁶⁹ Moreover, the Law Commissions considered that this inclusion would have little practical effect, as it is rare for consumers to negotiate about any term except the price or main subject matter (which are subject to special treatment under the Act) and a term which has been genuinely individually negotiated is very likely to be fair. ²²⁷⁰

General test of unfairness

38-359

 The formulation of the general test of unfairness of terms in consumer contracts in the Act is all but identical to the test required by the 1993 Directive and enacted by the 1999 Regulations, providing that:

“A term is unfair if, contrary to the requirement of good faith, it causes a significant imbalance in the parties’ rights and obligations under the contract to the detriment of the consumer.” ²²⁷¹

Also following the earlier legislative pattern, though rewritten in more elegant English, the Act provides that:

“Whether a term is fair is to be determined—

(a)

taking into account the nature of the subject matter of the contract, and by reference to all the circumstances existing when the term was agreed and to all of the other terms of the contract or of any other contract on which it depends.” ²²⁷²

(b)

The only change of wording of any significance here is the reference to “the subject matter of the contract” rather than the “nature of the goods or services for which the contract was concluded” (as in the 1993 Directive and the 1999 Regulations ²²⁷³), but it is submitted that even this change makes no substantive difference. ²²⁷⁴ As a result, the discussion of the general test of unfairness of contract terms found in relation to the 1993 Directive and the 1999 Regulations earlier discussed is equally relevant to the test of unfairness found in the Consumer Rights Act, ²²⁷⁵ with the following qualification. As explained, the Court of Justice in Aziz advised that, under the requirement of good faith, the national court must assess whether the trader “dealing fairly and equitably with the consumer, could reasonably assume that the consumer would have agreed to such a term in individual contract negotiations”. ²²⁷⁶  However, there is a particular difficulty in applying this approach to the test of unfairness in the Consumer Rights Act 2015, as the latter can apply to terms which have been individually negotiated as well as to terms which have not. ²²⁷⁷  Where it does, explaining the requirement of good faith by reference to a hypothetical test of what the trader could objectively have assumed the (reasonable) consumer would have agreed in individual negotiations would make little sense, given that, ex hypothesi, the consumer had in fact agreed to the term in question. ²²⁷⁸  It is submitted that this difficulty disappears if the hypothetical test is treated as relevant to the assessment of good faith but not conclusive of it, ²²⁷⁹  as this allows a court to be able to interpret the requirement of good faith in the context of an individually negotiated term on other and broader grounds, as is indeed suggested by recital 16 of the 1993 Directive itself. ²²⁸⁰  This is apparently the view taken by the CMA, which has observed that the “requirement of good faith ... allows for proper account to be taken of the significance of any real negotiation that has actually taken place”, but considers that “any contention that a particular consumer has actually influenced the substance of a term has to be tested against a detailed consideration of the circumstances existing at the time the contract was concluded. In [the CMA’s] view, individual consumers rarely in practice have the required knowledge and bargaining power to ensure that contractual negotiations involving them are effectively conducted on equal terms.” ²²⁸¹

The “indicative list of terms”

38-360

 Again following the 1993 Directive and the 1999 Regulations, ²²⁸² the 2015 Act includes a list of terms in consumer contracts that “may be regarded as unfair” for the purposes of the controls in Pt 2, the scope of these examples being qualified in a similar way as is found in the 1999 Regulations. ²²⁸³ The significance of the examples in the list therefore remains the same as the examples in the list in the 1999 Regulations. ²²⁸⁴  The vast majority of the 20 examples included in the list in the Act are substantively identical to the 17 found in these earlier instruments, differing only in minor points of drafting and in the replacement of “seller or supplier” with “trader”, ²²⁸⁵ but there are three new examples. ²²⁸⁶  The Act makes provision for amendment of the “indicative list” (and its qualifications) by the Secretary of State by order made by statutory instrument. ²²⁸⁷

Duty of court in relation to the issue of fairness

38-361

The 2015 Act seeks to give explicit effect to the case-law of the Court of Justice of the EU as regards the duty of national courts to consider the fairness of a term in a consumer contract within the scope of the controls set out by the 1993 Directive. ²²⁸⁸ This follows the recommendation of the Law Commissions, which considered that such a statement would be helpful to bring this obligation to the attention of the courts and, especially, the lower courts. ²²⁸⁹ Section 71 of the Act therefore provides that:

“(1)

Subsection (2) applies to proceedings before a court which relate to a term of a consumer contract.

(2)

The court must consider whether the term is fair even if none of the parties to the proceedings has raised that issue or indicated that it intends to raise it.

(3)

But subsection (2) does not apply unless the court considers that it has before it sufficient legal and factual material to enable it to consider the fairness of the term.”

The qualification on the ambit of the duty made by s.71(3) reflects closely the qualification put on the national court’s duty by the Court of Justice of the EU in Pannon ²²⁹⁰ but this should be read subject to later case-law in the Court of Justice in the context of the Consumer Sales Directive 1999 that appears to require a national court to request clarification from a party before it to enable it to determine whether one of the parties is a consumer and, therefore, falls within national legislation implementing EU consumer protection law. ²²⁹¹ The Act also restricts the court’s duty to the situation where “proceedings before a court relate to a term of a consumer contract” ²²⁹² and this, together with the wording of s.71(2), suggests that the duty to consider the fairness of a contract term arises only where the proceedings before the court relate to the term which is to be so considered for its fairness. ²²⁹³ While similar wording has sometimes been used by the Court of Justice of the EU, ²²⁹⁴ it is submitted that such an interpretation of s.71 would risk imposing on English courts a more limited duty than is foreseen by the case-law of the Court of Justice to which s.71 ostensibly seeks to give effect. For, under that case-law, a national court before which proceedings are brought relating to a consumer contract is under a duty to assess of its motion terms on which the trader relies, even though the terms are not ones to which the proceedings can be said to relate. So, for example, the Court of Justice has held that a national court must of its own motion raise the fairness of a national jurisdiction clause relied on by a trader to provide that court with jurisdiction to hear its claim against a consumer for payment under a consumer contract ²²⁹⁵: such proceedings would not naturally be said to relate to the jurisdiction clause, but rather to the term or terms of the contract imposing on the consumer his or her duty to pay. The effect of this possible difference between the formulation of the Act and requirements of the case-law of the Court of Justice can be avoided if the phrase “proceedings before a court which relate to a term of a consumer contract” is interpreted as requiring only that the proceedings concern in a general sense the term to be considered for its fairness, if need be, by way of the conforming interpretation required of national courts by EU law. ²²⁹⁶ What this discussion suggests, however, is that it may be unwise for national legislation to seek to give effect to case-law of the Court of Justice which is both complex and, to an extent, still developing. ²²⁹⁷

Burden of proof as to fairness of a contract term

38-362

Unlike the position under the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 as regards the reasonableness of contract terms, ²²⁹⁸ neither the 1993 Directive nor the 1999 Regulations set an express burden of proof as to the fairness of terms. As earlier explained, ²²⁹⁹ while the position is not clear, the Court of Justice is most likely to take the view that the issue of fairness of terms under the 1993 Directive is not itself one appropriate to the allocation of a burden of proof, but instead for a “neutral assessment” of the term, although any facts on which the trader or consumer relies for this purpose would be subject to the normal rules of burden of proof established by national law. ²³⁰⁰ As a result, the Law Commissions considered that no provision should be made as to the burden of proof as to fairness of a term the new legislation, beyond the statement as to the duty of courts to raise the issue of fairness of their own motion, ²³⁰¹ since “[t]o put the burden of proof on the consumer, even if it was just to prove a prima facie case, may not fit with the requirements of the EU law”. ²³⁰² Following this view, the Consumer Rights Act 2015 does not provide for the allocation of a burden of proof as to the fairness of terms, except to the extent to which it imposes a duty in courts to consider the issue of fairness of their own motion. ²³⁰³ This therefore leaves the issue of burden of proof as to fairness in the same state as under the 1999 Regulations.

The “core exclusion” from the assessment of fairness

38-363

The proper interpretation of the exclusion to the test of unfairness of contract terms provided by art.4(2) of the 1993 Directive (and implemented faithfully by reg.6(2) of the 1999 Regulations) has caused considerably difficulty. ²³⁰⁴ This exception was the subject of the decision of the UK Supreme Court in Abbey National Plc v The Office of Fair Trading, ²³⁰⁵ where it ruled that terms under which banks imposed charges when their consumer customers requested or instructed the banks to make a payment for which they did not hold the necessary funds and which were not covered by an arranged facility fell within the exception to the test of unfairness provided by reg.6(2) so as preclude the OFT from taking into account “the adequacy of the price or remuneration, as against the goods or services supplied in exchange” in their assessment of the fairness of the terms. ²³⁰⁶ The Supreme Court’s view of the exclusion was criticised as too broad and insufficiently protective of the consumers ²³⁰⁷ and led the Department for Business, Innovation and Skills (BIS) to ask the Law Commissions to advise it on the exclusion in reg.6(2) of the 1999 Regulations as part of a wider updated advice on the creation of a single harmonised regime to replace the Unfair Contract Terms Act and the 1999 Regulations. ²³⁰⁸ The Law Commissions’ advice to BIS had the advantage of guidance by the Court of Justice on the significance of art.4(2) of the 1993 Directive, notably in Caja de Madrid and Pohotovost, ²³⁰⁹ but not in the important recent decisions in Kásler, Matei and Van Hove. ²³¹⁰

The Law Commissions’ Advice

38-364

The Law Commissions advised that the UK’s implementation of the exclusion in art.4(2) should be reformed as the “current law is unacceptably uncertain. It requires significant legal expertise to navigate, and even then the outcome is unpredictable. Both consumers and traders may suffer from this uncertainty”. ²³¹¹ The Law Commissions considered that the first limb of the exclusion in art.4(2) (concerning the main subject matter of the contract) excludes from the test of unfairness a category of contract terms, whereas the second part (referring to “the adequacy of the price and remuneration, on the one hand, as against the services or goods supplied in exchange, on the other”) instead excludes the amount of the price as against the services or goods supplied in exchange from the assessment of the fairness of a term. ²³¹² As regards the second limb, they interpreted the Supreme Court’s decision in Abbey National Plc v The Office of Fair Trading ²³¹³ as rejecting a distinction between the main price and ancillary price or charges for the purposes of identifying “price and remuneration” under art.4(2), ²³¹⁴ and stated that “[p]rice is therefore intended to be a broad concept which includes ancillary and contingent charges”. ²³¹⁵ They considered that the “price” should be understood as “money consideration” following the definition in the Sale of Goods Act 1979. ²³¹⁶ While they considered that the reference to “remuneration” in art.4(2) of the Directive was unlikely to refer to consideration furnished other than in money (such as terms requiring consumers to grant traders intellectual property rights), if it did, as a matter of policy they recommended that the exclusion should not cover this situation. ²³¹⁷

38-365

The purpose of the Law Commissions’ recommendations here was to clarify the exclusion allowed by art.4(2) and to discourage traders from using “hidden price terms” which undermine the competitiveness of the market by offering low headline prices and then adding hidden extras, which both “causes detriment to consumers and disadvantages honest traders who are upfront about their charges”. ²³¹⁸ Rather than proposing that the exclusion should not apply to payments which are “incidental or ancillary to the main purpose of the contract” as they had previously suggested, the Law Commissions therefore recommended that:

“price or main subject matter terms should be exempt from review only if they are transparent and prominent. Both approaches distinguish between the terms which consumers take into account in their decision to buy the product and those which become lost in small print. The emphasis on prominence, however, offers a practical way of distinguishing between a headline price and other charges. It also emphasises that whether a term is exempt is within the control of the trader.” ²³¹⁹

38-366

For this purpose, the Law Commissions recommended that future legislation should make clear that a requirement of transparency of terms required that they should be “plain and intelligible”, legible and readily available to the consumer, ²³²⁰ considering that this did not “gold-plate” the Directive (i.e. did not go beyond its requirements). ²³²¹ Moreover, the Law Commissions recommended that the legislation should add a new condition that a term must also be “prominent” to fall within the exclusion, ²³²² meaning by this that:

“it is presented during the sales process in such a way that a reasonable consumer would be aware of the term even if they did not read the full contractual document.” ²³²³

For this purpose, the EU standard of the “average consumer” (that is, “a reasonably well informed, observant and circumspect” consumer) should be adopted. ²³²⁴ The Law Commissions considered that there is “considerable overlap between the concepts of transparency and prominence”, but that while transparent terms will not always be prominent, prominent terms will usually be available and legible, but may not necessarily be in plain and intelligible language. ²³²⁵ Moreover, the additional requirement of “prominence” would apply only as a condition for the application of the exclusion drawn from art.4(2) and would not affect the general requirement of transparency of terms. ²³²⁶ While not saying so explicitly, the Law Commissions apparently saw the imposition of this condition additional to the one required by art.4(2) of the 1993 Directive as permissible given the “minimum harmonisation” which it required. ²³²⁷

Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.64

38-367

Section 64(1) of the Act provides:

“A term of a consumer contract may not be assessed for fairness ... to the extent that—

- (a) it specifies the main subject matter of the contract, or
- (b) the assessment is of the appropriateness of the price payable under the contract by comparison with the goods, digital content or services supplied under it”. ²³²⁸

Section 64 further provides that this excludes a term from an assessment only if it is “transparent and prominent”. ²³²⁹ For this purpose:

“64

- (3) A term is transparent ... if it is expressed in plain and intelligible language and (in the case of a written term) is legible. ²³³⁰
- (4) A term is prominent ... if it is brought to the consumer’s attention in such a way that an average consumer would be aware of the term.
- (5) In subsection (4) “average consumer” means a consumer who is reasonably well-informed, observant and circumspect.”

The exclusion which s.64 provides is specified as not applying to a term in the list of “indicative terms” provided by Pt 1 of Sch.2. ²³³¹

Comments; relationship to recent case-law of the CJEU

38-368

⚠ It will be seen, therefore, that s.64 follows a number of the recommendations of the Law Commissions. First, it adopts the view that the nature of the two limbs of art.4(2) of the 1993 Directive differs: the first limb excludes from assessment for its fairness “a term ... to the extent that it specifies the main subject matter of the contract”; whereas the second limb excludes a term from assessment for its fairness “to the extent that the assessment is of the appropriateness of the price payable under the contract by comparison with the goods, digital content or services supplied under it”. This view finds clear support in the very recent judgments of the Court of Justice in Kásler and Matei. ²³³² Secondly, s.64(3) explains the condition of transparency of a term as concerning both its expression in plain and intelligible language and, in the case of written terms, legibility, but, contrary to the recommendation of the Law Commissions, s.64 does not also require that the term be “readily available”. ²³³³ It is submitted, however, that this omission makes no substantive difference, as the Court of Justice in Kásler held that arts 4(2) and 5 of the 1993 Directive reflect the same requirement of plain and intelligible language and that, for these purposes, recital 20 states that “the consumer should actually be given an opportunity of examining all the terms of the contract”.²³³⁴  As a result, an English court would have to give effect to this aspect of the condition of the transparency of terms under art.4(2) in its interpretation of s.64(3). Indeed, the Court of Justice in Kásler went much further, holding that the requirement of transparency does not merely require that the term is “formally and grammatically intelligible”,²³³⁵ but also that the “consumer is in a position to evaluate, on the basis of clear, intelligible criteria, the economic consequences for him which derive from” the term in question: the trader’s reasons for using the term and its relationship with other contractual terms should be clear and intelligible.²³³⁶ For this purpose, the Court of Justice set as the standard for evaluation “the average consumer, who is reasonably well informed and reasonably observant and circumspect”.²³³⁷

 Thirdly, s.64(4) explains the new condition of “prominence” as recommended by the Law Commissions in terms of it being “brought to the consumer’s attention in such a way that an average consumer would be aware of the term”. The Explanatory Notes to the Act provide as an example of this condition that terms governing the price or subject matter are “in the small print”.²³³⁸  The Law Commissions apparently assumed that this additional condition would go beyond the condition of “plain intelligible language” set by art.4(2) of the Directive,²³³⁹ but this assumption is open to doubt given the very broad interpretation of this condition in Kásler, Matei and Van Hove, for in those cases, as earlier noted, the Court of Justice required the national court to consider not merely whether a relevant term had been “brought to the consumer’s attention in such a way that an average consumer would be aware of the term”,²³⁴⁰ but that the average consumer “is in a position to evaluate, on the basis of clear, intelligible criteria, the economic consequences for him which derive from that term”.²³⁴¹ In sum, the additional condition of “prominence” set by the 2015 Act may not go far enough to give proper effect to the interpretation of the Court of Justice without the aid of the principle of conforming interpretation by national courts of legislation implementing EU law.²³⁴² On the other hand, if and to the extent to which the Act’s condition of “prominence” goes further than the 1993 Directive in the interests of providing greater protection for consumers than it requires, then the Act’s compatibility with EU law is covered by the Directive’s “minimum harmonisation” clause as regards its “contract law effects”, though it may not be so covered as to its provision of enforcement measures.²³⁴³ Fourthly, the strategy of the 2015 Act in dealing with the problem of “hidden price terms” by requiring that they must be “prominent” rests on the Law Commission’s very broad interpretation of the expression “price and remuneration” found in art.4(2) of the Directive²³⁴⁴ so as to cover all terms which impose money obligations on consumers.²³⁴⁵ This view is reflected directly in s.64(1)(b) of the 2015 Act which excludes from the assessment of the term “the appropriateness of the price payable under the contract by comparison with the goods, digital content or services supplied” under the contract. It is submitted that this reformulation of the second limb of the exclusion in art.4(2) of the Directive may be broader in its effect than the interpretation given to that limb by the Court of Justice. In Kásler, the Court considered whether a term in a contract of consumer credit denominated in a foreign currency which set the exchange rate for repayment by the consumer of the loan at the creditor bank’s “selling rate” could be assessed for its unfairness, where another term set the exchange rate for repayment of the original sums lent by the bank to the consumer at the bank’s “buying rate”.²³⁴⁶ It held that the second limb of the exclusion in art.4(2) could not apply to the repayment term, as such a term:

“in so far as it contains a pecuniary obligation for the consumer to pay, in repayment instalments of the loan, the difference between the selling rate of exchange and the buying rate of exchange of the foreign currency, cannot be considered as ‘remuneration’, the adequacy of which as consideration for a service supplied by the lender cannot be subject of an examination as regards unfairness under Article 4(2)” of the Directive,²³⁴⁷ apparently on the basis that this difference did not constitute something in return (“consideration”) for any foreign exchange service supplied by the lender.²³⁴⁸ As earlier explained, the Court of Justice therefore saw the second limb of the exclusion in art.4(2) as ruling out comparison of the sum payable under a contract term (there, the repayment term) as against any services provided for such a sum, thereby implicitly rejecting the Supreme Court’s approach which looked globally at the sums payable (or contingently payable) under the term as against the package of services provided by the trader in respect (in part) of those sums.²³⁴⁹ Moreover, this contrast between the approach of the Court of Justice and the Supreme Court in OFT v Abbey National Plc was made clearer by the Court of Justice’s judgment in Matei, where it again required the identification of a distinct service in exchange for which the “price or remuneration” is to be paid.²³⁵⁰ It is submitted that in these circumstances English courts should seek to give effect to the interpretation and guidance of the Court of Justice of the EU in their application of s.64(1)(b) of the 2015 Act following the principle of the conforming interpretation of UK legislation implementing EU directives, though the difficulty in doing so would be whether the English court would consider this “possible” given the wording of s.64(1)(b) and its background in the Law Commissions’ earlier Advice.²³⁵¹

Effect of a finding of unfairness of a contract term

38-369

The effects of a finding by a court that a term of a consumer contract is unfair under the Consumer Rights Act follow closely the position under the 1999 Regulations and the 1993 Directive.²³⁵² As a result, “[a]n unfair term of a consumer contract is not binding on the consumer”,²³⁵³ it being clarified that “[t]his does not prevent the consumer from relying on the term or notice if the consumer chooses to do so”.²³⁵⁴ On the other hand:

“Where a term of a consumer contract is not binding on the consumer as a result of [Part 2 of the Act], the contract continues, so far as practicable, to have effect in every other respect.”²³⁵⁵

And, thirdly, use by a trader of an unfair term in a consumer contract may attract the special enforcement measures of the law of unfair terms provided by Sch.3 of the Act²³⁵⁶ or the making of an “enforcement order” under Pt 8 of the Enterprise Act 2002 where it harms the collective interests of consumers, and it may constitute an “unfair commercial practice” so as to attract the criminal sanctions provided by the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008.²³⁵⁷

²²⁶⁶. Above, para.38-357.

²²⁶⁷. 2015 Act s.64 and see below, paras 38-363—38-368.

²²⁶⁸. 1993 Directive art.3(1) and 3(2); 1999 Regulations reg.5(1)-(4), on which see above, paras 38-221—38-223.

²²⁶⁹. Law Com. Advice (2013) paras 7.64-7.65.

²²⁷⁰. Law Com. Advice (2013) paras 7.64-7.65.

²²⁷¹. 2015 Act s.62(4); 1993 Directive art.3(1); 1999 Regulations reg.5(1).

²²⁷². 2015 Act s.62(5).

²²⁷³. 1993 Directive art.4(1); 1999 Regulations reg.6(1).

²²⁷⁴. cf. the French version of the 1993 Directive art.3(1) which refers to “la nature des biens ou services qui font l’objet du contrat”, which translates as “the nature of the goods or services which form the subject matter of the contract”.

²²⁷⁵. See above, paras 38-242 et seq.

²²⁷⁶.  Aziz v Caixa d’Estalvis de Catalunya, Tarragona i Manresa (C-415/11) March 14, 2013 at para.69, and see para.38-247.

²²⁷⁷.  2015 Act s.62 and see para.38-358.

- 2278. !cf. the discussion of the hypothetical test in Aziz in ParkingEye Ltd v Beavis [2015] UKSC 67, [2015] 3 W.L.R. 1373 above, para.38-251A.
- 2279. !This view was taken by Lord Mance in ParkingEye Ltd v Beavis [2015] UKSC 67 at [208].
- 2280. !See Vol.II, paras 38-244—38-245.
- 2281. !CMA, Unfair contract terms guidance, Guidance on the unfair terms provisions in the Consumer Rights Act 2015 (CMA37, July 2015), para.2.30.
- 2282. 1993 Directive art.3(3) and Annex; 1999 Regulations reg.5(5) and Sch.2 and see above, 38-273 et seq.
- 2283. s.63(1); Sch.2 Pts 1 and 2 respectively. Section 63(2) of the Act clarifies that a term listed in Sch.2 Pt 2 (which is thereby excluded from the scope of the examples in the indicative list in Sch.2 Pt 1) may nevertheless be assessed for fairness unless it is excluded from the scope of the test of fairness either as a term reflecting “mandatory statutory or regulatory provisions” etc. under s.73 or as a term specifying the main subject matter of the contract etc under the “core exclusion” in s.64.
- 2284. !See above, para.38-273. The 2015 Act s.64(6) provides expressly that terms listed in the Act Sch.2 Pt 1 cannot fall within the exclusion provided by s.64 on which see below, paras 38-363—38-368. While the list of terms in Sch.2 applies to “contract terms” rather than to “consumer notices”, the CMA’s view is that its “indicative list” also serves to illustrate the forms that unfairness can take in non-contractual notices: CMA, Unfair contract terms guidance, Guidance on the unfair terms provisions in the Consumer Rights Act 2015 (CMA37, July 2015), para.1.25 and Pt 5 (which considers the practical significance of the examples in the list more generally).
- 2285. 2015 Act Sch.2 Pt 1; 1999 Regulations Sch.2.
- 2286. !2015 Act Sch.2 Pt 1(5): “[a] term which has the object or effect of requiring that, where the consumer decides not to conclude or perform the contract, the consumer must pay the trader a disproportionately high sum in compensation or for services which have not been supplied”. This term is related to other examples found in the 1999 Regulations Sch.2 para.1(e) and (f) (included in the Act in Sch.2 Pt 1(6) and (7)) but has original elements, notably in its application to the case where “the consumer decides not to conclude or perform the contract”. Sch.2 para.1(12) “[a] term which has the object or effect of permitting the trader to determine the characteristics of the subject matter of the contract after the consumer has become bound by it” (though this is subject to a qualification in Sch.2 para.23 as regards contracts which last indefinitely), which is clearly related to the example in para.1(13) (reflecting 1999 Regulations Sch.2 para.1(k)) which concerns terms enabling the trader “to alter unilaterally without a valid reason any characteristics of the goods, digital content or services to be provided”. Sch.2 para.1(14): “A term which has the object or effect of giving the trader the discretion to decide the price payable under the contract after the consumer has become bound by it, where no price or method of determining the price is agreed when the consumer becomes bound” (though this example is also qualified by Sch.2 Pt 1 paras 23, 24 and 25), which builds on the first part of the example provided in the 1999 Regulations Sch.2 para.1 (l) (a term “providing for the price of goods to be determined at the time of delivery”), except that it extends to terms allowing the trader discretion to decide the price at any time. On possible changes to the “indicative list” as set out by the 1993 Directive (and partially reflected in the 2015 Act) see Law Com. Advice (2013) paras 5-47 et seq. For discussion of these new examples of terms in the list see CMA, Unfair contract terms guidance, Guidance on the unfair terms provisions in the Consumer Rights Act 2015 (CMA37, July 2015), paras 5.15.1–5.15.7, 5.22.11–5.22.12 and 5.23.1–5.23.7.
- 2287. 2015 Act s.63(3)-(5).

- 2288. See, notably, Mostaza Claro v Centro Móvil Milenium SL (C-168/05) [2006] E.C.R. I-10421; Pannon GSM Zrt v Erzsébet Sustikné Györfi (C-243/08) [2009] E.C.R. I-4713, on this case-law and its progeny see above, paras 38-018—38-019, 38-304—38-307.
- 2289. Law Com. Advice (2013) para.7.90.
- 2290. Pannon GSM Zrt v Erzsébet Sustikné Györfi (C-243/08) [2009] E.C.R. I-4713 at [32].
- 2291. Faber v Autobedrijf Hazet Ochten BV (C-497/13) of June 4, 2015 on which see above, para.38-018A.
- 2292. 2015 Act s.71(1) (emphasis added).
- 2293. cf. the observation in the Explanatory Notes 2015 para.341 in relation to s.71 that “the courts would only have to look at the term or terms in question, not the entire contract; this reflects the principle in Case C-137/08 VB Pénzügyi v Schneider in 2010”.
- 2294. Notably, VB Pénzügyi Lizing Zrt v Schneider (C-137/08) [2010] E.C.R. I-847 at para.49 referring to the duty of the court to decide whether “a contractual term which is the subject of the dispute before it falls within the scope of the Directive” (emphasis added).
- 2295. Pannon GSM Zrt v Erzsébet Sustikné Györfi (C-243/08) at para.35; VB Pénzügyi Lizing Zrt v Schneider (C-137/08) at para.56.
- 2296. Above, para.38-013.
- 2297. See above, para.38-018A.
- 2298. s.11(5) (reasonableness).
- 2299. See paras 38-307—38-309.
- 2300. See para.38-309.
- 2301. Above, para.38-361.
- 2302. Law Com. Advice (2013), para.7.91.
- 2303. 2015 Act s.71, above, para.38-361.
- 2304. See above, paras 38-224—38-241.
- 2305. [2009] UKSC 6, [2010] 1 A.C. 696.
- 2306. See above, paras 38-226—38-227.
- 2307. e.g. Whittaker (2010) 73 M.L.R. 106.
- 2308. Law Com. Advice (2013).
- 2309. Caja de Ahorros y Monte de Piedad de Madrid v Asociación de Usuarios de Servicios Bancarios (Ausbanc) (C-484/08) [2010] E.C.R. I-04785; Pohotovost' sro v Korèkovská (C-76/10).
- 2310. Kásler v OTP Jelzálogbank Zrt (C-26/13) of April 30, 2014 (“Kásler (C-26/13)”); and Matei v SC Volksbank România SA (C-143/13) of February 26, 2015 (“Matei (C-143/13)”); Van Hove v CNP Assurances SA (C-96/14) of April 23, 2015 (“Van Hove (C-96/14)”), above, paras 38-229—38-240.
- 2311. Law Com. Advice (2013) S. 14.

- 2312. Law Com. Advice (2013) para.3.100-3.102.
- 2313. [2009] UKSC 6, [2010] 1 A.C. 696 especially at [41], [78] and [113].
- 2314. Law Com. Advice (2013) paras 3.13 and 4.61. It is submitted, though, that while the SC rejected the approach of the Court of Appeal below, its own approach is more complex than the Law Commissions' interpretation allows, as some of its members acknowledged that some charges fell outside the scope of art.4(2), notably, those charges which fall within examples of terms within the "indicative list": see [2009] UKSC 6 at [43], [101] referring to 1999 Regulations Sch.2 paras 1(d), (e), (f) and (l).
- 2315. Law Com. Advice (2013) para.4.61.
- 2316. Law Com. Advice (2013) para.4.63 referring to Sale of Goods Act 1979 s.2(1). The Law Commissions considered that terms providing for "early termination charges" should attract distinct treatment and therefore recommended that they should be added to the new legislation's "indicative list of terms" (foreseen by the 1993 Directive art.3(3)), whose members would be excluded explicitly from the benefit of the exclusion: Law Com. Advice (2013) paras 4.61 and 5.82. For implementation of this recommendation see 2015 Act Sch.2 Pt 1 para.5.
- 2317. Law Com. Advice (2013) paras 4.63-4.64.
- 2318. Law Com. Advice (2013) para.2.39.
- 2319. Law Com. Advice (2013) S. 18 and see further Pts 2 and 3 of the Advice.
- 2320. Law Com. Advice (2013) paras 4.25-4.26.
- 2321. Law Com. Advice (2013) para.4.17 referring in particular to the significance of recital 20 which explains that "the consumer should actually be given an opportunity to examine all the terms".
- 2322. Law Com. Advice (2013) paras 4.27-4.48.
- 2323. Law Com. Advice (2013) para.4.27.
- 2324. Law Com. Advice (2013) paras 4.41-4.45.
- 2325. Law Com. Advice (2013) para.4.47.
- 2326. Law Com. Advice (2013) para.4.48.
- 2327. Law Com. Advice (2013) para.3.99. This position is implicit given the Law Commissions' contrasting treatment of the requirement of transparency, which they saw as implementing art.4(2) as properly understood: Law Com. Advice (2013) para.4.17.
- 2328. 2015 Act s.64(1). The reference to "goods, digital content or services" may look restrictive (not applying, e.g. to contracts for the sale of land or insurance contracts), but it is submitted that the exclusion may apply to any type of "consumer contract" to which Pt 2 of the 2015 Act (following the 1993 Directive) applies: cf. above, paras 38-203—38-204 and 38-355.
- 2329. 2015 Act s.64(2).
- 2330. This definition of "transparency" is expressed as applying for the purposes of Pt 2 of the Act and therefore applies equally to the general requirement of transparency of terms in consumer contracts in s.68(1), below, para.38-382.
- 2331. s.64(6); Sch.2 Pt.1, above, para.38-360. This is uncontroversial as regards the examples of terms also contained in the Annex to the 1993 Directive, as these terms are specified by the Directive art.3(3) as ones "which may be regarded as unfair" and therefore have been held by the CJEU to fall outside art.4(2): Matei (C-143/13) at paras 59-61, above, para.38-232.

However, this exclusion from s.64 may well go further than the requirements of the Directive as regards terms added by the Act to this list: on which see below, para.38-360. On the compatibility of such an extension with EU law see above, paras 38-346—38-350; 38-389—38-394.

2332. Kásler (C-26/13) at paras 43, 49-51 and 52-55; Matei (C-143/13) at para.70 and see above, paras 38-230—38-231.

2333. cf. above, para.38-366.

2334.  Kásler (C-26/13) at paras 66-68 and above, para.38-239 which discusses the later case-law of the CJEU in Matei and Van Hove which confirms its earlier approach in Kásler. In the view of A.G. Wahl, the requirement of plain intelligible language “implies that the consumer acquires actual knowledge of all the terms”: Andriciuc v Banca Româneasc# (C-186/16) A.G. Opinion of April 26, 2016 at para.62.

2335. Kásler (C-26/13) at para.71.

2336. Kásler (C-26/13) at para.75.

2337.  Kásler (C-26/13) at para.74. Andriciuc v Banca Romaneasc# (C-186/16) A.G. Opinion of A.G. Wahl of April 26, 2016 paras 60–72.

2338.  Explanatory Notes 2014 paras 307-308. See also the guidance in CMA, Unfair contract terms guidance, Guidance on the unfair terms provisions in the Consumer Rights Act 2015 (CMA37, July 2015), paras 3.20–3.32.

2339. Above, para.38-366.

2340. 2015 Act s.64(4).

2341. Kásler (C-26/13) at para.75; Matei (C-143/13) at para.74; Van Hove (C-96/14) at para.41.

2342. On which, see above, para.38-013.

2343. See above, paras 38-346—38-350 and below, paras 38-389—38-394. This would also apply to the three added examples of terms which may be unfair of terms in the “indicative list” as membership of this list excludes the application of the exclusion in s.64 of the Act: s.64(6).

2344. The Law Commissions saw their view as reflecting the position of the SC in the Bank Charges case, see above, para.38-364 at n.2155 (which criticises this interpretation).

2345. Law Com. Advice (2013) para.4.61, above, para.38-364.

2346. See above, note to paras 38-229—38-233.

2347. Kásler (C-26/13) at para.59 (emphasis added).

2348. Kásler (C-26/13) at para.58.

2349. Above, paras 38-226—38-227, 38-234.

2350. Matei (C-143/13) at para.70 and see, above, para.38-236.

2351. On the principle of “conforming interpretation” and its limits, see above, para.38-013.

2352. See above, paras 38-311—38-316.

- 2353. 2015 Act s.62(1). See similarly 1993 Directive art.6(1) and 1999 Regulations reg.8(1). For discussion of the effect of a finding of unfairness in a “secondary contract” under s.72 of the Act see below, paras 38-370—38-373.
- 2354. 2015 Act s.62(2). This also follows the CJEU’s ruling that where a court raises the issue of fairness of a term of its own motion and finds it unfair, then it must not apply it unless “the consumer, after having been informed of it, does not intend to assert its unfair or non-binding status”: Pannon GSM Zrt v Erzsébet Sustikné Györfi (C-243/08) para.33.
- 2355. 2015 Act s.67. See similarly 1993 Directive art.6(1) and 1999 Regulations reg.8(2).
- 2356. 2015 Act s.70, which refers also to the provision of investigatory powers available to the CMA and other regulators for these purpose which are set out in Sch.5.
- 2357. See below, paras 38-387—38-388.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 6. - The Control of Unfair Contract Terms

(d) - The New Law: The Consumer Rights Act 2015

(iv) - Contract Terms and Notices Not Binding on the Consumer Where Assessed as Unfair

(bb) - Certain Types of Term of “Secondary Contracts”

Extending the controls of Pt 2 to certain types of term in “secondary contracts”

38-370

⚠ Section 72 of the Consumer Rights Act 2015 Act applies the rules of Pt 2 to “a term of a contract (‘the secondary contract’)” that “reduces the rights or remedies or increases the obligations of a person under another contract (‘the main contract’),” ²³⁵⁸ “that would apply to the term if it were in the main contract”. ²³⁵⁹ For these purposes, it does not matter “whether the parties to the secondary contract are the same as the parties to the main contract” or “whether the secondary contract is a consumer contract”. ²³⁶⁰ On the other hand, these rules do not apply “if the secondary contract is a settlement of a claim arising under the main contract”. ²³⁶¹ This provision has no counterpart in the 1999 Regulations (or the 1993 Directive), but is related to s.10 of the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977, which provides that:

“A person is not bound by any contract term prejudicing or taking away rights of his which arise under, or in connection with the performance of, another contract, so far as those rights extend to the enforcement of another’s liability which [Part I of the Act] prevents that other from excluding or restricting.”

The purpose of this anti-evasion provision has been said to prevent a person (A) from enforcing against another person (B) a clause in a contract between them (the “secondary contract”) which provides that B is not to sue a third person (C) under a contract between B and C and which would have been ineffective under the 1977 Act if it had been contained in the contract between B and C

(the “main contract”). ²³⁶² ⚠ It therefore applies, for example, to the case where a term in a direct contract between a manufacturer of goods and a person purports to affect the rights of that person as buyer under the Sale of Goods Act 1979 against the retailer from whom he or she purchases the goods ²³⁶³ or to the case where a supplier (B) contracts to supply a customer (C) with a product under a contract (the main contract) containing no exemption clause, but the customer (C) also enters a servicing contract with A (the secondary contract) under which C is precluded from exercising his rights against B under the main contract. ²³⁶⁴ While the scope of s.10 has been described as “enigmatic”, ²³⁶⁵ it has been held not to apply to the compromise or waiver of an existing contractual claim such as the release by a person of rights which have accrued to him as the result of the breach of another contract to which he is party ²³⁶⁶ nor to the case where the parties to the main contract and the secondary contract are the same. ²³⁶⁷ ⚠

38-371

It will be seen that s.72 of the 2015 Act has considerable similarities with s.10 of the 1977 Act, but also significant differences. ²³⁶⁸ First, as will be seen, s.72 would apply to the situation where a person (A), whether or not a trader for these purposes, concludes a contract (the “secondary contract”, A/B) with another person, B, whether or not B is a “consumer” for these purposes, which includes a term which reduces B’s rights or remedies or increases his or her obligations towards a third person (C) where C is a “trader” and B is a “consumer” within the meaning of the Act so that this main contract (B/C) qualifies as a “consumer contract”. In this situation, the term of the secondary contract is subject to the rules of Pt 2 of the Act governing fairness and transparency as they would apply if it were in the main contract. ²³⁶⁹ Secondly, unlike the 1977 Act as it has been interpreted, s.72 of the 2015 Act would also apply to the situation where a person, A (a “trader” for these purposes), and B (a “consumer” for these purposes), conclude a “consumer contract” (the “main contract”) and also conclude a further contract (the “secondary contract”) which contains a term that reduces B’s rights or remedies against or increases his or her obligations towards A under the main contract, whether or not A qualifies as “trader” or B as “consumer” for the purposes of this secondary contract and whether or not that contract otherwise fails to qualify as a “consumer contract”. ²³⁷⁰ In this situation, equally, the term of the secondary contract is subject to the rules of Pt 2 of the Act governing its fairness and transparency. While the examples of exclusion or limitation clauses in the “indicative list” provided by Sch.2 of the 2015 Act would not apply directly for this purpose (given that they are concerned with the exclusion or limitation of liability in a trader to a consumer under a consumer contract), ²³⁷¹ they could nevertheless provide useful guidance mutatis mutandis. Thirdly, as has been noted, following the interpretation taken of the scope of s.10 of the 1977 Act, s.72(4) expressly provides that it shall not apply to a settlement of a claim arising under the main contract. ²³⁷²

The effect of unfairness on terms in “secondary contracts”

38-372

Unlike the position under s.10 of the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 (which provides that a person is not bound by a term falling under it ²³⁷³), the controls imposed by s.72 of the 2015 Act on the terms of secondary contracts are those provided by Pt 2 of that Act (i.e. the test of unfairness and the requirement of transparency) and this means that, in general, a term in a secondary contract falling under s.72 may or may not bind according to whether or not it is assessed as unfair under the general test provided by s.62. ²³⁷⁴ Following the general rule, where a term in a secondary contract is found unfair by way of application of s.72, it is apparently not binding on the person whose rights or remedies are reduced or obligations increased, even though there is no provision in the 2015 Act which has this explicit effect. ²³⁷⁵

38-373

While, as earlier noted, the provisions governing “secondary contracts” find no direct counterpart in the 1993 Directive, to the extent to which they govern terms in “consumer contracts” they clearly come within its scope, but to the extent to which they govern terms other than in “consumer contracts” within the meaning of the 1993 Directive they fall outside its scope and therefore in principle within the general competence of national law. ²³⁷⁶ In either situation, any extension beyond the 1993 Directive having effect on the contract term (being part of “contract law”) itself is compatible with EU law. ²³⁷⁷ On the other hand, the controls on the terms of secondary contracts in s.72 may form the object of enforcement measures provided by Sch.3 of the Act. ²³⁷⁸ To the extent to which the availability of these enforcement powers go beyond the 1993 Directive and also fall within the scope of the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005, they may fall foul of the “full harmonisation” which the latter Directive requires. ²³⁷⁹

²³⁵⁸. 2015 Act s.72(1).

²³⁵⁹. 2015 Act s.72(2).

²³⁶⁰. 2015 Act s.72(3).

- 2361. 2015 Act s.72(4).
- 2362.  Peel, Treitel on The Law of Contract, 14th edn (2015), para.7–084. This lack of enforceability could result either directly from a provision of the Act (e.g. s.2(1), s.6(2)) or from a finding of “unreasonableness” of such a term (e.g. s.2(2) or s.6(3) as assessed under s.11).
- 2363. See Vol.I, para.15-128.
- 2364. Tudor Grange Holdings Ltd v Citibank N.A. [1992] Ch. 53 at [66].
- 2365. Vol.I, para.15-128.
- 2366. Tudor Grange Holdings Ltd v Citibank N.A. [1992] Ch. 53; Vol.I, para.15-128.
- 2367.  Tudor Grange Holdings Ltd v Citibank N.A. [1992] Ch. 53 at [66]; Peel, Treitel on The Law of Contract, 14th edn (2015), para.7–084.
- 2368. The Law Commissions had earlier recommended that its proposed unified legislation on unfair terms should contain provision, applicable to all the types of contract governed by it, subjecting terms in secondary contracts to the same controls as if they appeared in the main contract, but that genuine agreements to settle existing disputes should be exempted: Law Commissions, Unfair Terms (2005) paras 3.141–3.142.
- 2369. Unlike the controls on the terms of secondary contracts imposed by the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.10 (which apply to the “prejudicing or taking away” of rights which Pt 1 of the Act prevents) the controls imposed by s.72 of the 2015 Act on the terms of the secondary contract are those provided by Pt 2 of the Act (i.e. the test of unfairness and the requirement of transparency) and they do not, therefore, extend to the controls imposed by Pt 1 of the Act on contract terms which seek to exclude or limit liabilities or rules provided for consumer contracts and provided by s.31 (exclusion of liability: goods contracts), s.47 (exclusion of liability: digital content contracts), and s.57 (exclusion of liability: services contracts).
- 2370. Notably, if the secondary contract is a contract of employment which is excluded from the definition of “consumer contract” by the 2015 Act s.61(2), above, para.38-355.
- 2371. 2015 Act Sch.2 Pt 1 paras 1 and 2.
- 2372. Tudor Grange Holdings Ltd v Citibank N.A. [1992] Ch. 53 at 66–67.
- 2373. Above, para.38-370.
- 2374. 2015 Act s.62(4) and (5), below, paras 38-358 et seq. The exception is found where ss.65 and 66 impose bars on the effectiveness of certain types of term (notably terms which exclude or limit a trader’s liability for death or personal injury resulting from negligence) on which see below, para.38-377.
- 2375. 2015 Act s.72(2) provides merely that “the term is subject to the provisions of this Part that would apply to the term if it were in the main contract”. In the case of a term in a main contract (which must be a “consumer contract”) the primary effect of a finding of unfairness is that the term is “not binding on the consumer”: s.62(1). However, if this provision were applied as it stands to the case of a term in a secondary contract then it would appear to restrict the effect of the finding of unfairness in that secondary contract to the situation where the person affected is a “consumer” for the purposes of that contract, which appears inconsistent with s.72(3)(b) which provides that “it does not matter for the purposes [of s.72] ... whether the secondary contract is a consumer contract”. It is clearly (if implicitly) the intention of s.72 that a person who acts as a “consumer” in the main contract should not lose the benefit of the rights which he or she enjoys under that contract by agreement with a third party, even if he acts other than as a consumer for the purposes of that secondary contract.

2376. cf. above, paras 38-020—38-021, 38-346.

2377. Above, para.38-349.

2378. 2015 Act s.70 refers to Sch.3 providing functions for regulators “in relation to the enforcement of this Part” i.e. Pt 2.

2379. See below, paras 38-389—38-394.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 6. - The Control of Unfair Contract Terms

(d) - The New Law: The Consumer Rights Act 2015

(iv) - Contract Terms and Notices Not Binding on the Consumer Where Assessed as Unfair

(cc) - Consumer notices

The test of unfairness

38-374

The Consumer Rights Act 2015 provides that:

“A [consumer] notice is unfair if, contrary to the requirement of good faith, it causes a significant imbalance in the parties’ rights and obligations to the detriment of the consumer.” ²³⁸⁰

This assessment must be made taking into account “the nature of the subject matter of the notice” and “by reference to all the circumstances existing when the rights or obligations to which it relates arose and to the terms of any contract on which it depends”. ²³⁸¹ It will readily be seen that this test of unfairness is modelled closely on the test applied to contract terms set out by the Act and reflecting the 1993 Directive. ²³⁸² The substantive control of “notices” is not (at least explicitly) required by the 1993 Directive (which governs contract terms), ²³⁸³ but reflects rather the well-known provisions in the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 governing, notably, the exclusion of business liability for death and personal injury, and for “other loss or damage” caused by negligence. ²³⁸⁴ The approach of the Act here is two-fold: first, as will be seen, it bars the exclusion or restriction of liability for death or personal injuries resulting from negligence by notice, subject to certain exclusions. ²³⁸⁵ Secondly, the Act subjects the exclusion by notice of all other liabilities in traders to consumers to the new test of unfairness which has just been set out: this therefore applies to exclusions of liability for personal injuries or death caused by negligence in the cases excluded from the special bar ²³⁸⁶ and to exclusions of liability for other loss or damage. So, as regards the latter, for example, a notice of disclaimer of liability by a surveyor engaged by a building society purporting to exclude his or her liability to the (consumer) purchaser of the residence bought by the consumer with the help of a loan by the building society as seen in Smith v Eric S. Bush ²³⁸⁷ would now fall to be assessed for its fairness under the 2015 Act ²³⁸⁸ rather than under s.2(2) of the 1977 Act. However, the 2015 Act goes further than the 1977 Act, as it subjects “consumer notices” in general to the test of fairness and this therefore includes non-contractual exclusions or limitation of liability for loss or damage other than caused by negligence. ²³⁸⁹ This would therefore allow the control of “end user licence agreements” (which commonly accompany contracts for software and other digital products and which not only include terms about how far the consumer may copy the information, but also restrictions of a range of liabilities including for defamation or breach of privacy) ²³⁹⁰ and “browse wrap licences” (which many internet sites use and which state that by downloading material the consumer will be taken to have agreed to the owner’s terms and conditions, even where there is no box or icon to tick). ²³⁹¹

Effect of a finding of unfairness of a “consumer notice”

38-375

The Consumer Rights Act 2015 provides that “an unfair consumer notice is not binding on the consumer”. ²³⁹² Moreover, the Act extends its scheme of enforcement measures required for the prevention of unfair contract terms by the 1993 Directive to “consumer notices”. ²³⁹³ As will be seen, to the extent to which these measures constitute the prohibition of a “business-to-consumer commercial practice” within the meaning of the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005, they may fall foul of its “full harmonisation”. ²³⁹⁴

^{2380.} 2015 Act s.62(6). On the definition of “consumer notice” see 2015 Act ss.61(4), 76(1) and above, para.38-356.

^{2381.} 2015 Act s.62(7).

^{2382.} 2015 Act s.62(4) and (5); 1993 Directive arts 3(1) and 4(1).

^{2383.} But see the argument at para.38-356 n.2104 that the control of non-contractual notices as understood at common law may be required as a matter of the autonomous interpretation of “contract” for the purposes of the 1993 Directive.

^{2384.} Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.2. The 1977 Act s.5 “consumer guarantees” also applies to “notices”, but s.5 is deleted by the Consumer Rights Act s.75; Sch.4 para.7 following the recommendation of the Law Commissions which saw it as unnecessary: Unfair Terms in Contracts (2005), para.3.48.

^{2385.} 2015 Act ss.65 and 66 on which see below, para.38-377.

^{2386.} 2015 Act s.66(4) excludes from the bar in s.65 terms or notices excluding or limiting the liability of an occupier of premises to a person who obtains access for recreational purposes, subject to certain conditions. However, this exclusion does not apply to the controls of the fairness of contract terms and consumer notices in s.62 of the 2015 Act (on which see above, para.38-359 and 38-374) as noted by Clerk and Lindsell on Torts, 21st edn (2014) paras.12-53 n.259.

^{2387.} Joined with the decision in Harris v Wyre Forest DC [1990] 1 A.C. 831.

^{2388.} 2015 Act s.62(6) and (7).

^{2389.} This follows the recommendation of Law Com. Advice (2013) para.7.26.

^{2390.} Law Com. Advice (2013) paras 7.18–7.19, 7.26.

^{2391.} Law Com. Advice (2013) paras 7.20–7.21.

^{2392.} 2015 Act s.62(2)

^{2393.} The heading of the 2015 Act s.70 confusingly refers only to the “enforcement of the law of unfair contract terms”, but s.70(1) itself refers to the conferral of functions on the CMA and other regulators in relation to the enforcement of Pt 2 and, therefore, the law governing “consumer notices” as well as governing terms in consumer contracts. This is confirmed explicitly by Sch.3 (entitled “Enforcement of the law on unfair contract terms and notices” and which sets out the enforcement powers), para.1(d) of which provides that the Schedule applies to “a consumer notice”.

^{2394.} Below, paras 38-389—38-394.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts
Section 6. - The Control of Unfair Contract Terms
(d) - The New Law: The Consumer Rights Act 2015
(v) - Contract Terms And Notices Not Binding on the Consumer in all Circumstances

Four special categories

38-376

Under the Consumer Rights Act 2015, there are four categories of situation where terms in consumer contracts or “consumer notices” are made not binding on the consumer without any evaluation of their fairness as is provided for contract terms and consumer notices generally.

(i) Terms or notices excluding or restricting liability for death or personal injury resulting from negligence

38-377

Section 65(1) of the 2015 Act provides that:

“[a] trader cannot by a term of a consumer contract or by a consumer notice exclude or restrict liability for death or personal injury resulting from negligence.”

This provision therefore reproduces for the consumer context s.2(1) of the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977. ²³⁹⁵ For this purpose, s.65 reproduces the definitions of “personal injury” and, with minor changes, “negligence” provided by the 1977 Act. ²³⁹⁶ However, again following the 1977 Act, the Act excludes from the scope of these controls any contract in so far as it is a contract of insurance, including a contract to pay an annuity on human life and any contract so far as it relates to the creation or transfer of an interest in land ²³⁹⁷; does not affect the validity of any discharge of indemnity given by a person in consideration of the receipt by that person of compensation in settlement of any claim the person has ²³⁹⁸; and does not apply to the liability of an occupier of premises to a person who obtains access to the premises for recreational purposes if the person suffers loss or damage because of the state of premises and allowing the person access for those purposes is not within the purposes of the occupier’s trade, business, craft or profession. ²³⁹⁹

(ii) Contract terms seeking to exclude Pt 1 liabilities

38-378

The Consumer Rights Act 2015 Pt 1 imposes on traders a series of liabilities in the three categories of contracts to which it applies: contracts to supply goods; contracts to supply digital content; and contracts to supply services. ²⁴⁰⁰ Part 1 of the Act also provides in general that the liabilities arising under its provisions in this way cannot be excluded or restricted by a term of the relevant contract. ²⁴⁰¹

So, for example, a term of a consumer contract of sale of goods cannot exclude liability arising from breach of the term that the quality of the goods is satisfactory or that the goods are reasonably fit for any purpose made known by the consumer to the trader before the contract is made, ²⁴⁰² thereby reflecting and, as regards consumer contracts, replacing the well-known controls in s.6 of the 1977 Act. ²⁴⁰³ Also following the 1977 Act, this control on the exclusion of liability extends to a series of terms of similar function. ²⁴⁰⁴ The rendering of contract terms ineffective in this way by Pt 1 of the Act generally takes effect without the need for any judicial assessment of their fairness under the general test of unfairness under Pt 2 of the Act. ²⁴⁰⁵ None of these controls in Pt 1 of the Act are required by the 1993 Directive, although some are required by the Consumer Sales Directive 1999, and, to a much lesser extent, the Consumer Rights Directive 2011. ²⁴⁰⁶ To the extent to which these controls on contract terms are not so required, their effect on the binding nature of the term between the contracting parties is clearly permitted by EU law under the “minimum harmonisation” clause in the 1993 Directive, but the position is more difficult as regards the availability of enforcement measures linked to these controls as a result of the “full harmonisation” required by the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005. ²⁴⁰⁷

(iii) Contract terms and burden of proof under the Distance Marketing of Financial Services Directive

38-379

The Consumer Rights Act 2015 provides specially so as to deem unfair a term of a consumer contract which “has the effect that the consumer bears the burden of proof with respect to compliance by a distance supplier or an intermediary with an obligation under any enactment or rule implementing the Distance Marketing of Financial Services Directive 2002. ²⁴⁰⁸ The consequences of such deemed unfairness follow the consequences of a term assessed as unfair as earlier explained. ²⁴⁰⁹

(iv) Consumer arbitration

38-380

The Consumer Rights Act 2015 retains the special rule in the Arbitration Act 1996 according to which a term in a consumer contract which constitutes an arbitration agreement is deemed unfair so far as it relates to a pecuniary claim in a modest amount (£5,000 at the time of writing). ²⁴¹⁰ Arbitration agreements in consumer contracts which relate to claims for larger sums may be assessed for their fairness under the general rule in s.62 of the Act. ²⁴¹¹

38-381

In each of these four categories of case, the contract term or (as the case may be) notice is not binding on the consumer, but the wider consequences of the nonbindingness of a term as between the contracting parties differ as between them. So, as regards the two cases where a contract term is deemed unfair (arbitration agreements and terms governing burden of proof in distance contracts for the supply of financial services), the provisions of Pt 2 which govern the effects of the non-bindingness of a term apply so that the consumer is able to rely on the clause and as regards its possible effect on the wider contract. ²⁴¹² In the case of the exclusion of liability for negligence, the 2015 Act provides simply that “[a] trader cannot by a term of a consumer contract ... exclude or restrict liability for death or personal injury resulting from negligence”, ²⁴¹³ not thereby deeming a contract term seeking to do so “unfair” and so “not binding” within the meaning of Pt 2 so as to attract its wider effects. It is submitted, though, that this is unlikely to cause any practical problems as a consumer has no reason to rely on such a clause and the ineffectiveness of such an exemption clause would not have the effect of rendering the continuation of the wider contract impracticable. ²⁴¹⁴ Similarly, while Pt 1 makes no special provision for any wider effects of the nonbindingness of contract terms seeking to exclude Pt 1 liabilities, such an effect is most unlikely to have any effect on the wider contract. ²⁴¹⁵ On the other hand, the 2015 Act applies the special enforcement regime for unfair terms which it provides in Sch.3 to all four of these categories of ineffective contract term. ²⁴¹⁶

- 2395. On which see Vol.I, paras 15-081—15-083.
- 2396. 2015 Act s.65(3) and (4) respectively; Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.1(1) (“negligence”); s.14 (“personal injury”). The Act ss.65(2) (on relationship to voluntary acceptance of risk) and 65(5) (immaterial whether breach inadvertent or intentional or liability direct or vicarious) make similar provision as is found in the 1977 Act, ss.2(3) and 1(4) respectively.
- 2397. 2015 Act ss.65(6) and 66(1) and cf. Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.1(2); Sch.1 para.1(a) and (b).
- 2398. 2015 Act ss.65(6) and 66(2) and cf. Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.1(2); Sch.1 para.5 (which is restricted to cases of compensation for pneumoconiosis).
- 2399. 2015 Act ss.65(6) and 66(4) and cf. Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.1(3)(b) (which refers to “recreational or educational purposes”).
- 2400. 2015 Act Pt 1, Chs 2, 3 and 4 respectively and see below, paras 38-431 et seq.
- 2401. 2015 Act s.31 (contracts to supply goods), s.47 (contracts to supply digital content) and s.57 (contracts to supply services).
- 2402. 2015 Act ss.9 and 10; s.31(1)(a) and (b).
- 2403. Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.6(2) (which the 2015 Act s.75, Sch.4 para.8(3) deletes).
- 2404. e.g. 2015 Act s.31(2) reflecting the definition in the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.13.
- 2405. For the details see 2015 Act ss.31, 47 and 57 below, paras 38-492, 38-524 and 38-546 respectively (which explain the qualifications on this general position).
- 2406. Directive 99/44/EC on certain aspects of the sale of consumer goods and associated guarantees [1999] O.J. L171/7 art.7(1). The Consumer Rights Directive 2011 (whose provisions are “imperative” under art.25) is relevant to the trader’s liability under s.11(4) and s.12 (below, paras 38-464—38-465); s.36(3) and s.37 (below, paras 38-508—38-509) and s.50(3) (below, para. 38-533). The 2011 Directive is also relevant to ss.28 and 29 of the Act: below, paras 38-489—38-490.
- 2407. See below, paras 38-389—38-394.
- 2408. Directive 2002/65/EC concerning the distance marketing of consumer financial services [2002] O.J. L271/16; 2015 Act s.63(6) and (7) (which provides definitions for this purpose). This provision reflects the 1999 Regulations reg.5(6) and (7) as inserted by the Financial Services (Distance Marketing) Regulations 2004 (SI 2004/2095) reg.24(3). On the latter, see above, para.38-131.
- 2409. Above, para.38-369.
- 2410. Arbitration Act 1996 ss.89–91 as amended by 2015 Act s.75, Sch.4 paras 30–32, referring to Pt 2 of the Act for these purposes. The special rule in the Arbitration Act 1996 s.90 extending the definition of a “consumer” so as to include a legal person is also retained. The amount is specified by the Unfair Arbitration Agreements (Specified Amount) Order 1999 (SI 1999/2167). cf. above, para.38-276.
- 2411. Above, para.38-359. For this latter purpose, the definition of “consumer” follows the general scheme as provided by the 2015 Act s.2(2) and s.76(2) on which see above, para.38-353.
- 2412. 2015 Act s.62(1) (as applied by Arbitration Act 1996 s.91(1) as amended) (arbitration agreements); s.62(1) (as applied by s.63(6) (distance contracts). For these consequences see ss.62(3) and 67 of the Act, above, para.38-369.

- 2413. 2015 Act s.65(1) (emphasis added).
- 2414. cf. 2015 Act ss.62(3) and 67. There is an argument that s.67 could apply to terms ineffective under s.65 as the text of the former refers to terms “not binding on the consumer” which does properly describe the effect of s.65 even though it does not use this terminology.
- 2415. 2015 Act ss.31, 47 and 57 (Pt 2 liabilities); s.67.
- 2416. 2015 Act ss.31(7), 47(5) and 57(7) (Pt 2 liabilities); s.70(1) (terms deemed unfair under ss.63(6) and by the Arbitration Act 1996 s.91). While the heading of s.70 refers to the “enforcement of the law on unfair contract terms” (emphasis added), the text of s.70 refers “to the enforcement of this Part” and this clearly includes the enforcement of the rule contained in s.65: and cf. Explanatory Notes 2015, paras 333-334. On this enforcement regime more generally see below, paras 38-387 et seq.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts
Section 6. - The Control of Unfair Contract Terms
(d) - The New Law: The Consumer Rights Act 2015
(vi) - The requirement for transparency

Application to contract terms and consumer notices

38-382

Section 68(1) of the Consumer Rights Act 2015 headed "Requirement for transparency" provides that:

"A trader must ensure that a written term of a consumer contract, or a consumer notice in writing, is transparent."

As regards contract terms, it is provided that:

"[a] term is transparent ... if it is expressed in plain and intelligible language and (in the case of a written term) is legible." 2417

Section 68(2) provides specially that "[a] consumer notice is transparent ... if it is expressed in plain and intelligible language and it is legible".

Contract terms

38-383

In the case of contract terms, the 2015 Act's intention is to implement art.5 of the 1993 Directive without extending the protection which it requires for consumers, since the additional requirement of "legibility" is seen as implicit in the Directive's requirement of plain, intelligible writing, a view which accords with the wide interpretation given to it by the Court of Justice of the EU. 2418 Unlike the Act's implementation of the similar condition for the exclusion in art.4(2) of the 1993 Directive, the Act does not generally further require that written contract terms be "prominent". 2419

"Consumer notices in writing"

38-384

On the other hand, the 2015 Act extends the requirement for transparency to "consumer notices in writing", which is not apparently required by the 1993 Directive. 2420

Effects of failure to fulfil requirement for transparency

38-385

First, s.69(1) of the 2015 Act provides:

“If a term in a consumer contract, or a consumer notice, could have different meanings, the meaning that is most favourable to the consumer is to prevail.”

This seeks to implement the requirement in art.5 of the 1993 Directive (earlier implemented in reg.7(2) of the 1999 Regulations), with the difference that this rule of interpretation is not restricted to the interpretation of written terms (as is reg.7(2) ²⁴²¹) and that it extends to “consumer notices”. This rule reflects closely (if not identically) the position at common law under construction contra proferentem. ²⁴²² Secondly, the 2015 Act provides that the enforcement measures provided for regulators for the enforcement of the law of unfair terms applies to the enforcement of the requirement of transparency of terms and notices as it does to the requirement of fairness, ²⁴²³ a position which was not stated in the 1999 Regulations. ²⁴²⁴ Following the 1993 Directive (and the 1999 Regulations), the 2015 Act provides that the special rule of construction does not apply for the purposes of proceedings for an injunction under this enforcement regime. ²⁴²⁵

²⁴¹⁷. 2015 Act s.64(3) (made in the context of the exclusion of terms specifying the subject matter etc., but applying for the purposes of Pt 2 generally).

²⁴¹⁸. See this above, paras 38-320 and 38-366.

²⁴¹⁹. cf. s.64(2) and (4) and above, para.38-367.

²⁴²⁰. cf. above, para.38-356 n.2104 on the possibility that “consumer notices” do fall within the 1993 Directive’s autonomous definition of contract terms. On the definition of “consumer notice” see above, para.38-356.

²⁴²¹. The position under the 1993 Directive in this respect is not entirely clear. The first sentence of art.5 (which requires plain, intelligible writing), is restricted expressly to “contracts where all or certain terms offered to the consumer are in writing”; while the second sentence (“[w]here there is doubt about the meaning of a term, the interpretation most favourable to the consumer shall prevail”) is not so restricted, it could be thought that its scope remains restricted by what has been stated in the first sentence.

²⁴²². See Vol.I, para.15-009.

²⁴²³. 2015 Act s.70(1) referring to “the enforcement of this Part”, i.e. Pt 2.

²⁴²⁴. For argument that these measures did extend to the requirement of transparency, see above, para.38-324; Law Com. Advice (2013) paras 6.60–6.63.

²⁴²⁵. 2015 Act s.69(2); 1993 Directive art.5; 1999 Regulations reg.7(2).

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts
Section 6. - The Control of Unfair Contract Terms
(d) - The New Law: The Consumer Rights Act 2015
(vii) - Choice of Law

Special rule governing choice of law

38-386

⚠ As required by the 1993 Directive for contracts within its scope ²⁴²⁶ (and following the 1999 Regulations, though using a different wording), ²⁴²⁷ s.74 of the Consumer Rights Act 2015 provides that, where a consumer contract has a close connection with the UK, a choice of law of a country or territory other than an EEA State ²⁴²⁸ as the contract's applicable law does not affect the application of Pt 2's provisions governing unfair contract terms. ²⁴²⁹ This special rule required by the 1993 Directive ²⁴³⁰ differs from the general position provided by the Rome I Regulation, ²⁴³¹ to which the Act helpfully cross-refers to indicate to the reader the rules applicable in the absence of a choice of the law of a country or territory other than an EEA. ²⁴³² Article 6(1) of the Rome I Regulation provides the law of the consumer's habitual residence as the applicable law governing consumer contracts in the absence of agreement otherwise:

“provided that the professional:

(a)

pursues his commercial or professional activities in the country where the consumer has his habitual residence, or by any means, directs such activities to that country or to several countries including that country, and the contract falls within the scope of such activities.”

(b)

Furthermore, where these same conditions are satisfied, art.6(2) of the Rome I Regulation provides that any agreement in the consumer contract on applicable law may not:

“have the result of depriving the consumer of the protection afforded to him by provisions that cannot be derogated from by agreement by virtue of the law which, in the absence of choice, would have been applicable on the basis of paragraph 1.”

If these conditions are not satisfied, then the rules governing the law applicable to the consumer contract fall under the general scheme governing contracts in the Rome I Regulation. ²⁴³³ It seems clear that the special provision governing agreements on applicable law in the 1993 Directive takes precedence over the general scheme set out in the Rome I Regulation (which makes uniform provision governing the law applicable to contractual obligations) and is best seen as constituting a special “overriding mandatory provision” in the sense of art.9 of that Regulation. ²⁴³⁴ Be that as it may, the Court of Justice of the EU has held that where a consumer contract contains a choice of law clause which designates the law of another Member State, that term may itself be an unfair term within the meaning of the 1993 Directive. ²⁴³⁵  It is to be noted that, to the extent to which the Act extends the definition of “consumer contract” beyond the definition taken by the Court of Justice for the purposes of the 1993 Directive, ²⁴³⁶ the 2015 Act also extends the application of this special rule governing choice of law. ²⁴³⁷ Such an extension of the applicable law rule may be reconciled with the uniform character of the rules set out for contractual obligations generally by the Rome I Regulation, ²⁴³⁸ but only to the extent to which it gives effect to “overriding mandatory rules” of the UK as part of the law of the forum or of the law of place of performance of the contract’s obligations. ²⁴³⁹ The 2015 Act makes no provisions equivalent to the exclusion of “international supply contracts” nor those governing English choice of law clauses as are found in the Unfair Contract Terms Act. ²⁴⁴⁰

^{2426.} 1993 Directive art.6(2).

^{2427.} 1999 Regulations reg.9 on which see above, para.38-322.

^{2428.} The EEA States comprise the EU Member States plus Iceland, Liechtenstein and Norway. The 1993 Directive forms part of the EU law which these latter States have agreed to apply: Agreement on the European Economic Area (updated version to April 12, 2014) art.72; Annex XIX para.7(a).

^{2429.} It is to be noted that the restriction of s.74’s special rule to the application of Pt 2, means that it does not apply so as specially to protect the rules rendering terms not binding on consumers under Pt 1 of the Act, i.e. those rules governing the exclusion or restriction of liability arising from Pt 1 provisions by 2015 Act ss.31, 47 and 57. cf. similar provision in 2015 Act s.32 in respect of “contracts to supply goods” under Pt 1 Ch.2 of the Act, reflecting similar provision in the Consumer Sales Directive 1999 art.7(2), beow, para.38-494.

^{2430.} 1993 Directive art.6(2).

^{2431.} Regulation (EC) 593/2008 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 17 June 2008 on the law applicable to contractual obligations (“Rome I”) [2008] O.J. L177/6 on which generally see Vol.I, paras 30-129 et seq.; Dicey, Morris and Collins, The Conflict of Laws, 15th edn (2012), Vol.II, paras 33–126 et seq. and, in relation to the 1993 Directive art.6(2), paras 33-168—33-173.

^{2432.} 2015 Act s.74(2).

^{2433.} Rome I Regulation, notably, arts 3 and 4 on which see Vol.I, paras 30-169—30-208.

^{2434.} Rome I Regulation arts 9 and 23 (on which generally see Vol.I, paras 30-134 and 30-287 et seq.); Plender and Wilderspin, The European Private International Law of Obligations, 3rd edn (2009) paras 9-092—9-093.

^{2435.}  Verein für Konsumenteninformation v Amazon EU Sàrl (C-191/15) July 28, 2016, above, para.38-295A.

^{2436.} See above, paras 38-033—38-034 (especially in relation to the definition of “consumer” in 2015 Act s.2(3) as an individual acting “wholly or mainly outside that individual’s trade” etc.).

^{2437.} s.74(1) in fine provides that “this Part [i.e. Pt 2] applies despite that choice”.

2438. See especially Rome I Regulation Ch.2 “Uniform Rules”.

2439. Rome I art.9. In the absence of such a specially extended applicable law rule, the substantive controls in the 2015 Act on unfair contract terms which are not required by the 1993 Directive could be given effect despite a choice of law other than of UK law as legal provisions which cannot be derogated from by agreement under (and subject to the conditions of) Rome I Regulation arts 3(3) and 6(2), on which see Vol.I, paras 30-177 and 30-231 et seq.

2440. Unfair Contract Terms Act ss.26 and 27 on which see Vol.I paras 15-122 and 15-125 respectively. As regards ss.26 and 27(1), this reflects the earlier recommendations of the Law Commissions for consumer contracts (made in relation to the Rome Convention on the law applicable to contractual obligations 1980, which preceded the Rome I Regulation): Law Commission and Scottish Law Commission Unfair Terms in Contracts (2005) Pt 7, especially paras 7.6 and 7.9; their recommendations as regards s.27(2) were more nuanced, but are not reflected directly in the 2015 Act, except to the extent to which s.74 applies its rule on choice of law so as to protect the controls on unfair contract terms in the Act other than those required by the 1993 Directive.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts
Section 6. - The Control of Unfair Contract Terms
(d) - The New Law: The Consumer Rights Act 2015
(viii) - Enforcement

Summary of position before enactment of the Consumer Rights Act 2015

38-387

⚠ Before the bringing into force of Pts 1 and 2 of the Consumer Rights Act 2015 on October 1, 2015, there were three sets of enforcement mechanisms which might be available to prevent the use or recommendation for use of unfair contract terms. ²⁴⁴¹ ⚠ The 1999 Regulations provided for applications for injunctions to be made by the Competition and Markets Authority (CMA) and other qualifying bodies against the use, recommendation for use or drawing up for general use of terms in consumer contracts that are unfair within the meaning of those Regulations. ²⁴⁴² These powers did not extend to controls in English law of unfair contract terms which are not required by the 1993 Directive and implemented by the Regulations (notably, those found in the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 ²⁴⁴³). Secondly, Pt 8 of the Enterprise Act 2002 provides for “enforcement orders” in respect, inter alia, of “Community infringements”, and the latter include infringements of the 1993 Directive and the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005. ²⁴⁴⁴ ⚠ Thirdly, use or recommendation for use of unfair terms in consumer contracts may constitute an “unfair commercial practice” within the meaning of the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 which set out the prohibitions required by the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005. ²⁴⁴⁵ The 2008 Regulations provide, inter alia, for a series of criminal offences relating to unfair commercial practices as well as for enforcement measures under Pt 8 of the Enterprise Act 2002. ²⁴⁴⁶ This means, for example, that the use by a trader of unfair terms in its dealings with consumers could attract the preventive measures provided by the 1999 Regulations, an “enforcement order” under Pt 8 of the Enterprise Act 2002 and/or a criminal sanction as an “unfair commercial practice” (where the latter’s special conditions are satisfied). ²⁴⁴⁷

Enforcement measures under the Consumer Rights Act 2015

38-388

⚠ The approach of the 2015 Act to the enforcement of the controls which it requires for unfair terms and notices reflects this earlier law, but extends the special scheme (earlier set out by the 1999 Regulations and now set out by Sch.3 of the Act) to the Act’s controls on terms generally ²⁴⁴⁸ as well as providing that the investigatory powers needed for these purposes are the same as for the enforcement of consumer protection legislation more widely. ²⁴⁴⁹ Under Sch.3 of the Act, the CMA and other “regulators” ²⁴⁵⁰ (who are the same as the “qualifying bodies” foreseen by the 1999 Regulations ²⁴⁵¹) possess a power to apply for an injunction against a person if it thinks that the person is “using, or proposing or recommending the use of, a term or notice” in the following circumstances ²⁴⁵²: where a term or notice purports to exclude or restrict liability imposed by Pt 1 (for example, in respect of the satisfactory quality of goods supplied) or business liability for death or personal injury resulting from negligence ²⁴⁵³; where a term or notice is unfair within the meaning of Pt 2 “to any extent” ²⁴⁵⁴; and where a term or notice fails the requirement of transparency.²⁴⁵⁵ Schedule 3 also provides regulators with powers to consider complaints about a term or notice in the same circumstances,²⁴⁵⁶ and to accept an undertaking from a person against whom it has applied, or thinks it is entitled to apply for an injunction.²⁴⁵⁷ Courts may grant an injunction on such conditions, and against such respondents to the proceedings, as it thinks appropriate.²⁴⁵⁸ The powers in regulators are therefore wider than those contained in the 1999 Regulations in three principal ways: first, they apply to those provisions in the 2015 Act which reflect provisions in the 1977 Act and which render terms not binding on consumers without any assessment of their fairness²⁴⁵⁹; secondly, they apply to terms assessed as unfair under the general test even where (owing to the extended character of the scope of this test) they would not fall to be assessed under the 1999 Regulations (or the 1993 Directive)²⁴⁶⁰; and, thirdly, they apply to “consumer notices” in the same way as they apply to contract terms.²⁴⁶¹ In addition, the 2015 Act does not affect the possibility of enforcement measures being taken under Pt 8 of the Enterprise Act 2002 in respect of “Community infringements” which harm the collective interests of consumers and these include acts or omissions which contravene the 1993 Directive²⁴⁶² or which contravene laws of an EEA State (including the UK) which give effect to that Directive and which “provide additional permitted protections” beyond its minimum requirements, if “such additional protection is permitted by that Directive”.²⁴⁶³ For this purpose, the relevant provisions in Pt 2 of the 2015 Act which implement the 1993 Directive have been designated as a specified UK law for the purposes of s.212 of the 2002

Act²⁴⁶⁴  and in addition, acts or omissions in respect of any provision in Pt 2 of the 2015 Act are specified as possible “domestic infringements” for the purposes of s.211 of the Enterprise Act 2002.

²⁴⁶⁵  The 2015 Act enhances the consumer measures which are available under the Enterprise Act so as to include, for example, measures offering compensation or other redress to consumers who have suffered loss as a result of the conduct which has given rise to the enforcement order.²⁴⁶⁶ Thirdly, although not mentioned by the 2015 Act, in principle the use or recommendation for use of an unfair term or notice by a trader in its commercial practices with consumers can constitute an “unfair commercial practice” within the meaning of the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008.²⁴⁶⁷

Compatibility of extensions of preventive measures with EU law?

38-389

The question arises, however, whether the extension of the enforcement measures required by art.7 of the 1993 Directive as foreseen by the 2015 Act are compatible with EU law. At first sight, such extensions are so compatible either to the extent to which they fall within the scope of that Directive and, therefore, within its permissive “minimum harmonisation” clause or outside the scope of the 1993 Directive and therefore within the general competence of the UK.²⁴⁶⁸ However, as earlier noted, the difficulty arises from the impact of the “full harmonisation” generally required by the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive on national measures (apart from “contract law”) which prohibit business-to-consumer commercial practices within the scope of the 2005 Directive.

The impact of “full harmonisation” under the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005

38-390

 Where it applies, the impact of full harmonisation under the 2005 Directive is that Member States must not prohibit a “business-to-consumer commercial practice” falling within its scope unless it is prohibited under the controls of the Directive itself.²⁴⁶⁹ As earlier noted, the use or recommendation for use of an unfair contract term or terms by a trader with a consumer or consumers may constitute a commercial practice in that trader within the meaning of the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005²⁴⁷⁰ and so may be held unfair under the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008.²⁴⁷¹ It has also been seen that the 2005 Directive provides for three qualifications on its scope (and therefore also on the full harmonisation which it requires). First, its prohibitions on unfair commercial practices are “without prejudice” to EU or national contract law²⁴⁷²; secondly, it provides that specific national rules governing commercial practices business-to-consumer which implement specific EU rules (for example, in relation package travel²⁴⁷³  “prevail and apply” rather than the

❗ And, thirdly, rules governing commercial practices which are more protective of consumers in national legislation implementing minimum harmonisation directives are protected from the 2005 Directive's "full harmonisation", but only for a transitional period which ended on June 11, 2013. ²⁴⁷⁵ This means that, after the expiry of this transitional period, in principle national legislation which prohibits business-to-consumer commercial practices as understood by the 2005 Directive other than under the Directive's own scheme is compatible with its requirement of full harmonisation only if its rules are required by other EU legislation or if they belong to "contract law". This impact of "full harmonisation" is made particularly clear by the existence of the (now expired) transitional position for national legislation implementing minimum harmonisation directives more strictly than they require.

"Contract law" for these purposes

38-391

It has earlier been suggested that "contract law" for the purposes of the "without prejudice" provision in the 2005 directive refers to the law which governs the relative rights and obligations of the parties to a contract. ²⁴⁷⁶ The natural contrast to this "contract law" is, it is submitted, regulatory or preventive measures of the practices of traders. This contrast is confirmed by recital 15 of the 2005 Directive in the context of explaining the significance of national information requirements and the condition of "materiality" of "misleading omissions". ²⁴⁷⁷

"Where Member States have introduced information requirements over and above what is specified in Community law, on the basis of minimum clauses, the omission of that extra information will not constitute a misleading omission under this Directive. By contrast Member States will be able, when allowed by the minimum clauses in Community law, to maintain or introduce more stringent provisions in conformity with Community law so as to ensure a higher level of protection of consumers' individual contractual rights."

Putting this contrast into the context of the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Directive, the 2005 Directive does not prevent Member States from implementing its "contract law" provisions so as to be more protective of consumers, the "contract law" effects referring here principally to its requirement that unfair terms are not binding on consumers and that terms which fail the requirement of transparency are interpreted in favour of consumers. ²⁴⁷⁸ On the other hand, the measures required by the Directive of Member States to prevent the use or recommendation for use of unfair terms in consumers contracts ²⁴⁷⁹ do not in this sense belong to "contract law".

Significance for the Consumer Rights Act 2015

38-392

This is significant for the 2015 Act to the extent to which it extends the enforcement measures put in place to prohibit contract terms to situations which the 1993 Directive does not require ²⁴⁸⁰ and yet which fall within the scope of the 2005 Directive. ²⁴⁸¹ First, these measures are available to prevent the use or recommendation for use by a third party of contract terms which seek to exclude the trader's liability for breach of certain terms inserted by Pt 1 of the Act into contracts with consumers (such as to the satisfactory quality of goods supplied or the trader's right to supply goods ²⁴⁸²) without any evaluation of the fairness of the terms (under the 1993 Directive) or of the fairness of this commercial practice (under the 2005 Directive). ²⁴⁸³ Secondly, these enforcement measures are available under the 2015 Act to prevent the use or recommendation for use of contract terms which seek to exclude the trader's business liability for death or personal injury resulting from negligence, similarly without regard to any evaluation of their fairness. ²⁴⁸⁴ Thirdly, as earlier noted, the 2015 Act extends the ambit of the test of unfairness by imposing a condition that terms relating to the subject matter of the contract etc. are exempted from this test under the "core exclusion" only if prominent as well as transparent and these apparent extensions apply for the purposes of the Act's enforcement measures as well as for the "contract law" effects. ²⁴⁸⁵ Finally, the Act extends the scope of enforcement measures to "notices" as well as to "contract terms", an extension not expressly foreseen by the 1993 Directive.²⁴⁸⁶ All these extensions of enforcement measures concerning the “commercial practices” of the use or recommendation for use of consumer terms or notices without the need for an evaluation under the 2005 Directive appear to be precluded by that Directive as a result of its full harmonisation.

The Consumer Injunctions Directive 2009

38-393

However, there is a possibility that these extensions (or some of these extensions) could shelter behind the special EU rules for “consumer injunctions” first enacted in a directive of 1998 and now found in the consolidating Consumer Injunctions Directive of 2009.²⁴⁸⁷ As earlier noted the 2009 Directive requires Member States to permit national “qualified entities” to bring proceedings for an injunction aimed at the protection of the collective interests of consumers” as foreseen by a list of European legislative instruments, including, inter alia, the 1993 Directive and the 2005 Directive and these injunctions must be available in respect both of domestic infringements and cross-border infringements.²⁴⁸⁸ The purpose of the Consumer Injunctions Directive is to ensure that mechanisms are available in all Member States to require compliance with the European consumer acquis, and so allow “infringements harmful to the collective interests of consumers to be terminated in good time”.²⁴⁸⁹ Recital 4 of the 2009 Directive states:

“As far as the purpose of bringing about the cessation of practices that are unlawful under the national provisions applicable is concerned, the effectiveness of national measure transposing the Directives in question, including protective measures that go beyond the level required by those Directives, provided that they are compatible with the Treaty and allowed by those Directives, may be thwarted where those practices produce effects in a Member State other than that in which they originate.”²⁴⁹⁰

This recital is not explicitly reflected in the text of the Directive, art.1(2) of which defines “infringement” as “any act contrary to the Directives listed in Annex I as transposed into the internal legal order of the Member States which harms the collective interests referred to in paragraph 1”, and which therefore suggests that it refers only to infringements of national laws where the latter reflect requirements of these directives. This interpretation may be supported by the 2009 Directive's main purpose, which is with procedural mechanisms rather than with substantive rights. Moreover, the argument that, owing to recital 4, the 2008 Directive allows Member States to provide for injunctions in respect of national laws implementing minimum harmonisation directives beyond the level required by those directives, faces the difficulty that this would appear to conflict with the position set out by the text of the 2005 Directive, which (after the expiry of the six-year transitional period) permits the prohibition of business-to-consumer commercial practices by national law outside its own framework only where this prohibition reflects the requirements of EU legislation itself.²⁴⁹¹ Certainly the Consumer Injunctions Directive does not purport to allow Member States to implement minimum harmonisation directives in such a way as to prohibit business-to-consumer commercial practices beyond those directives’ requirements in a way which does not conform to the (earlier) Unfair Commercial Practices Directive.

Conclusion

38-394

If the line of argument in the above paragraphs holds good, then enforcement measures against the “commercial practices” of the use or recommendation for use of contract terms beyond the situations required by the 1993 Directive are in principle precluded unless they are first subjected to an evaluation of their fairness under the 2005 Directive. Given the absence of any reference to the need for such an assessment in the text of the 2015 Act, either generally or specifically in relation to the extensions of the scope of enforcement measures in relation to unfair terms which it contains, this therefore casts doubt on the compatibility with EU law of the provisions of the Consumer Rights Act which foresee such an extension.²⁴⁹² The effects of such an incompatibility would be complex and cannot be fully explored here. In some instances, an English court may feel able to “read down” the provisions of the 2015 Act so as to ensure compatibility with the 2005 Directive, by way of the principle of “conforming interpretation”. ²⁴⁹³ An example may be found in relation to the requirement of “prominence” for the application of the exclusion of terms which reflect the main subject matter of contracts, as this requirement could be interpreted by an English court as reflecting the broad interpretation of the Court of Justice to the requirement of “plainness and intelligibility” even though the Act (following the Law Commissions) sees it as an additional, distinct requirement. ²⁴⁹⁴ On the other hand, some extensions of the enforcement controls on contract terms contained in the Act (notably, those in respect of the exclusion of liability for death or personal injuries caused by negligence ²⁴⁹⁵ or the exclusion of Pt 1 liabilities ²⁴⁹⁶) would be much more difficult to read down so as to be compatible with the 2005 Directive. This would then raise the possibility of infringement proceedings by the European Commission against the UK under art.258 TFEU, ²⁴⁹⁷ and/or the possibility of liability in damages under the well-known Francovich and Brasserie du Pêcheur case-law of the Court of Justice. ²⁴⁹⁸

^{2441.}

⚠ Above, paras 38-323—38-333 (where the qualifications on this general position are noted). On the temporal application of the new enforcement powers in Sch.3 of the 2015 Act (as described below, para.38-388) see above, para.38-335.

^{2442.}

1999 Regulations reg.12.

^{2443.}

In particular, the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 ss.2, 6(3) and 7(2). They do not apply directly either to contract terms which are invalid at common law, such as terms seeking to exclude liability for personal fraud (on which see Vol.I, para.7-143) or penalty clauses (on which see Vol.I, paras 26-178 et seq.) though in both cases terms in consumer contracts that are invalid at common law are likely to be “unfair” within the meaning of the 1999 Regulations.

^{2444.}

⚠ Enterprise Act 2002 s.212 (as amended) implementing the Consumer Injunctions Directive 2009 and see above, paras 38-128—38-129 and below, para.38-388. cf. the position as regards “domestic infringements” under Pt 8 of the 2002 Act, which extend, inter alia, to the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977: Enterprise Act 2002 (Part 8 Domestic Infringements) Order 2003 (SI 2003/1593) art.2 and Sch. Pt 1.

^{2445.}

2008 Regulations reg.26 and see above, paras 38-331—38-333; OFT v Ashbourne Management Services Ltd [2011] EWHC 1237 (Ch), [2011] E.C.C. 31.

^{2446.}

2008 Regulations reg.26 and see above, para 38-158—38-159.

^{2447.}

See, e.g. OFT v Ashbourne Management Services Ltd [2011] EWHC 1237 (Ch), [2011] E.C.C. 31 and see above, para.38-331.

^{2448.}

2015 Act ss.31(7), 47(5), 57(7) and 70(1).

^{2449.}

2015 Act s.70(2), applying the investigatory powers in Sch.5 (which replace the special provisions on investigatory powers in the 1999 Regulations reg.13): see especially s.77 and Sch.5 paras 2(d), 6 (“unfair contract terms enforcer”), and 13(7) and (8). On the temporal application of these powers, see above, para.38-335 n.2005a.

^{2450.}

The 2015 Act replaces the expression “qualifying body” used by the 1999 Regulations and instead refers to all those empowered to enforce its provisions governing unfair contract terms (including the CMA) as “regulators”: 2015 Act Sch.3 para.8(1).

^{2451.}

See above, para.38-329; 2015 Act Sch.3 para.8(1), though para.8(2) allows the Secretary of State to amend this list (the Director General of Electrical Supply of Northern Ireland and the Director General of Gas for Northern Ireland are replaced by the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation).

- 2452. 2015 Act Sch.3 para.3(1).
- 2453. 2015 Act Sch.3 para.3(2) referring to ss.31, 47, 57 and 65(1) of the Act and see above, para.38-377 and below, paras 38-492, 38-524 and 38-546.
- 2454. 2015 Act Sch.3 para.3(3). This includes both terms or notices assessed as unfair under s.62 and terms deemed to be unfair under s.63(6) or the Arbitration Act 1996 s.91, on which see above, paras 38-358 et seq. and 38-380.
- 2455. 2015 Act Sch.3 para.3(5) and see s.68, above, paras 38-382—38-384. The application of the enforcement measures to this requirement is therefore made explicit by the Act, though it is not under the 1999 Regulations and see above, para.38-324.
- 2456. 2015 Act Sch.3 para.2 (reflecting 1999 Regulations reg.10).
- 2457. 2015 Act Sch.3 para.6(1).
- 2458. 2015 Act Sch.3 para.5(1). This broadly reflects 1999 Regulations reg.12(3) and (4).
- 2459. 2015 Act Sch.3 para.3(2), above, paras 38-377—38-378, 38-380.
- 2460. The scope of the test of unfairness is widened in the following ways: the definition of “consumer” is extended by s.2(3) and 76(2), above, para.38-353; the subsection of terms which have been individually negotiated to the test of unfairness by s.62, above, para.38-358; the exclusion from the assessment of fairness of terms which specify the main subject matter of the contract etc. in reg.64 is subjected to an additional condition of “prominence”, above, paras 38-367—38-368. The 2015 Act does not expressly apply the Sch.3 enforcement regime to its controls on the effectiveness of certain terms on choice of applicable law as set out in s.74, as the latter is not expressed as rendering such terms unfair or otherwise not binding on consumers so as to fall within one of the categories in Sch.3 para.(2), (3) or (5) as required by para.3(1)(b), but art.6(2) of the 1993 Directive requires Member States to “take the necessary measures to ensure that the consumer does not lose the protection granted” by it and so such an effect could possibly be achieved by way of “conforming interpretation” as explained above, para.38-386.
- 2461. 2015 Act ss.62(2), (6) and (7), 65 and 68; Sch.3 para.3(3) and (5).
- 2462. Enterprise Act 2002 s.212(1)(a).
- 2463. Enterprise Act 2002 s.212(1)(b) and (2).
- 2464.  Enterprise Act 2002 s.212(3); Enterprise Act 2002 (Part 8 Community Infringements Specified UK Laws) Order 2003 art.3; Sch., as amended by the Enterprise Act 2002 (Part 8 Community Infringements and Specified UK Laws) (Amendment) Order 2015 (SI 2015/1628) art.2(2)(a), listing 2015 Act ss.2, 61–64, 67–70, 72–74, Schs 2 and 3 and Sch.5 Pt 3.
- 2465.  Enterprise Act 2002 s.211(2); Enterprise Act 2002 (Part 8 Domestic Infringements) Order 2015 (SI 2015/1727) art.2.
- 2466. Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.79, Sch.7 inserting new s.219A in the Enterprise Act 2002. The example is found in s.219A(2)(a): see above, para.38-129.
- 2467. Below, paras 38-331—38-332.
- 2468. cf. above, paras 38-020—38-021, 38-346—38-350.
- 2469. Above, para.38-147.
- 2470. Above, paras 38-145 et seq. (which, at para.38-332, include discussion of the question whether an isolated event, such as a single use of an unfair term may count as a “commercial practice” for these purposes).

2471. SI 2008/1277 on which see above, paras 38-154—38-155.

2472. 2005 Directive art.3(2), above, para.38-148.

2473.  Directive 90/314/EEC of 13 June 1990 on package travel, package holidays and package tours, notably, art.3. On this directive, see above, paras 38-132 et seq.. The 1990 Directive is repealed and replaced by Directive (EU) 2015/2302 on package travel and linked travel arrangements [2015] O.J. L326/1.

2474.  2005 Directive art.3(4), above, para.38-149. And see Citroën Commerce GmbH v Zentralvereinigung des Kraftfahrzeuggewerbes zur Aufrechterhaltung lauterer Wettbewerbs eV (ZLW) (C-476/14) July 7, 2016 at paras 44-46, noted above, para.38-106.

2475. 2005 Directive art.3(5), above, para.38-150.

2476. 2005 Directive art 3(2) and see above, para.38-148. cf. similarly Consumer Rights Directive 2011 art.5(3), above, para.38-059.

2477. 2005 Directive art.7, above, para.38-172.

2478. 1993 Directive arts 5 and 6(1).

2479. 1993 Directive art.7, above, paras 38-323 and 38-389.

2480. If the 1993 Directive does require these measures, then they fall with 2005 Directive art.3(4), above, para.38-149.

2481. On the other hand, extensions of controls on unfair terms which do not fall within the scope of the 2005 Directive (such as those which protect persons other than “consumers”, on which see above, para.38-353) are not affected by its requirement of “full harmonisation”.

2482. 2015 Act ss.9, 17, 31(1) (a) and (i).

2483. For the details of when the 2015 Act does hold a term not binding on the consumer without any evaluation of its fairness, see 2015 Act ss.31, 47 and 57 and below, paras 38-492, 38-524 and 38-546 respectively. The application of the Sch.3 powers is provided for by the 2015 Act ss.31(7); 47(5); 57(7). Sch.3, para.3(2)(a)–(c) then specifically provide that a “regulator” (such as the CMA) may apply for an injunction against a person if it thinks that the person is using, or proposing or recommending the use of, terms purporting to exclude or restrict liability in these situations. The position of terms seeking to exclude or limit the trader’s liability in respect of the quality or fitness for purposes of goods in contracts of sale of goods differs from the general picture described in the text, as here EU law provides that such terms are not binding on consumers without any evaluation of their fairness: Directive 1999/44/EC on certain aspects of the sale of consumer goods and associated guarantees [1999] O.J. L171/12 art.7(1). While the 1999 Directive does not provide for measures to be put in place by Member States to ensure the effectiveness of this consumer protection (in contrast to the position under the 1993 Directive art.7), the 1999 Directive is included in the list of those whose national implementing measures must be supported by injunctions under the Consumer Injunctions Directive 2009, on which see below, para.38-393. As a result, it may be argued that injunctive relief in respect of such clauses is protected from the effect of “full harmonisation” under the 2005 Directive as it stems from a Community rule “regulating specific aspects of unfair commercial practices” within the meaning of 2005 Directive art.3(4), as explained above, para.38-149.

2484. 2015 Act ss.65 and 70(1); Sch.3 para.3(2)(d). As regards the ineffectiveness to exclude liability in this situation, this is clearly modelled on the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.2(1), but that Act made no provision for “preventive measures”.

- 2485. 2015 Act ss.64(4), 70(1) and Sch.3 and see above, paras 38-363—38-368.
- 2486. 2015 Act s.61(1), 70(1), Sch.3, especially para.1(d). cf., though, above para.38-356 n.2104 where it is argued that the treatment of “consumer notices” by the Act could be seen as reflecting a European interpretation of “contract term” so as to fall within the requirements of the 1993 Directive.
- 2487. Directive 98/27 on injunctions for the protection of consumers’ interests [1998] O.J. L166/51, which was repealed and replaced by codified Directive 2009/22/EC on injunctions for the protection of consumers’ interests, [2009] O.J. L110/30 (“2009 Directive”).
- 2488. 2009 Directive arts 1–2, 4; recitals 3, 7. On the application of the 2009 Directive, see European Commission, Report from the Commission to the European Parliament and the Council concerning the application of Directive 2009/22/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council on injunctions for the protection of consumers’ interest Com(2012) 635 final.
- 2489. 2009 Directive recital 3.
- 2490. Emphasis added. The 2009 Directive art.7 allows Member States “to adopt or maintain in force provisions designed to grant qualified entities and any other person concerned more extensive rights to bring action at national level” but this “minimum harmonisation” clause appears to be concerned with the nature of the “rights to bring action” (beyond the injunctions required by the Directive) rather than with the substantive circumstances of the infringements to which the injunctions or other relief relate.
- 2491. 2005 Directive art.3(4) and (5), above, paras 38-149—38-150.
- 2492. Above, para.38-388.
- 2493. See above, para.38-013.
- 2494. cf. above, paras 38-364—38-368.
- 2495. 2015 Act ss.65 and 66, above, paras 38-377 and 38-392.
- 2496. 2015 Act ss.31(7), 47(5) and 57(7), above, para.38-342, with the qualification as regards the exclusion of terms excluding the liability of a seller of goods as explained in n.2320.
- 2497. On which see Craig and de Búrca, EU Law, Texts, Cases, and Materials, 6th edn (2015), Ch.12.
- 2498. Francovich v Italy (C-6/90 and C-9/90) [1999] E.C.R. I-5357; Brasserie du Pêcheur SA v Germany, R. v Secretary of State for Transport, ex parte Factortame Ltd (C-46/93 and C-48/93) [1996] E.C.R. I-1029 and see Craig and de Búrca, EU Law, Texts, Cases, and Materials, 6th edn (2015), pp.251 et seq.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts
Section 6. - The Control of Unfair Contract Terms
(e) - Special Rules Governing Consumer Payments

The Consumer Rights Directive 2011

38-395

In addition to information requirements and rights of cancellation, ²⁴⁹⁹ the Consumer Rights Directive 2011 provides for “other consumer rights” and these include special rules governing “fees for the use of means of payment”, “communication by telephone” and “additional payments”. ²⁵⁰⁰ These provisions are implemented in the UK by regulations as the following paragraphs explain. The focus of these rules is to control the imposition of disguised, unforeseen or otherwise unfair payments on consumers incidental to the payment for the goods and services under the contract. To the extent to which these payments are imposed under terms of a contract between the trader and the consumer, they constitute controls of such terms, as any payment imposed other than in accordance with the rules which they set out are required to be ineffective under the 2011 Directive. ²⁵⁰¹ However, as will be seen, their impact on contracts is more direct than this suggests as they seek to control the level of the charges to be imposed by a trader in certain circumstances.

Payment surcharges

38-396

⚠ The Consumer Rights (Payment Surcharges) Regulations 2012 ²⁵⁰² ⚠ implement art.19 of the Consumer Rights Directive and provide that a trader must not charge consumers in respect of the use of a given means of payment (such as a credit card) fees that exceed the cost borne by the trader for the use of that means (such as an administration, booking or handling fee), ²⁵⁰³ where the payment is made for the purposes of sales contracts, service contracts or contracts for the supply of water, gas, electricity, district heating or digital content. ²⁵⁰⁴ The 2012 Regulations provide for the enforcement of their prohibition of excessive charges by local weights and measures authorities, who may take undertakings or apply to the court for an injunction. ²⁵⁰⁵ Any contract term which requires a consumer to pay an excessive payment charge is unenforceable to the extent of the excess charged and “is to be treated as providing for the excess to be repaid to the consumer”. ²⁵⁰⁶

Abolition of charges for use of payment instruments by consumers

38-396A

⚠ However, the law governing payment surcharges set out in para.38-396 of the Main Work is set to change on the coming into force of amendments to the Consumer Rights (Payment Surcharges) Regulations 2012 by the Payment Services Regulations 2017. ²⁵⁰⁷ ⚠ These amendments implement (but go further than) a requirement imposed by the Second Payment Services Directive 2015. ²⁵⁰⁸ ⚠ Under the 2015 Directive, a payee, such as a retailer, “shall not request charges for the use of payment instruments” where their interchange fees are capped under the Interchange Fees

Regulation 2015, ²⁵⁰⁹  and this includes the majority of consumer debit and credit cards. ²⁵¹⁰  However, as just noted, the UK's implementation goes further than this requirement, as is permitted by the 2015 Directive where a Member State considers that this is needed to encourage competition and promote the use of efficient payment instruments. ²⁵¹¹  As a result, under reg.6A(1) of the 2012 Regulations (as inserted by the 2017 Regulations), “a payee must not charge a payer any fee in respect of payment by means of a payment instrument” as long as it is not a commercial card or other payment instrument, ²⁵¹²  whether or not it is a card-based payment instrument within the meaning of the Interchange Fees Regulation 2015; nor must a payee charge in respect of a payment service (such as a direct debit) in euro. ²⁵¹³  As a result (and subject to territorial limitations ²⁵¹⁴ ) , reg.6A(1) imposes a ban on surcharging applicable to all noncommercial retail payment instruments. ²⁵¹⁵  According to the Explanatory Memorandum to the 2017 Regulations, “this is intended to level the playing field across all non-commercial retail payment instruments and create a clearer picture for consumers in which they know the full price of the product/service they are purchasing upfront and are confident that there will be no additional charges when they come to pay using a particular payment instrument”. ²⁵¹⁶  The 2017 Regulations make further consequential amendments of the 2012 Regulations, including as regards the consumer's rights to redress. ²⁵¹⁷  These amendments to the 2012 Regulations come into force as regards contracts entered into on January 13, 2018. ²⁵¹⁸

Additional payments

38-397

Regulation 40 of the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 (“2013 Regulations”) ²⁵¹⁹ implements art.22 of the Consumer Rights Directive and provides that:

“(1)

Under a contract between a trader and a consumer, no payment is payable in addition to the remuneration agreed for the trader's main obligation unless, before the consumer became bound by the contract, the trader obtained the consumer's express consent.

(2)

There is no express consent (if there would otherwise be) for the purposes of this paragraph if consent is inferred from the consumer not changing a default option (such as a pre-ticked box on a website).” ²⁵²⁰

As suggested by reg.40(2)'s example, the principal target of this provision is the use of “pre-ticked” boxes to generate payments for additional services, for example, on websites selling passenger air-transport in relation to charges for bags or insurance. This provision appeared in the Consumer Rights Directive Proposal of 2008 as an element in the “transparency requirements” for contract terms, forming part of the proviso to its treatment of the questions at present governed by art.4(2) of the 1993 Directive. ²⁵²¹ While art.22 of the Consumer Rights Directive as enacted stands alone, it rests on a similar distinction between contractual payments to be made by consumers which concern the main subject matter of the contract (which in principle fall within the exclusion from the test of fairness in art.4(2) of the 1993 Directive) and payments “in addition to the remuneration agreed” which, under art.22, require the consumer's express consent. ²⁵²² Where a trader receives an additional payment which is not payable under a contract under reg.40, the contract is to be treated as providing for the trader to reimburse the payment to the consumer. ²⁵²³ More generally, the enforcement measures available in respect of this prohibition in reg.40 follow those available more generally under the 2013 Regulations. ²⁵²⁴

Helpline charges over basic rate

38-398

⚠ Regulation 41 of the 2013 Regulations, ²⁵²⁵ implementing art.21 of the Consumer Rights Directive 2011, provides that, where a trader operates a telephone line for the purpose of consumers contacting the trader by telephone in relation to contracts entered into with the trader, a consumer contacting the trader must not be bound to pay more than the basic rate. Although "basic rate" is not defined by the Directive nor the Regulations for this purpose, the Court of Justice of the EU has held that it refers to "an ordinary rate for a telephone call at no additional cost for the consumer" i.e. the cost of a call to a standard geographic landline or mobile telephone line and that this means that traders are not allowed to charge consumers premium rates even where they do not make a profit in doing so. ²⁵²⁶ ⚠ Any amount paid by the consumer in excess of such a rate is recoverable by them. ²⁵²⁷ Again, the enforcement measures available in respect of the prohibition in reg.41 follow those available more generally under the 2013 Regulations. ²⁵²⁸

^{2499.} These are implemented in UK law by the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 (SI 2013/3134) ("2013 Regulations"). For these aspects of the 2013 Regulations requirements, see above, paras 38-056 et seq.

^{2500.} Consumer Rights Directive 2011 arts 19, 21 and 22. The scope of these provisions in terms of the contracts to which they apply is set by art.17. On the 2011 Directive generally, see above, paras 38-056 and 38-058—38-063.

^{2501.} 2011 Directive art.25 "imperative nature of the Directive", second sentence: see above, para.38-062.

^{2502.} ⚠ SI 2012/3110 (the "2012 Regulations") (as amended by the 2013 Regulations (SI 2013/3134)). The Regulations apply to contracts entered into on or after April 6, 2013: reg.1.

^{2503.} 2012 Regulations reg.4. "Trader" and "consumer" are defined by reg.2 in the new standard UK definitions described above, paras 38-047—38-054 (especially at 38-053) and 38-028—38-046 (especially at 38-038) respectively. For explanation of what can properly be charged by a trader as the "cost" for use see DG Justice Guidance Document on 2011 Directive, para.9.3.

^{2504.} 2012 Regulations reg.4(1). The definitions of these various categories of contract provided by reg.3 of the 2012 Regulations is mirrored by those found in the 2013 Regulations reg.5, on which see above, paras 38-068—38-070. Regulation 5(1) and (2) of the 2012 Regulations exclude from the rule against excessive charges a series of "excluded contracts" as allowed by the 2011 Directive, notably including contracts for financial services contracts, this list following the exclusions in 2013 Regulations reg.6, with the addition of contracts for social services and health services (as explained by reg.5(2)(a) and (b)). Regulation 6 of the 2012 Regulations provides a temporary exemption from the prohibition in reg.4 where the trader's business is an existing micro-business or a new business as explained in their Schedule.

^{2505.} 2012 Regulations regs 8—9.

^{2506.} 2012 Regulations reg.10.

- 2507. !SI 2017/752 (“2017 Regulations”) reg.156; Sch.8 Pt 3 para.12.
- 2508. !Directive (EU) 2015/2366 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 25 November 2015 on payment services in the internal market [2015] O.J. L337/35 (“2015 Directive”), art.62(3)–(4).
- 2509. !Regulation (EU) 2015/251 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 29 April 2015 on interchange fees for card-based payment transactions [2015] O.J. L123/1 (“Interchange Fees Regulation 2015”).
- 2510. !Explanatory Memorandum to the 2017 Regulations, para.7.16.
- 2511. !2015 Directive art.62(5).
- 2512. !2012 Regulations reg.6A(1)(a)(ii) and (b)(ii). “Commercial card” is defined by art.2(6) of the Interchange Fees Regulation 2015 as “any card-based payment instrument issued to undertakings or public sector entities or self-employed natural persons which is limited in use for business expenses where the payments made with such cards are charged directly to the account of the undertaking or public sector entity or self-employed natural person”.
- 2513. !“Payment service” is defined by reference to Regulation (EU) 260/2012 of the European Parliament and of the Council of March 14, 2012 establishing technical and business requirements for credit transfers and direct debits in euro [2012] O.J. L95/22.
- 2514. !These are contained in the 2012 Regulations reg.6B.
- 2515. !Explanatory Memorandum to the 2017 Regulations, para.7.16.
- 2516. !Explanatory Memorandum to the 2017 Regulations, para.7.16.
- 2517. !2012 Regulations reg.10 as amended by 2017 Regulations Sch.3 Pt 3 para.12(8).
- 2518. !2017 Regulations reg.2(6), although confusingly reg.1(3) of the 2012 Regulations (as inserted on January 13, 2018) provides that reg.6A “applies in relation to contracts entered into after the date on which the Payment Services Regulations 2017 were made” (emphasis added) and the 2017 Regulations were made on July 18, 2017.
- 2519. For the contracts included and generally excluded from the scope of the 2013 Regulations see reg.6 above, paras 38-064, 38-071—38-073. However, despite the general exclusion of contracts for the provision of financial services under reg.6(1)(b), the 2013 Regulations specifically apply reg.40’s controls where an additional payment is for financial services, unless the trader’s main obligation is to supply financial services: reg.6(3) and 40(3).
- 2520. SI 2013/3134. The definitions of “trader” and “consumer” are provided by the 2013 Regulations reg.4 and follow the new standard UK definitions: above, paras 38-047—38-054 (especially at 38-053) and 38-028—38-046 (especially at 38-038) respectively.
- 2521. The Proposal for a Directive on Consumer Rights of October 8, 2008, Com(2008) 614/3 final art.32(2).
- 2522. cf. above, paras 38-224 et seq.
- 2523. 2013 Regulations reg.40(4).

2524. 2013 Regulations regs 44–46 and see above, paras 38-127 et seq.

2525. SI 2013/3134.

2526.  Zentrale zur Bekämpfung unlauteren Wettbewerbs Frankfurt am Main eV v comtech GmbH (C-568/15) of March 2, 2017 at paras 27-32.

2527. 2013 Regulations reg.41(2).

2528. 2013 Regulations regs 44–46 and see above, paras 38-127 et seq.

© 2018 Sweet & Maxwell

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 7. - Contracts for the Supply of Goods, Digital Content or Services

(a) - Introduction

Legislative background

38-399

Between the enactment of the Sale of Goods Act 1893 and the amendment in 2002 of its successor, the Sale of Goods Act 1979 ²⁵²⁹ the legislative frameworks governing contracts for the sale of goods did not themselves apply special rules to govern consumer contracts, that is, broadly speaking, contracts between sellers acting in the course of business and buyers not acting in the course of business, though they distinguished between sellers acting or not acting in the course of business. ²⁵³⁰ On the other hand, from 1973 legislation controlling the validity of contract terms seeking to exclude or to limit the seller's liability under the statutory implied terms in ss.13 to 15 of the Sale of Goods Act 1979 did distinguish according to the position of the buyer, first by reference to "consumer sales" ²⁵³¹ and then, under the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977, by reference to a buyer "dealing as consumer". ²⁵³² This pattern was also followed in the case of contracts of hire-purchase ²⁵³³ and "miscellaneous contracts under which goods pass", ²⁵³⁴ such as contracts of hire of goods ²⁵³⁵ or for work and materials. ²⁵³⁶

Consumer Sales Directive 1999

38-400

However, this established pattern of treatment was changed on implementation of the Consumer Sales Directive of 1999. ²⁵³⁷ The main purpose of this directive is to require uniform rules governing certain aspects of contracts of sale of goods by sellers acting in the course of a business to consumer buyers ²⁵³⁸ on the basis of "minimum harmonisation", ²⁵³⁹ but its scope extends also to "contracts for the supply of goods to be manufactured and produced". ²⁵⁴⁰ The Directive has three main requirements to be given effect in national laws. First, it requires that "the seller must deliver goods to the consumer which are in conformity with the contract of sale", defining "conformity" in terms familiar to the English lawyer from the statutory implied terms of ss.13 to 15 of the Sale of Goods Act 1979 that the goods comply with their description, are fit for any purpose made known by the consumer to the seller and accepted by him, are "fit for the purposes for which goods of the same type are normally used" and "show the quality and performance which are normal in goods of the same type and which the consumer can reasonably expect", ²⁵⁴¹ as well as generally being in "conformity with the contract of sale", i.e. any express contract terms. ²⁵⁴² However, some aspects of the 1999 Directive's requirement of conformity were new to English law, notably, the specified relevance to the quality which a consumer can reasonably expect of goods of "public statements on the specific characteristics of the goods made about them by the seller, the producer or his representative". ²⁵⁴³ Secondly, the Directive requires a series of rights for consumer buyers in respect of the "contractual non-conformity" of the goods: at a first level, a right to repair or replacement of the goods ²⁵⁴⁴, and, if these remedies are unavailable or fail, ²⁵⁴⁵ a right to "an appropriate reduction in the price" ²⁵⁴⁶ and a right to "rescission" of the contract as long as the non-conformity of the goods is not minor. ²⁵⁴⁷ The Directive also makes incidental provision for these rights of conformity, notably as regards proof of non-conformity ²⁵⁴⁸ and the limitation period for the rights which it requires for consumers. ²⁵⁴⁹ Thirdly, the Directive requires that "guarantees" by sellers or producers to consumers ²⁵⁵⁰ shall be binding. ²⁵⁵¹

First implementation of 1999 Directive: amendment of existing legislation

38-401

The 1999 Directive was first implemented in the UK by the Sale and Supply of Goods to Consumers Regulations 2002 (“the 2002 Regulations”) ²⁵⁵² and took effect principally by the amendment of existing UK legislation: the Sale of Goods Act 1979, ²⁵⁵³ the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982, ²⁵⁵⁴ the Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) Act 1973, ²⁵⁵⁵ and the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977. ²⁵⁵⁶ In particular, the 2002 Regulations inserted a new Pt 5A into the 1979 Act (a new Pt 1B into the 1982 Act) providing a new scheme of remedies based on the Directive for those dealing as consumer. ²⁵⁵⁷ The 2002 Regulations also made provision for “consumer guarantees” as required by the 1999 Directive, which was not inserted into any existing primary legislation. ²⁵⁵⁸ In implementing the Directive in this way, the new English law provisions were extended so as to benefit persons “dealing as consumer” within the meaning of the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 and not merely “consumers” as understood by the 1999 Directive. ²⁵⁵⁹ This law still applies to contracts made before October 1, 2015, when the relevant provisions of the Consumer Rights Act 2015 came into force, and will be discussed later as “the old law”. ²⁵⁶⁰

Second implementation of the 1999 Directive

38-402

However, the Consumer Rights Act 2015 takes a radically different approach to implementation of the Consumer Sales Directive 1999 and introduces wider reform to the substantive rights of consumers against traders in respect of the conformity of goods, digital content or services with the contract. Part 1 of the 2015 Act identifies three broad categories of consumer contract: “contracts for a trader to supply goods to a consumer” or “goods contracts” (Ch.2) ²⁵⁶¹; “contracts for a trader to supply digital content to a consumer” or “digital content contracts” (Ch.3) ²⁵⁶²; and “contracts for a trader to supply a service to a consumer” or “services contracts” (Ch.4) ²⁵⁶³; providing for each category a series of terms which are “treated as included” in the contract, these being broadly equivalent to the traditional implied terms of earlier legislation, as amended and supplemented. ²⁵⁶⁴ Secondly, in respect of each category of contract, the 2015 Act provides a series of “rights to enforce terms” about their subject matter (goods, digital content or services). ²⁵⁶⁵ Part 1 of the 2015 Act also gives effect to certain aspects of the Consumer Rights Directive 2011, notably its requirement that information provided by the trader about the goods or services as set out by the Directive is to form part of the contract ²⁵⁶⁶ and its rules governing delivery of goods and the passing of risk in goods in sales contracts. ²⁵⁶⁷ Thirdly, the 2015 Act provides very widely that a term in a contract to which it applies cannot exclude or restrict the trader’s liability arising under its substantive provisions. ²⁵⁶⁸ In this way, the 2015 Act seeks to set out in a single enactment the rules governing the issues arising between the parties to consumer contracts. As will be explained in more detail below, as a result, the 2015 Act therefore disapplies earlier legislation affecting these categories of contracts so as no longer to apply to them or to apply to them only with qualifications. ²⁵⁶⁹ On the other hand, in the case of “goods contracts”/contracts of sale of goods, the 2015 Act does not seek to regulate all the issues governed by the 1979 Act and these other provisions remain applicable even though the buyer is a consumer. ²⁵⁷⁰ Moreover, other consumer protection legislation may apply to the parties to a contract falling within Pt 1 of the 2015 Act, as may the common law itself. ²⁵⁷¹

Temporal application of Pt 1 of the 2015 Act

38-403

⚠ As earlier noted, subject to one qualification, the relevant provisions of the 2015 Act were brought into force so as to apply to contracts made on or after October 1, 2015. ²⁵⁷² ⚠

Proposed EU directives on distance contracts for the sale of goods and on contracts for the supply of digital content

38-403A

⚠ The EU Commission has published two proposals for directives which would, if enacted and implemented in UK law, require the amendment of the 2015 Act's provisions governing contracts of sale of goods and contracts for the supply of digital content. Both proposed directives would require “full harmonization” ²⁵⁷³ ⚠ and this would make their implementation within the existing frameworks of English law particularly difficult. The first is a proposal for a directive on aspects of the law governing “distance contracts” for the sale of goods ²⁵⁷⁴ ⚠: if enacted, this directive would disapply the Consumer Sales Directive 1999 from distance contracts for the sale of goods ²⁵⁷⁵ ⚠ and could require the UK either to amend Ch.2 of Pt 1 of the 2015 Act so as to follow the scheme of the new directive even beyond its scope of “distance contracts” or to disapply Ch.2 from distance contracts of sale of goods and enact a dedicated regime for this purpose. The second is a proposal for a directive on aspects of the law governing the distance supply of digital content. ²⁵⁷⁶ ⚠ If enacted, this could require the amendment of Ch.3 of Pt 1 of the 2015 Act. ²⁵⁷⁷ ⚠

Structure of this section38-404

The following paragraphs will therefore treat in turn the “old law” governing contracts made before October 1, 2015 Act and the “new law” under the Consumer Rights Act 2015 governing contracts made on or after that day.

²⁵²⁹. These amendments were effected by the Sale and Supply of Goods to Consumers Regulations 2002 (SI 2002/3045) implementing Directive 1999/44/EEC (“the Consumer Sales Directive 1999”).

²⁵³⁰. As regards the latter, s.12 of the Sale of Goods Act 1979 does not require the seller to be contracting in the course of business, whereas s.14(2) and (3) of the same Act does so require. This does not mean that the legislature was not concerned with the implications of consumer sales for the drafting of the legislation and the amendments to the wording of the terms as to the quality of goods in s.14 of the 1979 Act were made in part so as to ensure that it was appropriate to consumer sales as much as to commercial sales: in particular, “merchantable quality” became “satisfactory quality”, which was then explained by reference to a series of “aspects of the quality of the goods”: see Law Commission Report Sale and Supply of Goods, Law Com. No.160 (1987) especially § 2.10; Sale and Supply of Goods Act 1994 s.1.

²⁵³¹. Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) Act 1973 s.4 creating new Sale of Goods Act 1979 s.55(4) and (7) (repealed by Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977).

²⁵³². Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.6(2)(a) (in relation to the terms implied by the Sale of Goods Act 1979 ss.13–15).

²⁵³³. Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.6(2)(b) (in relation to the terms implied by the Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) Act 1973 ss.9–11).

²⁵³⁴. Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.7(2) (in relation to terms implied “from the nature of the contract”). For example, in most contracts for the transfer of goods (other than sale of goods or hirepurchase), such as a contract for the supply of work and materials, terms are implied by the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 ss.2–5.

- 2535. Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.7(2); Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 ss.7–10.
- 2536. Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 ss.2–5 (“contracts for the transfer of goods” not being contracts for the sale of goods or hire-purchase agreements). In the case of contracts for the supply of services, a supplier in the course of business owes a duty to take reasonable care in the supply of the service by a term implied by the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 s.13 and any purported exemption of liability for breach of this term is ineffective in respect of claims for death or personal injury and, in respect of other loss or damage, is subject to the test of reasonableness under the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.2 (negligence liability): neither statutes distinguished for this purpose according to whether the recipient of the services was “dealing as consumer”.
- 2537. Directive 1999/44/EC on certain aspects of the sale of consumer goods and associated guarantees [1999] O.J. L171/12 (“Consumer Sales Directive” or “1999 Directive”).
- 2538. 1999 Directive art.1(2)(a) “consumer”; (b) “consumer goods”; and (c) “seller”.
- 2539. 1999 Directive art.8.
- 2540. 1999 Directive art.1(4) deeming these to be “contracts of sale” for the purposes of the Directive.
- 2541. 1999 Directive art.2(1), 2(2)(c) and (d). The formulations of these requirements are elaborated further in the Directive.
- 2542. 1999 Directive art.2(1), recital 7.
- 2543. 1999 Directive art.2(2)(d) and (4).
- 2544. 1999 Directive art.3(3).
- 2545. On the specific requirements in this respect as implemented in UK law, see below, paras 38-417—38-418 and 38-483.
- 2546. 1999 Directive art.3(5).
- 2547. 1999 Directive art.3(5) and (6).
- 2548. 1999 Directive art.5(3).
- 2549. 1999 Directive art.5(1) and (2).
- 2550. Defined in 1999 Directive art.1(2)(e).
- 2551. 1999 Directive art.6.
- 2552. SI 2002/3045.
- 2553. 2002 Regulations regs 3–6, amending Sale of Goods Act 1979 ss.14, 20, 32 and 61(1) and inserting new Pt 5A.
- 2554. 2002 Regulations regs 7–12, amending Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 ss.4, 9, 11D, 11J and 18 and inserting new Pt 1B.
- 2555. 2002 Regulations regs 13 amending Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) Act 1973 ss.10 and 15.
- 2556. 2002 Regulations reg.14 amending Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.12 (for English law).
- 2557. Below, paras 38-408 et seq.
- 2558. 2002 Regulations reg.15. The definitions in reg.2 apply only to this provision as the remainder of the substantive provisions of the 2002 Regulations provide for amendments of other legislation (as explained in the text) whose terms fall to be interpreted, therefore, by the legislation which these amendments concern.

- 2559. This legislative decision took effect by amendment of the existing legislation whose provisions applied for the benefit of those “dealing as consumer” by reference to the 1977 Act: e.g. Sale of Goods Act 1979 s.48A(1)(a); s.61(5A). As explained in the previous note, the definition of “consumer” provided by 2002 Regulations reg.2 (which followed the definition in the 1999 Directive art.1(2)(a)) did not apply to these amendments. On the general approach to the definition of “consumer” in the EU consumer protection directives see above, paras 38-030 et seq.
- 2560. Below, paras 38-405 et seq.
- 2561. Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.3(1).
- 2562. 2015 Act s.33(1).
- 2563. 2015 Act s.48(1).
- 2564. i.e. the Supply of Goods (Implied Terms Act) 1973, the Sale of Goods Act 1979 and the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982.
- 2565. 2015 Act s.19 (goods contracts); s.42 (digital content contracts); and s.54 (services contracts) and see below, paras 38-439, 38-504—38-530 respectively.
- 2566. 2011 Directive art.6(5), above, para.38-100; 2015 Act ss.11(4)–(6), 12 (goods contracts); s.36(3)–(4) and 37 (digital content contracts); and ss.50(3)–(4) (services contracts) and see below, paras 38-464—38-465, 38-508—38-509 and 38-535 respectively.
- 2567. 2011 Directive arts 18 and 20; 2015 Act ss.28–29, below, paras 38-489 and 38-490.
- 2568. 2015 Act s.31 (goods contracts), s.47 (digital content contracts) and s.57 (services contracts) and see below, paras 38-492, 38-524 and 38-546 respectively (where the qualifications on this are explained).
- 2569. 2015 Act s.60 and Sch.1 and see below, para.38-439.
- 2570. Below, para.38-439.
- 2571. Below, paras 38-441—38-442.
- 2572.  The Consumer Rights Act 2015 (Commencement No.3, Transitional Provisions, Savings and Consequential Amendments) Order 2015 (SI 2015/1630) (the “2015 Order”) art.3(a)–(c). The exception is found in relation Pt 1 Ch.4 whose provisions governing services contracts do not apply to certain “consumer transport services” (certain rail passenger services, carriage by air, and sea and inland waterway transport, all as specially defined by the 2015 Order art.2) until October 1, 2016: 2015 Order arts 4 and 6(2) as amended by the Consumer Rights Act 2015 (Commencement No.3, Transitional Provisions, Savings and Consequential Amendments) (Amendment) Order 2016 (SI 2016/484) art.2. The main reason for this delay in the bringing into force of the provisions of the 2015 Act in this area was a concern that the Act’s provisions (especially s.57’s controls on the exclusion or restriction of liability in the carrier) would risk complexity and duplication with sectoral transport schemes: Department of Transport, Applying the Consumer Rights Act 2015 to the rail, aviation and maritime sectors, Response to Consultation, Moving Britain Ahead (July, 2016). Although the Department of Transport (para.2.4) had earlier announced that the exemption from the application of s.57(3) of the 2015 Act (governing restrictions on liability, as noted by Vol.II, para.38-546) would continue to apply to passenger services operated by EU licensed rail passenger operators until October 1, 2017 (see draft Consumer Rights (Rail Passenger Service Exemption, Enforcement and Amendments) Order 2016 (laid before Parliament, July 7, 2016)) on September 6, 2016 it was announced that the 2015 Act would apply in full to all passenger transport services, including mainline rail passenger services as from October 1, 2016: <https://www.gov.uk/government/publications/consumer-rights-act-application-to-transport-services>. See above, para.38-335.

2573.

! Distance sales directive proposal 2015 art.3; Digital content directive proposal 2015 art.4.

2574.

! Proposal for a Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council on certain aspects concerning contracts for the online and other distance sales of goods COM(2015) 635 final ("Distance sales directive proposal 2015").

2575.

! Distance sales directive proposal 2015 art.19.

2576.

! Proposal for a Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council on certain aspects concerning contracts for the supply of digital content COM(2015) 634 final ("Digital content directive proposal 2015").

2577.

! On this law, see Vol.II, paras 38-496—38-526.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 7. - Contracts for the Supply of Goods, Digital Content or Services

(b) - The Old Law: Special Rules for Buyers and Hirers in Consumer Cases

Introduction

38-405

The following paragraphs apply to contracts made on or after March 31, 2003, this being the date of the coming into force of the Sale and Supply of Goods to Consumers Regulations 2002 ²⁵⁷⁸ and before October 1, 2015, being the date of the coming into force of the relevant provisions of the Consumer Rights Act 2015. ²⁵⁷⁹ As earlier noted, these amendments took effect by way of amendment of the Sale of Goods Act 1979 (for contracts for the sale of goods), ²⁵⁸⁰ the Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) Act 1973 (for hire-purchase agreements), ²⁵⁸¹ the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 (for contracts for the transfer of goods other than sale of goods or hire-purchase agreement), ²⁵⁸² and the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 (as regards the control of exclusions of liability arising under these provisions). ²⁵⁸³ The following paragraphs will set out the particular provisions applying only to consumer contracts for the sale of goods, referring in the course of doing so to parallel provisions governing hirepurchase agreements and other contracts for the transfer of goods.

²⁵⁷⁸. SI 2002/3045.

²⁵⁷⁹. See above, para.38-403. The 2015 Order art.6(3) preserves the effect of the amendments to the law made by the 2002 Regulations in relation to contracts entered into before October 1, 2015.

²⁵⁸⁰. 2002 Regulations regs 3–6, amending Sale of Goods Act 1979 ss.14, 20, 32 and 61(1) and inserting new Pt 5A.

²⁵⁸¹. 2002 Regulations regs 13 amending Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) Act 1973 ss.10 and 15.

²⁵⁸². 2002 Regulations regs 7–12, amending Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 ss.4, 9, 11D, 11J and 18 and inserting new Pt 1B.

²⁵⁸³. 2002 Regulations reg.14 amending Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.12 (for English law).

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 7. - Contracts for the Supply of Goods, Digital Content or Services

(b) - The Old Law: Special Rules for Buyers and Hirers in Consumer Cases

(i) - Amendment to the Statutory Implied Term as to Quality of Goods

Amendment to Sale of Goods Act 1979 s.14

38-406

The Sale and Supply of Goods to Consumers Regulations 2002 2584 inserted subss.(2D) to (2F) into s.14 of the 1979 Act so as to read:

“(2)

Where the seller sells goods in the course of a business, there is an implied term that the goods supplied under the contract are of satisfactory quality.

(2A)

For the purposes of this Act, goods are of satisfactory quality if they meet the standard that a reasonable person would regard as satisfactory, taking account of any description of the goods, the price (if relevant) and all the other relevant circumstances.

(2B)

For the purposes of this Act, the quality of goods includes their state and condition and the following (among others) are in appropriate cases aspects of the quality of the goods—fitness for all the purposes for which goods of the kind in question are commonly supplied,

(a)

(b) appearance and finish,

(c) freedom from minor defects,

(d) safety, and

(e) durability.

(2C)

The term implied by subsection (2) above does not extend to any matter making the quality of goods unsatisfactory—which is specifically drawn to the buyer's attention before the contract is made,

(a)

(b)
where the buyer examines the goods before the contract is made, which that examination ought to reveal, or in the case of a contract for sale by sample, which would have been apparent on a reasonable examination of the sample.

(c)

(2D)

If the buyer deals as consumer or, in Scotland, if a contract of sale is a consumer contract, the relevant circumstances mentioned in subsection (2A) above include any public statements on the specific characteristics of the goods made about them by the seller, the producer or his representative, particularly in advertising or on labelling.

(2E)

A public statement is not by virtue of subsection (2D) above a relevant circumstance for the purposes of subsection (2A) above in the case of a contract of sale, if the seller shows that—

(a)
at the time the contract was made, he was not, and could not reasonably have been, aware of the statement, before the contract was made, the statement had been withdrawn in public or, to the extent that it contained anything which was incorrect or misleading, it had been corrected in public, or the decision to buy the goods could not have been influenced by the statement.

(b)

(c)

(2F)

Subsections (2D) and (2E) above do not prevent any public statement from being a relevant circumstance for the purposes of subsection (2A) above (whether or not the buyer deals as consumer ... if the statement would have been such a circumstance apart from those subsections.”

Similar provisions were inserted into the Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) Act 1973 (for hire-purchase agreements) ²⁵⁸⁵ and the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 (for contracts for the transfer of goods other than sale of goods or hire-purchase agreement ²⁵⁸⁶ and for contracts of hire ²⁵⁸⁷). These amendments therefore introduced new matters under the heading of “relevant circumstances” for the assessment of the goods “satisfactory quality”. ²⁵⁸⁸ These are public statements concerning the goods made by the seller, the producer ²⁵⁸⁹ or his representative, particularly in advertising or labelling. These could previously be taken into account in determining the quality of the goods: but this change specifically makes them “relevant circumstances” for that purpose, though only where the buyer deals as consumer. ²⁵⁹⁰ As will be seen, the amendments provide exceptions for statements of which the seller could not have known, which have been withdrawn or which could not have influenced the decision to buy.

^{2584.} SI 2002/3045 reg.3(2).

^{2585.} 2002 Regulations reg.13 inserting Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) Act 1973 s.10(2D)–(2F) and amending s.15(1).

^{2586.} 2002 Regulations reg.7 inserting Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 s.4(2B)–(2D) and reg.12 amending s.18(1).

^{2587.} 2002 Regulations reg.10 inserting Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 s.9(2B)–(2D) and (10) and reg.12 amending s.18(1).

^{2588.} 2002 Regulations reg.3, implementing 1999 Directive art.2(2)(d) and (4).

^{2589.} 2002 Regulations reg.6(1), amending Sale of Goods Act 1979 s.61(1), to mean “the manufacturer of goods, the importer of goods into the European Economic Area or any person purporting to be a producer by placing his name, trade mark or other distinctive sign on the goods”.

^{2590.} Sale of Goods Act 1979 s.61(5A) referring to “dealing as consumer” within the meaning of the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 Pt 1 (and especially s.12) and see Vol.I, paras 15-073—15-078.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 7. - Contracts for the Supply of Goods, Digital Content or Services

(b) - The Old Law: Special Rules for Buyers and Hirers in Consumer Cases

(ii) - Passing of risk

Risk passes only on delivery

38-407

The 2002 Regulations amended s.20 of the Sale of Goods Act 1979 so as to provide that where the buyer “deals as consumer”, ²⁵⁹¹ the normal rules which it provides for the passing of risk “must be ignored and the goods remain at the seller’s risk until they are delivered to the consumer”. ²⁵⁹² Although this may accord better with the intention of the parties in a consumer transaction, it must be borne in mind that under the 1979 Act delivery may be effected without necessarily handing over physical possession of the goods: delivery may be actual or constructive. ²⁵⁹³ It is, though, more difficult to see why the seller should be required to bear the risk even with respect to loss caused by the buyer’s fault, at least where this is caused by the goods’ deterioration. ²⁵⁹⁴

^{2591.} As defined by reference to Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.12: 1979 Act s.61(5A) and see Vol.I, paras 15-073—15-078.

^{2592.} Inserted by reg.4 of the Sale and Supply of Goods to Consumers Regulations 2002 (SI 2002/3045).

^{2593.} See below, para.44-239.

^{2594.} Sale of Goods Act 1979 s.20(2) which is also to be ignored: see Benjamin’s Sale of Goods 9th edn (2014), para.6–026. Ignoring s.20(3) (which provides that nothing in s.20 “affects the duties or liabilities of either seller or buyer as bailee or custodian of the goods of the other party”) appears to make no change in the law.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 7. - Contracts for the Supply of Goods, Digital Content or Services

(b) - The Old Law: Special Rules for Buyers and Hirers in Consumer Cases

(iii) - Special Remedies for Buyers Dealing as Consumers

Introduction

38-408

The most important changes introduced by the Sale and Supply of Goods to Consumers Regulations 2002 ²⁵⁹⁵ were the insertion of a new Pt 5A into the Sale of Goods Act 1979 so as to create special remedies in respect of the goods which are not in conformity with the contract of sale for the benefit of buyers “dealing as consumer”, ²⁵⁹⁶ with similar insertions introduced into the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 (for contracts for the transfer of goods other than sale of goods or hire-purchase agreements). ²⁵⁹⁷ These changes became effective on March 31, 2003 and it may be assumed that the Regulations as a whole only apply to contracts entered into on or after that date, not (since they do not entirely deal with remedies) to contracts in respect of which remedies are sought to be exercised after that date. ²⁵⁹⁸ As earlier noted, the purpose of the new provisions was to comply as regards remedies with the requirements of Consumer Sales Directive’s provisions requiring rights for consumers in respect of the non-conformity of goods. ²⁵⁹⁹ The remedies added by Pt 5A were in large part new to the common law: a right in certain circumstances to demand repair or replacement of the goods, a right a reduction in the price, and a specific right to rescission more limited than the general right already existing at common law. All three notions are of recognisably civil law origin. ²⁶⁰⁰ To an extent, these remedies extended the rights of the consumer in England and Wales, but the wider law continues and is often more advantageous to consumers than the special provisions. ²⁶⁰¹ Moreover, the interaction of the special remedies with the wider remedies under the Sale of Goods Act and the general law is complex. The new remedies do not apply to defects in title, late delivery or non-delivery, which are governed by the general law. ²⁶⁰²

Introduction

38-409

The remedies are introduced by a general section which refers to all the remedies referred to above:

“48A.—

- (1) This section applies if—
 - (a) the buyer deals as consumer ... and
 - (b) the goods do not conform to the contract of sale at the time of delivery.

- (2) If this section applies, the buyer has the right—
 - (a) under and in accordance with s.48B below, to require the seller to repair or replace the goods, or
 - (b) under and in accordance with s.48C below—
 - (i) to require the seller to reduce the purchase price of the goods to the buyer by an appropriate amount, or
 - (ii) to rescind the contract with regard to the goods in question.
- (3) For the purposes of subs.(1)(b) above goods which do not conform to the contract of sale at any time within the period of six months starting with the date on which the goods were delivered to the buyer must be taken not to have so conformed at that date.
- (4) Subs.(3) above does not apply if—
 - (a) it is established that the goods did so conform at that date;
 - (b) its application is incompatible with the nature of the goods or the nature of the lack of conformity.”

A similar introductory provision was inserted into the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 for contracts for the transfer of goods other than sale of goods or hire-purchase agreement, referring to rights in the transferee against the transferor. ²⁶⁰³

Dealing as consumer

38-410

As will appear below, Pt 5A is by virtue of its opening provision, s.48A, directed at situations where the buyer deals as consumer. Although the word “consumer” is defined in reg.2(2) of the 2002 Regulations, this definition is not relevant here ²⁶⁰⁴ because the sections discussed here were inserted into the Sale of Goods Act 1979, and the 1979 Act provides that “dealing as consumer” is to be construed by reference to Pt I of the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977, ²⁶⁰⁵ the relevant definition appearing in s.12 (which was itself amended by the 2002 Regulations ²⁶⁰⁶). The understanding of “dealing as consumer” is discussed in relation to the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 in Vol.I, Ch.15 of the present work ²⁶⁰⁷. The main significance of the change here is that for the purposes of the special remedies, where the buyer is an individual (a “natural person”) there is no requirement that the goods sold also be consumer goods. 2608

Conformity with the contract of sale

38-411

The special additional rights for consumers arise where the goods do not conform to the contract and the notion of “contractual non-conformity” is therefore central to their availability. The Sale of Goods Act 1979 as amended provides that for the purposes of Pt 5A “goods do not conform to a contract of sale if there is, in relation to the goods, a breach of an express term of the contract or a term implied by ss.13, 14 or 15” of the same Act. 2609

Presumption of non-conformity on delivery

38-412

Section 48A(3) of the 1979 Act provides that:

“goods which do not conform to the contract of sale at any time within the period of six months starting with the date on which the goods were delivered to the buyer must be taken not to have so conformed at that date.”

This provision is of considerable practical importance to consumers, as doubt as to when the unsatisfactory quality or defect in goods arose may be difficult to establish. There is an exception for cases where such a presumption would be “incompatible with the nature of the goods or the nature of the lack of conformity”, 2610 for example, where the goods would deteriorate naturally over six months. It is uncertain whether the period starts again after redelivery of repaired or replaced goods, but in principle it seems that it should. This subsection creates a rebuttable presumption 2611 which applies only for the purposes of the Pt 5A remedies as opposed to the common law rights. 2612

First level of remedies: repair or replacement of the goods

38-413

At a first level, the consumer has the right to require repair or replacement of the goods. According to s.48B of the 1979 Act 2613:

“(1)

If s.48A above applies, the buyer may require the seller—

(a)

to repair the goods, or

(b)

to replace the goods.

(2)

If the buyer requires the seller to repair or replace the goods, the seller must—repair or, as the case may be, replace the goods within a reasonable time but without causing significant inconvenience to the buyer;

(a)

(b) bear any necessary costs incurred in doing so (including in particular the cost of any labour, materials or postage).

(3)

The buyer must not require the seller to repair or, as the case may be, replace the goods if that remedy is—impossible, or

(a)

(b) disproportionate in comparison to the other of those remedies, or disproportionate in comparison to an appropriate reduction in the purchase price under paragraph (a), or rescission under paragraph (b), of s.48C(1) below. 2614

(c)

(4)

One remedy is disproportionate in comparison to the other if the one imposes costs on the seller which, in comparison to those imposed on him by the other, are unreasonable, taking into account—the value which the goods would have if they conformed to the contract of sale,

(a)

(b)

the significance of the lack of conformity, and

(c)

whether the other remedy could be effected without significant inconvenience to the buyer.

(5)

Any question as to what is a reasonable time or significant inconvenience is to be determined by reference to—the nature of the goods, and

(a)

(b)

the purpose for which the goods were acquired.”

Right is that of buyer

38-414

It should be noted that the right is that of the buyer: the seller has no right to demand to effect repair or replacement. ²⁶¹⁵ However, the buyer's choice is limited by requirements of possibility and proportionality and the overall power of the court to decide that another Pt 5A remedy is more appropriate. ²⁶¹⁶ Repair ²⁶¹⁷ is obviously more appropriate to large artefacts, particularly if they are installed, as in the case of a boiler. ²⁶¹⁸ In the case of many mass-produced, especially electronic, goods, replacement may well be cheaper and more efficient than repair. Section 48B(2)(b) places the expense of achieving either of these on the seller, ²⁶¹⁹ though it seems that the buyer would be bound to cooperate in the execution of these procedures. ²⁶²⁰ The question of risk during such procedures is not addressed, but by the same reasoning it would seem that it should be on the seller.

Limits on the right

38-415

The limits on the right to demand repair or replacement stated in the section are not difficult to understand, though their application in practice may be more difficult. Considerable use is made of the notion that one remedy should not be disproportionate to others (whether repair as opposed to replacement, or (in the Regulations but not the Directive) one of these as compared with reduction of the price or rescission). In some cases repair or replacement would be completely inappropriate or indeed impossible, e.g. where specific goods are bought, or where all goods such as those ordered would be unsuitable for their purpose. Section 48B(4) makes clear that the test of disproportionality is one based on cost and does not specifically allow in the balancing process reference to the buyer's loss of confidence in the supplier or his interest in intangible satisfaction. Although the buyer may presumably at common law obtain damages for loss of use when the goods are being repaired or replaced ²⁶²¹ it is unlikely that they can be obtained for annoyance, disappointment or frustration.

Enforcement

38-416

The presence of these rules no doubt encourage the seller to repair or replace, but s.48E, which deals with “Powers of the Court”, gives the court the power actually to order specific performance of the seller’s duties. ²⁶²² For English law, this power was new. It is limited by the considerations of proportionality specified in s.48B above, and also by the discretion of the court, which may take into account whether or not other remedies under Pt 5A (reduction of the price and rescission) are more appropriate. However, it only operates within Pt 5A and there appears to be no power to consider (as a court from which an order of specific performance is sought at present would do) whether an award of damages at common law (or indeed rejection at common law) would be more appropriate. ²⁶²³

Second level of remedies: reduction of purchase price or rescission of contract38-417

These remedies derive ultimately from the Roman actio quanti minoris and actio redhibitoria. Section 48C reads:

“(1)

If s.48A above applies, the buyer may—require the seller to reduce the purchase price of the goods in question to the buyer by an appropriate amount, or rescind the contract with regard to those goods, if the condition in subs.(2) below is satisfied.

(a)

(b)

(2)

The condition is that—

(a)

by virtue of s.48B(3) above the buyer may require neither repair nor replacement of the goods; or the buyer has required the seller to repair or replace the goods, but the seller is in breach of the requirement of s.48B(2)(a) above to do so within a reasonable time and without significant inconvenience to the buyer.

(b)

(3)

For the purposes of this Part, if the buyer rescinds the contract, any reimbursement to the buyer may be reduced to take account of the use he has had of the goods since they were delivered to him.” ²⁶²⁴

Reduction of price

38-418

This remedy as such was new to English law, though s.53(1) of the Sale of Goods Act ²⁶²⁵ would often give similar results. The effect of subs.(2) is that, together with the remedy of rescission, it operates only when there is no scope for repair or replacement or where the seller has failed to effect repair or replacement within a reasonable time or without significant inconvenience to the buyer: it is in this sense that these remedies arise at a second level. The assumption behind the remedy of reduction in price is that the buyer keeps the goods and affirms the contract, but the price is adjusted to a level appropriate to the goods retained taking into account the failure in conformity. It will certainly not be appropriate unless the goods as delivered are suitable to the purpose for which they were acquired. It would seem that the price itself is a ceiling from which a percentage reduction is to be made; but the actual value of the goods from which the reduced value is taken as a percentage should be assessed at the time of delivery. ²⁶²⁶ If, therefore, the value of the goods has fallen between sale and delivery, the percentage calculation for reduction of the price would still be taken on the basis of the agreed price, and this calculation might sometimes yield more than the damages which would be recoverable. ²⁶²⁷ The use of the price reduction as opposed to that of rescission is at the buyer's choice (subject to the discretion of the court as to what is appropriate as later explained). ²⁶²⁸ In most cases, a common law award of damages (which would be available instead or in addition) would prove a superior remedy, especially as consequential loss can be taken in. It is unlikely therefore that the reduction of the price remedy will be of much value in England and Wales, except in the situation where the value of the goods falls (a situation less relevant to consumer than to commercial contracts), or if the buyer has difficulty in proving loss, as where he bought the goods for a gift to another.

Rescission ²⁶²⁹

38-419

This is available as an alternative to reduction of the price, and is again only available if there is no scope for repair or replacement. Subject to the court's discretion if the consumer brings proceedings, it appears that the choice between this remedy and reduction of the price lies with the buyer. A powerful right to reject exists in any case under the general law ²⁶³⁰ and the right to rescind under the new provisions is unlikely to be particularly useful. ²⁶³¹ The 1999 Directive in fact provides that the consumer is not entitled to have the contract rescinded if the defect is “minor”, a limitation which does not appear in the amendments to the 1979 Act effected by the 2002 Regulations, reflecting a wider UK policy that rejection by consumers should be possible for minor defects. ²⁶³² The nature and effect of rescission is left unexplained by s.48C, and while the operative word in the French version of the Directive is “résolution”, which indicates termination ab initio with restitution, counter-restitution and damages, ²⁶³³ its recital 15 appears to allocate these sorts of detail to national law as it provides that “the detailed arrangements whereby rescission of the contract is effected may be laid down in national law”. ²⁶³⁴ In English law, it would be more in keeping with the general approach to termination for breach of contract for the effect of “rescission” under s.48C to be prospective rather than retrospective; and it may also be thought that this would be more substantively appropriate. In the present context rescission would therefore mean the rejection of non-conforming goods, termination of the contract for breach and recovery of the price if paid. ²⁶³⁵ Even where a consumer exercises the right to rescind under s.48C, the common law right to damages for breach persists. There could, however, be more problems in a consumer instalment contract. ²⁶³⁶

Allowance for use

38-420

Where the buyer justifiably returns goods, he is at common law normally entitled to the whole of the price back without allowance for any use of the goods which he may have had in the interim. ²⁶³⁷ Section 48C(3), however, requires a reduction of the price to take account of such use, ²⁶³⁸ but it only applies to a buyer who rescinds under Pt 5A and not to one who rescinds at common law. This is another reason why the common law remedy may be preferable for a buyer.

Discretion as to appropriate remedy

38-421

Where the consumer brings proceedings seeking a remedy under Pt 5A of the Act the court has a discretion under s.48E of the 1979 Act as to the appropriate remedy for the consumer. ²⁶³⁹ Section 48E provides that, if the buyer requires the seller to give effect to a remedy under s.48B (i.e. repair or replacement) or s.48C (reduction of purchase price) or “has claims to rescind the contract” under s.48C, but the court decides that another remedy under either s.48B or s.48C is appropriate, ²⁶⁴⁰ the court may proceed:

“(a)

as if the buyer had required the seller to give effect to the other remedy, or if the other remedy is rescission under section 48C

(b)

as if the buyer had claimed to rescind the contract under that section.” ²⁶⁴¹

It is further provided that, if the buyer has claimed to rescind the contract, the court may order that any reimbursement to the buyer is reduced to take account of the use he has had of the goods since they were delivered to him. ²⁶⁴² In exercising these powers, a court may make an order “unconditionally or on such terms and conditions as to damages, payment of the price and otherwise as it thinks just”. ²⁶⁴³

Relation to common law remedies ²⁶⁴⁴

38-422

The point has been made that in many or most situations, the common law remedies of rejection and/or damages are superior for a buyer, and advisers may find it prudent to take care not to fall by accident into some of the procedures of Pt 5A. The main change to be noted in them is the introduction of the new procedures for repair or replacement. It may be an advantage to a consumer to demand one of these, to which there is now a legal right rather than a mere possibility of a practical solution by this means. There is, however, a concomitant drawback: if the consumer does not make this demand in circumstances where it would be appropriate (a matter likely only to be settled by a court at a later stage), he loses the right to proceed to the other Pt 5A remedies of reduction of the price and rescission; and even if he does so proceed, the court is entitled under s.48E to say that another remedy (under the new provisions) is appropriate. The common law remedies of rejection and/or damages remain. But there is a danger here that the right to reject could be lost by acceptance of the goods (especially by lapse of time) under s.35 of the Sale of Goods Act, ²⁶⁴⁵ which does not apply to a person who proceeds under Pt 5A. Part 5A contains, however, one specific reference to the common law, which is as follows:

“48D(1).— If the buyer requires the seller to repair or replace the goods the buyer must not act under subs.(2) until he has given the seller a reasonable time in which to repair or replace (as the case may be) the goods.

(2) The buyer acts under this subsection if—

- (a) in England and Wales or Northern Ireland he rejects the goods and terminates the contract for breach of condition ²⁶⁴⁶;
- (b) . . .
- (c) he requires the goods to be replaced or repaired (as the case may be). ²⁶⁴⁷ ”

38-423

In the result therefore, although a consumer buyer is under no obligation to demand repair or replacement, if he does so he cannot revert to what may be called the “common law route” without giving the seller a reasonable time to effect what was demanded: he is locked into the system of special consumer remedies. There may then be dangers of loss of the right to reject by retention of the goods for a reasonable time under s.35, though s.35(6)(a) ²⁶⁴⁸ should ameliorate this. All in all it is theoretically (though doubtless often not practically) desirable for a buyer to indicate which route he is taking, the statutory or the common law. ²⁶⁴⁹

Partial rejection and quantitative shortages

38-424

These are the subject of special provisions in the Sale of Goods Act, ²⁶⁵⁰ but Pt 5A gives no guidance ²⁶⁵¹ as regards the new procedures. A consumer who is party to a dispute involving such problems would do best therefore to seek to remain within the common law regime.

Fixed time limits

38-425

⚠ The Consumer Sales Directive 1999 envisaged that national laws would set fixed limits for the exercise of the remedies for the consumer which it required, such special “delays” being common in civil law systems. ²⁶⁵² ⚠ Since such limits (other than the general limitation of actions) are not used in common law they do not appear in Pt 5A. The result is that the procedures of Pt 5A are subject only to the normal English limitation period of six years, ²⁶⁵³ and even this is applicable only to those who need to seek the aid of judicial procedures. It may well be that the various criteria of proportionality and appropriateness, together with the increasing difficulty of proof as time goes on, make this a theoretical point, but there is no doubt that the procedures of Pt 5A as enacted, including rescission, are not subject to any special time limits.

Affirmation and waiver

38-426

Conversely, the common law rules are subject to general principles of waiver of breach and affirmation of contract (election), and in particular to s.35 of the Sale of Goods Act, under which the right to reject is lost after (inter alia) the lapse of a reasonable time. ²⁶⁵⁴ Whether or not the existence of any principle such as that of waiver is envisaged as operating under Pt 5A is not clear, though some of the numerous references to disproportionality, inconvenience and so forth would solve many problems. ²⁶⁵⁵ Since the principle of waiver is a general one of common law (even if its actual operation is controversial), ²⁶⁵⁶ based on justice and equity, it is difficult to see a reason for excluding its operation in the context of Pt 5A. ²⁶⁵⁷ However, there are certainly no rules as to lapse of time in Pt 5A, and if the new regime is intended as exclusive for the person operating it, this may mean that the right to reject (rescind) can be exercised at a later time than would be permissible under common law.

Exclusion by contract

38-427

Since the regulations make provision for the remedies of a buyer in respect of the quality requirements in consumer sales, they come within s.6(2) of the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 (read with ss.12 and 13(1)) ²⁶⁵⁸ and so cannot be excluded. ²⁶⁵⁹ The 1977 Act does not, however, apply to international supply transactions at all, ²⁶⁶⁰ and hence the new provisions can be excluded, as can other terms which might normally be regarded as unfair, for international consumer sales coming within the definition of international supply transactions. ²⁶⁶¹ It is submitted that, in the case of buyers who are “consumers” within the meaning of the 1999 Directive (and not merely persons “dealing as consumer” within the wider meaning of the 1977 Act ²⁶⁶²) the exclusion of control of exemption clauses for international sales is incompatible with the 1999 Directive’s requirement that:

“any contractual terms or agreements concluded with the seller before the lack of conformity is brought to the seller’s attention which directly or indirectly waive or restrict the rights resulting from this Directive shall, as provided for by national law, not be binding on the consumer.” ²⁶⁶³

It would be difficult to see, however, how an English court could interpret the 1977 Act so as not to apply this exclusion to consumer purchases even with the aid of the principle of conforming interpretation of legislation seeking to implement EU law. ²⁶⁶⁴

²⁵⁹⁵. SI 2002/3045. The 2002 Regulations were revoked on the coming into force of the Consumer Rights Act 2015: 2015 Act s.60, Sch.1 para.53 above, paras.38-403 and below, paras 38-431 et seq.

²⁵⁹⁶. SI 2002/3045 regs 7–11 amend the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982. A more detailed discussion of the changes effected by the Regulations appears in the 9th edn of Benjamin’s Sale of Goods (2014), paras 12–073 et seq.

²⁵⁹⁷. 2002 Regulations regs 7–12, inserting Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 Pt 1B (ss.11M–11S).

²⁵⁹⁸. These provisions are repealed and replaced by the Consumer Rights Act 2015 as regards contracts concluded on or after October 1, 2015: see below, paras 38-403 et seq.

²⁵⁹⁹. 1999 Directive art.3.

- 2600. See generally Whittaker, Liability for Products: English Law, French Law and European Harmonisation (2005) Ch.19 especially at pp.570–571.
- 2601. Below, paras 38-422—38-423. The 1999 Directive art.8(1) provides that the rights which it foresees “shall be exercised without prejudice to other rights which the consumer may invoke under the national rules governing contractual or non-contractual liability” and art.8(2) permits Member States to retain rules which are stricter than those which the Directive requires by way of “minimum harmonisation”, on which see above, para.38-020.
- 2602. See below, paras 44-080 et seq. and 44-234 et seq.
- 2603. 2002 Regulations reg.9; Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 s.11M.
- 2604. It is only relevant to reg.15 to “consumer guarantees” on which see below, para.38-428.
- 2605. Sale of Goods Act 1979 s.61(5A). Similarly as regards the rights of transferees of goods, the 2002 Regulations insert them into the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 ss.11M-11S; s.18(4) of the 1982 Act provides that “dealing as consumer” is to be construed in accordance with Pt 1 of the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977.
- 2606. 2002 Regulations reg.14(1)-(3).
- 2607. See Vol.I, paras 15-073—15-078.
- 2608. 1979 Act s.12(1A) (inserted by 2002 Regulations reg.14). Also, the exception for sale by competitive tender no longer operates in such a case, and that for sales by auction is much reduced: s.12(2) (as amended by 2002 Regulations reg.14).
- 2609. 1979 Act s.48F. As earlier noted, the 2002 Regulations make a small change to s.14 so as to reflect the definition of “conformity” in art.2 of the 1999 Directive: see above, para.38-406. For wider discussion of the statutory implied terms see below, paras 44-086 et seq. Similar provision is made by the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 s.11S for contracts for the transfer of goods as understood by that Act.
- 2610. 1979 Act s.48A(4)(b).
- 2611. 1979 Act s.48A(4)(a); 1999 Directive recital 8, art.5(3), on which see Faber v Autobedrijf Hazet Ochten BV (C-497/13) of June 4, 2015, below, para.38-461.
- 2612. Similar provision is made by the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 s.11M(3) and (4) for contracts for the transfer of goods as understood by that Act.
- 2613. Similar provision is made by the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 s.11N for contracts for the transfer of goods as understood by that Act.
- 2614. subpara.(c) does not appear in the 1999 Directive, which leaves the transition between the major remedies there rather vague.
- 2615. Compare Vienna Convention on the International Sale of Goods (see below, para.44-014) art.48.
- 2616. 1979 Act s.48E below, para.38-421.
- 2617. This word is defined in s.61(1) of the 1979 Act, as amended by reg.6: “repair” means, in cases where there is a lack of conformity of the goods, to bring the goods into conformity with the contract”. It has been held under the common law that a repairing seller may owe a duty to state what was wrong with the goods: see below, para.44-285. The wording of the regulation does not make such reasoning easy here, unless failing to do so could be regarded as causing inconvenience to the buyer under s.48C(2)(b), below, para.38-417.

- 2618. art.2(5) of the 1999 Directive requires that the remedies of repair or replacement apply to situations where goods are defectively installed by the seller. This is effected under the 2002 Regulations by treating the contract as one for work and materials: see s.11S(1)(b) of the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982, inserted by reg.9. This, however, brings in s.13 of the 1982 Act, which deals with supply of services, and under which the duty is one of reasonable care only, whereas the Sale of Goods Act duties are strict. It is not clear that this result is compatible with art.2(5) of the Directive which provides that “any lack of conformity resulting from incorrect installation of the consumer goods shall be deemed to be equivalent to lack of conformity of the goods if installation forms part of the contract of sale of the goods and the goods were installed by the seller or under his responsibility” and thereby assimilates defective installation with defect in the goods themselves.
- 2619. In Joined cases Gebr Weber GmbH v Wittmer (C-65/09 and C-87/09) [2011] E.C.R. I-05257 at para.55, the CJEU held that, under the 1999 Directive, a seller must pay for replacement of defective goods correctly installed. However, the CJEU appears to suggest that considerations of proportionality could lead to the reduction of the sum payable, which might in turn lead to availability of the remedies of reduction of price and rescission. It is not easy to see any warrant for such a progression in the Regulations. The ECJ earlier held that national legislation permitting the seller to invoice the buyer for use of the goods, where they are replaced after a period, is contrary to the requirement that repair or replacement are “free of charge” (words not appearing in the UK Regulations): Quelle AG v Verbraucherzentralen und Verbraucherverbände (C-404/06) [2008] E.C.R. I-2685.
- 2620. See Benjamin’s Sale of Goods, 9th edn (2014), para.12-085.
- 2621. See below, para.44-419.
- 2622. This relevant provision reads as follows: “48E (1) In any proceedings in which a remedy is sought by virtue of this Part the court, in addition to any other power it has, may act under this section. (2) On the application of the buyer the court may make an order requiring specific performance or, in Scotland, specific implement by the seller of any obligation imposed on him by virtue of section 48B above”.
- 2623. See Harris (2003) 119 L.Q.R. 541; Benjamin’s Sale of Goods, 9th edn (2014), para.12-116.
- 2624. Similar provision is made by the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 s.11P for contracts for the transfer of goods as understood by that Act.
- 2625. Diminution or extinction of price: see below, para.44-411.
- 2626. Some guidance may be drawn from art.50 of the Vienna Convention (see above, para.44-014), which provides that the buyer may reduce the price “in the same proportion as the value that the goods actually delivered had at the time of delivery bears to the value that conforming goods would have had at that time”.
- 2627. Some useful examples are given by Nicholas (1989) 115 L.Q.R. 211, 225-226. See also Benjamin’s Sale of Goods, 9th edn (2014), para.12-093.
- 2628. See 1979 Act s.48E(3) and (4), below para.38-421.
- 2629. See Hogg 2003 S.L.T. 27.
- 2630. See below, paras 44-066 et seq.
- 2631. It should also be borne in mind that a consumer buyer may have a right of cancellation within a brief specified period without giving reasons, under regulations governing contracts concluded offpremises and distance sales: above, paras 38-107 et seq.
- 2632. See Law Com No.160 Scots Law Com No.104, Sale and Supply of Goods (1987) at 4.13-4.14.

- 2633. arts 1183 and 1184 French Civil Code.
- 2634. cf. above, para.38-015 on the relevance of recitals to a directive for the interpretation of its provisions.
- 2635. Benjamin's Sale of Goods, 9th edn (2014), para.12-097.
- 2636. Benjamin's Sale of Goods, 9th edn (2014), para.12-101. There is no indication as to whether the goods can be returned when damaged without the buyer's fault, a point uncertain at common law also: see below, para.44-290; Benjamin's Sale of Goods, 9th edn (2014), para.12-100.
- 2637. Below, para.44-066; Benjamin's Sale of Goods, 9th edn (2014), paras 12-069—12-070.
- 2638. It is not clear how such valuation is to be determined: see Law Com Consultation Paper No.188, Consumer Remedies for Faulty Goods (2008), paras 7.36-7.38.
- 2639. Similar provision is made by the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 s.11R(3)-(4) for contracts for the transfer of goods as understood by that Act.
- 2640. 1979 Act s.48E(3).
- 2641. 1979 Act s.48E(4).
- 2642. 1979 Act s.48E(5); similarly, 1982 Act s.11R(5).
- 2643. 1979 Act s.48E(6); similarly, 1982 Act s.11R(6).
- 2644. See Benjamin's Sale of Goods, 9th edn (2014), paras 12-105, 12-106, 12-112 and especially para.12-120. The question whether a buyer who has lost the right to reject can still rescind under s.48C(1) was left open in Douglas v Genvarigill Co Ltd [2010] CSOH 14 at [37]. But in Lowe v W Machell Joinery Ltd [2011] EWCA Civ 794, [2012] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 153, it was assumed that the common law remedy of rejection remains open to a person who does not choose to pursue the new statutory remedies: see at [51]-[52].
- 2645. See below, paras 44-278 et seq.
- 2646. The possibility of other forms of repudiatory breach is not alluded to.
- 2647. Similar provision is made by the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 s.11Q for contracts for the transfer of goods as understood by that Act.
- 2648. See below, paras 44-283—44-284.
- 2649. See Benjamin's Sale of Goods, 9th edn (2014), para.12-097.
- 2650. 1979 Act ss.30, 35A: see below, paras 44-255 et seq., paras 44-286 et seq.
- 2651. Other than a reference to rescinding the contract "with regard to those goods": 1979 Act s.48C(1)(b).
- 2652.  e.g. art.1648 French Civil Code (which was amended in 2005 so as to provide a two-year delay for claims under the guarantee against latent defects applicable to contracts of sale generally). The 1999 Directive art.5(1) provides that "the seller shall be held liable under Article 3 where the lack of conformity becomes apparent within two years as from delivery of the goods. If, under national legislation, the rights laid down in Article 3(2) are subject to a limitation period, that period shall not expire within a period of two years from the time of delivery". On the distinction between time-limits on liability in the seller and on the period during which the consumer can exercise the rights arising in respect of that liability see Ferenschild v JPC Motor

SA (C-133/16) of July 13, 2017.

- 2653. Limitation Act 1980: see Vol.I, Ch.28. This is also true of the consumer remedies arising under the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 Pt 1B.
- 2654. See below, paras 44-278 et seq.
- 2655. It is submitted that the 1999 Directive's provision in art.8(1) that "any contractual terms or agreements concluded with the seller before the lack of conformity is brought to the seller's attention which directly or indirectly waive or restrict the rights resulting from this Directive shall, as provided for by national law, not be binding on the consumer" refers to agreements or waiver in the contract and, in any event, before the consumer's right to non-conformity has arisen and therefore has no bearing on the question whether any subsequent waiver by the consumer buyer should affect his rights in respect of non-conformity. Moreover, as earlier noted, recital 15 of the Directive provides that "the detailed arrangements whereby rescission of the contract is effected may be laid down in national law" and the question whether a consumer may effectively waive his right to rescission would fall naturally within such "detailed arrangements".
- 2656. See Vol.1, paras 22-040 et seq.
- 2657. See Benjamin's Sale of Goods, 9th edn (2014), para.12-110.
- 2658. s.12 ("dealing as consumer" as amended by the 2002 Regulations) and as applied to the 1979 Act by s.61(5A) of that Act; s.13 defining "exemption clause": see Vol.I, paras 15-073—15-078, 15-069 respectively.
- 2659. This is also the case as regards the remedies arising under the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 Pt 1B, since the control on the exclusions of liability arising under the 1982 are also effected by the 1977 Act: see notably, s.2 and 7.
- 2660. See below, para.44-125.
- 2661. Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.26. But (before the coming into force of the Consumer Rights Act 2015) the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations may apply. There are further problems regarding the conflict of laws aspects of the Act: see below, para.44-125.
- 2662. See above, para.38-353.
- 2663. Consumer Rights Directive 1999 art.7(1).
- 2664. cf. above, para.38-013.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 7. - Contracts for the Supply of Goods, Digital Content or Services

(b) - The Old Law: Special Rules for Buyers and Hirers in Consumer Cases

(iv) - Consumer Guarantees and Warranties

Consumer guarantees

38-428

The Sale and Supply of Goods to Consumers Regulations 2002 ²⁶⁶⁵ contain provisions relating to “consumer guarantees”, for example, of the type frequently given to customers by manufacturers of motor vehicles and electrical equipment. ²⁶⁶⁶ The regulations do not require such a guarantee to be given. But, if goods are sold or otherwise supplied to a consumer ²⁶⁶⁷ which are offered with a consumer guarantee, ²⁶⁶⁸ the guarantee takes effect at the time the goods are delivered as a contractual obligation owed by the guarantor ²⁶⁶⁹ under the conditions set out in the guarantee statement and the associated advertising. The guarantee must be in plain intelligible language; where the goods are offered within the UK, it must be in English; and it must contain certain essential particulars. ²⁶⁷⁰ The guarantor must also ensure that the guarantee contains a statement that the consumer has statutory rights in relation to the goods which are sold or supplied and that those rights are not affected by the guarantee. ²⁶⁷¹ The guarantee must be made available, on request, to the consumer in writing or in another durable medium which is available and accessible to him. ²⁶⁷²

38-429

Terms in a consumer guarantee which purport to exclude or restrict liability for loss or damage resulting from the negligence of a manufacturer or distributor of goods may be rendered ineffective by s.5 of the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 ²⁶⁷³ and terms that are unfair by the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999. ²⁶⁷⁴

Extended warranties

38-430

The Supply of Extended Warranties on Domestic Electrical Goods Order 2005 ²⁶⁷⁵ imposes an obligation on suppliers of domestic electrical goods, ²⁶⁷⁶ who also supply or offer to supply extended warranties for those goods, to provide certain information to consumers before the sale of an extended warranty and gives consumers cancellation and termination rights in relation to such warranties. ²⁶⁷⁷

^{2665.} SI 2002/3045 reg.15, amended by SI 2008/1277 Sch.2 para.97. This provision was deleted on the coming into force of the Consumer Rights Act 2015 on October 1, 2015: s.75, Sch.3 para.7: below, para.38-491.

^{2666.} reg.15 implements the Consumer Sales Directive 1999 art.6.

- 2667. Defined in 2002 Regulations reg.2. Regulation 15 thereby goes beyond what is required by the Consumer Sales Directive 1999 art.6 whose scope is restricted to the contracts of sale and work and materials to which the Directive applies: art.2(e) “guarantee”.
- 2668. Defined in reg.2.
- 2669. “Guarantor” is defined by reg.2 of the 2002 Regulations as “a person who offers a consumer guarantee to a consumer” and is therefore wider than the 1999 Directive art.2(e) and 6 which restrict the application of the provisions in the latter to sellers or producers as defined by art.2(c) and (d) and supplemented by art.2(4).
- 2670. For a commentary on these provisions, see Benjamin's Sale of Goods, 9th edn (2014), para.14-079. On the requirement of plain intelligible language, cf. above, paras 38-317 et seq. As 2002 Regulations reg.15 implements art.6 of the 1999 Directive, the interpretation of this requirement should follow the approach taken by the CJEU for the purposes of the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Directive 1993 arts 4(2) and 5, as there explained.
- 2671. SI 2002/3045 reg.15(2A), inserted by SI 2008/1277 reg.30(1), Sch.2 para.97.
- 2672. SI 2002/3045 reg.15(3).
- 2673. See Vol.1, para.15-091.
- 2674. See above, paras 38-201 et seq.
- 2675. SI 2005/37, amended by SI 2006/355 art.4(3). This order is not affected by the Consumer Rights Act 2015.
- 2676. Defined in art.1(3).
- 2677. Benjamin's Sale of Goods, 9th edn (2014), paras 14-047—14-048.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 7. - Contracts for the Supply of Goods, Digital Content or Services

(c) - The New Law: Consumer Rights in Respect of Goods Contracts, Digital Content Contracts and Services Contracts

The law recast by the 2015 Act: “goods contracts”, “digital content contracts” and “services contracts”

38-431

As noted earlier, Pt 1 of the 2015 Act identifies three broad categories of consumer contract: “contracts for a trader to supply goods to a consumer” or “goods contracts” (Ch.2) ²⁶⁷⁸; “contracts for a trader to supply digital content to a consumer” or “digital content contracts” (Ch.3) ²⁶⁷⁹; and “contracts for a trader to supply a service to a consumer” or “services contracts” (Ch.4). ²⁶⁸⁰

Terms “treated as included”

38-432

First, for each broad category, the 2015 Act provides a series of terms which are “treated as included” in the contract, these being broadly equivalent to the traditional implied terms of earlier legislation, as amended and supplemented. ²⁶⁸¹ In this respect, in the case of “goods contracts”, the Act seeks to implement the Law Commissions’ recommendations in its report Consumer Remedies for Faulty Goods. ²⁶⁸² Within “goods contracts”, further distinctions between different contracts are made, for example, for the purposes of the term that the trader has the right to supply the goods where a distinction is drawn between contracts for the hire of goods and other goods contracts. ²⁶⁸³

“Rights to enforce terms”

38-433

Secondly, in respect of each category of contract, the 2015 Act provides a series of “rights to enforce terms” about their subject matter (goods, digital content or services). ²⁶⁸⁴ In the case of “goods contracts” and “digital content contracts”, these rights are modelled broadly on the rights in respect of contractual non-conformity of goods provided by the 1999 Directive and earlier implemented by Pt 5A in the Sale of Goods Act 1979, ²⁶⁸⁵ but there are a series of adjustments and differences. ²⁶⁸⁶

Other aims

38-434

Thirdly, Pt 1 of the 2015 Act also gives effect to certain aspects of the Consumer Rights Directive 2011, notably its requirement that information provided by the trader about the goods or services as set out by the Directive is to form part of the contract ²⁶⁸⁷ and its rules governing delivery of goods and the passing of risk in goods in sales contracts. ²⁶⁸⁸ Moreover, as will be seen, the provisions of the 2015 Act governing “digital content contracts” are original in the sense that they find no direct equivalent in EU legislation nor earlier UK legislation, though some of the provisions themselves have echoes of both. The 2015 Act's provisions on "services contracts" ²⁶⁸⁹ are based principally on earlier provisions in the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982, supplemented by the creation of new rights to "repeat performance" and to price reduction. ²⁶⁹⁰

Trader liabilities not subject to exclusion

38-435

Fourthly, in general Pt 1 of the 2015 Act provides that a term in a contract to which it applies cannot exclude or restrict the trader's liability arising under its substantive provisions, though this strict position is qualified in the case of contracts of hire and in relation to contracts for services. ²⁶⁹¹

Disapplication of general legislation

38-436

Fifthly, the corollary of the 2015 Act's enactment of special and separate provision for consumer contracts in certain respects is that it amends other, earlier legislation affecting these categories of contracts so as no longer to apply to them or to apply to them only with qualifications. ²⁶⁹²

Law outside the 2015 Act still applicable

38-437

On the other hand, this does not mean that all the law governing consumer contracts for the supply of goods, digital content or services is found in the 2015 Act, as the following paragraphs will explain.

Issues regulated by the 2015 Act and no longer regulated by the Sale of Goods Act

38-438

As will be seen, special provision is made in the 2015 Act ²⁶⁹³ for the issues formerly (and still generally) governed by the 1979 Act's provisions on statutory implied terms as to title, sale by description, quality or fitness for purpose and sale by sample ²⁶⁹⁴ and, as a result, the 2015 Act disapplies these provisions in the 1979 Act so as no longer apply to "goods contracts" within the meaning of Pt 1 of the 2015 Act. ²⁶⁹⁵ So, for example, s.14 of the Sale of Goods Act 1979 is amended so as to remove earlier insertions governing buyers "dealing as consumer" ²⁶⁹⁶ and to provide that:

"This section does not apply to a contract to which Chapter 2 of Part 1 of the Consumer Rights Act 2015 applies (but see the provision made about such contracts in sections 9, 10 and 18 of that Act)." ²⁶⁹⁷

Similarly, the 2015 Act makes special provision for "goods contracts" regarding delivery of goods generally, ²⁶⁹⁸ delivery of the wrong quantity, ²⁶⁹⁹ instalment deliveries, ²⁷⁰⁰ and the passing of risk ²⁷⁰¹ and, as a result, it disapplies the relevant provisions governing the delivery applicable to contracts of sale of goods generally. ²⁷⁰² The 2015 Act provides a new scheme of remedies for the consumer under "goods contracts" and therefore, apart from deleting Pt 5A of the 1979 Act, ²⁷⁰³ it disapplies other provisions in the 1979 Act which are otherwise inconsistent with this new scheme. ²⁷⁰⁴

Issues still regulated by the Sale of Goods Act 1979

38-439

This means, however, that the 2015 Act leaves unaffected a number of provisions of the 1979 Act, which are therefore potentially applicable to the contracts to which the 1979 applies. ²⁷⁰⁵ This applies to provisions in the 1979 Act governing capacity to buy and sell, ²⁷⁰⁶ how contracts of sale of goods are made, ²⁷⁰⁷ existing or future goods, ²⁷⁰⁸ perished goods, ²⁷⁰⁹ goods perishing before sale but after agreement to sell, ²⁷¹⁰ ascertainment of price, ²⁷¹¹ agreement to sell at a valuation, ²⁷¹² stipulations about time, ²⁷¹³ when property passes (though the 2015 Act refers instead to “ownership” rather than “property”), ²⁷¹⁴ sales by a person other than the owner, ²⁷¹⁵ duties of sellers and buyers in general, ²⁷¹⁶ payment and delivery as concurrent conditions, ²⁷¹⁷ delivery (other than about the timing for delivery ²⁷¹⁸), the buyer’s liability for not taking delivery of goods, ²⁷¹⁹ the unpaid seller’s lien, ²⁷²⁰ the seller’s action for the price, ²⁷²¹ damages for non-acceptance against the buyer ²⁷²² and auction sales. ²⁷²³ While this is quite a catalogue, it will be seen that many of the issues still governed by the 1979 Act are unlikely to arise between the parties to a consumer contract, the main exception being the seller/trader’s rights in respect of the price and in respect of the consumer buyer’s non-acceptance.

Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) Act 1973 and the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982

38-440

The effect of the 2015 Act is that a consumer contract falling under Pt 1 of the 2015 Act is no longer governed by the provisions of the Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) Act 1973 (hire-purchase agreements) or of the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 (contracts for the transfer of property in goods, contracts for the hire of goods and contracts for services). ²⁷²⁴ Unlike the Sale of Goods Act 1979, there are no provisions in the 1973 or 1982 Act which will still apply both to consumer contracts and to contracts generally, reflecting the generally narrower scope of the regulation of the categories of contract to which they apply.

Common law and equity

38-441

Part 1 of the 2015 Act itself recognises that its rights to enforce the terms of the contracts may be supplemented by “other remedies” at common law or in equity, which, depending on the category of contract in question, may include specific performance, damages, “relying on the breach against a claim by the trader for the price”, “treating the contract as an end” or recover of money paid on the basis of a failure of consideration. ²⁷²⁵ Moreover, even though not flagged up by the Act in this way, the common law may apply so as to provide other rights for the consumer. This is the case, for example, as regards the law of misrepresentation (to the extent to which it is not disapplied by the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 as amended in 2014 ²⁷²⁶), the law of undue influence or duress. ²⁷²⁷

Other legislation

38-442

Apart from the rules in Pt 2 of the 2015 Act governing unfair terms in consumer contracts generally, ²⁷²⁸ other consumer protection legislation may also apply to the three broad categories of contract governed by Pt 1 of the 2015 Act, notably, the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 ²⁷²⁹ and the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008. ²⁷³⁰

Interpretation of 2015 Act Pt 1

38-443

Many concepts used by the 2015 Act are defined by it. ²⁷³¹ So, for example, the 2015 Act provides that contracts to supply goods are treated as including a term that “the trader must have the right to sell or transfer the goods at the time when ownership of the goods is to be transferred”,²⁷³² and defines “ownership” for this purpose,²⁷³³ though it then refers its reader to the 1979 Act “for the time when ownership of goods is transferred” in relation to contracts of sale.²⁷³⁴ Other concepts used by the 2015 Act are left undefined by it. It is submitted that the proper interpretation of these concepts depends on whether the provision in which they appear reflects EU legislation. Where it does (even in cases where the Act goes beyond what that legislation requires), then its interpretation may require an autonomous European interpretation.²⁷³⁵ Where, on the other hand, the concept does not reflect EU legislation or has not received and would not receive such an autonomous interpretation, then its interpretation would be subject to the normal rules governing the interpretation of UK statutes. In the case of concepts known to the common law or previously (or more generally) used by domestic statutes, in principle reference should be made to their interpretation under this wider English law. However, where a particular concept is used in provisions which reflect EU law and in other provisions which do not (but reflect domestic legislation) difficulty may arise. So, for example, “possession” is used by the Act in its definition of “hire of goods” (which does not reflect EU law),²⁷³⁶ but it is also used in the Act’s provisions governing the passing of risk²⁷³⁷ and, by reference, on the delivery of goods,²⁷³⁸ both of which reflect provisions in the Consumer Rights Directive 2011.²⁷³⁹

New terminology used by the Act

38-444

The declared purpose of the Act was to make the law governing consumer rights more accessible to consumers, or at least to their advisers.²⁷⁴⁰ As a result, some of the familiar terminology of the common law and of earlier legislation has been abandoned and replaced by new terminology which is intended to be more easily comprehended. The most prominent example of this is the replacement of the terminology of “implied term” familiar both from the common law and from statute since the Sale of Goods Act 1893 with provisions that provide that a contract “is to be treated as including a term”, for example, that the quality of goods is satisfactory.²⁷⁴¹ It is not clear that such a statutory deeming provision is any more accessible to non-lawyers than the traditional terminology, but in the following paragraphs these terms will be referred to as “statutory terms”. On the other hand, use of “condition” by the 2015 Act is more complex. The 2015 Act abandons the technical sense (used both by the 1979 Act and the common law) of a condition as a type of term the slightest breach of which will in principle give rise in the injured party to a right to terminate the contract (“treat the contract as repudiated”),²⁷⁴² but it recognises that a contract to supply goods may be conditional as well as absolute,²⁷⁴³ and then refers specially to a “conditional sales contract” as one where the trader retains ownership in the goods until certain conditions are met (typically payment).²⁷⁴⁴ Moreover, the terminology used by the Act to describe the effects, for example, of failures of conformity in goods, is not uniform. The 2015 Act places the new statutory terms under a heading “What statutory rights are there under a goods contract?”²⁷⁴⁵ and under a later heading asks “What remedies are there if statutory rights under a goods contract are not met?”²⁷⁴⁶ However, s.19 (which follows this second heading and sets out the general framework for the consumer’s rights) refers to the consumer’s “rights to enforce terms about goods”,²⁷⁴⁷ for example, the “right to reject”,²⁷⁴⁸ except when referring to “other remedies” available to the consumer, such as damages, specific performance, which arise under the general law.²⁷⁴⁹ On the other hand, later provisions setting out the details of the consumers “rights to enforce” do sometimes refer instead to the consumer’s “remedy”.²⁷⁵⁰ This apparent inconsistency is not to be welcomed. Moreover, at times the terminology adopted by the 2015 Act to define a technical distinction (with normative significance) may not be readily apparent without a close familiarity with its provisions. This is the case notably as regards the distinction between a “contract to supply goods” and “contracts for the transfer of goods” (the former being used to describe the broad category of contracts to which Ch.2 applies and which consists of “sales contracts”, contracts for the hire of goods, hire purchase agreements and contracts for the transfer of goods²⁷⁵¹ and the latter being a residual category of contract under which the trader transfers or agrees to transfer ownership of goods to the consumer, which is neither a sales contract nor a hire-purchase agreement).²⁷⁵²

Legislative style of the 2015 Act

38-445

The general legislative style is to expound the law in relatively short sentences and to make frequent cross-reference within the text of the provisions to other sections of the Act itself or, on occasion, to other legislation. A prominent example is that each section of the Act which inserts a statutory term ends with a provision referring the reader to the relevant provision within the Act which provides for the consumer's rights if the trader is respect of breach of the term. ²⁷⁵³ Conversely, s.31's provision rendering a contract term which seeks to exclude the trader's liability arising under the provisions of Pt 1, lists the relevant sections for this purpose. ²⁷⁵⁴

-
- ²⁶⁷⁸. Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.3(1).
 - ²⁶⁷⁹. 2015 Act s.33(1).
 - ²⁶⁸⁰. 2015 Act s.48(1).
 - ²⁶⁸¹. i.e. the Supply of Goods (Implied Terms Act) 1973, the Sale of Goods Act 1979 and the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982.
 - ²⁶⁸². Law Com No.317, Scot Law Com No.216, Cm 7725 (2008).
 - ²⁶⁸³. 2015 Act s.17 below, paras 38-472—38-474.
 - ²⁶⁸⁴. 2015 Act s.19 (goods contracts); s.42 (digital content contracts); and s.54 (services contracts) and see below, paras 38-459, 38-504 and 38-530 respectively.
 - ²⁶⁸⁵. 1982 Act Pt 1B.
 - ²⁶⁸⁶. See below, paras 38-477 et seq. and 38-517 et seq. for the details.
 - ²⁶⁸⁷. 2011 Directive art.6(5), above, para.38-100; 2015 Act ss.11(4)–(6), 12 (goods contracts); s.36(3)–(4) and 37 (digital content contracts); and ss.50(3)–(4) (services contracts): see below, paras 38-464—38-465, 38-508—38-509 and 38-535 respectively.
 - ²⁶⁸⁸. 2011 Directive arts 18 and 20; 2015 Act ss.28–29, below paras 38-489—38-490.
 - ²⁶⁸⁹. 2015 Act Pt 1 Ch.4.
 - ²⁶⁹⁰. 2015 Act ss.54–56, below, paras 38-540 et seq.
 - ²⁶⁹¹. 2015 Act s.31 (goods contracts), s.47 (digital content contracts) and s.57 (services contracts) and see below, paras 38-492, 38-524 and 38-546 respectively.
 - ²⁶⁹². 2015 Act s.60 and Sch.1.
 - ²⁶⁹³. 2015 Act ss.9–18, below, paras 38-458 et seq.
 - ²⁶⁹⁴. 1979 Act ss.11–15.
 - ²⁶⁹⁵. 2015 Act s.60; Sch.1, paras 8, 10–14.
 - ²⁶⁹⁶. 2015 Act s.60 and Sch.1 para.13(2) deleting s.14(2D) to (2F) of the 1979 Act.
 - ²⁶⁹⁷. 2015 Act s.60 and Sch.1 para.13(3).
 - ²⁶⁹⁸. 2015 Act s.28, below, para.38-489.
 - ²⁶⁹⁹. 2015 Act s.25, below, para.38-487.
 - ²⁷⁰⁰. 2015 Act s.26, below, para.38-488.

- 2701. 2015 Act s.29, below, para.38-490.
- 2702. 1979 Act ss.20, 29(3), 30–33; 35–36; 2015 Act s.60, Sch.1 paras 17–22. The 2015 Act s.60, Sch.1 para.23 provides that s.34 of the 1979 Act's provisions on the buyer's right of examining the goods do not affect the operation of s.22 of the 2015 Act (time limit for short-term right to reject), on which see below, para.38-481.
- 2703. On which see above, paras 38-408 et seq.
- 2704. 2015 Act s.60, Sch.1 paras 24–30 and 32 disapplying 1979 Act s.35 (acceptance), s.35A (right of partial rejection), and s.36 (buyer not bound to return rejected goods), s.51 (damages for nondelivery), s.52 (specific performance), s.53 (remedy for breach of warranty), s.54 (interest) and referring the reader to the relevant provisions of the 2015 Act. The 2015 Act s.60, Sch.1 also makes other minor amendments to the 1979 Act consequential on its enactment of Pt 1.
- 2705. For these purposes, it must first be noted that while Ch.2 of Pt 1 of the 2015 Act applies to "goods contracts" as it defines them (2015 Act ss.3 and 5, below, paras 38-452—38-454), the 1979 Act applies to "contracts of sale of goods" as it defines them: 1979 Act ss.1–2.
- 2706. 1979 Act s.3, on which see Vol.I, paras 9-013—9-015 and below para.44-033.
- 2707. 1979 Act s.4, though parallel provision is made for all the contracts to which Pt 1 of the 2015 Act applies: 2015 Act s.1(2).
- 2708. 1979 Act s.5 on which see below, para.44-038.
- 2709. 1979 Act s.6 on which see below, para.44-046.
- 2710. 1979 Act s.7 on which see below, paras 44-047—44-048.
- 2711. 1979 Act s.8 on which see below, paras 44-051—44-052.
- 2712. 1979 Act s.9 on which see below, para.44-053.
- 2713. 1979 Act s.10 on which see below, para.44-128.
- 2714. 2015 Act s.4; 1979 Act ss.16–19, 20A–20B, below, paras 44-130—44-186.
- 2715. 1979 Act ss.21–26, below, paras 44-191—44-233.
- 2716. 1979 Act s.27 on which see below, para.44-234.
- 2717. 1979 Act s.28 on which see below, para.44-235.
- 2718. 1979 Act s.29. The 2015 Act disapplies s.29(3) as regards Pt 1 consumer contracts.
- 2719. 1979 Act s.37 on which see below, para.44-291.
- 2720. 1979 Act ss.41–48 on which see below, paras 44-304 et seq.
- 2721. 1979 Act s.49 on which see below, paras 44-359 et seq.
- 2722. 1979 Act s.50 on which see below, paras 44-367 et seq.
- 2723. 1979 Act s.57.
- 2724. In the case of the 1973 Act, the disapplication of the provisions applicable to hire-purchase agreements is effected by 2015 Act s.60, Sch.1 paras 1–7 (which do so by substituting "relevant hire-purchase agreement" for "hire-purchase agreement" in the 1973 Act and then defining a relevant hire-purchase agreement as one which "is not a contract to which Chapter 2 of Part 1 of the Consumer Rights Act 2015 applies", as well as making consequential amendments to the 1973 Act. In the case of the 1982 Act, some provisions formerly applicable only to consumers are deleted (notably, Pt 1B), the scope set out in ss.1, 6 and 12 are amended so as not to apply to contracts to which Ch.2 of Pt 1 of the 2015 Act applies, these not being "relevant" contracts of the types governed by the Act; other consequential amendments are also made: 2015 Act s.60, Sch.1, paras 37–44, 50–52.

2725. 2015 Act s.19(9)–(13) below, para.38-486; s.42(6)–(7) (digital content) below, para.38-522; and s.54(6)–(7) (services contracts) below, para.38-544.

2726. SI 2008/1277 (as amended): see above, para.38-188 and Vol.I, Ch.7.

2727. See Vol.I, Ch.8.

2728. Above, paras 38-334 et seq.

2729. SI 2013/3134: see above, paras 38-056 et seq.

2730. SI 2008/1277 (as amended): see above, paras 38-145 et seq.

2731. See notably, 2015 Act ss.2, 3–8, 33, 48 and 59.

2732. 2015 Act s.17 provides exceptions for contracts for the hire of goods (s.17(1)(a)) and where circumstances show or imply that the trader intended to transfer only a more limited title (s.17(1) and (4)–(7)).

2733. 2015 Act s.4(1) "the general property in goods, not merely a special property".

2734. 2015 Act s.4(2) referring to 1979 Act ss.16–20B.

2735. Above, para.38-014.

2736. 2015 Act s.6.

2737. 2015 Act s.29 referring to "physical possession".

2738. 2015 Act s.28; "delivery" is defined by s.59(1) as the "voluntary transfer of possession from one person to another".

2739. 2011 Directive arts 18 and 20 (both referring to "physical possession"). See further, below, 38-489 and 38-490.

2740. BIS, Enhancing Consumer Confidence by Clarifying Consumer Law (July 2012) paras 2.1–2.3.

2741. 2015 Act s.9(1).

2742. On this usage, see 1979 Act s.11(3) and more generally Vol.I, paras 13-019 et seq. The 2015 Act instead provides its own remedies which bring the contract to an end: e.g. below, paras 38-478 and 38-483 ("goods contracts").

2743. 2015 Act s.3(5)(c).

2744. 2015 Act s.5(3).

2745. Heading prefacing s.9 of the 2015 Act (emphasis added).

2746. Heading prefacing s.19 of the 2015 Act (emphasis added).

2747. 2015 Act s.19 title.

- 2748. 2015 Act s.20.
- 2749. 2015 Act s.19(9)–(11).
- 2750. 2015 Act s.23(4) and (5).
- 2751. 2015 Act s.3(1) and (2).
- 2752. 2015 Act s.8.
- 2753. e.g., as regards “goods contracts”, ss.9(9), 10(7), 12(5), 13(3), 14(3), 15(2) referring to s.19.
- 2754. 2015 Act s.31(1) and see below, para.38-492.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 7. - Contracts for the Supply of Goods, Digital Content or Services

(c) - The New Law: Consumer Rights in Respect of Goods Contracts, Digital Content Contracts and Services Contracts

(i) - General definitions

Scope of application of Pt 1 of the 2015 Act

38-446

Part 1 of the 2015 Act applies only to three broad categories of consumer contract: “contracts for a trader to supply goods to a consumer” or “goods contracts” (Ch.2) ²⁷⁵⁵; “contracts for a trader to supply digital content to a consumer” or “digital content contracts” (Ch.3) ²⁷⁵⁶; and “contracts for a trader to supply a service to a consumer” or “services contracts” (Ch.4). ²⁷⁵⁷ The particular elements of these contracts will be explained in turn below, ²⁷⁵⁸ but certain “key definitions” are of more general application.

“Consumer”

38-447

For the purposes of Pt 1 of the 2015 Act:

“Consumer” means an individual acting for purposes that are wholly or mainly outside that individual's trade, business, craft or profession.” ²⁷⁵⁹

This reflects the new standard UK definition of “consumer” and reflects the EU definition of “consumer”, with the gloss that it includes as “consumer” a person who acts mainly outside his trade etc. ²⁷⁶⁰ Following the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977, the 2015 Act provides that:

“A trader claiming that an individual was not acting for purposes wholly or mainly outside the individual's trade, business, craft or profession must prove it.” ²⁷⁶¹

“Trader”

38-448

The 2015 Act provides that:

“Trader” means a person acting for purposes relating to that person's trade, business, craft or profession, whether acting personally or through another person acting in the trader's name or on the trader's behalf.” ²⁷⁶²

And “business” includes the activities of any government department or local or public authority”. ²⁷⁶³ This definition of the other party to a consumer contract has become standard in modern UK legislation governing consumer contracts and follows closely the position in EU law, as explained earlier. ²⁷⁶⁴

Contracts business-to-consumer

38-449

It has earlier been seen that EU legislation (and therefore UK legislation which reflects it exactly without extension) may not make clear whether it applies so as to protect persons dealing other than in a course of business where they supply goods or services as opposed to whether they receive goods or services. ²⁷⁶⁵ However, the 2015 Act makes clear that its provisions apply only to contracts under which a trader supplies goods, digital content or services to consumers. ²⁷⁶⁶ This makes substantive sense as it seeks to create rights in buyers or customers (the consumer) and it also reflect the position under the EU legislation which some of the Act's provisions implement. ²⁷⁶⁷

Mixed contracts

38-450

Chapters 2 to 4 of Pt 1 of the 2015 Act make provision for “goods contracts”, “digital content contracts” and “services contracts” respectively, but it is specifically provided that each chapter applies even if the contract also covers something covered by another chapter, so that a “mixed contract” may be governed by two or all three of the chapters. ²⁷⁶⁸ Special provision is also made for particular mixed contracts. ²⁷⁶⁹ On the other hand, as will be seen, within the broad category of “goods contracts”, sharp distinctions are drawn between contracts for the hire of goods and hire-purchase agreements, ²⁷⁷⁰ hire-purchase agreements and conditional sales agreements, ²⁷⁷¹ and a “contract for transfer of goods” is defined as a residual category of contracts for the transfer of ownership of goods which is not a sales contract or a hire-purchase agreement. ²⁷⁷²

²⁷⁵⁵. Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.3(1).

²⁷⁵⁶. 2015 Act s.33(1).

²⁷⁵⁷. 2015 Act s.48(1).

²⁷⁵⁸. Below, paras 38-451 et seq., 38-496 et seq. and 38-527 et seq. respectively.

²⁷⁵⁹. 2015 Act s.2(3).

²⁷⁶⁰. For discussion of the significance of “consumer” see above, paras 38-030 et seq. The 2015 Act s.2(5) and (6) makes a specific exclusion from this definition of “consumer” in relation to “sales contracts” as explained below, para.38-453.

²⁷⁶¹. 2015 Act s.2(4).

²⁷⁶². 2015 Act s.2(2).

²⁷⁶³. 2015 Act s.2(7).

- 2764. Above, paras 38-047 et seq.
- 2765. Above, para.38-044.
- 2766. 2015 Act ss.1(1), 3(1), 33(1) and 48(1).
- 2767. i.e. 1999 Directive especially art.2(c) defining the business party as “seller”, arts 2 and 3 imposing duties on the seller and rights in the consumer against the seller; Consumer Rights Directive 2011 arts 18 and 20 (which both make clear that they apply where the trader sells goods to the consumer).
- 2768. 2015 Act s.1(4)–(5); s.3(7).
- 2769. 2015 Act s.1(6) referring to ss.15 and 16, below, paras 38-468—38-469.
- 2770. 2015 Act s.6(2), below, para.38-455.
- 2771. 2015 Act s.7(4), below, para.38-456.
- 2772. 2015 Act s.8, below, para.38-457.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 7. - Contracts for the Supply of Goods, Digital Content or Services

(c) - The New Law: Consumer Rights in Respect of Goods Contracts, Digital Content Contracts and Services Contracts

(ii) - “Goods Contracts”

(aa) - The Four Types of “Goods Contracts”

Introduction

38-451

The 2015 Act provides that there are four types of “goods contracts” to which Ch.2 of Pt 1 applies: a “sales contract”, a “contract for the hire of goods”, a “hire-purchase agreement” and a “contract for transfer of goods”. ²⁷⁷³ These may include contracts entered into between one part owner and another, contracts for the transfer of an undivided share in goods and contracts that are absolute and contracts that are conditional. ²⁷⁷⁴ These contracts are referred to by the Act either as contracts to supply goods or “goods contracts”. ²⁷⁷⁵

“Sales contracts”

38-452

! The 2015 Act provides that:

“A contract is a sales contract if under it—

- (a)
the trader transfers or agrees to transfer ownership of goods to the consumer, and the consumer pays or agrees to pay the price.” ²⁷⁷⁶ !
- (b)

Apart from the substitution of “ownership of goods” for “the property in goods”, this definition follows closely the definition of “contract of sale of goods” in the 1979 Act, ²⁷⁷⁷ ! and this substitution makes no substantive difference given that the 2015 Act defines “ownership” as “the general property in goods, not merely a special property”. ²⁷⁷⁸ !

“Goods”

38-453

“Goods” are defined by the 2015 Act as:

“any tangible moveable items, but that includes water, gas and electricity if and only if they are put up for supply in a limited volume or set quantity.” ²⁷⁷⁹

This reflects the wording of the definition of “consumer goods” in the 1999 Directive, rather than “goods” in the 1979 Act. ²⁷⁸⁰ Moreover, reflecting an option for Member States under the 1999 Directive, ²⁷⁸¹ the 2015 Act generally excludes from the application of Ch.2’s provisions sales contracts where the goods are “second hand goods sold at public auction, and ... individuals have the opportunity of attending the sale in person”, though it does so by deeming the buyer not to be a “consumer” in these circumstances, ²⁷⁸² but the 2015 Act does not make this exclusion in relation to those of its provisions which implement the Consumer Rights Directive 2011, as that Directive does not allow for such an exclusion. ²⁷⁸³

Contract for work and materials as “sales contract”

38-454

The 2015 Act also includes within “sales contracts” certain contracts which might be treated by English law as being contracts for work and materials, ²⁷⁸⁴ thereby implementing the 1999 Directive. ²⁷⁸⁵ Section 5(2) of the 2015 Act provides that:

“A contract is a sales contract (whether or not it would be one under subsection (1)) if under the contract—

- (a) goods are to be manufactured or produced and the trader agrees to supply them to the consumer,
- (b) on being supplied, the goods will be owned by the consumer, and
- (c) the consumer pays or agrees to pay the price.”

So, for example, a contract under which a tailor produces a made-to-measure suit for a consumer is a sales contract. ²⁷⁸⁶ Similarly, the 2015 Act specifically provides that for the purposes of Pt 1: a “conditional sales contract” means:

“a sales contract under which—

- (a)
 - the price for the goods or part of it is payable by instalments, and
- (b)
 - the trader retains ownership of the goods until the conditions specified in the contract (for the payment of instalments or otherwise) are met; and it makes no difference whether or not the consumer possesses the goods.” ²⁷⁸⁷

In keeping with the general position under the general law, ²⁷⁸⁸ the 2015 Act provides that a contract cannot be a hire-purchase agreement if it is a conditional sales contract, ²⁷⁸⁹ but the 2015 Act also contains provisions which apply specifically to conditional sales contracts for the purposes of the consumer’s “right to reject”. ²⁷⁹⁰

“Contracts for the hire of goods”

38-455

Section 6(1) of the 2015 Act provides that:

“A contract is for the hire of goods ²⁷⁹¹ if under it the trader gives or agrees to give the consumer possession of the goods with the right to use them, subject to the terms of the contract, for a period determined in accordance with the contract.”

This definition rewrites the definition provided for contracts generally by the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982, replacing its reference to a person bailing or agreeing to bail goods to another by way of hire, ²⁷⁹² with the phrase giving “the consumer possession of the goods with the right to use them”. As earlier noted, a contract for the hire of goods is not a hire-purchase agreement. ²⁷⁹³

“Hire-purchase agreements”

38-456

The 2015 Act provides that a contract is a hire-purchase agreement if “under the contract goods are hired ²⁷⁹⁴ by the trader in return for periodical payments by the consumer” and if under the contract “ownership of the goods ²⁷⁹⁵ will transfer to the consumer if the terms of the contract are complied with and:

- “(a)
 - the consumer exercises an option to buy the goods,
- (b)
 - any party to the contract does an act specified in it, or
- (c)

an event specified in the contract occurs.” ²⁷⁹⁶

It is provided that a contract is not a hire-purchase agreement if it is a conditional sales contract. ²⁷⁹⁷ These provisions substantively follow the definition in the Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) Act 1973, with the substitution of “ownership” for “property” and “hired” for “bailed”. ²⁷⁹⁸

“Contracts for transfer of goods”

38-457

! The 2015 Act provides that:

“A contract to supply goods is a contract for transfer of goods ²⁷⁹⁹ if under it the trader transfers or agrees to transfer ownership ²⁸⁰⁰ of the goods to the consumer and—

- (a)
 - the consumer provides or agrees to provide consideration otherwise than by paying a price, or
- (b)
 - the contract is, for any other reason, not a sales contract or a hire-purchase agreement.” ²⁸⁰¹

As earlier explained, “contracts for transfer of goods” is therefore the residual category of “goods contracts”. ²⁸⁰² An example can be found where a trader supplies goods to a consumer in return for the supply by the consumer of other goods and money (as in the part-exchange of a second-hand car). ²⁸⁰³ Another example may be found in a contract under which a trader agrees to repair the consumer’s property using materials or spare parts which the trader supplies. ²⁸⁰⁴ !

²⁷⁷³. 2015 Act s.3(2). Ch.2 does not apply to a contract for a trader to supply coins or notes to a consumer for use as currency; a contract for goods to be sold by way of execution or otherwise by authority of law; a contract intended to operate as a mortgage, pledge, charge or other security; or a contract made by deed and for which the only consideration is the presumed consideration imported by the deed: s.3(3). Particular provisions of the Act may apply or may apply differently according to the different types of “goods contracts” which are included: s.3(6) and, e.g. s.17 (trader to have right to supply the goods etc) on which see below, paras 38-472—38-475.

²⁷⁷⁴. 2015 Act s.3(5). cf. 1979 Act s.2(2)–(3), below, para.38-444.

²⁷⁷⁵. 2015 Act s.3(4); heading preceding s.3.

²⁷⁷⁶. ! 2015 Act s.5(1). cf. Software Incubator Ltd v Computer Associates UK Ltd [2016] EWHC 1587 (QB) at [35]–[69] where it was held that a contract for the supply of software could constitute a “sale of goods” for the purposes of the Commercial Agents (Council Directive) Regulations 1993 (SI 1993/3053), distinguishing (at [47]) the position under the Consumer Rights Act 2015.

2777.

❗1979 Act s.2(1) below, paras 44-020 et seq. And see above, para.38-052A, which discusses Wathelet v Garage Bietheres & Fils SPRL (C-149/15) [2017] 1 W.L.R. 865 on the question when a trader who acts on behalf of a private individual is to be treated as a “seller” of goods under the Consumer Sales Directive 1999.

2778.

❗2015 Act s.4(1) and cf. 1979 Act s.61(1) defining “property” as “general property in goods, and not merely a special property”, on which see below, para.44-015. In PST Energy 7 Shipping LLC v OW Bunker Malta (The Res Cogitans) [2016] UKSC 23, [2016] 2 W.L.R. 1193 (decided in a commercial context), the Supreme Court held that if a contract provides for possession of goods to be given, coupled with a legal entitlement to use or consume them before the property in them is transferred upon payment, then the contract is not one of sale of goods within the meaning of the Sale of Goods Act 1979 as the transferor does not undertake to transfer property in the goods, but is instead sui generis, a bailment coupled with a licence to use or consume the goods, and that this is the case even where it is agreed that the property is to pass in any goods still in existence at the time of payment. On the complex legal issues arising if such a contract were concluded between a trader and a consumer within the meanings of the 2015 Act, see Benjamin’s Sale of Goods, 10th edn (2017) paras 14-062–14-065.

2779.

2015 Act s.2(8). cf. the definition of “goods” under the 1979 Act s.61(1) as “all personal chattels other than things in action and money” with further explanations, on which see below, para.44-015.

2780.

1999 Directive art.1(2)(b), though this provision also excludes from its definition of “consumer goods” “goods sold by way of execution or otherwise by authority of law”.

2781.

1999 Directive art.1(3).

2782.

2015 Act s.2(5). This restriction does not apply to the other types of “goods contracts” governed by Ch.2, but these other types of contract would not normally be the subject of public auction.

2783.

See 2015 Act s.2(6) referring to s.11(4) and (5) and 12 (both of which concern the information requirements under the 2011 Directive), s.28 (delivery) and s.29 (passing of risk) and “the other provisions of Chapter 2 as they apply in relation to those sections”. The 2011 Directive makes special requirements as regards the information to be provided by the trader (art.6(3)) at “public auctions” (which it defines by art.2(13)), and excludes contracts so made from the rights of cancellation which a consumer may otherwise enjoy under the Directive: art.16(k). On these rights of cancellation see above, paras 38-107 et seq.

2784.

cf. below, para.44-026 on the position under the Sale of Goods Act 1979.

2785.

1999 Directive art.1(4).

2786.

Explanatory Notes 2015 para.58.

2787.

2015 Act s.5(3).

2788.

Below, para.44-028.

2789.

2015 Act s.7(4).

2790.

2015 Act ss.20(14), 22 (3)(a) and 24(11) on which see below, paras 38-479 and 38-481.

2791.

See 2015 s.2(8) and above, para.38-453 for the definition of “goods”.

- 2792. 1982 Act s.6(1).
- 2793. 2015 Act s.6(2)
- 2794. “Hired” is to be read in accordance with s.6(1): 2015 Act s.7(2).
- 2795. On “ownership of the goods” see 2015 Act s.4(1) and above, para.38-443.
- 2796. 2015 Act s.7(1)–(3).
- 2797. 2015 Act s.7(4) and see s.5(3) for “conditional sales contract”, above, para.38-443.
- 2798. Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) Act 1973 s.15(1) “hire-purchase agreement”. See also the definition of “hire-purchase agreement” under the Consumer Credit Act 1974 s.189(1), above, paras 39-306 et seq. and especially paras 39-310 and 39-356 (effect of the Consumer Credit Act 1974).
- 2799. On the definition of “goods” see 2015 Act s.1(8) and above para.38-453.
- 2800. On the definition of “ownership” see 2015 Act s.4(1) and above para.38-443.
- 2801. 2015 Act s.8.
- 2802. Above, para.38-444.
- 2803. Explanatory Notes 2015 para.58.
- 2804.  In Wood v TUI Travel PLC (t/a First Choice) [2017] EWCA Civ 11, [2017] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 322 esp. at [27] it was held that where a contract for a holiday for consumers under which a hotel is to provide food and drink, in the absence of express agreement to the contrary, the property in the meal transfers to them when it is served, whether or not that meal is accompanied with a service. As a result, such a contract is a “contract for the transfer of property in goods” under s.4 of the Supply of Goods of Services Act 1982 (The decision related to a contract made before the coming into force of the 2015 Act on October 1, 2015.)

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 7. - Contracts for the Supply of Goods, Digital Content or Services

(c) - The New Law: Consumer Rights in Respect of Goods Contracts, Digital Content Contracts and Services Contracts

(ii) - “Goods Contracts”

(bb) - The Statutory Terms and “Goods Conforming to a Contract”

Introduction

38-458

The following paragraphs will set out the terms which the 2015 Act provides are to be treated as included in the contracts to which Ch.2 of Pt 1 applies (the “statutory terms”), ²⁸⁰⁵ as well its provisions governing “conformity of the goods”, ²⁸⁰⁶ but before doing so it is helpful to note that breach of the statutory terms which these provisions insert into contracts and the non-conformity of the goods to the contract do not relate to the Act’s scheme of rights to enforce terms about contracts in an entirely straightforward way. ²⁸⁰⁷

The relationship between the statutory terms, non-conformity of the goods and the consumer’s remedies

38-459

At common law and under the Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) Act 1973, the Sale of Goods Act 1979 and the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 (before the latter two were amended by the Sale and Supply of Goods to Consumers Regulations 2002 ²⁸⁰⁸), the customer’s remedies in respect of the goods or services rest on his or her establishing breach of that contract, whether that breach relates to an express or to an implied term, though for the purposes of the availability of rejection of goods and “treating the contract as repudiated” the 1979 Act uses the distinction between conditions (where rejection is available) and warranties (where it is not). ²⁸⁰⁹ To this relatively simple framework, the 2002 Regulations added a supplementary set of rights for those dealing as consumer, which, following the 1999 Directive, rested on establishing that the goods do not conform to the contract, ²⁸¹⁰ conformity being defined as referring to the situation where there was breach of an express term of the contract or to one of the statutory implied terms as to the goods’ description, quality or fitness for purpose ²⁸¹¹: in effect, therefore, the consumer’s remedies still requires proof of breach of contract. However, the position under the 2015 Act is more complicated, though it does not adopt the traditional distinction between conditions and warranties. The position under the 2015 Act is best understood by starting with s.19’s overview of the consumer’s rights to enforce terms about contracts. Section 19 begins by defining what is meant by reference to “goods conforming to a contract” for its own purposes and for the purposes of later provisions governing particular consumer remedies, ²⁸¹² being references to:

“(a)

the goods conforming to the terms described in sections 9, 10, 11, 13 and 14,

(b)

the goods not failing to conform to the contract under section 15 or 16, and

(c)

the goods conforming to requirements that are stated in the contract.” ²⁸¹³

At first sight, this looks very inclusive, but there are two omissions from this catalogue: first, breach of the term inserted by s.12 of the Act, which gives contractual force to information required to be and actually supplied by the trader to the consumer under the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 other than information concerning the main characteristics of the goods ²⁸¹⁴; and secondly, breach of the terms inserted by s.17 of the Act, which concern the trader’s right to supply the goods etc. ²⁸¹⁵; each of these are provided with their own special remedial consequences. ²⁸¹⁶ Section 19(3) then provides more generally that goods that do not conform to the contract because of the breach of the statutory terms earlier listed ²⁸¹⁷ or under s.16 (goods not conforming to contract if digital content does not conform) give rise to the short-term right to reject, the right to repair or replacement and the right to a price reduction or the final right to reject, ²⁸¹⁸ but s.19(3) does not apply to non-conformity under s.15 (installation as part of conformity of the goods) nor to breach of requirements stated in the contract, both of which are stated as giving rise to the right to repair or replacement and the right to a price reduction or the final right to reject, but not, therefore, to the short-term right to reject. ²⁸¹⁹ Moreover, this position has three further nuances. First, the pattern of remedies for breach of the statutory terms or non-conformity just set out ²⁸²⁰ is subject to s.25’s provisions on delivery by the trader of the wrong quantity of goods. ²⁸²¹ Secondly, the consumer’s short-term right to reject and the consumer’s right to reject in respect of breach of a term as to the trader’s right to supply are subject to s.26’s provisions on instalment deliveries. ²⁸²² And, thirdly, as s.19(8) explains, s.28 makes special provision about remedies for the consumer for breach of a term about the time for delivery of goods; these remedies do not rest on “nonconformity” of the goods to the contract and fall outside the remedial scheme foreseen by s.19. ²⁸²³

38-460

To a considerable extent this pattern results from substantive differences between the statutory terms which the Act inserts and from the resulting appropriateness of some but not all the remedies which the Act foresees for consumers, but the complexity of the statutory provisions is unattractive in legislation aimed at simplification in the interests of accessibility of the law to consumers and their advisers. The following paragraphs will, therefore, refer to the relevant remedies arising for breach of the particular statutory terms or non-conformity of the goods with the contract individually, leaving until later detailed discussion of the remedies themselves and their relationship with “other remedies”. ²⁸²⁴

Presumption of non-conformity on delivery

38-461

Following the requirement of art.5(3) of the 1999 Directive as regards the contracts of sale (including sale and installation) to which it applies, ²⁸²⁵ s.19(14) provides that:

“goods which do not conform to the contract at any time within the period of six months beginning with the day on which the goods were delivered to the consumer must be taken not to have conformed to it on that day.”

This rule does not apply if it is established that the goods did conform to the contract on that day or if its application is incompatible with the nature of the goods or with how they fail to conform to the contract. ²⁸²⁶ According to the Court of Justice of the EU in Faber v Autobedrijf Hazet Ochten BV, ²⁸²⁷ in order to benefit from the presumption, a consumer must first establish that a “lack of conformity” exists (though he or she need not establish its cause or that its origin is attributable to the seller ²⁸²⁸) and, secondly, that this lack of conformity became “physically apparent” within six months of delivery of the goods. ²⁸²⁹ Having done so, the consumer need not establish that the lack of conformity existed at the time of delivery, the short period of six months allowing an assumption that it already existed “in embryonic form” on delivery. ²⁸³⁰ On the other hand, the seller may provide evidence that the lack of conformity did not exist on delivery, by establishing that its “cause or origin ... is to be found in an act or omission which took place after that delivery”. ²⁸³¹ But if the seller fails to do so, the consumer buyer can rely on the rights derived from the 1999 Directive. ²⁸³²

The 2015 Act extends the benefit of this rebuttable presumption of nonconformity to all “goods contracts”, ²⁸³³ and not merely to contracts of sale of goods and for the supply of goods to be manufactured or produced (“sales contracts” under the 2015 Act s.5 ²⁸³⁴) as required by the 1999 Directive. ²⁸³⁵ However, the presumption of non-conformity in s.19 of the 2015 Act applies only for the purposes of the consumer’s right to repair or replacement and right to a price reduction or final right to reject and not, therefore, for the purposes of the consumer’s short-term right to reject. ²⁸³⁶ Moreover, the presumption applies only in respect of breaches of the statutory terms governing the quality, fitness for particular purpose and description of goods, goods matching a sample or model, ²⁸³⁷ for non-conformity arising from inadequate installation of the goods, ²⁸³⁸ arising from digital content that does not conform, ²⁸³⁹ or because of a breach of requirements that are stated in the contract. ²⁸⁴⁰ The presumption does not, therefore, apply to breach of the terms relating to the trader’s right to supply. ²⁸⁴¹

Goods to be of satisfactory quality

38-462

The 2015 Act divides the famous provision in s.14 of the Sale of Goods Act 1979 and equivalent provisions in the Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) Act 1973 and Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982, ²⁸⁴² into two parts: s.9(1) inserts into all “goods contracts” ²⁸⁴³ a statutory term that the goods are of satisfactory quality, whereas s.10 inserts a statutory term that the goods are fit for any particular purpose made known to the trader. ²⁸⁴⁴ The content of s.9 follows closely the wording of s.14(2) of the 1979 Act as amended by the 2002 Regulations, s.9(2)–(7) providing that:

“(2)

The quality of goods is satisfactory if they meet the standard that a reasonable person would consider satisfactory, taking account of—any description of the goods,

(a)

(b)

the price or other consideration for the goods (if relevant), and all the other relevant circumstances (see subsection (5)).

(c)

(3)

The quality of goods includes their state and condition; and the following aspects (among others) are in appropriate cases aspects of the quality of goods—

(a)

fitness for all the purposes for which goods of that kind are usually supplied;

(b) appearance and finish;

(c)

freedom from minor defects;

(d)

safety;

(e)

durability.

(4)

The term mentioned in subsection (1) does not cover anything which makes the quality of the goods unsatisfactory—which is specifically drawn to the consumer's attention before the contract is made, where the consumer examines the goods before the contract is made, which that examination ought to reveal, or in the case of a contract to supply goods by sample, which would have been apparent on a reasonable examination of the sample.

(a)

(b)

(c)

(5)

The relevant circumstances mentioned in subsection (2)(c) include any public statement about the specific characteristics of the goods made by the trader, the producer or any representative of the trader or the producer. ²⁸⁴⁵

(6)

That includes, in particular, any public statement made in advertising or labelling.

(7)

But a public statement is not a relevant circumstance for the purposes of subsection (2)(c) if the trader shows that—when the contract was made, the trader was not, and could not reasonably have been, aware of the statement, before the contract was made, the statement had been publicly withdrawn or, to the extent that it contained anything which was incorrect or misleading, it had been publicly corrected, or the consumer's decision to contract for the goods could not have been influenced by the statement."

(a)

(b)

(c)

Section 9 further provides that a term about the quality of the goods may be treated as included in a goods contract as a matter of custom. ²⁸⁴⁶ It is submitted that earlier case-law on the significance of the implied term in s.14(2) of the 1979 Act will remain helpful for the interpretation of s.9 of the 2015 Act, ²⁸⁴⁷ though the latter's consumer context will need to be borne in mind. Under s.19 of the Act, goods which do not conform to the term described in s.9 are not "conforming goods" and may attract (subject to their own conditions) the short-term right to reject, the right to repair or replacement and the right to a price reduction or the final right to reject, ²⁸⁴⁸ as well as any "other remedies" available under the general law. ²⁸⁴⁹ The 2015 Act provides that contract terms which seek to exclude or restrict liability in the trader arising under s.9 are not binding on the consumer. ²⁸⁵⁰

Goods to be fit for particular purpose

38-463

Section 10 of the 2015 Act inserts a statutory term into all "goods contracts" ²⁸⁵¹ based on s.14(3) of the 1979 Act and equivalent provisions in the 1973 and 1982 Acts, ²⁸⁵²

"if before the contract is made the consumer makes known to the trader (expressly or by implication) any particular purpose for which the consumer is contracting for the goods" ²⁸⁵³

“The contract is to be treated as including a term that the goods are reasonably fit for that purpose, whether or not that is a purpose for which goods of that kind are usually supplied.” ²⁸⁵⁴

However, this term is not to be “treated as included” if “the circumstances show that the consumer does not rely, or it is unreasonable for the consumer to rely, on the skill or judgment of the trader”. ²⁸⁵⁵ Section 10 further provides that a term about the fitness of the goods for a particular purpose may be treated as included in a goods contract as a matter of custom. ²⁸⁵⁶ Under s.19 of the Act, goods which do not conform to the term described in s.10 are not “conforming goods” and may attract (subject to their own conditions) the short-term right to reject, the right to repair or replacement and the right to a price reduction or the final right to reject, ²⁸⁵⁷ as well as any “other remedies” available under the general law. ²⁸⁵⁸ The 2015 Act provides that contract terms which seek to exclude or restrict liability in the trader arising under s.10 are not binding on the consumer. ²⁸⁵⁹

Goods to be as described

38-464

Section 11(1)–(3) of the 2015 Act follow closely the earlier legislative provision for implied term in the 1979 Act for sale by description (and the equivalent provisions in the 1973 Act and the 1982 Act), ²⁸⁶⁰ providing that contracts to supply goods ²⁸⁶¹ by description ²⁸⁶² “are to be treated as including a term that the goods will match the description”. ²⁸⁶³ However, the 2015 Act makes important new provision for this purpose by way of implementation of the Consumer Rights Directive 2011 and complementing its implementation by the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 (the “2013 Regulations”) ²⁸⁶⁴ to the effect that:

“(4)

Any information that is provided by the trader about the goods and is information mentioned in paragraph (a) of Schedule 1 or 2 to [the 2013 Regulations] (main characteristics of goods) is to be treated as included as a term of the contract.

(5)

A change to any of that information, made before entering into the contract or later, is not effective unless expressly agreed between the consumer and the trader.” ²⁸⁶⁵

The inclusion of this information in s.11 of the 2015 Act has the effect of attracting a broader range of remedies under the Act than is provided for breach of the terms derived from information supplied by the trader inserted by s.12 of the 2015 Act, which will be considered in the following paragraph, since breach of the statutory terms inserted by s.11 leads to the goods not “conforming” within the meaning of s.19(1) of the Act and thereby makes available (subject to their own conditions) the short-term right to reject, the right to repair or replacement and the right to a price reduction or the final right to reject, ²⁸⁶⁶ as well as any “other remedies” available under the general law. ²⁸⁶⁷ This is not the case as regards “other information” within the meaning of s.12 of the 2015 Act. The 2015 Act provides that contract terms which seek to exclude or restrict liability in the trader arising under s.11 are not binding on the consumer. ²⁸⁶⁸

Other pre-contractual information included in contract

38-465

Section 12 of the 2015 Act applies to all goods contracts ²⁸⁶⁹ and provides that where a trader was required to provide information under the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013, ²⁸⁷⁰ any of that information that was provided by the trader other than the information concerning the main characteristics of the contract ²⁸⁷¹ “is to be treated as included as a term of the contract”. ²⁸⁷² Section 12(3) provides that a change to any of that information, made before entering into the contract or later, is not effective unless expressly agreed between the consumer and the trader. ²⁸⁷³ As will be seen, the 2015 Act therefore distinguishes between information concerning the main characteristics of the contract (which becomes a statutory term under s.11) and other information (which becomes a statutory term under s.12). The significance of this treatment lies in the differences in remedies available for breach of the terms in the two sections. As has been seen, breach of a statutory term inserted by s.11 makes available (subject to their own conditions) the short-term right to reject, the right to repair or replacement and the right to a price reduction or the final right to reject, ²⁸⁷⁴ as well as any “other remedies” available under the general law. ²⁸⁷⁵ However, breach of any statutory term inserted by s.12 does not render the goods “non-conforming” within the meaning of s.19. ²⁸⁷⁶ Instead, s.19(5) provides that:

“If the trader is in breach of a term that section 12 requires to be treated as included in the contract, the consumer has the right to recover from the trader the amount of any costs incurred by the consumer as a result of the breach, up to the amount of the price paid or the value of other consideration given for the goods.”

This is clearly a very much more restricted remedy than the set of remedies available in respect of breach of the terms treated as included more generally ²⁸⁷⁷ as it is restricted to “the amount of any costs incurred by the consumer as a result of the breach”. The Explanatory Notes to the Act state that this remedy could be supplemented by a claim for damages under the general law where the consumer has incurred costs or losses above this amount, ²⁸⁷⁸ but if this is right, it is difficult to see what practical role the restriction in s.19(5) is intended to play. ²⁸⁷⁹ The 2015 Act provides that contract terms which seek to exclude or restrict liability in the trader arising under s.12 are not binding on the consumer. ²⁸⁸⁰

Goods to match sample

38-466

Section 13 of the 2015 Act applies to a “contract to supply goods by reference to a sample of the goods that is seen or examined by the consumer before the contract is made”, ²⁸⁸¹ and provides that such a contract is to be treated as including a term that:

“(a)

the goods will match the sample except to the extent that any differences between the sample and the goods are brought to the consumer’s attention before the contract is made, and the goods will be free from any defect that makes their quality unsatisfactory and that would not be apparent on a reasonable examination of the sample.” ²⁸⁸²

(b)

This statutory term differs from the term implied by s.15 of the 1979 (and the equivalent provisions in the 1973 and 1982 Acts ²⁸⁸³), in that, instead of referring to “the bulk” corresponding with the sample in quality, ²⁸⁸⁴ it instead provides more simply (and more appropriately for the consumer context) that the goods will match the sample except to the extent that any differences between the sample and the goods are brought to the consumer’s attention before the contract was made. ²⁸⁸⁵ Under s.19 of the Act, goods which do not conform to the term described in s.13 are not “conforming goods” and may attract (subject to their own conditions) the short-term right to reject, the right to repair or replacement and the right to a price reduction or the final right to reject, ²⁸⁸⁶ as well as any “other remedies” available under the general law. ²⁸⁸⁷

Goods to match a model seen or examined

38-467

Section 14 of the 2015 Act makes new provision governing contracts to supply goods ²⁸⁸⁸ “by reference to a model of the goods that is seen or examined by the consumer before entering into the contract”, ²⁸⁸⁹ providing that such a contract is to be treated as including:

“a term that the goods will match the model except to the extent that any differences between the model and the goods are brought to the consumer’s attention before the consumer enters into the contract.” ²⁸⁹⁰

No definition is given by the Act of “model” for this purpose, but the accompanying Explanatory Notes give as an example a case of a consumer viewing a television on the floor of a shop but receiving a boxed television from the stockroom; if the television received does not match the model seen, its seller would be liable for breach of the statutory term in s.14. ²⁸⁹¹ Under s.19 of the Act, goods which do not conform to the term described in s.14 are not “conforming goods” and may attract (subject to their own conditions) the short-term right to reject, the right to repair or replacement and the right to a price reduction or the final right to reject, ²⁸⁹² as well as any “other remedies” available under the general law. ²⁸⁹³ The 2015 Act provides that contract terms which seek to exclude or restrict liability in the trader arising under s.14 are not binding on the consumer. ²⁸⁹⁴

Installation as part of conformity of the goods

38-468

Section 15 of the 2015 Act makes special provision for this purpose, stating that:

“[g]oods do not conform to a contract to supply goods if—

- (a) installation of the goods forms part of the contract,
- (b) the goods are installed by the trader or under the trader’s responsibility, and (c) the goods are installed incorrectly.” ²⁸⁹⁵

This reflects a requirement to the same effect in the 1999 Directive. ²⁸⁹⁶ If the installation is carried out in the circumstances foreseen by s.15, the trader must see that the goods are installed correctly: a strict obligation, rather than an obligation to take reasonable care and skill. ²⁸⁹⁷ Under s.19 of the Act, goods which do not conform to the contract under s.15 are not “conforming goods” within the meaning of that section, ²⁸⁹⁸ but attract their own set of remedies (subject to their own conditions): the right to repair or replacement and the right to a price reduction or the final right to reject, ²⁸⁹⁹ as well as any “other remedies” available under the general law. ²⁹⁰⁰ This means that where goods do not conform to the contract owing to their incorrect installation, the consumer does not have the short-term right to reject. ²⁹⁰¹ The 2015 Act provides that contract terms which seek to exclude or restrict liability in the trader arising under s.15 are not binding on the consumer. ²⁹⁰²

Goods not conforming to contract if digital content does not conform

38-469

Part 1 of the 2015 Act defines “digital content” as “data which are produced and supplied in digital form” ²⁹⁰³ and distinguishes generally between “contracts for a trader to supply digital content to a consumer” (which are regulated specially by Pt 1 Ch.3 ²⁹⁰⁴) and contracts where the digital content is included within goods, which may be regulated by Pt 1 Ch.2 of the Act. ²⁹⁰⁵ This appears from s.16(1) of the Act which provides that:

“Goods (whether or not they conform otherwise to a contract to supply goods) do not conform to it if—the goods are an item that includes digital content, and

- (a)
- (b)
the digital content does not conform to the contract to supply that content (for which see section 42(1)).”

As a result, where digital content is included within goods (for example, a disk) and the digital content does not conform to the contract, ²⁹⁰⁶ then the goods themselves will not conform to the contract. Under s.19 of the Act, this means that the consumer may enjoy (subject to their own conditions) the short-term right to reject, the right to repair or replacement and the right to a price reduction or the final right to reject, ²⁹⁰⁷ as well as any “other remedies” available under the general law. ²⁹⁰⁸ This range of remedies includes the short-term and final right to reject which are not available under Ch.3 in respect of digital content supplied other than where included in goods. ²⁹⁰⁹ The 2015 Act provides that contract terms which seek to exclude or restrict liability in the trader arising under s.16 are not binding on the consumer. ²⁹¹⁰

No other terms about quality or fitness except express terms

38-470

As earlier noted, the 2015 Act has abandoned the traditional terminology of implied term in favour of a statutory formula according to which a relevant term is “treated as included” in the contract. However, the Act still finds it necessary to state that the statutory terms so included are not to be supplemented by other terms about quality or fitness, mirroring the earlier statutory formula as to implied terms. ²⁹¹¹ The result is s.18(1) according to which:

“Except as provided by sections 9, 10, 13 and 16, a contract to supply goods is not to be treated as including any term about the quality of the goods or their fitness for any particular purpose, unless the term is expressly included in the contract.” ²⁹¹²

There are two points to be noted here. First, s.18(1) refers only to some of the statutory terms contained in Pt 1 Ch.2 of the Act: it refers to the terms concerning satisfactory quality, fitness for purpose, goods matching a sample, and goods not conforming to contract if digital content does not conform to the contract, ²⁹¹³ but it does not refer to the statutory term as to goods being as described, relating to pre-contract information other than relating to the main characteristics of the goods, to goods matching a model seen or examined, nor to the trader's right to supply the goods etc. ²⁹¹⁴ As regards the terms which appear in the general legislation (such as the 1979 Act) as implied terms, this follows the earlier legislative pattern ²⁹¹⁵ and the exclusions more generally continue to make substantive sense. Secondly, however, s.18(1) refers to a term that is “expressly included in the contract” as to the quality or fitness for any particular purpose of the goods. Again, it must be right for the new statutory terms to be capable of being supplemented by express terms, but it is unfortunate that the key provision in s.19 governing the consumer's rights to enforce terms about goods does not refer to express terms about the goods, their satisfactory quality or fitness for purpose, but instead refers to “the goods conforming to requirements that are stated in the contract”. ²⁹¹⁶ It is submitted, however, that the latter expression is wide enough to include express terms as to the quality or fitness for any particular purpose of the goods within the meaning of s.18(1). The significance of this is that breach of a “requirement stated in the contract” gives rise only to a limited set of remedies, notably not including the short-term right to reject.

Rights for consumer in respect of goods failing to conform to requirements stated in the contract

38-471

Section 19(4) of the 2015 Act provides that where there is a breach of a requirement stated in the contract, ²⁹¹⁷ the consumer has the right to repair or replacement and the right to a price reduction or the final right to reject, ²⁹¹⁸ but not therefore the short-lived right to reject. ²⁹¹⁹ The consumer may also enjoy the “other remedies” available under the general law ²⁹²⁰ and, exceptionally, in the case of a breach of an express term ²⁹²¹ these “other remedies” include the right to treat the contract as at an end (i.e. to terminate the contract). ²⁹²² Under the general law, the consumer will have a right to terminate if the breach of the express term has the effect of depriving the consumer of the substance of what the consumer was contracting for or if the express term “goes to the root of the contract” and thus amounts to a condition. ²⁹²³

Trader to have right to supply the goods etc

38-472

Section 17 provides statutory terms governing the trader's right to supply the goods, reflecting here the diversity of types of contract included under the broad category of “goods contracts”. So, s.17 distinguishes between a “contract for the hire of goods” and other goods contracts, i.e. sales contracts, hire-purchase contracts and contracts for the transfer of goods, ²⁹²⁴ and then provides for cases where the parties to the contract intend that it should transfer a more limited title. ²⁹²⁵

Contracts for the hire of goods

38-473

Section 17(1) of the 2015 Act provides that a contract for the hire of goods is to be treated as including a term that:

“at the beginning of the period of hire the trader must have the right to transfer possession of the goods by way of hire for that period.” ²⁹²⁶

Section 17(3) provides a further statutory term:

“that the consumer will enjoy quiet possession of the goods for the period of the hire except so far as the possession may be disturbed by the owner or other person entitled to the benefit of any charge or encumbrance disclosed or known to the consumer before entering into the contract.”

These terms reflect closely the position under the 1982 Act, except that it does not use the language of bailment. ²⁹²⁷ Again following the 1982 Act s.17 provides that it does not affect the right of the trader to repossess the goods where the contract provides or is to be treated as providing for this. ²⁹²⁸ The 2015 Act makes special provision governing contract terms which seek to exclude or restrict liability in the trader arising under s.17 in respect of contracts for the hire of goods. ²⁹²⁹

Other “goods contracts”

38-474

In the case of other goods contracts, i.e. sales contracts, hire-purchase contracts and contracts for the transfer of goods, ²⁹³⁰ s.17(1) provides that the contract is to be treated as including a term:

“that the trader must have the right to sell or transfer the goods at the time when ownership of the goods is to be transferred.” ²⁹³¹

Section 17(2) provides for a further term to be treated as included that:

“(a)

the goods are free from any charge or encumbrance not disclosed or known to the consumer before entering into the contract,

(b)

the goods will remain free from any such charge or encumbrance until ownership of them is to be transferred, and the consumer will enjoy quiet possession of the goods except so far as it may be disturbed by the owner or other person entitled to the benefit of any charge or encumbrance so disclosed or known.”

(c)

These statutory terms follow closely the terms implied generally by the 1979 Act (and equivalent terms implied by the 1973 and 1982 Acts). ²⁹³² The 2015 Act provides that terms in these goods contracts which seek to exclude or restrict liability in the trader arising under s.17 are not binding on the consumer. ²⁹³³

Contracts where the parties intend that a more limited title should be Transferred

38-475

As regards all types of “goods contracts”, ²⁹³⁴ s.17 provides special treatment:

“if the contract shows, or the circumstances when they enter into the contract imply, that the trader and the consumer intend the trader to transfer only—

- (a) whatever title the trader has, even if it is limited, or
- (b)
whatever title a third person has, even if it is limited.” ²⁹³⁵

Where this is the case, the contract is to be treated as including a term that all charges or encumbrances known to the trader and not known to the consumer were disclosed to the consumer before entering into the contract and a term that the consumer’s quiet possession of the goods will not be disturbed by the trader, and will not be disturbed by a person claiming through or under the trader, unless that person is claiming under a charge or encumbrance that was disclosed or known to the consumer before entering into the contract. ²⁹³⁶ Where the parties intend that the trader should transfer only whatever title a third person has, even if it is limited, then the contract is also to be treated as including a term that the consumer’s quiet possession of the goods will not be disturbed by the third person, and will not be disturbed by a person claiming through or under the third person, unless the claim is under a charge or encumbrance that was disclosed or known to the consumer before entering into the contract. ²⁹³⁷ These provisions mirror (with some rewording) earlier provisions in the 1979 Act and the equivalent provisions in the 1973 and 1982 Acts. ²⁹³⁸

Rights arising from breach of terms in s.17

38-476

As earlier noted, s.19 of the 2015 Act does not deem goods supplied in breach of the terms included by s.17 to render the goods “non-conforming” for its purposes. ²⁹³⁹ Instead, s.19(6) provides that breach of the term included by s.17(1) on the trader’s right to supply gives rise to a right in the consumer to reject the goods, ²⁹⁴⁰ which may include a right of partial rejection. ²⁹⁴¹ Breach of such a term or of the terms treated as included by the remainder of s.17 ²⁹⁴² may give rise to “other remedies” under the general law (notably, damages), though these remedies do not include a right to reject the goods or to terminate the contract. ²⁹⁴³

^{2805.} 2015 Act ss.9–14, 17–18.

^{2806.} 2015 Act ss.15 and 16, below, paras 38-468—38-469.

^{2807.} See below, paras 38-477 et seq.

^{2808.} SI 2002/3045 above, paras 38-408 et seq.

- 2809. 1979 Act s.11 see below, para.44-056.
- 2810. e.g. 1979 Act s.48A(1)(b); 1999 Directive art.2 above, paras 38-477 et seq. The person dealing as consumer had the benefit of a presumption of non-conformity as explained above, para.38-412.
- 2811. e.g. 1979 Act s.48F, above, para.38-411. This special scheme therefore did not apply in respect of breach by the seller etc. of the implied condition as to title or right to possession in the 1973 Act s.8, the 1979 s.12 or the 1982 Act ss.2 and 7.
- 2812. 2015 Act s.19(1) referring to ss.22–24 of the same Act.
- 2813. 2015 Act s.19(1) (a)–(c).
- 2814. On which see above, paras 38-056 et seq. and especially at 38-100 and below, para.38-465. The special remedial consequence of breach of this statutory term is set by s.19(5) of the 2015 Act. Information provided by the trader concerning the main characteristics of the goods as required by the 2013 Regulations is inserted as a term of the contract under s.11 of the 2015 Act, which is included within the general scheme of s.19(1): below, para.38-464.
- 2815. The special remedial consequence of breach of this term is set by s.19(6) of the 2015 Act: below, paras 38-472—38-476. Confusingly, while s.19(1) does not include goods conforming to the terms in s.17 as “conforming goods” for its own purposes or for the purposes of ss.22–24, s.21(12) specifically includes goods conforming to the terms in s.17 as goods conforming to the contract for the purposes of s.21 which concerns the partial rejection of goods by the consumer. Moreover, s.19(2) provides that for the purposes of ss.19, and 22 to 24, a failure to conform as defined by subs.(1)(a) to (c) is not a failure to conform to the contract if it has its origin in materials supplied by the consumer. Finally, it is not entirely clear whether s.19’s reference to “the goods conforming to requirements that are stated in the contract” refers merely to express terms as ordinarily understood by English law, especially given that s.18(1) refers to the possibility of such an express term using this traditional expression: on which see below, para.38-470.
- 2816. The special remedial consequence of breach of these statutory terms are set by the 2015 Act by s.19(5) and 19(6) respectively: below, paras 38-467 and 38-476.
- 2817. i.e. inserted by 2015 Act ss.9, 10, 11, 13 and 14 (again omitting reference to s.12).
- 2818. 2015 Act s.19(3), referring to ss.20, 22–24 of the same Act.
- 2819. 2015 Act s.19(4) referring to ss.20, 23–24 of the same Act.
- 2820. i.e. under s.19(3)–(6) of the 2015 Act.
- 2821. 2015 Act s.19(7) referring to s.19(3) to (6): below, para.38-487.
- 2822. 2015 Act s.19(7) referring to s.19(3)(a) and (6) respectively: below, para.38-488.
- 2823. Below, para.38-489.
- 2824. Below, paras 38-477 et seq.
- 2825. 1999 Directive art.5(3), formerly implemented by the 2002 Regulations as noted above, para.38-412.
- 2826. 2015 Act s.19(15).
- 2827. C-497/13 of June 4, 2015 (“Faber (C-497/13)”).
- 2828. Faber (C-497/13) at para.70.

- 2829. Faber (C-497/13) at para.71.
- 2830. Faber (C-497/13) at para.72 quoting European Commission, Explanatory Memorandum to the proposal for a European Parliament and Council Directive on the sale of consumer goods and associated guarantees, COM(95) 520 final, p.12.
- 2831. Faber (C-497/13) at para.73.
- 2832. Faber (C-497/13) at para.74.
- 2833. As defined by s.3(1), above, paras 38-451—38-457, following the general scheme of Ch.2 of Pt 1 as reflected in s.19.
- 2834. 2015 Act s.5 on which see above, paras 38-452—38-453.
- 2835. 1999 Directive art.1(1) and (4).
- 2836. 2015 Act s.19(14) referring to s.19(3)(b) and (c) and (4) (and so not including s.19(3)(a)'s provision on the short-term right to reject.
- 2837. 2015 Act s.19(14) referring to s.3(b) and (c) and (4), which themselves refer to ss.9, 10, 11, 13, and 14.
- 2838. 2015 Act s.19(14) referring to 19(4) which itself refers to s.15.
- 2839. 2015 Act s.19(14) referring to 19(3) which itself refers to s.16.
- 2840. 2015 Act s.19(14) referring to s.19(4) which itself refers to breach of requirements that are stated in the contract.
- 2841. 2015 Act s.19(14) refers to s.19(3)(b) and (c) and (4), none of which relate to breach of the terms in s.17. Breach of the terms included by s.12 are also omitted, but they do not give rise to the rights mentioned by s.19(3) and (4): s.19(5).
- 2842. i.e. 1973 Act s.10 and the 1982 Act s.4 and 9.
- 2843. On which see above, para.38-451.
- 2844. Below, para.38-463.
- 2845. 2015 Act s.59(1) defines “producer in relation to goods or digital content” as the manufacturer, the importer into the European Economic Area, or any person who purports to be a producer by placing the person's name, trade mark or other distinctive sign on the goods or using it in connection with the digital content”, a definition deriving from the 1999 Directive art.1(2)(d).
- 2846. 2015 Act s.9(8). cf. below, para.44-094.
- 2847. On which see below, paras 44-095 et seq.
- 2848. 2015 Act s.19(1)(a) and s.19(3) referring to ss.20 and 22 (short-term right to reject, on which see below, paras 38-478—38-481); s.23 (right to repair or replacement, on which see below, para.38-482) and s.24 (the right to a price reduction or the final right to reject, on which see below, paras 38-483—38-484).
- 2849. 2015 Act s.19(9), as explained and restricted by s.19(10)–(13), below, para.38-486.
- 2850. 2015 Act s.31(1)(a) and see below, para.38-492.
- 2851. On which see above, para.38-451.

- 2852. i.e. 1973 Act s.10 and the 1982 Act s.4 and 9.
- 2853. 2015 Act s.10(1). Section 10(2) (qualified by s.10(4)) provides that the statutory term also applies to a contract to supply goods if “(a) the goods were previously sold by a credit-broker to the trader, (b) in the case of a sales contract or contract for transfer of goods, the consideration or part of it is a sum payable by instalments, and (c) before the contract is made, the consumer makes known to the credit-broker (expressly or by implication) any particular purpose for which the consumer is contracting for the goods” and see the definitions of “credit-broker” and “credit-brokerage” in s.59(1) of the 2015 Act. As explained below in relation to the equivalent provision in the 1979 Act s.14, this intends to include instalment credit transactions where the supplier of the goods, e.g. a retailer, sells the goods to a finance company which then sells them to the buyer on credit terms, the effect of the provision being to make the actual seller subject to the statutory term: see below, para.44-106.
- 2854. 2015 Act s.10(3).
- 2855. 2015 Act s.10(4).
- 2856. 2015 Act s.10(5). cf. below, para.44-094.
- 2857. 2015 Act s.19(1)(a) and s.19(3) referring to ss.20 and 21 (short-term right to reject, on which see below, paras 38-478—38-481); s.23 (right to repair or replacement, on which see below, para.38-482) and s.24 (the right to a price reduction or the final right to reject, on which see below, paras 38-483—38-484).
- 2858. 2015 Act s.19(9), as explained and restricted by s.19(10)–(13), below, para.38-486.
- 2859. 2015 Act s.31(1)(b) and see below, para.38-492.
- 2860. 1973 Act s.9; 1979 Act s.13; 1982 Act s.3 and 8.
- 2861. i.e. all “goods contracts”, on which see above, para.38-451.
- 2862. s.11 retains the technical expression the supply of goods “by description” for the purposes of the statutory term which it treats as included in goods contracts. As explained below in relation to s.13 of the 1979 Act, sale by description may be used in relation to two situations: where the buyer contracts in reliance on the description of the goods in contracts without having seen them and, secondly, where the buyer has seen the goods, but the stated characteristics of the goods are still intended to form part of the description by which they are sold: below, paras 44-086—44-087. This means that not all descriptions used by a seller in relation to goods will be relevant to “sale by description” under s.13 of the 1979 Act and, given the use of “by description” in s.11(1)–(3), it is submitted that the interpretation given to s.13 of the 1979 Act will be equally applicable to s.11 of the 2015 Act. cf. s.36 of the 2015 Act which sets out a statutory term that digital content will match any description without using the terminology of contracting “by description”: below, para.38-508.
- 2863. 2015 Act s.11(1). Section 11(2)–(3) provide that “if the supply is by sample as well as by description, it is not sufficient that the bulk of the goods matches the sample if the goods do not also match the description” and “a supply of goods is not prevented from being a supply by description just because (a) the goods are exposed for supply, and (b) they are selected by the consumer”: for discussion of the equivalent provisions in the 1979 Act s.13 see below, paras 44-088—44-092.
- 2864. SI 2013/3134. The 2011 Directive art.6(1)(a) and (5) (as regards off-premises and distance contracts). The 2011 Directive does not require that information provided by the trader in respect of other contracts (governed by art.4 and termed “on-premises contracts” by the 2013 Regulations) should “form an integral part” of the contract, but the 2013 Regulations reg.9(3) (and see above, para.38-100) and the 2015 Act (as is explained in the text) do so require. It is to be noted, though that the scope of the 2013 Regulations is restricted in a number of important ways: see above, paras 38-071—38-072, 38-091.

- 2865. 2015 Act s.11(4)–(5). In contrast to the general position, for the purposes of s.11(4)–(5), goods contracts include contracts where the goods are second-hand goods and are sold at public auction: 2015 Act s.11(6) referring to s.2(5) and (6) on which see above, para.38-453.
- 2866. 2015 Act s.19(3) and see below, paras 38-478—38-481, 38-482 and 38-483—38-484.
- 2867. 2015 Act s.19(9), as explained and restricted by s.19(10)–(13), below, para.38-486.
- 2868. 2015 Act s.31(1)(c) and see below, para.38-492.
- 2869. On which see above, para.38-451.
- 2870. SI 2013/3134 reg.9 (on-premises contracts), reg.10 (off-premises contracts) and reg.13 (distance contracts). As earlier noted, while the 2011 Directive art.6(1)(a) and (5) requires information provided before the conclusion of off-premises and distance contracts to form part of the contract, it does not make the same requirement as regards information provided by the trader in respect of other contracts (governed by art.5 and termed “on-premises contracts” by the 2013 Regulations) but the 2013 Regulations reg.9 (and see above, para.38-100) and the 2015 Act (as is explained in the text) do so require.
- 2871. Any information which concerns the main characteristics of the goods is to be treated as a term of the contract under 2015 Act s.11(4), as noted above, para.38-464.
- 2872. 2015 Act s.12(1) and (2). See the identical provision in 2013 Regulations reg.9(3) (on-premises contracts), reg.10(5) (off-premises contracts), and reg.13(6) (distance contracts) (as regards the latter two reflecting the 2011 Directive art.6(5)).
- 2873. See the identical provision in 2013 Regulations reg.9(4) (on-premises contracts), reg.10(6) (off-premises contracts) and reg.13(7) (distance contracts) (as regards the latter two reflecting the 2011 Directive art.6(5)).
- 2874. 2015 Act s.19(3).
- 2875. 2015 Act s.19(9), as explained and restricted by s.19(10)–(13), below, para.38-486.
- 2876. This follows from the terms of s.19(1)(a) and s.19(3) which do not include s.12 in their lists of relevant terms.
- 2877. i.e. under 2015 Act ss.9-11, 13 and 14 and in respect of non-conformity under s.16.
- 2878. 2015 Act s.19(9)(a), (10) and 11(a); Explanatory Notes 2015 para.89. A consumer could not, however, rely on the general law so as to terminate the contract for breach of any terms inserted by s.12: 2015 Act s.19(12)–(13). The Explanatory Notes 2015 para.89 explain in relation to the recovery of costs that where there is other consideration given instead of a price, the cap on the recoverable costs would be the value of that consideration.
- 2879. On the other hand, if the Explanatory Notes are wrong and the consumer’s claim for compensation for breach (including by way of damages) is restricted as s.19(5) suggests, there would be a question whether the Act properly implements the Consumer Rights Directive 2011 art.6(5), on which see above, para.38-100.
- 2880. 2015 Act s.31(1)(d) and see below, para.38-492.
- 2881. 2015 Act s.13(1). On “contracts to supply goods” generally, see above, para.38-451. The formulation of the type of contract to which s.13 applies follows the wording of the 1973 Act s.11 and the 1982 Act ss.5 and 10 (contracting “by reference to a sample”) rather than the 1979 Act s.15 (“where there is an express or implied term” to the effect the contract for sale is by sample, on which see below, para.44-113), but it is submitted that there is no substantive difference in this respect.

- 2882. 2015 Act s.13(2).
- 2883. 1973 Act s.11; 1982 Act ss.5 and 10.
- 2884. 1979 Act s.15(2)(a) and see below, para.44-114. See similarly 1973 Act s.11(1)(a) and(b); 1982 Act ss.5(2)(a) and (b) and 10(a) and (b).
- 2885. 2015 Act s.13(2)(a).
- 2886. 2015 Act s.19(1)(a) and s.19(3) referring to ss.20 and 22 (short-term right to reject, on which see below, paras 38-478—38-481); s.23 (right to repair or replacement, on which see below, para.38-482) and s.24 (the right to a price reduction or the final right to reject, on which see below, paras 38-483—38-484).
- 2887. 2015 Act s.19(9), as explained and restricted by s.19(10)-(13), below, para.38-486.
- 2888. On which see above, para.38-451.
- 2889. 2015 Act s.14(1).
- 2890. 2015 Act s.14(2).
- 2891. Explanatory Notes 2015 para.77.
- 2892. 2015 Act s.19(1)(a) and s.19(3) referring to ss.20 and 22 (short-term right to reject, on which see below, paras 38-478—38-481); s.23 (right to repair or replacement, on which see below, para.38-482) and s.24 (the right to a price reduction or the final right to reject, on which see below, paras 38-483—38-484).
- 2893. 2015 Act s.19(9), as explained and restricted by s.19(10)-(13), below, para.38-486.
- 2894. 2015 Act s.31(1)(f) and see below, para.38-492.
- 2895. 2015 Act s.15(1).
- 2896. 1999 Directive art.2(5), earlier implemented in UK law by the 1982 Act s.11S(1). Article 2(5) of the Directive also provides that any lack of conformity from incorrect installation is to be deemed equivalent to lack of conformity of the goods where the product is intended to be installed by the consumer, is installed by the consumer and the incorrect installation is due to a shortcoming in the installation instructions. Under the 2015 Act, this result follows from the application of ss.9-11 as the goods accompanied by inadequate installation instructions would not themselves be of satisfactory quality etc. (on which see above, paras 38-463—38-464) rather than requiring any dedicated provision.
- 2897. cf. 1982 Act s.13 and 2015 Act s.49 on which see below, para.38-531.
- 2898. 2015 Act s.19(1)(b).
- 2899. 2015 Act s.19(4) referring to s.23 (right to repair or replacement, on which see below, para.38-482) and ss.20 and 24 (the right to a price reduction or the final right to reject, on which see below, paras 38-483—38-484).
- 2900. 2015 Act s.19(9)(b), as explained and restricted by s.19(10)-(13), below, para.38-486.
- 2901. This right is explained by 2015 Act s.22. This restricted range of remedies in respect of incorrect installation is compatible with the 1999 Directive, which does not require a remedy such as the short-term right to reject.
- 2902. 2015 Act s.31(1)(g) and see below, para.38-492.

- 2903. 2015 Act s.2(9).
- 2904. Below, paras 38-496 et seq. The 2015 Act s.33(4) further specifies that “[a] trader does not supply digital content to a consumer for the purposes of this Part merely because the trader supplies a service by which digital content reaches the consumer”.
- 2905. cf. s.42(3) which refers to s.16 as applying “if an item including digital content is supplied”.
- 2906. For this purpose s.42(1) of the 2015 Act provides that digital content does not conform to the contract where it does not conform to the statutory terms imposed by s.34 (satisfactory quality), s.35 (fitness for particular purpose) and s.36 (description), on which see below, paras 38-506, 38-507 and 38-508 respectively.
- 2907. 2015 Act s.19(1)(b) and s.19(3) referring to ss.20 and 22 (short-term right to reject, on which see below, paras 38-478—38-481); s.23 (right to repair or replacement, on which see below, para.38-482) and s.24 (the right to a price reduction or the final right to reject, on which see below, paras 38-483—38-484).
- 2908. 2015 Act s.19(9)(b), as explained and restricted by s.19(10)-(13), below, para.38-486.
- 2909. On which see 2015 Act s.42(2).
- 2910. 2015 Act s.31(1)(h) and see below, para.38-492.
- 2911. e.g. 1979 Act s.14(1).
- 2912. 2015 Act s.18(2) notes that s.18(1) is subject to provision made by any enactment (whenever passed or made); “enactment” is defined by s.59(1).
- 2913. Above, paras 38-462, 38-463, 38-466 and 38-469 respectively.
- 2914. 2015 Act ss.11, 12, 14 and 17 respectively.
- 2915. e.g. 1979 Act s.12 (implied terms about title etc) and s.13 (sale by description)
- 2916. 2015 Act s.19(1)(c) defining “goods conforming to a contract” for the purposes of ss.19, 22 to 24; s.19(4).
- 2917. On which see above, para.38-470.
- 2918. 2015 Act ss.20, 23 and 24 on which see below, paras 38-478—38-480 and 38-482—38-484.
- 2919. 2015 Act s.22 below, para.38-481.
- 2920. 2015 Act s.19(9)(c).
- 2921. See above, para.38-470.
- 2922. 2015 Act s.19(10)-(13) and especially (11)(e).
- 2923. See Vol.I, paras 24-035 et seq.
- 2924. On these categories, see above, paras 38-452—38-457.
- 2925. 2015 Act s.17(4)-(7).
- 2926. 2015 Act s.17(1)(a).
- 2927. 1982 Act s.7(1) and (2).

- 2928. 2015 Act s.17(8) reflecting the 1982 Act s.7(3).
- 2929. 2015 Act s.31(5) and (6) and see below, para.38-492.
- 2930. On these categories, see above, paras 38-452—38-454, 38-456—38-457.
- 2931. 2015 Act s.17(1)(b). “Ownership” is defined by s.4(1), as noted at para.38-443, n.2550.
- 2932. 1979 Act s.12(1) and (2); 1973 Act s.8(1); 1982 Act s.2(1) and (2). For discussion of s.12 of the 1979 Act see below, paras 44-075 et seq.
- 2933. 2015 Act s.31(1)(i) and see below, para.38-492. The position as regards hire of goods is governed by s.31(5) and (6) as explained below, para.38-492.
- 2934. On which see 2015 Act s.3(2), above, para.38-451.
- 2935. 2015 Act s.17(4).
- 2936. 2015 Act s.17(5) and (6).
- 2937. 2015 Act s.17(7) referring to s.17(4)(b).
- 2938. 1979 Act s.12(3)-(5); 1973 Act s.8(2) and 1982 Act s.2(3)-(5). For discussion of these aspects of the 1979 Act see below, para.44-084. Section 17 does not affect the protection for private purchasers of motor vehicles under the Hire-Purchase Act 1964 s.27 (which concerns purchases from a seller who has vehicle under hire-purchase agreement or conditional sale agreement and does not yet own the vehicle) and the private purchaser in good faith and without notice of those agreements and deems the transfer of the vehicle to take effect as if the seller’s title had been vested: Explanatory Notes 2015 para.83.
- 2939. This follows from the terms of s.19(1): see above, para.38-459. There is an exception as regards the partial rejection of non-conforming goods under s.21: 2015 Act s.21(12). This is also the case as regards the application of the broad scheme of consumer remedies in s.19(3) of the 2015 Act.
- 2940. 2015 Act s.19(6), referring to s.20. Section 20(3) provides that the right to reject under s.19(6) is not limited by ss.22 and 24 which has the effects in particular that the right to reject on this ground is not constrained by the time-limits set by s.22 nor is any refund affected by any deduction for use under s.24.
- 2941. 2015 Act s.21, s.12 of which specifically includes within goods conforming to the terms in s.17 to goods conforming to the contract for its own purposes. On s.20 and 22 generally, see below, paras 38-478—38-480.
- 2942. i.e. 2015 Act s.17(2) (above, para.38-474), s.17(3) (above, para.38-473) and s.17(5)-(7) (above, para.38-475).
- 2943. 2015 Act s.19(9)(a) (which refers generally to breach of a term that Ch.2 requires to be treated as included in the contract), (10)-(13). On these general remedies, see below, para.38-486.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 7. - Contracts for the Supply of Goods, Digital Content or Services

(c) - The New Law: Consumer Rights in Respect of Goods Contracts, Digital Content Contracts and Services Contracts

(ii) - "Goods Contracts"

(cc) - The Scheme of Remedies for the Consumer

Introduction

38-477

As earlier noted, the 2015 Act makes elaborate provision as regards the different circumstances which give rise to the remedies (often termed "rights" by the Act) which the Act provides for the consumer. This availability has been noted in respect of each of the statutory terms, special provisions as to non-conformity of the goods and breach of requirements stated in the contract. ²⁹⁴⁴ The following paragraphs will therefore consider the new remedies themselves, termed "rights to enforce terms about goods". These include the short-term right to reject; the right to repair or replacement, and the right to a price reduction or the final right to reject. The relationship between these special rights and other remedies under the general law will be explained. ²⁹⁴⁵

The right to reject: general provisions

38-478

⚠ Section 20 of the 2015 Act makes general provision concerning the two rights to reject, which is then supplemented by more particular treatment of the circumstances in which a consumer may reject some but not all of the goods, ²⁹⁴⁶ and special provisions governing the time limit for the short-term right to reject and the final right to reject. ²⁹⁴⁷ Each of the short-term right to reject and the final right to reject entitles the consumer to "reject the goods and treat the contract as at an end", subject to special rules governing severable contracts. ²⁹⁴⁸ The right to reject is exercised "if the consumer indicates to the trader that the consumer is rejecting the goods and treating the contract as at an end" whether by way of something said or done as long as it is in a way which is clear enough to be understood by the trader. ²⁹⁴⁹ This formulation adopts a terminology of the consumer treating the contract as at an end, rather than, for example, terminating or rescinding the contract ²⁹⁵⁰ ⚠ and it assimilates this to rejection of the goods. ²⁹⁵¹ Of more practical significance are the general provisions governing the effects of rejection. Here, the 2015 Act provides that in principle the trader has a duty to give the consumer a refund and the consumer has a duty to return or make the goods available for collection by the trader or (if there is an agreement for the consumer to return rejected goods) to return them as agreed. ²⁹⁵²

Trader's duty to refund

38-479

On rejection of the goods by the consumer, the trader has a duty to refund any money paid under the contract. ²⁹⁵³ In the case of a contract for the hire of goods, the consumer's entitlement to a refund extends only to anything paid for a period of hire that the consumer does not get because the contract is treated as at an end ²⁹⁵⁴ and a similar rule applies to hire-purchase agreements and conditional sales contracts, even though the payments so made may exceed the value of having the goods. ²⁹⁵⁵ The trader must give any refund without undue delay, and in any event within 14 days beginning with the day on which the trader agrees that the consumer is entitled to a refund and using the same means of payment as the consumer used, unless the consumer expressly agrees otherwise ²⁹⁵⁶; the trader must not impose any fee on the consumer in respect of the refund. ²⁹⁵⁷ Where a consumer is not entitled to receive a refund (whether as a result of not having paid any money or otherwise ²⁹⁵⁸), he or she may be entitled to claim damages. ²⁹⁵⁹

Partial rejection of goods

38-480

The 2015 Act makes detailed provision modelled on the general pattern in s.20 outlined above so as to allow a consumer to reject some but not all of the goods, where the goods so rejected do not conform to the contract. ²⁹⁶⁰

Time limit for short-term right to reject

38-481

The consumer's right to repair or replacement and right to a price reduction or final right to reject reflect closely the scheme of rights for consumers required by the 1999 Directive (and first brought into English law by the 2002 Regulations ²⁹⁶¹), but these rights are not always more attractive to consumers than the classic right to reject goods for breach of condition under the 1979 Act, though this classic right may be lost by "acceptance" of the goods, which may take place by lapse of time. ²⁹⁶² It was for this reason that implementation of the 1999 Directive by the 2002 Regulations did not in principle preclude consumers from relying on this classic right unless they had required the trader to repair or replace the goods. ²⁹⁶³ The strategy of the 2015 Act is instead to provide a special "short-term right to reject" for consumers instead of the classic right ²⁹⁶⁴ but in addition to the Directive's four-fold scheme of rights. The circumstances in which this right to reject arises and the manner and consequences of its exercise are determined under the general provisions contained in s.20 of the Act, ²⁹⁶⁵ but s.22 makes particular provision as to its shortlived character. Section 22(1) provides that:

"A consumer who has the short-term right to reject loses it if the time limit for exercising it passes without the consumer exercising it, unless the trader and the consumer agree that it may be exercised later." ²⁹⁶⁶

In principle, the time-limit for exercising the short-term right to reject is the end of 30 days beginning with the first day after ownership or (in the case of a contract for the hire of goods, a hire-purchase agreement or a conditional sales contract ²⁹⁶⁷) possession of the goods has been transferred to the consumer and the goods have been delivered. ²⁹⁶⁸ However, where the consumer requests or agrees to the repair or replacement of goods, the period set by the time limit stops running from the date of that request or agreement until the date that the consumer receives the goods in response to them. ²⁹⁶⁹ And where goods supplied by the trader in response to such a request or agreement do not conform to the contract, the consumer has a further seven days after receipt of those goods or, if longer, any unexpired time set under the original time limit extended by the time between his request or agreement and receipt of those goods. ²⁹⁷⁰

Right to repair or replacement

38-482

These rights reflect the first level of remedies required by the 1999 Directive and formerly implemented in UK law by the 2002 Regulations.²⁹⁷¹ Section 23 provides that where the consumer requires the trader to repair or replace the goods,²⁹⁷² the trader must do so “within a reasonable time and without significant inconvenience to the consumer” and must bear any necessary costs incurred in doing so (including in particular the cost of any labour, materials or postage).²⁹⁷³ However, s.23(3) and (4) provide that:

“(3)

The consumer cannot require the trader to repair or replace the goods if that remedy (the repair or the replacement)—

(a)

is impossible, or

(b)

is disproportionate compared to the other of those remedies.

(4)

Either of those remedies is disproportionate compared to the other if it imposes costs on the trader which, compared to those imposed by the other, are unreasonable, taking into account—the value which the goods would have if they conformed to the contract,

(a)

(b)

the significance of the lack of conformity, and

(c)

whether the other remedy could be effected without significant inconvenience to the consumer.”

For this purpose, a reasonable time or significant inconvenience is to be determined taking account of the nature of the goods and the purpose for which the goods were acquired.²⁹⁷⁴ This generally follows the position under the 2002 Regulations, except that under s.23 of the Act the seller cannot refuse to repair or replace the goods on the ground that this would be disproportionate in comparison with an appropriate price reduction or rescission.²⁹⁷⁵ Also in keeping with the position adopted by the UK legislature under the 2002 Regulations (though not foreseen by the 1999 Directive)²⁹⁷⁶ a consumer who requires or agrees to the repair of goods or, as the case may be, the replacement of the goods cannot require the trader to provide the other of those two remedies nor exercise the short-term right to reject, without giving the trader a reasonable time to repair or, as the case may be, replace them, unless giving the trader that time would cause significant inconvenience to the consumer. ²⁹⁷⁷ For this purpose, the Act clarifies that “repair” in relation to goods that do not conform to a contract, means making them conform”. ²⁹⁷⁸

Right to price reduction or final right to reject

38-483

These rights reflect the second level of remedies required by the 1999 Directive and formerly implemented in UK law by the 2002 Regulations. ²⁹⁷⁹ Under the right to a price reduction, the consumer may require the trader to reduce or extinguish ²⁹⁸⁰ the price ²⁹⁸¹ which the consumer is required to pay under the contract, and/or to receive a refund from the trader for anything already paid by the consumer above the reduced amount. ²⁹⁸² However, s.24(5) of the Act provides that:

“A consumer who has the right to a price reduction and the final right to reject may only exercise one (not both), and may only do so in one of these situations—

- (a)
after one repair or one replacement, the goods do not conform to the contract;
- (b)
because of section 23(3) the consumer can require neither repair nor replacement of the goods; or
- (c)
the consumer has required the trader to repair or replace the goods, but the trader is in breach of the requirement of section 23(2)(a) to do so within a reasonable time and without significant inconvenience to the consumer.” ²⁹⁸³

For the purposes of subs.(5)(a) there has been a repair or replacement if the consumer has requested or agreed to repair or replacement of the goods (whether in relation to one fault or more than one), and the trader has delivered goods to the consumer, or made goods available ²⁹⁸⁴ to the consumer, in response to the request or agreement. ²⁹⁸⁵

Final right to reject and deduction for use

38-484

Unlike the short-lived right to reject (where no deduction for use can be made by the trader), if the consumer exercises the final right to reject, in principle any refund to the consumer may be reduced by a deduction for use, taking into account of the use the consumer has had of the goods in the period since they were delivered. ²⁹⁸⁶ However, the trader may make no deduction to take account of use in any period when the consumer had the goods only because the trader failed to collect them at an agreed time or if the final right to reject is exercised in the first six months after the goods were delivered and ownership or (depending on the nature of the contract) possession was transferred to the consumer. ²⁹⁸⁷

Limitation of actions

38-484A

! Article 5(1) of the Consumer Sales Directive 1999 provides that:

“The seller shall be held liable under Article 3 where the lack of conformity becomes apparent within two years as from delivery of the goods. If, under national legislation, the rights laid down in Article 3(2) are subject to a limitation period, that period shall not expire within a period of two years from the time of delivery.”

! In Ferenschild ²⁹⁸⁸ ! the Court of Justice of the EU held that art.5(1) distinguishes between two types of time-limits: the first governing the period of liability of the seller where non-conformity of the goods becomes apparent and which is set in principle as two years from the time of delivery of the goods ²⁹⁸⁹ !; the second governing the “period of time during which the consumer can actually exercise the rights that arose in the period of liability of the seller, with regard to the latter”. ²⁹⁹⁰ ! Under the Directive, Member States may choose whether or not to impose a time-limit of the second type ²⁹⁹¹ ! and the UK in its implementation of the 1999 Directive did not choose to do so. As regards the period of liability of the seller, following the position under the 1979 Act, ²⁹⁹² ! the 2015 Act has not retained the relatively short period for liability in the seller and instead generally allows consumers to bring their claims under the 2015 Act within the general limitation period of six years provided by the Limitation Act 1980. ²⁹⁹³ ! While an exception to this pattern is of course found in the “short-term right to reject” which has a time-limit of 30 days, ²⁹⁹⁴ ! this rule is compatible with the 1999 Directive as the short-term right to reject is not required by the Directive but is additional to (and therefore more protective than) the Directive’s own scheme of consumer rights, as permitted by its minimum harmonisation character. ²⁹⁹⁵ !

Discretion as to appropriate remedy

38-485

! The 2015 Act s.58 provides that in any proceedings in which one of the special remedies provided for consumers by Ch.2 ²⁹⁹⁶ is sought, the court enjoys additional two powers. ²⁹⁹⁷ First, on the application of the consumer, the court may make an order requiring specific performance by the trader of any obligation imposed on the trader in respect of repair or replacement of the goods. ²⁹⁹⁸ Secondly, where a consumer claims the right to repair or replacement or the right to a price reduction or the final right to reject (termed the “relevant remedies” by s.58), but the court decides that the provisions governing these rights “have the effect that exercise of another of these rights is appropriate”, “the court may proceed as if the consumer had exercised that other right”. ²⁹⁹⁹ The court may make an order under s.58 unconditionally or on such terms and conditions as to damages, payment of the price and otherwise as it thinks just. ³⁰⁰⁰ It is submitted, though, that in the case of contracts for the sale of goods (“sales contracts”), the consumer’s right to repair or replacement of goods in the Act reflects requirements of the Consumer Sales Directive 1999 and so the provisions of the Act relating to them must be interpreted with this in mind and in the light of the principle of effectiveness, here, of the consumer’s protection. ³⁰⁰¹ ! For this purpose, in Weber and Putz the Court of Justice of the EU assumed that the consumer’s specific rights under the Directive were enforceable in kind against the seller, holding that national law must not allow replacement to be refused by a trader on the ground of disproportionality with regard to the value of the goods as conforming and the significance of the non-conformity, even though in the circumstances this meant that the trader had to bear the costs of the removal of goods installed by the consumer and the reinstallation of the replacement goods. ³⁰⁰²  This suggests that an English court should not refuse specific performance in support of the consumer's right to repair or replacement of goods sold on the ground that damages would be an adequate remedy, as this would to this extent replace the consumer's "European rights" with damages and so render them ineffective and that the court should not take into account other traditional elements governing the availability of specific performance stemming from its equitable nature on the basis that the Directive itself provides only two circumstances (impossibility and disproportionality compared to the other specific remedy) where the trader is entitled to refuse to repair or replace. ³⁰⁰³  It also suggests that, in the case of "sales contracts", the court's powers to substitute another "appropriate right" under s.58 is incompatible with the 1999 Directive. Finally, on their terms, the court's powers under s.58 do not extend to the "other remedies" for consumers as this is understood by the Act and as explained in the following paragraph.

Other remedies for the consumer

38-486

The 2015 Act acknowledges that, in principle, its provision of special rights for consumers under Ch.2 does not prevent them seeking other remedies in respect of breach of the terms that it treats as included in the contract, on the special grounds on which goods do not conform to the contract under ss.15 and 16, or for breach of a requirement stated in the contract. ³⁰⁰⁴ In respect of all three of these sets of cases, and depending on the circumstances, these other remedies may include damages, seeking specific performance or relying on the breach against a claim by the trader for the price ³⁰⁰⁵, the conditions and characteristics of these remedies are found in the law applicable to contracts generally. ³⁰⁰⁶ A consumer may exercise a right to treat the contract as at an end (which the Act explains as meaning "treating it as repudiated" ³⁰⁰⁷ and which is often termed rescission or termination for breach of contract) under the general law only for breach of an express term ³⁰⁰⁸; a consumer may treat the contract as at an end on the ground of breach of Ch.2's statutory terms or on the special grounds of the conformity of the goods in ss.15 and 16 only under the rights to reject which the Act itself creates. ³⁰⁰⁹ The Act provides that a consumer may exercise a remedy other than the remedies which itself creates (though not so as to recover twice for the same loss), instead of such a special remedy, or where no such special remedy is provided. ³⁰¹⁰ Moreover, the 2015 Act does not prevent a consumer from claiming a remedy on grounds other than breach of the statutory terms or special grounds of non-conformity. So, for example, a consumer who has suffered personal injury or damage to property caused by a defect in a product (the goods) may be able to recover damages in tort under the statutory product liability provisions contained in Pt 1 of the Consumer Protection Act 1987. ³⁰¹¹

Delivery of wrong quantity

38-487

The 2015 Act s.25 makes provision for the case where the trader delivers under a "goods contract" ³⁰¹² a quantity of goods to the consumer less than or more than the trader contracted to supply, in a way which is very closely based on the law provided for contracts of sale of goods under s.30 of the 1979 Act. ³⁰¹³ Section 25 provides that where the trader delivers to the consumer a quantity of goods less than the trader contracted to supply, the consumer may reject them, but if the consumer accepts them, the consumer must pay for them at the contract rate. ³⁰¹⁴ Conversely, where the trader delivers to the consumer a quantity of goods larger than the trader contracted to supply, the consumer may accept the goods included in the contract and reject the rest, or may reject all of the goods; but if the consumer accepts all of the goods delivered, the consumer must pay for them at the contract rate. ³⁰¹⁵ Where a consumer is entitled to reject goods under s.25, then any further entitlement to treat the contract as at an end depends on the terms of the contract and the circumstances of the case. ³⁰¹⁶ Section 25 of the 2015 Act does not restrict the consumer's right of rejection where the shortfall or the excess is so slight that it would be unreasonable to do so, as did s.30 of the 1979 Act where the buyer did not deal as consumer before its amendment by the 2015 Act. ³⁰¹⁷ While at common law the right to reject is subject to the principle de minimis non curat lex so that a trifling departure from the exact quantity stipulated does not entitle the buyer to reject the goods, ³⁰¹⁸ it is submitted that this restriction should not be read into s.25 of the 2015 Act as to do so could (though marginally) undermine the clarity of approach desirable in the context of consumer contracts. On the other hand, following s.30 of the 1979 Act, ³⁰¹⁹ s.25 of the 2015 Act provides that it is subject to any usage of trade, special agreement, or course of dealing between the parties. ³⁰²⁰ While s.25 is not protected from exclusion or restriction by s.31 of the 2015 Act, ³⁰²¹ it is submitted that a contract term which seeks to vary or exclude the rules in s.25 would fall under the requirements for transparency and fairness in Pt 2 of the 2015 Act and, subject to the conditions which that Part sets out, may not be binding on the consumer on the ground of its unfairness. ³⁰²²

Instalment deliveries

38-488

The 2015 Act s.26 provides for instalment deliveries under “goods contracts” ³⁰²³ in very similar terms as s.31 of the 1979 Act, with modifications so as to fit these rules into the framework which the 2015 Act provides for consumers. ³⁰²⁴ As a result, s.26 provides that, under a goods contract, the consumer is not bound to accept delivery of the goods by instalments, unless that has been agreed between the consumer and the trader. ³⁰²⁵ Where, however, the contract provides for the goods to be delivered by stated instalments, which are to be separately paid for ³⁰²⁶:

“If the trader makes defective deliveries ³⁰²⁷ in respect of one or more instalments, the consumer, apart from any entitlement to claim damages, may be (but is not necessarily) entitled—to exercise the short-term right to reject or the right to reject under section 19(6) ³⁰²⁸ (as applicable) in respect of the whole contract, or

- (a)
- (b)
to reject the goods in an instalment.” ³⁰²⁹

The consumer’s entitlement to exercise the rights in (a) or (b) depend on the terms of the contract and the circumstances of the case. ³⁰³⁰ While s.26 of the 2015 Act is not itself protected from contrary exclusion or restriction by s.31 of the Act, the trader’s liabilities which give rise to the consumer’s short-term right to reject ³⁰³¹ or to the right to reject provided by s.19(6) ³⁰³² to which s.31 refers are so protected. ³⁰³³ Finally, s.26(6) provides that:

“If the consumer neglects or refuses to take delivery of or pay for one or more instalments, the trader may—be entitled to treat the whole contract as at an end, or if it is a severable breach, have a claim for damages but not a right to treat the whole contract as at an end.”

- (a)
- (b)

The trader's entitlement to exercise the rights in (a) or (b) depends on the terms of the contract and the circumstances of the case. ³⁰³⁴

^{2944.} The key provisions are in s.19 of the 2015 Act. For the particular terms etc and their relationship to the remedies provided see above, paras 38-462—38-476.

^{2945.} Below, para.38-486.

^{2946.} 2015 Act s.21.

^{2947.} 2015 Act ss.20(1) and (2), 22 and 24.

^{2948.} 2015 Act s.20(4) referring to ss.(20) and (21). In summary, s.20(20) provides that where the contract is a severable contract and the contract is a goods contract other than sale, the provisions concerning defective delivery in instalments in s.26(3) do not apply to the final right to reject; s.20(21) adds that, depending on the terms of the contract and the circumstances of the case, the consumer is entitled to reject the goods to which a severable obligation relates or exercise a right to reject in respect of the whole contract. cf. 1979 Act s.11(4), below, para.44-069.

^{2949.} 2015 Act s.20(5) and (6).

^{2950.}  cf. Vol.I, para.24-035 (the injured party treating the contract as discharged on the ground of total or partial failure to perform) and Peel, Treitel on The Law of Contract, 14th edn (2015), para.18–001 referring to “termination for breach” and discussing the varied terminology used for this purpose by the common law.

^{2951.} cf. below, para.44-066.

^{2952.} 2015 Act s.20(7). Whether or not the consumer has a duty to return the rejected goods, the trader must bear any reasonable costs of returning them, other than any costs incurred by the consumer in returning the goods in person to the place where the consumer took physical possession of them: 2015 Act s.20(8).

^{2953.} 2015 Act s.20(10) and (18). Special provision is made where the consumer transferred something other than money under the contract, where the consumer is entitled to receive back the same amount of that thing, unless no substitute can be provided, in which case the consumer is entitled to receive back the thing transferred in its original state: s.20(11)-(12). If the thing cannot be given back in its original state, then the consumer is not entitled to receive a refund, but may be entitled to claim damages: 2015 Act s.20(18)(b) and (19).

^{2954.} 2015 Act s.20(13). This rule applies also to things transferred by the consumer other than money. The 2015 Act s.20(18)(c) provides that to the extent that anything the consumer transferred cannot be divided so as to give back only the amount, or part of the amount, then the consumer has no entitlement to receive a refund. In this situation, the consumer may be entitled to claim damages: 2015 Act s.20(19).

^{2955.} 2015 Act s.20(14) referring to the return only of the part of the price paid. On the definition of these contracts see 2015 Act s.7 and 5(3) respectively, above, paras 38-456 and 38-444 respectively.

^{2956.} 2015 Act s.20(15) and (16). cf. similar provisions applicable to the consumer's right of reimbursement under the 2013 Regulations reg.34(4)-(6), above, para.38-118.

- 2957. 2015 Act s.20(17). cf. similar provisions applicable to the consumer's right of reimbursement under the 2013 Regulations reg.34(7), above, para.38-118.
- 2958. 2015 Act s.20(18) especially (b) and (c) noted in nn.2760 and 2761 above.
- 2959. 2015 Act s.20(19), below, para.38-486.
- 2960. 2015 Act s.21. For this purpose "non-conformity" includes goods which do not conform to the statutory term in s.17 of the Act as to the trader's right to supply, etc.: 2015 Act s.21(12).
- 2961. Above, paras 38-408 et seq.
- 2962. 1979 Act s.35 on which see below, paras 44-278—44-289.
- 2963. 1979 Act s.48D, above, para.38-422. Under the general law, a buyer is not deemed to have accepted the goods merely because he or she requests their repair: Sale of Goods Act 1979 s.35(6) and below, para.44-235.
- 2964. This is made clear by s.19(12) and (13)'s provisions governing termination for breach: see below, para.38-486 ("other remedies" for the consumer).
- 2965. The short-term right to reject may also arise in respect of partial rejection of goods under s.21 of the Act.
- 2966. 2015 Act s.22(2) provides that an agreement under which the short-term right to reject would be lost before the time limit passes is not binding on the consumer.
- 2967. On these contracts see above, paras 38-455, 38-456 and 38-444 respectively.
- 2968. 2015 Act s.22(3), which adds the further condition for the case where the contract requires the trader to install the goods or take other action to enable the consumer to use them, that the trader has notified the consumer that the action has been taken. Section 22(4) further provides that where any of the goods are of a kind that can reasonably be expected to perish after a shorter period, the time limit for exercise of the right in respect of those goods is the end of that shorter period.
- 2969. 2015 Act s.22(6) and (8) effecting this by setting and defining a "waiting period".
- 2970. 2015 Act s.22(7) and (8).
- 2971. 1999 Directive art.3(3)-(4). On implementation by the 2002 Regulations see above, paras 38-413—38-415.
- 2972. 2015 Act s.23(1) refers back to s.19(3) and (4) as to the circumstances in which the consumer has the right to repair or replacement, as set out above, para.38-459.
- 2973. 2015 Act s.23(2).
- 2974. 2015 Act s.23(5).
- 2975. cf. 1979 Act s.48B(3)(c) (as inserted by 2002 Regulations) above, para.38-413.
- 2976. 1999 Directive art.3(2) and (3) and see above, para.38-400.
- 2977. 2015 Act s.23(6) and (7),
- 2978. 2015 Act s.23(8).
- 2979. 1999 Directive art.3(5)–(6). On implementation by the 2002 Regulations see above, paras 38-417—38-420.

- 2980. This is the effect of s.24(2)'s provision that: "[t]he amount of the reduction may, where appropriate, be the full amount of the price or whatever the consumer is required to transfer". From the fact that the Act does not allow a right of rejection in respect of digital content (see below, para.38-521), it would appear that the drafters of the Act took the view that there can be no right to reject where the consumer has nothing physical to hand back. Where the consumer is in this position as regards a "goods contract", a consumer could recover a 100 per cent reduction in price.
- 2981. "Price reduction" may also apply to anything else the consumer is required to transfer under the contract: s.24(1) and (2). However, where this is the case, the right to a price reduction does not apply where what the consumer is (before the reduction) required to transfer under the contract (whether or not already transferred) cannot be divided up so as to enable the trader to receive or retain only the reduced amount, or if anything transferred which cannot be the subject of substitution cannot be given back in its original state: s.24(4) referring to s.20(12) in this respect.
- 2982. 2015 Act s.24(1). Section 24(3) provides that s.20(10)–(17) applies to the consumer's right to receive a refund as outlined above, para.38-479.
- 2983. On these requirements see above, para.38-482.
- 2984. For these purposes goods that the trader arranges to repair at the consumer's premises are made available when the trader indicates that the repairs are finished: 2015 Act s.24(7).
- 2985. 2015 Act s.24(6).
- 2986. 2015 Act s.24(8). For the general provisions governing the right to reject see 2015 Act s.20, above, paras 38-478—38-480.
- 2987. 2015 Act s.24(9) and (10) and (11), (c) of which adds a further condition in respect of goods where the contract required the trader to install the goods or take other action to enable the consumer to use them, that the trader has notified the consumer that the action has been taken. The 2015 Act s.24(10) makes an exception to the rule preventing any deduction being made where the consumer exercised the final right to reject within six months for the case of motor vehicles or goods of a description to be specified by order of the Secretary of State as set out by s.24(10), (12)–(15).
- 2988.  Ferenschild v JPC Motor SA (C-133/16) of July 13, 2017 ("Ferenschild (C-133/16").
- 2989.  Ferenschild (C-133/16) at paras 33-34.
- 2990.  Ferenschild (C-133/16) at para.35.
- 2991.  Ferenschild (C-133/16) at para.36.
- 2992.  See Main Work, Vol.I, para.38-425.
- 2993.  Limitation Act 1980 s.5 (six years from accrual of the cause of action). The general rule in contract is that the cause of action accrues when the breach takes place rather than when any damage may have been suffered: Main Work, Vol.I, paras 28-032 et seq. While art.5(1) of the 1999 Directive requires liability in the seller for two years from the date of delivery, it is submitted that breach will not precede delivery in this context. The UK equally chose not to exercise the option provided by art.7(2) of the 1999 Directive which allows Member States to provide that in the case of second-hand goods, the seller and the consumer buyer may agree contract terms which have a time period of liability shorter than the two years set by art.5(1) first sentence as long as it is not less than one year.

- 2994. !2015 Act s.22 and above, para.38-481 (which explain the starting-points for this period).
- 2995. !1999 Directive arts 3 and 8(2) and cf. Ferenschild (C-133/16) at para.48.
- 2996. 2015 Act s.58(1), referring to s.19(3) and (4) and therefore to the legal grounds of the consumer's rights in respect of the statutory terms as to quality, fitness for purpose etc, under the special rules governing conformity of the goods or for breach of requirements that are stated in the contract as there provided: above, para.38-459. The powers of the court in s.58 therefore do not extend to proceedings brought in respect of the costs incurred by the consumer under s.19(5) in relation to breach of the statutory terms under s.12, nor to the right of rejection foreseen by s.19(6) as regards breach of the statutory term as to the trader's right to supply under s.17. Moreover, while the remedies for consumers foreseen by s.19(3) and (4) are the short-term right to reject, the right to repair or replacement and the right to a price reduction or the final right to reject, s.58's provisions affect only the latter 4 of these remedies. Section 58 makes similar provision in respect of the special rights which Chs 3 and 4 of Pt 1 of the Act create in respect of digital contents contracts and services contracts, on which see below, paras 38-520 and 38-543 respectively.
- 2997. As explained above, para.38-421, these powers in the court were earlier provided by the Sale and Supply of Goods to Consumers Regulations 2002 (SI 2002/3045) on the first implementation of the Consumer Sales Directive 1999, even though they were not foreseen by that Directive.
- 2998. 2015 Act s.58(2) referring to s.23 of the Act, above, para.38-482.
- 2999. 2015 Act s.58(4) and (5). The "relevant remedies" are defined by s.58(8)(a), referring to ss.23 and 24. For this purpose, if the consumer has claimed to exercise the final right to reject, the court may order that any reimbursement to the consumer is reduced by a deduction for use, to take account of the use the consumer has had of the goods in the period since they were delivered to the extent provided by s.24(9) and (10): 2015 Act s.58(5) and (6).
- 3000. 2015 Act s.58(7).
- 3001. !See Whittaker (2017) 133 L.Q.R 47. On the Consumer Sales Directive 1999 generally, see Vol.II, para.38-400. On "sales contracts" see Vol.II, paras 38-452—38-454.
- 3002. !Gebr Weber GmbH v Wittmer, Putz v Medianess Electronics GmbH (C-65/09 and C-87/09) [2011] 3 C.M.L.R. 27* at [63]–[78].
- 3003. !1999 Directive art.3(3), reflected in 2015 Act s.23(3)–(4) and see Vol.II, para. 38-482.
- 3004. 2015 Act s.19(9).
- 3005. 2015 Act s.19(11) (a), (b) and (d) respectively.
- 3006. See in relation to damages and specific performance Vol.I, Chs 26 and 27 respectively. Note that the 2015 Act disapplies the 1979 Act ss.51 (damages for non-delivery), 52 (specific performance), 53 (remedy for breach of warranty) and 54 (interest) from contracts to which Ch.2 of Pt 1 applies: 2015 Act s.60, Sch.1 paras 28–30 and 32 as noted above, n.2521. On the other hand, as regards contracts of sale of goods, the question whether a consumer buyer may rely on the trader's breach in resisting the seller's claim for the price remains governed by the 1979 Act ss.27, 28 and 49 (none of which the 2015 Act amends): on which see below, paras 44-234—44-235 and 44-359 et seq.
- 3007. 2015 Act s.19(13).
- 3008. 2015 Act s.19(11)(e). cf. above, paras 38-470—38-471 on the relationship between breach of an express term and breach of a requirement stated in the contract.

- 3009. 2015 Act s.19(12) referring to s.19(3), (4) and (6), on these rights see above, paras 38-478—38-481 and 38-483—38-484.
- 3010. 2015 Act s.19(10).
- 3011. This 1987 Act implements Directive 1985/374/EEC concerning liability for defective products, [1985] O.J. L210/29. For discussion of the requirements of the 1987 Act see below, paras 44-449 et seq. and Clerk and Lindsell on Torts, 21st edn (2014) paras 11–45 et seq.
- 3012. 2015 Act s.3(1) and (2), above, para.38-451.
- 3013. On which see below, paras 44-255—44-261.
- 3014. 2015 Act s.25(1). There is no EU legislative background to this provision.
- 3015. 2015 Act s.25(2) and (3).
- 3016. 2015 Act s.25(4). Section 25(5) and (6) provide for the manner of rejection in a similar manner to s.20(5) and (6) above, para.38-478, with the distinction that the consumer may not necessarily also indicate that the contract is at an end. Section 25(8) provides that it is subject to any usage of trade, special agreement, or course of dealing between the parties. A consumer may also claim damages in respect of delivery of the wrong quantity: s.25(7).
- 3017. 1979 Act s.30(2A)–(2D) below, para.44-260. The 2015 Act s.60, Sch.1 para.19 deletes the restriction in s.30(2A) to buyers other than dealing as consumer and disapplies s.30 where Ch.2 of Pt 1 of the 2015 Act applies.
- 3018. Below, para.44-260 with authorities there cited.
- 3019. 1979 Act s.30(5).
- 3020. 2015 Act s.25(8).
- 3021. On which see below, para.38-492.
- 3022. See especially 2015 Act ss.62 and 68 and above, paras 38-358 et seq. and 38-382 et seq. It is to be noted that, unlike the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999 (SI 1999/2083) (on which see above, paras 38-221—38-223) the controls on fairness in Pt 2 of the 2015 Act are not restricted to contract terms extend to terms that have been individually negotiated: above, para.38-358.
- 3023. On which see 2015 Act s.3(1) and (2), above, para.38-451.
- 3024. On the 1979 Act s.31 see below, paras 44-262—44-268. The 2015 Act s.60, Sch.1 para.20 disapplies s.31 where Ch.2 of Pt 1 of the 2015 Act applies.
- 3025. 2015 Act s.26(1).
- 3026. 2015 Act s.26(2).
- 3027. For this purpose, “making defective deliveries” does not include failing to make a delivery in accordance with s.28: 2015 Act s.26(5). On s.28 see below, para.38-489.
- 3028. On which see above, para.38-459 (setting out the situations in which this right is available) and paras 38-478—38-481 and 38-483—38-484 (setting out the nature and effects of exercise of these rights).
- 3029. 2015 Act s.26(3).
- 3030. 2015 Act s.26(4).

- 3031. This is provided by s.19(3) of the Act.
- 3032. Above, para.38-476 (trader's right to supply etc.).
- 3033. 2015 Act s.31(1) below, para.38-492.
- 3034. 2015 Act s.26(7).

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 7. - Contracts for the Supply of Goods, Digital Content or Services

(c) - The New Law: Consumer Rights in Respect of Goods Contracts, Digital Content Contracts and Services Contracts

(ii) - "Goods Contracts"

(dd) - Other Rules About Goods Contracts

Delivery of goods in sales contracts

38-489

⚠ Section 28 of the 2015 Act makes special provision concerning the delivery of goods in "sales contracts", 3035 thereby implementing the Consumer Rights Directive 2011 art.18 3036 and replacing its earlier implementation by the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013. 3037 ⚠ Section 28 provides that:

"unless the trader and the consumer have agreed otherwise, the contract is to be treated as including a term that the trader must deliver 3038 the goods to the consumer." 3039

Moreover,

"unless there is an agreed time or period for the delivery of the goods [3040, the contract is to be treated as including a term that the trader must deliver the goods—

(a)

without undue delay, and

(b)

in any event, not more than 30 days after the day on which the contract is entered into." 3041

Where the trader has an obligation to deliver the goods at the time the contract is entered into, that time counts as the "agreed" time for these purposes. 3042 Where the trader does not deliver the goods in accordance with these rules, s.28 provides that the consumer may treat the contract as at an end if:

“(a)

the trader has refused to deliver the goods, ³⁰⁴³

(b)

delivery of the goods at the agreed time or within the agreed period is essential taking into account all the relevant circumstances at the time the contract was entered into, or the consumer told the trader before the contract was entered into that delivery in accordance with subsection (3), or at the agreed time or within the agreed period, was essential.” ³⁰⁴⁴

(c)

The Act's Explanatory Notes expect that in most cases where a consumer purchases goods expecting to receive them immediately, that immediate delivery will be essential in all the circumstances, ³⁰⁴⁵ and adds that examples of goods for which delivery within the initial period might be taken to be essential would include a wedding dress or a birthday cake. ³⁰⁴⁶ Where the trader does not deliver the goods in accordance with the above rules in any other circumstances, the consumer may specify a period that is appropriate in the circumstances and require the trader to deliver the goods before the end of that period ³⁰⁴⁷ and if the trader fails to do so, may treat the contract as at an end. ³⁰⁴⁸ Where the consumer exercises a right to treat the contract as at an end under s.28, the trader must without undue delay reimburse all payments made under the contract. ³⁰⁴⁹ On the other hand, where the consumer has such a right but does not exercise it, s.28 provides that the consumer may cancel the order for any of the goods or reject goods that have been delivered, whereupon “the trader must without undue delay reimburse all payments made under the contract in respect of any goods for which the consumer cancels the order or which the consumer rejects”. ³⁰⁵⁰ Apart from making special provision in this respect where any of the goods form a commercial unit, ³⁰⁵¹ s.28 does not explain what is meant by “cancellation” for this purpose, a term which is not otherwise used by Pt 1 of the 2015 Act. ³⁰⁵² The “right to reject the goods” may refer to the special short-term right to reject or final right to reject (as the case may be) as foreseen by the 2015 Act itself. ³⁰⁵³ If this is the case, then the effect of these provisions appears to be that it allows the consumer not to pay (or to recover payments made) for goods rejected, which amounts to a form of partial termination. This remedy is not foreseen by art.18 of the 2011 Directive, which, apart from termination of the contract for which it provides, could be thought to allow national law only to provide additional remedies, ³⁰⁵⁴ rather than providing additional circumstances in which termination of a different kind may be effected; if this were so, then this aspect of s.28 would be problematic since art.18 of the 2011 Directive requires “full harmonisation”. ³⁰⁵⁵ Certainly, s.28 of the 2015 Act (following explicitly art.18 of the Directive) adds that it does not prevent the consumer seeking other remedies where it is open to the consumer to do so. ³⁰⁵⁶ Finally, the rules on delivery in s.29 of the 1979 Act's apply to delivery under “sales contracts” where they count as contracts for the sale of goods within the meaning of the 1979 Act, ³⁰⁵⁷ except as regards s.29(3)'s provision that where under the contract of sale the seller is bound to send the goods to the buyer, but no time for sending them is fixed, the seller is bound to send them within a reasonable time. ³⁰⁵⁸ For this purpose, however, it should be noted that delivery under s.29 of the 1979 Act includes (where appropriate) making the goods available for the buyer to collect, ³⁰⁵⁹ whereas under s.28 of the 2015 Act delivery seems to refer to the trader actually handing over the goods to the consumer. ³⁰⁶⁰ The 2015 Act provides that contract terms which seek to exclude or restrict liability in the trader arising under s.28 are not binding on the consumer. ³⁰⁶¹

Passing of risk

38-490

! Section 29 of the 2015 Act makes special provision for the passing of risk in goods under “sales contracts” and the Act therefore disapplies the general provisions governing the passing of risk in s.20 of the 1979 Act as regards contracts to which s.29 of the 2015 Act applies. ³⁰⁶² Under s.29, a sales contract is to be treated as including a term to the effect that the goods ³⁰⁶³ remain at the trader’s risk until they come into the physical possession of the consumer or a person identified by the consumer to take possession of the goods, unless the goods are delivered to a carrier who is commissioned by the consumer to deliver the goods other than a carrier the trader named as an option for the consumer: in the second situation, the goods are at the consumer’s risk on and after delivery to the carrier. ³⁰⁶⁴ The main difference between this set of rules and the general rules retained for s.20 of the 1979 Act is that in the latter there is a presumption that the risk passes with the passing of property in the goods, rather than on their delivery. ³⁰⁶⁵ The 2015 Act provides that contract terms which seek to exclude or restrict liability in the trader arising under s.29 are not binding on the consumer. ³⁰⁶⁶

Goods under guarantee

38-491

Section 30 of the 2015 Act implements art.6 of the Consumer Sales Directive 1999, thereby replacing its earlier implementation by the Sale and Supply of Goods to Consumers Regulations 2002 ³⁰⁶⁷ and while the drafting differs between the two, the substance remains the same. Accordingly, s.30 applies where there is a contract to supply goods, ³⁰⁶⁸ and there is a guarantee in relation to the goods. A “guarantee” for these purposes is:

“an undertaking to the consumer given without extra charge by a person acting in the course of the person’s business (the “guarantor” ³⁰⁶⁹) that, if the goods do not meet the specifications set out in the guarantee statement or in any associated advertising—

- (a) the consumer will be reimbursed for the price paid for the goods, or
- (b) the goods will be repaired, replaced or handled in any way.” ³⁰⁷⁰

The Act provides that the guarantee “takes effect, at the time the goods are delivered, as a contractual obligation owed by the guarantor” on its terms and any associated advertising. ³⁰⁷¹ The guarantor must ensure that the guarantee sets out in plain and intelligible language ³⁰⁷² the contents of the guarantee and the essential particulars for making claims under the guarantee and that it states that the consumer has statutory rights in relation to the goods and that those rights are not affected by the guarantee. ³⁰⁷³ Section 30 makes further detailed provision as to the contents and availability to the consumer of the guarantee. ³⁰⁷⁴ These duties on guarantors and other traders may be enforced by injunction on the application of the CMA or a local weights and measures authority. ³⁰⁷⁵ Moreover, as s.30 implements the 1999 Directive, it attracts the enforcement measures put in place for “Community infringements” which harm the collective interests of consumers under Pt 8 of the Enterprise Act 2002 as explained earlier. ³⁰⁷⁶

³⁰³⁵. For the definition of this category of contract for this purpose, see 2015 Act s.5, above, paras 38-452—38-454. However, the 2015 Act’s general exclusion of sales of second-hand goods sold at public auction does not apply for the purposes of s.28, following the definition of “goods” in art.2(3) of the Consumer Rights Directive: 2015 Act s.2(5) and (6)(a); s.28(14).

3036. 2011 Directive art.18. On the 2011 Directive more generally, see above, paras 38-056 et seq.

3037.  SI 2013/3134 reg.42 (revoked by SI 2015/1629 art.8).

3038. “Delivery” means “voluntary transfer of possession from one person to another”: 2015 Act s.59(1). This is the same definition as is contained in s.61(1) of the 1979 Act. However, while the significance of “delivery” varies under the general law in the 1979 Act, it is normally sufficient for the seller to make the goods available to the buyer and it may take place by constructive means and without any transfer of the actual physical custody of the goods: below, para.44-239; Benjamin’s Sale of Goods, 9th edn (2014) para.8-002. By contrast, it is submitted that the meaning of “delivery” in s.28 of the 2015 Act must follow its meaning in art.18 of the Consumer Rights Directive which it implements, and the latter requires that the trader “shall deliver the goods by transferring the physical possession or control of the goods”, which suggests more than merely making the goods available for collection by the buyer. This is confirmed by the explanation in recital 55 of “delivery” in art.20 of the Directive in relation to the passing of risk that “a consumer should be considered to have acquired the physical possession of the goods when he has received them”. Article 20 of the 2011 Directive is implemented by s.29 of the 2015 Act, on which see below, para.38-490.

3039. 2015 Act s.28(2).

3040. 2015 Act s.28(4)(a).

3041. 2015 Act s.28(3). Although s.28 implements art.18 of the 2011 Directive, the time of the conclusion of the contract must be determined in accordance with the general rules of English contract law as set out by Vol.I Ch.2: 2011 Directive art.3(5) as explained above, paras 38-059—38-061.

3042. 2015 Act s.28(4)(b).

3043. s.28(6)(a) (following the 2011 Directive art.18(2) (second paragraph) does not distinguish between the trader’s refusal to deliver the goods before or after the due time for performance and, therefore, could apply in circumstances which the common law would see as anticipatory breach consisting of renunciation of the contract (on which see Vol.I, paras 24-018, 24-024).

3044. 2015 Act s.28(5) and (6).

3045. Explanatory Notes 2015 para.152.

3046. Explanatory Notes 2015 para.153.

3047. 2015 Act s.28(7).

3048. 2015 Act s.28(5) and (7)–(8).

3049. 2015 Act s.28(9) referring to subss.(6) and (8).

3050. 2015 Act s.28(10).

3051. If any of the goods form a commercial unit, the consumer cannot reject or cancel the order for some of those goods without also rejecting or cancelling the order for the rest of them. A unit is a “commercial unit” if division of the unit would materially impair the value of the goods or the character of the unit: 2015 Act s.28(11) and (12).

3052. “Cancellation” is referred to in relation to secondary ticketing in s.91 of the 2015 Act; and is included in some of the examples of contract terms which may be unfair for the purposes of Pt 2 of the Act: s.63, Sch.2 Pt 1 paras 4 and 15.

- 3053. Above, paras 38-478—38-481, 38-483—38-484.
- 3054. 2011 Directive art.18(4).
- 3055. 2011 Directive art.4, above, para.38-058. A possible way out of this problem would be to hold that “cancelling the order” refers to a right to cancel an off-premises contract or distance contract under the 2013 Regulations (in which the content of s.28 was earlier contained), but the context of the provision in s.28 does not suggest that this is so: see SI 2013/3134 reg.42(10)–(11) and above, paras 38-107 et seq.
- 3056. 2015 Act s.28(13). Such a remedy could include a claim for damages for breach of contract under the general law: 2011 Directive recital 53.
- 3057. On the differences between these two categories see above, paras 38-452—38-454. For discussion of s.29 of the 1979 Act see below, paras 44-239 et seq.
- 3058. s.29(3) is disapplied to contracts to which Ch.2 of Pt 1 of the 2015 Act applies: 2015 Act s.60, Sch.1 para.18, inserting new s.3A in s.29 of the 1979 Act.
- 3059. Below, para.44-242.
- 3060. See, in particular, s.28(2) of the 2015 Act and see above, n.2834
- 3061. 2015 Act s.31(1)(j) and see below, para.38-492.
- 3062.  2015 Act s.60; Sch.1 para.17 (thereby replacing s.20(4) which applied to buyers dealing as consumer). The 2015 Act s.29 implements the Consumer Rights Directive 2011 art.20 and replaces its earlier implementation by the 2013 Regulations reg.43 (which was itself revoked by the Consumer Contracts (Amendment) Regulations 2015 (SI 2015/1629) art.8 as regards contracts entered into on or after October 1, 2015).
- 3063. The 2015 Act’s general exclusion of sales of second-hand goods sold at public auction does not apply for the purposes of s.29, following the definition of “goods” in art.2(3) of the Consumer Rights Directive: 2015 Act s.2(5) and (6)(a); s.29(6).
- 3064. 2015 Act s.29(1)–(4). Section 29(5) notes that this final rule does not affect any liability of the carrier to the consumer in respect of the goods. On “delivery” see above, n.2834.
- 3065. See 1979 Act s.20(1) and below, paras 44-187 et seq.
- 3066. 2015 Act s.31(1)(k) and see below, para.38-492.
- 3067. SI 2002/3045 reg.15, above, para.38-428.
- 3068. 2015 Act s.30(1) and see 2015 Act s.3(1) and (2), above, para.38-451.
- 3069. There is no definition of “guarantor” in the 2015 Act except the designation in s.30(2), with the result that any person who gives a guarantee as is described there (whether the trader party to the goods contract, the producer of the goods or any other person) can be a “guarantor” subject to the condition that they act in the course of their business. On the definition of “business” for this purpose see 2015 Act s.2(7) and above, para.38-448 as explained by paras 38-049—38-052.
- 3070. 2015 Act s.30(2).
- 3071. 2015 Act s.30(3). This would mean that any failure in respect of the undertakings in the guarantee would give rise to the normal remedies for breach of contract (and notably damages) provided under the general law: on damages see Vol.I, Ch.26.

- 3072. As the 2015 Act s.30 implements art.6 of the 1999 Directive, it is submitted that the interpretation of this requirement should follow the approach taken by the CJEU for the purposes of the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Directive 1993 arts 4(2) and 5, as explained above, paras 38-239 and 38-320.
- 3073. 2015 Act s.30(4). Where the goods are offered within the territory of the United Kingdom, the guarantee must be written in English: 2015 Act s.30(4).
- 3074. These contents must include the name and address of the guarantor and the duration and territorial scope of the guarantee. The guarantor and any other person who offers to supply to consumers the goods which are the subject of the guarantee must, on request by the consumer, make the guarantee available to the consumer within a reasonable time, in writing and in a form accessible to the consumer: 2015 Act s.30(5)–(7).
- 3075. 2015 Act s.30(8)–(10).
- 3076. Enterprise Act 2002 s.212; Sch.13 Pt 1 para.8 and see above paras 38-128—38-129.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 7. - Contracts for the Supply of Goods, Digital Content or Services

(c) - The New Law: Consumer Rights in Respect of Goods Contracts, Digital Content Contracts and Services Contracts

(ii) - “Goods Contracts”

(ee) - Exclusion of Liability and Choice of Law

Exclusion of liability arising under Pt 1 Ch.2 of the 2015 Act

38-492

As earlier explained, the 2015 Act repeals or disapplies provisions in the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 governing the contracts to which Ch.2 applies, and instead makes its own provision controlling the exclusion of liabilities arising under its provisions, ³⁰⁷⁷ though this follows the pattern of the relevant provisions in the 1977 Act to a considerable extent. As a result, s.31 of the 2015 Act provides generally that a term of a goods contract ³⁰⁷⁸ is not binding on the consumer to the extent that it would exclude or restrict the trader's liability under the statutory terms which it treats as included, ³⁰⁷⁹ in respect of its special provisions governing non-conformity of the goods, ³⁰⁸⁰ and governing delivery of goods and the passing of risk. ³⁰⁸¹ Section 31 then explains what is meant by the exclusion or limitation of liability in terms which closely follow s.13 of the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977, providing that the exclusion or restriction of liability:

“also means that a term of a contract to supply goods is not binding on the consumer to the extent that it would—exclude or restrict a right or remedy in respect of a liability ...,

- (a)
- (b)
make such a right or remedy or its enforcement subject to a restrictive or onerous condition,
- (c)
allow a trader to put a person at a disadvantage as a result of pursuing such a right or remedy, or exclude or restrict rules of evidence or procedure.
- (d)

(3)

The reference in subsection (1) to excluding or restricting a liability also includes preventing an obligation or duty arising or limiting its extent.” ³⁰⁸²

Section 31 makes special provision in respect of the control of express terms in contracts for the hire of goods which seek to exclude or restrict liability in the trader in respect of the statutory term governing the trader’s right to supply the goods, subjecting such a term to the test of unfairness under Pt 2 of the 2015 Act. ³⁰⁸³ On the other hand, s.31 does not control the effectiveness of contract terms seeking to exclude or restrict the trader’s liabilities arising under s.25 (delivery of wrong quantity) or s.26 (instalment deliveries), both of which refer (for different purposes) to the agreement of the parties in relation to the application of their own provisions. ³⁰⁸⁴ In this respect, it is submitted that for these purposes exclusion or limitation clauses could fall within the general controls on terms in consumer contracts provided by Pt 2 of the 2015 Act, notably, by reference to the requirement of fairness and the requirement for transparency. ³⁰⁸⁵

Enforcement of provisions on exclusion of trader’s liabilities

38-493

As earlier explained in relation to the 2015 Act’s treatment of unfair contract terms more generally, the Act applies the enforcement measures provided for the control of unfair contract terms under Pt 2 (and derived from the 1993 Directive ³⁰⁸⁶) to its controls of exclusion clauses in Pt 1 of the Act as here reflected in s.31. ³⁰⁸⁷ These enforcement measures have been discussed earlier, ³⁰⁸⁸ as have the technical difficulties of compatibility of their extension in this way as a matter of EU law. ³⁰⁸⁹

Special rule governing choice of law

38-494

As required by the Consumer Sales Directive 1999 as regards those contracts of sale of goods falling within its scope, ³⁰⁹⁰ s.32 makes special provision for choice of law for “sales contracts”. ³⁰⁹¹ Accordingly, s.32 provides that where the law of a country or territory other than an EEA State is chosen by the parties to be applicable to a sales contract, but the sales contract has a close connection with the United Kingdom, Ch.2 applies despite that choice. ³⁰⁹² In this way, s.32 makes very similar provision to s.74 of the 2015 Act for the purposes of Pt 2’s controls on unfair terms, in this case following the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contract Directive’s own special provision on choice of law. ³⁰⁹³ However, reflecting the fact that some of the provisions in Ch.2 reflect the Consumer Rights Directive 2011 rather than the Consumer Sales Directive 1999, and that the 2011 Directive makes no special provision for choice of law, s.32 excludes from its special provision those sections of Ch.2 which reflect the 2011 Directive. ³⁰⁹⁴ For the cases where these exclusions apply, the Rome I Regulation on the law applicable to contractual obligations applies instead. ³⁰⁹⁵

Enforcement of Pt 1 more generally

38-495

 As earlier explained, enforcement authorities enjoy considerable powers under Pt 8 of the Enterprise Act 2002 to enforce designated UK legislation and EU legislation. ³⁰⁹⁶ As has been seen, many (though not all) of the provisions of Ch.2 of the 2015 Act reflect requirements of the Consumer

Sales Directive 1999 or the Consumer Rights Directive 2011, and any breach of these requirements would constitute “Community infringements” within the meaning of Pt 8 of the 2002 Act. ³⁰⁹⁷ As a result, the relevant provisions in Ch.2 of the 2015 Act, which implement the 1999 Directive or the 2011 Directive or which “provide additional permitted protections”, ³⁰⁹⁸  have been designated as specified UK laws for the purposes of s.212 of the 2002 Act. ³⁰⁹⁹  In addition, acts or omissions in respect of any provision in Pt 1 of the 2015 Act are specified as possible “domestic infringements” for the purposes of s.211 of the Enterprise Act 2002. ³¹⁰⁰

³⁰⁷⁷. See above, para.38-341. On the general strategy of the 2015 Act in relation to the control of unfair contract terms, see above, paras 38-339—38-344.

³⁰⁷⁸. 2015 Act s.3(1) and (2), above, para.38-451.

³⁰⁷⁹. i.e. 2015 Act s.9 (goods to be of satisfactory quality), s.10 (goods to be fit for particular purpose), s.11 (goods to be as described), s.12 (other pre-contract information included in contract); s.13 (goods to match a sample); s.14 (goods to match a model seen or examined) and s.17 (trader to have right to supply the goods etc): 2015 Act s.31(1)(a)-(f), (i). On these provisions see above, paras 38-462—38-467 and 38-472—38-476.

³⁰⁸⁰. i.e. 2015 Act s.15 (installation as part of conformity of the goods with the contract) and s.16 (goods not conforming to contract if digital content does not conform): 2015 Act s.31(1)(g) and (h). On these provisions see above, paras 38-468—38-469 respectively.

³⁰⁸¹. 2015 Act ss.28 and 29 respectively: 2015 Act s.31(j) and (k), on which see above, paras 38-489 and 38-490 respectively.

³⁰⁸². 2015 Act s.31(2) and (3). Section 31(4) (following the 1977 Act. s.13(2)) provides that an agreement in writing to submit present or future differences to arbitration is not to be regarded as excluding or restricting any liability for its purposes, but it should be noted that an arbitration clause in a consumer contract may be “unfair” and therefore not binding on a consumer under s.62 of the Act, and that the Arbitration Act 1996 provides that a term which constitutes an arbitration agreement is deemed to be unfair if the claim is for less than an amount currently £5,000: see above, para.38-380. For discussion of s.13 of the 1977 Act, see Vol.I, para.15-069, much of which is relevant to the interpretation of these provisions.

³⁰⁸³. 2015 Act s.31(5)-(6) referring to liability under s.17 (on which see above, para.38-473). For the test of unfairness under Pt 2 of the Act see s.62 and above, paras 38-358 et seq. It is not clear what particular effect is intended by this reference to Pt 2 of the Act which would in any event apply to a term seeking to exclude liability under s.17, whether or not that term was individually negotiated.

³⁰⁸⁴. 2015 Act s.25(4) and (8) (above, para.38-487); s.26(2) and (4) and (7) above, para.38-488.

³⁰⁸⁵. 2015 Act ss.62 and 68 above, paras 38-358 et seq. and 38-382—38-385 respectively.

³⁰⁸⁶. 1993 Directive art.7.

³⁰⁸⁷. 2015 Act s.31(7) referring to Sch.3.

³⁰⁸⁸. Above, paras 38-387 et seq.

³⁰⁸⁹. The difficulty arises from the fact that the controls on exclusion clauses governing liability under s.31 of the 2015 Act go beyond the scope of the controls required by the Consumer Sales Directive 1999 (whose controls on the exclusion of liability in art.7(1) apply only to contracts for the sale of goods within its definition in art.1) and, where this is the case, beyond the intensity of the controls required by Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Directive 1993 (in that they invalidate such clauses in all circumstances rather than subjecting them to the test of unfairness) and that enforcement measures in respect of the “commercial practice” of use of such exemption clauses would therefore fall foul of the “full harmonisation” of the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005. For an explanation of this difficulty see above, paras 38-389—38-394. The difficulty does not exist as regards the controls on the exclusion of liability under ss.11(4) and (5), 12, 28 and 29 of the 2015 Act which are required by the Consumer Rights Directive 2011 art.25.

- 3090. 1999 Directive art.7(2). The relevant provisions of the 1999 Directive apply to contracts for the sale of goods and deems contracts for the supply of consumer goods to be manufactured and produced to be included in this category for this purpose: art.1(2)(b) “consumer goods”, (c) “seller” and art.1(4)) above, paras 38-452—38-454.
- 3091. Defined by s.5.
- 3092. 2015 Act s.32(1).
- 3093. 1993 Directive art.6(2). For discussion of s.74 of the Act, art.6(2) of the 1993 Directive and their relationship to the general provisions governing applicable law in Regulation (EC) 593/2008 on the law applicable to contractual obligations (“Rome I Regulation”) see above, para.38-386.
- 3094. 2015 Act s.32(2). The relevant provisions are 2015 Act ss.11(4) and (5) and 12 (implementing the 2011 Directive’s provisions governing information requirements, on which see above, paras 38-100, 38-464—38-465); s.28 (delivery, on which see above, para.38-489); s.29 (passing of risk, on which see above, para.38-490) and s.31(1)(d), (j) and (k) (which concern the exclusion of liability under ss.12, 28 and 29, on which see above, para.38-492).
- 3095. 2015 Act s.32(3) referring to Regulation (EC) 593/2008 on the law applicable to contractual obligations (“Rome I Regulation”) on which generally see Vol.I, paras 30-129 et seq. The application of these rules may lead to the application of English law under the Act even though the contract is governed generally by the law of another EU Member State, as in the case where art.6 of the Rome I Regulation applies.
- 3096. Above, paras 38-128—38-129.
- 3097. Enterprise Act 2002 s.212; Sch.13 Pt 1 paras 8 and 9F.
- 3098.  Enterprise Act 2002 s.212(1)(b).
- 3099.  Enterprise Act 2002 s.212(3); Enterprise Act 2002 (Part 8 Community Infringements Specified UK Laws) Order 2003 art.3; Sch., as amended by the Enterprise Act 2002 (Part 8 Community Infringements and Specified UK Laws) (Amendment) Order 2015 (SI 2015/1628) art.2(2)(b) listing 2015 Act ss.2, 3, 9–11, 13–15, 19, 23, 24, 30–32, 58 and 59 (1999 Directive); art.3(2) listing 2015 Act ss.5, 11(4)–(6), 12, 19, 28, 29, 36(3)–(4), 37, 38, 42, 50 and 54 (2011 Directive).
- 3100.  Enterprise Act 2002 s.211(2); Enterprise Act 2002 (Part 8 Domestic Infringements) Order 2015 (SI 2015/1727) art.2.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 7. - Contracts for the Supply of Goods, Digital Content or Services

(c) - The New Law: Consumer Rights in Respect of Goods Contracts, Digital Content Contracts and Services Contracts

(iv) - Digital Content Contracts

Introduction

38-496

❗ Chapter 3 of Pt 1 of the 2015 Act makes original provision governing important aspects of “digital content contracts”, which it defines for these purposes. ³¹⁰¹ ❗ Under earlier law, it was by no means clear whether a person who “buys” digital content does so under a contract of sale of goods, a contract for services or something else. ³¹⁰² ❗ As a result, consumers who purchase digital content were unclear as to what rights they might have, how they should seek to enforce those rights against the trader and whether these rights were subject to exclusion by agreement. The 2015 Act seeks therefore to create a “new category of digital content in consumer law with a bespoke set of rights and remedies appropriate to the unique nature of digital content”. ³¹⁰³ In doing so, however, the 2015 Act draws on earlier legislation in a number of important ways, adapting earlier provisions to suit the new context as well as supplementing them so as to provide for the distinctive features of the modern supply of digital content to consumers.

38-497

First, the 2015 Act adopts the definition of “digital content” used by the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013, that is “data which are produced and supplied in digital form”, ³¹⁰⁴ which was itself drawn from the Consumer Rights Directive 2011. ³¹⁰⁵ As has been seen, the 2013 Regulations impose important information requirements on traders in relation to the consumer contracts to which they apply and these include contracts under which digital content is supplied, also creating rights of cancellation in respect of “off-premises contracts” and distance contracts. ³¹⁰⁶ On the other hand, the legislative treatment of contracts under which digital content is supplied under the 2013 Regulations and the 2015 Act differs, as will be explained ³¹⁰⁷ and the 2015 Act defines specially the types of contract for the supply of digital content to which it applies. ³¹⁰⁸

38-498

Secondly, the 2015 Act adopts the scheme of statutory terms governing satisfactory quality, fitness for purpose, description and pre-contractual information which it uses for “goods contracts” and familiar from earlier legislation in order to create rights for consumers in respect of these matters in relation to digital content contracts. ³¹⁰⁹ In doing so, the Act makes only those changes which are necessary given the change in subject matter of the contracts between the two contexts. ³¹¹⁰ On the other hand, the Act's provisions on the trader's right to supply the digital content to the consumer differ significantly from its provisions governing “goods contracts”. ³¹¹¹ Moreover, the Act makes original provision to regulate the situation where a consumer has concluded a contract to supply digital content and the consumer's access to the content on a device requires transmission to the device, or where, after the trader has supplied the digital content, the consumer is to have access to a “processing facility” under arrangements made by the trader. ³¹¹² The Act also provides specially for the case where digital content is supplied under a contract subject to the right of the trader or a third party to modify that content. ³¹¹³

38-499

Thirdly, the 2015 Act adopts three of the special remedies for consumers provided by Pt 1 Ch.2 of the Act in respect of “goods contracts” for use by consumers in respect of digital content contracts: the right to repair or replacement and price reduction. ³¹¹⁴ On the other hand, while the Act makes clear that a consumer may claim a refund in respect of breaches by the trader of the statutory terms, and that this refund may be in full, ³¹¹⁵ the Act does not provide for any right in the consumer to reject the digital content or to treat the digital content contract as at an end, as is provided by Pt 1 Ch.2 of the Act for consumers in relation to goods. ³¹¹⁶ The Act provides the consumer with new remedies of repair or compensation in respect of digital content which causes damage to a device or to other digital content. ³¹¹⁷

38-500

Finally, the 2015 Act makes similar provision as is made in Pt 1 Ch.2 so as to render terms which seek to exclude or restrict the trader’s liability for breach of the statutory terms not binding on the consumer. ³¹¹⁸ It also applies the enforcement regime provided by Pt 2 of the Act for the control of unfair terms generally to the particular context of its controls on exclusion and limitation clauses. ³¹¹⁹

^{3101.}

❗ On the Proposal for a Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council on certain aspects concerning contracts for the supply of digital content COM(2015) 634 final, see above, para.38-403A.

^{3102.}

❗ Explanatory Notes 2015 para.169 referring to Bradgate, Consumer rights in digital products: A research report prepared for the UK Department for Business, Innovation and Skills, Institute for Commercial Law Studies, Sheffield and BIS, available at: <http://www.bis.gov.uk/assets/biscore/consumer-issues/docs/c/10-1125-consumer-rights-in-digital-products> . cf. Software Incubator Ltd v Computer Associates UK Ltd [2016] EWHC 1587 (QB) at [35]–[69] (a contract for the supply of software could constitute a “sale of goods” for the purposes of the Commercial Agents (Council Directive) Regulations 1993 (SI 1993/3053), distinguishing (at [47]) the position under the Consumer Rights Act 2015).

^{3103.} Explanatory Notes 2015, para.172.

^{3104.} SI 2013/3134 reg.5 “digital content”; 2015 Act s.2(9).

^{3105.} Consumer Rights Directive 2011 art.2(11).

^{3106.} Above, paras 38-056 et seq.

^{3107.} Below, para.38-503.

^{3108.} 2015 Act s.33, below, paras 38-501—38-502.

^{3109.} 2015 Act ss.34-38 (digital content contracts) reflecting ss.9-12 of the Act (goods contracts), on which see above, paras 38-462—38-465.

^{3110.} Below, paras 38-504 et seq.

^{3111.} 2015 Act s.41 (digital content contracts), on which see below, paras 38-515—38-516 and cf. s.17 discussed above, paras 38-472—38-476.

- 3112. 2015 Act s.39 below, paras 38-511—38-513.
- 3113. 2015 Act s.40, below, para.38-514.
- 3114. 2015 Act ss.42-44, below, paras 38-517 et seq.
- 3115. 2015 Act s.44(1) and (2) (which treats the refund as a consequence of the application of price reduction). Section 45 provides a direct right to a refund of (in principle) “all money paid by the consumer for the digital content” where the trader is in breach of the statutory term as to the right to supply in s.41(1): 2015 Act ss.42(5) and 45.
- 3116. On the new remedies and how they relate to “other remedies” available under the general law, see below, paras 38-517 et seq. On the remedies under goods contracts, see above, paras 38-477 et seq.
- 3117. 2015 Act s.46 below, para.38-523.
- 3118. 2015 Act s.47, below, para.38-524.
- 3119. 2015 Act s.47(5), below, para.38-526.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 7. - Contracts for the Supply of Goods, Digital Content or Services

(c) - The New Law: Consumer Rights in Respect of Goods Contracts, Digital Content Contracts and Services Contracts

(iv) - Digital Content Contracts

(aa) - “Digital Content Contracts”

“Digital content”

38-501

As earlier noted, the 2015 Act defines “digital content” as “data which are produced and supplied in digital form”. 3120 The Explanatory Notes to the Act explain that this includes software, music, computer games and applications (or “apps”) 3121 and that:

“[i]n the case of digital content which is supplied under contract from a trader to a consumer, and largely or wholly stored and processed remotely, such as software supplied via cloud computing, some digital content will always be transmitted to the consumer’s device so that they can interact with the digital content product that they have contracted for.” 3122

Digital content so transmitted may fall within the scope of Ch.3 as long as it is supplied pursuant to a contract to which it applies, as set out below.

The contracts covered by Pt 1 Ch.3 of the 2015 Act

38-502

Chapter 3 provides that its provisions apply to contracts under which digital content is supplied of two distinct types. 3123 First, s.33(1) provides that it applies to:

“a contract for a trader to supply digital content to a consumer, if it is supplied or to be supplied for a price paid by the consumer.” 3124

And secondly, according to s.33(2) Ch.3 also applies to:

“a contract for a trader to supply digital content to a consumer, if—

- (a) it is supplied free with goods or services or other digital content for which the consumer pays a price, and
- (b) it is not generally available to consumers unless they have paid a price for it or for goods or services or other digital content."

This second example is the less obvious, but reflects the fact that digital content is frequently supplied as part of a wider arrangement, for example, when software is given away with a paid-for magazine in circumstances where it is not generally available to consumers for free. ³¹²⁵ For this purpose, s.33(3) explains that the references in these earlier definitions to:

"the consumer paying a price include references to the consumer using, by way of payment, any facility for which money has been paid." ³¹²⁶

The idea of something being paid for with "a facility for which money has been paid" is new and the Act's Explanatory Notes provide as examples

"a token, virtual currency, or gift voucher, that was originally purchased with money (e.g. a magic sword bought within a computer game that was paid for within the game using "jewels" but those jewels were originally purchased with money)." ³¹²⁷

As a result, any contract which falls within one or other of the definitions in s.33(1) or s.33(2) will be governed by Ch.3 and both are equally termed a "contract to supply digital content" by the Act ³¹²⁸ or simply "digital content contracts", the latter of which will be the term used in the following paragraphs.

"Digital content contracts" and other contracts in Pt 1 of the Act

38-503

⚠ The treatment of digital content contracts by s.33 of the Act has two main consequences. First, as suggested by the 2015 Act's general provisions governing "mixed contracts", ³¹²⁹ a digital content contract within the meaning of Ch.3 may also be a "goods contract" within the meaning of Ch.2, that is, where both goods and digital content are supplied under the contract or where goods are supplied under the contract and digital content is supplied for free under the circumstances set out in s.33(2). Indeed, as earlier explained, s.16 of the Act makes particular provision for the case where goods do not conform to the contract if the goods consist of an item that includes digital content and the digital content does not conform to the contract. ³¹³⁰ This regulatory overlap differs from the pattern under the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013, which distinguish between sales contracts (which are defined as relating to tangible moveable items, which make include digital content, as in the case of a CD) and "contracts for the supply of digital content not in a durable medium" and then regulates them distinctly. ³¹³¹ ⚠ Secondly, a contract for a trader to supply a service to a consumer or "services contract" governed by Pt 1 Ch.4 of the 2015 Act may also constitute a "digital content contract" and so fall within Pt 1 Ch.3, but s.33(4) provides that:

“[a]

trader does not supply digital content to a consumer for the purposes of this Part merely because the trader supplies a service by which digital content reaches the consumer.”

The significance of this provision is discussed below. 3132

3120. 2015 Act s.2(9).

3121. Explanatory Notes 2015 para.166. cf. the illustrations of “digital content” provided by the Consumer Rights Directive 2011 recital 19, quoted above, para.38-070.

3122. Explanatory Notes 2015 para.166.

3123. s.33(8) of the 2015 Act provides, however, that s.33 does not limit the application of s.46’s provisions providing a remedy for damage to a device or to other digital content caused by digital content, except as regards its limitation in s.33(4), on which see below, para.38-512, n.2987. The 2015 Act s.33(5)-(6), (9)-(10) provides the Secretary of State with powers by order to apply to other contracts for a trader to supply digital content to a consumer subject to certain conditions.

3124. 2015 Act s.33(1).

3125. Explanatory Notes 2015 para.174.

3126. 2015 Act s.33(3).

3127. Explanatory Notes 2015 para.174.

3128. 2015 Act s.33(7).

3129. 2015 Act s.1(4)-(6), above, para.38-450.

3130. Above, para.38-469. This overlap is also noted by the 2015 Act s.42(3) for the case where “an item including the digital content is supplied”.

3131.  2013 Regulations reg.5 “sales contract” and “goods”, above, para.38-070. cf. Software Incubator Ltd v Computer Associates UK Ltd [2016] EWHC 1587 (QB), [2017] Bus. L.R. 245 at [35]–[69] (a contract for the supply of software may constitute a “sale of goods” for the purposes of the Commercial Agents (Council Directive) Regulations 1993 (SI 1993/3053), distinguishing the position under the law of sale of goods).

3132. Below, para.38-512 at n.2987.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 7. - Contracts for the Supply of Goods, Digital Content or Services

(c) - The New Law: Consumer Rights in Respect of Goods Contracts, Digital Content Contracts and Services Contracts

(iv) - Digital Content Contracts

(bb) - The Statutory Terms

The relationship between the statutory terms, non-conformity of the digital content and the consumer's remedies

38-504

Following in very broad terms the pattern set by Ch.2 for “goods contracts”, ³¹³³ s.42 of the 2015 Act sets out the relationship between the statutory terms “treated as included” in digital content contracts, the consumer’s rights to enforce terms about digital content and any “other remedies” which the consumer may enjoy. In doing so, it draws a three-fold distinction. First, s.42 provides that for these purposes ³¹³⁴ “digital content conforming to a contract” refers to the content’s conforming to the statutory terms governing its quality, fitness for a particular purpose and description ³¹³⁵ and where it does not conform to the contract in this sense, the consumer has a right to repair or replacement and the right to a price reduction. ³¹³⁶ Secondly, s.42 provides that where pre-contractual information other than as to the digital content’s main characteristics, functionality or compatibility forms the basis of a statutory term of the contract, ³¹³⁷ breach of this term creates a right in the consumer to recover from the trader the amount of any costs incurred as a result of the breach, up to the amount of the price paid for the digital content or for any facility used by the consumer. ³¹³⁸ This reflects a similarly limited remedy created for information provided by the trader under goods contracts other than where it relates to the main characteristics of the goods. ³¹³⁹ Thirdly, s.42 provides that where the trader is in breach of the statutory term relating to the trader’s right to supply the digital content, the consumer has a special right to a refund which in principle extends to all money paid. ³¹⁴⁰ It is to be noted that this three-fold scheme does not provide for the case of “requirements that are stated in the contract” as Ch.2 does in the case of “goods contracts” ³¹⁴¹ nor for the case where the contract contains an express term about the quality or its fitness for any particular purpose even though such an express term is specifically foreseen by the Act. ³¹⁴² As regards the latter, it is submitted that the remedial and other consequences of breach of such an express term would be governed by the general law and this could lead to a claim for damages and, subject to its general conditions, a claim by the consumer to treat the contract as at an end under the law of termination for breach of contract. ³¹⁴³ In this respect, while the Act provides expressly for the relationship between the special remedies for the consumer which s.42 recognises and other remedies which the consumer may enjoy under the general law (and excludes from these other remedies the consumer’s treating the contract as at an end ³¹⁴⁴), the latter concerns only other remedies which the consumer may enjoy as a result of breach of the statutory terms in the Act ³¹⁴⁵ and not, therefore, any express term.

Presumption of non-conformity

38-505

The 2015 Act s.42 adopts the presumption of non-conformity on delivery which the Act earlier uses in relation to “goods contracts” and which is drawn from the Consumer Sales Directive 1999 3146 and so provides that:

“digital content which does not conform to the contract at any time within the period of six months beginning with the day on which it was supplied must be taken not to have conformed to the contract when it was supplied,” 3147

This does not apply if it is established that the digital content did conform to the contract when it was supplied or if its application is incompatible with the nature of the digital content or with how it fails to conform to the contract. 3148

Digital content to be of satisfactory quality

38-506

The 2015 Act s.34 makes almost identical provision as to the satisfactory quality of digital content supplied under a “digital content contract” 3149 as s.9 of the Act makes in relation to the satisfactory quality of goods supplied under a “goods contract”, 3150 itself being familiar from earlier statutory provisions, notably governing sale of goods. 3151 Section 34 provides that:

“(1)

Every contract to supply digital content is to be treated as including a term that the quality of the digital content is satisfactory.

(2)

The quality of digital content is satisfactory if it meets the standard that a reasonable person would consider satisfactory, taking account of—any description of the digital content, the price mentioned in section 33(1) or (2)(b) (if relevant), and all the other relevant circumstances (see subsection (5)).

(a)

(b)

(c)

(3)

The quality of digital content includes its state and condition; and the following aspects (among others) are in appropriate cases aspects of the quality of digital content—

- (a) fitness for all the purposes for which digital content of that kind is usually supplied;
 - (b) freedom from minor defects;
 - (c) safety;
 - (d) durability.
- (4) The term mentioned in subsection (1) does not cover anything which makes the quality of the digital content unsatisfactory—
 - (a) which is specifically drawn to the consumer's attention before the contract is made,
 - (b) where the consumer examines the digital content before the contract is made, which that examination ought to reveal, or
 - (c) where the consumer examines a trial version before the contract is made, which would have been apparent on a reasonable examination of the trial version.
- (5) The relevant circumstances mentioned in subsection (2)(c) include any public statement about the specific characteristics of the digital content made by the trader, the producer or any representative of the trader or the producer.
- (6) That includes, in particular, any public statement made in advertising or labelling.
- (7)

But a public statement is not a relevant circumstance for the purposes of subsection (2)(c) if the trader shows that—

- (a) when the contract was made, the trader was not, and could not reasonably have been, aware of the statement,
 - (b) before the contract was made, the statement had been publicly withdrawn or, to the extent that it contained anything which was incorrect or misleading, it had been publicly corrected, or
 - (c) the consumer's decision to contract for the digital content could not have been influenced by the statement.
- (8) In a contract to supply digital content a term about the quality of the digital content may be treated as included as a matter of custom."

Apart from replacement of the references to "goods" with references to "digital content", s.34 omits s.9's reference to "appearance and finish" ³¹⁵² as a possible aspect of the quality of digital content (for obvious reasons). Secondly, s.34(4)(c) replaces s.9's provision for the case of a contract to supply goods by sample (to the effect that the statutory term does not cover anything which would have been apparent on a reasonable examination of the sample ³¹⁵³), with provision for the case where the consumer examines a "trial version" before the contract is made, to the effect that the statutory term does not cover anything which would have been apparent on a reasonable examination of the trial version. It is to be noted that s.34(5)-(7) also makes public statements relevant to the standard that a reasonable person would consider satisfactory in s.9(5)-(7) which reflects a requirement of the Consumer Sales Directive, even though the Directive itself does not apply to digital content contracts. ³¹⁵⁴ In order to achieve a harmonious interpretation between these provisions of the Act in s.9 and s.34, a court would need therefore to follow whatever interpretation were taken by the Court of Justice to the Directive's provisions underlying s.9. In terms of the significance of "satisfactory quality" in the context of digital content contracts, according to the Act's Explanatory Notes:

"a reasonable person's expectations as to quality are likely to vary according to the nature of the content and some aspects of quality set out in subsection (3) may not be relevant in particular cases. So for example a reasonable person might expect a simple music file to be free from minor defects so that a track which failed to play to the end would not be of satisfactory quality. However, it is the norm to encounter some bugs in a complex game or piece of software on release so a reasonable person might not expect that type of digital content to be free from minor defects. Consequently the application of the quality aspect 'freedom from minor defects' to digital content will depend on reasonable expectations as to quality." ³¹⁵⁵

Under s.42 of the Act breach of the statutory term in s.34 will give rise in the consumer to the right to repair or replacement and the right to a price reduction, and may also give rise to other remedies under the general law. ³¹⁵⁶

Digital content to be fit for particular purpose

38-507

Section 35 of the 2015 Act makes identical provision for digital content contracts ³¹⁵⁷ as s.10 makes for goods contracts, ³¹⁵⁸ subject only to the replacement of the latter's references to "goods" with "digital content". As a result, where the consumer makes known to the trader (expressly or by implication) any particular purpose for which the consumer is contracting for the digital content, ³¹⁵⁹

"the contract is to be treated as including a term that the digital content is reasonably fit for that purpose, whether or not that is a purpose for which digital content of that kind is usually supplied." ³¹⁶⁰

It is provided that this term is not to be included if the circumstances show that the consumer does not rely, or it is unreasonable for the consumer to rely, on the skill or judgment of the trader. ³¹⁶¹ A contract to supply digital content may be treated as making provision about the fitness of the digital content for a particular purpose as a matter of custom. ³¹⁶² Under s.42 of the Act breach of a statutory term inserted by s.35 will give rise in the consumer to the right to repair or replacement and the right to a price reduction, and may also give rise to other remedies under the general law. ³¹⁶³

Digital content to be as described

38-508

Section 36 of the 2015 Act provides that:

"(1)

Every contract to supply digital content is to be treated as including a term that the digital content will match any description of it given by the trader to the consumer.

(2)

Where the consumer examines a trial version before the contract is made, it is not sufficient that the digital content matches (or is better than) the trial version if the digital content does not also match any description of it given by the trader to the consumer."

It will be noted that s.36 does not use the technical expression of contracting "by description" used by s.11's provision governing the statutory term as to the description of goods, which itself reflects the general position under the 1979 Act. ³¹⁶⁴ Instead, s.36 stipulates that "any description" of the digital content will form the basis of the statutory term which it inserts in the contract. Moreover, s.36(2) adapts the parallel provision in s.11(2) of the 2015 Act so as to fit the more inclusive general approach to descriptions taken by s.11(1) and also to replace references to "sample" with references to "trial version", following the precedent set by the Act in relation to the statutory term as to satisfactory quality in s.34. ³¹⁶⁵ Section 36 follows the approach earlier set by the Act in relation to goods contracts, by providing that information within some of the categories required to be provided by the trader under the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 ³¹⁶⁶ and actually supplied by the trader to the consumer is to be included as a term of the contract. ³¹⁶⁷ The categories in question are: "the main characteristics of the ... digital content, to the extent appropriate to the medium of communication and to the ... digital content"; "where applicable, the functionality, ³¹⁶⁸ including applicable technical protection measures, of digital content”; and “where applicable, any relevant compatibility of digital content with hardware and software that the trader is aware of or can reasonably be expected to have been aware of”. ³¹⁶⁹ This reflects the Consumer Rights Directive’s requirement that information supplied by the trader as it requires should form an integral part of the consumer contract ³¹⁷⁰; equally, a change to any of that information, made before entering into the contract or later, is not effective unless expressly agreed between the consumer and the trader. ³¹⁷¹ More generally, according to the Act’s Explanatory Notes:

“The policy intention is that matching the description should mean that the digital content should at least do what it is described as doing. It is not intended that “matches the description” should mean that the digital content must be exactly the same in every aspect. This section would not, for example prevent the digital content going beyond the description, as long as it also continues to match the description. This is particularly relevant for updates that may enhance features or add new features. As clarified in section 40, as long as the digital content continued to match the original product description and conform to the pre-contractual information provided by the trader, improved or additional features would not breach this right.” ³¹⁷²

Under s.42 of the Act breach of a statutory term inserted by s.36 gives rise in the consumer to the right to repair or replacement and the right to a price reduction, and may also give rise to other remedies under the general law. ³¹⁷³

Other pre-contract information included in contract

38-509

Section 37 of the 2015 Act makes similar provision for digital content contracts as does s.12 for goods contracts, ³¹⁷⁴ and provides that where the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 ³¹⁷⁵ required the trader to provide to the consumer before the contract became binding information other than about the main characteristics, functionality or compatibility of the digital content (which are dealt with by s.36 ³¹⁷⁶), any information that was provided by the trader is to be treated as included as a term of the digital content contract. ³¹⁷⁷ The categories of information to which s.37 therefore applies are set out above in relation to the 2013 Regulations themselves. ³¹⁷⁸ Section 37 provides that a change to any of that information, made before entering into the contract or later, is not effective unless expressly agreed between the consumer and the trader. ³¹⁷⁹ However, breach of the statutory terms foreseen by s.37 of the Act does not give rise to the three rights more widely provided by Ch.3 for consumers, as s.42(4) instead provides that in these circumstances the consumer has the right to recover from the trader:

“the amount of any costs incurred by the consumer as a result of the breach, up to the amount of the price paid for the digital content or for any facility ³¹⁸⁰ ... used by the consumer.” ³¹⁸¹

A consumer may, however, enjoy other remedies (notably, damages) in respect of breach of the statutory term in s.37, with the exception of a right to treat the contract as at an end. ³¹⁸²

No other requirement to treat term about quality or fitness as included

38-510

Section 38(1) provides that a contract to supply digital content is not to be treated as including any term about the quality of the digital content or its fitness for any particular purpose except as the Act itself provides, ³¹⁸³ unless the term is expressly included in the contract. ³¹⁸⁴ Where such an express term is concluded, its breach may give rise to remedies for its breach provided by the general law, apparently even as regards a right to treat the contract as at an end for major breach of contract. ³¹⁸⁵ This marks an apparent contrast with the general position under the 2015 Act, which does not allow a consumer to treat a digital content contract as at an end by reason of breach of the statutory terms which it treats as included in the contract. ³¹⁸⁶

Supply by transmission and facilities for continued transmission

38-511

Section 39 of the 2015 Act makes original provision relating to supply by transmission of the digital content under a digital content contract, ³¹⁸⁷ creating, inter alia, a special statutory term regarding a processing facility to which the consumer is granted access.

Time of supply by transmission

38-512

❗ First, s.39 provides a special rule as to the time of supply of digital content where it takes place by transmission rather than by supply on a tangible medium, such as a disk. Transmission of this kind could take place, for example, where digital content is bought or used via the internet or through a satellite transmission under an arrangement with an internet service provider or mobile network operator, ³¹⁸⁸ and where digital content is supplied in this way, it will usually travel through one or more intermediaries before it reaches the consumer's device. ³¹⁸⁹ According to the Act's Explanatory Notes:

"Some of these intermediaries, for example an Internet Service Provider ("ISP"), have been chosen by and are within the contractual control of the consumer. Other intermediaries, however, will be within the contractual control of the trader, or under arrangements initiated by the trader. For example, a supplier of streamed movies (the trader) may contract with a content delivery network who will deliver the data from the trader's server to the ISPs who will then deliver the content to the consumer." ³¹⁹⁰

For these purposes, s.39 provides that where the consumer's access to the content on a device requires its transmission to the device under arrangements initiated by the trader, ³¹⁹¹ the digital content is taken as supplied either when the content reaches the device (for example, directly to a consumer's satellite dish ³¹⁹²), or, if earlier, when the content reaches another trader chosen by the consumer to supply (such as an internet service provider ³¹⁹³) under a contract with the consumer, a service by which digital content reaches the device. ³¹⁹⁴ The result of these intricate provisions is that where the digital content fails to meet the quality standards set by the statutory terms because of a problem for which the trader (T) or an intermediary in the contractual control of the trader is responsible, then the trader will be liable. ³¹⁹⁵ On the other hand, where the digital content fails to meet these quality standards because of a problem with the consumer's device or with the delivery service supplied by an independent trader with whom the consumer has contracted (such as an ISP or mobile network provider), the trader (T) would not be liable "since that trader (T) cannot be at fault in any way for the problem and has no way of rectifying it". ³¹⁹⁶ ❗

Facilities for continued transmission

38-513

Secondly, where there is a contract to supply digital content and "after the trader (T) has supplied the digital content, the consumer is to have access under the contract to a processing facility under arrangements made by T", ³¹⁹⁷ under s.39(5) of the Act:

“[t]he contract is to be treated as including a term that the processing facility (with any feature that the facility is to include under the contract) must be available to the consumer for a reasonable time, unless a time is specified in the contract.” ³¹⁹⁸

For these purposes:

“A processing facility is a facility by which T or another trader will receive digital content from the consumer and transmit digital content to the consumer (whether or not other features are to be included under the contract).” ³¹⁹⁹

As a result, according to the Act's Explanatory Notes, these provisions:

“apply to digital content where use of the content in line with the contract requires some digital content to be transferred via the internet between the consumer's device and a server (processing facility) operated by or within the contractual control of T. Examples of this type of digital content would be massively multiplayer online games (“MMOs”) and software accessed on the Cloud such as a music streaming facility.” ³²⁰⁰

In these circumstances, s.39(5)'s statutory term means that the consumer should be able to use their digital content in the way described for a reasonable time, unless an express term provides a different time. ³²⁰¹ Finally, the sections of the Act which insert statutory terms in the contract governing the quality, fitness for a particular purpose and description of digital content are applied to all digital content transmitted to the consumer on each occasion under the facility, while it is provided under the contract, as they apply to the digital content first supplied. ³²⁰² Breach of these statutory terms as well as the special statutory term as to access for the consumer to a processing facility foreseen by s.39(5) may give rise to the right to repair or replacement or the right to a price reduction, or other remedies under the general law, except a right to treat the contract as at an end. ³²⁰³

Quality, fitness and description of content supplied subject to modification

38-514

According to the Act's Explanatory Notes, s.40 of the 2015 Act:

“reflects a unique issue for digital content in that manufacturers and traders are technically able to change or update digital content after the initial provision of the digital content. This may be set out in the terms and conditions of the licence. In the majority of cases, this is to the benefit of consumers and often includes important updates to the digital content. Requiring consent for every update would create problems for business, both due to the logistics of contacting every consumer and getting their consent and the problems that would arise when some consumers do not accept updates, thus resulting in many different versions of software in circulation and unnecessary disputes with consumers when digital content stops working due to lack of updates.” ³²⁰⁴

Section 40 therefore allows a contract to provide that a trader or a third party (such as the digital content manufacturer) may update digital content, as long as the contract stated that such updates would be supplied and as long as the term by which it does so is not unfair within the meaning of Pt 2 of the 2015 Act. ³²⁰⁵ Accordingly, s.40(1) first provides that, where under a contract a trader supplies digital content to a consumer subject to the right of the trader or a third party to modify the digital content, the Act's provisions inserting statutory terms as to satisfactory quality, fitness for a particular purpose and description of the digital content “apply in relation to the digital content as modified as they apply in relation to the digital content as supplied under the contract”. ³²⁰⁶ However, as regards any description of the digital content, this “does not prevent the trader from improving the features of, or adding new features to, the digital content, as long as—the digital content continues to match the description of it given by the trader to the consumer, and the digital content continues to conform to the information provided by the trader as mentioned in subsection (3) of section 36, subject to any change to that information that has been agreed in accordance with subsection (4) of that section.” ³²⁰⁷

(a)

(b)

The references to s.36(3) and (4) here concern the information as to the main characteristics, functionality and compatibility of the digital content which is required to be provided and is in fact provided by the trader under the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013. ³²⁰⁸ For these purposes, the presumption of non-conformity applicable to the rights arising from breach of the statutory terms governing the quality, fitness for particular purpose and description of digital content generally does not apply to cases governed by s.40 and so as regards these cases the consumer must establish the failures of the digital content as provided for by s.40. ³²⁰⁹ Finally, a claim on the grounds that digital content does not conform to a statutory term concerning satisfactory quality, fitness for particular purpose or description as applied by s.40(1) to digital content which has later been modified “is to be treated as arising at the time when the digital content was supplied under the contract and not the time when it is modified”. ³²¹⁰ This therefore means that any claim for breach must be brought within six years of the date when the digital content was first supplied, rather than at the date such as when the modification took place. ³²¹¹

Trader’s right to supply digital content

38-515

Section 41 of the 2015 Act provides for a new statutory term to be included in contracts to supply digital content that the trader has the right to supply the digital content, mirroring the terms provided for goods contracts, but reflecting the fact that under many digital content contracts the trader does not agree to transfer to the consumer any property rights (such as intellectual property rights to the digital content). ³²¹² Section 41(1) therefore provides that:

“Every contract to supply digital content is to be treated as including a term—in relation to any digital content which is supplied under the contract and which the consumer has paid for, that the trader has the right to supply that content to the consumer;

(a)

(b)

in relation to any digital content which the trader agrees to supply under the contract and which the consumer has paid for, that the trader will have the right to supply it to the consumer at the time when it is to be supplied.” ³²¹³

While, as has been explained, in Ch.3 generally “contract to supply digital content” includes not merely contracts where the content is supplied for a price paid by the consumer, but also where it is supplied free with goods, services or other digital content in certain circumstances, ³²¹⁴ s.41(1) subjects the insertion of the statutory terms as to the trader’s right to supply to conditions that the digital content is paid for. Where s.41(1) applies, the statutory term as to the trader’s right to supply concerns both digital content supplied under the contract itself and to digital content which the trader agrees to supply under the contract, for example, by way of later modification.

Special refund remedy for breach

38-516

As earlier noted, breach of the statutory term that the trader has the right to supply digital content provided by s.41(1) of the 2015 Act gives rise to a special right in the consumer to a refund provided by s.45. ³²¹⁵ This right reflects the idea that digital content cannot be returned and, therefore, the consumer must not have a right of rejection. ³²¹⁶ Under s.45, this special right “gives the consumer the right to receive a refund from the trader of all money paid by the consumer for the digital content”, ³²¹⁷ unless “the breach giving the consumer the right to a refund affects only some of the digital content supplied under the contract” in which case, “the right to a refund does not extend to any part of the price attributable to digital content that is not affected by the breach”. ³²¹⁸ In keeping with other provisions in the 2015 Act governing refunds, ³²¹⁹ s.45 provides that a refund must be given without undue delay, and in any event within 14 days beginning with the day on which the trader agrees that the consumer is entitled to a refund; it must be given using the same means of payment as the consumer used to pay for the digital content, unless the consumer expressly agrees otherwise; and the trader must not impose any fee on the consumer in respect of the refund. ³²²⁰

³¹³³. 2015 Act s.19, above, para.38-518.

³¹³⁴. Technically, s.42(1) makes this definition both for the purposes of s.42 and of s.43 (which concerns the right to repair or replacement): below, para.38-518.

³¹³⁵. 2015 Act s.42(1) referring to ss.34, 35 and 36 of the Act, below, paras 38-506, 38-507 and 38-505 respectively.

³¹³⁶. 2015 Act s.42(2) referring to ss.43 and 44 on which see below, paras 38-518 and 38-519 respectively.

³¹³⁷. Under 2015 Act s.37, below, para.38-509. Where information is provided in relation to the digital content’s main characteristics, functionality or compatibility, it becomes a term of the contract under s.36 whose breach renders the content non-conforming within the meaning of s.42(1), with the remedial consequences provided by s.42(2): below, para.38-508.

³¹³⁸. 2015 Act s.42(4) which provides that “facility” is to be understood in the sense in which it is used by s.33(3) (on which see above, para.38-502).

³¹³⁹. 2015 Act ss.12 and 19(5), above, para.38-465.

³¹⁴⁰. 2015 Act ss.41, 42(5) and 45 on which see below, paras 38-515—38-516.

- 3141. 2015 Act s.19(1)(c) and 19(4), above, para.38-459.
- 3142. 2015 Act s.38(1).
- 3143. On which see Vol.I, Ch.24 (discharge by breach) and Ch.26 (damages).
- 3144. 2015 Act s.42(8).
- 3145. 2015 Act s.42(6) and (8) referring to breach of terms to which s.42(2), (4) or (5) apply.
- 3146. 2015 Act s.19(14) and (15) above, para.38-461; Consumer Sales Directive 1999 art.5(3).
- 3147. 2015 Act s.42(9), which specifies that its provision is for the purposes of s.42(2). As earlier noted, s.42(1) defines non-conformity of the digital content for this purpose as referring to where it is supplied other than in conformity with the statutory terms as to quality, fitness for particular purpose and description set by ss.34, 35 and 36 of the Act: above, para.38-504.
- 3148. 2015 Act s.42(10).
- 3149. On this category see 2015 Act s.33(1), (2) and (7) and above, paras 38-501—38-502. On the 1979 Act s.14, see below, paras 44-095 et seq.
- 3150. 2015 Act s.9, above, para.38—462.
- 3151. 1979 Act s.14(2).
- 3152. 2015 Act s.9(3)(b).
- 3153. 2015 Act s.9(4)(c).
- 3154. 1999 Directive art.1(2)(b) “consumer goods”. The provision governing public statements is found in art.2(2)(d) and (4). On these provisions see above, para.38-462.
- 3155. Explanatory Notes 2015 para.179.
- 3156. 2015 Act s.42(1) and (2) on the operation of which, see above, para.38-504. On the consumer’s rights and remedies see below, paras 38-517 et seq.
- 3157. See the special definition of this category by s.33, above, paras 38-501—38-502.
- 3158. See above, para.38-463. cf. Sale of Goods Act 1979 s.14(3), below, para.44-105 et seq.
- 3159. 2015 Act s.35(1).
- 3160. 2015 Act s.35(3). Section 35(2) and (4) provide for the application of subs.(3) in the case of sale by a credit-broker to a trader and the consumer makes the particular purpose known to the creditbroker. “Credit-broker” and “credit-brokerage” are defined by s.59(1) of the Act.
- 3161. 2015 Act s.35(4).
- 3162. 2015 Act s.35(5).
- 3163. 2015 Act s.42(1) and (2) on the operation of which, see above, para.38-504. On the consumer’s rights and remedies see below, paras 38-517 et seq.
- 3164. 2015 Act s.11 (above, para.38-464). On the 1979 Act s.13, see below, paras 44-086—44-087.
- 3165. 2015 Act s.34(4)(c), above, para.38-506.
- 3166. SI 2013/3134 especially regs 9, 10 and 13 referring to Schs 1 and 2 of the Regulations: see above, paras 38-056 et seq. and especially para.38-100.

- 3167. 2015 Act s.36(3)-(4).
- 3168. 2013 Regulations reg.5 provides that “‘functionality’ in relation to digital content includes region coding, restrictions incorporated for the purposes of digital rights management, and other technical restrictions”.
- 3169. 2013 Regulations Sch.1 paras (a), (j) and (k) (on-premises contracts); Sch.2 paras (a), (v) and (w) (off-premises contracts and distance contracts): for the full lists of information in these Schedules see above, paras 38-098 and 38-093 respectively.
- 3170. 2011 Directive art.6(5) (though applicable only to off-premises contracts and distance contracts): above, para.38-100.
- 3171. 2015 Act s.36(4); 2011 Directive art.6(5) (as regards off-premises contracts and distance contracts): above, para.38-100.
- 3172. Explanatory Notes 2015 para.185. On 2015 Act s.40, see below, para.38-514.
- 3173. 2015 Act s.42(1) and (2) on the operation of which, see above, para.38-504. On the consumer’s rights and remedies see below, paras 38-517 et seq.
- 3174. Above, para.38-465.
- 3175. SI 2013/3134 regs 9, 10 and 13 on which see above, paras 38-057 et seq. and especially 38-091—38-098. It is to be noted, though, that the scope of the 2013 Regulations is restricted in a number of important respects: see above, paras 38-071—38-073, 38-091.
- 3176. Above, para.38-508. The information relevant to s.37 is set out by 2013 Regulations Sch.1 paras (b)-(i) (on-premises contracts); Sch.2 paras (b)-(u) and (x) (off-premises contracts and distance contracts): for the full lists of information in these Schedules see above, paras 38-098 and 38-093 respectively.
- 3177. 2015 Act s.37(1)-(3) and cf. above, para.38-100.
- 3178. 2013 Regulations Schs 1 and 2, above, paras 38-098 and 38-093.
- 3179. 2015 Act s.37(3).
- 3180. “Facility” is not defined by the 2015 Act but it is used by s.33(3), on which see above, para.38-502.
- 3181. cf. 2015 Act s.19(5) making similar provision as regards “goods contracts”, above, para.38-465. For the general scheme of the 2015 Act in relation to the availability of consumer remedies in respect of digital content, see above, para.38-504.
- 3182. 2015 Act s.42(6)-(8), below, para.38-522.
- 3183. i.e. under 2015 Act ss.34 and 35, above, paras 38-506 and 38-507 respectively.
- 3184. 2015 Act s.38(2) provides that the rule in s.38(1) is subject to provision made by any other enactment, whenever passed or made. cf. 2015 Act s.18 above, para.38-470 for the equivalent provision in relation to goods contracts.
- 3185. For this right under the general law see Vol.I, Ch.24.
- 3186. This follows from the fact that 2015 Act s.42(6)-(8) (which provides for and restricts “other remedies” for the consumer) does not apply to breaches of express terms, but is instead restricted to breaches of the statutory terms foreseen by ss.34, 35, 36, 37 and 41(1) of the Act.

- 3187. On the definition of this category of contracts see 2015 Act s.33, above, paras 38-501—38-502.
- 3188. Explanatory Notes 2015 para.191.
- 3189. Explanatory Notes 2015 para.192.
- 3190. Explanatory Notes 2015 para.192.
- 3191. While this is specially provided for the purposes of Ch.3, this definitional provision applies only in the circumstances set out by s.39(1) of the 2015 Act: s.39(2).
- 3192. Explanatory Notes 2015 para.193.
- 3193. Explanatory Notes 2015 para.193.
- 3194. 2015 Act s.39(2). A trader which is in the contractual control of the consumer and which only provides a service by which the digital content reaches the consumer is not providing digital content for the purposes of Ch.3: 2015 Act s.33(4), though may be subject to provision in Ch.4 governing the provision of services: Explanatory Notes 2015 para.193.
- 3195. Explanatory Notes 2015 para.194.
- 3196.  Explanatory Notes 2015 para.194. See further Krebs (2017) J.B.L. 376.
- 3197. 2015 Act s.39(3).
- 3198. 2015 Act s.39(5).
- 3199. 2015 Act s.39(4).
- 3200. Explanatory Notes para.195.
- 3201. Explanatory Notes para.195.
- 3202. 2015 Act s.39(6) referring to ss.34, 35 and 36, on which see above, paras 38-506, 38-507 and 38-508 respectively.
- 3203. 2015 Act s.39(7) and s.42(1), (6)-(8) and see below, paras 38-517 et seq.
- 3204. Explanatory Notes 2015 para.196.
- 3205. i.e. 2015 Act s.62 on which see above, paras 38-358 et seq.
- 3206. 2015 Act s.40(1) referring to ss.34, 35 and 36 on which see above, paras 38-506, 38-507 and 38-508 respectively.
- 3207. 2015 Act s.40(2).
- 3208. SI 2013/3134 regs 9, 10 and 13 and see above, paras 38-056 et seq., especially 38-091—38-098 (for the information requirements) and above, para.38-508 (on s.36 of the 2015 Act).
- 3209. This follows from the restricted terms of s.42's provisions governing the presumption of nonconformity. So, s.42(9) applies the presumption only for the purposes of s.42(2), which refers to the consumer's rights arising from "non-conformity" as defined by s.42(2), i.e. where the digital content does not conform to the statutory terms in ss.34, 35 and 36. On the presumption of non-conformity, see above, para.38-505.
- 3210. 2015 Act s.40(3).

- 3211. This follows from s.5 of the Limitation Act 1980's provision that the action under a simple contract "shall not be brought after the expiration of six years from the date on which the cause of action accrued", on which see Vol.I, para.28-002 and paras 28-031 et seq.
- 3212. Explanatory Notes 2015 paras 199-200.
- 3213. 2015 Act s.41(1).
- 3214. For the definition of this category see 2015 Act s.33, above, paras 38-501—38-502.
- 3215. 2015 Act s.42(5). cf. below, para.38-519 for the more general situation where a consumer may be able to obtain a partial or even full refund by way of price reduction under s.44 of the Act.
- 3216. See below, para.38-521.
- 3217. 2015 Act s.45(1).
- 3218. 2015 Act s.45(2).
- 3219. Notably, s.20(15)-(17) (refund under goods contracts), above, para.38-479. Similarly, s.44(4)-(6) (refund as a result of price reduction in relation to digital content contract), below, para.38-519.
- 3220. 2015 Act s.45(3)-(5).

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 7. - Contracts for the Supply of Goods, Digital Content or Services

(c) - The New Law: Consumer Rights in Respect of Goods Contracts, Digital Content Contracts and Services Contracts

(iv) - Digital Content Contracts

(cc) - The Scheme of Remedies for the Consumer

Special rights for the consumer

38-517

It has been seen that the Act provides the consumer with a special right to a refund by s.45 of the 2015 Act for breach of the statutory term as to the trader's right to supply the digital content ³²²¹ and a very limited right to recover the amount of any costs incurred in respect of breach of the statutory term as to information contained in s.37 of the Act. ³²²² More generally, s.42 provides that, where the trader has committed a breach of a statutory term as to the satisfactory quality, fitness for a particular purpose or description of the digital content as provided by ss.33, 34 and 36 of the Act, the consumer has a right of repair or replacement (under s.43) and a right to a price reduction (under s.44). ³²²³ The Act acknowledges that the consumer may also enjoy a remedy for breach of one of these statutory terms under the general law. ³²²⁴

First level of remedies: right to repair or replacement

38-518

Much of s.43's provision for the right to repair or replacement of digital content under digital content contracts follows word for word s.23's provision for the right to repair or replacement of goods under goods contracts, ³²²⁵ with the exception that "digital content" is substituted for "goods". ³²²⁶ Under goods contracts, these rights implement in UK law the Consumer Sales Directive 1999, ³²²⁷ and while the Directive's requirements do not extend to contracts for the supply of digital content other than where supplied as part of a "tangible movable item", ³²²⁸ an English court is likely to interpret the provisions of s.43 which use the same words as s.23 in a harmonious way, and the latter must "wherever possible" be interpreted so as to conform the Directive's requirements. ³²²⁹ Section 43(2)-(4) of the 2015 Act provide that:

"(2)

If the consumer requires the trader to repair ³²³⁰ or replace the digital content, the trader must—do so within a reasonable time and without significant inconvenience to the consumer; and

(a)

(b)

bear any necessary costs incurred in doing so (including in particular the cost of any labour, materials or postage).

(3)

The consumer cannot require the trader to repair or replace the digital content if that remedy (the repair or the replacement)—

(a)

is impossible, or

(b)

is disproportionate compared to the other of those remedies.

(4)

Either of those remedies is disproportionate compared to the other if it imposes costs on the trader which, compared to those imposed by the other, are unreasonable, taking into account—the value which the digital content would have if it conformed to the contract,

(a)

(b)

the significance of the lack of conformity, and

(c)

whether the other remedy could be effected without significant inconvenience to the consumer.”

However, in certain respects s.43 amends the scheme foreshadowed by s.23, and the differences in the contexts of s.23 and s.43 may also require differences in interpretation. So, s.43(5) provides that:

“(5)

Any question as to what is a reasonable time or significant inconvenience is to be determined taking account of—

- (a)
 - the nature of the digital content, and
- (b)
 - the purpose for which the digital content was obtained or accessed.”

This differs from the parallel provision governing goods contracts, ³²³¹ in that it refers to the purpose for which the digital content was “obtained or accessed” rather than, under s.23(5) “for which the goods were acquired”. This reflects the fact that Ch.3’s statutory terms governing the quality etc. of digital content may apply not merely to digital content acquired under the contract to supply digital content, but also to digital content which is later supplied or accessed. ³²³² Moreover, s.43’s provisions require the consumer to give the trader time to perform repairs or, as the case may be, to replace the digital content (unless giving the trader that time would cause significant inconvenience to the consumer) and so relate only to these two rights, unlike s.23’s equivalent provisions which relate also to the consumer’s short-term right to reject the goods: this follows from the absence of any provision for the consumer to reject digital content, either under a short-term or a final right of rejection. ³²³³ However, unlike the position applicable to “goods contracts”, where the consumer has the right to a reduction in price if the goods do not conform to the contract after one repair or replacement by the trader, ³²³⁴ the consumer will not necessarily have the right to a reduction of price after requiring repair or replacement of digital content under s.43 even though the digital content still does not conform to the contract, but will do so only if the consumer has required the trader to repair or replace the digital content and the trader has not done so within a reasonable time and without significant inconvenience to the consumer. ³²³⁵ This difference reflects the fact that it is the nature of some forms of digital content (such as games) that they may contain a few “bugs” on release, which may require multiple fixing by the trader. ³²³⁶

Second level of remedy: right to price reduction

38-519

Section 44 of the 2015 Act provides for a right to price reduction for a consumer in respect of digital content which has failed to conform to the statutory terms as to quality, etc. which the Act itself provides. ³²³⁷ While to an extent this remedy reflects the pattern established by the Act for consumers in relation to “goods contracts” which implements the Consumer Sales Directive 1999, ³²³⁸ s.44 does not couple the right to price reduction with any right to reject the digital content or to rescind or otherwise terminate the contract. Under s.44(1)–(3):

- “(1)
 - The right to a price reduction is the right to require the trader to reduce the price to the consumer by an appropriate amount (including the right to receive a refund for anything already paid above the reduced amount).
- (2)

The amount of the reduction may, where appropriate, be the full amount of the price.

(3)

A consumer who has that right may only exercise it in one of these situations—

(a)

because of section 43(3)(a) the consumer can require neither repair nor replacement of the digital content, or the consumer has required the trader to repair or replace the digital content, but the trader is in breach of the requirement of section 43(2)(a) to do so within a reasonable time and without significant inconvenience to the consumer.”

(b)

Thus, in common with the position as regards the consumer’s right to a price reduction or final right to reject in respect of goods, ³²³⁹ the consumer’s right to a price reduction in respect of digital content applies only at a second level, where the first level remedies of repair or replacement are either not available or the trader has failed to perform them within a reasonable time and without significant inconvenience to the consumer, though the details of the circumstances differ. ³²⁴⁰ On the other hand, where a consumer has a right to a price reduction, is entitled to exercise it and does exercise it, in common with other provisions in the Act, any refund must be given without undue delay, and in any event within 14 days beginning with the day on which the trader agrees that the consumer is entitled to a refund, using the same means of payment as the consumer used to pay for the digital content, unless the consumer expressly agrees otherwise, and the trader must not impose any fee on the consumer in respect of the refund. ³²⁴¹

Discretion as to appropriate remedy

38-520

Section 58 of the 2015 Act provides that in any proceedings in which one of the three special remedies provided for consumers by Ch.3 ³²⁴² is sought, the court enjoys two additional powers. First, on the application of the consumer, the court may make an order requiring specific performance by the trader of any obligation imposed on the trader in respect of repair or replacement of the digital content. ³²⁴³ Secondly, where a consumer claims the right to repair or replacement or the right to a price reduction (termed the “relevant remedies” by s.58), but the court decides that the provisions governing these rights “have the effect that exercise of another of these rights is appropriate”, “the court may proceed as if the consumer had exercised that other right”. ³²⁴⁴ The court may make an order under s.58 unconditionally or on such terms and conditions as to damages, payment of the price and otherwise as it thinks just. ³²⁴⁵ These powers do not extend to the “other remedies” for consumers as this is understood by the Act and as explained in a later paragraph.

No right to reject digital content for breach of the statutory terms

38-521

Before publication of the Consumer Rights Bill, the Government consulted on the question whether future legislation should include within the new rights for consumers in respect of failures of quality etc in digital content a right to reject the digital content (with full refund) modelled on what became the short-term right to reject goods. ³²⁴⁶ The Government considered that the “unique nature of digital content means that this is not a straightforward decision”, as

“the concept of returning goods does not easily transfer to digital content since copies could be retained and any attempt to return the digital content to the trader could in fact result in another copy of digital content.” ³²⁴⁷

As enacted, the 2015 Act makes no provision for a right to reject digital content with a full refund, though, as has been seen, its provisions governing price reduction may in an appropriate case lead to a full refund. ³²⁴⁸ On the other hand, as earlier noted, in principle the 2015 Act does not prevent a consumer from treating the contract as at an end under the general law on the ground of breach of an express term as to the quality etc of the goods, and while this would lead to a refund of money paid by the consumer only if the consumer established a total failure of consideration, the consumer would be entitled to damages for nonperformance of the contract as a whole, any value the consumer has retained being deducted. ³²⁴⁹ Of more practical importance, perhaps, may be the consumer's admittedly very short-lived right to cancel a contract under which digital content is supplied under the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013, not least because this right is not subject to establishing that the digital content was in any sense faulty. ³²⁵⁰

Other remedies in respect of breach of the statutory terms

38-522

The 2015 Act acknowledges that, in principle, its provision of special rights for consumers under Pt 1 Ch.3 does not prevent them seeking other remedies in respect of breach of the statutory terms as to satisfactory quality, fitness for particular purpose, description, information supplied and the trader's right to supply. ³²⁵¹ In this respect, and depending on the circumstances, these other remedies may include damages, seeking to recover money paid where the consideration for payment of the money has failed, and seeking specific performance or relying on the breach against a claim by the trader for the price ³²⁵²; the conditions and characteristics of these remedies are found in the law applicable to contracts generally. ³²⁵³ However, the Act does not allow a consumer faced with breach of one of the statutory terms to treat the contract as at an end even if the general law would otherwise so allow, ³²⁵⁴ following its general refusal to provide a right of rejection of digital content to which such a right to treat the contract as at an end would be connected. ³²⁵⁵

^{3221.} Above, para.38-516.

^{3222.} Above, para.38-509.

^{3223.} 2015 Act s.42(1)-(2), above, para.38-504. On these rights see below, paras 38-518 and 38-519 respectively.

^{3224.} 2015 Act s.42(6)-(8), below, para.38-522.

^{3225.} On which see above, para.38-482.

^{3226.} This is true of s.43(1)-(4).

^{3227.} 1999 Directive art.3(2) and (3), above, para.38-400.

^{3228.} 1999 Directive art.1(2)(b) “consumer goods”.

^{3229.} Above, para.38-013.

- 3230. 2015 Act s.43(8) provides that in Ch.3 “‘repair’ in relation to digital content that does not conform to a contract, means making it conform”. It is therefore distinct from an update of digital content to which s.40 of the Act applies: on s.40 see above, para.38-514.
- 3231. Above, para.38-482.
- 3232. See above, para.38-513 in relation to s.39 of the 2015 Act.
- 3233. 2015 Act s.43(6) and (7), below, para.38-521.
- 3234. 2015 Act s.24(5)(a), above, para.38-483.
- 3235. 2015 Act s.44(3)(b), below, para.38-519.
- 3236. Explanatory Notes 2015 para.204.
- 3237. 2015 Act s.42(1) and (2).
- 3238. 2015 Act s.24; 1999 Directive art.3(5), above, paras 38-400, 38-483—38-484.
- 3239. 2015 Act s.24(5), above, para.38-483.
- 3240. The legislative expression here is odd, as s.44(3) does not say that the consumer has a right to a price reduction in these circumstances, but rather that the consumer may only exercise such a right in these circumstances.
- 3241. 2015 Act s.44(4)–(6).
- 3242. 2015 Act s.58(1), referring to s.42(2): the right to repair or replacement (under s.43) and the right to a price reduction (under s.44) (which are the “relevant remedies” under s.58(8)(b)).
- 3243. 2015 Act s.58(2) referring to s.43 of the Act, above, para.38-518.
- 3244. 2015 Act s.58(3) and (4).
- 3245. 2015 Act s.58(7).
- 3246. BIS, Enhancing Consumer Confidence by Clarifying Consumer Law (July 2012) (“BIS, Clarifying Consumer Law”) paras 7.137 et seq. which summarise the arguments for and against.
- 3247. BIS, Clarifying Consumer Law, para.7.138.
- 3248. 2015 Act s.44(2), above, para.38-519.
- 3249. See Vol.I, Ch.24 and especially para.24-052 and see also paras 29-057—29-067 (referring to “failure of basis”). The possibility of such a right of termination of the contract is allowed by the fact that the provisions in s.42(6)–(8) governing “other remedies” and preventing the consumer from treating the contract as at an end are restricted to breach of the statutory terms in ss.34–37 and 41(1) of the 2015 Act.
- 3250. SI 2013/3134 and see above, paras 38-057 et seq. and 38-107 et seq.
- 3251. 2015 Act s.42(6) referring to s.42(2), (4) and (5).
- 3252. 2015 Act s.42(7)(a), (b), (c) and (e) respectively.
- 3253. See Vol.I, Ch.26 (damages), Ch.27 (specific performance and injunction) and paras 21-028—21-039 on the question whether a party to a contract may rely on the other party’s breach in resisting the latter’s claim for the price. In the case of recover of money paid, the general condition at common law is that the injured party (the consumer) has to establish a total failure of consideration (or basis) and this would apparently always be impossible in the context of the supply of digital content since it requires that the contract is discharged, which s.42(8) forbids: for discussion of the requirement generally see Vol.I, paras 29-057 et seq.

3254. 2015 Act s.42(8).

3255. See above, para.38-521.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 7. - Contracts for the Supply of Goods, Digital Content or Services

(c) - The New Law: Consumer Rights in Respect of Goods Contracts, Digital Content Contracts and Services Contracts

(iv) - Digital Content Contracts

(dd) - Compensation for Damage to Device

Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.46

38-523

Under s.46 of the 2015 Act, where a trader supplies digital content to a consumer under a contract and the digital content causes damage to a device or to other digital content which belongs to the consumer and “the damage is of a kind that would not have occurred if the trader had exercised reasonable care and skill”, the consumer may require the trader either to repair the damage or compensate the consumer for the damage with an appropriate payment. ³²⁵⁶ For this purpose, any repair by the trader must be done within a reasonable time and without significant inconvenience to the consumer, and at the trader’s cost. ³²⁵⁷ The consumer may bring civil proceedings to enforce any right under s.46 and such a claim is treated as an action founded on simple contract for the purposes of limitation of actions. ³²⁵⁸ According to the Act’s Explanatory Notes the intention behind s.46 is “to engage the principles behind a negligence claim but limit the type of loss that can be claimed”, ³²⁵⁹ so as to create a remedy for the case, for example, where a consumer downloads software that contains a virus which causes loss or damage to the consumer’s device or to other digital content. ³²⁶⁰ For this purpose, however, it is by no means clear that a claim in the tort of negligence would exist, for no duty of care has been recognised by the courts in this context and in the case of damage to other digital content, it would be a nice question whether this would constitute damage to property or pure economic loss. ³²⁶¹ This supplements any remedy which the consumer may enjoy where a consumer can establish that a breach of a statutory term (either in a goods contract in which digital content is supplied or in a digital content contract) has caused the damage. ³²⁶² Section 46 is an innovative provision in a number of ways. First, while the consumer’s remedies require proof of a causal link between the digital content supplied by a trader under a contract and damage to the consumer’s “property” (whether this is a device or digital content), they do not require proof that this damage was caused by the negligence of the trader supplying it; instead, the consumer’s remedies arise where “the damage is of a kind that would not have occurred if the trader had exercised reasonable care and skill”, which appears to be at most a statutory expression of res ipsa loquitur as to the trader’s negligence. Secondly, the consumer’s remedies pick up the Act’s more general recourse to a right of repair, though here the trader may be required to repair something (whether a device or digital content) which it did not itself supply under the contract. However, the trader is permitted to opt to pay compensation instead of repairing. Thirdly, while the Explanatory Notes to s.46 compare the position under a “negligence claim”, the consumer’s remedies under s.46 arise only where digital content is supplied by a trader to a consumer under a contract, and the consumer’s claim is subjected to the general contractual period of limitation.

³²⁵⁶. 2015 Act s.46(1)–(2). The compensation payment must be made without undue delay, and in any event within 14 days beginning with the day on which the trader agrees that the consumer is entitled to the payment; and the trader must not impose any fee on the consumer in respect of the payment: s.46(5) and (6).

- 3257. 2015 Act s.46(3), subs.(b) of which specifies that these necessary costs include in particular the cost of any labour, materials or postage. Section 46(4) provides that: “any question as to what is a reasonable time or significant inconvenience is to be determined taking account of (a) the nature of the device or digital content that is damaged, and (b) the purpose for which it is used by the consumer”.
- 3258. 2015 Act s.46(8) and see especially Limitation Act 1980 s.5 and Vol.I, paras 28-031 et seq.
- 3259. Explanatory Notes 2015 para.219.
- 3260. Explanatory Notes 2015 para.219.
- 3261. On the case-law surrounding recovery of pure economic loss in the tort of negligence see Clerk and Lindsell on Torts, 21st edn (2014), paras 8–93 et seq. There would also be difficulties facing a consumer claiming that “digital content” supplied would itself constitute a “defective product” for the purposes of the statutory product liability in Pt 1 of the Consumer Protection Act 1987 as it is by no means clear that a “product” for this purpose includes non-physical property apart from electricity: see 1987 Act s.1(1), Clerk and Lindsell on Torts, paras 11–49—11–51 and Whittaker (1989) 105 L.Q.R. 125.
- 3262. The relevant provisions of the 2015 Act are found in ss.9–11, 16 (goods contracts) and ss.34–36 (digital content contracts). Liability in damages under the general law for breach of the statutory terms inserted by these provisions is foreseen by s.19(9)–(10), and (11)(a) (goods contracts) and s.42(6) and (7)(a) (digital content contracts).

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 7. - Contracts for the Supply of Goods, Digital Content or Services

(c) - The New Law: Consumer Rights in Respect of Goods Contracts, Digital Content Contracts and Services Contracts

(iv) - Digital Content Contracts

(ee) - Exclusion of Liability

Exclusion of liability

38-524

Section 47 provides an almost identical pattern of control of any attempted exclusion or restriction of liability as the Act earlier makes as regards the exclusion of the trader's liabilities under goods contracts, rendering such terms "not binding on the consumer to the extent that [the term] would exclude or restrict the trader's liability" arising under the provisions which insert statutory terms relating to the satisfactory quality, fitness for particular purpose, description, other pre-contractual information and trader's right to supply. ³²⁶³ Section 47 makes identical provision for this purpose as the Act earlier makes as regards goods contracts in relation to the meaning of excluding or restricting liability which is modelled on s.13 of the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977. ³²⁶⁴ The exception to this pattern is that a trader's liabilities arising under s.46 in relation to damage to a device or other digital content caused by digital content may be excluded or restricted to the extent that it would satisfy the controls on unfair terms in consumer contracts generally in Pt 2 of the 2015 Act. ³²⁶⁵

Choice of law

38-525

Unlike the position in relation to "goods contracts" in Pt 1 Ch.2 ³²⁶⁶ and the controls on unfair terms in Pt 2 of the 2015 Act, ³²⁶⁷ Ch.3 of the Act makes no special provision as regards the effect of choice of law on the protections for consumers which it sets out. This reflects the fact that, unlike these earlier provisions, ³²⁶⁸ Ch.3's provisions are not required by EU legislation which itself sets out a special rule on the effect of choice of law. This means that the effect of any choice of law falls to be governed under the general private international law rules applicable and, in particular, the Rome I Regulation on the law applicable to contractual obligations. ³²⁶⁹

Enforcement

38-526

! Section 47(5) of the 2015 Act provides that a regulator may enforce s.47's provisions rendering terms seeking to exclude the trader's liability not binding on a consumer under the scheme of enforcement which the Act provides generally for the control of unfair contract terms. ³²⁷⁰ This scheme has been described earlier, as have the difficulties of its use in relation to commercial practices which consist of the use or recommendation for use of terms in ways which do not reflect EU legislative requirements. ³²⁷¹ In the case of digital content contracts, as has earlier been noted, Ch.3 of the 2015 Act does not implement any EU legislation (though some of its provisions are modelled on the Consumer Sales Directive beyond the latter's scope ³²⁷²), with the exception of certain provisions implementing the Consumer Rights Directive 2011. ³²⁷³ As a result, the relevant provisions in Ch.3 of Pt 1 of the 2015 Act which implement the 2011 Directive or which "provide additional permitted protections" ³²⁷⁴  have been designated as specified UK laws for the purposes of s.212 of the 2002 Act. ³²⁷⁵  In addition, acts or omissions in respect of any provision in Pt 1 of the 2015 Act are specified as possible "domestic infringements" for the purposes of s.211 of the Enterprise Act 2002. ³²⁷⁶

^{3263.} 2015 Act s.47(1) referring to ss.34–37 and 41 of the Act. In one respect, the controls differ, as s.47 renders terms seeking to exclude the trader's liability in respect of breach of s.41 (trader's right to supply digital content) not binding on the consumer in all circumstances, whereas the controls in s.31 on the exclusion of the trader's liability in respect of breach of s.17 (trader's right to supply the goods etc.) under a contract of hire is subject to a test of fairness: 2015 Act s.31(5)–(6). On the controls on the exclusion of the trader's liabilities under "goods contracts" see 2015 Act s.31 and above, para.38-492.

^{3264.} 2015 Act s.47(2)–(4). cf. 2015 Act s.31(2)–(4) as explained above, para.38-492.

^{3265.} 2015 Act s.47(6) and see 2015 Act s.62 and above, paras 38-358 et seq.

^{3266.} 2015 Act s.32 (implementing Consumer Sales Directive 1999 art.7(2)), above, para.38-494.

^{3267.} 2015 Act s.74 (implementing Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Directive 1993 art.6(2)) above, para.38-386.

^{3268.} See above, nn.3059 and 3060.

^{3269.} Regulation (EC) 593/2008 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 17 June 2008 on the law applicable to contractual obligations ("Rome I") [2008] O.J. L177/6 on which generally see Vol.I, paras 30-129 et seq.

^{3270.} 2015 Act Sch.3.

^{3271.} See above, paras 38-387 et seq.

^{3272.} Above, paras 38-506 (statutory term as to satisfactory quality) and paras 38-518–38-519 (special remedies for consumer).

^{3273.} 2011 Directive art.6(5) in relation to s.36(3)–(4) and s.37, as explained above, paras 38-508 and 38-509. As earlier noted in n.2247, the 2011 Directive art.25 renders all its provisions "imperative" and so incapable of exclusion by agreement in all circumstances.

^{3274.}  Enterprise Act 2002 s.212(1)(b).

^{3275.}  Enterprise Act 2002 s.212(3); Enterprise Act 2002 (Part 8 EU Infringements) Order 2014 (SI 2014/2908) art.4; Schedule (as amended by the Enterprise Act 2002 (Part 8 Community Infringements and Specified UK Laws) (Amendment) Order 2015 (SI 2015/1628) art.3(2)) listing, inter alia, 2015 Act ss.36(3)–(4), 37, 38 and 42.

^{3276.}  Enterprise Act 2002 s.211(2); Enterprise Act 2002 (Part 8 Domestic Infringements) Order 2015 (SI 2015/1727) art.2.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 7. - Contracts for the Supply of Goods, Digital Content or Services

(c) - The New Law: Consumer Rights in Respect of Goods Contracts, Digital Content Contracts and Services Contracts

(v) - Services Contracts

(aa) - Introduction

Background

38-527

The general motivations for the inclusion of provisions in Pt 1 of the Consumer Rights Act 2015 governing “services contracts” ³²⁷⁷ reflects longstanding concerns in the Law Commission and in government that English law’s treatment of these contracts in the context of consumer-contracting was piecemeal and incomplete. The main provisions applicable were those governing “contracts for the supply of a service” put in place by the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 (the “1982 Act”) applicable irrespective of the status of the contracting parties. To a considerable extent, the new provisions in Pt 1 Ch.4 of the 2015 Act which apply to contracts “for a trader to supply a service to a consumer” or “services contracts”, reflect the earlier provisions in the 1982 Act (with some change of wording), but Ch.4 makes new provision for the contractual status of information supplied by the trader to the consumer (whether or not it was required to be supplied under the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 (“2013 Regulations”), ³²⁷⁸ for new special remedies for the consumer if the trader breaches the statutory terms which it creates (being the “right to repeat performance” and the right to a price reduction) ³²⁷⁹ and dedicated and original controls on the exclusion by agreement of liability in the trader. ³²⁸⁰

No statutory definition of “services contracts”

38-528

Ch.4 of the 2015 Act applies to “a contract for a trader to supply a service to a consumer” which it terms a “contract to supply a service” ³²⁸¹ or (in its headings) “services contracts”, the last name being used in the following paragraphs. Apart from the fact that this makes clear that Ch.4 does not apply to contracts for services to be supplied by a consumer to a trader, ³²⁸² the only further clarification given is that the Act states that this “does not include a contract of employment or apprenticeship”. ³²⁸³ In these respects, Ch.4 follows the precedent set by the 1982 Act, ³²⁸⁴ and, as a result, the understanding of the contracts to be governed by Ch.4’s provisions will fall to be decided, at least in part, by reference to the traditional distinction between contracts for services and contracts of employment (sometimes called contract of service). ³²⁸⁵ This leaves a very wide range of contracts within the scope of Ch.4’s provisions. ³²⁸⁶ Moreover, it must be recalled that the 2015 Act specifically provides that each of Chs 2 to 4 can apply even if the contract covers something covered by another chapter of Pt 1. ³²⁸⁷ The 2015 Act amends the 1982 Act so that the contracts to which Ch.4 applies are no longer governed by the relevant provisions of the 1982 Act. ³²⁸⁸

Limited EU legislative background

38-529

In general, the provisions of Ch.4 of Pt 1 of the 2015 Act do not implement EU legislation, but an exception to this position is found in relation to s.50, which provides that information required to be supplied by the trader to the consumer under the 2013 Regulations is to be treated as a term of the contract: this implements a particular aspect of the Consumer Rights Directive 2011. 3289

3277. The 2015 Act's substantive provisions on "services contracts" generally came into force on October 1, 2015, but exceptions have been made as regards certain categories of "consumer transport service" as explained in Vol.II, para.38-403, esp. at n.2395.

3278. 2015 Act s.50. On the 2013 Regulations generally, see above, paras 38-057 et seq.

3279. 2015 Act s.54–56.

3280. 2015 Act s.57.

3281. 2015 Act s.48(4).

3282. The definitions of "consumer" and "trader" in s.2(2)–(7) of the 2015 Act apply. On these see above, paras 38-353 and 38-352 respectively.

3283. 2015 Act s.48(2).

3284. 1982 Act s.12(1) and (2).

3285. See below, paras 40-002, 40-005, 40-010 et seq.

3286. In common with the 1982 Act s.12(4)–(5), s.48(5)–(8) of the 2015 Act empowers the Secretary of State to provide by Order that a provision within Ch.4 does not apply in relation to a service of a description specified in the order.

3287. 2015 Act s.1(4)–(5) referring to these as "mixed contracts": above, para.38-450. The 2015 Act therefore omits provision similar to s.12(3) of the 1982 Act which includes within the definition of contract for the supply of a service a contract whether or not goods are also to be transferred or bailed by way of hire under the contract.

3288. 2015 Act s.60, Sch.1 paras 37–38 and 51 amending, notably, s.12 of the 1982 Act.

3289. 2011 Directive art.6(5) on which see above para.38-100 and on s.50 of the 2015 Act see below, para.38-535.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 7. - Contracts for the Supply of Goods, Digital Content or Services

(c) - The New Law: Consumer Rights in Respect of Goods Contracts, Digital Content Contracts and Services Contracts

(v) - Services Contracts

(bb) - The statutory terms

The relationship between the statutory terms, non-conformity of the service to the contract and the consumer's remedies

38-530

Following the legislative pattern set by Pt 1's provision governing goods and digital content, 3290 the 2015 Act makes special provision as to how breach of the statutory terms which it inserts into contracts for a trader to supply services to a consumer relates to the scheme of remedies for the consumer which it sets out. For this purpose, s.54(2) of the Act defines "a service conforming to a contract" 3291 as a reference to:

"(a)

the service being performed in accordance with section 49, or the service conforming to a term that section 50 requires to be treated as included in the contract and that relates to the performance of the service." 3292

(b)

As will be seen, s.49 inserts into the contract a statutory term that the service is to be performed with reasonable care and skill, 3293 and s.50 makes original provision according to which "anything that is said or written to the consumer" by the trader "about the trader or about the service" may (subject to the conditions there specified) become a term of the contract and any information provided by the trader as required by the 2013 Regulations will become a term of the contract. 3294 In this respect, s.54(2)(b)'s definition of "a service conforming to a contract" is therefore restricted: it does not include breaches of all the terms treated as included by s.50, but is limited to those where the term (and therefore the information) "relates to the performance of the service". Where the service does not conform to the contract in the special sense just outlined, the consumer has a "right to require repeat performance" and the right to a price reduction, subject to the conditions and qualifications on the availability on these rights which are later set out. 3295 On the other hand, where the trader is in breach of a statutory term required by s.50 which does not relate to the service or is in breach of the statutory term requiring the trader to perform within a reasonable time inserted by s.52, then, the consumer has a special right only to a price reduction. 3296 In keeping with its approach to the remedies available to the consumer under Chs 2 and 3 in relation to goods contracts and digital content contracts, 3297 s.54 of the Act also provides that it does not prevent a consumer seeking “other remedies” under the general law for a breach of the statutory terms imposing duties on the trader under Ch.4, though, unlike the earlier provisions, it includes within these other remedies a right to treat the contract as at an end. ³²⁹⁸

Service to be performed with reasonable care and skill

38-531

Reflecting both the common law of implied term and s.13 of the 1982 Act, s.49(1) provides that:

“Every contract to supply a service is to be treated as including a term that the trader must perform the service with reasonable care and skill.”

Given that no special explanation is provided for what is meant by “reasonable care” for these purposes, recourse should be made to earlier case-law on this notion in the context of the 1982 Act and more generally at common law. ³²⁹⁹ Similarly, the consumer bears the burden of proof of establishing that the trader failed to exercise reasonable care in the performance of the service. Breach of this statutory term may give rise to a right in the consumer to repeat performance or a price reduction, ³³⁰⁰ as well as the possibility of a remedy for breach of contract under the general law. ³³⁰¹

Information about the trader or service to be binding

38-532

Section 50 of the 2015 Act makes new, significant and quite complex provision rendering “anything that is said or written to the consumer” and certain categories of information supplied by the trader to the consumer binding on the trader by the creation of new statutory terms of the contract. For this purpose, s.50 distinguishes two situations.

Things “said or written” by the trader in the absence of a duty to do so

38-533

First, s.50(1) provides that:

“Every contract to supply a service is to be treated as including as a term of the contract anything that is said or written to the consumer, by or on behalf of the trader, about the trader or the service, if—

- (a) it is taken into account by the consumer when deciding to enter into the contract, or
- (b) it is taken into account by the consumer when making any decision about the service after entering into the contract.”

So, “anything that is said or written to the consumer, by or on behalf of the trader, about the trader or the service” will constitute a term of the contract, subject to the two conditions set by (a) or (b) and a qualification set by s.50(2). ³³⁰² Section 50(1) is therefore restricted to things “said or written” “about the trader or the service”; the second of these is obvious, but an example of the first may be found in a commitment made by a trader to paying its workers a minimum wage. ³³⁰³ When compared to the general position under the law of misrepresentation, “anything that is said or written” is very inclusive as it is not restricted to information (which may imply something factual) and could, therefore, include what the common law would treat as a representation of opinion or future fact ³³⁰⁴; on the other hand, at common law a misrepresentation of fact can take place by conduct, ³³⁰⁵ whereas conduct could not be said to constitute “anything that is said or written”. As regards the two conditions, the condition in (a) is straightforward as it provides a particular form of causal link between “what is said or written” by the trader and the consumer’s decision to enter into the contract. This is familiar from the law of misrepresentation, where an actionable misrepresentation must induce the contract. ³³⁰⁶ However, the alternative condition in (b) is new and allows anything said or written which relates to the trader or the service if it is to be taken into account by the consumer “when making any decision about the service after entering into the contract”. ³³⁰⁷ The latter condition could be satisfied where what is said or written to the consumer relates to the choices which he or she will enjoy in the course of performance of the contract.

38-534

As noted earlier, the impact of s.50(1) is qualified and this is effected by s.50(2), according to which:

“Anything taken into account by the consumer as mentioned in subsection (1)(a) or (b) is subject to—anything that qualified it and was said or written to the consumer by the trader on the same occasion, and any change to it that has been expressly agreed between the consumer and the trader (before entering into the contract or later).”

(a)

(b)

So, the impact of s.50(1) may be qualified either by what the trader says or writes at the time or by any change agreed between the consumer, whether before entering the contract or at some later date. ³³⁰⁸ Despite these qualifications, it will be seen that the 2015 Act gives contractual force to pre-contractual statements in a range of situations where it would not be clearly the case under the general law of “warranty”. ³³⁰⁹

Information supplied as required by 2013 Regulations

38-535

The second situation foreseen by s.50 is provided by s.50(3), which provides that information which the trader was required to provide to the consumer under the Consumer Contracts (Information Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 is to be treated as a term of the contract. ³³¹⁰ Following the pattern set by statutory terms which the 2015 Act provides for “goods contracts” and “digital content contracts”, ³³¹¹ s.50(4) requires that change to any of the information mentioned in s.54(3), “made before entering into the contract or later, is not effective unless expressly agreed between the consumer and the trader”.

Remedies for breach

38-536

Where a trader breaches a statutory term treated as included in the contract under s.50(1) or (3), the consumer's special remedies differ according to whether the term (and therefore what was said or written or the information provided) related to the service (in which case they may consist of the right to repeat performance or price reduction) ³³¹² or to the trader, when it may consist only of price reduction, ³³¹³ though in both cases the consumer may equally enjoy a remedy for breach of contract under the general law. ³³¹⁴

Service to be performed within a reasonable time

38-537

Section 52 of the 2015 Act makes very similar provision as does s.14 of the 1982 Act for contracts for services more generally, setting a statutory term "that the trader must perform the service in a reasonable time", ³³¹⁵ where the contract does not expressly fix the time for the service to be performed, and does not say how it is to be fixed, and information that is to be treated under section 50 as included in the contract does not fix the time either." ³³¹⁶

"(a)

(b)

This condition differs substantively from s.14 only in that it refers for this purpose to information which has been incorporated into the contract under s.50. As earlier noted, breach by the trader of a statutory term inserted by s.52 gives rise to a right to a price reduction and may give rise to other remedies for breach of contract under the general law. ³³¹⁷

Reasonable price to be paid for a service

38-538

Section 51 of the 2015 Act provides that, where the consumer has not paid a price or other consideration for the service, and where the contract does not expressly fix a price or other consideration, and does not say how it is to be fixed, and "anything that is to be treated under section 50 as included in the contract does not fix a price or other consideration either", then "the contract is to be treated as including a term that the consumer must pay a reasonable price for the service, and no more". ³³¹⁸

While s.51 reflects closely s.15 of the 1982 Act, it is unusual in the 2015 Act in that it may lead to the imposition of an obligation on the consumer to the trader, but it is required so as to allow the neat separation of the 2015 Act (applicable to consumer contracts) and the 1982 Act (applicable to other contracts); and the final three words "and no more" allow s.51 to make some claim as being useful for the protection of consumers. The 2015 Act makes no provision for breach by the consumer of any term inserted into the contract by s.51 and this is therefore left to the general law, notably the trader's action for the price. ³³¹⁹

Express terms; relation of statutory terms to other law on contract Terms

38-539

⚠ The 2015 Act provides that the special remedies which it provides for the consumer “do not affect any rights that the contract provides for, if those are not inconsistent”. ³³²⁰ So, for example, a clause in a contract may provide the consumer with a power of termination of the contract, whether for breach by the trader or on some other ground. At common law, such an express clause takes effect on its terms as properly construed and, given that the Act makes no provision of this sort in its scheme of rights for the consumer, a right in the consumer under such an express clause would not be inconsistent with the consumer’s special remedies. As will be seen, the Act makes further provision as to the possible exclusion or limitation of the special rights which it creates for consumers in relation to services. ³³²¹ Secondly, the 2015 Act provides that nothing in Ch.4 “affects any enactment or rule of law that imposes a stricter duty on the trader” ³³²² and is also:

“subject to any other enactment which defines or restricts the rights, duties or liabilities arising in connection with a service of any description.” ³³²³ ⚠

These provisions all follow closely similar provisions in the 1982 Act. ³³²⁴

^{3290.} 2015 Act s.19 (goods contracts) and s.42 (digital content contracts), above, paras 38-459 and 38-504 respectively.

^{3291.} This definition is stated as being for the purposes of the relevant provisions, i.e. ss.54 and 55 of the Act.

^{3292.} 2015 Act s.54(2).

^{3293.} Below, para.38-531.

^{3294.} 2015 Act s.50(1)–(3), below, paras 38-532—38-536.

^{3295.} 2015 Act ss.54(3), 55 and 56 and see below, paras 38-540—38-543.

^{3296.} 2015 Act ss.54(4) and (5), 56 and see below, para.38-542.

^{3297.} 2015 Act s.19(9)–(13) and s.42(6)–(8) on which see above, paras 38-486 and 38-522 respectively.

^{3298.} 2015 Act s.54(6)–(7). The restriction to statutory terms imposing duties on the trader follows from the restriction in s.54(6) to breach of terms to which subs.(3)–(5) apply and these provisions do not apply to s.51’s statutory term as to reasonable price to be paid by the consumer: on s.51 see below, para.38-538.

^{3299.} cf. Vol.I para.14-037.

^{3300.} 2015 Ac s.54(2)–(3) as explained above, para.38-530. The remedies of repeat performance and price reduction are explained below, paras 38-541—38-543.

^{3301.} 2015 Act s.54(6) and (7), below, para.38-544.

- 3302. Below, para.38-534.
- 3303. Explanatory Notes 2015 para.249.
- 3304. cf. Vol.I, paras 7-006 et seq.
- 3305. See Vol.I, paras 7-018—7-019.
- 3306. See Vol.I, para.7-035.
- 3307. 2015 Act s.50(1)(b) (emphasis added).
- 3308. In principle, such a term in a consumer contract which effected such a change could itself be an unfair term and so not binding on the consumer under s.62 of the 2015 Act, on which see above, paras 38-358 et seq.
- 3309. See Vol.I paras 7-004, 13-003—13-005.
- 3310. 2015 Act s.54(3); 2013 Regulations regs 9, 10 and 13 on which see generally above, paras 38-057 et seq. and (for the information requirements themselves), paras 38-093 and 38-098, implementing (in particular) the 2011 Directive art.6(5) (as explained above, para.38-100). It is to be noted, though, that the scope of the 2013 Regulations is restricted in a number of important respects: see above, paras 38-071—38-073, 38-091.
- 3311. 2015 Act s.11(5) and 12(3) (goods contracts), above, paras 38-464 and 38-465; ss.36(4) and 37(3) (digital content contracts), above, paras 38-508 and 38-509.
- 3312. 2015 Act s.54(2)–(3) above, para.38-530.
- 3313. 2015 Act s.54(4) above, para.38-530.
- 3314. 2015 Act s.54(6)–(7), below, para.38-544.
- 3315. 2015 Act s.50(2). “What is reasonable time is a question of fact”: 2015 Act 52(3).
- 3316. 2015 Act s.52(1).
- 3317. 2015 Act s.54(5)–(6), above, para.38-530. On the right to a price reduction, see below, para.38-542.
- 3318. 2015 Act s.51(1) and (2). “What is a reasonable price is a question of fact”: 2015 Act s.51(3).
- 3319. See Vol.I, para.26-008 (though ex hypothesi, the trader’s claim for enforcement of the statutory term inserted by s.51 would not be for an agreed sum).
- 3320. 2015 Act s.54(1).
- 3321. 2015 Act s.57, below, para.38-546.
- 3322. e.g. Greaves & Co (Contractors) Ltd v Baynham Meikle & Partners [1975] 1 W.L.R. 1095, above, para.37-198.
- 3323.  2015 Act s.53. An example may be found in relation to contracts of services governed by the carriage of air conventions (notably, the Warsaw Convention and the Montreal Convention, on which see Vol.II, paras 35-002 et seq.) which, in the view of the UK government, will remain the exclusive basis of liability on the routes to which they apply even after the 2015 Act applies to them: Department of Transport, Applying the Consumer Rights Act 2015 to the rail, aviation and maritime sectors, Response to Consultation, Moving Britain Ahead (July 2016), para.2.8.

3324. 1982 Act s.16(2)–(4).

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 7. - Contracts for the Supply of Goods, Digital Content or Services

(c) - The New Law: Consumer Rights in Respect of Goods Contracts, Digital Content Contracts and Services Contracts

(v) - Services Contracts

(cc) - The Scheme of Remedies for the Consumer

Introduction

38-540

In the case of services contracts, the range of special remedies is reduced to two: a right to repeat performance and a right to price reduction. Where the consumer has both these rights in the sense that the breach of the statutory term in question gives rise to them both under s.54(3), ³³²⁵ then the Act places them at two levels: the right to repeat performance first, the right to price reduction second. However, in cases where the consumer has only the special remedy of price reduction (i.e. where the trader is in breach of a s.50 term that does not relate to the service or in breach of the term to perform within a reasonable time ³³²⁶), then, of course, there is no hierarchy of remedies: the consumer is restricted to, but also can immediately rely on, the right to price reduction.

A right to repeat performance

38-541

This is an original and, at first sight, a rather startling remedy. It clearly reflects in very broad terms the right to repair or replacement provided by the 2015 Act for consumers under goods contracts and digital content contracts ³³²⁷ in that it seeks to ensure that consumers receive the performance which they pay for. Accordingly, s.55(1)–(4) provides that:

“(1)

The right to require repeat performance is a right to require the trader to perform the service again, to the extent necessary to complete its performance in conformity with the contract.

(2)

If the consumer requires such repeat performance, the trader—

(a)

must provide it within a reasonable time and without significant inconvenience to the consumer; and

(b)

must bear any necessary costs incurred in doing so (including in particular the cost of any labour or materials).

(3)

The consumer cannot require repeat performance if completing performance of the service in conformity with the contract is impossible.

(4)

Any question as to what is a reasonable time or significant inconvenience is to be determined taking account of—the nature of the service, and the purpose for which the service was to be performed.””

(a)

(b)

Where a consumer has this right, ³³²⁸ the only restriction on its availability is therefore that “the consumer cannot require repeat performance if completing performance of the service in conformity with the contract is impossible”. ³³²⁹ For this purpose, impossibility could relate not merely to physical impossibility but also to impossibility in the sense that a repeat performance would be impossible, as in the case where performance of the services is time specific. ³³³⁰ Nevertheless, this is a very different position from the general law governing the availability of specific performance of a contract for the provision of services, ³³³¹ though as will be explained, the consumer’s right to require repeat performance will not necessarily lead to an order of specific performance of the service by the trader. ³³³² As earlier noted, the right to repeat performance is placed at a first level of the consumer’s special remedies in the sense that, where a consumer “has” both remedies, the right to a price reduction arises only where the right to repeat performance is unavailable or has failed in two specified senses. ³³³³ The new right to repeat performance may be illustrated by reference to the facts of the well-known decision of the House of Lords in Ruxley Electronics and Construction Ltd v Forsyth, where a landowner (apparently qualifying as a “consumer” within the meaning of the 2015 Act) commissioned the building of a swimming pool of a stipulated depth, and when it failed to conform to the stipulation, claimed the cost of reinstatement by way of damages for breach of contract. ³³³⁴ This claim failed, on the basis that this cost was out of all proportion to the advantage to be gained by the landowner from reinstatement. However, such a contract would qualify as a contract for services within the meaning of Ch.4 of the 2015 Act; the contractual stipulation as to the depth of the pool would count as something “said or written” to the consumer under s.50(1) and, given that it would relate to performance of the service so as to fall within s.54(2)(b) and would therefore give rise to the right to repeat performance under s.54(3)(a). What is much less clear is whether a court would wish to order specific performance in support of the consumer’s claim to repeat performance in circumstances such as these. ³³³⁵

A right to price reduction

38-542

According to s.56(1) of the Act:

“(1)

The right to a price reduction is the right to require the trader to reduce the price to the consumer by an appropriate amount (including the right to receive a refund for anything already paid above the reduced amount).

(2)

The amount of the reduction may, where appropriate, be the full amount of the price.”

For these purposes, s.56 makes similar provision as to the payment of any refund without undue delay, by the same means of payment, and without the imposition of a fee as Pt 1 provides more widely for refunds. ³³³⁶ The Explanatory Notes to the Act suggest that a reduction in the price by an appropriate amount will normally mean that the price is reduced by the difference in value between the service the consumer paid for and the value of the service as provided and that this will take into account the benefit which the consumer has derived from the service. ³³³⁷ However, they acknowledge that there may be some cases where the trader’s breach has not reduced the value of the service to the consumer:

“This could occur, for example, where the trader has not complied with information they gave about themselves. ³³³⁸ For example, if the trader tells the consumer that they will pay their workers the living wage and this is important to the consumer and a reason why they decided to go with this particular trader, arguably this does not affect the value of the service but the consumer would still have the right to request a reduction of an “appropriate amount” to account for the breach.” ³³³⁹

As earlier explained, the right to a price reduction is either available by itself (as in the cases where the trader has broken a term inserted by s.50 which does not relate to performance of the service or the statutory term to perform within a reasonable time ³³⁴⁰) or coupled with a right to repeat performance. Where it is available by itself, the consumer can exercise it freely as foreseen by s.56(1) and (2). However, where the consumer “has” both the remedies in the sense of s.54(2)–(3) of the Act (which makes these two remedies available to a consumer where the trader breaches the statutory term of reasonable care or a term that s.50 treats as included which relates to performance of the service), then the Act sets the right to repeat performance at a first level and allows the right to price reduction at a second level. ³³⁴¹ This is effected by s.56(3) of the 2015 Act, according to which:

“A consumer who has [the right to a price reduction] and the right to require repeat performance ³³⁴² is only entitled to a price reduction in one of these situations—

(a)

because of section 55(3) the consumer cannot require repeat performance; or the consumer has required repeat performance, but the trader is in breach of the requirement of section 55(2)(a) to do it within a reasonable time and without significant inconvenience to the consumer.”

(b)

This is drafted in an odd way, as it provides that where a consumer has a right to a price reduction, he or she “is only entitled” to it in one of these two situations. Be that as it may, the effect of this provision is that in the circumstances where the Act provides the consumer with both these rights, he or she must in principle require the right to repeat performance first and proceed to price reduction only if the first right is impossible or if the trader has failed to repeat performance within a reasonable time and without significant inconvenience to the consumer. This means, in effect, that, in principle, under the special scheme of remedies, the consumer must first require the trader to re-perform the service and thereby give the trader another chance to perform in conformity with the contract and another chance to earn (or keep) the price. There may, however, be a way by which a consumer who wishes to require price reduction could do so without first requiring repeat performance, notably, where the consumer had lost confidence in the trader. If “impossibility of performance” by the trader, were held to include the situation where the trader cannot perform without co-operation by the consumer,³³⁴³ then, on a literal reading of s.55(3), the consumer could not require repeat performance and this in turn could then be said to trigger the availability of the right to price reduction.³³⁴⁴ However, such a reading is unnatural, as it would be odd to hold that the consumer does not have a right to repeat performance (and so can enjoy a right to price reduction) owing to a decision which the consumer has himself or herself made (the decision not to co-operate with the trader’s further performance). Either way, the special scheme of rights for the consumer in s.54 to 56 of the Act does not affect the availability of a remedy for breach of contract under the general law and, particularly in the case of a serious breach where the consumer has lost confidence in the trader, any right in the consumer to terminate the contract for breach and/or claim damages may seem more attractive.

Discretion as to appropriate remedy

38-543

Section 58 of the 2015 Act provides that in any proceedings in which one of the two special remedies provided for consumers by Ch.4³³⁴⁵ is sought, the court enjoys two additional powers. First, on the application of the consumer, the court may make an order requiring specific performance by the trader of any obligation imposed on the trader in respect of repeat performance.³³⁴⁶ Secondly, where a consumer claims the right to repeat performance or the right to a price reduction (termed the “relevant remedies” by s.58), but the court decides that the provisions governing these rights “have the effect that exercise of another of these rights is appropriate”, “the court may proceed as if the consumer had exercised that other right”.³³⁴⁷ The court may make an order under s.58 unconditionally or on such terms and conditions as to damages, payment of the price and otherwise as it thinks just.³³⁴⁸ These powers do not extend to the “other remedies” for consumers as this is understood by the Act and as explained in the following paragraph.

“Other remedies”

38-544

The 2015 Act does not prevent the consumer seeking other remedies for a breach of a statutory term imposing a duty on the trader as earlier set out, “in addition to one of the special remedies which it provides for the consumer “but not so as to recover twice for the same loss”.³³⁴⁹ These remedies include a consumer claiming damages, seeking to recover money paid where the consideration for payment of the money has failed; seeking specific performance; relying on the breach against a claim by the trader under the contract; and exercising a right to treat the contract as at an end.³³⁵⁰

-
- 3325. As earlier seen, under s.54(3), the consumer has a right both to require repeat performance and the right to a price reduction where the service does not conform to the contract in the special sense set by s.54(2) (which refers to breach of the term relating to reasonable care in s.49 and breach of a term in s.50 and the term relates to the performance of the service): see above, para.38-530.
- 3326. 2015 Act s.54(4) and (5), above, para.38-530.
- 3327. Above, paras 38-482 and 38-518.
- 3328. In the sense that it is in principle available under 2015 Act s.54(2)–(3).
- 3329. 2015 Act s.55(3) (emphasis added).
- 3330. Explanatory Notes 2015 para.263.
- 3331. See Vol.I, Ch.27.
- 3332. 2015 Act s.58(1)–(3), below, para.38-543.
- 3333. See below, para.38-542.
- 3334. [1996] A.C. 344 on which see Vol.I, para.26-037.
- 3335. See 2015 Act s.58(2), below, para.38-543.
- 3336. 2015 Act s.56(4)–(6). cf. 2015 Act s.20(15)–(17) (goods contracts), above, para.38-479.
- 3337. Explanatory Notes 2015 para.266.
- 3338. This would fall under s.50(1) of the 2015 Act.
- 3339. Explanatory Notes 2015 para.267.
- 3340. 2015 Act s.54(4)–(5) referring to s.50 and s.52 respectively, above, para.38-530.
- 3341. cf. the position as regards “goods contracts” under ss.23 and 24 of the Act, above, paras 38-482–38-483.
- 3342. The circumstances in which these rights are “had” by a consumer are set by s.54(2)–(3), above, para.38-530.
- 3343. cf., by analogy, the rules governing an injured party's right to affirm a contract, perform and sue for the price under the general law: this right is subject to a condition that performance by the injured party does not require co-operation by the party in breach: see Vol.I, paras 26-104–26-106.
- 3344. 2015 Act s.56(3)(a).
- 3345. 2015 Act s.58(1), referring to s.54(3): the right to repeat performance (under s.55) and the right to a price reduction (under s.56) (which are the “relevant remedies” under s.58(8)(c)).
- 3346. 2015 Act s.58(2) referring to s.55 of the Act, above, para.38-541.
- 3347. 2015 Act s.58(3) and (4).
- 3348. 2015 Act s.58(7).

3349. 2015 Act s.54(6).

3350. 2015 Act s.54(7) and see Vol.I, paras 21–028—21–039 (whether a party to a contract may rely on the other party's breach in resisting the latter's claim for the price); Ch.24 (right to treat the contract as at an end on the ground of breach); Ch.26 (damages), Ch.27 (specific performance and injunction); and paras 39-057 et seq. (recovery of money of paid on a total failure of consideration (or basis)).

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 7. - Contracts for the Supply of Goods, Digital Content or Services

(c) - The New Law: Consumer Rights in Respect of Goods Contracts, Digital Content Contracts and Services Contracts

(v) - Services Contracts

(dd) - Exclusion of Liability

Introduction: before the 2015 Act

38-545

At common law, in principle a person who contracts to perform a service for another person may limit or exclude their liability in respect of any defective performance, following the general principle of freedom of contract. ³³⁵¹ However, under the statutory scheme in the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 before its amendment by the 2015 Act, where a person acting in the course of a business seeks by contract to exclude or limit their liability for negligence, such an exemption clause is ineffective as regards the trader's liability for death and personal injury and effective as regards other losses only to the extent that the clause satisfies the "reasonableness test". ³³⁵² These controls therefore apply where a trader seeks to exclude its liability for breach of the implied term in the 1982 Act that it must perform a service with reasonable care and skill. ³³⁵³ Beyond this case, any exemption of liability by a trader providing a service may fall foul of the controls put in place for contractual liability generally by the 1977 Act, ³³⁵⁴ or under the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999. ³³⁵⁵

Exclusion of liability for breach of the statutory terms

38-546

However, s.57 of the 2015 Act makes special provision to control the exclusion or limitation of the trader's liabilities to the consumer in respect of breach of the statutory terms which it provides for the consumer in respect of services and, for this purpose, makes a series of distinctions between the grounds on which the consumer's remedies arise and also as between the exclusion and the limitation of the trader's liability. So, first, s.57(1) provides:

"A term of a contract to supply services is not binding on the consumer to the extent that it would exclude the trader's liability arising under section 49 (service to be performed with reasonable care and skill)." ³³⁵⁶

Here, it will be seen, an exclusion of liability (whether arising under the special remedies provided by the Act or the general law) is rendered totally ineffective. Secondly, and similarly, according to s.57(2) "a term of a contract to supply services is not binding on the consumer to the extent that it would exclude the trader's liability arising under section 50 (information about trader or service to be binding)", though this is subject to s.50(2)'s own provision allowing the trader to qualify what it says or writes to the consumer or change it where expressly agreed with the consumer. ³³⁵⁷ Again, this control applies only to exclusions of liability (whether arising under the special remedies which the Act provides in this case or under the general law ³³⁵⁸). Thirdly, however, s.57(3) makes more general provision as regards a contract term under which the trader purports to restrict its liability arising from breach of the statutory terms as to performance with reasonable care, information supplied by the trader, and performance within a reasonable time ³³⁵⁹. these are not binding on the consumer if the term “would prevent the consumer in an appropriate case from recovering the price paid or the value of any other consideration”. ³³⁶⁰ The effect of this rather convoluted provision is therefore to render ineffective as regards these liabilities a clause which restricts the trader’s liability (a limitation clause) unless the limitation is set at a level above the contract price. However, as s.57(3) itself acknowledges, this does not necessarily mean that a limitation clause which does allow the consumer to recover against the trader up to the level of the contract price will be effective, as it may still be not binding on the consumer under the general controls on unfair contract terms in Pt 2 of the 2015 Act. ³³⁶¹

³³⁵¹. See Vol.I, paras 1-026 et seq., but see also Ch.15, paras 15–001—15–022.

³³⁵². 1977 Act s.1(3) (defining “business liability”); s.2 (controlling the exclusion of liability for negligence); s.11 (the reasonableness test): see Vol.I, paras 15–081—15–082.

³³⁵³. Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 s.13.

³³⁵⁴. 1977 Act s.3: see Vol.I, paras 15–084—15–086.

³³⁵⁵. See above, paras 38-201 et seq. especially at paras 38-242 et seq.

³³⁵⁶. On this statutory term, see above, para.38-531.

³³⁵⁷. Above, paras 38–533—38–534.

³³⁵⁸. Above, paras 38-541—38-544.

³³⁵⁹. s.57(3) refers to the restriction of liability arising under ss.49 and 50 and, where they apply, ss.51 and 52. The inclusion of s.51 is odd as this provides for the setting of a reasonable price to be paid by the consumer and therefore it cannot give rise to any liability in the trader.

³³⁶⁰. 2015 Act s.57(3).

³³⁶¹. 2015 Act s.57(3) and on these general controls see especially 2015 Act s.62 and above, paras 38-201 et seq. especially at para.38-204 et seq. There is a particular difficulty in the case of a term limiting liability at a level above the price paid by the consumer in respect of breach of a term included in the contract under s.50(3) of the Act as regards information supplied as required by the 2013 Regulations (above, para.38-535), as the controls contained in s.57 of the Act appear to permit such a term subject only to assessment of its fairness under the general test in Pt 2 of the Act, whereas s.50(3) implements art.6(5) of the Consumer Rights Directive 2011, art.25 of which generally requires its provisions to be “imperative”, so that such a term should not be binding on the consumer without such an assessment: see above, paras 38-062 and 38-100.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 7. - Contracts for the Supply of Goods, Digital Content or Services

(c) - The New Law: Consumer Rights in Respect of Goods Contracts, Digital Content Contracts and Services Contracts

(v) - Services Contracts

(ee) - Enforcement

Enforcement of provisions on exclusion of trader's liabilities

38-547

⚠ As earlier explained in relation to the 2015 Act's treatment of unfair contract terms more generally, the Act applies the enforcement measures provided for the control of unfair contract terms under Pt 2 (and derived from the 1993 Directive ³³⁶²) to its controls of contract terms in Pt 1 of the Act. ³³⁶³ Secondly, the relevant provisions in Ch.4 of the 2015 Act which implement the 2011 Directive or which "provide additional permitted protections" ³³⁶⁴ ⚠ (notably, the provisions in s.50 giving contractual effect to certain categories of information provided by the trader to the consumer) have been designated as specified UK laws for the purposes of s.212 of the 2002 Act. ³³⁶⁵ ⚠ And, thirdly, acts or omissions in respect of any provision in Pt 1 of the 2015 Act are specified as possible "domestic infringements" for the purposes of s.211 of the Enterprise Act 2002. ³³⁶⁶ ⚠

³³⁶². 1993 Directive art.7.

³³⁶³. 2015 Act s.57(7) referring to Sch.3. See above, paras 38-387 et seq.

³³⁶⁴. ⚠Enterprise Act 2002 s.212(1)(b).

³³⁶⁵. ⚠Enterprise Act 2002 s.212(3); Enterprise Act 2002 (Part 8 Community Infringements Specified UK Laws) Order 2003, art.3; Sch., as amended by the Enterprise Act 2002 (Part 8 Community Infringements and Specified UK Laws) (Amendment) Order 2015 (SI 2015/1628) art.3, listing 2015 Act ss.50 and 54.

³³⁶⁶. ⚠Enterprise Act 2002 s.211(2); Enterprise Act 2002 (Part 8 Domestic Infringements) Order 2015 (SI 2015/1727) art.2.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 39 - Credit and Security
Section 1. - The Regulation of Consumer Credit ¹

In general

39-001

Laws regulating the lending of money have been in operation in England for a considerable period of time. But, historically, the statutory control of moneylending ("lender credit") was treated quite distinctly from the control applied to the extension of credit to a purchaser of goods who was allowed to pay for them by instalments ("vendor credit"). As a result, the statutory regulation of credit transactions was at one time determined solely by the legal form in which the transaction was cast, irrespective of its economic function. And certain types of credit transaction, which could not easily be allocated to either of these self-contained categories, escaped any form of control. The Consumer Credit Act 1974 broke down these barriers in order to ensure that, wherever protection is required for the consumer, that protection is in principle available whatever the form of credit transaction adopted.
²

Changes since 1974

39-002

As will be noted below, the Consumer Credit Act 1974 has been amended significantly since coming into force. ³ The most far-reaching amendments were those in the Financial Services Act 2012 (and orders made thereunder), which overhauled the regulatory architecture for financial services regulation by extensively amending the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (FSMA 2000) so as to create, inter alia, a new financial market regulator: the Financial Conduct Authority (FCA), in part replacing the Financial Services Authority. In anticipation of the abolition of the existing consumer credit regulator, the Office of Fair Trading (OFT), on April 1, 2014, ⁴ the Financial Services Act 2012 also enabled the Treasury by Order ⁵ to transfer consumer credit regulation to the FCA. This was achieved by enabling any activity requiring a consumer credit licence under the 1974 Act to become a "regulated activity" under the FSMA 2000. ⁶ Hence, essentially, since April 1, 2014 regulatory powers over consumer credit (and hire) activity, in particular authorisation (in place of licensing), supervision and enforcement, are exercised by the FCA under the FSMA 2000. Moreover, consumer credit advertisements (and quotations) are regulated under the FSMA 2000 "financial promotion" regime. ⁷ In addition, some provisions of the 1974 Act that imposed obligations on credit and hire providers ⁸ have been repealed and replaced by "rules" in a new "Module" of the FCA Handbook: "CONC". However, much of the 1974 Act still remains in force (with the FCA replacing the OFT as the main regulator and the Treasury replacing the Secretary of State). In particular, the formality and information requirements (both at the time of contracting and thereafter) are still imposed by the 1974 Act (and the regulations already made thereunder), although they are now enforced by the FCA using the (more extensive) powers conferred by the FSMA 2000.

The Mortgage Credit Directive

39-003

 Until the Mortgage Credit Directive (MCD) ⁹ is implemented on March 21, 2016, there are presently two statutory regimes for the regulation of land mortgages, both now administered by the Financial Conduct Authority ¹⁰: one under the Consumer Credit Act 1974 (for, essentially, certain second charge mortgages) and one under FSMA 2000 (for, essentially, first legal charge residential mortgages). The need to implement the MCD has provided the opportunity for aligning the two regimes. Hence, essentially, all residential mortgages will be brought within the FSMA 2000 regime and hence will be exempted from the Consumer Credit Act 1974 regime. ¹¹ Moreover, there will be a separate “lighter-touch” regulatory regime for certain consumer “buy-to-let” mortgages. ¹² This Directive came into force on March 21, 2016 and hence most residential mortgages (and so called “MCD art.3(1)(b) agreements”, see n.11, below) are now no longer regulated under the Consumer Credit Act 1974 (being “exempt agreements”, see para.39-038, below) but are within the FSMA 2000 regime.

The future of consumer credit regulation

39-004

⚠ By 2019, a five-year review of consumer credit regulation is expected to have been undertaken and it may be that the dual FSMA 2000 and 1974 Act regime will be replaced by a single FSMA 2000 regime (although it may be that those parts of the 1974 Act that cannot be replicated in an FCA rulebook (for example, the unfair relationship ¹³ and the connected lender liability ¹⁴ provisions) will remain in the 1974 Act). ¹⁵ ⚠

Scope of Consumer Credit Act 1974

39-005

The Consumer Credit Act 1974 gave effect to a number of recommendations of the Crowther Committee on Consumer Credit ¹⁶ for the regulation of the supply to individuals (including sole traders, small partnerships and unincorporated associations) of credit throughout the United Kingdom. ¹⁷ It provided for the licensing of those who carried on the business of granting consumer credit ¹⁸ and of ancillary credit activities. ¹⁹ The Act repealed ²⁰ the previous statutes that regulated the supply of credit or the advertisement of credit such as the Pawnbrokers Acts 1872 to 1960, ²¹ the Moneylenders Acts 1900 to 1927, ²² the Hire-Purchase Act 1965, ²³ and the Advertisements (Hire-Purchase) Act 1967. ²⁴ It replaced these enactments with a single statute, far more uniform in its application, although with necessary concessions to differing forms of credit business.

Many types of credit business that were previously subject to no control became regulated by the Act. ²⁵ Further, the licensing system established by the Act extended, not merely to those engaged in the granting of consumer credit, but also to those engaged in businesses ancillary thereto. ²⁶

Consumer hire agreements

39-006

The 1974 Act also regulates consumer hire agreements if the hirer is an individual (including a sole trader, small partnership or unincorporated association). ²⁷ A licence was required for a consumer hire business ²⁸ and various businesses ancillary thereto. ²⁹

Extension of the 1974 Act

39-007

Certain provisions of the 1974 Act, in particular those that deal with unfair relationships, ³⁰ apply to all credit agreements where the debtor is an individual even if the agreement is otherwise “exempt”. ³¹

Regulations, orders, etc

39-008

The 1974 Act was merely a blueprint for the system of regulation that it established. It was supplemented by a considerable amount of subordinate legislation ³² made by the Secretary of State, ³³ which is both detailed and complex.

Contracting-out

39-009

Contracting-out of the protections conferred by the 1974 Act is prohibited. ³⁴

Consumer Credit Act 2006

39-010

Since the enactment of the Consumer Credit Act 1974, the consumer credit market has changed dramatically both in relation to the increased amount of credit provided and in relation to the range of credit facilities offered to consumers. After a review of the Act, ³⁵ its regime was amended in two stages. First, a number of Regulations (in particular, the Advertisements, ³⁶ the Agreements ³⁷ and the Early Settlement ³⁸ Regulations) were replaced or amended extensively. Secondly, the Consumer Credit Act 2006 introduced a number of changes to the 1974 Act itself. In particular, the scope of the 1974 Act was widened ³⁹ by removing the financial limit in general, although the financial limit of £25,000 is retained if the agreement is for the debtor's or hirer's purely business purposes. ⁴⁰ Changes were made to the licensing system and the powers of the OFT were increased to enable it to impose "requirements" and "civil penalties" on licensees. ⁴¹ The provisions allowing the court to reopen "extortionate credit bargains" were replaced by the wider "unfair relationship" provisions. ⁴² Moreover, the provisions rendering agreements that breached certain formal requirements "irredeemably unenforceable" ⁴³ were repealed.

Consumer Credit Directive

39-011

⚠ The implementation of the Consumer Credit Directive 2008, ⁴⁴ resulted in yet more significant changes to the 1974 Act and the regulations made thereunder. ⁴⁵ To a large extent those changes were not extended to agreements outside the scope of the Directive, namely: (a) hire agreements, (b) agreements secured on land, ⁴⁶ (c) pawn agreements, (d) credit agreements for business purposes, and (e) agreements providing for credit in excess of the Directive's financial ceiling (£60,260). ⁴⁷ ⚠ Hence there are now two regulatory regimes in some circumstances: the old regime applying to such "non-Directive" regulated agreements and a new "Directive" regime applying to regulated credit agreements within the scope of the Directive. However, some of the "Directive" protections have been extended to "non-Directive" agreements either in order to maintain a coherent regime (so they apply to hire-purchase as well as to conditional sale agreements, and to a large extent to pawn agreements) or because they are regarded as appropriate protections in any event. ⁴⁸ Moreover, when it comes to the formal requirements for regulated credit agreements, ⁴⁹ creditors who would otherwise be outside the new "Directive" regime may "opt into" it.

Banks and investment firms authorised in other EEA states

39-012

! The implementation of the EU's Banking Directive ⁵⁰ and Markets in Financial Instruments Directive ⁵¹ has been affected by legislative provisions contained in or made under the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000. ⁵² The philosophy underlying the Directives is that of "home state control", i.e. the authorisation and regulation of the institutions concerned are matters for the home state, with the host state having only a limited regulatory role. As a result of these provisions the control exercisable by virtue of the Consumer Credit Act 1974 and the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 is reduced in the case of (broadly) an institution established in an EEA state ("home state") other than the United Kingdom that is authorised to carry on the relevant activity by its home state regulator. ⁵³ Such a firm is entitled to establish a branch or provide services in another EEA state (the entitlement is sometimes referred to as "the single market passport") in accordance with the EU Treaty as applied in the EEA and subject to the conditions of the relevant single market directive. ⁵⁴ If it seeks to exercise its passport rights in the United Kingdom it will qualify for authorisation by satisfying certain formal conditions such as informing the Financial Conduct Authority (FCA) of its intentions and being informed of the rules that apply to the conduct of its activities in the United Kingdom. ⁵⁵ In particular, such a firm that qualifies for authorisation is ordinarily exempted from the need to apply for FCA authorisation. ⁵⁶ The expected impact of "Brexit" on the operation of the "single market pass-port" is presently uncertain.

The Standards of Lending Practice

39-013

! These "Standards", which set the benchmark of good lending practices, are issued by the Lending Standards Board and replace the old "Lending Code" (which itself replaced, in part, the provisions of the old Banking Code ⁵⁷ !). Like the Code, they are voluntary "soft law" in the sense that lending institutions agree to be bound by them in their dealings with both personal and (small) business customers. The scope and content of the Standards differs from that of the consumer credit regulatory regime but there is a considerable degree of overlap. In some respects the protection is more extensive than that of the statutory regime and in other respects it is less extensive. But nothing in the Standards can detract from the statutory regime. ⁵⁸ !

Other EU Directives

39-014

! Other EU Directives have had an impact on the statutory regulatory regime, in particular, the Electronic Commerce Directive 2000, ⁵⁹ the Distance Marketing of Consumer Financial Services Directive 2002, ⁶⁰ the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005, ⁶¹ the Payment Services Directive 2007 ⁶² and the EU Consumer Rights Directive 2011. ⁶³ ! The Mortgage Credit Directive 2014, ⁶⁴ when implemented, will result in further changes to the statutory regime, in particular the transfer of second charge mortgage regulation to the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 regime. The Mortgage Credit Directive came into force on March 21, 2016 and hence the relevant changes were effected then.

! English law, as altered by the implementation of these directives, is not expected to be amended as a result of Brexit, at least in the near future.

^{1.} See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf); Goode, Consumer Credit: Law and Practice (looseleaf); Goode, Consumer Credit Law (1989); Harding, Consumer Credit and Consumer Hire (1995); Philpott, The Law of Consumer Credit and Hire (2009).

2. See the wide definition of “credit” for the purposes of the regime, considered below, para.39-019.
3. Most of the Act came into force on May 19, 1985; see SI 1983/1551 and SI 1989/1128.
4. By the Enterprise and Regulatory Reform Act 2013 s.26(3).
5. The two main Orders were: (i) the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (Regulated Activities) (Amendment) (No.2) Order 2013 (SI 2013/1881) and (ii) the Financial Services Act 2012 (Consumer Credit) Order 2013 (SI 2013/1882).
6. See FSMA 2000 s.22 and the previous footnote. SI 2013/1881 made considerable amendments to the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (Regulated Activities) Order 2001 (SI 2001/544), the so-called “RAO” (made under the FSMA 2000 s.22), which now contains the definitions of (a) those “credit-related” regulated activities that are now regulated under the FSMA 2000 and (b) exempt agreements (see below, paras 39-038 et seq.).
7. See especially the FSMA 2000 s.21 and the Financial Promotion Order 2005 (SI 2005/1335).
8. e.g. CCA 1974 ss.51, 51A–51B, 55A, 55B, 74A–74B, 81, 82A, 160A.
9. Directive 2014/17/EU. See Implementation of the EU Mortgage Credit Directive (HMT September 5, 2014); Implementing the Mortgage Credit Directive and the new regime for second charge mortgages (FCA CP14/20); Implementation of the EU Mortgage Credit Directive: summary of Proposals (HMT January 26, 2015) and Implementing the Mortgage Credit Directive and the new regime for second charge mortgages: feedback to CP14/20 and final rules (FCA PS15/9).
10. Since the transfer of consumer credit regulation from the OFT to the FCA: see above, para.39-002.
11. Credit agreements within the MCD art.3(1)(b)—for the acquisition or retention of interests in land or buildings—will also be taken out of the CCA 1974 regime: see SI 2015/910 art.3 and Sch.1 para.2(2), amending CCA 1974 s.8(3).
12. See below, para.39-351.
13. CCA 1974 ss.140A–140C; see below, paras 39-212 et seq.
14. CCA 1974 ss.75 and 75A; see below, paras 39-303–39-305.
15.  The FCA has begun the review process: see Call for Input: Review of retained provisions of the Consumer Credit Act, February 2016, but this has been delayed due to uncertainties over Brexit.
16. Cmnd. 4596 (1971).
17. Initially, the Act only regulated credit below £5,000. The limit was raised from £5,000 to £15,000 from May 20, 1985, by SI 1983/1878 and to £25,000 from May 1, 1998, by SI 1998/996. As noted below, para.39-010 n.39, the Consumer Credit Act 2006 abolished that limit except for the purposes of the exemption for agreements made for the debtor’s business purpose (previously CCA 1974 s.16B, see now RAO art.60C(3)–(7), below, para.39-046). However, agreements providing for credit in excess of £60,260 are outside the scope of the Consumer Credit Directive (see below, para.39-011) and hence are not covered by many provisions implementing that Directive (especially: CCA 1974 ss.55C, 66A, 75A and 77B); they may also fall within the “high net worth” exemption (previously in CCA 1974 s.16A, see now RAO art.60H, below, para.39-045), which is not available to agreements within the scope of the Directive.
18. See below, para.39-061. Licensing under the CCA 1974 has been replaced by authorisation under the FSMA 2000: see below, paras 39-061 et seq.

- 19. See below, paras 39-230 et seq.
- 20. CCA 1974 s.192(3)(b), (4) Sch.5; SI 1977/325 (c.11); SI 1977/802 (c.30); SI 1979/1685 (c.42); SI 1980/50 (c.3); SI 1981/280 (c.6); SI 1983/1551.
- 21. The progressive repeal of these Acts was effected by SI 1977/325 (c.11); SI 1980/50 (c.3); SI 1983/1551.
- 22. See Meston on Moneylenders, 5th edn. The progressive repeal of these Acts was effected by SI 1977/325 (c.11); SI 1977/802 (c.30); SI 1979/1685 (c.42); SI 1980/50 (c.3); SI 1981/280; and SI 1983/1551.
- 23. SI 1983/1551. See Chitty on Contracts, 23rd edn, Ch.7; Goode, Hire-Purchase Law and Practice, 2nd edn; Guest, The Law of Hire-Purchase (1966).
- 24. The repeal of the whole of this Act was effected by SI 1980/50 (c.3).
- 25. e.g. bank lending, credit cards, check trading, some land mortgages, mail order business, etc.
- 26. See below, paras 39-230 et seq.
- 27. See below, paras 39-035 et seq. As was the case with credit agreements (see above, para. 39-005), initially the Act only regulated hire agreements below £5,000. The limit was raised from £5,000 to £15,000 from May 20, 1985, by SI 1983/1878 and to £25,000 from May 1, 1998, by SI 1998/996. As also noted below, para.39-010, the Consumer Credit Act 2006 abolished that limit except for the purposes of the exemption for agreements made for the hirer's business purpose (previously CCA 1974 s.16B, see now RAO art.60O, below, para.39-046). The Consumer Credit Directive (see below, para.39-011) and hence the provisions enacted to implement it do not apply to hire agreements.
- 28. See below, para.39-061. Licensing under the CCA 1974 has been replaced by authorisation under the FSMA 2000: see below, para.39-063.
- 29. See below, para.39-230.
- 30. CCA 1974 ss.140A–140C, see below, paras 39-212 et seq.
- 31. Unless it is exempt under RAO art.60C(2) (previously CCA 1974 s.16(6C)) (see s.140A(5)). For exempt agreements, see below, paras 39-038 et seq.
- 32. See SI 1975/2123, 2124; SIs 1976/191, 837, 1002; SIs 1977/325, 328, 329, 330, 331, 802, 2163; SIs 1979/661, 667, 1685; SIs 1980/51, 59; SIs 1981/280, 614; SIs 1983/1551, 1552, 1553, 1554, 1555, 1556, 1557, 1558, 1559, 1560, 1561, 1562, 1564, 1565, 1566, 1567, 1568, 1569, 1570, 1571, 1878; SIs 1984/435, 436, 1046, 1107, 1108, 1109, 1600; SIs 1985/621, 666, 705, 1192; SI 1988/2047; SIs 1989/591, 596, 869, 1125, 1126, 1128, 1841, 2237; SIs 1991/817, 1393, 1949, 2844; SIs 1993/346, 2922; SI 1994/2420; SIs 1995/1250, 2914; SIs 1996/1445, 3081; SI 1997/211; SIs 1998/996, 997, 998, 1203, 1944; SIs 1999/1956, 2725, 3177; SIs 2000/290, 291, 1797; SIs 2004/1481, 1482, 1483, 1484, 2619, 3236, 3237; SI 2006/1273; SIs 2007/827, 1167, 1168; SIs 2008/645, 668, 1751; SIs 2010/139, 1011, 1012 (revoked), 1013, 1014, 1970; SI 2011/11; SI 2012/1745; SI 2012/2798.
- 33. Since the transfer of consumer credit regulation to the FCA (see above, para.39-002), the Treasury has become the responsible government department for making subordinate legislation under the CCA 1974.
- 34. CCA 1974 s.173(1), (2). But see s.173(3) (consent). See also Wilson v Robertsons (London) Ltd (No.2) [2006] EWCA Civ 1088, [2007] C.C.L.R. 1.
- 35. See the White Paper Fair, Clear and Competitive: The Consumer Credit Market in the 21st Century, 2003, Cm.6040. For a comment on the proposals, see Lomnicka [2004] J.B.L. 64.

- 36. See below, para.39-067.
- 37. See below, paras 39-080 et seq.
- 38. See below, paras 39-158 et seq.
- 39. But the definition of “individual” in s.189(1) was narrowed so as only to include partnerships of two or three (non-corporate) persons. Hence (see below, para.39-016) agreements with larger partnerships were taken out of regulation.
- 40. See the exemption in RAO art.60C(3)–(7) (credit) and RAO art.60O (hire) (previously CCA 1974 s.16B), below, para.39-046, for “business” agreements above that amount.
- 41. These provisions have since been replaced, see below, para.39-063.
- 42. CCA 1974 ss.140A–140C, see below, paras 39-212 et seq.
- 43. viz CCA 1974 s.127(3)–(5). The term “irredeemably unenforceable” was coined by Lord Hoffmann in Dimond v Lovell [2002] A.C. 384. See below, paras 39-093 and 39-200.
- 44. Directive 2008/48/EC, [2008] O.J. L133/66, replacing Consumer Credit Directive (87/102). See also Directive 2011/90/EU of November 14, 2011 amending the APR assumptions in Pt II of Annex I to the 2008 Directive, implemented on January 1, 2013 by the Consumer Credit (Total Charge for Credit) (Amendment) Regulations 2012 (SI 2012/1745): see below, para.39-059 n.359.
- 45. The Directive was implemented by a series of statutory instruments: (a) Consumer Credit (EU) Regulations 2010 (SI 2010/1010, as amended by SI 2010/1969 and SI 2010/1011) (the main implementing regulations, amending, inter alia, the 1974 Act); (b) Consumer Credit (Total Charge for Credit) Regulations 2010 (SI 2010/1011, as amended by SI 2011/11 and since revoked by SI 2013/1881 art.21(gg)) (see below, para.39-059); (c) Consumer Credit (Advertisements) Regulations 2010 (SI 2010/1012 replaced by SI 2010/1970 and since revoked by SI 2013/1881 art.21(hh)) (see below, para.39-067); (d) Consumer Credit (Disclosure of Information) Regulations 2010 (SI 2010/1013, as amended by SI 2010/1969 and SI 2011/11) (see below, para.39-076); (e) Consumer Credit (Agreements) Regulations 2010 (SI 2010/1014, as amended by SI 2010/1969) (see below, paras 39-080 and 39-082).
- 46. But see now the Mortgage Credit Directive (above, para.39-003).
- 47.  But when the Mortgage Credit Directive (see above, para.39-003) is implemented on March 21, 2016, this exemption will not apply to so-called “residential renovation agreements” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1)): see amendments made by SI 2015/910 art.3 and Sch.1 para.2(3)–(9). The Mortgage Credit Directive (and hence the relevant amendment) came into force on March 21, 2016.
- 48. e.g. the FCA Handbook CONC 4.2 and 4.3 (previously CCA 1974 s.55A), CONC 5 and 6.2 (previously CCA 1974 s.55B) and CCA 1974 s.66A are applicable to regulated “business” credit agreements; FCA Handbook CONC 5 and 6.2 (previously CCA 1974 s.55B) and the financial promotion restrictions in CONC 3 are applicable to credit above £60,260 (see below, para.39-067).
- 49. See below, paras 39-080 et seq.
- 50. Directive 2013/36/EU (and related texts), so-called “CRR/CRD IV”, replacing Directive 2006/48, replacing Directive 2000/12, which in turn replaced the Second Banking Coordination Directive 89/646.
- 51. “MiFID” (Directive 2004/39), replacing the Investment Services Directive (ISD), Directive 93/22. It will be replaced by “MiFID II” (Directive 2014/65/EU) and “MiFIR” (Regulation EU No.600/2014) in January 2017.

- 52. FSMA 2000 ss.31(1)(b), 37 and Sch.3, as amended.
- 53. FSMA 2000 Sch.3 Pt I para.5.
- 54. FSMA 2000 Sch.3 Pt I para.7.
- 55. FSMA 2000 Sch.3 Pt I paras 12–15.
- 56. FSMA 2000 Sch.3 Pt I para.15(3). See also the similar provision in relation to “EEA authorised payment institutions” (as defined in reg.2) in Payment Services Regulations 2009/209 reg.26.
- 57.  The other parts of the old Banking Code are replaced by the BCOBS Module of the FCA Handbook.
- 58.  See CCA1974 s.173, above, para.39-009
- 59. Directive 2003/31, implemented, as far as consumer credit is concerned, primarily by the Consumer Credit Act 1974 (Electronic Communications) Order 2004 (SI 2004/3236) made under the Electronic Communications Act 2000.
- 60. Directive 2002/65, implemented by the Financial Services (Distance Marketing) Regulations 2004 (SI 2004/2095), see below, para.39-126.
- 61. Directive 2005/29, implemented by the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1277), as amended by the Consumer Protection (Amendment) Regulations 2014 (SI 2014/870) in relation to contracts entered into on or after October 1, 2014. See, generally, above, paras 38-145 et seq.
- 62. Directive 2007/64/EC, implemented, as far as consumer credit is concerned, primarily by the Payment Services Regulations 2009 (SI 2009/209). Overlap with the 1974 Act is, to some extent, avoided: see, in particular regs 34 and 52. See further, paras 39-510 et seq.
- 63.  Directive 2011/83/EU. The Government implemented that part of the Directive that amended previous Directives conferring cancellation rights in certain sales on consumers, by the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 (SI 2013/3134), an order under the European Communities Act 1972. See further below, para.39-125. See now the Consumer Rights Act 2015 (for contracts made on or after October 1, 2015) which updates and clarifies the law on goods and services and unfair contract terms, considered further above in paras 38-334 et seq.
- 64. See above, para.39-003.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 39 - Credit and Security
Section 1. - The Regulation of Consumer Credit ¹
(a) - Terminology

New concepts

39-015

The draftsman of the Consumer Credit Act 1974 found it impossible to set up a system of wide-ranging control without devising new concepts, and consequently introduced, in Pt II of the Act (ss.8 to 20) and elsewhere, an entirely new and complex terminology. An understanding of this terminology is essential to an understanding of the regulatory regime. Examples illustrating the use of this terminology are provided in Pt II of Sch.2 to the 1974 Act. ⁶⁵ On the transfer of consumer credit regulation to the FCA, ⁶⁶ that terminology has been adopted (with minor changes ⁶⁷) in legislative provisions made under the FSMA 2000, in particular the RAO. ⁶⁸

“[Consumer] credit agreement”

39-016

The 1974 Act defines a “consumer credit agreement” as an agreement ⁶⁹ between an individual (“the debtor”) and any other person (“the creditor”) by which the creditor provides ⁷⁰ the debtor with credit ⁷¹ of any amount. ⁷² The expression “individual” is stated to include a partnership consisting of two or three persons not all of whom are bodies corporate and any other unincorporated body not consisting entirely of bodies corporate. ⁷³ It seems clear that an agreement for the provision of credit where the debtor is a body corporate will not be a consumer credit agreement. ⁷⁴ But if the debtor is an unincorporated body, such as a society or club, or is a sole trader or partnership of three or fewer persons, there can be a consumer credit agreement notwithstanding that the debtor carries on a business and that the credit is advanced for business purposes. ⁷⁵ The definition of “credit agreement” in the RAO is almost identical, with the use of the terms “borrower” and “lender” instead of “debtor” and “creditor”. ⁷⁶ Therefore the application of the regulatory regime is generally determined by the status of the debtor/borrower and not by the purpose of the advance, subject to two qualifications in relation to “business” credit. ⁷⁷ First, as noted below, ⁷⁸ “business” agreements for over £25,000 are exempt from regulation. Second, as a result of the implementation of the Consumer Credit Directive ⁷⁹ (which does not apply to “business” credit) the regulatory regime is less onerous in a number of respects in relation to “business” credit agreements, although creditors may choose to opt into the “Directive” formal requirements for regulated credit agreements. ⁸⁰

“Regulated” consumer credit agreement

39-017

⚠ Since the transfer of consumer credit regulation to the FCA, ⁸¹ the definition of “regulated” credit agreement is now in the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (Regulated Activities) Order 2001, ⁸² the so-called “RAO”. A consumer credit agreement is a regulated agreement within the meaning of the 1974 Act ⁸³ ⚠ and for the purposes of RAO ⁸⁴ if it is not an “exempt agreement”, as also defined in the RAO. ⁸⁵ An agreement that would not otherwise be a “regulated” agreement but is stated to be “regulated” and is documented as such, is not a “regulated” agreement for the purposes of the regulatory regime. ⁸⁶

“Debtor”/“borrower” and “creditor”/“lender”

39-018

The expressions “debtor” and “creditor” are used in the 1974 Act to refer respectively to the individual receiving credit and the person providing credit under a consumer credit agreement, or the person ⁸⁷ to whom his rights and duties under the agreement have passed by assignment ⁸⁸ or operation of law, and in relation to a prospective consumer credit agreement includes the prospective debtor or creditor. ⁸⁹ The definitions of “borrower” and “lender” in the RAO are almost identical. ⁹⁰ There is no requirement that the creditor/lender carries on a consumer credit, or any, business. ⁹¹

“Credit”

39-019

⚠ The expression “credit” is not defined in the 1974 Act or the RAO, ⁹² but is stated in both instruments to include “a cash loan, and any form of financial accommodation”. ⁹³ These words embrace all types of loan (e.g. moneylenders’ loans, bank and building society loans, overdrafts, pawnbrokers’ loans, advances on mortgage, etc.), the sale of goods on instalment credit terms (e.g. credit sales, conditional sales, budget accounts, option accounts, subscription accounts, etc.), the supply of services on credit, check trading, credit cards and charge cards ⁹⁴ and debit cards. ⁹⁵ In fact, any agreement for, say, the supply of goods or services where “credit” is extended (in the sense of the grant of a contractual right to defer the payment of a debt, whether the payment is to be made in one amount or by instalments) ⁹⁶ ⚠ will be a consumer credit agreement if the debtor is an individual. In many commercial agreements, payment is to be made in arrear; such agreements can therefore be consumer credit agreements (if the debtor is not a body corporate or large partnership), although they will not necessarily be regulated agreements. ⁹⁷

Hire agreements

39-020

The words “any other form of financial accommodation” do not cover hire agreements (e.g. rental or leasing agreements) as hire agreements are contained within a separate category for which special statutory provision is made. ⁹⁸ But, the hiring of goods to an individual under a hire-purchase agreement is deemed to be the provision of fixed-sum credit. ⁹⁹

“Credit exceeding £25,000”

39-021

Although the Consumer Credit Act 2006 removed the financial limit so that agreements providing credit of any amount may now be regulated agreements, ¹⁰⁰ the limit has been retained for the purposes of the exemption for credit advanced for purely business purposes. ¹⁰¹ Hence, in that context, it is still necessary to decide if “credit exceeding £25,000” ¹⁰² is provided. These words are relatively easy to apply where the agreement is one for the provision of fixed-sum credit ¹⁰³: the amount of the credit will be the amount agreed to be lent (whether this is to be drawn down in a lump sum or by instalments). In the case of a credit sale or conditional sale agreement, or a hire-purchase agreement, ¹⁰⁴ relating to goods, the amount of the credit will be the balance financed, i.e. the cash price less the deposit (if any). But in the case of running-account credit, ¹⁰⁵ the application of the £25,000 limit is by no means simple. ¹⁰⁶

The Consumer Credit Directive: “credit exceeding £60,260”

39-022

⚠ The Consumer Credit Directive ¹⁰⁷ does not apply to agreements providing credit in excess of €100,000 and hence, in general, agreements providing credit in excess of that amount (which has been converted to £60,260 for the purposes of implementing the Directive in the United Kingdom) are not affected by the provisions that are derived from the Directive. ¹⁰⁸ However, the duty to assess creditworthiness ¹⁰⁹ as well as credit promotion regulation ¹¹⁰ apply regardless of the credit amount.

Moreover, although creditors offering credit in excess of £60,260 ¹¹¹ ⚠ prima facie remain subject to the “old” regime as regards formal agreement requirements, ¹¹² they may “opt into” the new “Directive” regime. ¹¹³

“Charge for credit”

39-023

For the purposes of the 1974 Act, an item entering into the total charge for credit ¹¹⁴ (e.g. interest, credit charges or other time/price differential charges, and certain other fees or charges) is not to be treated as credit even though time is allowed for its payment. ¹¹⁵

“Running-account credit”

39-024

This expression is defined, for the purposes of the 1974 Act and the RAO, as a facility under a [consumer] credit agreement” ¹¹⁶ whereby the debtor/borrower or another “is enabled to receive from time to time” from the creditor/lender or a third party “cash, goods or services to an amount or value such that, taking into account payments made by or to the credit of the debtor/borrower, the credit limit (if any) is not at any time exceeded”. ¹¹⁷ Examples of running-account credit are bank overdrafts, shop budget accounts, credit cards and charge cards, debit cards, and option accounts. ¹¹⁸

“Credit limit”

39-025

In relation to running-account credit, “credit limit” is defined to mean, as respects any period, the maximum debit balance which, under the credit agreement, is allowed to stand on the account during that period. ¹¹⁹ But any term of the agreement allowing that maximum to be exceeded merely temporarily is to be disregarded. ¹²⁰

For the purpose of deciding whether or not running-account credit gives rise to an exempt “business” credit agreement, ¹²¹ the transaction will be within the £25,000 limit (and hence not exempt) if the credit limit does not exceed £25,000. ¹²² However, there is an anti-avoidance provision in s.10(3)(b) of the 1974 Act which sets out three situations where running-account credit is deemed not to exceed £25,000, whether or not there is a credit limit, and if there is, notwithstanding that it exceeds £25,000. The first situation is where the debtor is not enabled to draw at any one time an amount that, so far as it represents credit, exceeds £25,000. ¹²³ The second situation is where the agreement provides that, if the debit balance rises above a given amount (not exceeding £25,000), the rate of the total charge for credit increases or any other condition favouring the creditor or his associate comes into operation. ¹²⁴ The third situation is where, at the time the agreement is made it is probable, having regard to the terms of the agreement and any other relevant considerations, that the debit balance will not at any time rise above £25,000. ¹²⁵ A creditor cannot therefore avoid the operation of the regulatory regime in relation to business credit, for example, by agreeing to provide running-account credit up to £30,000, when it is probable from the outset that the debtor will not require more than £25,000. ¹²⁶

“Fixed-sum credit”

39-026

This is any facility, other than running-account credit, under a [consumer] credit agreement ¹²⁷ whereby the debtor/borrower is enabled to receive credit (whether in one amount or by instalments). ¹²⁸ That which is not running-account credit is therefore fixed-sum credit. Examples of fixed-sum credit are moneylenders' loans, bank and building society loans, pawnbrokers' loans, hire-purchase, ¹²⁹ credit sale and conditional sale agreements, and check trading. ¹³⁰

“Restricted-use credit”

39-027

A restricted-use credit agreement is defined both in the 1974 Act ¹³¹ and the RAO. ¹³² There are three categories of restricted-use credit agreement. The first (category (a)) is a credit agreement ¹³³ to finance a transaction between the debtor/borrower and the creditor/lender, whether forming part of that agreement or not. ¹³⁴ Examples of this category of agreement are hire-purchase, ¹³⁵ credit sale and conditional sale agreements (whether the credit is provided by the supplier himself, or by a financier under the “direct collection” method of business where the goods are sold by the supplier to the financier and then let or sold by the financier to the debtor), and mail order credit and shop budget and option accounts. The second (category (b)) is a credit agreement ¹³⁶ to finance a transaction between the debtor/borrower and a person (the “supplier”) other than the creditor/lender. ¹³⁷ Examples of this category of agreement are loans for the purchase of land, loans where the loan is paid directly to a dealer (other than the creditor) who supplies goods or services to the debtor/borrower, check trading agreements, and credit card agreements (insofar as the card is used to obtain goods or services and not money). ¹³⁸ The third (category (c)) is a credit agreement ¹³⁹ to refinance any existing indebtedness of the debtor's/borrower's whether to the creditor/lender or another person. ¹⁴⁰

39-028

An agreement is not a restricted-use credit agreement if the credit is in fact provided in such a way as to leave the debtor/borrower free to use it as he chooses, even though certain uses would contravene that or any other agreement. ¹⁴¹ Thus, for example, if a moneylenders' or bank loan is advanced to a debtor for a particular purpose which is stipulated in the agreement, ¹⁴² but in fact is paid over to the debtor so that he could (albeit in breach of the agreement) use it in whatever manner he wished, the agreement is not a restricted-use credit agreement. ¹⁴³ Nor is an agreement a restricted-use credit agreement unless it contains an express or implied term that the credit is to be used for a particular purpose ¹⁴⁴ even though there are mechanisms in place to ensure that he will not receive the credit unless it is so used. ¹⁴⁵

“Unrestricted-use credit”

39-029

An unrestricted-use credit agreement is a credit agreement ¹⁴⁶ that is not a restricted-use credit agreement. ¹⁴⁷ Hence, in order to discover if an agreement is for “unrestricted-use” credit, it is necessary first to consider if it is for “restricted-use” credit. ¹⁴⁸ If it is not, then the agreement is necessarily an “unrestricted-use” credit agreement. Examples of unrestricted-use credit agreements are pawnbrokers' loans, bank overdrafts, bank cash cards, and (usually) bank and building society personal loans, and credit cards (insofar as the card is used to obtain money and not goods or services). ¹⁴⁹

“Debtor-creditor-supplier agreement”/“borrower-lender-supplier agreement”

39-030

One of the most important types of agreement classified in the 1974 Act and RAO is a “debtor-creditor-supplier agreement” (for the purposes of the 1974 Act) and “borrower-lender-supplier agreement” (for the purposes of the RAO). ¹⁵⁰ The definitions of these two terms in the 1974 Act and RAO are almost identical, the different wording (debtor/borrower, creditor/lender) reflecting the different terminology in the two regulatory regimes. Such an agreement is defined as a credit agreement ¹⁵¹ falling into one of three categories:

The first category is a category 12(a) restricted-use credit agreement, that is, one to finance a transaction between the debtor/borrower and the creditor/lender, whether forming part of that agreement or not. ¹⁵² It is important to realise that, despite the fact that the expression “debtor-creditor-supplier agreement”/“borrower-lender-supplier agreement” might suggest three parties (as in the usual tripartite arrangement between debtor, financier and dealer), within this category also fall agreements where only two parties are involved, as where a dealer carries his own instalment credit or a shop or mail order house allows the debtor/borrower credit for the purchase of the creditor/lender’s own goods or services. ¹⁵³

39-031

The second category is a category 12(b) restricted-use credit agreement, that is, one to finance a transaction ¹⁵⁴ between the debtor/borrower and a person (the “supplier”) other than the creditor/lender, ¹⁵⁵ provided that it is made by the creditor/lender under pre-existing arrangements, or in contemplation of future arrangements, between himself and the supplier. ¹⁵⁶ The definitions of “preexisting arrangements” and “future arrangements” ¹⁵⁷ are complex. ¹⁵⁸ But typical examples of pre-existing arrangements between a creditor/lender and the supplier are those that exist between a financier and its dealers by whom loan business is channelled to the financier, between a credit card issuer and recognised suppliers (of goods or services) who have agreed to accept the card ¹⁵⁹ and between a check trading company and the suppliers who have agreed to honour its checks. ¹⁶⁰ The expression “in contemplation of future arrangements” is more difficult to construe and reference must be made to its precise wording. ¹⁶¹ But the mere fact that the credit agreement is entered into in the knowledge or subject to a term that the creditor/lender will pay the amount of the loan direct to the supplier does not necessarily involve a debtor-creditor-supplier or borrower-lender-supplier agreement if the creditor/lender holds himself out as willing to make, in specified circumstances, payments of that kind to suppliers generally. ¹⁶²

39-032

The third category is a category 12(c) unrestricted-use credit agreement, that is, one made by the creditor/lender under pre-existing arrangements between himself and a person (the “supplier”) other than the debtor/borrower in the knowledge that the credit is to be used to finance a transaction between the debtor/borrower and the supplier. ¹⁶³ If, for example, as the result of an arrangement previously made between a financier and a dealer, a customer is directed by the dealer to the financier and obtains a loan, then, notwithstanding that the loan is at the free disposition of the debtor/borrower, ¹⁶⁴ there will be a debtor-creditorsupplier or borrower-lender-supplier agreement if the financier knows that the loan will be used to purchase goods or services from the dealer. ¹⁶⁵

“Debtor-creditor agreement”/“borrower-lender agreement”

39-033

Important incidents are also attached to the classification of a credit agreement as a “debtorcreditor” or “borrower-lender” agreement. ¹⁶⁶ Again ¹⁶⁷ the former term is used in the 1974 Act and the latter in the RAO but the definitions of these two terms in both instruments are almost identical. It is the intention of the two regimes that any credit agreement that is not a debtor-creditor-supplier/borrower-lender-supplier agreement, is a debtor-creditor/borrower-lender agreement. The three categories of this type of agreement are:

- (i) a category 12(b) restricted-use credit agreement ¹⁶⁸ which is not made by the creditor/lender under pre-existing arrangements, or in contemplation of future arrangements, between himself and the supplier ¹⁶⁹; or
- (ii) a category 12(c) restricted-use credit agreement, ¹⁷⁰ that is, to re-finance any existing indebtedness of the debtor's/borrower's, whether to the creditor/lender or another person ¹⁷¹; or
- (iii) an unrestricted-use credit agreement that is not made by the creditor/lender under pre-existing arrangements between himself and a person (the "supplier") other than the debtor/borrower in the knowledge that the credit is to be used to finance a transaction between the debtor/borrower and the supplier. ¹⁷²

Examples of debtor-creditor/borrower-lender agreements are moneylending agreements and bank loans (where the money is at the free disposition of the borrower), overdrafts, pawnbrokers' loans, credit cards (insofar as the card is used to obtain money and not goods or services), and many cash card agreements. ¹⁷³

"Credit-token agreement"

39-034

A credit-token agreement is a regulated agreement for the provision of credit ¹⁷⁴ in connection with the use of a credit-token. ¹⁷⁵ Section 14(1) of the 1974 Act ¹⁷⁶ defines a credit-token to mean a card, check, voucher, coupon, stamp, form, booklet or other document or thing given to an individual ¹⁷⁷ by a person carrying on a consumer credit business, ¹⁷⁸ who undertakes—(a) that on the production of it (whether or not some other action is also required) he will supply cash, goods and services (or any of them) on credit; or (b) that where, on production of it to a third party (whether or not any other action is also required), the third party supplies cash, goods and services (or any of them), he will pay the third party for them (whether or not deducting any discount or commission), in return for payment to him by the individual. ¹⁷⁹ Examples of credit-tokens are two-party and three-party (or four-party ¹⁸⁰) credit cards, ¹⁸¹ checks issued by check trading companies by which the holder is enabled to purchase goods from approved suppliers, ¹⁸² certain debit cards, ¹⁸³ and (in certain instances) ¹⁸⁴ cash cards by which cash can be obtained from an automatic machine. ¹⁸⁵ Less obvious documents may also be included, for example "preferred customer" letters issued by a creditor to a debtor upon the successful conclusion of a credit agreement which entitles the debtor, on production of it, to obtain further credit. And in Elliot v Director General of Fair Trading ¹⁸⁶ a Divisional Court held that the need, inter alia, to enter into a credit agreement before the credit was extended was "some other action" (within section 14(1)(a)) and did not prevent the document—a card with the size, shape and appearance of an ordinary credit card—from being a credit-token. ¹⁸⁷ But a document is not a credit-token if it does not have to be produced in order to obtain cash, goods or services. It is further submitted that cheque forms issued by a bank, and cheques and drafts drawn on a bank, are not credit-tokens in that the undertaking of the bank (vis-à-vis its customer) is not to "supply cash", but to pay the instrument. Moreover, it seems clear that electronic purses insofar as they merely store "e-cash" are not "credit-tokens". ¹⁸⁸

"Consumer hire agreement"

39-035

¹⁸⁹ A “consumer hire agreement” is defined in the 1974 Act ¹⁹⁰ and the RAO ¹⁹¹ to mean an agreement made by a person (“the owner”) with an individual ¹⁹² (the “hirer”) for the bailment ¹⁹³ of goods to the hirer, being an agreement which—(a) is not a hire-purchase agreement ¹⁹⁴; and (b) is capable of subsisting for more than three months. ¹⁹⁵ The original version of the definition in the 1974 Act imposed a financial limit ¹⁹⁶ but this has been removed except in relation to “business” hire. ¹⁹⁷ The 1974 Act and RAO thus embrace, not only domestic rental agreements, but also, by reason of the fact that the word “individual” ¹⁹⁸ includes sole traders and small partnerships, and any unincorporated body of persons, ¹⁹⁹ equipment leases and contract-hire agreements even though made for the business purposes of the hirer. ²⁰⁰ However, as noted below, ²⁰¹ “business” hire for over £25,000 is exempt from regulation. The application of the 1974 Act and RAO is therefore (apart from this “business” exemption) determined by the status of the hirer and not by the purpose of the advance. As the Consumer Credit Directive ²⁰² does not apply to hire agreements, such agreements are not affected by those provisions of the 1974 Act introduced in implementation of that Directive. Nor is there any possibility of owners “opting into” the “Directive” regime.

“Regulated” consumer hire agreement

39-036

Since the transfer of consumer credit (and hire) regulation to the FCA, ²⁰³ the definition of “regulated” consumer hire agreement is now in the RAO. ²⁰⁴ A consumer hire agreement is a regulated consumer hire agreement within the meaning of the 1974 Act ²⁰⁵ and for the purposes of RAO ²⁰⁶ if it is not an “exempt agreement” as also defined in the RAO. ²⁰⁷

“Owner” and “hirer”

39-037

The expressions “owner” and “hirer” are used in the 1974 Act to refer respectively to a person who bails goods and the individual to whom goods are bailed under a consumer hire agreement, or the person ²⁰⁸ to whom his rights and duties under the agreement have passed by assignment or by operation of law, and in relation to a prospective consumer hire agreement includes the prospective bailor or hirer. ²⁰⁹ The definition of “owner” in the RAO is almost identical. ²¹⁰ There is no requirement that the owner carries on a consumer hire, or any, business. ²¹¹

“Exempt agreements”: general

39-038

❗ Certain credit and consumer hire agreements are designated “exempt agreements” by the RAO. ²¹²

❗ As such they are excluded from being “regulated agreements”. ²¹³ With two exceptions, ²¹⁴ the fact that a credit agreement is an exempt agreement does not prevent the application to it of the “unfair relationship” provisions in ss.140A to 140C. ²¹⁵ Exempt agreements fall into a number of categories, which will now be considered.

Exempt land mortgages

39-039

❗ Presently, ²¹⁶ there are essentially three types of exempt agreements where the credit is secured on land. ²¹⁷ The first ²¹⁸ is a credit agreement that is a “regulated mortgage contract” (or “regulated home purchase plan”), both as defined in the RAO. ²¹⁹ The effect of this exemption is to remove from the control of the 1974 Act ²²⁰ the majority of land mortgages (as well as “regulated home purchase plans”) where the borrower is an individual, the loan is secured by a first legal mortgage and the property mortgaged is used as a dwelling house by the borrower or his family. The reason for this exemption is that such agreements are (and have been since 2004) regulated under the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000. Secondly, ²²¹ certain types of credit agreements ²²² secured by a land mortgage ²²³ where the lender is either a local authority or a lender specified by the FCA in its rules and falling within various categories, ²²⁴ also constitute exempt agreements. The list of institutions which may be so “specified” (and hence whose land mortgages of a specified description may be rendered exempt agreements) includes banks, building societies, insurers, friendly societies, organisations of employers or workers, charities and land improvement companies. ²²⁵ The third type of exempt land mortgage ²²⁶ is a consumer credit agreement secured by a land mortgage of a dwelling where the lender is a housing authority. ²²⁷ The Mortgage Credit Directive (and hence the relevant amendments noted in the footnotes) came into force on March 21, 2016 and resulted in significant changes to the three types of mortgages that are exempt from the 1974 Act. In relation to the first type of exempt mortgage mentioned, this now results in most land mortgages (as well as any loans to acquire or retain property rights in residential property (so called “MCD art.3(1)(b) agreements”: see CCA 1974 s.8(3)(b), added on March 21, 2016 by the Mortgage Credit Directive Order 2015 (SI 2015/910) art.3 and Sch.1 para.2(2)) being “exempt agreements”, the majority of residential mortgages now being regulated under the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000. And note that none of the three types of exemption mentioned apply in so far as they are incompatible with that Directive (see the list of mortgage contracts that are not “regulated mortgage contracts” in the new RAO art.60HA, added by the Mortgage Credit Directive Order 2015 (SI 2015/910) art.3 and Sch.1 para.4(19), mentioned in nn.223 and 228 in relation to the second and third types of exempt mortgages).

“Investment mortgages” exemption

39-040

⚠ The removal of the financial limit ²²⁸ potentially brought those land mortgages above that limit (that were not otherwise exempt ²²⁹) within regulation. This unintended consequence in relation to certain “investment” especially “buy-to-let” mortgages was obviated by the introduction of an exemption ²³⁰ for credit agreements secured by a land mortgage where less than 40 per cent of the land is used, or intended to be used, as the borrower’s ²³¹ dwelling. ²³² ⚠ However, lending for consumer “buy-to-let” agreements will be regulated under a special regime when the Mortgage Credit Directive comes into force. ²³³ The Mortgage Credit Directive (and hence the relevant amendments noted in the footnotes) came into force on March 21, 2016.

Exempt credit agreements: number of payments

39-041

⚠ Certain “borrower-lender-supplier” ²³⁴ agreements may gain exemption if the number of payments ²³⁵ to be made by the borrower does not exceed a certain number. ²³⁶ ⚠ The most important exemptions are such agreements (i) for “fixed-sum credit” ²³⁷ where the number of payments does not exceed 12 if those payments are required to be made within a period not exceeding 12 months beginning with the date of the agreement ²³⁸ and (ii) for “running-account credit” ²³⁹ where the whole amount outstanding is payable in one instalment per period. As a result of the implementation of the Consumer Credit Directive, ²⁴⁰ further conditions were added. For both the fixed-sum and the running-account exemption, there is now the further condition that the credit must be provided without interest or any other charge (or in the case of running-account credit, with “no or insignificant charges”). Moreover, the running-account exemption only applies if the period does not exceed three months. Neither of these exemptions applies to agreements financing the purchase of land (as these are outside the scope of the Directive), ²⁴¹ but there is a special exemption for such borrower-lender-supplier agreements if the number of payments is not more than four (irrespective of the period over which they are payable) and the credit is either secured on land or provided without

Exempt credit agreements: low-cost of credit

39-042

Certain “borrower-lender” agreements ²⁴³ may gain exemption if the total charge for credit is below certain thresholds. ²⁴⁴ Essentially there are three categories of such “low cost credit” agreements. The first category applies to credit union loans ²⁴⁵ and the other two categories apply to credit agreements offered to a particular class and not offered to the public generally. ²⁴⁶

Exempt credit agreements: other categories

39-043

There are two further categories of exempt credit agreements. The first is credit agreements made in connection with trade in goods or services with a connection with a country outside the United Kingdom. ²⁴⁷ The second is credit agreements by banks or investment firms for the purpose of allowing the borrower to carry out a transaction relating to financial instruments (for example, in the context of settlement mismatches or margin-trading). ²⁴⁸

Exempt consumer hire agreements

39-044

There is one special ²⁴⁹ category of exempt consumer hire agreement: where the owner is a body corporate authorised by or under any enactment to supply electricity, gas or water and the subject of the agreement is a meter or metering equipment. ²⁵⁰

High net worth “opt-out” exemption

39-045

There is an exemption for credit and consumer hire agreements made with “high net worth” borrowers or hirers. ²⁵¹ Four conditions need to be satisfied: (a) the borrower or hirer must be an “individual” ²⁵²; (b) the agreement itself must include a prescribed signed “declaration” ²⁵³ that the borrower or hirer agrees to forgo the “protection and remedies” applicable to regulated agreements ²⁵⁴; (c) a “statement of high net worth”, ²⁵⁵ must have been made ²⁵⁶ in relation to the borrower or hirer; and (d) this statement of high net worth must have been made during the year ending with the date of the agreement. However, as this exemption is incompatible with the Consumer Credit Directive, ²⁵⁷ it is only available for agreements outside the scope of the Directive: credit agreements secured on land, agreements where credit in excess of £60,260 is provided ²⁵⁸ and hire agreements.

“Business purpose” exemption

39-046

Although the Consumer Credit Act 2006 generally removed the financial limit (of £25,000 at the time the 2006 Act was passed), ²⁵⁹ that limit has been retained for “business purpose” credit or hire agreements. ²⁶⁰ Hence those credit and consumer hire agreements entered into “wholly or predominantly” for the borrower’s or hirer’s “business purposes” where the credit provided or hire payments to be made exceed £25,000 ²⁶¹ are exempt agreements. ²⁶² As it may not always be obvious whether the agreement is entered into “wholly or predominantly” for “business” purposes, there is a presumption that arises where the agreement includes a declaration by the borrower or hirer to that effect. ²⁶³ However, the presumption does not apply if, at the time the agreement was made, the lender or owner ²⁶⁴ “knows or has reasonable cause to suspect” that the declaration is not true. ²⁶⁵ If the presumption does not apply, the question of whether the agreement is “wholly or predominantly” for “business” purposes will need to be established in the usual way and, as it will be the lender or owner who will be seeking to invoke the exemption, the onus will then be on them to establish the business purpose on the part of the borrower or hirer.

“Business purpose”: Consumer Credit Directive

39-047

The Consumer Credit Directive ²⁶⁶ does not apply to “business” lending. Nevertheless, a number of provisions resulting from the implementation of the Directive have been extended to regulated “business” credit agreements, in particular, the duty to provide pre-contractual explanations, ²⁶⁷ the duty to assess creditworthiness ²⁶⁸ and the 14-day right of withdrawal in s.66A of the 1974 Act. ²⁶⁹ Moreover, although creditors providing regulated business credit prima facie remain subject to the “old” regime as regards formal agreement requirements, ²⁷⁰ they may instead opt into the new “Directive” regime. ²⁷¹

“Small agreement”

39-048

Section 17 of the 1974 Act defines “small agreements”. These are subject to “lighter” regulation. ²⁷² A small agreement is (a) a regulated consumer credit agreement for credit not exceeding £50, ²⁷³ other than a hire-purchase ²⁷⁴ or conditional sale ²⁷⁵ agreement; or (b) a regulated consumer hire agreement which does not require the hirer to make payments exceeding £50, provided that (in either case) the agreement is an agreement which is either unsecured ²⁷⁶ or secured ²⁷⁷ by a guarantee or indemnity only (whether or not the guarantee is itself secured). In the case of running-account credit, ²⁷⁸ the credit limit must not exceed £50. ²⁷⁹ Section 17 also contains provisions designed to prevent the splitting up of agreements into two or more agreements below the £50 limit. ²⁸⁰ Although the Consumer Credit Directive ²⁸¹ allows Member States to apply a threshold of £160 and to exclude agreements under that amount, on the implementation of the Directive it was decided not to apply that threshold but to maintain the less onerous regulatory regime only for agreements below £50. ²⁸²

“Non-commercial agreement”

39-049

The application of the regulatory regime is, in principle, not limited to situations where creditor/lender or owner carries on the business of granting credit or letting goods on hire, although FCA authorisation is only required by those acting “by way of business”. ²⁸³ A loan by one individual to another will, for example, be a regulated credit agreement as long as it is not exempt. ²⁸⁴ Dispensation is, however, granted from certain provisions ²⁸⁵ of the 1974 Act to “non-commercial agreements”, defined to mean a consumer credit agreement or a consumer hire agreement not made by the creditor or owner in the course of a business ²⁸⁶ carried on by him. ²⁸⁷

“Multiple agreement”

39-050

Section 18 of the 1974 Act, which is an anti-avoidance provision, ²⁸⁸ defines the expression “multiple agreement". Of all the sections in the Act it is this section which has given rise in practice to the greatest difficulty of interpretation. ²⁸⁹ Subsections (1), (2) and (3) appear to envisage four situations. First, where the terms of the agreement are such as to place a part of it within one category of agreement mentioned in the Act and another part of it within a category not so mentioned (for example, a "save and loan" agreement where the loan part is a consumer credit agreement and the savings part falls outside the Act). ²⁹⁰ Secondly, where the terms of the agreement are such as to place a part of it within one category of agreement mentioned in the Act, and another part of it within a different category of agreement so mentioned. ²⁹¹ Thirdly, where the terms of the agreement are such as to place a part of it within two or more categories of agreement mentioned in the Act, the other part or parts falling outside the Act, or within one category, or likewise within two or more categories. ²⁹² Fourthly, where the agreement is a "single" or unitary agreement, not in parts, and the terms of the agreement are such as to place it within two or more categories of agreement mentioned in the Act. ²⁹³ In all four situations, there is a "multiple agreement". But where part of an agreement falls within the first three situations mentioned above, that part is to be treated for the purposes of the Act as a separate agreement, and the Act applies to it accordingly. ²⁹⁴ However, in the fourth situation, the agreement is to be treated as an agreement in each of the categories in question, and the Act applies to it accordingly, ²⁹⁵ but it is not split into separate agreements. ²⁹⁶

"Category of agreement"

39-051

The expression "category of agreement" is not defined in the 1974 Act. However, it would appear to mean a type of agreement that the Act makes special provision for and hence is not limited to the broad categories of agreement created by Pt II ²⁹⁷ of the Act. ²⁹⁸ It also seems that the words "two or more categories" ²⁹⁹ must mean disparate categories. ³⁰⁰

"Part" of an agreement

39-052

The greatest difficulty that has arisen relates to the interpretation and application of the word "part". ³⁰¹ The problem initially surfaced with respect to credit agreements where the debtor elects to take out payment protection insurance, the amount of the premium being financed by the creditor under the principal credit agreement. ³⁰² Suppose, for example, that the principal credit agreement is a hire-purchase or conditional sale agreement, ³⁰³ or a debtor-creditor loan. ³⁰⁴ Does the inclusion in the agreement of payment protection insurance give rise to "parts", requiring each part to be treated for the purposes of the Act as a separate agreement? Or is the agreement (though multiple) a unitary agreement, not in parts, so that such separate treatment is not required? ³⁰⁵ Suppose that an agreement contains two elements, each of which falls within a different category of agreement mentioned in the Act. To determine whether this gives rise to "separate agreements", ³⁰⁶ it is necessary to decide whether these elements constitute "parts" ³⁰⁷ or whether the agreement remains a unitary agreement, not in parts. ³⁰⁸ It is generally agreed that the answer does not depend on whether the parties have literally divided the agreement into parts. ³⁰⁹ But there is a wide spectrum of opinion on the test to be applied. ³¹⁰ On one view s.18 is essentially an anti-avoidance provision and an agreement will be a unitary multi-category agreements, not in parts, if it is an integrated package which could not be split up without affecting the character of the transaction. ³¹¹ On another, more cautious, view, however, the first question to be asked is whether the terms of the agreement treat the two elements differently, e.g. different rates of interest, different terms of repayment, different security. If they do, then the two elements may constitute "parts". Secondly, even if the elements are not differently so treated, is there a substantial degree of disparity between them, having regard to their subject-matter, their legal nature and the operation of the Act? If so, it would be prudent to assume that the two elements constitute parts. So, for example, a hire-purchase agreement coupled with a loan to finance single premium payment protection insurance would give rise to "parts", as each element differs in legal nature ³¹² and for the purposes of the Act. ³¹³ Further problems which have emerged (but to which the same tests might be applied) relate to loans where one element of the loan is unrestricted-use credit, that is at the free disposition of the borrower, and another element is restricted-use credit, re-financing the borrower's indebtedness to another creditor or creditors ³¹⁴; to exempt agreements, ³¹⁵ where one element of the loan is advanced for an exempt purpose and another for a purpose which is non-exempt; and to credit card agreements where the card may be used to obtain goods or services (a debtorcreditor-supplier agreement) or cash (usually a debtor-creditor agreement). ³¹⁶

Consequences if part is a separate agreement

39-053

One of the most important consequences ³¹⁷ of each part being required to be treated as a separate agreement is that the formal requirements of the Consumer Credit (Agreements) Regulations 1983, ³¹⁸ the Consumer Credit (Agreements) Regulations 2010 ³¹⁹ and of the Consumer Credit (Cancellation Notices and Copies of Documents) Regulations 1983, ³²⁰ will, unless otherwise provided, apply distinctly to each part. ³²¹ The resulting complexity of documents is likely to confuse, rather than to assist, the debtor or hirer. Few creditors and owners, however, have thought it necessary, for example, to serve separate enforcement, ³²² default ³²³ or termination ³²⁴ notices in respect of each part which falls to be treated as a separate agreement.

Running-account credit

39-054

In the case of an agreement for running-account credit, ³²⁵ a term of the agreement allowing the credit limit to be exceeded merely temporarily is not to be treated as a separate agreement or as providing fixed-sum credit in respect of the excess. ³²⁶

“Linked transaction” ³²⁷

39-055

❗ The effect of the regulatory regime is not confined to the regulation of consumer credit or consumer hire agreements alone. It extends to “linked transactions”, or transactions ancillary to the consumer credit or consumer hire agreement. ³²⁸ ❗ The definition of a linked transaction is contained in s.19(1) and (2) of the 1974 Act, ³²⁹ and the word “transaction” is, of course, wider than “contract” or “agreement”. ³³⁰ A transaction entered into by the debtor ³³¹ or hirer, or a relative ³³² of his, with any other person (“the other party”), except one for the provision of security ³³³ is a linked transaction in relation to an actual or prospective regulated agreement (the “principal agreement”) of which it does not form part if it falls within one of the categories (a), (b) or (c) in s.19(1).

The first category ³³⁴ of transaction (in s.19(1)(a)) is one that is entered into by the debtor or hirer, or a relative of his, in compliance with a term of the principal agreement. ³³⁵ Therefore if, for example, a regulated hire-purchase or conditional sale agreement relating to a motor vehicle requires the debtor to insure the vehicle during the continuance of the agreement, or if a regulated consumer hire agreement requires the hirer to enter into a contract for the maintenance of the goods during the continuance of the agreement, the contract of insurance and the contract for maintenance (respectively) are “linked transactions”, notwithstanding that the other party to the contract is in no way connected with the creditor and notwithstanding that the debtor is left completely free to choose the source of insurance or maintenance.

39-056

The second category of transaction (in s.19(1)(b)) is one where the principal agreement is a debtor-creditor-supplier agreement ³³⁶ and the transaction is financed, or to be financed, by the principal agreement. Therefore if, for example, a debtor obtains a loan from a financier to enable him to obtain goods from a dealer, and the loan is advanced by the financier under pre-existing arrangements or in contemplation of future arrangements with the dealer, the contract between the debtor and the dealer for the purchase of the goods is a linked transaction. Similarly, where the debtor uses a credit card, debit card or check, in order to obtain goods or services from a supplier, the contract for the supply of the goods or services is a linked transaction.

39-057

⚠ The third category (in s.19(1)(c)) is subdivided into three sub-categories and is so complex that reference should be made to the precise wording of the Act. ³³⁷ Essentially, this category covers a number of situations where a person (not necessarily the creditor or owner himself) initiates the transaction by suggesting it to the debtor or hirer, or his relative. ³³⁸ Thus, for example, if a creditor or broker informs the debtor that a valuation or survey must be carried out as a precondition for the grant of credit, or suggests to the debtor that it would be advisable to take out a payment protection policy, the contract of valuation, survey or insurance will be a linked transaction if the other party to it knew, at the time the transaction was initiated, that the credit agreement had been made or contemplated that it might be made. ³³⁹ ⚠

Linked transaction of no effect until principal agreement made

39-058

One of the particular incidents of a transaction being a “linked transaction”, if entered into before the making of the principal agreement, is that it has no effect until such time (if any) as the principal agreement is made. ³⁴⁰ But regulations have excluded certain linked transactions, namely, contracts of insurance, guarantees of goods and agreements for deposit and current accounts, from the operation of this provision. ³⁴¹

“Total charge for credit” and “APR”

39-059

Before the transfer of consumer credit regulation to the FCA, ³⁴² s.20(1) of the 1974 Act required the Secretary of State to make regulations containing such provisions as appeared to him appropriate for determining the “true” cost to the debtor of the credit provided or to be provided under an actual or prospective consumer credit agreement (the “total charge for credit” and “annual percentage rate” (APR)). ³⁴³ In consequence of the subsequent implementation of the Consumer Credit Directive ³⁴⁴ there were two sets of regulations: the original Consumer Credit (Total Charge for Credit) Regulations 1980 ³⁴⁵ and (in implementation of the Directive) the Consumer Credit (Total Charge for Credit) Regulations 2010. ³⁴⁶ The 1980 Regulations only applied to agreements secured on land (as these are outside the scope of the Directive) unless the creditor had opted into the “Directive” regime. ³⁴⁷ They prescribed what items were to be treated as entering into the total charge for credit, how their amount was to be ascertained, and the method of calculating the APR ³⁴⁸ of the total charge for credit. These regulations provided for the inclusion in the total charge for credit not only of the interest on the credit but also certain other charges. In principle, all charges payable under the transaction ³⁴⁹ by the debtor or a relative ³⁵⁰ of his whether to the creditor or any other person (and thus whether the creditor derived any benefit from them or not) were included, ³⁵¹ although various charges were specifically excluded. ³⁵² Further, the regulations contained the formula for the calculation of the APR ³⁵³ and for the making of assumptions in calculating the total charge for credit and the APR where certain relevant factors could not be ascertained. ³⁵⁴ The 2010 “Directive” Regulations contained similar provisions prescribing what items were to be treated as entering into the total charge for credit, how their amount was to be ascertained, and the method of calculating APR. These regulations also provided for the inclusion in the total charge for credit not only of the interest on the credit but also certain other specified “costs”. ³⁵⁵ Further, they also contained the formula for the calculation of the APR ³⁵⁶ and for the making of assumptions in calculating the total charge for credit and the APR where certain relevant factors could not be ascertained. ³⁵⁷ On the transfer of consumer credit regulation to the FCA, the FCA was given the power to make rules defining the “total charge for credit”. ³⁵⁸ Hence both sets of the Total Charge for Credit Regulations have been repealed and replicated by two sets of FCA rules. ³⁵⁹

Significance of “total charge for credit” and “APR”

39-060

The “true” cost of credit is significant in two main respects. First, one of the most important recommendations of the Crowther Committee on Consumer Credit ³⁶⁰ was that creditors should be compelled to disclose the “true” cost of credit to persons obtaining or wishing to obtain credit. This approach is also reflected in the Consumer Credit Directive. Accordingly the total charge for credit and the APR must be disclosed when credit is promoted ³⁶¹ and in regulated credit agreements. ³⁶² Second, as noted above, certain low-cost “borrower-lender” agreements may gain exemption if the total charge for credit is below certain thresholds. ³⁶³

-
- ^{1.} See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf); Goode, Consumer Credit: Law and Practice (looseleaf); Goode, Consumer Credit Law (1989); Harding, Consumer Credit and Consumer Hire (1995); Philpott, The Law of Consumer Credit and Hire (2009).
 - ^{65.} But see s.188(2), (3). Note Southern Pacific Mortgage Ltd v Heath [2009] EWCA Civ 1135: Example 16 regarded as erroneous by Lloyd L.J.
 - ^{66.} See above, para.39-002.
 - ^{67.} For example the terms “lender” and “borrower” are used (in line with the terminology already used by the FCA Handbook in relation to the regulation of mortgages) rather than “creditor” and “debtor”.
 - ^{68.} The Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (Regulated Activities) Order 2001 (SI 2001/544), as amended. See especially RAO arts 60B(3) and 60L.
 - ^{69.} For the Act to apply there must be an “agreement”, and not merely, e.g. an offer or letter of intent or proposal (see Vol.I, Ch.2). There may, however, be difficulty in ascertaining whether there is an agreement for a line of credit or whether the actual credit agreement is made in pursuance of the line of credit or both.
 - ^{70.} i.e. agrees to provide: see CCA 1974 Sch.2 Example 21 and National Westminster Bank Plc v Story [1999] C.C.L.R. 70 CA.
 - ^{71.} See below, para.39-019.
 - ^{72.} CCA 1974 s.8(1). Section 8 was amended (i) (from April 6, 2008) by the Consumer Credit Act 2006 ss.2(1) and 5; (ii) (from October 31, 2008) by SI 2008/2826; (iii) (from April 1, 2014) by SI 2013/1881 and (iv) (from February 28, 2014) by SI 2014/436 (s.8(1) does not apply to a “green deal plan”, because CCA 1974 s.189B applies instead (see below, para.39-257)). See the almost identical definition in RAO art.60(3). As noted above (para.39-005 n.16), originally the Act imposed a financial limit.
 - ^{73.} CCA 1974 s.189(1), as amended (from April 6, 2007) by the Consumer Credit Act 2006 s.1. See CCA 1974 Sch.2 Pt II Examples 19, 24. See the almost identical definition of “relevant recipient of credit” in RAO art.60L (see n.200 below).
 - ^{74.} Except under CCA 1974 s.185(5), as amended by the Consumer Credit Act 2006 s.5(8), where such a body corporate contracts jointly with an individual. See Bank of Ireland (UK) Plc v McLaughlin [2014] NIQB 104 (corporate debtor not within CCA 1974).
 - ^{75.} See CCA 1974 Sch.2 Pt II Examples 7, 15, 19.

- 76. RAO art.60B(3) (for the definition of “relevant recipient of credit”, see RAO art.60L).
- 77. Moreover, the application of the financial promotion provisions in CONC 3 do not apply to prospective business debtors: CONC 3.1.6R(1) (as was the case with the now repealed 2004 Advertising Regulations), see below, para.39-067.
- 78. RAO art.60C(3)–(7) (previously CCA 1974 s.16B), below para.39-046.
- 79. See above, para.39-011.
- 80. See below, para.39-080.
- 81. See above, para.39-002.
- 82. SI 2001/544, made under the FSMA 2000 s.22 (as amended in this regard by SI 2013/1881). See RAO art.60B(3) and the next footnote.
- 83.  s.8(3), cross-referring to the definition in the RAO Ch.14A. But when the Mortgage Credit Directive (see above, para.39-003) is implemented on March 21, 2016, the further qualification will be added that, for the agreement to be a “regulated credit agreement” for the purposes of the CCA 1974, the agreement must not be for the acquisition or retention of property rights in land or a building (as these are within that Directive, see art.3(1)(d): see amendment to s.8(3) in SI 2015/910 art.3 and Sch.1 para.2(2)). The Mortgage Credit Directive (and hence the relevant amendment) came into force on March 21, 2016.
- 84. RAO art.60B(3).
- 85. In RAO arts 60C–60H, see below, paras 39-038 et seq.
- 86. NRAM Plc v McAdam & Hartley [2015] EWCA Civ 751, reversing [2014] EWHC 4174 (Comm).
- 87. The assignment by an individual debtor of his rights under a consumer credit agreement to a company does not alter the status of the agreement.
- 88. See the FCA Handbook, CONC 6.5 (previously CCA 1974 s.82A (added in implementation of the Consumer Credit Directive, see above, para.39-011)): in the case of an assignment of a regulated agreement other than one secured on land, the assignee must “arrange for” notice to be given to the debtor if arrangements for servicing the credit change from the debtor’s perspective.
- 89. s.189(1). See Jones v Link Financial Ltd [2012] EWHC 2402 (QB), [2012] C.C.L.R. 3 (extent of application of CCA 1974 to legal assignee of creditor).
- 90. RAO art.60L(1).
- 91. But see “non-commercial agreements”, below para.39-049. And a lender who enters into a regulated credit agreement by way of business requires FCA authorisation, see below para.39-062).
- 92. The essence of credit is the contractual right to defer payment of an existing debt, or to incur a debt and defer its payment: R. v Mitchell [1955] 1 W.L.R. 1125; R. v Garlick (1958) 42 Cr. App. R. 141; Grant v Watton (Inspector of Taxes) [1999] S.T.C. 330, 345; Dimond v Lovell [2000] 1 Q.B. 261; affirmed [2002] 1 A.C. 384. See n.98. For the problems which arise, see Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf) at para.2–010; and Goode, Consumer Credit: Law and Practice, Pt C, Ch.24. See also Santander UK Plc v Harrison [2013] EWHC 199 (QB), [2013] C.C.L.R. 4: the capitalisation of arrears (by adding them to the outstanding capital balance and increasing the monthly repayments correspondingly) whilst being the provision of “credit” was not the provision of a “cash loan” (for the purposes of SI 2008/831 art.4(1) which uses the term “cash loan”, see below, para.39-148 n.957).

- 93. CCA 1974 s.9(1); RAO art.60L (and see art.61(3)(c) in relation to mortgages). See CCA 1974 Sch.2 Pt II Examples 16, 19, 21. This wide definition of “credit” is also adopted in numerous other statutory provisions, e.g. the Consumer Protection (Distance Selling) Regulations 2000 (SI 2000/2334) reg.3(1); the Financial Services (Distance Marketing) Regulations 2004 (SI 2004/2095) reg.2(1).
- 94. See CCA 1974 Sch.2 Pt II Example 16.
- 95. But see below, para.39-488.
- 96.  Storlink UK v Thomas [1996] C.L.Y. 1225 Ct; Dimond v Lovell [2000] 1 Q.B. 261, affirmed [2002] 1 A.C. 384. Contrast Legal and General Assurance Soc v Cooper [1994] C.L.Y. 2656 Ct (advance of monies against future commission did not constitute the provision of “credit”); Tilby v Perfect Pizza Ltd (2002) N.L.J. 397, [2003] C.C.L.R. 9 (ATE insurance premium payable only when risk arose did not involve “credit”); Nejad v City Index Ltd [2000] C.C.L.R. 7 (so-called “credit allocation” in betting context not “credit” as indebtedness would not necessarily arise); McMillan Williams v Range [2004] EWCA 294, [2004] 1 W.L.R. 1858 (no “credit” where unclear at the outset if indebtedness would arise); Maple Leaf Macro Volatility Master Fund v Rouvroy [2009] EWHC 257, [2009] C.C.L.R. 9 (no “credit” in funding agreement where no certainty that obligations to pay under the agreement would arise); OFT v Ashbourne Management Services Ltd [2011] EWHC 1237 (Ch) (monthly payment for gym membership did not give rise to “credit”); Burrell v Helical (Bramshott Place) Ltd [2015] EWHC 3727 (Ch) (no deferment of any obligation to pay hence no credit).
- 97. By virtue of the RAO art.60F (previously CCA 1974 s.16(5) and the Exempt Agreements Order SI 1989/869 art.3, made thereunder) the following (inter alia) are “exempt agreements” (see below, para.39-036): (i) certain “borrower-lender-supplier” agreements (see below, para.39-030) for fixedsum credit (see below, para.39-026) where the number of payments to be made by the borrower does not exceed 12 (previously four) if those payments are required to be made within a period of 12 months (or less) beginning with the date of the agreement and (ii) certain “borrower-lender-supplier” agreements (see below, para.39-030) for running-account credit (see below, para.39-024) where the number of payments to be made by the borrower in repayment of the whole credit per period of not more than three months does not exceed one. In both cases (as a result of the Consumer Credit Directive (see above, para.39-011)) there must be no charge for the credit. Further, by virtue of the RAO art.60G, certain “borrower-lender” agreements (see below, para.39-033) at low rates of charge are exempt.
- 98. CCA 1974 s.15 and RAO arts 60N–60R, see below, para.39-035 and above, paras 33-085 et seq.; Moorgate Mercantile Leasing Ltd v Isobel Gell and Ugolini Dispensers (UK) Ltd [1986] 2 C.L. 39 Ct. But see Dimond v Lovell [2000] 1 Q.B. 261; Burdiss v Livsey [2002] EWCA Civ 510, [2003] Q.B. 36 (“credit hire” agreements where hire payments were deferred were also credit agreements); and Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf) at para.2–016.
- 99. CCA 1974 s.9(3) and RAO art.60L(8). See below, para.39-357.
- 100. See above, para.39-010 n.39.
- 101. RAO art.60C(3)–(7) (previously CCA 1974 s.16B), below para.39-046.
- 102. For credit otherwise than in sterling, see CCA 1974 s.9(1) and RAO art.60L(9).
- 103. Defined in CCA 1974 s.10(1)(b) and RAO art.60L; below, para.39-026.
- 104. Which is an agreement for “fixed-sum credit”, see CCA 1974 s.9(3) and RAO art.60L(8); see also below, para.39-357.
- 105. Defined in CCA 1974 s.10(1)(a) and RAO art.60L; below, para.39-024.
- 106. See below, para.39-025.

- 107. See above, para.39-011.
- 108. Viz: CCA 1974 ss.55C, 60(5)(c), 61, 66A, 75A, 77B and FCA Handbook, CONC 4.2 and 4.3 (previously CCA 1974 s.55A). Moreover, the “high net worth” exemption in RAO art.60H (previously CCA 1974 s.16A) below, para.39-045, remains applicable to such agreements. But when the Mortgage Credit Directive (see above, para.39-003) is implemented on March 21, 2016, that threshold will not apply to “residential renovation agreements” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1)): see amendments made in SI 2015/910 art.3 and Sch.1 paras 2(3)–(9).
- 109. In the FCA Handbook, CONC 5 and 6.2 (previously CCA 1974 s.55B) considered further below, para.39-078.
- 110. In the FCA Handbook, CONC 3 (previously SI 2010/1970) considered further below, para.39-067.
- 111.  When the Mortgage Credit Directive (see above, para.39-003) is implemented on March 21, 2016, so-called “residential renovation agreements” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1)) above this threshold will be subject to the (consumer credit) Directive regime: see amendments made by SI 2015/910 art.3 and Sch.1, paras 3, 11, 13, 14. The Mortgage Credit Directive (and hence the relevant amendment) came into force on March 21, 2016.
- 112. See below, paras 39-080 et seq.
- 113. See below, para.39-080.
- 114. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.20(1), 189(1); below, para.39-059.
- 115. s.9(4) (see the equivalent provision in the RAO art.60L(11); added by SI 2015/853 art.3(5)). See CCA 1974 Sch.2 Pt II Examples 5, 19; and Huntpast Ltd v Leadbeater [1993] C.C.L.R. 15; Humberclyde Finance Ltd v Thompson [1997] C.C.L.R. 23; Wilson v First County Trust Ltd [2001] Q.B. 407; Wilson v Robertsons (London) Ltd [2005] EWHC 1425; Griffiths v Welcome Financial Services Ltd [2007] C.C.L.R. 3. In respect of a loan of money advanced in part to discharge prior mortgage arrears, see the apparently conflicting decisions (as to whether these arrears were a “charge for credit”) of the Court of Appeal in Watchtower Investments Ltd v Payne [2001] EWCA Civ 1159 (followed in London North Securities Ltd v Meadows [2005] EWCA Civ 956); and McGinn v Grangewood Securities Ltd [2002] EWCA Civ 522. London North Securities Ltd v Meadows was distinguished in Black Horse Ltd v Hanson & Ant [2009] EWCA Civ 73, [2009] C.C.L.R. 6, where a dealer erroneously added VAT to the price and hence included it when he stated the “amount of the credit” in the agreement. It was held that this VAT amount, although erroneously charged, did form part of the “credit” and was not part of the total charge for credit. See also Southern Pacific Securities 05–2 Plc v Walker [2010] UKSC 32 (deferred broker’s administration fee and interest thereon within s.9(4) and hence not part of “credit”).
- 116. The CCA 1974 uses the expression “consumer credit agreement” (defined in s.8(1)) and the RAO uses the expression “credit agreement” (defined in RAO art.60B) but both have an almost identical meaning, see above, para.39-016.
- 117. CCA 1974 s.10(1)(a) (as amended (from April 6, 2008) by the Consumer Credit Act 2006 s.5(2)(a)) and RAO art.60L. See also CCA 1974 ss.18, 78, 82, 108, 118, 120 and 185.
- 118. See CCA 1974 Sch.2 Pt II Examples 15, 16, 18 and 23. It is a moot point whether traders’ running accounts or milk, newspaper, etc. accounts are for “running-account credit” or “fixed-sum credit”. The distinction is important, inter alia, in respect of the RAO art.60F (previously the Consumer Credit (Exempt Agreements) Order 1989 (SI 1989/869) art.3(1)(a)). See also Goshawk Dedicated (No.2) Ltd v Bank of Scotland [2005] EWHC 2906 (Ch), [2006] C.C.L.R. 1.
- 119. CCA 1974 s.10(2) and RAO art.60L(7). See also CCA 1974 Sch.2 Pt II Examples 6, 7, 19, 22, 23.

- 120. CCA 1974 s.10(2) and RAO art.60L(7). This is to permit, for example, a bank to honour cheques drawn on it in (temporary) excess of an agreed overdraft. See also CCA 1974 ss.18(5), 82(4), Sch.2 Pt II Examples 22, 23.
- 121. Within RAO art.60C(3)–(7) (previously CCA 1974 s.16B), see below, para.39-046.
- 122. CCA 1974 s.10(3)(a), as amended (from April 6, 2008) by the Consumer Credit Act 2006 s.5(2)(b).
- 123. CCA 1974 s.10(3)(b)(i). See the corresponding provision in RAO art.60L(10)(b)(i), added by SI 2015/853 art.3(6). Thus if a bank grants business overdraft facilities to an individual of £60,000 (or even without limit), but stipulates that, say, he shall only be entitled to draw £10,000 in any one month, there will be a regulated credit agreement.
- 124. CCA 1974 s.10(3)(b)(ii). See the corresponding provision in RAO art.60L(10)(b)(ii), added by SI 2015/853 art.3(6). An example would be where the agreement provides for an increase in interest rate, or for provision of security by the debtor, if the debit balance exceeds £10,000.
- 125. CCA 1974 s.10(3)(b)(iii). See the corresponding provision in RAO art.60L(10)(b)(iii), added by SI 2015/853 art.3(6). See also CCA 1974 Sch.2 Pt II Example 7.
- 126. The considerable uncertainty created by this anti-avoidance provision is to some extent mitigated, but by no means wholly removed, by s.171(1) (agreement by the parties that, in their opinion, s.10(3)(b)(iii) does not apply to the agreement).
- 127. The CCA 1974 uses the expression “consumer credit agreement” (defined in s.8(1)) and the RAO uses the expression “credit agreement” (defined in RAO art.60B) but both have an almost identical meaning, see above, para.39-016.
- 128. CCA 1974 s.10(1)(b) (as amended (from April 6, 2008) by the Consumer Credit Act 2006 s.5(2)(a)) and RAO art.60. See also CCA 1974 ss.18, 77, 107, 118, 120, 139. See CCA 1974 s.189C(1)(a): a “green deal consumer credit agreement” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(8) to mean a green deal plan (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1)) that is to be treated as a consumer credit agreement for the purpose of the 1974 Act by virtue of CCA 1974 s.189B(1)) is to be treated as an agreement for fixed-sum credit within s.10(1)(b). For “green deal plans” see below, para.39-257.
- 129. CCA 1974 s.9(3) and RAO art. 60L(8); see below, para.39-357.
- 130. See also CCA 1974 Sch.2 Pt II Examples 9, 10, 17, 23 and note the controversy over traders’, etc. “running accounts” noted above, para.39-025 n.120.
- 131. CCA 1974 s.11(1), which also provides that the expression “restricted-use credit” is to be construed in the Act accordingly. See also ss.12, 13, 19(1)(c), 58(2), 69, 71, 72, 74(2).
- 132. RAO art.60L(1), (2).
- 133. The CCA 1974 s.11(1) uses the term “regulated consumer credit agreement” but it is suggested that the RAO definition (in referring to “credit agreement”) is the more logical as whether an agreement is regulated or not will depend on whether it is for restricted use (and hence a borrowersupplier or borrower-lender-supplier agreement: see above para.39-030 n.152).
- 134. CCA 1974 s.11(1)(a) and RAO art.60L(1). See National Westminster Bank Plc v Story [1999] C.C.L.R. 70 Cty Ct (there must be a contractual commitment “to finance” rather than a mere common purpose, see below, para.39-028). See also Consolidated Finance Ltd v McCluskey [2012] EWCA Civ 1325 (CCA 1974 s.11(1) inapplicable due to absence of either an express or implied term as to the provision of finance), followed in Consolidated Finance Ltd v Collins [2013] EWCA Civ 475.
- 135. CCA 1974 s.9(3) and RAO art.60L(8); below, para.39-357. See also CCA 1974 Sch.2 Pt II

Example 10.

136. See n.135.

137. CCA 1974 s.11(1)(b) and RAO art.60L(1). This category applies even if the identity of the supplier is unknown at the time the agreement is made: CCA 1974 s.11(4) and RAO art.60L(2)(b). See OFT v Lloyds TSB Bank Plc [2006] EWCA 268: despite “very extensive” number of outlets where debtor could use card, agreement still “restricted-use”.

138. See also CCA 1974 Sch.2 Pt II Examples 12, 14, 16. The word “transaction” is not defined in the Act or RAO and will extend to a transaction in land, accommodation, facilities or choses in action (such as shares) as well as goods or services. See Sutherland Professional Funding Ltd v Bakewells (A Firm) [2013] EWHC 2685 (QB): the “supplier” in relation to loan made to finance litigation was the solicitor who paid various disbursements to others, not the individual recipients of the disbursements. See CCA 1974 s.189C(2): where a “green deal consumer credit agreement” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(8)) to mean a green deal plan (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1)) that is to be treated as a consumer credit agreement for the purpose of this Act by virtue of CCA 1974 s.189B(1)) is a regulated agreement, it is to be treated as a restricted-use agreement within s.11(1)(a). For “green deal plans” see below, para.39-257.

139. See n.135.

140. CCA 1974 s.11(1)(c) and RAO art.60L(1). See also CCA 1974 Sch.2 Pt II Example 13. See Consolidated Finance Ltd v Collins [2013] EWCA Civ 475 (on facts, a CCA 1974 s.11(1)(c) not a CCA 1974 s.11(1)(b) case).

141. CCA 1974 s.11(3) and RAO art.60L(2)(a). National Home Loans Corp Plc v Hannah [1997] C.C.L.R. 7 Cty Ct; Citibank International v Schlieder, The Times, March 26, 1999. It has been confirmed that the fact that credit is, in fact, provided in such a way that the debtor is not free to use it as he chooses does not, without more, render it “restricted use” as credit is only “restricted use” if it falls within one of the categories in s.11(1): see National Westminster Bank Plc v Story [1999] C.C.L.R. 70 CA.

142. If it is a term of a regulated agreement, it must be so stipulated: see CCA 1974 s.61(1)(b), below, para.39-083.

143. cf. CCA 1974 Sch.2 Pt II Example 12.

144. National Westminster Bank Plc v Story [1999] C.C.L.R. 70 CA. See para.39-027 n.136, above.

145. National Home Loans Corp Plc v Hannah [1997] C.C.L.R. 7 Cty Ct.

146. See n.135.

147. CCA 1974 s.11(2) and RAO art.60L(1). CCA 1974 s.11(2) (but not the RAO provision) adds that the expression “unrestricted-use credit” is to be construed in the Act accordingly.

148. See above, para.39-027 and note OFT v Lloyds TSB Bank Plc [2006] EWCA Civ 268 (affirmed as regards another issue: [2007] UKHL 48).

149. See also CCA 1974 Sch.2 Pt II Examples 12, 16, 18, 21.

150. See, in particular, CCA 1974 ss.19(1), 56, 69–75. Of these provisions, ss.70(3) and 75 are of particular importance and exemption under the RAO arts 60C–60G (see below, paras 39-036 et seq.), especially arts 60F and 60G, may depend on whether the agreement is “borrower-lender-supplier” or “borrower-lender”.

151. See n.135.

152. CCA 1974 s.12(a) and RAO art.60(L). See above, para.39-027.

- 153. See Dimond v Lovell [2002] 1 A.C. 384 (hire agreement where credit given for hire charges is a CCA 1974 s.12(a) agreement as regards the credit element).
- 154. See above, para.39-027, n.140.
- 155. See above, para.39-027.
- 156. CCA 1974 s.12(b) and RAO art.60(L).
- 157. CCA 1974 s.187 (as amended by Banking Act 1987 s.89, which added a new subs.(3A) excluding arrangements for the electronic transfer of funds from a current account at a bank, e.g. EFTPOS transactions) and RAO art.60L(3)-(5). See below, para.39-488.
- 158. See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf) at para.2–188.
- 159. See OFT v Lloyds TSB Bank Plc [2006] EWCA Civ 268 (affirmed as regards another issue: [2007] UKHL 48) holding that “arrangements” exist in “four-party” credit card situations (see below, para.39-486) between card issuers and suppliers (even suppliers abroad) through network schemes such as VISA and Mastercard. See also Bank of Scotland v Truman [2005] EWHC 583, [2005] C.C.L.R. 3.
- 160. CCA 1974 s.187(1) and RAO art.60L(3). See also CCA 1974 Sch.2 Pt II Example 16, and s.187(4), (5).
- 161. See s.187(2), (4) and RAO art.60L(4), (5).
- 162. CCA 1974 s.187(3) and RAO art.60L(5)(a). See also CCA 1974 Sch.2 Pt II Example 21.
- 163. CCA 1974 s.12(c) and RAO art.60(L).
- 164. This is so whether any other use than a transaction between the customer and the dealer would be a breach of the credit agreement (see CCA 1974 s.11(3) and RAO art.60L(2)(a), above, para. 39-028, and CCA 1974 Sch.2 Pt II Example 8) or whether the loan is, under the agreement, technically at the free disposition of the borrower.
- 165. But certain similar transactions may be excluded by CCA 1974 s.187(3) and RAO art.60L(5)(a); above, n.164. See CCA 1974 Sch.2 Pt II Example 21 (cheque guarantee cards)—but since June 2011, no longer in use.
- 166. See ss.49(1), 74(1). And exemption may depend on whether the agreement is borrower-lender or borrower-lender-supplier, see above para.39-030 and n.152.
- 167. Compare the case of “debtor-creditor-supplier agreements” and “borrower-lender-supplier agreements”, see above, para.39-030.
- 168. See above, para.39-027.
- 169. CCA 1974 s.13(a) and RAO art.60L(1). This excludes agreements within CCA 1974 s.12(b) (and the corresponding agreements within the definition of “borrower-lender-supplier agreement” within art.60L); above, para.39-031.
- 170. See above, para.39-027.
- 171. CCA 1974 s.13(b) and RAO art.60L(1).
- 172. CCA 1974 s.13(c) and RAO art.60L(1). This excludes agreements within CCA 1974 s.12(c) (and the corresponding agreements within the definition of “borrower-lender-supplier agreement” within art.60L); above, para.39-032.
- 173. See also CCA 1974 Sch.2 Pt II Examples 8, 16, 17, 18, 21.

- 174. See CCA 1974 s.9(1) (para.39-019, above) and s.14(3) (considered below).
- 175. CCA 1974 s.14(2). See also CCA 1974 ss.63(4), 64(2), 66, 70(5), 84, 85, 171(4), 170, SI 1983/1553 Sch.2 Pt I para.17 (Sch.2 was replaced by SI 2004/1482); SI 1983/1555, as amended, below, paras 39-494 et seq.
- 176. The definition in the FCA Handbook Glossary is similar.
- 177. Defined in s.189(1), see above, para.39-016.
- 178. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1) to mean any business in so far as it comprises or relates to providing credit (or otherwise being a creditor) under regulated consumer credit agreements.
- 179. Where CCA 1974 s.14(1)(b) applies, it is arguable that a deemed provision of credit arises under s.14(3): see below, para.39-488. See also CCA 1974 Sch.2 Pt II Examples 2, 14, 16, 21, 22. Alternatively (a preferable view), s.14(3) may merely determine when and by whom credit is provided.
- 180. OFT v Lloyds TSB Bank Plc [2006] EWCA Civ 268 (affirmed as regards another issue: [2007] UKHL 48).
- 181. See below, para.39-472.
- 182. See below, para.39-481.
- 183. See below, para.39-477 and Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf) at para.2–015: probably only where issued under an agreement for the provision of credit.
- 184. See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf) at para.2–015.
- 185. CCA 1974 s.14(4).
- 186. [1980] 1 W.L.R. 977.
- 187. It therefore seems that a document that, in law, is an invitation to treat may be a credit-token. The Divisional Court held that “undertakes” in s.14(1) does not require a contractual agreement or the possibility of a contractual agreement.
- 188. See below, para.39-480 and Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf) at para.2–015.
- 189. Provisions of the CCA 1974 and RAO applicable both to consumer credit and consumer hire agreements are dealt with in the present chapter. For provisions applicable solely to consumer hire agreements, see above, paras 33-085 et seq.
- 190. CCA 1974 s.15(1).
- 191. RAO art.60N(3) and note the use of the phrase “individual and relevant recipient of credit [sic]”, which means the same as “individual” in the CCA 1974 s.189(1).
- 192. Defined in s.189(1) (and see previous note), see above, para.39-016.
- 193. Or in Scotland, “the hiring”. It was held in TRM Copy Centre (UK) Ltd v Lanwell Services Ltd [2009] UKHL 35 that “bailment” must be construed as confined to an agreement for hire (i.e. an agreement by which the bailor transfers or agrees to transfer to the bailee possession of and the right to use the goods in exchange for payment in cash or kind). Any wider construction would create anomalies (see Palmer and Yates [1979] C.L.J. 180). And see Eurocopy (Scotland) Plc v Lothian Health Board 1995 S.L.T. 1356 (photocopier held to be provided under a contract of “hire” in circumstances where there was no charge, provided minimum amount of paper was purchased).

- 194. For the definition of “hire-purchase agreement”, see CCA 1974 s.189(1) and below, para. 39-356. Hire-purchase is characterised as fixed-sum credit for the purposes of the CCA 1974 and RAO see below, para.39-357.
- 195. This will exclude, e.g. agreements for hire of plant for a fixed term of one month, but not an agreement from month to month of indefinite duration. It was confirmed in Burdiss v Livsey [2002] EWCA Civ 510, [2003] Q.B. 36 CA that the period referred in CCA 1974 s.15(1)(b) is the period of hire and not the payment (or any other) period.
- 196. CCA 1974 s.15(1)(c), repealed by the Consumer Credit Act 2006 s.2(2). The limit was raised from £5,000 to £15,000 from May 20, 1985, by SI 1983/1878 and to £25,000 from May 1, 1998, by SI 1998/996.
- 197. See RAO art.60O (previously CCA 1974 s.16B), below, para.39-046, which exempts “business” hire agreements where the hirer has to make payments exceeding £25,000.
- 198. Or in the case of the RAO the term “relevant recipient of credit [sic]”, above, n.193.
- 199. See above, para.39-016. cf. CCA 1974 s.185(5).
- 200. See CCA 1974 Sch.2 Pt II Examples 20, 24.
- 201. RAO art.60O (previously CCA 1974 s.16B, below), para.39-046. If the agreement provides, for example, for an automatic adjustment of hire rentals in the event of corporation tax or other changes, it is submitted that the amount that the hirer is required to pay, calculated as at the outset of the agreement, is the relevant figure. cf. CCA 1974 Sch.2 Pt II Example 24. Further, VAT should be included in calculating the £25,000 limit as it is a payment required to be made by the hirer by the agreement (being a tax charged on the supply of the goods and thus part of the consideration for the hiring): Apollo Leasing Ltd v Scott, 1984 S.L.T. 90; Value Added Tax Act 1994 ss.1, 89. More difficult problems are posed by agreements that, upon the expiration of the hiring, provide for a rebate of rentals based on (for example) the price fetched by the goods on resale, so that in effect the hirer pays less than £25,000. It is submitted that the rebate provision will not render the agreement a consumer hire agreement if the rebate is paid after the hirer has made payments in excess of £25,000. But if the rebate is to be set-off against the final (usually large) rental, the possibility that the hirer will not be required to make payments in excess of £25,000 would appear to constitute the agreement a regulated hire agreement.
- 202. See above, para.39-011.
- 203. See above, para.39-002.
- 204. SI 2001/544, made under the FSMA 2000 s.22 (as amended in this regard by SI 2013/1881). See RAO art.60N(3) and the next footnote.
- 205. s.15(2), cross-referring to the definition in the RAO.
- 206. RAO art.60N(3).
- 207. In RAO arts 60O-60Q, see below, paras 39-044 et seq.
- 208. The assignment by an individual hirer of his rights under a consumer hire agreement to a company does not alter the status of the agreement.
- 209. CCA 1974 s.189(1). In the case of a hire-purchase agreement, the parties are respectively the “creditor”/“lender” and “debtor”/“borrower” as hire-purchase is characterised as fixed-sum credit, not hire: see below, para.39-357.
- 210. RAO art.60N(3). Curiously, “hirer” is not defined in the RAO except (see the definition of “consumer hire agreement” (see para.39-035, above)), as being the counterparty to the owner.

- 211. But see “non-commercial” agreements, below, para.39-049. And an owner who enters into regulated consumer hire agreements by way of business requires FCA authorisation, see below, para.39-062).
- 212.  The Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (Regulated Activities) Order 2001 (SI 2001/544) art.s 60C-60H (credit) and arts 60O-60Q (hire), inserted by the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (Regulated Activities) (Amendment) (No.2) Order 2013 (SI 2013/1881) art.6. These new provisions replace the old CCA 1974 ss.16-16C. They will be amended significantly when the Mortgage Credit Directive (see above, para.39-003) is implemented on March 21, 2016 to reflect the exemption of second charge land mortgages: see amendments in SI 2015/910 art.3 and Sch.1 para.4. See also below, para.39-531. The Mortgage Credit Directive (and hence the relevant amendments) came into force on March 21, 2016.
- 213. See above, paras 39-017, 39-036. For further discussion, see Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf), para.2-017; and Goode, Consumer Credit: Law and Practice (looseleaf), Pt C, Ch.26.
- 214. Land mortgages and home purchase plans (that are “exempt agreements” under RAO art.60C(2), see below, para.39-039).
- 215. CCA 1974 s.140A(5). On ss.140A-140C, see below, paras 39-212 et seq. These provisions do not apply to hire agreements.
- 216. But when the Mortgage Credit Directive (see above, para.39-003) is implemented on March 21, 2016, most residential land mortgages will become “regulated mortgage contracts” under the Financial Services and Markets 2000 regime and hence will be exempt from the CCA 1974 regime on that basis: see below and paras 39-531 et seq.
- 217. See also (i) below, para.39-040 and (ii) the exemption for “borrower-lender-supplier” agreements secured on land and financing the purchase of land where the number of payments is 12 (previously four) or less in RAO art.60F(4), referred to below in para.39-041.
- 218. RAO art.60C(2). When the Mortgage Credit Directive (see above, para.39-003) is implemented on March 21, 2016, note the proposed amendment to art.60(2) in SI 2015/910 art.3 and Sch.1 para.4(13).
- 219. RAO arts 61(3) and 63F (added by the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (Regulated Activities) (Amendment No.2) Order 2006 (SI 2006/2383)), respectively. This exemption was previously in CCA 1974 s.16(6C)-(6E), added on October 31, 2004 by the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (Regulated Activities) Order 2001 (SI 2001/544) art.90(2) and amended (to add the reference to “regulated home purchase plan”) on April 6, 2007 by the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (Regulated Activities) (Amendment No.2) Order 2006 (SI 2006/2383) art.25(2). This category will cover most residential mortgages when the Mortgage Credit Directive (see above, para.39-003) is implemented on March 21, 2016: see below, para.39-531. Note the proposed amendment to art.60(2) in SI 2015/910 art.3 and Sch.1 para.4(13).
- 220. As noted above, para.39-038, whilst the “unfair relationship” provisions in CCA 1974 ss.140A-140C generally apply to “exempt agreements”, those provisions do not apply to these two categories of exempt agreements (see s.140A(5)). However CCA 1974 s.126 (as substituted by 2013/1881 art.30(38), as amended by SI 2014/506) applies to preclude enforcement of a land mortgage securing a “regulated mortgage contract” (but not a “home purchase plan”) without a court order: s.126(1)(b).
- 221. RAO art.60E(1)-(4). This exemption was previously in CCA 1974 s.16(1), (2), as amended. When the Mortgage Credit Directive (see above, para.39-003) is implemented on March 21, 2016, this exemption will not apply in so far as it is not permitted by that Directive: see new RAO art.60HA, to be added by SI 2015/910 art.3 and Sch.1 para.4(19).

- 222. A “relevant credit agreement relating to the purchase of land” as defined in RAO art.60E(7) (and see art.60E(8)-(10)).
- 223. “legal or equitable mortgage secured on land” as defined in RAO art.60L(1).
- 224. Those specified in RAO art.60E(3). Under the old CCA 1974 provisions, the institutions (and the relevant agreements) were specified by the Exempt Agreements Order 1989 (SI 1989/869) (as extensively amended).
- 225. The list also includes bodies corporate “named or specifically referred to in any public general Act” and bodies corporate “named or specifically referred to in an order” made under “a relevant housing provision” (as defined in RAO art.69E(7)).
- 226. RAO art.60E(5). When the Mortgage Credit Directive (see above, para.39-003) is implemented on March 21, 2016, this exemption will not apply in so far as it is not permitted by that Directive: see new RAO art.60HA, to be added by SI 2015/910 art.3 and Sch.1 para.4(19).
- 227. “Housing authority” is defined in RAO art.60E(7). This exemption was previously in CCA 1974 s.16(6A), (6B) inserted by the Housing and Planning Act 1986 s.22.
- 228. See above, para.39-005 n.16.
- 229. See above, especially para.39-039 for the many exemptions available for land mortgages.
- 230. RAO art.60D (previously CCA 1974 s.16C, added on October 1, 2008 by the Legislative Reform (Consumer Credit) Order 2008 (SI 2008/2826); see the transitional provisions (ensuring that the financial limit was not removed for these agreements until the exemption came into force) in SI 2008/831 art.3(1) and Sch.2). As is the case in all other exempted land mortgages (except for those exempted by RAO art.60C(2)), the “unfair relationship” provisions in ss.140A-140C (see below, paras 39-212 et seq.) apply. And CCA 1974 s.126 also applies to art.60D mortgages: CCA 1974 s.126(2).
- 231. Or “related person of the borrower” (as defined in art.60D(3)(d)). For the position of credit provided to trustees, see art.60D(2)(b).
- 232.  There is no requirement that the debtor actually rent out the land. When the Mortgage Credit Directive (see above, para.39-003) is implemented on March 21, 2016, this exemption will not apply to credit agreements within art.3(1)(b) of that Directive i.e. those for the acquisition or retention of interests in land or buildings: see amendment to art.60D in SI 2015/910 art.3 and Sch.1 para.3(14). But such so-called “MCD art.3(1)(b) agreements” (see para.39-039, above) are not regulated by the CCA 1974 by reason of CCA 1974 s.8(3)(b), added on March 21, 2016 by the Mortgage Credit Directive Order 2015 (SI 2015/910) art.3 and Sch.1 para.2(2).
- 233. See above, para.39-003 and below, para.39-531.
- 234. See above, para.39-030, not “borrower-lender” agreements, see above, para.39-033. But this exemption does not apply to conditional sale or hire-purchase agreements or agreements secured by a pledge: RAO art.60F(2)(e), (3)(e) and (7).
- 235. “Payment” is defined in RAO art.60F(8) (as amended by SI 2015/853 art.3(5)) as a payment comprising or including either the repayment of capital or the payment of interest or any other charge which forms part of the total charge for credit (as to which, see above, para.39-059).
- 236.  RAO art.60F (as amended by SI 2015/352 and 2015/853). It essentially re-enacts, but with some changes, (the now revoked) Consumer Credit (Exempt Agreements) Order 1989 (SI 1989/869) art.3, made under (the now repealed) CCA 1974 s.16(5)(a). Article 3 was substantially amended as a result of the implementation of the Consumer Credit Directive (see above, para.39-011). RAO art.60F(4), which applies to certain land mortgages, will be amended when the Mortgage Credit Directive (see above, para.39-003) is implemented on March 21, 2016, so as to be compatible with that Directive: see new RAO art.60HA, to be added by SI 2015/910 art.3 and Sch.1 para.4(19). The Mortgage Credit Directive (and hence the relevant amendment) came into force on March 21, 2016.

237. See above, para.39-026.

238. See (on the old provision, where the number of payments had to be four or less, see above, n.238) Zoan v Rouamba [2001] 1 W.L.R. 1509; Ketley v Gilbert [2001] 1 W.L.R. 986; O'Hagan v Wright [2001] NICA 26, [2003] C.C.L.R. 6; Clarke v Tull [2002] EWCA 510, [2002] C.C.L.R. 4; Thew v Cole [2003] EWCA Civ 1828, [2004] R.T.R. 410; Stevenson v Dudley Social Services [2006] C.L.Y. 704 Cty Ct; Barons Finance Ltd & Reddy Corp Ltd v Makanju [2013] EWHC 153 (QB), [2013] C.C.L.R. 3; Consolidated Finance Ltd v Collins [2013] EWCA Civ 475.

239. See above, para.39-024.

240. See above, para.39-011.

241. RAO art.60F(7)(a).

242.  RAO art.60F(4). Note (see n.238) that art.60F(4) does not apply in so far as it is incompatible with the Mortgage Credit Directive. There are also special exemptions for the financing of insurance premium exemptions in RAO art.60F(5) and (6).

243. See above, para.39-033, not “borrower-lender-supplier” agreements, see above para.39-030.

244.  RAO art.60G. It essentially re-enacts, but with some changes, (the now revoked) Consumer Credit (Exempt Agreements) Order 1989 (SI 1989/869) art.4, made under (the now repealed) CCA 1974 s.16(5)(b). Article 4 was substantially amended as a result of the implementation of the Consumer Credit Directive (above, para.39-011). Note the amendments to be made to art.60G when the Mortgage Credit Directive (see above, para.39-003) is implemented on March 21, 2016 (to render it compatible with the Directive) by SI 2015/910 art.3 and Sch.1 para.4(17). The Mortgage Credit Directive (and hence the relevant amendment) came into force on March 21, 2016.

245. RAO art.60G(2). The rate of total charge for credit must not exceed 42.6 per cent.

246. See (i) RAO art.60G(3) (if interest is the only charge and the interest may not at any time be more than the sum of 1 per cent and the highest of the base rates published by the banks listed in art.60G(7) on the date 28 days before the date on which the interest is charged) and (ii) RAO art.60G(4) (if the rate or amount of any item entering into the total charge for credit cannot be increased after the date of the agreement and that rate must not exceed 1 per cent above the highest bank rate of the banks listed in art.60G(7) as it stood 28 days before the date of the agreement).

247. RAO art.60C(8). It essentially re-enacts, but with some changes, (the now revoked) Consumer Credit (Exempt Agreements) Order 1989 (SI 1989/869) art.5, made under (the now repealed) CCA 1974 s.16(5)(c). Some ordinary foreign trade transactions would otherwise be caught.

248. RAO art.60E(6). It essentially re-enacts, but with some changes, (the now revoked) Consumer Credit (Exempt Agreements) Order 1989 (SI 1989/869) art.5A, added in implementation of the Consumer Credit Directive (see above, para.39-011) art.2(2)(h), by SI 2010/1010 reg.67A (inserted by SI 2010/1969).

249. See also the exemptions (also available for credit agreements) considered below in para.39-045 (HNW exemption) and para.39-046 (business purpose exemption).

250. RAO art.60P. It essentially re-enacts, but with some changes, (the now revoked) Consumer Credit (Exempt Agreements) Order 1989 (SI 1989/869) art.6, made under (the now repealed) CCA 1974 s.16(6).

- 251. RAO art.60H (credit) and art.60Q (hire) (previously CCA 1974 s.16A, added by the Consumer Credit Act 2006 s.3). The exemption mirrors the one for “certified sophisticated investors” in relation to financial promotion under the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (Financial Promotion) Order 2005 (SI 2005/1529) art.50.
- 252. i.e. a natural person and not a partnership or unincorporated association (or corporation, although these cannot make regulated agreements anyway). See above, para.39-016.
- 253. Complying with the relevant FCA rules (see the FCA Handbook, CONC App 1.4.6) (previously the (now repealed) Consumer Credit (Exempt Agreements) Order 2007 (SI 2007/1168) art.3 and Sch.1).
- 254. Although (see above, para.39-038) the “unfair relationship” provisions in ss.140A-140C (below, paras 39-212 et seq.) apply and the declaration must say so.
- 255. Again complying with the relevant FCA rules (see FCA Handbook, CONC App 1.4.6) (previously the (now repealed) Consumer Credit (Exempt Agreements) Order 2007 (SI 2007/1168) art.5 and Sch.2).
- 256. It must be made by a person of a description “specified” by the FCA rules (and hence not by the borrower or hirer themselves) and must state that, in that person’s opinion, the borrower or hirer either has an income or has net assets above a certain (specified by the rules) amount (presently net annual income after tax of above £150,000) or net assets (which are defined to exclude the primary residence and pension rights) of at least £500,000. A copy of this statement must be provided to the lender or owner before the agreement is made.
- 257.  See above, para.39-011. It is also incompatible with the Mortgage Credit Directive (see above, para.39-003) and hence will be amended when that Directive is implemented on March 21, 2016: see (i) new RAO art.60HA, to be added by SI 2015/910 art.3 and Sch.1 para.4(19) and (ii) amendment to be made by SI 2015/910 art.3 and Sch.1 para.4(18). The Mortgage Credit Directive (and hence the relevant amendment) came into force on March 21, 2016.
- 258.  See RAO art.60(H)(b) (and above, para.3-022). But when the Mortgage Credit Directive (see above, para.39-003) is implemented on March 21, 2016, this exemption will not apply to (a) so-called “residential renovation agreements” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1)) and (b) credit for the purpose of acquiring or retaining property rights in land or buildings: see amendments to art.60(H) in SI 2015/910 art.3 and Sch.1 para.4(18). The Mortgage Credit Directive (and hence the relevant amendment) came into force on March 21, 2016.
- 259. See above, para.39-005 n.16.
- 260.  RAO art.60C(3)-(7) (credit) and RAO art.60O (hire) (previously CCA 1974 s.16B, added by the Consumer Credit Act 2006 s.4). As noted above, paras 39-016 and 39-035, in general “business” credit and hire is within the scope of the regulatory regime. The old CCA 1974 provision was unsuccessfully invoked in Bassano v Alfred Toft, Peter Biddulph, Peter Biddulph Ltd, Borro Loan Ltd, Borro Loan 2 Ltd [2014] EWHC 377 (QB), [2014] C.C.L.R. 8. See also, on art.60C(3)-(7), Newmafruit Farms Ltd v Pither [2016] EWHC 2205 (QB), [2017] C.C.L.R. 8.
- 261. For a discussion of how this limit is calculated, see para.39-021 (credit) and 39-035 (hire).
- 262. See Woolsey v Payne [2015] EWHC 968 (Ch) (meaning of business purposes in old s.16B). The exemption also applies to “green deal plans” (see RAO art.60C(4) and for “green deal plans” see below, para.39-257) but they must be entered “wholly” (not “wholly or predominantly”) for business purposes.
- 263. RAO art.60C(5) and art.60O(2). The declaration must comply with FCA rules (see FCA Handbook, CONC App.1.4.8). Although this is not made explicit (cf. the presumptions in CCA 1974 s.171(1), (2)), it seems clear that this presumption can be rebutted by evidence to the contrary adduced by the borrower or hirer.

- 264. Or any person who has acted on his behalf in connection with the entering into of the agreement, for example a broker.
- 265. RAO art.60C(6) and art.60O(3). If there is more than one lender or owner, then it is enough for this to be the case in relation to only one. It seems clear that (if the agreement contains the declaration) the onus is on the borrower or hirer to establish this. See Wood v Capital Bridging Finance Ltd [2015] EWCA Civ 451 (presumption rebutted).
- 266. See above, para.39-011.
- 267. In the FCA Handbook, CONC 4.2 and 4.3 (previously CCA 1974 s.55A): see below, para.39-077.
- 268. In the FCA Handbook, CONC 5 and 6.2 (previously CCA 1974 s.55B): see below, para.39-078.
- 269. See below, para.39-101.
- 270. See below, paras 39-076 et seq.
- 271. See below, para.39-080.
- 272. In so far as the FCA Handbook uses the term “small borrower-lender-supplier agreement” (see CONC 2.9.2(2)R), this is defined by the Glossary by reference to CCA 1974 s.17. Pt V of the CCA 1974 (except ss.55, 56 and 66A), which relates to the form and content of regulated agreements, does not apply to “small” debtor-creditor-supplier agreements for restricted use: CCA 1974 s.74(1)(d) and see subss.(2) and (4). The older 2004 Disclosure Regulations made under s.55 apply (unless the creditor has opted into the “Directive” regime): SI 2004/1481 reg.2, as amended by SI 2010/1010 reg.75 and SI 2010/1969 reg.24, see below, para.39-076. The following sections do not apply to any “small” agreements: CCA 1974 ss.77A and 78(7) (periodic statements), s.85(3) (issue of new credittokens), ss.86B and 86C (notice of sums in arrears), s.86E (notice of default sums) and s.130A (interest on judgment debts). Moreover, FCA Handbook, CONC 2.9 (previously CCA 1974 s.51) prohibiting unsolicited credit-tokens does not apply to “small borrower-lender-supplier agreements”. But CCA 1974 ss.77B (statement of account on request) and 78A (notification of variation of interest), added in consequence of the implementation of the Consumer Credit Directive (see above, para.39-011), do apply.
- 273. The limit may be raised under CCA 1974 s.181 and was raised from £30 to £50 by SI 1983/1878. See CCA 1974 Sch.2 Pt II Examples 16, 17, 21, 22.
- 274. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1); below, para.39-356.
- 275. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1); below, para.39-442.
- 276. See the definition of “security” in CCA 1974 s.189(1); below, para.39-180.
- 277. CCA 1974 s.189(1).
- 278. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.10, 189(1); above, para.39-024.
- 279. CCA 1974 s.17(2) (as amended by the Consumer Credit Act 2006 s.5(3)) and note ss.10(2) and 10(3)(a). See also CCA 1974 Sch.2 Pt II Examples 16, 21, 22.
- 280. s.17(3), (4).
- 281. See above, para.39-011.
- 282. See Consultation on Proposals for Implementing the Consumer Credit Directive, BERR, April 2009, para.1.11.

- 283. See below, para.39-062.
- 284. See above, paras 39-038 et seq.
- 285. Pt V of the Act (except s.56), which relates to the form and content of regulated agreements, and withdrawal from and cancellation of regulated agreements, does not apply to “non-commercial” agreements: s.74(1)(a). The following sections also do not apply to non-commercial agreements: CCA 1974 ss.75(1), 77-79, 80(1), 82, 83, 86B, 86C, 86E 103(1), 107-109, 110(1), 112, 114-122, 123 and 130A.
- 286. i.e. any business, as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), (2); see also below, para.39-062. There is an identical definition of “non-commercial agreement” in the FCA Handbook Glossary.
- 287. CCA 1974 s.189(1). The CCA 1974 does not make provision in s.171 as to the onus of proof, but it would seem that the burden lies on the person alleging the agreement to be a non-commercial agreement. In Khodari v Tamimi [2009] EWCA 1109, [2010] C.C.L.R. 3 a series of large loans over six years in a private context by a banker “to foster the relationship with an important client” at gambling clubs were held not to have been made “in the course of business” and hence to be “noncommercial” loans. For another example of a non-commercial agreement, see Bassano v Alfred Toft, Peter Biddulph, Peter Biddulph Ltd, Borro Loan Ltd, Borro Loan 2 Ltd [2014] EWHC 377 (QB), [2014] C.C.L.R. 8. See also Woolsey v Payne [2015] EWHC 968 (Ch).
- 288. See Auld L.J. in National Westminster Bank Plc v Story [1999] C.C.L.R. 70 CA.
- 289. See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf) at para.2-019; Goode, Consumer Credit: Law and Practice (looseleaf), Pt C, paras 25.101 et seq. The reform of s.18 was considered in the review that led to the Consumer Credit Act 2006 (see the DTI Consultation Document, Tackling loan sharks—and more! (July 2002)) but as the impact of s.18 was diminished both by the repeal of s.127(3)-(4) and the removal of the financial limit, no proposals for reform were forthcoming. The Home Credit Market Investigation Order 2007 (made by the Competition Commission under the Enterprise Act 2002 ss.161 and 164 and amended in 2011) art.9 is in almost identical terms to s.18. For appellate case-law see National Westminster Bank Plc v Story [1999] C.C.L.R. 70 and Southern Pacific Mortgage Ltd v Heath [2010] EWCA Civ 1135, [2010] C.C.L.R. 4. See also: National Home Loans Corp Plc v Hannah [1997] C.C.L.R. 7 Ct; Wilson v First County Trust Ltd (No.1) [2003] C.C.L.R. 1; Ocwen v Coxall [2004] C.C.L.R. 7; London North Securities Ltd v Meadows [2005] EWCA 956, [2005] C.C.L.R. 7. For cases where s.18 was held inapplicable, see Dimond v Lovell [2002] 1 A.C. 384; Burdish v Livsey [2002] EWCA Civ 510, [2003] Q.B. 36; Goshawk Dedicated (No.2) Ltd v Bank of Scotland [2005] EWHC 2908 (Ch), [2006] C.C.L.R. 1.
- 290. CCA 1974 s.18(1)(a) and Sch.2 Example 18. But see s.18(6) (exemption for furnished lettings). cf. National Home Loans Corp Plc v Hannah [1997] C.C.L.R. 7 Ct.
- 291. CCA 1974 s.18(1)(a) and Sch.2 Example 16 (but Example 16, in suggesting that an agreement could fall within both s.18(1)(a) and 18(1)(b), was regarded as erroneous by Lloyd L.J. in Southern Pacific Mortgage Ltd v Heath [2009] EWCA Civ 1135).
- 292. CCA 1974 s.18(1)(b).
- 293. CCA 1974 s.18(1)(b). For an example, see Southern Pacific Mortgage Ltd v Heath [2010] EWCA Civ 1135, [2010] C.C.L.R. 4: (obiter) credit card agreements and (ratio) the loan agreement in that case, were “single” (or unitary) agreement within s.18(1)(b).
- 294. CCA 1974 s.18(2). Where part of an agreement falls within the third situation, the agreement (i.e. the separate agreement constituted by subs.(2)) is also to be treated as an agreement in each of the categories in question, and the Act applies to it accordingly (s.18(3)). See also s.18(4) (construction and apportionment).
- 295. CCA 1974 s.18(3).

- 296. The opening words of subs.(2) make it clear that the subsection is applicable only where part of an agreement falls within subs.(1) and see Southern Pacific Mortgage Ltd v Heath [2010] EWCA Civ 1135, [2010] C.C.L.R. 4.
- 297. CCA 1974 ss.10-19.
- 298. And so would include, e.g. “hire purchase”, “conditional sale” and “credit sale” agreements: see CCA 1974 s.189(1). But see National Westminster Bank Plc v Story [1999] C.C.L.R. 70.
- 299. CCA 1974 s.18(1)(b).
- 300. Southern Pacific Mortgage Ltd v Heath [2010] EWCA Civ 1135, [2010] C.C.L.R. 4; National Home Loans Corp Plc v Hannah [1997] C.C.L.R. 7 Ct.
- 301. See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf) at para.2-019.
- 302. Giving rise to a debtor-creditor-supplier agreement (within CCA 1974 s.12(b), see above, para.39-029) for restricted-use (see above, para.39-027) fixed-sum credit (see above, para.39-026).
- 303. Additional difficulties arise in this case because of the wording of CCA 1974 ss.90, 100: see Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf) at paras 2-019, 2-091, 2-101.
- 304. See above, para.39-033.
- 305. The Agreement Regulations (see below, paras 39-080 et seq.) in fact resolved this particular dilemma by making special provision for such a case: see SI 1983/1553 reg.2(8) and (9) and SI 2010/1014 reg.3(6) and (7).
- 306. CCA 1974 s.18(2).
- 307. The second situation mentioned above, para.39-050.
- 308. CCA 1974 s.18(1)(b). The fourth situation mentioned above, para.39-050.
- 309. CCA 1974 s.18(5) and Sch.2 Examples 16 and 18.
- 310. See, e.g. Goode, Consumer Credit Law and Practice (looseleaf); Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf) at para.2-019.
- 311. Goode, above. In Southern Pacific Mortgage Ltd v Heath [2010] EWCA Civ 1135, [2010] C.C.L.R. 4 the Court of Appeal essentially approved the “Goode” view, holding that a loan in excess of the (then) financial limit similar to that in National Home Loans Corp Plc v Hannah [1997] C.C.L.R. 7 Ct, fell within s.18(1)(b) in that although aspects fell within two categories of agreement, it was not in “parts” and hence was not notionally “split” by virtue of s.18(2). cf. National Westminster Bank Plc v Story [1999] C.C.L.R. 70.
- 312. The hire-purchase element is a contract of hire of goods whereas the loan for the insurance is a contract of loan.
- 313. The hire-purchase element is a debtor-creditor-supplier agreement within CCA 1974 s.12(a), whereas the loan for the insurance is a debtor-creditor-supplier agreement within CCA 1974 s.12(b), to which the Act attributes very different incidents, see, e.g. s.75 (below, para.39-303). See above, n.304.
- 314. In this case, however, unless there are differing terms, it is submitted that the agreement is a unitary agreement, not in parts, since each element is a contract of loan, and the Act attributes no very different incidents to restricted-use/unrestricted-use credit. But see National Westminster Bank Plc v Story [1999] C.C.L.R. 70.

- 315. See above, paras 39-038 et seq.
- 316. See CCA 1974 Sch.2 Example 16. See now Southern Pacific Mortgage Ltd v Heath [2010] EWCA Civ 1135, [2010] C.C.L.R. 4: (obiter) credit card agreements (and (ratio)) the loan agreements in that case were a “single” (or unitary) agreement within s.18(1)(b)) and Example 16 was regarded as erroneous in suggesting that an agreement could fall within both s.18(1)(a) and 18(1)(b).
- 317. When the CCA 1974 imposed a general financial limit, a further important consequence was that the separate agreements might have been below the limit (and hence regulated) whereas the “whole” agreement was above it (and hence not regulated). This issue might still arise in relation to a “business” agreement above the limit in the exemption provided for in RAO art.60C(3)-(7) (credit) and RAO art.60O (hire); see above, para.39-046.
- 318. SI 1983/1553, as amended, see below, para.39-081.
- 319. SI 2010/1014, as amended by SI 2010/1969 regs 41-45, see below, para.39-082.
- 320. SI 1983/1557, as amended; see below, para.39-086.
- 321. But see reg.2(8) and (9) (previously reg.2(7A) inserted by SI 1984/1600) of the Consumer Credit (Agreements) Regulations 1983, as amended by SI 2004/1482 reg.4 (alleviation in the case of certain types of payment protection insurance). And see the identical provision in reg.3(6) and (7) of the Consumer Credit (Agreements) Regulations 2010 (SI 2010/1014).
- 322. CCA 1974 s.76; see below, para.39-64.
- 323. CCA 1974 s.87; see below, para.39-166.
- 324. CCA 1974 s.98; see below, para.39-172.
- 325. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.10, 189(1); above, para.39-024.
- 326. CCA 1974 s.18(5). See also CCA 1974 ss.10(2), 82(4). This covers a bank honouring cheques drawn on it in (temporary) excess of an agreed overdraft. See CCA 1974 Sch.2 Pt II Examples 22, 23.
- 327. See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf), para.2-020; and Goode, Consumer Credit: Law and Practice (looseleaf), Pt C, Ch.43.
- 328.  See CCA 1974 ss.57(1), 67, 69(1), 70, 72, 95(2), 96, 113(8)-141(1), 142(2), 173, 179. See also CCA 1974 s.140C(4)(b) and note s.140C(5) and (6)(b) (a “linked transaction” is a “related agreement” for the purpose of ss.140A and 140B (the “unfair relationship” provisions, see above, paras 39-212 et seq.)). In Townson v FCE Bank Plc (t/a Ford Credit), Unreported, June 23, 2016 (Birmingham Cty Ct) a PPI policy that was a “linked transaction” (within s.19(1)(c), see below, para.39-057) was held to be a “related transaction” in the context of the “unfair relationship” provisions. See Townson v FCE Bank Plc (t/a Ford Credit), Unreported, June 23, 2016 (Birmingham Cty Ct): PPI policy within s.19(1)(c). “Linked transactions” are not to be confused with the Consumer Credit Directive concept of “linked credit agreements” to which s.75A (see below, para.39-305) applies.
- 329. See also CCA 1974 Sch.2 Pt II Example 11. The definition of “attached contract” in the Financial Services (Distance Marketing) Regulations 2004 (SI 2004/2095) reg.12(2) is similar to s.19(1)(a), (1)(b) and (1)(c)(i). The term “linked transaction” is also used in RAO art.60E(7)(c) (definition of “relevant credit agreement relating to the purchase of land”) and is defined (in RAO art.60E(8)) in an almost identical fashion.
- 330. cf. Greenberg v IRC [1972] A.C. 109 (on s.43(4)(i) of the Finance Act 1960).
- 331. See CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in CCA 1974 s.19, references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” (as defined in s.189(1), see below, para.39-257) are to be read as references to the “improver”, as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6).

332. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.184(1), 189(1).

333. See below, para.39-180 (including a contract of guarantee or indemnity), and CCA 1974 Sch.2 Pt II Example 11. An insurance policy that is assigned to the creditor may be a linked transaction since it is the contract of assignment (and not the policy contract itself) that constitutes the “provision of security”.

334. See also CCA 1974 Sch.2 Pt II Example 11.

335. The wording contemplates that the transaction must be made after the principal agreement (in that it can only then be made “in compliance with a term” of that agreement). But see CCA 1974 s.19(1)(c), below.

336. Above, para.39-030. See Citibank International v Schneider, The Times, March 26, 1999 (where this condition was not satisfied and hence s.19(1)(b) held not to apply) and Goshawk Dedicated (No.2) Ltd v The Governor and Company of the Bank of Scotland [2005] EWHC 2906 (Ch) (solicitors’ disbursements were linked transactions within s.19(1)(b) in being financed by a debtor-creditor-supplier agreement).

337. See also CCA 1974 s.19(2). See also CCA 1974 Sch.2 Pt II Example 11.

338. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.184(1), 189(1).

339.  CCA 1974 ss.19(1)(c)(i), (ii), 19(2)(a), (b), (c). It is to be presumed in any proceedings, unless the contrary is proved, that when a person initiated a transaction (as mentioned above) he knew the principal agreement had been made, or contemplated that it might be made: CCA 1974 s.171(2). Townson v FCE Bank Plc (t/a Ford Credit), Unreported, June 23, 2016 (Birmingham Cty Ct): PPI policy within s.19(1)(c)

340. CCA 1974 s.19(3). See also CCA 1974 s.57 (effect of withdrawal, below, para.39-098), CCA 1974 s.69(1)(i) (effect of cancellation below, para.39-106), CCA 1974 s.96 (effect of early repayment, below, para.39-163), CCA 1974 s.140C(4)(b) (“related agreement” in “unfair relationship” provisions, below, paras 39-212 et seq.).

341. CCA 1974 s.19(4); SI 1983/1560 (also applicable in relation to ss.69 and 96—see previous note). The regulations were made by the Secretary of State but since the transfer of consumer credit regulation to the FCA (see above, para.39-002) the Treasury is now the responsible government department.

342. See above, para.39-002.

343. See also CCA 1974 ss.9(4), 69, 70, 93, 95, 155 and Sch.2 Pt II Examples 5, 10; SI 1983/1553 and SI 2010/1014.

344. See above, para.39-011.

345. SI 1980/51 (revoking SI 1977/327), as amended by SIs 1985/1192, 1989/596, 1999/3177 and SI 2010/1010. The Financial Services Authority adopted much of the Regulations in the “MCOB” part of its Handbook, applicable to those land mortgages it regulated (and the FCA now regulates).

346. SI 2010/1011, as amended by SI 2011/11.

347. See below, para.39-080.

348. The original method of calculating the APR was completely changed by the amendment of the 1980 Regulations by SI 1999/3177 in order to implement the first Consumer Credit Directive, Council Directive 87/102 ([1987] O.J. L42/48). A computer program is usually necessary to calculate the APR.

- 349. Defined widely to include not only the credit agreement but also (i) any other transaction entered into in compliance with the credit agreement (i.e. a linked transaction with CCA 1974 s.19(1)(a), see above, para.39-055); (ii) any contract for the provision of security relating to the credit agreement; (iii) any credit brokerage contract relating to the agreement; and (iv) any contract required to be made or maintained as a condition of making the credit agreement.
- 350. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.184(1), 189(1).
- 351. SI 1980/51 reg.4 as amended by SIs 1989/596 and 1999/3177. So, in principle, finance charges, commitment fees, brokerage fees (see the amendment made by SI 1989/596), documentation fees (see Wilson v First County Trust Ltd (No.1) [2001] Q.B. 407; Wilson v Robertsons (London) Ltd [2005] EWHC 1425 (Ch)), membership fees, surveyors' fees, legal fees and similar charges (see Griffiths v Welcome Financial Services Ltd [2007] C.C.L.R. 3 (mortgage indemnity fee)) could be included. On the meaning of "charge" where part of the loan must pay off arrears under a previous loan, see Watchtower Investment Ltd v Payne [2001] EWCA Civ 1159, which was followed in London North Securities Ltd v Meadows [2005] EWCA Civ 956; but distinguished in McGinn v Grangewood Securities Ltd [2002] EWCA Civ 522. And see Ocwen v Hughes [2004] C.C.L.R. 4 (optional credit insurance premiums).
- 352. SI 1980/51 reg.5 as amended by SIs 1985/1192, 1989/596 and 1999/3177. For example, insurance premiums (other than premiums under insurance contracts within reg.4(c) and see London North Securities Ltd v Meadows [2005] EWCA Civ 956), certain maintenance charges, membership fees, default charges, and charges for money transmission services. See Huntpast Ltd v Leadbeater [1993] C.C.L.R. 15 (insurance premium and legal costs); Humberclyde Finance Ltd v Thompson [1997] C.C.L.R. 23 (payment waiver premium).
- 353. SI 1980/51 Pt III (as amended by SI 1999/3177).
- 354. SI 1980/51 Pt IV.
- 355. SI 2010/1011 reg.4 (in different terms to SI 1980/51 regs 4 and 5, noted above).
- 356. SI 2010/1011 reg.5 and Sch.
- 357. SI 2010/1011 reg.6—again in different terms to SI 1980/51 Pt VI. Regulation 6 was amended (from January 1, 2013) by SI 2012/1745, implementing Directive 2011/90/EU which amended Pt II of Annex I to Directive 2008/48/EC.
- 358. RAO art.60M. See the definition of "total charge for credit" in CCA 1974 s.20 and RAO art.60L, referring to rules made under RAO art.60M.
- 359. In the CONC Module of the FCA Handbook. See CONC App 1.1 (Total charge for credit rules for certain agreements secured on land replicating the "old" 1980 regulations) and CONC App 1.2 (Total charge for credit rules for other agreements, replicating the "Directive" 2010 regulations).
- 360. Cmnd. 4596 (1971) paras 6.5.15-21.
- 361. FCA Handbook, CONC 3; below, para.39-067.
- 362. s.60; below, paras 39-080 et seq.
- 363. RAO art.60G, see above, para.39-042.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 39 - Credit and Security
Section 1. - The Regulation of Consumer Credit ¹
(b) - Authorisation of Credit and Hire Businesses ³⁶⁴

Activities requiring FCA authorisation

39-061

From April 1, 2014, the 1974 Act licensing regime (as reformed by the Consumer Credit Act 2006) was replaced by the authorisation regime under the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (FSMA 2000), operated by the Financial Conduct Authority (FCA). The FSMA 2000 imposes a “general prohibition” on anyone undertaking a “regulated activity” in the United Kingdom ³⁶⁵ unless they are either an “authorised” or an “exempt” person. ³⁶⁶ The two activities of (i) entering into a “regulated credit agreement” ³⁶⁷ as lender and (ii) exercising or having the right to exercise a lender’s rights and duties under a regulated credit agreement, are “specified” under the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (Regulated Activities) Order 2001 (“RAO”). ³⁶⁸ This means that if undertaken “by way of business”, ³⁶⁹ they are “regulated activities” ³⁷⁰ and hence can only be carried on in the United Kingdom by an authorised or exempt person. Similarly, the two activities of (i) entering into a “regulated consumer hire agreement” ³⁷¹ as owner and (ii) exercising or having the right to exercise an owner’s rights and duties under a regulated consumer hire agreement, are “specified” under the RAO. ³⁷² Hence again, if undertaken “by way of business” ³⁷³ they are “regulated activities” ³⁷⁴ and can only be carried on in the United Kingdom by an authorised or exempt person. Authorisation is therefore not required by businesses (a) that provide credit or hire only to companies or partnerships of over three persons ³⁷⁵; and/or (b) that provide credit or hire only under exempt agreements. ³⁷⁶ But authorisation is required, for, e.g. bank lending, moneylending, hire-purchase, ³⁷⁷ conditional and credit sale, credit card, check trading, pawnbroking, mortgage lending, ³⁷⁸ leasing and rental businesses. Shops and stores providing budget or option accounts or other credit facilities require authorisation, as do mail order businesses. Other business activities in relation to credit and hire (most of which were previously termed “ancillary credit businesses” under the 1974 Act) also require authorisation and are considered further below. ³⁷⁹

“Business”

39-062

⚠ Only “specified activities” undertaken “by way of business” are “regulated activities” requiring authorisation. ³⁸⁰ Whilst sometimes a special meaning is given to the expression “by way of business” in relation to certain regulated activities, ³⁸¹ for credit and hire businesses the expression is left undefined in the FSMA 2000, ³⁸² ⚠ although the FCA has provided some guidance in its Handbook, which has been found helpful in the case-law. ³⁸³

Authorisation and regulatory control

39-063

⚠ Authorisation under the FSMA 2000 brings with it all the regulatory control that the FCA may exercise under that Act over “authorised persons”. Hence, as well as having to satisfy the conditions for obtaining and then maintaining “authorisation”, ³⁸⁴ authorised persons are subject to the FCA Handbook, which has a special “Module” of rules ³⁸⁵ and guidance devoted to consumer credit: the CONC Module. ³⁸⁶ Moreover, the FCA has power to ban products ³⁸⁷ and control high cost lending. ³⁸⁸ The FCA has extensive powers of monitoring “authorised persons” ³⁸⁹ and a wide variety of disciplinary powers ranging from varying, suspending or withdrawing authorisation ³⁹⁰ to the imposition of penalties ³⁹¹ and requiring remedial action. ³⁹² The FCA’s disciplinary powers are subject to an appeal to the Upper Tribunal. ³⁹³ However, an authorised person that breaches the FCA rulebook is not subject to any criminal penalty ³⁹⁴  and their agreements are generally not impeachable on that ground alone. ³⁹⁵ Finally, the Financial Ombudsman Scheme ³⁹⁶ applies to disputes between authorised persons and their customers.

Trading whilst unauthorized

39-064

 Undertaking regulated activities whilst not an authorised or exempt person and thus breaching the “general prohibition” ³⁹⁷ is a criminal offence. ³⁹⁸  Moreover, agreements made by a person in contravention of the general prohibition are unenforceable and voidable by the counterparty, although the FCA has power to order otherwise if satisfied that this is “just and equitable”. ³⁹⁹ The undertaking of credit or hire activities by an authorised person otherwise than in accordance with their authorisation (for example, if their authorisation does not extend to undertaking credit or hire activities) is similarly a criminal offence ⁴⁰⁰ and agreements are similarly unenforceable and voidable, subject to the FCA determining otherwise. ⁴⁰¹

Trading “through” unauthorised persons

39-065

Agreements made by an authorised person “through” someone acting in breach of the general prohibition or outside their authorisation are also unenforceable and voidable, subject to the FCA determining otherwise. ⁴⁰²

FCA determinations to enforce agreements

39-066

If the FCA dismisses the application to an enforce agreement (“except on technical grounds only”) any security provided in relation to the agreement is avoided. ⁴⁰³ There is an appeal to the Upper Tribunal in respect of these FCA determinations. ⁴⁰⁴

^{1.} See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf); Goode, Consumer Credit: Law and Practice (looseleaf); Goode, Consumer Credit Law (1989); Harding, Consumer Credit and Consumer Hire (1995); Philpott, The Law of Consumer Credit and Hire (2009).

^{364.} See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf), paras 2-022—2-042; and Goode, Consumer Credit: Law and Practice (looseleaf), Pt C, Ch.27.

^{365.} See FSMA 2000 s.418.

^{366.} FSMA 2000 s.19 See below, para.39-064: trading whilst unauthorised. For “exempt persons” see FSMA 2000 s.38 (Exemption by Treasury Order) and s.39 (“appointed representatives”).

- 367. See above, para.39-017.
- 368. SI 2001/544 art.60B, as inserted by the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (Regulated Activities) (Amendment) (No.2) Order 2013 (SI 2013/1881) art.6.
- 369. See below, para.39-062.
- 370. FSMA 2000 s.22.
- 371. See above, para.39-036.
- 372. SI 2001/544 art.60N, as inserted by the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (Regulated Activities) (Amendment) (No.2) Order 2013 (SI 2013/1881) art.6.
- 373. See below, para.39-062.
- 374. FSMA 2000 s.22.
- 375. As such persons cannot enter into consumer credit and consumer hire agreements (see above, paras 39-016 and 39-035, respectively) and hence “regulated agreements” (see above, paras 39-017 and 39-036, respectively).
- 376. For exempt agreements, see above, paras 39-038 et seq.
- 377. See RAO art.60L(8) above, para.39-024; below, para.39-357.
- 378. But note the exemptions for land mortgages, see above, para.39-038; below, para.39-529. First charge residential mortgages within RAO art.61 (so called “regulated mortgage contracts”) are not “regulated agreements” (see RAO art.60C(2)) and hence not “regulated agreements” for the purpose of the CCA 1974 regime; but they are regulated under the parallel FSMA 2000 regime. See below, para.39-529. But note that most residential mortgages will be regulated under that regime when the Mortgage Credit Directive (see above, para.39-003) is implemented on March 21, 2016.
- 379. See below, paras 39-230 et seq.
- 380. FSMA 2000 s.22.
- 381. See the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (Carrying on Regulated Activities by Way of Business) Order 2001 (SI 2001/1177), made under FSMA 2000 s.419.
- 382.  The CCA 1974 definitions of “business” in s.189 (see s.189(1) (the expression “business” in the Act includes profession or trade) and s.189(2) (occasional transactions to be ignored)) have not been repealed and are technically not relevant to the meaning of the terms in FSMA 2000 s.22 (confirmed in Newmafruit Farms Ltd v Pither [2016] EWHC 2205 (QB), [2017] C.C.L.R. 8). See, on the CCA 1974 definition, Bassano v Alfred Toft, Peter Biddulph, Peter Biddulph Ltd, Borro Loan Ltd, Borro Loan 2 Ltd [2014] EWHC 377 (QB), [2014] C.C.L.R. 8 (one-off loan).
- 383. See FCA Handbook, PERG 2 (referred to in the mortgage case Helden v Strathmore Ltd [2010] EWHC 2012 (Ch), approved in [2011] EWCA Civ 542).
- 384. See FSMA 2000 Pt 4A. Note especially s.55B (“threshold conditions”) and also the “control of business transfers” powers in FSMA 2000 Pt VII.
- 385. Breach is generally actionable by “private persons” (as defined) suffering loss: FSMA 2000 s.138D.
- 386. For the FCA’s rule-making powers, see FSMA 2000 Pt 9A.

- 387. FSMA 2000 s.137D.
- 388. FSMA 2000 s.137C. See further below, para.39-292.
- 389. See its far-reaching powers to obtain information in FSMA 2000 Pt XI.
- 390. See FSMA 2000 ss.55J (variation or cancellation) and s.206A (suspension). Note also its power to impose requirements under ss.55L, 55N, 55O and prohibitions and restrictions under FSMA 2000 s.55P.
- 391. See FSMA 2000 s.206. The FCA may also publicly censure: FSMA 2000 s.205.
- 392. See FSMA 2000 s.384. The FCA may also apply to court for injunctions (s.380) or restitution orders (s.382).
- 393. See FSMA 2000 s.55ZA (for powers under Pt 4A) and ss.208(4), 384(6) (for other sanctions).
- 394.  See FSMA 2000 s.138E(1). But see Main Work, Vol.II, para.39-063, n.388 and accompanying text (civil liability).
- 395. See FSMA 2000 s.138E(2)—but there is an exception (s.138E(3)) for the special high cost credit rules under s.137C and the product intervention rules under s.137D.
- 396. See FSMA 2000 Pt XVI.
- 397. See above, para.39-061.
- 398.  FSMA 2000 s.23(1). Unlicensed trading was also a criminal offence under (the now repealed) CCA 1974 ss.39(1), 167 and Sch.1. See R. v Linegar [2009] EWCA Crim 648 (sentencing appeal). Special provision for the specific funding of teams detecting illegal money lenders (so-called “loan sharks”) has been made in the Bank of England and Financial Services Act 2016 (new Pt XXB added to the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000, in force July 16, 2016).
- 399. FSMA 2000 ss.26, 28A. The position was similar under the CCA 1974 (see the now repealed s.40) but with the OFT having the power to “validate” agreements made by unlicensed traders (see Smerdon v Ellis [1997] C.L.Y. 960 Cty Ct; Rendle v Hicks [1998] C.L.Y. 2504 Cty Ct; Barons Finance Ltd & Reddy Corp Ltd v Makanju [2013] EWHC 153 (QB), [2013] C.C.L.R. 3). In other, non “credit-related activities”, an application needs to be made to the court to uphold the agreements: FSMA 2000 s.28.
- 400. FSMA 2000 s.23(1A)-(1G). To preserve the position under the CCA 1974 (see n.400), this is only the position in relation to “credit-related activities” (i.e. those activities that were previously subject to the CCA licensing regime). An authorised person who acts outside their authorisation in relation to other regulated activities only faces disciplinary action.
- 401. FSMA 2000 ss.26A, 28A.
- 402. FSMA 2000 ss.27, 28A. This introduces a degree of “self-policing” into the authorisation regime. In other, non “credit-related activities”, an application needs to be made to the court to uphold the agreements: s.28.
- 403. CCA 1974 ss.113(3)(c), 106.
- 404. FSMA 2000 s.28B.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 39 - Credit and Security
Section 1. - The Regulation of Consumer Credit ¹
(c) - Seeking Business ⁴⁰⁵

Advertising and quotations

39-067

Originally Pt IV of the 1974 Act dealt with advertising and quotations, but since April 1, 2014, following the transfer of consumer credit regulation from the OFT to the FCA, ⁴⁰⁶ those activities are now regulated under the FSMA 2000 “financial promotion” regime. ⁴⁰⁷ In consequence of the implementation of the Consumer Credit Directive ⁴⁰⁸ there were two sets of regulations made under the (now repealed) provisions of the 1974 Act, ⁴⁰⁹ concerning the form and content of credit ⁴¹⁰ advertisements: the Consumer Credit (Advertisements) Regulations 2004 ⁴¹¹ and (in implementation of the Directive) the Consumer Credit (Advertisements) Regulations 2010. ⁴¹² The FCA rules (in the FCA Handbook, CONC 3) largely replicate the detailed and prescriptive provisions of these two sets of old Advertising Regulations. ⁴¹³ Infringement of these provisions is no longer a criminal offence ⁴¹⁴ but (as well as giving rise to the usual consequences for breach of FCA rules ⁴¹⁵) may also breach the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008. ⁴¹⁶ Regulations under the 1974 Act ⁴¹⁷ also prescribed the content of quotations in certain cases ⁴¹⁸ and their provisions have also been largely replicated as “rules” in the FCA Handbook. ⁴¹⁹

Canvassing

39-068

 It is an offence ⁴²⁰ to canvass ⁴²¹ debtor-creditor ⁴²² agreements off trade premises, ⁴²³ except in response to a request in writing made on a previous occasion and signed by or on behalf of the person making it. ⁴²⁴

Circulars to minors

39-069

It is an offence ⁴²⁵ for a person, with a view to financial gain, to send to a minor a document inviting him to borrow money, obtain goods on credit or hire, obtain services on credit, or apply for information or advice on borrowing money or otherwise obtaining credit, or hiring goods. ⁴²⁶

Infringement

39-070

Failure to comply with those provisions of Pt IV that remain in force do not affect the validity or enforceability of any agreement. ⁴²⁷

-
1. See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf); Goode, Consumer Credit: Law and Practice (looseleaf); Goode, Consumer Credit Law (1989); Harding, Consumer Credit and Consumer Hire (1995); Philpott, The Law of Consumer Credit and Hire (2009).
405. See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf), paras 2-044—2-055; and Goode, Consumer Credit: Law and Practice (looseleaf), Pt C, Ch.28.
406. See above, para.39-002.
407. See especially FSMA 2000 s.21 and the Financial Promotion Order 2005 (SI 2005/1335) (the “FPO”). See the amendments to the FPO made by the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (Regulated Activities) (Amendment) (No.2) Order 2013 (SI 2013/1881) art.17. Hence CCA 1974 ss.43-45, 47, 52 and 53 have been repealed.
408. See above, para.39-011.
409. For a case on the breach of the old CCA 1974 Advertising Regulations in the context of internet advertising, see Motor Depot Ltd, Philip Wilkinson v Kingston Upon Hull City Council [2012] EWHC 3257 (Admin).
410. The Advertisements Regulations 2004 originally also applied to hire advertisements, but hire was removed from the scope of the Regulations by the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1277) reg.30(1) and Sch.2 para.108. However, hire is now subject to the FCA promotion rules.
411. SI 2004/1484 amended by SIs 2004/2619, 2007/827, 2008/1277 (removing hire agreements from regulation), 2010/1010, 2010/1969. These regulations constituted the third major revision of the CCA 1974 advertisements regime (the previous two being contained in SI 1980/54, as amended and SI 1989/1125, as amended).
412. SI 2010/1970 (replacing SI 2010/1012).
413. The (now repealed) CCA 1974 s.45, which prohibited advertisements where goods, etc. were not sold for cash, is replicated as a “rule” in CONC 3.5.2R and 3.6.3R.
414. As it was under the CCA 1974 s.167 and Sch.1 (relevant provision repealed by the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (Regulated Activities) (Amendment) (No.2) Order 2013 (SI 2013/1881) art.20(64)).
415. See above, para.39-63.
416. SI 2008/1277, and hence give rise to a criminal offence or, for contracts made on or after October 1, 2014, civil redress. CCA 1974 s.46 (which also made it an offence to publish “false or misleading” advertisements) was repealed (from May 26, 2008) by SI 2008/1277 reg.30(1) and Sch.2 para.18. For case-law on s.46 (which may still be of persuasive relevance to offences under the 2008 Regulations), see Home Insulation Ltd v Wadsley [1988] 10 C.L. 48; Metsoja v H Norman Pitt & Co Ltd [1989] Crim. L.R. 560; Rover Group Ltd and Rover Finance Ltd v Sumner [1995] C.C.L.R. 1; Dudley MBC v Colorvision Plc [1997] C.C.L.R. 19.
417. Under CCA 1974 s.52, as amended (on October 1, 2004) by RAO art.90(4). See SI 1999/2725 as amended by SI 2000/1797 and SI 2001/544. The first quotations regulations (SI 1980/55, as amended) were replaced by SI 1989/1126, as amended, and were much wider in scope and were revoked by SI 1997/211.
418. In connection with a prospective credit agreement (a) that would or could be secured by a mortgage or charge on the debtor’s home, or (b) under which repayments of credit would be made in a currency other than sterling.

419. See CONC 4.1.

420. CCA 1974 s.167 and Sch.1.

421. CCA 1974 ss.48, 189(1).

422. See above, para.39-033.

423. CCA 1974 s.48.

424.  CCA 1974 s.49. A Determination has been made by the Director General of Fair Trading under s.49(3) (the FCA now being the responsible authority), with respect to the exclusion of current accounts from s.49(1), (2). See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf) at para.4-4800. See also ss.153, 154 (below, para.39-252). For additional obligations imposed on such lenders, see the Home Credit Market Investigation Order 2007, as amended in 2011, made by the Competition Commission under the Enterprise Act 2003 ss.161, 164

425. CCA 1974 s.167 and Sch.1.

426. CCA 1974 s.50. cf. Alliance and Leicester Building Society v Leicestershire CC, The Times, March 15, 1993. For a (now repealed) exemption with respect to student loans, see the Education (Student Loans) Act 1990 Sch.2 para.3(A) (as amended).

427. CCA 1974 s.170(1). For criminal penalties, see CCA 1974 ss.49, 50, 167(1), (2) and Sch.1 (as amended).

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 39 - Credit and Security
Section 1. - The Regulation of Consumer Credit ¹
(d) - Antecedent Negotiations ⁴²⁸

“Antecedent negotiations”

39-071

These are defined ⁴²⁹ by s.56(1) of the 1974 Act to mean any negotiations with the debtor ⁴³⁰ or hirer of the following alternative descriptions: first, negotiations conducted by the creditor or owner in relation to any regulated agreement; second, negotiations conducted by a credit-broker ⁴³¹ in relation to goods sold or proposed to be sold by the credit-broker to the creditor before forming the subject of a debtor-creditor-supplier agreement falling within s.12(a) ⁴³²; third, negotiations conducted by the supplier ⁴³³ in relation to a transaction financed or proposed to be financed by a debtor-creditor-supplier agreement falling within s.12(b) or (c). ⁴³⁴ It is to be noted that negotiations conducted by a third party other than the creditor or owner (either himself or by his employees or common law agents) in respect of a debtor-creditor ⁴³⁵ or hire ⁴³⁶ agreement do not fall within s.56(1).

39-072

The first category of antecedent negotiations mentioned above is self-explanatory, and it is clear that it will embrace negotiations conducted by an employee or an agent of the creditor or owner. The second category covers negotiations conducted by, for example, a dealer in relation to goods to be sold by the dealer ⁴³⁷ to a financier and which are to be the subject of a hire-purchase, conditional sale or credit sale agreement between the financier and the debtor (the usual “tripartite” transaction). It is to be noted that this category relates only to negotiations in relation to goods and to the goods sold or proposed to be sold by the dealer to the financier. ⁴³⁸ The third category refers, for instance, to negotiations conducted by a supplier of goods or services who supplies them for money advanced by a financier to the debtor as a restricted-use loan ⁴³⁹ under preexisting arrangements between the financier and the supplier.

39-073

The person by whom negotiations are so conducted with the debtor or hirer is referred to as the “negotiator”. ⁴⁴⁰

39-074

For the purposes of the Act, antecedent negotiations are to be taken to begin when the negotiator and the debtor or hirer first enter into communication (including communication by advertisement ⁴⁴¹), and to include any representations ⁴⁴² made by the negotiator to the debtor or hirer and any other dealings between them. ⁴⁴³

Negotiator as agent

39-075

Once antecedent negotiations have been shown to exist, the negotiator, though not in fact the common law agent of the creditor, is deemed to have conducted the negotiations in the capacity of agent of the creditor as well as in his actual capacity. ⁴⁴⁴ Thus the creditor will be liable for express misrepresentations by his deemed agent, ⁴⁴⁵ and for any contractual undertakings given by the deemed agent. ⁴⁴⁶ This deemed agency and liability for the acts or omissions of the deemed agent cannot be excluded by agreement. ⁴⁴⁷

^{1.} See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf); Goode, Consumer Credit: Law and Practice (looseleaf); Goode, Consumer Credit Law (1989); Harding, Consumer Credit and Consumer Hire (1995); Philpott, The Law of Consumer Credit and Hire (2009).

^{428.} See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf) at para.2–057.

^{429.} See also CCA 1974 Sch.2 Pt II Examples 1, 2, 3, 4.

^{430.} But not with a guarantor of the debtor: Lombard North Central Plc v Gate [1998] C.C.L.R. 51 Ct. See CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in s.56, references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), below, para.39-257) are to be read as references to the “improver”/“first bill payer”, as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6).

^{431.} Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1); below, para.39-231.

^{432.} See above, para.39-030.

^{433.} Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1).

^{434.} See above, paras 39-031, 39-032.

^{435.} See above, para.39-033.

^{436.} See above, para.39-035, and Moorgate Mercantile Leasing Ltd v Isobel Gell and Ugolini Dispensers (UK) Ltd [1986] 2 C.L. 39 Ct; Mynshul Asset Finance v Clarke [1992] C.L.Y 487 Ct; Williams (JD) & Co v McCauley, Parson and Jones [1994] C.C.L.R. 78; Woodchester Leasing Equipment v British Association of Canned and Preserved Foods Importers and Distributors Ltd [1995] C.C.L.R. 51 CA; PB Leasing Ltd v Patel and Patel (t/a Plankhouse Stores) [1995] C.C.L.R. 82 Ct; Powell v Lloyd's Bowmakers [1996] S.L.T. 117, [1996] C.C.L.R. 50 Sh Ct. But contrast the following cases where the supplier was found to be, on the facts, the common law agent of the owner: Woodchester Leasing Equipment v Clayton [1994] C.C.L.R. 87; and Lease Management Services Ltd v Purnell Secretarial Services Ltd [1994] C.C.L.R. 127.

^{437.} See Black Horse Ltd v Langford [2007] EWHC 907, [2007] C.C.L.R. 5: s.56(1)(b) did not apply to a dealer who (although having the status of a “credit broker”) sold the goods to an intermediary who then sold to the creditor in that the dealer was not the “credit broker” who sold the goods to the creditor. But note the Law Commissions’ Joint Report: Consumer Redress for Misleading and Aggressive Practices (March 2012), Cm.8323, Recommendation 51, recommending that s.56 should be “clarified” to cover dealers acting through intermediaries.

^{438.} But see UDT v Whitfield and First National Securities [1987] C.C.L.R. 60 Ct; and Forthright Finance Ltd v Ingate [1997] 4 All E.R. 99 CA (finance house held liable for dealer’s failure to fulfil his undertaking to the debtor to discharge the outstanding balance on a vehicle traded in by the debtor as part of a transaction to take a new vehicle on hire-purchase). Contrast Powell v Lloyd's Bowmaker Ltd, 1996 S.L.T. 117 Sh Ct.

^{439.} See above, para.39-027; below, para.39-302. See Scotland v British Credit Trust Ltd [2014] EWCA Civ 790 (main loan, but not loan for PPI, was “restricted-use”) (and see below, n.444).

- 440. CCA 1974 s.56(1). See also CCA 1974 Sch.2 Pt II Examples 1, 2, 3, 4.
- 441. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1).
- 442. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1). See Scotland v British Credit Trust Ltd [2014] EWCA Civ 790 (representations that PPI (not financed by a “restricted-use” agreement) was a condition of the main loan (a restricted-use agreement) were made in relation to the main loan and hence within s.56(1)(c)) (and see above, n.441).
- 443. CCA 1974 s.56(4).
- 444. CCA 1974 s.56(2). See also below, para.39-302. Unlike CCA 1974 s.75(2), below, para. 39-303, no express right of indemnity is conferred on the creditor against the negotiator but a right to contribution would arise under Civil Liability (Contribution) Act 1978 (confirmed obiter in Scotland v British Credit Trust Ltd [2014] EWCA Civ 790). For the relevance of s.56 in attributing activities of others to the creditor in the context of the “unfair relationship” provisions (below, para.39-222) see Plevin v Paragon Personal Finance Ltd [2013] EWCA Civ 1658 (point not considered on appeal [2014] UKSC 61) and Scotland v British Credit Trust Ltd [2014] EWCA Civ 790 (s.56(2) rendered activities of “negotiator” relevant).
- 445. See Vol.I, Ch.7, and below, para.39-302.
- 446. These may in consequence become terms of the regulated agreement: see CCA 1974 s.61(1)(b); below, para.39-083. It is a moot point whether collateral warranties would be so incorporated.
- 447. CCA 1974 s.56(3) (and see, more generally, CCA 1974 s.170(1)).

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 39 - Credit and Security
Section 1. - The Regulation of Consumer Credit ¹
(e) - The Agreement ⁴⁴⁸

Pre-contract disclosure ⁴⁴⁹

39-076

⚠ Regulations may be made under s.55 of the 1974 Act, ⁴⁵⁰ requiring specified information to be disclosed in the prescribed manner to the debtor or hirer before a regulated agreement is made. ⁴⁵¹ Failure to comply with the regulations renders the agreement enforceable against the debtor or hirer on an order of the court only. ⁴⁵² In consequence of the implementation of the Consumer Credit Directive ⁴⁵³ there are now two sets of regulations made under s.55 in relation to regulated credit (but not hire) agreements: the Consumer Credit (Disclosure of Information) Regulations 2004 ⁴⁵⁴ and (in implementation of the Directive) the Consumer Credit (Disclosure of Information) Regulations 2010. ⁴⁵⁵ The 2004 Regulations now only apply to agreements outside the scope of the Directive, unless the creditor is able to and has opted into the “Directive” regime. ⁴⁵⁶ Hence the 2004 Regulations (as well as still applying to regulated hire agreements) only apply to: (a) credit agreements secured on land (except to those to which s.58, ⁴⁵⁷ applies); (b) agreements for credit in excess of £60,260 ⁴⁵⁸ ⚠; (c) “business” credit agreements; and (d) “small” debtor-creditor-supplier agreements for restricted use. ⁴⁵⁹ The 2010 “Directive” Regulations essentially apply to other regulated credit agreements. They require the pre-contract information to be provided in the exact format set out in the Standard European Consumer Credit Information (SECCI) sheet at Annex 1 of the Directive, reproduced in Sch.1 to the 2010 Regulations.

Pre-contract explanations

39-077

In consequence of the implementation of the Consumer Credit Directive, ⁴⁶⁰ a new duty to provide an “adequate explanation” of certain features of the agreement before it is made is imposed on lenders by rules made by the FCA ⁴⁶¹ in relation to those regulated credit agreements within the scope of the Directive. Hence the obligation does not apply to agreements for credit in excess of £60,260 or agreements secured on land. ⁴⁶² However, although “business” credit is not within the scope of the Directive, the duty has been extended to regulated agreements for “business” credit. ⁴⁶³ As the duty is imposed by FCA rules, the usual sanctions for breach of such rules apply. ⁴⁶⁴ However, the agreement is not, without more, unenforceable. ⁴⁶⁵

Assessment of creditworthiness

39-078

Also in consequence of the implementation of the Consumer Credit Directive ⁴⁶⁶ a new duty to assess the creditworthiness of the borrower before extending credit ⁴⁶⁷ is imposed on lenders by rules made by the FCA ⁴⁶⁸ in relation to those regulated credit agreements within the scope of the Directive. Hence the obligation does not apply to agreements secured on land or to pawn agreements. ⁴⁶⁹

However, although agreements for credit in excess of £60,260 and “business” credit agreements are not within the scope of the Directive, the duty has been extended to such agreements.⁴⁷⁰ As the duty is imposed by FCA rules, the usual sanctions for breach of such rules apply.⁴⁷¹ However, the agreement is not, without more, unenforceable.⁴⁷²

Copy of draft agreement

39-079

⚠ In consequence of the implementation of the Consumer Credit Directive,⁴⁷³ a new duty to give the debtor, on request and “without delay”, a copy of the prospective agreement (or such of its terms as have at that time been reduced to writing) before a regulated credit agreement is made, is imposed on the creditor by s.55C of the 1974 Act.⁴⁷⁴ The obligation does not arise if at the time of the request the creditor is unwilling to proceed with the agreement. Moreover, the obligation does not arise⁴⁷⁵ in relation to regulated credit agreements that are outside the scope of the Directive, namely: (a) agreements secured on land, (b) pawn agreements, (c) agreements where credit in excess of £60,260 is provided,⁴⁷⁶ ⚠ and (d) “business” credit. Breach of the duty gives rise to a breach of statutory duty action and the normal disciplinary sanctions are available to the FCA.⁴⁷⁷ However, failure to provide the copy does not, without more, render the agreement unenforceable.⁴⁷⁸

Form and content of agreement: general

39-080

⚠ Section 60(1) of the 1974 Act requires the Treasury⁴⁷⁹ to make regulations as to the form and content of documents embodying regulated agreements.⁴⁸⁰ In consequence of the implementation of the Consumer Credit Directive⁴⁸¹ there are now two sets of regulations made under this section in relation to regulated credit agreements: the Consumer Credit (Agreements) Regulations 1983⁴⁸² and (in implementation of the Directive) the Consumer Credit (Agreements) Regulations 2010.⁴⁸³ The 1983 Regulations now only apply to regulated credit⁴⁸⁴ agreements outside the scope of the Directive, unless the creditor is permitted to and has opted into the “Directive” regime.⁴⁸⁵ Hence, the 1983 Regulations (as well as still applying to regulated hire agreements) apply to: (a) credit agreements secured on land, (b) agreements for credit in excess of £60,260,⁴⁸⁶ ⚠ and (c) “business” credit agreements.⁴⁸⁷ The 2010 “Directive” Regulations apply to other regulated credit agreements.

Form and content of agreement: the 1983 Agreements Regulations

39-081

These regulations⁴⁸⁸ require documents embodying regulated agreements:

(i)

clearly to inform the debtor or hirer that the agreement is regulated by the Consumer Credit Act 1974; to set out, in a specified order and under specified headings, certain information as to the terms of the agreement, of which the most important items have to be set out together as a whole and not interspersed with other information (a requirement colloquially known as “the holy ground”);

(ii)

(iii)

to contain certain prominent notices advising the debtor or hirer of the protections and remedies available to him under the regime;

(iv)

to contain a box with prescribed wording for the signature of the debtor or hirer to the agreement; and in the case of consumer credit agreements, to state the annual percentage rate of charge for credit (APR).⁴⁸⁹

(v)

Since these requirements may differ according to the type of agreement entered into, the regulations are of considerable length and complexity.⁴⁹⁰ However, on an application made by a person carrying on a consumer credit or consumer hire business, if it appears to the FCA impracticable for the applicant to comply with any requirement of the regulations in a particular case, it may by notice to the applicant direct that the requirement be waived or varied in relation to such agreements, and subject to such conditions (if any) as it may specify.⁴⁹¹ But it can only give such a notice if it is satisfied that to do so would not prejudice the interests of debtors or hirers⁴⁹² and few dispensations have in consequence been granted.⁴⁹³

Form and content of agreement: the 2010 Agreements Regulations

39-082

⚠ These regulations⁴⁹⁴ impose similar, but by no means identical, requirements to those imposed by the 1983 regulations as to the form and content of the regulated credit agreements to which they apply. In particular, the 2010 regulations are generally less prescriptive as to the manner in which the requisite information⁴⁹⁵ needs to be given: it need only be “presented in a clear and concise manner”.⁴⁹⁶ As the requirements in these regulations (being imposed in implementation of the Consumer Credit Directive) are mandatory, the provision noted above that enables the FCA to relax the requirements in the 1983 Regulations⁴⁹⁷ is only available in respect of the 2010 Regulations in so far as they apply (by way of opt-in) to non-Directive agreements.⁴⁹⁸ ⚠

Signing of agreement⁴⁹⁹

39-083

A regulated agreement is not properly executed⁵⁰⁰ unless it satisfies the requirements set out in s.61(1) of the 1974 Act.⁵⁰¹ First, a document in the prescribed form itself⁵⁰² containing all the prescribed terms⁵⁰³ and conforming to regulations under s.60(1)⁵⁰⁴ must be signed in the prescribed manner⁵⁰⁵ both by the debtor or hirer⁵⁰⁶ and by or on behalf of the creditor or owner.⁵⁰⁷ Secondly, the document must embody⁵⁰⁸ all the terms of the agreement,⁵⁰⁹ other than implied terms.⁵¹⁰ Thirdly, the document must, when presented or sent to the debtor or hirer for signature, be in such a state that all its terms are readily legible.⁵¹¹ In addition, where the agreement is one to which s.58(1) of the 1974 Act applies (land mortgage),⁵¹² it is not properly executed⁵¹³ unless certain further requirements are satisfied.⁵¹⁴

Supply of copies: general

39-084

Sections 61A to 63 of the 1974 Act contain provisions relating to the supply of copies.⁵¹⁵ They use the terms “unexecuted” and “executed” agreement. The latter term is defined⁵¹⁶ to mean the document, signed by both parties, embodying the terms of a regulated agreement, whilst the former term apparently refers to such a document not yet signed by both parties.⁵¹⁷

Supply of copies: two regimes:

39-085

⚠ In consequence of the implementation of the Consumer Credit Directive⁵¹⁸ there are now two “copy” regimes in relation to regulated credit agreements: the “old” regime under ss.62 and 63 and the “Directive regime” under s.61A.⁵¹⁹ The “old” ss.62–63 regime (as well as continuing to apply to regulated hire agreements⁵²⁰) now only applies to so-called “excluded agreements”, that is (essentially) credit agreements outside the scope of the Directive, unless the creditor is permitted to and has chosen to opt into the “Directive” regime. Those “excluded agreements” are: (a) credit agreements secured on land,⁵²¹ (b) agreements for credit in excess of £60,260⁵²² ⚠ and (c) “business” credit agreements.⁵²³ Moreover, ss.62 and 63 continue to apply to “cancellable agreements” within s.67.⁵²⁴ The “Directive” regime under s.62A applies to all other regulated credit agreements.

Supply of copies: meaning of “copy”

39-086

The Consumer Credit (Cancellation Notices and Copies of Documents) Regulations 1983⁵²⁵ make provision as to the form and content of the copies to be supplied, and in particular require the copy to be a “true copy”⁵²⁶ and to be easily legible.⁵²⁷ The meaning of “true copy” was considered at length in *Carey v HSBS Bank Plc*⁵²⁸ where it was held that a “true copy” of an executed agreement could be “a reconstituted version of the executed agreement which may be from sources other than the actual signed agreement itself”.⁵²⁹

Supply of copies: failure to comply

39-087

A regulated agreement is not properly executed if the “copy” requirements are not observed, with the result that it is enforceable on an order of court only.⁵³⁰

Supply of copies: “old” ss.62–63 regime

39-088

If the unexecuted agreement is presented personally to the debtor or hirer for his signature, and on the occasion when he signs it the creditor or owner signs or has already signed the agreement, then a copy of the executed agreement must there and then be delivered to him, but no further copy is required.⁵³¹ If the unexecuted agreement is sent to the debtor or hirer for his signature, a copy of it must be sent to him at the same time.⁵³² But no further copy is required if the unexecuted agreement becomes an executed agreement on the debtor or hirer’s signature, i.e. because the creditor or owner has already signed it before it is sent.⁵³³

39-089

On the other hand, if the unexecuted agreement is presented personally to the debtor or hirer for his signature, but on the occasion when he signs it the creditor or owner does not sign and has not already signed the agreement, then (a) a copy of the unexecuted agreement must there and then be delivered to him ⁵³⁴; and (b) a further copy of the executed agreement must be given to him within seven days ⁵³⁵ of its being made. ⁵³⁶ Likewise, if the unexecuted agreement is sent to the debtor or hirer for his signature, a copy of it must be sent to him at the same time, ⁵³⁷ and, if the creditor or owner has not already signed it before it was sent, a further copy of the executed agreement must be given to the debtor or hirer within seven days ⁵³⁸ of its being made. ⁵³⁹ If the agreement is a cancellable agreement, the second copy must be sent by post. ⁵⁴⁰

39-090

The copy of the unexecuted or executed agreement must also be accompanied by a copy of “any other document referred to in it”. ⁵⁴¹ This comprehends not only, e.g. any security referred to in the agreement, but also any document other than a document excepted by regulation. ⁵⁴²

Notice of cancellation rights

39-091

In the case of a cancellable agreement, i.e. a regulated agreement which, by virtue of s.67 of the 1974 Act, ⁵⁴³ may be cancelled by the debtor or hirer, ⁵⁴⁴ s.64 of the Act provides ⁵⁴⁵ that a notice in the prescribed form indicating the right of the debtor or hirer to cancel the agreement must be included in every copy given to the debtor or hirer under ss.62 or 63. ⁵⁴⁶ Various forms of notice (differing according to the nature of the agreement) have been prescribed by the Consumer Credit (Cancellation Notices and Copies of Documents) Regulations 1983. ⁵⁴⁷ These notices indicate how and when the right to cancel the agreement is exercisable, and the name and address of a person to whom notice of cancellation may be given. ⁵⁴⁸ In those instances where only one copy is required, ⁵⁴⁹ a notice of cancellation rights must be sent ⁵⁵⁰ separately to the debtor or hirer within the seven days ⁵⁵¹ following the making of the agreement. ⁵⁵²

Supply of copies: “Directive” s.61A regime

39-092

In contrast to the “old” regime, the Consumer Credit Directive merely (as well as requiring pre-contract information ⁵⁵³) requires a debtor to receive a copy of the final agreement. Hence, for regulated credit agreements within the scope of the Directive, ⁵⁵⁴ s.61A ⁵⁵⁵ requires the creditor to give the debtor a copy of the executed agreement (and any other document referred to in it) unless the debtor already has a copy of the unexecuted agreement and this is in identical terms to the executed agreement. In the latter case, the creditor must inform the debtor in writing that: (a) the agreement has been made, (b) the executed agreement is in identical terms to the copy, and (c) the debtor has 14 days to ask for a copy which must be given “without delay”. Separate provision is made for overdrafts. ⁵⁵⁶

Failure to comply

39-093

In the event of non-compliance with ss.60 to 64 ⁵⁵⁷ of the 1974 Act, the agreement is “not properly executed”. ⁵⁵⁸ The consequence of improper execution is that the agreement is enforceable against the debtor or hirer on an order of the court only. ⁵⁵⁹ A retaking of goods or land to which a regulated agreement relates is an enforcement of the agreement. ⁵⁶⁰ Further, any security ⁵⁶¹ provided in relation to the agreement is enforceable (so far as provided in relation to the agreement) where such an order has been made in relation to the agreement, but not otherwise, ⁵⁶² and if the court dismisses an application for such an order (except on technical grounds only), the security is rendered invalid. ⁵⁶³ No wider restitutionary remedy is available at common law against the debtor or hirer on the basis of unjust enrichment. ⁵⁶⁴

39-094

A wide discretion is, however, given to the court as to whether, and, if so, on what terms it will make an enforcement order in situations of infringement. ⁵⁶⁵ The 1974 Act originally provided that, in three cases, the court was precluded from making an enforcement order at all. ⁵⁶⁶ However, the Consumer Credit Act 2006 ⁵⁶⁷ repealed the relevant provisions and hence no agreement made after the repeal was brought into force is now “irredeemably unenforceable”. ⁵⁶⁸ Those three cases (which are still relevant to old agreements ⁵⁶⁹) were as follows. First, ⁵⁷⁰ the court could not enforce the agreement unless a document containing all the prescribed terms of the agreement, ⁵⁷¹ was signed by the debtor or hirer. ⁵⁷² Secondly, the court could not enforce a “cancellable” ⁵⁷³ agreement if a provision of s.62 or 63 was not complied with, ⁵⁷⁴ and the creditor or owner did not give a copy of the executed agreement, and of any other document referred to in it, to the debtor or hirer before the commencement of the proceedings in which the order is sought. ⁵⁷⁵ Thirdly, the court could not enforce a “cancellable” ⁵⁷⁶ agreement if s.64(1) (notice of cancellation rights) ⁵⁷⁷ was not complied with. ⁵⁷⁸ In Wilson v First County Trust Ltd (No.2), ⁵⁷⁹ the Court of Appeal made a declaration pursuant to s.4(2) of the Human Rights Act 1998 that the absolute bar on enforcement imposed in the first case mentioned above was contrary to the European Convention on Human Rights. ⁵⁸⁰ This decision was reversed by the House of Lords sub. nom. Wilson v Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, ⁵⁸¹ although the court queried whether this result would be reached in the absence of the (then £25,000) financial limit. To avoid further challenges once the financial limit was generally removed by the Consumer Credit Act 2006, ⁵⁸² that Act repealed these “irredeemably unenforceable” provisions in their entirety.

-
- 1- See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf); Goode, Consumer Credit: Law and Practice (looseleaf); Goode, Consumer Credit Law (1989); Harding, Consumer Credit and Consumer Hire (1995); Philpott, The Law of Consumer Credit and Hire (2009).
 - ⁴⁴⁸. See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf), paras 2–056, 2–061—2–066; and Goode, Consumer Credit: Law and Practice (looseleaf), Pt C, Ch.30.
 - ⁴⁴⁹. The Payment Services Regulations 2009 (SI 2009/209) regs 36 and 40 impose additional information requirements prior to the making of “payment services contracts” (or certain payments thereunder), a term that covers certain credit agreements (see generally, above, paras 34-223 et seq.), but note the (slight) modification for agreements that are CCA 1974-regulated agreements in reg.34(b).
 - ⁴⁵⁰. s.55 does not apply to the types of agreement listed in CCA 1974 s.74(1)(a) (non-commercial agreement, see above, para.39-049), in s.74(1)(b) (“authorised business overdraft agreements”) and in s.82(4) (variation). And note the further exclusions, in relation to each set of regulations.
 - ⁴⁵¹. See CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in s.55, references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see below, para.39-257) are to be read as references to the “improver”, as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6). Note also CCA 1974 s.55C (copy of draft credit agreement available on request), below, para.39-079.
 - ⁴⁵². CCA 1974 s.55(2), as substituted by SI 2010/1010 reg.16.
 - ⁴⁵³. See above, para.39-011.
 - ⁴⁵⁴. SI 2004/1481.
 - ⁴⁵⁵. SI 2010/1013, as amended by SI 2010/1969 regs 31–40 and SI 2011/11 reg.8.

- 456. See SI 2004/1483 reg.2, as amended by SI 2010/1010 reg.75 and SI 2010/1969 reg.24. The Regulations also exclude (a) agreements within CCA 1974 s.58 (as an “advance copy” is provided under that section, see below, para.39-535) and (b) “distance contracts”, as defined in the Financial Services (Distance Marketing) Regulations 2004 SI 2004/2095 (as (usually, if the contract is made with a “consumer”) those regulations will apply, see below, para.39-126).
- 457. See previous note, above and (for s.58) below, para.39-535.
- 458.  When the Mortgage Credit Directive (see above, para.39-003) is implemented on March 21, 2016, they will apply to so-called “residential renovation agreements” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1)) above this threshold: see amendments made by SI 2015/910 art.3 and Sch.1 paras 11, 13. The Mortgage Credit Directive (and hence the relevant amendments) came into force on March 21, 2016.
- 459. See above, para.39-048.
- 460. See above, para.39-011.
- 461. In the FCA Handbook, see CONC 4.2 (general) and CONC 4.3 (P2P agreements) (previously CCA 1974 s.55A, added by SI 2010/1010 reg.3). Much of the OFT’s publication: Irresponsible lending—OFT guidance for creditors (OFT 1107, March 2010; updated February 2011) (ILG), Section 3 of which contained extensive guidance on the OFT’s interpretation of the requirements of the now repealed CCA 1974 s.55A has been incorporated in CONC.
- 462. See CONC 4.2.1(3) and (4). It also does not apply to “non-commercial” agreements, see above, para.39-049 (CONC 4.2.5(7)(a)), most overdraft agreements (CONC 4.2.1(5)) or “small” agreements, see above, para.39-048 (CONC 4.2.5(7)(b)).
- 463. But only “business” credit under £25,000 is “regulated”: see above, para.39-046. The duty has also been modified in relation to pawn agreements (see CONC 4.2.5(6), previously CCA 1974 s.55A(7)).
- 464. See above, para.39-063. Hence breach is actionable under the FSMA 2000 s.138D and could result in the usual FCA disciplinary sanctions. See also ss.140A–140C (unfair relationships), below, paras 39-212 et seq.
- 465. cf. breach of CCA 1974 ss.55, 61, 61A, 62, 63, 64.
- 466. See above, para.39-011.
- 467. Whether initially or “significantly” increasing credit already available.
- 468. In the FCA Handbook, see CONC 5 (on contracting) and CONC 6.2 (during agreement) (previously CCA 1974 s.55B, added by SI 2010/1010 reg.5). Again much of the OFT’s publication: Irresponsible lending—OFT guidance for creditors (OFT 1107, March 2010; updated February 2011) (ILG), which contained extensive guidance on the OFT’s interpretation of the requirements of CCA 1974 s.55B has been incorporated in CONC.
- 469. CONC 5.2.1(4). It also does not apply to “non-commercial” agreements, see above, para. 39-049 (CONC 5.2.1(5)(a)), current account overdrawing (CONC 5.2.1(5)(b)) or “small” agreements, see above, para.39-048 (CONC 5.2.1(5)(c)).
- 470. But only “business” credit under £25,000 is “regulated”: see above, para.39-046.
- 471. See above, para.39-063. Hence breach is actionable under the FSMA 2000 s.138D and could result in the usual FCA disciplinary sanctions. See also ss.140A–140C (unfair relationships), below, paras 39-212 et seq.
- 472. cf. breach of CCA 1974 ss.55, 61, 61A, 62, 63, 64.

- 473. See above, para.39-011.
- 474. Added on February 1, 2011 by SI 2010/1010 reg.6. See CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in CCA 1974 s.55C, references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see below, para.39-257) are to be read as references to the “improver”/“first bill payer”, as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6).
- 475. CCA 1974 s.55C also does not apply to the types of agreement listed in (i) s.74(1)(a) (“noncommercial” agreements, see above, para.39-049), (ii) s.74(1)(b) (“authorised business overdrafts”), (iii) s.74(1)(d) (“small” agreements, see above, para.39-048). See also s.82(4) (variation).
- 476.  When the Mortgage Credit Directive (see above, para.39-003) is implemented on March 21, 2016, this exemption will not apply to so-called “residential renovation agreements” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1)): see amendment to s.55C in SI 2015/910 art.3 and Sch.1 para.2(3). The Mortgage Credit Directive (and hence the relevant amendment) came into force on March 21, 2016.
- 477. See above, para.39-063. See also ss.140A–140C (unfair relationships), below, paras 39-212 et seq.
- 478. cf. breach of CCA 1974 ss.55, 61, 61A, 62, 63, 64.
- 479. Before the transfer of regulation to the FCA (see above, para.39-002) the Secretary of State made the regulations.
- 480. This provision does not apply to the types agreement listed in s.74(1) (see below, para.39-103, n.627). See also s.82(4) (variation). See CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in CCA 1974 s.60, references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see below, para.39-257) are to be read as references to the “improver” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6)), including an improver who is not an individual.
- 481. See above, para.39-011.
- 482. SI 1983/1553 (brought into force on May 19, 1985) and amended by SI 1984/1600; SI 1985/666; SI 1988/2047; SI 1999/3177; SI 2004/1482; SI 2004/2619; SI 2010/1010. They were completely overhauled by SI 2004/1482 (in force, May 31, 2005).
- 483. SI 2010/1014, as amended by SI 2010/1969 regs 41–45.
- 484. As hire agreements are not within the scope of the Directive, the 1983 regulations also continue to apply to regulated hire agreements.
- 485. See SI 1983/1553 reg.8(1A), added by SI 2010/1010 reg.53 and amended further by SI 2010/1969 reg.13.
- 486.  But when the Mortgage Credit Directive (see above, para.39-003) is implemented on March 21, 2016, these regulations will not apply to so-called “residential renovation agreements” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1)) above this threshold: see amendment to SI 1983/1553 in SI 2015/910 art.3 and Sch.1 para.3. The Mortgage Credit Directive (and hence the relevant amendment) came into force on March 21, 2016.
- 487. But note that only business credit under £25,000 is “regulated”: see above, para.39-046.
- 488. See above, para.39-080, especially n.484.
- 489. See CCA 1974 s.20; above, para.39-059. An erroneously calculated APR gave rise to criminal liability under the misleading price indications provisions of the (now repealed by the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1277)) Consumer Protection Act

1987 s.20 in R. v Kettering Magistrates' Court Ex p. MRB Insurance Brokers Ltd [2000] 1 All E.R. 353 QB. See Brooks v Northern Rock (Asset Management) Plc (Unreported, April 16, 2010, Oldham Cty Ct) (on the citation of rates of interest) and Black Horse Ltd v Speak [2010] EWHC 1866 (QB).

- 490. See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf) at paras 3–215 et seq.
- 491. CCA 1974 s.60(3)–(6), amended by Sch.25(6) to the Enterprise Act 2002, SI 2013/1881 and SI 2013/1882. See also CCA 1974 s.183 (variation or revocation of directions made under the CCA 1974). Note also that FSMA 2000 ss.55U(4), (5), (7) and (8) apply to an application made under CCA 1974 s.60(3) as if the application were an application made to the FCA under the FSMA 2000 Pt 4A: see the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (Regulated Activities) (Amendment) Order 2014 (SI 2014/366) art.4.
- 492. CCA 1974 s.60(4).
- 493. The FCA stated on March 30, 2015 that this dispensation is available to shared-equity mortgage agreements that provide specified alternative information.
- 494. SI 2010/1014, as amended by SI 2010/1969 regs 41–45.
- 495. Set out in Sch.1 to the regulations.
- 496. SI 2010/1014 reg.3(2).
- 497. CCA 1974 s.60(3)–(6), see above, para.39-080.
- 498.  See CCA 1974 s.60(5)—and note the proposed amendment (when the Mortgage Credit Directive (see above, para.39-003) is implemented on March 21, 2016) in relation to so-called “residential renovation agreements” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1) in SI 2015/910 art.3 and Sch.1 para.4. The Mortgage Credit Directive (and hence the relevant amendment) came into force on March 21, 2016.
- 499. The Consumer Credit Directive (see above, para.39-011) does not require a signature but is without prejudice to national rules as to the validity of agreements. Hence, the CCA 1974 requirement for a signature has been retained. For a discussion of electronic contracting, see Philpott, “E-Commerce and Consumer Credit” (2001) 3 J.I.F.M. 131; and Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf) at para.2–062. See also Golden Ocean Group Ltd v Salgaocar Mining Industries PVT Ltd [2012] 2 All E.R. (Comm) 978 at 932 (name typed in an email is a signature); Bassano v Alfred Toft, Peter Biddulph, Peter Biddulph Ltd, Borro Loan Ltd, Borro Loan 2 Ltd [2014] EWHC 377 (QB), [2014] C.C.L.R. 8 (clicking “I accept” which generated a PDF document with the debtor’s typed name, fulfilled the “signature” requirement in CCA 1974 s.61(1)).
- 500. And hence enforceable on an order of court only, see CCA 1974 s.65 and below, paras 39-093 and 39-094.
- 501. CCA 1974 s.61 does not apply to the agreements specified in CCA 1974 s.74(1) (see para. 39-103, n.627) and note CCA 1974 s.82(4) (variation).
- 502. And not by reference to another document.
- 503. These prescribed terms are set out in the two sets of Agreement Regulations (see above, paras 39-080 et seq.): (i) SI 1983/1553 Sch.6 and (ii) SI 2010/1014 reg.4(1).
- 504. See above, paras 39-080 et seq.
- 505. Prescribed in the two sets of Agreement Regulations (see above, paras 39-080 et seq.): (i) SI 1983/1553 (as amended, especially by SI 2004/1482) reg.2(7) and Sch.5 (signature box) and

(ii) SI 2010/1014 reg.4(3)–(4).

- 506. Signature of a document in blank will be insufficient (Eastern Distributions Ltd v Goldring [1957] 2 Q.B. 600; Campbell Discount Co Ltd v Gall [1961] 1 Q.B. 431) as will a signature by only one of two joint debtors (HFC Bank v Grossbard [2001] C.L.Y. 908). See also CCA 1974 ss.61(4), 185(3), (6), 189(3).
- 507. CCA 1974 s.61(1)(a). See also CCA 1974 ss.186, 189(3).
- 508. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), (4) (reference to another document). But see Jerome v Nationwide Building Society (Huddersfield Cty Ct, Sept 27, 2011): reference to other document must be accurate (hence loose sheets were not “embodied” in document referring to “attached sheets”).
- 509. As under s.6(2) of the Moneylenders Act 1927, so that if, e.g. money advanced can be applied in one way only, this must be stated: Hanyet Securities Ltd v Mallett [1968] 1 W.L.R. 1265. Contrast Askinex Ltd v Green [1969] 1 Q.B. 272. Similarly the case-law under the 1927 Act has held that any term to the effect that the loan renews another loan ought to be stated: Lyle v Chappell [1932] 1 K.B. 691; Temperance Loan Fund v Rose [1932] 2 K.B. 522; Egan v Langham Investments [1938] 1 K.B. 667; Re British Games [1938] Ch. 240; Allighan v London and Westminster Loan and Discount Ltd [1946] 3 All E.R. 530. But see Holiday Credit v Erol [1977] 1 W.L.R. 704; Broadwick Financial Services v Spencer [2002] EWCA 35 (non-binding concession need not be stated).
- 510. CCA 1974 s.61(1)(b). For implied terms, see below, paras 39-382 et seq., 39-457, 39-468.
- 511. CCA 1974 s.61(1)(c). See also SI 1983/1553 reg.6(2), as amended by SI 2004/1482 and (to substitute media-neutral wording) by SI 2004/3236.
- 512. See below, para.39-535.
- 513. And hence enforceable on an order of court only, see CCA 1974 s.65 and below, paras 39-093 and 39-094.
- 514. CCA 1974 s.61(2), (3); below, para.39-535.
- 515. The provisions do not apply to the agreements specified in CCA 1974 s.74(1) (see para.39-103, n.627). See also CCA 1974 s.82(4) (variation) and CCA 1974 ss.180 (form of copies), 185(1)(a) (plurality of debtors or hirers). See CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in CCA 1974 ss.61A–63, references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see below, para.39-257) are to be read as references to the “improver” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6)).
- 516. In CCA 1974 s.189(1).
- 517. It is defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1) in almost identical terms to those used to define “executed agreement”, but with the omission of any reference to signature.
- 518. See above, para.39-011.
- 519. Added on February 1, 2011 by SI 2010/1010 reg.8. See also CCA 1974 s.61B, added by SI 2010/1010 reg.9: special copy requirements for overdrafts.
- 520. As hire agreements are not within the scope of the Directive.
- 521. But CCA 1974 ss.62–63 invariably apply to land mortgages to which CCA 1974 s.58 applies, as these cannot opt into the “Directive” regime (see SI 2010/1013 reg.2(2) and (5)).
- 522.  When the Mortgage Credit Directive (see above, para.39-003) is implemented on March 21, 2016, this exemption will not apply to so-called “residential renovation agreements” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1)): see the new s.61A(6A) inserted by SI 2015/910 art.3 and Sch.1 para.2(5). The Mortgage Credit Directive (and hence the relevant amendment) came into force on March 21, 2016.

- 523. But note that only business credit under £25,000 is “regulated”: see above, para.39-046.
- 524. See below, para.39-102.
- 525. SI 1983/1557, as amended by SI 1983/1558; SI 1984/1108; SI 1988/2047; (most extensively) SI 2004/2619; SI 2004/3236. See also, SI 1985/666 and SI 1989/591, made under (inter alia) CCA 1974 s.180.
- 526. SI 1983/1557 reg.3(1).
- 527. SI 1983/1557 reg.2(1).
- 528. [2009] EWHC 3417 (QB), a case on CCA 1974 s.78 (see below, para.39-132). See also MBNA Europe Bank Ltd v Thorius (September 21, 2009, South Shields Cty Ct) D.D.J. Smart: original agreement terms, not terms in force at time of proceedings, need to be provided.
- 529. [2009] EWHC 3417, at [54].
- 530. CCA 1974 ss.61A(5), 61B(3), 62(3), 63(5), 65; below, paras 39-093 and 39-094. The same consequence follows for breach of CCA 1974 s.64 (see below, para.39-093): s.64(5).
- 531. CCA 1974 s.63(1), (2)(a). But see CCA 1974 s.64 (cancellable agreements), below, para.39-091.
- 532. CCA 1974 s.62(1).
- 533. CCA 1974 s.63(2)(b). But see CCA 1974 s.64 (cancellable agreements), below, para.39-091.
- 534. CCA 1974 s.62(1).
- 535. Except in the case of a credit-token agreement: CCA 1974 s.63(4).
- 536. CCA 1974 s.63(2).
- 537. CCA 1974 s.62(2).
- 538. Except in the case of a credit-token agreement: CCA 1974 s.63(4).
- 539. CCA 1974 s.63(2).
- 540. CCA 1974 s.63(3).
- 541. CCA 1974 ss.62(1), (2), 63(1), (2).
- 542. See CCA 1974 s.180(1)(b), (3), and (for the relevant regulations) SI 1983/1557 reg.11.
- 543. See below, para.39-102.
- 544. See the definition of “cancellable agreement” in CCA 1974 s.189(1).
- 545. CCA 1974 s.64 does not apply to the agreements excepted under CCA 1974 s.74(1) (see para.39-103, n.627) and CCA 1974 s.82(4) (variation). See CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in s.64, references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see below, para.39-257) are to be read as references to the “improver” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6)).

- 546. See above, para.39-084.
- 547. SI 1983/1557, as amended by SI 1983/1558; SI 1984/1108; SI 1988/2047 (and, most extensively) SI 2004/2619; SI 2004/3236. See also SI 1985/666 and SI 1989/591, made under (inter alia) CCA 1974 s.180. See Goshawk Dedicated (No.2) Ltd v Bank of Scotland [2005] EWHC 2906 (Ch), [2006] C.C.L.R. 1; followed by Bank of Scotland v Euclidian (No.1) Ltd [2007] EWHC 1732 (whether the form of notice of cancellation was correctly drafted).
- 548. CCA 1974 s.64(1). See also CCA 1974 s.185(1)(a) (plurality of debtors or hirers).
- 549. See above, para.39-088.
- 550. The wording of CCA 1974 s.63(3) has been changed from “by post” to “by an appropriate method” by SI 2004/3236 art.2(4), to allow for electronic communication.
- 551. Except in the case of a credit-token agreement: CCA 1974 s.64(2).
- 552. CCA 1974 s.64(1)(b), (2); SI 1983/1557 reg.6 (as amended by SI 2004/3236) and Sch. Pt VI (as substituted by SI 2004/2619 and subsequently amended by SI 2004/3236). But power is conferred on the FCA (previously the OFT) to dispense with this requirement in the case of certain mail order credit agreements pursuant to regulations made by the Treasury (previously the Secretary of State): CCA 1974 s.64(4), amended by Sch.25(6) to the Enterprise Act 2002; SI 2013/1882. See also CCA 1974 ss.68(b), 183. Regulations may also provide that the separate notice shall be accompanied by a further copy of the executed agreement, and of any other document referred to in it (CCA 1974 s.64(3)). No regulations have been made.
- 553. See above, para.39-076.
- 554. See above, para.39-011.
- 555. Added on February 1, 2011 by SI 2010/1010 reg.8.
- 556. CCA 1974 s.61B, added on February 1, 2011 by SI 2010/1010 reg.9.
- 557. See above, paras 39-080—39-092. Note that CCA 1974 s.55(2) provides for the same consequence for breach of CCA 1974 s.55: see above, para.39-076.
- 558. CCA 1974 ss.61(1), (2), 62(3), 63(5), 64(5).
- 559. CCA 1974 s.65(1). See CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in CCA 1974 s.65, references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see below, para.39-257) are to be read as references to the “improver”/“current bill payer”/“previous bill payer” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6)). For case-law on s.65, see PB Leasing Ltd v Patel (t/a Plankhouse Stores) [1995] C.C.L.R. 82 Cty Ct; Smerdon v Ellis [1997] C.L.Y. 960 Cty Ct; Re Dixon-Vincent [1997] C.L.Y. 958 Cty Ct; Rendle v Hicks [1998] C.L.Y. 2504 Cty Ct; Kemp v Ling [1998] C.L.Y. 2502 Cty Ct; Gibbons v Gibbons [1998] C.L.Y. 2500 Cty Ct; Rahman v Brassil [1998] C.L.Y. 2503 Cty Ct.; Barons Finance Ltd & Reddy Corp Ltd v Makanju [2013] EWHC 153 (QB), [2013] C.C.L.R. 3 (multiple breaches of Agreements Regulations); Consolidated Finance Ltd v Collins [2013] EWCA Civ 475. cf. Eastern Distributors Ltd v Goldring [1957] 2 Q.B. 600; North West Securities v Alexander Breckon Ltd [1981] R.T.R. 518 (enforcement against third parties); R. v Modupe [1991] Crim. L.R. 531 (debtor or hirer remains under a liability); Carlyle Finance Ltd v Pallas Industrial Finance Ltd [1991] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 659 (offer accepted although agreement not yet signed by creditor); Hitchens v General Guarantee Corp Ltd [2001] C.L.Y. 880 CA (valid hire-purchase agreement for purposes of Hire-Purchase Act 1964). No sanction is imposed by the CCA 1974 for enforcing an unenforceable agreement without a court order (CCA 1974 s.170(1)), but the creditor or owner may be subject to liability at common law; see Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf) at para.2-066, or to disciplinary action as an FCA authorised person (see above, para.39-063) or (in the case of credit agreements) the relationship may be determined as “unfair” under ss.140A-140C (see below, paras 39-212 et seq.). CPR Pt 7, PD 7B.

- 560. CCA 1974 s.65(2). But see CCA 1974 s.173(3) (consent); Wotton v Flagg [1997] C.L.Y. 959 Cty Ct; Hatfield v Hiscock [1998] C.L.Y. 2501 Cty Ct. cf. Rendle v Hicks [1998] C.L.Y. 2504 Cty Ct; Kemp v Ling [1998] C.L.Y. 2502 Cty Ct; Gibbons v Gibbons [1998] C.L.Y. 2500 Cty Ct.
- 561. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1); see below, para.39-180.
- 562. CCA 1974 s.113(2). See also CCA 1974 s.113(8) (linked transactions) and below, para.39-191.
- 563. CCA 1974 ss.106, 113(3)(c); below, para.39-193. See also CCA 1974 s.113(8).
- 564. Dimond v Lovell [2002] 1 A.C. 384, 397-398; Wilson v Secretary of State for Trade and Industry [2003] UKHL 40, [2003] 3 W.L.R. 568 at [49]-[50].
- 565. CCA 1974 s.127(1); below, para.39-200. For refusals to enforce, see PB Leasing Ltd v Patel and Patel (t/a Plankhouse Stores) [1995] C.C.L.R. 82; Smerdon v Ellis [1997] C.L.Y. 960; Re Dixon-Vincent [1997] C.L.Y. 958; Rendle v Hicks [1998] C.L.Y. 2504; Barons Finance Ltd & Reddy Corp Ltd v Makanju [2013] EWHC 153 (QB), [2013] C.C.L.R. 3; Consolidated Finance Ltd v Collins [2013] EWCA Civ 475. And see below as to the “irredeemably unenforceable” case-law. For enforcement orders made, see National Guardian Mortgage Corp v Wilkes [1993] C.C.L.R. 1 (but interest rate reduced); Rank Xerox v Hepple [1993] C.C.L.R. 1 (but reduction of amount payable); Hatfield v Hiscock [1996] C.C.L.R. 68; London North Securities Ltd v Meadows [2005] EWCA 956 (but PPP not payable); Wilson v Hurstanger Ltd [2007] EWCA 299 (but some sums not payable).
- 566. CCA 1974 s.127(3)-(5).
- 567. Consumer Credit Act 2006 s.15, in force on April 6, 2007 (SI 2007/123).
- 568. A term coined by Lord Hoffmann in Dimond v Lovell [2002] 1 A.C. 384.
- 569. Those made on or before April 5, 2007.
- 570. CCA 1974 s.127(3). See also CCA 1974 s.127(5) and s.185(3). For case-law, see Wilson v First County Trust Ltd (No.1) [2001] Q.B. 407; O'Hagan v Wright [2001] NICA 26, [2003] C.C.L.R. 6; Dimond v Lovell [2002] 1 A.C. 384; McGinn v Grangewood Securities Ltd [2002] EWCA 522; Wilson v Robertson (London) Ltd [2005] EWHC 1425; London North Securities Ltd v Meadows [2005] EWCA Civ 956, [2005] C.C.L.R. 7 (distinguished in Black Horse Ltd v Hanson [2009] EWCA Civ 73); Brophy v HFC Bank Ltd [2011] C.C.L.R. 1; Napier v HFC Bank Ltd (t/a The GM Card) [2011] C.C.L.R. 2; Sternlight v Barclays Bank Plc [2011] C.C.L.R. 6.
- 571. See above para.39-083 n.505. Omission of terms of the agreement other than prescribed terms, did not have this effect: CCA 1974 s.61(1)(b). But see (the now repealed) CCA 1974 s.127(5).
- 572. See above, para.39-083. The signature did not have to be in the manner prescribed by the Agreements Regulations made under CCA 1974 s.61 (see above, para.39-094).
- 573. i.e. a regulated agreement which, by virtue of CCA 1974 s.67, could be cancelled by the debtor or hirer (see below, para.39-102).
- 574. See above, paras 39-088 et seq.
- 575. CCA 1974 s.127(4)(a). See VL Skuse & Co v Cooper [1975] 1 W.L.R. 593. For the commencement of proceedings in the county court, see CPR Pt 7 r.2.
- 576. See n.575, above.
- 577. See above, para.39-091.
- 578. s.127(4)(b). Woodchester Leasing Equipment v Clayton [1994] C.C.L.R. 87 Cty Ct; Moorgate

Services Ltd v Kabir [1995] C.C.L.R. 74 CA.

579. [2001] EWCA Civ 633, [2002] Q.B. 74.

580. art.6 and art.1 of the First Protocol.

581. [2003] UKHL 40, [2004] 1 A.C. 816.

582. See above, para.39-005 n.16.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 39 - Credit and Security
Section 1. - The Regulation of Consumer Credit ¹
(f) - Withdrawal and Cancellation ⁵⁸³

Offer and acceptance

39-095

Regulated credit and hire agreements are in principle no exception to the general rule ⁵⁸⁴ that either party is at liberty to withdraw from the intended transaction until such time as an offer has been accepted, ⁵⁸⁵ and acceptance has been communicated to the offeror. ⁵⁸⁶ But, in the case of a prospective regulated agreement, the 1974 Act makes certain modifications to the common law rules in respect of the persons to whom notice of withdrawal may be given and the consequences of withdrawal. ⁵⁸⁷

Mode of withdrawal

39-096

The giving to a party of a written or oral notice which, however expressed, indicates the intention of the other party to withdraw from a prospective regulated agreement operates as a withdrawal from it. ⁵⁸⁸ There can be little doubt that, as at common law, ⁵⁸⁹ the withdrawal is not normally effective until communicated to the other party, and that a posted withdrawal does not take effect on posting. ⁵⁹⁰

To whom notice may be given

39-097

By s.57(3) of the 1974 Act, each of the following is deemed to be the agent of the creditor or owner for the purpose of receiving a notice of withdrawal—(a) a credit-broker ⁵⁹¹ or supplier ⁵⁹² who is the negotiator ⁵⁹³ in any antecedent negotiations ⁵⁹⁴; and (b) any person who, in the course of a business ⁵⁹⁵ carried on by him, acts on behalf of the debtor or hirer in any negotiations for the agreement. Thus a prospective debtor may, for example, in certain circumstances give notice of withdrawal to the dealer who negotiates the transaction ⁵⁹⁶ or even to his own broker or solicitor. However, by s.175, where under the 1974 Act a person is deemed to receive a notice as agent of the creditor or owner under a regulated agreement, he is deemed to be under a contractual duty to the creditor or owner to transmit the notice to him forthwith and hence will be liable in contract (to the creditor or owner) if he fails to do so.

Consequences of withdrawal

39-098

The withdrawal of a party from a prospective regulated agreement operates to apply Pt V of the 1974 Act to the agreement, any linked transaction ⁵⁹⁷ and any other thing done in anticipation of the making of the agreement as it would apply if the agreement were made and cancelled under s.69. ⁵⁹⁸ This is so notwithstanding that the agreement, if made, would not be a “cancellable” agreement. ⁵⁹⁹

Prospective land mortgage

39-099

The 1974 Act contains special “pause” provisions providing for an opportunity for withdrawal from a prospective land mortgage. ⁶⁰⁰

Agreement not to withdraw

39-100

At common law, a person may bind himself not to withdraw his offer either absolutely or for a certain time, if his promise to do so is made by deed or if the promisee furnishes consideration for the promise. ⁶⁰¹ But under s.59(1) of the 1974 Act ⁶⁰² an agreement is void if, and to the extent that, it purports to bind a person to enter as a debtor into a prospective regulated agreement. This provision does not, however, prevent the creditor or owner from being bound to enter into such an agreement.

14-day “right of withdrawal”

39-101

 In consequence of the implementation of the Consumer Credit Directive, ⁶⁰³ a new s.66A ⁶⁰⁴ has been added to the 1974 Act. It confers an unconditional 14-day “right of withdrawal” (the Directive’s term for a right to cancel an agreement that has already been made) in relation to regulated credit agreements other than “excluded agreements”. “Excluded agreements” are those for credit exceeding £60,260 (as these are outside the scope of the Directive ⁶⁰⁵ ) and those that are also excluded from the definition of “cancellable” agreement within s.67. ⁶⁰⁶ Moreover, s.66A does not apply to most overdrafts. ⁶⁰⁷ Although “business” credit is outside the scope of the Directive, the new s.66A “right of withdrawal” has nevertheless been extended to regulated business credit agreements. ⁶⁰⁸ In common with all other “Directive” provisions, it has also been extended to hire-purchase agreements. Section 66A sets out both the mode and timing of withdrawal (the debtor must “give oral or written notice” within 14 days from (usually) the date the agreement is made) and its effect (hence, as well as the credit agreement, any “ancillary service” (as defined) contract relating to the agreement, is treated as if it had never been entered into). Agreements that do not have the benefit of the s.66A right of withdrawal (in particular, credit agreements in excess of £60,260 ⁶⁰⁹ and hire agreements) may be “cancellable” within s.67 of the 1974 Act. ⁶¹⁰

“Cancellable” agreements ⁶¹¹

39-102

For agreements not subject to the s.66A “right of withdrawal”, ⁶¹² s.67 of the 1974 Act sometimes ⁶¹³ provides for a “cooling off” period within which a debtor or hirer under a regulated agreement, is entitled to cancel the agreement. The section provides that a regulated ⁶¹⁴ agreement may be cancelled by the debtor or hirer in accordance with Pt V of the Act if the antecedent negotiations ⁶¹⁵ included oral representations ⁶¹⁶ made when in the presence of the debtor or hirer by an individual ⁶¹⁷ acting as, or on behalf of, the negotiator ⁶¹⁸ unless the unexecuted agreement was signed by the debtor or hirer at premises at which any of the following was carrying on any business ⁶¹⁹ (whether on a permanent or temporary basis):

(i)

the creditor or owner ⁶²⁰;

(ii)

any party to a linked transaction ⁶²¹ (other than the debtor or hirer or a relative of his);

(iii)

the negotiator in any antecedent negotiations. ⁶²²

Hence a regulated agreement is not “cancellable” if (broadly) it is signed by the debtor or hirer at trade premises; but it will also not be “cancellable” if, although signed elsewhere, the debtor has not at some stage prior to the making of the agreement been subject to “face-to-face” persuasion. So, for example, if there is no personal contact at all, as in the case of some types of credit agreement canvassed by “mail shot” or correspondence, or an agreement canvassed by telephone, the agreement is not “cancellable” under the 1974 Act. But, on the other hand, the right to cancel is not confined to the door-to-door context. If negotiations are conducted at a dealer’s showroom, and the debtor takes the agreement home for signature, the agreement will be a “cancellable” agreement.

Exceptions

39-103

Section 67 itself establishes the following exceptions to its applicability, viz if “the agreement is secured on land, or is a restricted-use ⁶²³ credit agreement to finance the purchase of land or is an agreement for a bridging loan in connection with the purchase of land”. ⁶²⁴ Further exceptions are established by s.74 of the 1974 Act. ⁶²⁵

Cooling-off period

39-104

The period within which the debtor or hirer is permitted to serve notice of cancellation—sometimes known as the “cooling-off” period—is set out in s.68 of the 1974 Act. Its starting point is always his signing of the unexecuted agreement. The period ends at the end of the fifth day following the day on which he receives the second copy ⁶²⁶ or, if no second copy is required, the notice under s.64(1)(b) of the Act. ⁶²⁷ Thus if he signs the agreement on the 1st, and the second copy (or notice) is received by him on the 7th, ⁶²⁸ he has until midnight on the 12th to serve his notice of cancellation.

Notice of cancellation

39-105

A notice of cancellation may be served on:

(i)

the creditor or owner ⁶²⁹, or

(ii)

the person specified in the notice under s.64(1) ⁶³⁰; or

(iii)

a credit-broker ⁶³¹ or supplier ⁶³² who is the negotiator ⁶³³ in antecedent negotiations ⁶³⁴; or any person who, in the course of a business ⁶³⁵ carried on by him acts on behalf of the debtor or hirer in any negotiations for the agreement ⁶³⁶; or a person who is the agent of the creditor or owner. ⁶³⁷

(iv)

(v)

It will therefore normally be open to the debtor or hirer to serve the notice on a dealer who negotiated the transaction, and, in certain circumstances, even upon an agent of the debtor or hirer himself. ⁶³⁸ A notice will be an effective notice of cancellation if, however expressed and whether or not conforming to the notice given under s.64(1), ⁶³⁹ it indicates the intention of the debtor or hirer to withdraw from the agreement. ⁶⁴⁰ A notice of cancellation sent by post to a person is deemed to be served on him at the time of posting whether or not it is actually received by him and an electronic notice ⁶⁴¹ is deemed served when it is transmitted. ⁶⁴²

Effect of notice

39-106

Service of a notice of cancellation by the debtor or hirer operates, in general, to cancel the agreement and any linked transaction, ⁶⁴³ and to withdraw any offer by the debtor or hirer, or his relative, ⁶⁴⁴ to enter into a linked transaction. ⁶⁴⁵ Except so far as is otherwise provided by or under the 1974 Act, ⁶⁴⁶ an agreement or transaction so cancelled is treated as if it had never been entered into. ⁶⁴⁷ Thus the cancellation of a regulated agreement will also, for example, operate to cancel any collateral contract for maintenance which is a linked transaction. ⁶⁴⁸ And if goods are bought from a supplier for cash advanced by a financier as a loan under pre-existing arrangements with the supplier, ⁶⁴⁹ the cancellation of the loan agreement will operate automatically to cancel the contract of sale. ⁶⁵⁰ Further, on cancellation, any security provided is rendered invalid. ⁶⁵¹

Special cases

39-107

Special provision is, however, made for the case of a debtor-creditor-supplier ⁶⁵² agreement for restricted-use ⁶⁵³ credit financing—(a) the doing of work or supply of goods to meet an emergency, or (b) the supply of goods which, before service of the notice of cancellation, had by the act of the debtor or his relative ⁶⁵⁴ become incorporated in any land or thing not comprised in the agreement or any linked transaction. ⁶⁵⁵ In such a case service of a notice of cancellation operates to cancel only such provisions of the agreement and any linked transaction as relate to the provision of credit, or require the debtor to pay an item in the total charge for credit, ⁶⁵⁶ or subject the debtor to any obligation other than to pay for the doing of the work, or the supply of the goods. ⁶⁵⁷ The “credit” obligations of the debtor under the credit agreement or any linked transaction are therefore released, but he is still liable for the outstanding balance of the cash price of the goods or services. Any security provided is, however, rendered invalid. ⁶⁵⁸

Repayment to and release of debtor ⁶⁵⁹

39-108

On cancellation, ⁶⁶⁰ the debtor or hirer is entitled to be repaid any sum paid by him, or his relative, ⁶⁶¹ under or in contemplation of the agreement or transaction, ⁶⁶² including any item in the total charge for credit. ⁶⁶³ That sum is repayable by the person to whom it was originally paid. ⁶⁶⁴ But, in the case of a debtor-creditor-supplier agreement falling within s.12(b) of the 1974 Act, ⁶⁶⁵ the creditor and supplier are under a joint and several liability to repay sums paid by the debtor, or his relative, under the agreement or under a linked transaction falling within s.19(1)(b). ⁶⁶⁶ However, subject to any agreement between them, the creditor is entitled to be indemnified by the supplier for loss suffered by the creditor in satisfying that liability, including costs reasonably incurred by him in defending proceedings instituted by the debtor. ⁶⁶⁷

39-109

If the total charge for credit ⁶⁶⁸ includes an item in respect of a fee or commission charged by a credit-broker, ⁶⁶⁹ the amount repayable in respect of that item is the excess of over £5 of the fee or commission ⁶⁷⁰; any other sum included in the total charge for credit which is payable or paid by the debtor to a credit-broker is for this purpose treated as if it were such a fee or commission. ⁶⁷¹

A further effect of cancellation ⁶⁷² is that any sum, including any item in the total charge for credit, ⁶⁷³ which but for the cancellation is, or would or might become, payable by the debtor or hirer, or his relative, ⁶⁷⁴ under the agreement or transaction ceases to be, or does not become, so payable. ⁶⁷⁵ The debtor or hirer is thus released (subject to s.71) ⁶⁷⁶ from liability to pay the sums—including credit charges—payable by him under the cancelled agreement or any linked transaction. ⁶⁷⁷

Repayment to creditor by supplier

39-110

On cancellation, ⁶⁷⁸ in the case of a debtor-creditor-supplier agreement falling within s.12(b) of the 1974 Act, ⁶⁷⁹ any sum paid on the debtor's behalf by the creditor to the supplier ⁶⁸⁰ becomes repayable to the creditor. ⁶⁸¹

Cancellation: repayment of credit ⁶⁸²

39-111

Money may be advanced to a debtor under a regulated consumer credit agreement in anticipation of the making of the agreement or during the “cooling-off” period, but the debtor may then withdraw from or cancel the agreement. Section 71 of the 1974 Act deals with the repayment of the credit by the debtor in such a situation and is clearly designed to discourage the making of loans before the agreement is executed or, in the case of a cancellable agreement, before the expiration of the period allowed for cancellation.

39-112

In the first place, on cancellation, ⁶⁸³ the loan advanced does not become immediately repayable. Section 71 of the 1974 Act provides that, notwithstanding the cancellation of a regulated consumer credit agreement, ⁶⁸⁴ other than a debtor-creditor-supplier ⁶⁸⁵ agreement for restricted-use ⁶⁸⁶ credit, the agreement is to continue in force so far as it relates to repayment of credit and payment of interest. ⁶⁸⁷ It is important to realise, however, that all other covenants by the debtor, e.g. for the provision of security or for insurance, become inoperative, ⁶⁸⁸ and likewise any guarantee or indemnity given in connection with the loan is of no effect. ⁶⁸⁹ Secondly, if, following the cancellation of the agreement, the debtor repays the whole or a portion of the credit before the expiry of one month following service of the notice of cancellation (or, in the case of a credit repayable by instalments, before the date on which the first instalment is due), no interest is payable on the amount repaid. ⁶⁹⁰ Thirdly, if the whole of a credit repayable by instalments is not repaid on or before the date mentioned above, the debtor is not liable to repay any of the credit except on receipt of a request in writing in the prescribed form, ⁶⁹¹ signed by or on behalf of the creditor. ⁶⁹² The request must state “the amounts of the remaining instalments (recalculated by the creditor as nearly as may be in accordance with the agreement and without extending the repayment period), but excluding any sum other than principal and interest”. ⁶⁹³ So, for example, if a cash loan ⁶⁹⁴ of £1,000 is made which is repayable with interest of £320 by 24 equal monthly instalments of £55 (APR 32.1 per cent), and the borrower cancels the agreement, he might repay part of the loan, say £400, free of interest before the date on which the first instalment fell due. The remaining £600 would be repayable by him only on the request of the creditor and would be repayable, together with interest at the rate specified in the agreement, over that part of the original repayment period then still unexpired. The debtor is not relieved from paying interest on the £600 not repaid in respect of the period before the request is received. The £600 would, therefore, be repayable with interest at APR 32.1 per cent for 24 months (£192), by (say) 23 monthly instalments of £34.43. ⁶⁹⁵

39-113

Repayment of credit, and payment of interest, under a cancelled agreement is treated as duly made if it is made to any person on whom, under s.69, ⁶⁹⁶ a notice of cancellation could have been served, other than a person referred to in s.69(6)(b). ⁶⁹⁷

Return of goods ⁶⁹⁸

39-114

Section 72 of the 1974 Act deals with the return of goods on cancellation. ⁶⁹⁹ Where the possession of goods has been acquired by virtue of a cancelled restricted-use ⁷⁰⁰ debtor-creditor-supplier ⁷⁰¹ agreement, consumer hire agreement ⁷⁰² or linked transaction ⁷⁰³ to which the debtor or hirer under a regulated agreement is a party, or by virtue of a cancelled linked transaction ⁷⁰⁴ to which a relative ⁷⁰⁵ of the debtor or hirer under a regulated agreement is a party, the possessor is under a duty ⁷⁰⁶ to restore the goods to the person from whom he acquired possession. ⁷⁰⁷ The possessor is, however, not under any duty to deliver the goods except at his own premises, ⁷⁰⁸ and then only if he is served with a request in writing so to do. ⁷⁰⁹ The possessor is under a duty from the time when he acquired possession to the date of cancellation (“the pre-cancellation period”) ⁷¹⁰ to retain possession of the goods and to take reasonable care of them. ⁷¹¹ This duty continues after cancellation, ⁷¹² but subject to certain qualifications, viz:

(i)

if no request for delivery of the goods is received by him within 21 days following the cancellation, his duty to take reasonable care of the goods (but not his duty to retain possession of them) ceases at the end of that period; and if he receives a request for delivery of the goods within 21 days following cancellation, but he unreasonably refuses or unreasonably fails to comply with it, his duty to take reasonable care of the goods continues until he does so comply. ⁷¹³

(ii)

39-115

The possessor may deliver the goods, either at his own premises ⁷¹⁴ or elsewhere, to any person on whom, under s.69 of the 1974 Act, ⁷¹⁵ a notice of cancellation could have been served (other than a person referred to in s.69(6)(b)), ⁷¹⁶ or he may send the goods at his own expense to such a person.

⁷¹⁷ Once he has so delivered or sent the goods, his duty to retain the goods or deliver them to any person, and his duty to take care of them, ⁷¹⁸ cease, save that, if he elects to send the goods, he is under a duty to take reasonable care to see that they are received by the person from whom he acquired possession and not damaged in transit. ⁷¹⁹

39-116

Breach of a duty imposed by s.72 of the 1974 Act is actionable as a breach of statutory duty. ⁷²⁰

Exceptions

39-117

Certain exceptions are created to s.72. The section does not apply to perishable goods, ⁷²¹ or to goods which by their nature are consumed by use and which, before cancellation, were so consumed, ⁷²² or to goods supplied to meet an emergency, ⁷²³ or to goods which, before the cancellation, had become incorporated in any land or thing not comprised in the cancelled agreement or a linked transaction. ⁷²⁴

Goods given in part-exchange ⁷²⁵

39-118

Section 73 of the 1974 Act contains provision for the return of goods given in part-exchange where a regulated agreement is cancelled. ⁷²⁶ For the purposes of the section goods are given in partexchange if, in antecedent negotiations, ⁷²⁷ the negotiator ⁷²⁸ agreed to take goods in part-exchange (the “part-exchange goods”) and those goods have been delivered to him. ⁷²⁹ The negotiator is treated as having agreed to take goods in partexchange if, in pursuance of the antecedent negotiations, he either purchased or agreed to purchase those goods or accepted or agreed to accept them as part of the consideration for the cancelled agreement. ⁷³⁰

39-119

In principle, on cancellation, the part-exchange goods should be returned to the debtor or hirer in a condition substantially as good as when they were delivered to the negotiator. ⁷³¹ If they are not so delivered before the end of the period of 10 days beginning with the date of cancellation, the debtor or hirer is entitled to recover from the negotiator a sum equal to the “part-exchange allowance”, i.e. the sum agreed as the part-exchange allowance in the antecedent negotiations or, if no such agreement was arrived at, such sum as it would have been reasonable to allow in respect of the part-exchange goods if no notice of cancellation had been served. ⁷³² In the case of a debtor-creditor-supplier agreement within s.12(b) of the 1974 Act, ⁷³³ both the negotiator and the creditor are under a joint and several liability to pay that sum to the debtor ⁷³⁴; but the creditor is given a right (subject to any agreement between them) to be indemnified by the negotiator in satisfying that liability, including costs reasonably incurred by him in reasonably defending proceedings instituted by the debtor. ⁷³⁵

39-120

Where the debtor or hirer recovers from the negotiator or creditor or both of them jointly a sum equal to the part-exchange allowance, then, if the title of the debtor or hirer to the part-exchange goods has not vested in the negotiator, it vests in the negotiator on the recovery of that sum. ⁷³⁶ Title does not in any circumstances vest in the creditor.

Lien

39-121

If, under the terms of a cancelled agreement or transaction, the debtor or hirer, or his relative, ⁷³⁷ is in possession of any goods, he is entitled to a lien on them for any sum repayable to him under s.70(1) of the 1974 Act ⁷³⁸ in respect of that agreement or transaction, or any other linked transaction. ⁷³⁹ Also, during the period of 10 days beginning with the date of cancellation, if the debtor or hirer is in possession of goods to which the cancelled agreement relates, he has a lien on them for delivery of the part-exchange goods ⁷⁴⁰ in a condition substantially as good as when they were delivered to the negotiator, ⁷⁴¹ or a sum equal to the part-exchange allowance, ⁷⁴² and, if such a lien continues to the end of that period, a lien thereafter for a sum equal to the part-exchange allowance. ⁷⁴³

Agency for receiving notice of rescission

39-122

The right to withdraw from or cancel the agreement conferred by the 1974 Act in no way inhibits the exercise by the debtor or hirer of any other contractual remedy to which he may be entitled and which has the effect of terminating the agreement. Moreover, by s.102(1) of the Act certain persons are deemed to be the agent of the creditor or owner for the purpose of receiving any notice “rescinding” the agreement, which is served by the debtor or hirer. Those persons are:

(a)

a credit-broker ⁷⁴⁴ or supplier ⁷⁴⁵ who was the negotiator ⁷⁴⁶ in antecedent negotiations ⁷⁴⁷ (e.g. the dealer in an ordinary three-cornered instalment credit transaction); and any person who, in the course of a business ⁷⁴⁸ carried on by him, acted on behalf of the debtor or hirer in any negotiations for the agreement (e.g. the debtor or hirer’s own solicitor or agent). ⁷⁴⁹

(b)

The word “rescind” is not defined. It does not, however, include service of a notice of cancellation, ⁷⁵⁰ or termination of an agreement under s.99 ⁷⁵¹ or 101 ⁷⁵² of the 1974 Act or by the exercise of a right or power in that behalf expressly conferred by the agreement. But it is submitted that “rescind” should not be construed too narrowly so as to comprehend only the equitable remedy of rescission, e.g. for misrepresentation, ⁷⁵³ but should also extend to rescission consequent upon a repudiatory breach of the agreement by the creditor or owner. ⁷⁵⁴

Timeshare, Holiday Products, Resale and Exchange Contracts Regulations 2010

39-123

These regulations ⁷⁵⁵ confer on a consumer a 14 day right of cancellation (“withdrawal”) from timeshare and other “holiday accommodation” contracts within their scope, ⁷⁵⁶ that have a requisite connection with the UK or another EEA State. ⁷⁵⁷ On such cancellation both the obligations under the contract and any “ancillary contract” (i.e. a contract for services provided by the trader or by a third party with whom the trader has arrangements) terminates. ⁷⁵⁸ Moreover a “related credit contract” is also automatically terminated at no cost to the consumer. ⁷⁵⁹ A “regulated credit contract” is defined as one that fully or partly covers any payment under the holiday accommodation contract and that is made either with the trader or a third party “on the basis of an arrangement” between them.

Package Travel, Package Holidays and Package Tours Regulations 1992

39-124

These regulations ⁷⁶⁰ confer upon a consumer a right of cancellation (“withdrawal”) where the organiser is constrained before departure to alter significantly an essential term of a contract for the provision of package travel, etc. services. ⁷⁶¹ In the event of withdrawal, the consumer is entitled to have repaid to him as soon as possible all monies paid by him under the contract. The definition of “consumer” in the regulations is not in any way linked to the conceptual framework of the 1974 Act and there is no exception in a case where an associated credit agreement is subject to the right of withdrawal under s.66A of the 1974 Act or is a “cancellable” agreement under s.67 of the 1974 Act.

Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013

39-125

1 Part 3 of these regulations ⁷⁶² 1 confers a right to cancel without giving any reason or incurring any costs (unless specified) on “consumers” (as defined) in the case of certain “distance” or “off-premises” contracts (as defined) made by “traders” (as defined). The cancellation period is generally 14 days (from the date of conclusion of the contract or the date of delivery), although if the trader does not provide the consumer with the requisite information on cancellation rights, ⁷⁶³ the cancellation period may be extended by up to 12 months. The regulations contain provisions adjusting the position of the parties after cancellation, ⁷⁶⁴ which are similar to those in ss.70-73 of the 1974 Act. ⁷⁶⁵ The regulations (including the cancellation right) do not apply to a variety of agreements, including credit agreements. ⁷⁶⁶ However, a credit agreement may be cancelled if it is a so-called “ancillary contract” in relation to a distance or offpremises contract (the “main contract”) that is cancelled by virtue of the regulations. ⁷⁶⁷ An “ancillary contact” is defined as “a contract by which the consumer acquires goods or services related to the main contract”, where those goods or services are provided either by the trader or by a third party (for example a creditor) “on the basis of an arrangement between the third party and the ‘trader’”. “Arrangement” is not defined in the regulations but it is a word of wide import. ⁷⁶⁸

Financial Services (Distance Marketing) Regulations 2004

39-126

These Regulations ⁷⁶⁹ extend a right to cancel to certain “distance” ⁷⁷⁰ consumer financial services contracts, including credit contracts. ⁷⁷¹ Credit contracts that are already cancellable as “ancillary contracts” under the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 ⁷⁷² or as timeshare credit agreements under the Timeshare, Holiday Products, Resale and Exchange Contracts Regulations 2010 ⁷⁷³ are excluded. ⁷⁷⁴ There is no overlap with s.67 of the 1974 Act ⁷⁷⁵ in that this section requires “face-to-face” negotiation whereas the regulations require “distance communication”. However, if the s.66A right of withdrawal applies, ⁷⁷⁶ then the right of cancellation conferred by these regulations is excluded. ⁷⁷⁷ The regulations require the right to cancel to be communicated “in good time” prior to the consumer being bound ⁷⁷⁸ and the “cooling off” period is generally 14 days from the date the contract is concluded. Provision is also made for the cancellation of an “attached contract”, a concept which may include credit contracts. ⁷⁷⁹

1. See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf); Goode, Consumer Credit: Law and Practice (looseleaf); Goode, Consumer Credit Law (1989); Harding, Consumer Credit and Consumer Hire (1995); Philpott, The Law of Consumer Credit and Hire (2009).

583. See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf), paras 2-058, 2-068—2-075; and Goode, Consumer Credit: Law and Practice (looseleaf), Pt C, Ch.31.

584. See Vol.I, Ch.2.

- 585. cf. Financings Ltd v Stimson [1962] 1 W.L.R. 1184.
- 586. cf. Lowe v Lombank Ltd [1960] 1 W.L.R. 196, 206; Robophone Facilities Ltd v Blank [1966] 1 W.L.R. 1428.
- 587. CCA 1974 s.57. See CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in CCA 1974 s.57, references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see below, para.39-257) are to be read as references to the “improver”, as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6). Section 57 does not apply to the agreements excepted under CCA 1974 s.74(1) (see para.39-103, n.627) and under s.82(4) (variation).
- 588. CCA 1974 s.57(2). But see the exceptions listed in CCA 1974 s.74(1) (below, para.39-103, n.627) and in s.82(4) (variations).
- 589. See Vol.I, para.2-093.
- 590. Byrne & Co v Leon Van Tienhoven & Co (1880) 5 C.P.D. 344. Contrast CCA 1974 s.69(7) (deemed service of notice of cancellation).
- 591. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1).
- 592. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1).
- 593. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.56(1), 189(1); see above, para.39-073.
- 594. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.56(1), 189(1); see above, paras 39-071 et seq.
- 595. See CCA 1974 s.189(1), (2).
- 596. At common law a dealer who negotiates a transaction is not an agent of the creditor for the purpose of fixing the creditor with knowledge that the offer was made subject to an oral stipulation qualifying the debtor’s liability: Eastern Distributors Ltd v Goldring [1957] 2 Q.B. 600; Northgran Finance Ltd v Ashley [1963] 1 Q.B. 476. But he is the agent of the creditor for the purpose of communicating the withdrawal of the offer: Financings Ltd v Stimson [1962] 1 W.L.R. 1184.
- 597. See CCA 1974 ss.19(1), 189(1), above, paras 39-055 et seq. But certain linked transactions are excepted by SI 1983/1560 (contracts of insurance, guarantees of goods, and agreements for deposit and current accounts).
- 598. CCA 1974 s.57(1). But this is not so in the case of agreements excepted by CCA 1974 ss.74(1) (see below, para.39-103, n.627) and 82(4) (variations). For CCA 1974 s.69, see below, para.39-105. See also CCA 1974 s.113(6); below, para.39-189.
- 599. CCA 1974 s.57(4).
- 600. CCA 1974 s.58(1), considered below at para.39-535. But see the exceptions in CCA 1974 ss.58(2), 74(1) (see below, para.39-103, n.627) and 82(4) (variations).
- 601. See Vol.I, Ch.4.
- 602. But see the exceptions in CCA 1974 ss.74(1) (see below, para.39-103, n.627) and 82(4) (variations). Under CCA 1974 s.59(2) and SI 1983/1552, certain types of agreement are excluded from s.59(1), namely, agreements to enter into prospective hire agreements and agreements to enter into prospective restricted-use agreements for fixed-sum credit, in both cases the goods being used for business purposes. See also Lakin v Exe Haulage Ltd [2006] C.L.Y. 705 CtY Ct: s.59 inapplicable to exempt agreement.
- 603. See above, para.39-011.

- 604. Added on February 1, 2011 by SI 2010/1010 reg.13. See CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in CCA 1974 s.66A, references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see below, para.39-257) are to be read as references to the “improver” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6)).
- 605.  When the Mortgage Credit Directive (see above, para.39-003) is implemented on March 21, 2016, this exemption will not apply to so-called “residential renovation agreements” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1)): see amendment to s.66A in SI 2015/910 art.3 and Sch.1 para.2(5). The Mortgage Credit Directive (and hence the relevant amendment) came into force on March 21, 2016.
- 606. CCA 1974 s.66A(14). For agreements excluded from the definition of “cancellable” agreement, see below, para.39-103: agreements secured on land and various agreements financing the purchase of land.
- 607. See CCA 1974 s.74(1)(b) (but see s.74(1D): certain non-business overdrafts). Section 66A also does not apply to “non-commercial” agreements (as to which, see above, para.39-049): s.74(1)(a). See also, in the context of variation (as to which, see below paras 39-148, 39-151), CCA 1974 s.82(4), (6A)-(6B).
- 608. But note that only business credit under £25,000 is “regulated”, see above, para.39-046.
- 609. But see n.607.
- 610. See next paragraph. And the FCA Handbook, CONC 11.2 confers a “right of withdrawal” (essentially a right to cancel) on borrowers under certain “peer-to-peer” (P2P) credit agreements.
- 611. See CCA 1974 Sch.2 Pt II Example 4. The special s.58 “pause” provisions may apply instead in the case of an agreement secured by a land mortgage: see below, para.39-535. For a pre-Directive discussion of the various provisions generally conferring rights of cancellation, see Hellwege (2004) C.L.J. 712.
- 612. Viz: regulated credit agreements in excess of £60,260 and regulated hire agreements; see previous paragraph.
- 613. See the exceptions noted below, para.39-103, n.627. And note that if cancellation rights are conferred by contract on agreements not satisfying s.67, such agreements do not attract the provisions of the Act applicable to “cancellable agreements”: Rankine v MBNA Europe Bank Ltd [2007] EWCA Civ 1273 (but see the Consumer Credit (Cancellation Notices and Copies of Documents) Regulations 1983 (SI 1983/1557) reg.5(4), added by SI 1984/1108, rendering those regulations (only) applicable).
- 614. An exempt agreement (above paras 39-038 et seq.) cannot be cancelled under the CCA 1974.
- 615. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.56(1), 189(1); above, paras 39-071 et seq.
- 616. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1). See Moorgate Services Ltd v Kabir [1995] C.L.Y. 722.
- 617. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1).
- 618. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.56(1), 189(1); above, para.39-073.
- 619. Defined in s.189(1), (2).
- 620. e.g. a financier where it is the creditor under a hire-purchase, credit sale or conditional sale agreement.
- 621. For linked transactions see CCA 1974 s.19(1); above, para.39-055, et seq. e.g. a dealer selling goods, where a loan is made by a financier on his introduction to purchaser of goods: s.19(1).

- 622. e.g. a dealer: see above, para.39-072. But because of the definition of “antecedent negotiations” and “negotiator” in CCA 1974 s.56, a distinction exists between debtor-creditor-supplier agreements on the one hand and debtor-creditor and consumer hire agreements on the other: see Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf) at para.2-068.
- 623. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.11(1), 189(1); see above, para.39-027.
- 624. CCA 1974 s.67(a). See also CCA 1974 ss.58(1), 61(2).
- 625. See CCA 1974 s.74(1): (i) non-commercial agreements (as to which, see above, para.39-049); (ii) certain overdrafts; (iii) (in accordance with the OFT's Determination (made on December 21, 1989), see Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf) at para.4-4802) a debtor-creditor agreement to finance the making of payments connected with the death of a person as may be prescribed by regulation (see SI 1983/1554) and (iv) small (see above, para.39-048) debtor-creditor-supplier agreements (see above, para.39-030) for restricted use (see above, para. 39-027). See also, in the context of variation (as to which, see below paras 39-148—39-150, 39-151), CCA 1974 s.82(4), (6).
- 626. Of the executed agreement under CCA 1974 s.63(2): see above, para.39-089.
- 627. See above, para.39-091. If, by virtue of regulations made under s.64(4) (see the regulations made: see SI 1983/1558 (certain mail order consumer credit agreements), s.64(1)(b) does not apply, the period runs to the end of the 14th day following the day on which he signed the unexecuted agreement.
- 628. The second copy (or notice) must normally be sent by post within the seven days following the making of the agreement: see above, para.39-091.
- 629. CCA 1974 s.69(1)(a).
- 630. CCA 1974 s.69(1)(b); see above, para.39-091.
- 631. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1).
- 632. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1).
- 633. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.56(1), 189(1).
- 634. CCA 1974 s.69(1)(c), (6)(a). See also CCA 1974 s.175 (contractual duty to the creditor or owner to transmit the notice to him forthwith).
- 635. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), (2).
- 636. CCA 1974 s.69(1)(c), (6)(b). See also CCA 1974 s.175 (contractual duty to the creditor or owner to transmit the notice to him forthwith).
- 637. CCA 1974 s.69(1)(c).
- 638. And see CCA 1974 s.175 (contractual duty to the creditor or owner to transmit the notice to him forthwith).
- 639. See above, para.39-091.
- 640. CCA 1974 s.69(1).
- 641. In accordance with CCA 1974 s.176A, added by SI 2004/3236 art.2(7).
- 642. CCA 1974 s.69(7), as amended by SI 2004/3236 art.2(5), adding the reference to electronic communications.

- 643. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.19(1), 189(1); above, paras 39-055 et seq. But see the linked transactions excepted under CCA 1974 s.69(5) by SI 1983/1560 (contracts of insurance, guarantees of goods and agreements for deposit and current accounts); and note Goshawk Dedicated (No.2) Ltd v Bank of Scotland [2005] EWHC 2906 (Ch), [2006] C.C.L.R. 1; Bank of Scotland v Euclidian (No.1) Ltd [2007] EWHC 1732.
- 644. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.184(1), 189(1).
- 645. CCA 1974 s.69(1). See also CCA 1974 s.142(2). But see n.645, above (excepted linked transactions).
- 646. e.g. by CCA 1974 s.71.
- 647. CCA 1974 s.69(4); Colesworthy v Collmain Services Ltd [1993] C.C.L.R. 4 Cty Ct.
- 648. See above, paras 39-055 et seq. But see n.645, above (excepted linked transactions).
- 649. CCA 1974 s.19(1)(b). This also applies to services.
- 650. But see the dictum of Lord Mance in OFT v Lloyds TSB Bank Plc [2007] UKHL 48 that s.69(1) is likely only to apply to a “linked transaction which is sufficiently connected with the United Kingdom”, although he declined to opine on the nature of the requisite link. Hence he doubted if a foreign supply transaction (financed by a UK credit card agreement) could be cancelled under s.69.
- 651. CCA 1974 ss.106, 113(3)(a); below, para.39-193. See also CCA 1974 s.113(8).
- 652. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.12, 189(1); see above, para.39-030.
- 653. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.11(1), 189(1); see above, para.39-027.
- 654. But not, e.g. by the act of a supplier.
- 655. CCA 1974 s.69(2). But see CCA 1974 ss.69(3), 70(8), 113(3)(a). “Linked transactions” are defined in CCA 1974 ss.19(1), 189(1); see above, paras 39-055 et seq.
- 656. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.20, 189(1); above, para.39-059.
- 657. CCA 1974 s.69(2). But see CCA 1974 ss.69(3), 70(8), 72(9), 113(3)(a). See also CCA 1974 s.142(2).
- 658. CCA 1974 ss.106, 113(3)(a); below, para.39-193. See also CCA 1974 s.113(8).
- 659. See also the comparable provisions in the Financial Services (Distance Marketing) Regulations 2004 (SI 2004/2095), below, para.39-126 and the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 (SI 2013/3134), below, para.39-125. See also (the less elaborate provisions in relation to the CCA 1974 s.66A right of withdrawal in) s.66A(9)-(10), above, para.39-101.
- 660. Or withdrawal: see CCA 1974 s.57(1); above, para.39-098. But see the exceptions in CCA 1974 ss.74 (above, para.39-103, n.627) and 82(4) (variations). See also CCA 1974 s.70(5) (credittokens).
- 661. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.184(1), 189(1).
- 662. i.e. a linked transaction: see CCA 1974 ss.19(1), 189(1); above, paras 39-055 et seq.
- 663. CCA 1974 s.70(1)(a). For “total charge for credit”, see above, para.39-059.
- 664. CCA 1974 s.70(3). See Colesworthy v Collmain Services Ltd [1993] C.C.L.R. 4 Cty Ct (money recoverable from collection/management agents of owner under cancelled consumer hire agreement). Where a financier supplies goods under a hire-purchase or conditional or credit sale agreement, and a deposit is paid by the debtor to the supplier, the deposit is recoverable from the financier at common law (Branwhite v Worcester Works Finance Ltd [1969] 1 A.C. 552) even though not paid to the creditor. For lien of debtor, see CCA 1974 s.70(2); below, para.39-121.

- 665. See above, para.39-031.
- 666. CCA 1974 s.70(3). See also above, paras 39-055 et seq. (on s.19(1)). The creditor is entitled, in accordance with rules of court, to have the supplier made a party to any proceedings brought against the creditor to recover these sums: CPR Pt 20.
- 667. CCA 1974 s.70(4).
- 668. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.20, 189(1); above, para.39-059.
- 669. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1); see below, para.39-231.
- 670. CCA 1974 s.70(6). The amount was increased from £1 to £3 by SI 1983/1571 and to £5 by SI 1998/997.
- 671. CCA 1974 s.70(7).
- 672. Or withdrawal: see CCA 1974 s.57(1); above, para.39-098. But see the exceptions in CCA 1974 ss.74(1) (above, para.39-103, n.627) and 82(4) (variations).
- 673. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.20, 189(1); above, para.39-059.
- 674. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.184(1), 189(1).
- 675. CCA 1974 s.70(1)(b).
- 676. See below, paras 39-111 et seq. See also CCA 1974 s.70(5) (credit-tokens).
- 677. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.19(1), 189(1); above, paras 39-055 et seq.
- 678. Or withdrawal: see CCA 1974 s.57(1); above, para.39-098. But see the exceptions in CCA 1974 ss.74(1) (above, para.39-103, n.627) and 82(4) (variations).
- 679. See above, para.39-031.
- 680. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1).
- 681. CCA 1974 s.70(1)(c).
- 682. See also the comparable provisions in the Financial Services (Distance Marketing) Regulations 2004 (SI 2004/2095), below, para.39-126 and the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 (SI 2013/3134), below, para.39-125. See also s.66A(9)–(10).
- 683. Or withdrawal: CCA 1974 see s.57(1); above, para.39-098. But see the exceptions in CCA 1974 ss.74 (above, para.39-103, n.627) and 82(4) (variation).
- 684. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.8, 189(1); above, para.39-017.
- 685. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.12, 189(1); above, para.39-030.
- 686. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.11(1), 189(1); above, para.39-027.

- 687. CCA 1974 s.71(1). But see CCA 1974 s.113(5).
- 688. CCA 1974 ss.69(1), (4), 106, 113(3)(g).
- 689. CCA 1974 ss.69(1), (4), 106, 113(3)(g).
- 690. CCA 1974 s.71(2). But there is no relief from interest payable on any amount not so repaid.
- 691. For the prescribed form, see SI 1983/1559, as amended by SI 2004/3236 art.7 (electronic communications).
- 692. CCA 1974 s.71(3). But see CCA 1974 s.113(5).
- 693. CCA 1974 s.71(3).
- 694. Which is for “unrestricted-use”, above, para.39-029.
- 695. For examples of calculations in the case of entire non-repayment or partial repayment, see Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf) at para.2-072.
- 696. See above, para.39-105. See also CCA 1974 s.175 (duty to remit the notice to the creditor).
- 697. CCA 1974 s.71(4). Section 69(6)(b) refers to “any person who, in the course of a business carried on by him, acts on behalf of the debtor ... in any negotiations for the agreement”. See above, para.39-105.
- 698. See the comparable provisions in the Financial Services (Distance Marketing) Regulations 2004 (SI 2004/2095), below, para.39-126, and the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 (SI 2013/3134), below, para.39-125.
- 699. Or, by virtue of CCA 1974 s.57, on withdrawal: see above, para.39-098. But see the exceptions listed in CCA 1974 ss.72(9), 74 (above, para.39-103, n.627), 82(4).
- 700. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.11(1), 189(1); above, para.39-027.
- 701. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.12, 189(1); above, para.39-030.
- 702. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.15, 189(1); above, para.39-035.
- 703. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.19(1), 189(1); above, paras 39-055 et seq.
- 704. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.19(1), 189(1); above, paras 39-055 et seq.
- 705. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.184(1), 189(1).
- 706. Subject to his right of lien under CCA 1974 s.70(2); below, para.39-121. And see CCA 1974 s.113(5).
- 707. CCA 1974 s.72(1), (2), (4). For the difficulties confronting a financier which finds itself holding depreciated goods, see Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf) at para.2-073.
- 708. See CCA 1974 s.72(10).
- 709. CCA 1974 s.72(5). The request must be signed by or on behalf of the person from whom he acquired possession and it must be served upon him either before or at the time the goods are collected from those premises: ss.72(2), (5).
- 710. CCA 1974 s.72(2)(c).

- 711. CCA 1974 s.72(3).
- 712. CCA 1974 s.72(4).
- 713. CCA 1974 s.72(8). Or until he sends the goods as mentioned in subs.(6).
- 714. See CCA 1974 s.72(10).
- 715. See above, para.39-105.
- 716. CCA 1974 s.72(6)(a). Section 69(6)(b) refers to a person who, in the course of a business carried on by him, acts on behalf of the debtor or hirer in any negotiations for the agreement. CCA 1974 s.175, which in terms only imposes a contractual duty on such a person (to the creditor or owner) to transmit a “notice or payment” (emphasis added) to the creditor or owner forthwith would seem to be inapplicable to the return of goods.
- 717. CCA 1974 s.72(6)(b).
- 718. CCA 1974 s.72(7).
- 719. CCA 1974 s.72(6), (7).
- 720. CCA 1974 s.72(11).
- 721. CCA 1974 s.72(9)(a).
- 722. CCA 1974 s.72(9)(b).
- 723. CCA 1974 s.72(9)(c). See also CCA 1974 s.69(2); above, para.39-107.
- 724. CCA 1974 s.72(9)(d). “Linked transaction” is defined in CCA 1974 ss.19(1), 189(1); above, paras 39-055 et seq. See also CCA 1974 s.69(2); above, para.39-107.
- 725. See the comparable provisions in the Financial Services (Distance Marketing) Regulations 2004 (SI 2004/2095), below, para.39-126, and the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 (SI 2013/3134), below, para.39-125.
- 726. Or, by virtue of CCA 1974 s.57, on withdrawal: see above, para.39-098. But see the exceptions listed in CCA 1974 ss.74 (above, para.39-103, n.627) and 82(4) (variations).
- 727. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.56, 189(1); above, paras 39-071 et seq.
- 728. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.56(1), 189(1).
- 729. CCA 1974 s.73(1).
- 730. CCA 1974 s.73(7)(a).
- 731. CCA 1974 s.73(2).
- 732. CCA 1974 s.73(2), (7)(b).
- 733. See above, para.39-031.
- 734. CCA 1974 s.73(3). The creditor is entitled, in accordance with rules of court to have the negotiator made a party to the proceedings: s.73(8); CPR Pt 20.
- 735. CCA 1974 s.73(4).
- 736. CCA 1974 s.73(6).

- 737. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.184(1), 189(1).
- 738. See above, para.39-108.
- 739. CCA 1974 s.70(2). For linked transaction, see ss.19(1), 189(1); above, paras 39-055 et seq.
- 740. CCA 1974 s.73(1); above, para.39-118.
- 741. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.56(1), 189(1). See above, para.39-093.
- 742. CCA 1974 s.73(6); above, para.39-119.
- 743. CCA 1974 s.73(5).
- 744. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1); below, para.39-231.
- 745. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1).
- 746. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.56, 189(1); above, para.39-073.
- 747. See above, paras 39-071 et seq.
- 748. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), (2).
- 749. But see CCA 1974 s.175 (duty to transmit the notice to the creditor or owner).
- 750. CCA 1974 s.69(1); above, para.39-106.
- 751. CCA 1974 s.99(1); below, para.39-367.
- 752. CCA 1974 s.101(1); above, para.33-088.
- 753. See Vol.I, Ch.7.
- 754. See Vol.I, Ch.24.
- 755. SI 2010/2960 (implementing the Timeshare etc. Directive 2008/122/EC and repealing the Timeshare Act 1992). See further above, paras 38-136 et seq. See the similar provisions in the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 (SI 2013/3134), below, para.39-125, which exclude contracts within the 2010 Regulations from their cancellation provisions.
- 756. See SI 2010/2960 regs 3, 4, 6-10.
- 757. See SI 2010/2960 reg.5.
- 758. See SI 2010/2960 reg.22.
- 759. See SI 2010/2960 reg.23.
- 760. SI 1992/3288 (implementing Council Directive 90/314), amended by SIs 1995/1648, 1998/1208, 2003/1376, 2003/1400. See above, paras 38-132 et seq. See also Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf) at para.2-068.
- 761. SI 1992/3288 regs 12, 13.
- 762.  SI 2013/3134. For a fuller consideration, see above, paras 38-107 et seq. For case-law on the predecessor Cancellation of Contracts made in a Consumer's Home or Place of Work, etc. Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1816), see W v Veolia Environmental Services (UK) Plc [2011]

EWHC 2020 (hire contract unenforceable under those regulations as signed at home without the requisite notice) and Salat v Barutis [2013] EWCA Civ 1499 (lack of cancellation notice in motorcycle hire agreement) and Allproperty Claims v Tang [2015] EWHC 2198 (lack of notification of cancellation right rendered agreement unenforceable).

- 763. The requisite information is set out in Sch.2 to the regulations.
- 764. See regs 34–37.
- 765. See above, paras 39–108—39–121.
- 766. See reg.6(1)(b).
- 767. See reg.38.
- 768. See the similar provision in the Timeshare, Holiday Products, Resale and Exchange Contracts Regulations 2010, considered above, para.39-123.
- 769. SI 2004/2095 (implementing Directive 2002/65 (the “DMD”—Distance Marketing Directive)). Regulations 15 and 22 were amended by the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1277) reg.30(1) and Sch.2 para.110 (to remove the criminal offences). For a fuller consideration, see above, paras 38-131 et seq.
- 770. The definition is similar to that under the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 (SI 2013/3134), above, para.39-125, which replaced the Consumer Protection (Distance Selling) Regulations 2000 (SI 2000/2334). However, there is (curiously) no equivalent (either in the 2004 regulations under discussion or in the 2013 regulations) to the “indicative list” of what constitutes “distance communication” in Sch.1 to the 2000 regulations.
- 771. But not hire contracts. Regulation 2(1) defines “credit” in almost identical terms to CCA 1974 s.9(1), see above, para.39-019.
- 772. See above, para.39-125.
- 773. See above, para.39-123.
- 774. SI 2004/2095 reg.11(1)(e) (substituted by SI 2013/3134), (f) (substituted by SI 2010/2960).
- 775. See above, para.39-102.
- 776. See above, para.39-102.
- 777. SI 2004/2095 reg.11(1)(h), added by SI 2010/1010 reg.89 and substituted by SI 2013/1881 Sch.1(2) para.26(b).
- 778. SI 2000/2334 reg.7. The right to cancel is exercisable by a “notice of cancellation”, with the formal requirements being more flexible than those under the CCA 1974.
- 779. SI 2000/2334 reg.12.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 39 - Credit and Security
Section 1. - The Regulation of Consumer Credit ¹
(g) - Supply of Information ⁷⁸⁰

Current account “overrunning”: information requirements

39-127

In consequence of the implementation of the Consumer Credit Directive ⁷⁸¹ there are two new “information” provisions concerning so-called current account “overrunning”, a Directive term that has been re-worded in the UK legislation ⁷⁸² as “overdraw without a pre-arranged overdraft or exceed a pre-arranged over-draft limit”. First, ⁷⁸³ where this may be permitted by the creditor, the current account agreement must contain certain information as to the interest rate(s) and any other charges levied for such “overrunning”. Moreover, the creditor must also inform the account-holder of this information annually. Second, ⁷⁸⁴ when “significant” overrunning occurs for more than one month (three months if the excess is secured on land), the creditor must inform the account-holder in writing, within that period or thereafter “without delay”, of the rate of interest and any other charges. Overrunning is “significant” if: (a) the account-holder is liable to pay a “charge” for which he would not otherwise be liable, or (b) the overdraft or excess is likely to have an adverse effect on the debtor’s ability to receive further credit, or (c) it “otherwise appears significant, having regard to all the circumstances”. The provisions applying to variations of agreements ⁷⁸⁵ do not apply to any debtor-creditor agreement arising as a result of overrunning.

Information to debtor under fixed-sum credit agreement on request

39-128

Section 77 of the 1974 Act requires ⁷⁸⁶ the creditor under a regulated agreement for fixed-sum credit ⁷⁸⁷ (other than a non-commercial agreement ⁷⁸⁸) to give ⁷⁸⁹ the debtor, on request, a copy of the executed agreement (if any) ⁷⁹⁰ and of any other document referred to in it, ⁷⁹¹ together with a statement of the account between them. ⁷⁹² In order to be valid the request must be in writing, and a fee of £1 must be paid. ⁷⁹³ The statement must be signed by or on behalf of the creditor and must show (according to the information to which it is practicable for him to refer):

- (a)
the total sum paid under the agreement by the debtor;
- (b)
the total sum which has become payable under the agreement by the debtor but remains unpaid, and the various amounts comprised in that total sum, with the date on which each became due; and
- (c)

the total sum which is to become payable under the agreement by the debtor and the various amounts comprised in that total sum, with the date or mode of determining the date, when each becomes due. ⁷⁹⁴

If the creditor fails to comply within 12 working days ⁷⁹⁵ after receiving a request, he is not entitled, while the default continues, to enforce the agreement. ⁷⁹⁶

Annual information to debtor under fixed-sum credit agreement

39-129

Section 77A ⁷⁹⁷ of the 1974 Act requires the creditor under a regulated agreement for fixed-sum credit ⁷⁹⁸ (other than a non-commercial agreement ⁷⁹⁹) automatically to give ⁸⁰⁰ the debtor, without charge, ⁸⁰¹ annual statements of the account between them ⁸⁰² in the form and with the contents prescribed. ⁸⁰³ If the creditor fails to comply, he is not entitled to enforce ⁸⁰⁴ the agreement during the period of non-compliance and the debtor is not liable to pay any interest or default sums referable to that period. ⁸⁰⁵ It was held in JP Morgan Chase Bank, National Association v Northern Rock (Asset Management) Plc ⁸⁰⁶ that if a s.77A statement that does not comply with the prescribed requirements is served, it is to be treated as if no statement had been served at all (and hence the commencement of the period of non-compliance needs to be calculated accordingly).

Statement of account to debtor under fixed-sum credit agreement on Request

39-130

⚠ In consequence of the implementation of the Consumer Credit Directive ⁸⁰⁷ where a fixed-sum regulated credit ⁸⁰⁸ agreement is of fixed duration and where the credit is repayable in instalments, the new s.77B ⁸⁰⁹ requires the creditor, at the request of the debtor, to give a written statement of account with a table showing details of the instalments due. ⁸¹⁰ The statement must be given “as soon as reasonably practicable” and no charge for it can be made. ⁸¹¹ Breach does not render the agreement unenforceable but is actionable as a breach of statutory duty. ⁸¹² Moreover, the normal disciplinary sanctions are available to the FCA for non-compliance, which could also render the agreement an “unfair relationship”. ⁸¹³ As this obligation derives from the Consumer Credit Directive, the obligation does not apply to agreements outside the scope of that Directive, namely: agreements secured on land, pawn agreements, agreements where credit in excess of £60,260 ⁸¹⁴ ⚠ is provided and “business” credit agreements. ⁸¹⁵ ⚠

Notices of sums in arrears: fixed-sum credit agreements

39-131

Further information needs to be given to a debtor under a regulated agreement for fixed-sum credit ⁸¹⁶ (other than a non-commercial ⁸¹⁷ or small ⁸¹⁸ agreement) ⁸¹⁹ if they fall into arrears. Section 86B ⁸²⁰ requires the creditor to give, ⁸²¹ in the form and with the contents prescribed, ⁸²² a “notice of sums in arrears” (a so-called “NOSIA”) within 14 days after the debtor becomes two payments (or four payments if made weekly ⁸²³) in arrears ⁸²⁴ and, unless payment is duly made, to continue sending out such a notice at intervals of not more than six months. ⁸²⁵ The notice, which must be free of charge, ⁸²⁶ must also be accompanied by ⁸²⁷ the “arrears information sheet” drafted by the FCA ⁸²⁸ which sets out information as to the legal consequences of falling in arrears and sources of help for debtors. The debtor may make an application to court for a time order after service of the notice but only after giving a counter-notice (a “notice of intent”) with a proposal for payment. ⁸²⁹ If the creditor fails to comply with the requirement to give a NOSIA then during the period of non-compliance he is not entitled to enforce the agreement. ⁸³⁰ Moreover, the debtor is not liable to pay any interest that relates to that period or any “default sum” that is incurred or becomes payable during that period. ⁸³¹

Information to debtor under running-account credit agreement on request

39-132

Section 78 ⁸³² contains similar provisions ⁸³³ to those in s.77 ⁸³⁴ (applicable to a fixed-sum credit agreement) in relation to a regulated agreement for running-account credit ⁸³⁵ (other than a non-commercial agreement ⁸³⁶). But here the statement on request must show:

- (a)
the state of the account;
- (b)
the amount, if any, currently payable under the agreement by the debtor to the creditor; and
- (c)
the amounts and dates of payments which, if the debtor does not draw further on the account, will later become payable under the agreement by the debtor to the creditor. ⁸³⁷

Again, if the creditor fails to comply within 12 working days ⁸³⁸ after receiving a request, he is not entitled, while the default continues, to enforce the agreement. ⁸³⁹

Periodic information to debtor under running-account credit agreement

39-133

In addition, s.78(4) requires the creditor under a regulated agreement for running-account credit ⁸⁴⁰ (other than a non-commercial agreement ⁸⁴¹ or a small agreement), ⁸⁴² automatically to give ⁸⁴³ the debtor, without charge, ⁸⁴⁴ periodic statements of the account (according to the information to which it is practicable for the creditor to refer) between them in prescribed form. ⁸⁴⁵ Further, where the agreement provides, in relation to specified periods, for the making of payments by the debtor, or the charging against him of interest or any other sum, the statement must show (according to the information to which it is practicable for the creditor to refer) the state of account at the end of each of those periods during which there is any movement in the account. ⁸⁴⁶ The terms of s.78(4) differ from those of s.77A (in relation to fixed-sum credit ⁸⁴⁷) in referring to statements at “regular intervals of not more than 12 months” ⁸⁴⁸ and hence if an interval of less than 12 months is initially chosen by the creditor, then this periodicity must be adhered to. Moreover, there is no explicit sanction for failure to comply with s.78(4). ⁸⁴⁹

Notices of sums in arrears: running-account credit agreements

39-134

Further information needs to be given to a debtor under a regulated agreement for running-account credit ⁸⁵⁰ (other than a non-commercial ⁸⁵¹ or small ⁸⁵² agreement) if they fall in arrears. Section 86C ⁸⁵³ requires the creditor to give, ⁸⁵⁴ in the form and with the contents prescribed, ⁸⁵⁵ a “notice of sums in arrears” (a so-called “NOSIA”) after the debtor becomes two payments in arrears. ⁸⁵⁶ This notice must be given at a time no later than the next periodic statement under s.78(4) ⁸⁵⁷ and may be incorporated in it. ⁸⁵⁸ The provisions of s.86C are otherwise similar to those of s.86B. The notice must be free of charge ⁸⁵⁹ and accompanied by ⁸⁶⁰ the “arrears information sheet” drafted by the FCA. ⁸⁶¹ The debtor may make an application to court for a time order but only after giving a counter-notice (a “notice of intent”) with a proposal for payment. ⁸⁶² The creditor is not entitled during the period of non-compliance to enforce the agreement ⁸⁶³ and the debtor is not liable to pay any interest that relates to that period or any “default sum” that is incurred or becomes payable during that period. ⁸⁶⁴

Notice of default sum

39-135

A “default sum” is defined ⁸⁶⁵ as a sum (other than a sum of interest) payable by a debtor or hirer under a regulated agreement “in connection with a breach of the agreement” but not including a sum which is payable earlier than otherwise required as a consequence of breach. Thus charges (but not interest) imposed for late payment are covered but not amounts payable under acceleration clauses. Section 86E ⁸⁶⁶ provides that if a “default sum” becomes payable under a regulated agreement (other than a non-commercial ⁸⁶⁷ or small ⁸⁶⁸ agreement) ⁸⁶⁹ the creditor must give ⁸⁷⁰ the debtor notice in the form and with the contents prescribed ⁸⁷¹ within 35 days ⁸⁷² of the sum becoming payable. The notice must be free of charge ⁸⁷³ and may be incorporated in any other notice or statement given under the Act. ⁸⁷⁴ If the creditor fails to comply with the requirement to give the notice, then during the period of non-compliance he is not entitled to enforce the agreement. ⁸⁷⁵ As for interest, the section states that the debtor has no liability to pay interest in connection with the default sum in respect of the period “before the 29th day after the day on which the debtor” is given “notice under this section”. Hence the creditor cannot charge interest ⁸⁷⁶ on the default sum until 28 days after the debtor receives ⁸⁷⁷ the notice. ⁸⁷⁸

Default sums: other provisions

39-136

As well as requiring a notice to be given when a default sum has been incurred, ⁸⁷⁹ the 1974 Act makes other special provision in relation to “default sums”. Only simple (and not compound) interest may be charged “in connection with” default sums. ⁸⁸⁰ Moreover, a debtor is not liable to pay any default sums that are incurred or become payable during a period when the creditor has not complied with his statutory obligation to give a “notice of sums in arrears”. ⁸⁸¹

Information to “surety”

39-137

The creditor under a regulated agreement for fixed-sum credit ⁸⁸² or running-account credit, ⁸⁸³ and the owner under a regulated consumer hire agreement, ⁸⁸⁴ in relation to which security ⁸⁸⁵ is provided, is required within 12 working days ⁸⁸⁶ after receiving a request in writing to that effect from a surety and payment of a fee of £1 ⁸⁸⁷ to give ⁸⁸⁸ to the surety ⁸⁸⁹ a statement of the account as between himself and the debtor or hirer in the same terms ⁸⁹⁰ as the statement to be given to the debtor or hirer. ⁸⁹¹ In addition, the creditor or owner is required to give to the surety:

- (i) a copy of the executed agreement (if any) and of any other document referred to in it; and
- (ii) a copy of the security instrument (if any). ⁸⁹²

39-138

Failure to comply will preclude him, while the default continues, from enforcing the security, so far as provided in relation to the agreement. ⁸⁹³ Non-commercial agreements are, however, excepted. ⁸⁹⁴

Copy of security instrument39-139

The creditor or owner under a regulated agreement (other than a non-commercial agreement) ⁸⁹⁵ is required, within 12 working days ⁸⁹⁶ after receiving a request in writing to that effect from the debtor or hirer and payment of a fee of £1, ⁸⁹⁷ to give ⁸⁹⁸ to the debtor or hirer a copy of any security instrument ⁸⁹⁹ executed in relation to the agreement after the making of the agreement. ⁹⁰⁰ Failure to comply precludes the creditor or owner, while the default continues, from enforcing the security so far as provided in relation to the agreement. ⁹⁰¹

Information as to whereabouts of goods39-140

Where a regulated agreement (other than a non-commercial agreement) ⁹⁰² requires the debtor or hirer to keep goods to which the agreement relates in his possession or control, he must, within seven working days after he has received a request in writing to that effect from the creditor or owner, tell the creditor or owner where the goods are. ⁹⁰³ If he fails to comply with the request, and the default continues for 14 days, he commits an offence. ⁹⁰⁴

Information as to settlement figure39-141

The creditor under a regulated consumer credit agreement ⁹⁰⁵ is required, ⁹⁰⁶ within seven working days ⁹⁰⁷ after he has received a request ⁹⁰⁸ to that effect from the debtor, to give ⁹⁰⁹ to the debtor a statement in the prescribed form indicating (according to the information to which it is practicable for him to refer), the amount of the payment required to discharge the debtor's indebtedness under the agreement, together with the prescribed particulars showing how the amount is arrived at. ⁹¹⁰ If the creditor fails to comply, he is not entitled, while the default continues, to enforce the agreement. ⁹¹¹

Termination statement39-142

Section 103 of the 1974 Act confers upon the debtor or hirer under a regulated agreement (other than a non-commercial agreement) ⁹¹² the right to obtain, on request, a termination statement confirming that he has discharged his indebtedness and that the agreement is at an end. In order to obtain a termination statement under this section, the debtor or hirer must serve a notice complying with the requirements of s.103(1). The creditor or owner must then, within 12 working days ⁹¹³ after receiving the notice, either:

(i) comply with it (by confirming that the statements contained in the notice are correct); or serve a counter-notice stating either that he disputes the correctness of the notice or that he asserts that the person serving the notice is not indebted to him under the agreement. ⁹¹⁴

(ii)

If he disputes the correctness of the notice he must give particulars of the way in which he alleges it to be wrong. ⁹¹⁵ A breach of s.103(1) is actionable as a breach of statutory duty. ⁹¹⁶ A termination statement is required to be given in pursuance of this provision on one occasion only. ⁹¹⁷

Statements binding on creditor or owner

39-143

Section 172 renders certain statements given by the creditor or owner binding on him. The section only applies to statements required to be given, on request, ⁹¹⁸ to the debtor or hirer under ss.77(1), 78(1) and 79(1) of the Act, ⁹¹⁹ the statements required to be given to a surety under ss.107 to 109, ⁹²⁰ and the statement as to the settlement figure required to be given under s.97(1). ⁹²¹ Further, if, in response to a notice requiring a termination statement under s.103, ⁹²² the creditor or owner by notice confirms that the statements contained in the notice served on him are correct, or if he himself serves a counter-notice asserting that the person serving the notice is not indebted to him under the agreement, the notice of confirmation or counter-notice is binding on him. ⁹²³ However, if in proceedings before any court it is sought to rely on any statement or notice given as mentioned above, and the statement or notice is shown to be incorrect, the court may direct such relief (if any) to be given to the creditor or owner as appears to the court to be just. ⁹²⁴ No doubt the court will relieve the creditor or owner if the debtor, hirer or surety was aware that a mistake had been made; and, although negligence on the part of the creditor or owner may be a relevant factor, it is submitted that the fact that he was negligent should not preclude relief. ⁹²⁵ As is the case in relation to estoppel at common law, it would seem that the most important consideration should be whether the person against whom relief is claimed has so changed his position in reliance on the statement that it would be inequitable to allow the creditor or owner to correct the statement. ⁹²⁶

Payment Services Regulations 2009 ⁹²⁷

39-144

These regulations impose additional information requirements ⁹²⁸ in relation to credit agreements within their scope. However, many of these obligations are modified in relation to agreements that are "regulated credit agreements" within the 1974 Act and hence subject to the obligations under that Act considered in this section. ⁹²⁹

^{1.} See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf); Goode, Consumer Credit: Law and Practice (looseleaf); Goode, Consumer Credit Law (1989); Harding, Consumer Credit and Consumer Hire (1995); Philpott, The Law of Consumer Credit and Hire (2009).

^{780.} See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf), paras 2-078—2-081, 2-087A—2-087E, 2-098, 2-104, 2-108—2-111. See also the Guidance in the FCA Handbook, CONC 13.

^{781.} See above, para.39-011.

^{782.} The provisions were originally in CCA 1974 ss.74A and 74B (added by SI 2010/1010 regs 21 and 22, as amended by SI 2010/1969 regs 9 and 10) but on the transfer of consumer credit regulation to the FCA (see above, para.39-002) ss.74A and 74B were repealed (see SI 2013/1881 art.20(27)) and replaced by corresponding provisions in the FCA Handbook CONC

4.7 and 6.3.3 (old s.74A) and CONC 6.3.3 and 6.3.4 (old s.74B).

- 783. FCA Handbook CONC 4.7 and 6.3.3 (previously CCA 1974 s.74A, see the previous footnote).
- 784. FCA Handbook CONC 6.3.4 (previously CCA 1974 s.74A, see above, n.784).
- 785. Viz (i) CCA 1974 s.82(1) (see s.82(1E), see below, para.39-146) and (ii) (for interest rate variations) CCA 1974 s.78A (see s.78A(6)(a), see below, para.39-147).
- 786. CCA 1974 s.77(1), except where relieved under s.77(2), below, or s.77(3) (no sums payable and repeated requests).
- 787. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.10(1)(b), 189(1); above, para.39-026.
- 788. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1); above, para.39-049. See CCA 1974 s.77(5).
- 789. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1) (as amended by SI 2004/3236 art.2(2)) to mean “deliver or send by appropriate method”.
- 790. See above, para.39-084. See also CCA 1974 s.180.
- 791. See above, para.39-090.
- 792. See NRAM Plc v McAdam & Hartley [2015] EWCA Civ 751, reversing [2014] EWHC 4174 (Comm): (obiter) s.77 does not apply to non-regulated agreements that are documented as regulated agreements. See also CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in CCA 1974 s.77, references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see below, para.39-257) are to be read as references to the “current bill payer”/“previous bill payer” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6)).
- 793. CCA 1974 s.77(1). The amount was raised from 15p to 50p by SI 1983/1571 and to £1 by SI 1998/997. See Carey v HSBC Bank Plc [2009] EWHC 3417 (QB) (on the similar CCA 1974 s.78 copy (below, para.39-132) requirement). See also the Guidance in the FCA Handbook CONC 13.
- 794. CCA 1974 s.77(1). But see s.77(2) (modification where creditor possesses insufficient information to comply with (c)). See also CCA 1974 s.172 (statement binding, below, para.39-138), and SI 1983/1557 reg.7. See also CCA 1974 s.86E(3) (if a “default sum” (see CCA 1974 s.187A and below, para.39-135) is payable, the statement may incorporate the notice of default sum required by s.86E) and CCA 1974 s.130A(5) (if post-judgment interest is payable, the statement may incorporate the notice required under s.130A(5)).
- 795. Prescribed by SI 1983/1569.
- 796. CCA 1974 s.77(4)(a). The court has no discretion to order enforcement. See McGuffick v Royal Bank of Scotland Plc [2009] EWHC 2386, [2010] C.C.L.R. 2, on the meaning of “enforcement” (does not cover reporting default to credit reference agency) and for confirmation that the creditor’s contractual rights are merely unenforceable, not extinguished. Section 77(4)(b) (an offence was committed after one month) was repealed by the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1277) reg.30(1) and Sch.2 para.19.
- 797. Inserted by the Consumer Credit Act 2006 s.6 from October 1, 2008 (see SI 2007/3300 art.3(3)) but applicable to agreements whenever made. New subss.(1A)–(1E) were substituted and amendments to subss.(5) and (7) made on October 1, 2008 by SI 2008/2826. See also the new subs.(9) (inapplicable to unauthorised overdrawing on current account) inserted by SI 2010/1010 reg.23. See CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in CCA 1974 s.77A, references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see below, para.39-257) are to be read as references to the “current bill payer” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6)).

- 798. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.10(1)(b), 189(1); above, para.39-026.
- 799. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1); above, para.39-049. See s.77A(8).
- 800. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1) (as amended by SI 2004/3236 art.2(2)) to mean “deliver or send by appropriate method”.
- 801. CCA 1974 s.77A(3). cf. statements under CCA 1974 ss.77, 78, 79.
- 802. CCA 1974 s.77A(1), except where relieved under s.77A(4) (no sums payable).
- 803. See SI 2007/1167 regs 3–12 and Sch.1, as amended by SI 2008/1751 and SI 2014/2369. Section 172 (statements binding, below, para.39-143) does not apply to s.77A statements. See also CCA 1974 s.86E(3) (if a “default sum” (see s.187A and below, para.39-135) is payable, the statement may incorporate the notice of default sum required by s.86E) and CCA 1974 s.130A(5) (if post-judgment interest is payable, the statement may incorporate the notice required under s.130A(5)).
- 804. See McGuffick v Royal Bank of Scotland Plc [2009] EWHC 2386 (Comm), [2010] C.C.L.R. 2, (in relation to the similar CCA 1974 s.77) on the meaning of “enforcement”, noted above, para. 39-128 n.798.
- 805. CCA 1974 s.77A(5)–(6). “Default sums” (defined in CCA 1974 s.187A, see below, para. 39-135) that would have become payable during the period of non-compliance (or would have become payable thereafter in connection with a breach during that period) are irrecoverable.
- 806. [2014] EWHC 291 (Ch), [2014] C.C.L.R. 7.
- 807. See above, para.39-011.
- 808. See above, para.39-026.
- 809. Added on February 1, 2011 by SI 2010/1010 reg.26.
- 810. See CCA 1974 s.77B(3)–(5).
- 811. See CCA 1974 s.77B(7). cf. statements under CCA 1974 ss.77, 78, 79.
- 812. See CCA 1974 s.77B(8). This is in contrast to the “unenforceability” sanction for breach of the other “information” provisions: CCA 1974 ss.77(4)(a), 77A(6)(a), 78(6)(a), 79(3)(a).
- 813. Within s.140A, see below, paras 39-212 et seq.
- 814.  When the Mortgage Credit Directive (see above, para.39-003) is implemented on March 21, 2016, this exemption will not apply to so-called “residential renovation agreements” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1)); see amendment to s.77B in SI 2015/910 art.3 and Sch.1 para.2(8). The Mortgage Credit Directive (and hence the relevant amendment) came into force on March 21, 2016.
- 815.  See CCA 1974 s.77B(9). Note CCA 1974 s.77B(10): in relation to the business exemption, RAO art.60(3)–(7), above, para.39-046, apply.
- 816. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.10(1)(b), 189(1); above, para.39-026.
- 817. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1); above, para.39-049. See CCA 1974 s.86B(12)(b).
- 818. CCA 1974 s.17, above, para.39-048. See CCA 1974 s.86B(12)(b).
- 819. The obligation also arises in relation to regulated hire agreements.

- 820. Added by the Consumer Credit Act 2006 s.9 and coming into force on October 1, 2008 (see SI 2007/3300) but see the transitional provisions in the 2006 Act Sch.3 para.6. Section 86B was amended by SI 2008/2826 and to provide for “green deal plans” (see CCA 1974 s.189B) by the Energy Act 2011 and SI 2014/436.
- 821. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1) (as amended by SI 2004/3236. Article 2(2)) to mean “deliver or send by appropriate method”.
- 822. CCA 1974 s.86B(8) and see the Consumer Credit (Information Requirements and Duration of Licences and Charges) Regulations 2007 (SI 2007/1167) regs 19-23 and Sch.3, as amended by SI 2008/1751. See also CCA 1974 s.86E(3) (if a “default sum” (see CCA 1974 s.187A and below, para.39-135) is payable, the notice may incorporate the notice of default sum required by s.86E) and CCA 1974 s.130A(5) (if post-judgment interest is payable, the notice may incorporate the notice required under s.130A(5)). Section 172 (statements binding, below, para.39-143) does not apply to s.86B notices.
- 823. Or lesser interval, CCA 1974 s.86B(9).
- 824. CCA 1974 s.86B(1), (2)(a).
- 825. CCA 1974 s.86B(2)(b), (4). However a first NOSIA must always be sent, even if the debtor ceases to be in arrears before it is issued: s.86B(3).
- 826. CCA 1974 s.86B(7). cf. statements under CCA 1974 ss.77, 78, 79.
- 827. CCA 1974 s.86B(6).
- 828. CCA 1974 s.86A(1), (2) (added by the Consumer Credit Act 2006 s.8) requires the FCA (previously the OFT) to prepare and publish such a sheet. It is available on the FCA website.
- 829. CCA 1974 s.129(1)(ba), see below, para.39-202 n.1238.
- 830. CCA 1974 s.86D(1), (3) (added by the Consumer Credit Act 2006 s.11).
- 831. CCA 1974 s.86D(4) (added by the Consumer Credit Act 2006 s.11). For “default sums”, see below, para.39-135.
- 832. It was amended by SI 2006/1508 and to provide for “green deal plans” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see below, para.39-257) by the Energy Act 2011. See (i) McGuffick v Royal Bank of Scotland Plc [2009] EWHC 2386 (Comm), [2010] C.C.L.R. 2, above, para.39-128 n.798 (on the similar provision in CCA 1974 s.77) (ii) Carey v HSBC Bank Plc [2009] EWHC 3417 (QB) and Phoenix Recoveries (UK) Ltd v Kotechia [2011] EWCA Civ 105 (on the copy requirement under CCA 1974 s.78). See also FCA’s Guidance in its Handbook CONC 13, replacing (in part) the OFT’s Guidance on ss.77, 78 and 79 of the Consumer Credit Act 1974 (OFT 1272 Oct 2010).
- 833. See also SI 1983/1569 (period of 12 working days prescribed for giving of statement on request); SI 1998/997 (fee raised to £1). See also SI 1983/1557, as amended by SI 2004/2619 and SI 2004/3236 (copies).
- 834. See above, para.39-128.
- 835. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.10, 189(1); above, para.39-024.
- 836. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1); above, para.39-049. See CCA 1974 s.78(7).
- 837. CCA 1974 s.78(1). But see s.78(2) (modification if creditor possesses insufficient information to comply with (c)) and s.78(3) (exceptions where no sums payable or repeated requests made). See also s.172 (statement binding, below, para.39-143), and SI 1983/1557 reg.7. See also s.86E(3) (if a “default sum” (see s.187A and below, para.39-135) is payable, the statement may incorporate the notice of default sum required by s.86E) and s.130A(5) (if post-judgment interest is payable, the statement may incorporate the notice required under s.130A(5)).

- 838. Prescribed by SI 1983/1569.
- 839. CCA 1974 s.78(6). Originally, if the default continued for one month, an offence was committed (s.78(6)(b)) but this provision was repealed by the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 SI 2008/1277 reg.30(1) and Sch.2 para.20.
- 840. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.10(1)(b), 189(1); above, para.39-024.
- 841. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1); above, para.39-049. See CCA 1974 s.78(7).
- 842. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.17, 189(1); above, para.39-048. See CCA 1974 s.78(7).
- 843. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1) (as amended by SI 2004/3236 art.2(2)) to mean “deliver or send by appropriate method”.
- 844. Although, in contrast to CCA 1974 s.77A(3) (see above, para.39-129) and CCA 1974 s.86B(7) (see above, para.39-131), there is no explicit provision to this effect, it seems that one is likely to be implied.
- 845. See SI 1983/1570. And see s.78(4A) (added by the Consumer Credit Act 2006 s.7) which provides for regulations (see SI 2007/1167, as amended) requiring the statement to include prescribed information about the consequences of failing to make payments or of making minimum payments. Section 172 (statements binding, below, para.39-143) does not apply to periodic statements under s.78(4) but they may be binding at common law (see United Overseas Bank v Jiwani [1976] 1 W.L.R. 694). See also s.86E(3) (if a “default sum” (see s.187A and below, para.39-135) is payable, the statement may incorporate the notice of default sum required by s.86E) and s.130A(5) (if postjudgment interest is payable, the statement may incorporate the notice required under s.130A(5)).
- 846. s.78(4)(b).
- 847. See above, para.39-129.
- 848. s.78(4)(a). But see s.185(2)-(2D) (as substituted (from October 1, 2008) by the Consumer Credit Act 2006 s.7(3) (joint debtors)).
- 849. However, breach (in common with all breaches of the CCA 1974) is a “domestic infringement” capable of being enforced under the Enterprise Act 2002 Pt 8. Moreover, it could give rise to disciplinary action by the FCA (see above, para.39-063) and possibly render the agreement an “unfair relationship” within CCA 1974 ss.140A-140C, see below, paras 39-212 et seq.
- 850. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.10(1)(a), 189(1); above, para.39-024.
- 851. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1); above, para.39-049. See CCA 1974 s.86C(7)(b).
- 852. CCA 1974 s.17, above, para.39-048. See CCA 1974 s.86C(7)(b).
- 853. Added to the CCA 1974 by the Consumer Credit Act 2006 s.10 and coming into force on October 1, 2008 (see SI 2007/3300) but see the transitional provisions in the 2006 Act Sch.3 para.7. Section 86C was amended by SI 2008/2826.
- 854. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1) (as amended by SI 2004/3236 art.2(2)) to mean “deliver or send by appropriate method”.
- 855. CCA 1974 s.86C(6) and see the Consumer Credit (Information Requirements and Duration of Licences and Charges) Regulations 2007 (SI 2007/1167) regs 24-26 and Sch.3. See also s.86E(3) (if a “default sum” (see s.187A and below, para.39-135) is payable, the notice may incorporate the notice of default sum required by s.86E) and s.130A(5) (if post-judgment interest is payable, the notice may incorporate the notice required under s.130A(5)). Section 172 (statements binding, below, para.39-143) does not apply to s.86C notices.

- 856. CCA 1974 s.86C(1), (2).
- 857. See above, para.39-133.
- 858. CCA 1974 s.86C(4).
- 859. CCA 1974 s.86C(5). cf. statements under ss.77, 78, 79.
- 860. CCA 1974 s.86C(3).
- 861. CCA 1974 s.86A(1), (2) (added by the Consumer Credit Act 2006 s.8) requires the FCA to prepare and publish by General Notice such a sheet. It is available on the FCA website.
- 862. CCA 1974 s.129(1)(ba), see below, para.39-202, n.1238.
- 863. CCA 1974 s.86D(2), (3), added by the Consumer Credit Act 2006 s.11.
- 864. CCA 1974 s.86D(4), added by the Consumer Credit Act 2006 s.11. For “default sums”, see below, para.39-135.
- 865. CCA 1974 s.187A, added by the Consumer Credit Act 2006 s.18.
- 866. Added to the CCA 1974 by the Consumer Credit Act 2006 s.12 and coming into force on October 1, 2008 (see SI 2007/3300) but see the transitional provisions in the 2006 Act Sch.3 para.8 (applicable to agreements whenever made but only to default sums payable after October 1, 2008). See also CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in s.86E, references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” (as defined in s.189(1), see below, para.39-257) are to be read as references to the “current bill payer”/“previous bill payer” (as defined in s.189B(6)).
- 867. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1); above, para.39-049. See CCA 1974 s.86C(7)(b).
- 868. CCA 1974 s.17, above, para.39-048. See CCA 1974 s.86C(7)(b).
- 869. The obligation arises in relation to both regulated credit and regulated hire agreements.
- 870. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1) (as amended by SI 2004/3236 art.2(2)) to mean “deliver or send by appropriate method”.
- 871. CCA 1974 s.86E(7)(b) and see the Consumer Credit (Information Requirements and Duration of Licences and Charges) Regulations 2007 (SI 2007/1167) regs 27-32 and Sch.4. See also s.130A(5) (if post-judgment interest is payable, the notice may incorporate the notice required under s.130A(5)). Section 172 (statements binding, below, para.39-143) does not apply to s.86E notices.
- 872. The period prescribed by the Consumer Credit (Information Requirements and Duration of Licences and Charges) Regulations 2007 (SI 2007/1167) reg.28.
- 873. CCA 1974 s.86E(6).
- 874. CCA 1974 s.86E(3). For example, information statements under CCA 1974 ss.77, 77A or 78, NOSIAs under s.86B or 86C, default notices under s.87. But other communications (not given “by virtue of another provision of [the 1974] Act”) cannot incorporate the notice which must therefore be given separately.
- 875. CCA 1974 s.86E(5).
- 876. And only simple interest may be charged on default sums: CCA 1974 s.86F(2).

- 877. As “give” is defined as “deliver or send by appropriate method to” and hence connotes receipt.
- 878. There is no explicit provision as regards the charging of interest where a “late” notice is given after the expiry of the prescribed 35 days (cf. CCA 1974 s.86D(4)(a)) and it may be that such a notice is not a “notice under this section” (in that it is outside the prescribed period) and hence the liability to pay interest in relation to the default sum under s.86E(4) can never arise. (See, in relation to annual statements under s.77A (above, para.39-129) that did not comply with the regulations, JP Morgan Chase Bank, National Association v Northern Rock (Asset Management) Plc [2014] EWHC 291(Ch).) However, the terms of s.86E(5) suggest that a “late” notice is a “notice under this section” and hence interest can be charged 28 days after such a late notice is received.
- 879. See above, para.39-135.
- 880. CCA 1974 s.86F(2). And see s.86E(4), above at para.39-135. See CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in s.86F, references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” (as defined in s.189(1), see below, para.39-257) are to be read as references to the “current bill payer”/“previous bill payer” (as defined in s.189B(6)).
- 881. Under CCA 1974 s.86B (fixed-sum credit and hire), above, para.39-131 or CCA 1974 s.86C (running-account credit), above, para.39-134: see CCA 1974 s.86D(4)(b).
- 882. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.10(1)(b), 189(1); above, para.39-026.
- 883. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.10, 189(1); above, para.39-024.
- 884. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.15, 189(1); above, para.39-035.
- 885. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1); see below, para.39-180.
- 886. Prescribed by SI 1983/1569.
- 887. The fee was raised from 15p to 50p by SI 1983/1571 and to £1 by SI 1998/997.
- 888. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1) (as amended by SI 2004/3236 art.2(2)) to mean “deliver or send by appropriate method”.
- 889. If a different person from the debtor or hirer: see below, para.39-183.
- 890. See above, paras 39-128—39-133 (CCA 1974 ss.77-78).
- 891. CCA 1974 ss.107-109. See also CCA 1974 s.172 (statements binding, below, para.39-143). See CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in s.107 references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” (as defined in s.189(1), see below, para.39-257) are to be read as references to the “improver” (as defined in s.189B(6)).
- 892. CCA 1974 ss.107(1)(a), (b), 109(1)(a), (b). See below, para.39-182, for the definition of “security instrument”. See also SI 1983/1557, as amended by SI 2004/2619 and SI 2004/3236.
- 893. CCA 1974 ss.107(4)(a), 108(4)(a), 109(3)(a). Originally, if the default continued for one month, an offence was committed (ss.107(4)(b), 108(4)(b), 109(3)(b)) but these provisions were repealed by the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1277) reg.30(1) and Sch.2 paras 25-27.
- 894. CCA 1974 ss.107(5), 108(5), 109(4). See CCA 1974 s.189(1) (definition); above, para.39-049.
- 895. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1); see above, para.39-049. See CCA 1974 s.110(2)(a).
- 896. Prescribed by SI 1983/1569.

- 897. The fee was raised from 15p to 50p by SI 1983/1571 and to £1 by SI 1998/997.
- 898. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1) (as amended by SI 2004/3236 art.2(2)) to mean “deliver or send by appropriate method”.
- 899. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.105, 189(1); below, para.39-182.
- 900. CCA 1974 s.110(1) (subject to the exceptions listed in s.110(2)(b), (c)). The Consumer Credit (Agreements) Regulations 1983 SI 1983/1553, as amended (especially by SI 2004/1482) regs 2, 3 and Sch.1 para.21, and Sch.3 para.9, made under ss.60 and 105(9), require any security instrument executed in relation to the agreement before the making thereof to be referred to and so “embodied in” the regulated agreement itself, so that the debtor or hirer will be entitled to a copy under CCA 1974 ss.77 to 79. See the less prescriptive requirements of the Consumer Credit (Agreements) Regulations 2010 (SI 2010/1014) reg.3 and Sch.1. See also CCA 1974 ss.180, 181. See CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in s.110 references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see below, para.39-257) are to be read as references to the “improver” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6)).
- 901. CCA 1974 s.110(3)(a). Originally, if the default continued for one month, an offence was committed (s.110(3)(b)) but this provision was repealed by the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1277) reg.30(1) and Sch.2 para.28.
- 902. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1); above, para.39-049.
- 903. s.80(1). See CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in s.80, references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see below, para.39-257) are to be read as references to the “improver” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6)).
- 904. CCA 1974 ss.80(2), 167 and Sch.1. Although many of the criminal offences imposed by the CCA 1974 for breaches of notice requirements were repealed by the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1277) reg.30(1) and Sch.2, this one (which exceptionally imposes criminal liability on the debtor or hirer) has been retained.
- 905. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.8, 189(1); above, para.39-017.
- 906. Subject to CCA 1974 s.97(2) (repeated request).
- 907. Prescribed by SI 1983/1564 and reduced from 12 days by SI 2004/1483 reg.9.
- 908. The request need not (since February 1, 2011) be in writing unless the agreement is secured on land: s.97(2A), added by SI 2010/1010 (and note the transitional and “opt-in” provisions in regs 100-101).
- 909. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1) (as amended by SI 2004/3236 art.2(2)) to mean “deliver or send by appropriate method”.
- 910. CCA 1974 s.97(1) (as amended by SI 2010/1010 reg.33). The prescribed form and particulars are set out in the Consumer Credit (Settlement Information) Regulations 1983 (SI 1983/1564, as amended by SI 2004/1483 and SI 2004/3236). The settlement figure has to take account of the contractual or statutory rebate on early settlement: see s.95 (below, para.39-158) and SI 2004/1483, as amended by SI 2004/2619; Home Insulation v Wadsley [1988] 10 C.L.Y. 419. See also s.172 (statements binding, below, para.39-143); and Lombard North Central Plc v Stobart, The Times, March 2, 1990 CA (estoppel of creditor at common law). See NRAM Plc v McAdam & Hartley [2015] EWCA Civ 751, reversing [2014] EWHC 4174 (Comm): (obiter) s.97 does not apply to nonregulated agreements that are documented as regulated agreements. See also CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in s.97, references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see para.39-257) are to be read as references to the “improver”/“current bill payer” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6)). There is a similar obligation under CCA s.97A to provide a settlement figure after part-payment (see especially s.97A(2)(h), below, para.39-160).

- 911. CCA 1974 s.97(3)(a). Section 97(3)(b): (offence was committed after one month) repealed by the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1277) reg.30(1) and Sch.2 para.23.
- 912. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1); above, para.39-049. See CCA 1974 s.103(4).
- 913. Prescribed by SI 1983/1569.
- 914. CCA 1974 s.103(1). No doubt he would assert that the person serving the notice is not indebted to him under the agreement if he could not trace the agreement or no longer had any record of it. See also CCA 1974 s.172(2) (statements binding, below, para.39-143).
- 915. CCA 1974 s.103(2).
- 916. CCA 1974 s.103(6), added by the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1277) reg.30(1) and Sch.2 para.24(b). Section 103(5) (offence committed after one month): repealed by SI 2008/1277 reg.30(1) and Sch.2 para.24(a).
- 917. CCA 1974 s.103(3). And note that CCA 1974 s.185 (as amended (from October 1, 2008) by the Consumer Credit Act 2006 s.7(3) (copies to joint debtors/hirers)) does not apply as there is no actual or prospective regulated agreement. See CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in s.103 references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see below, para.39-257) are to be read as references to the “improver” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6)).
- 918. But not the automatic periodic statements required by CCA 1974 s.77A (fixed-sum agreement), see above, para.39-120 or s.78(4) (running-account agreement), see above, para.39-133.
- 919. Above, paras 39-128, 39-132. Note that s.172 does not apply to statements given under CCA 1974 s.77A, 77B or 78(4) nor to notices under s.86B, 86C or 86E.
- 920. Above, para.39-137.
- 921. Above, para.39-141.
- 922. Above, para.39-142.
- 923. s.172(2).
- 924. s.172(3).
- 925. See Kelly v Solari (1841) 9 M. & W. 54; Vol.I, para.29-039.
- 926. See, e.g. Skyring v Greenwood (1825) 4 B. & C. 281; Baylis v Bishop of London [1913] 1 Ch. 127; Holt v Markham [1923] 1 K.B. 504; Larner v LCC [1949] 2 K.B. 683; Lloyds Bank Ltd v Brooks (1950) 6 Legal Decisions Affecting Bankers 161; United Overseas Bank v Jiwani [1976] 1 W.L.R. 964; Avon CC v Howlett [1983] 1 W.L.R. 605; Lombard North Central Plc v Stobart, The Times, March 2, 1990 CA; Vol.I, paras 29-186—29-195.
- 927. SI 2009/209, in force November 1, 2009. See generally, above, paras 34-223 et seq.
- 928. See especially: regs 37-39 (“single payment services contracts”), regs 41-46 (“framework contracts”), reg.44 (charges), regs 58-59 (payment).
- 929. See SI 2009/209 reg.34 (disapplying regs 41-43 and modifying reg.45) and reg.52 (disapplying reg.58(1)(b) and (to some extent) reg.59).

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 39 - Credit and Security
Section 1. - The Regulation of Consumer Credit ¹
(h) - Variation of Agreements ⁹³⁰

Variation and termination

39-145

The parties to a regulated credit or hire agreement are generally ⁹³¹ free to terminate that agreement by mutual consent and to substitute a new agreement therefor. ⁹³² No particular form is required to effect a termination; but the new agreement must then comply in all respects with the provisions of the 1974 Act and regulations made thereunder applicable to original agreements. ⁹³³ The parties to a consumer credit or consumer hire agreement are likewise free to vary the agreement by mutual consent. ⁹³⁴ Section 82 ⁹³⁵ of the Act, however, contains special provisions relating to the variation of agreements. ⁹³⁶ In principle, the question whether an agreement has merely been varied or whether it has been terminated and a new agreement substituted, depends upon the intention of the parties in each particular case. ⁹³⁷ But, in view of s.82(2), it seems probable that an agreement which “varies or supplements an earlier agreement” will not be construed as a termination and substitution unless such is manifestly the intention of the parties. ⁹³⁸

Unilateral variation under a power in agreement: the general rule ⁹³⁹

39-146

⚠ If the creditor or owner varies a regulated agreement under a power contained in the agreement, by virtue of s.82(1) the variation generally does not take effect before notice of it is given to the debtor or hirer in the prescribed ⁹⁴⁰ form. However, largely as a result of the implementation of the Consumer Credit Directive, ⁹⁴¹ there are some special provisions in relation to the variation of interest rates. ⁹⁴² The general rule requires notice to be served before the variation takes effect, but in certain circumstances notice of a variation in the interest rate (when the special “Directive” provisions do not apply) may be given by public announcement in the press. ⁹⁴³ A typical example where notice is required is where an owner varies the rentals payable under a leasing agreement, in pursuance of a provision in the agreement entitling him so to do. But a provision in the agreement for the automatic adjustment of rentals in the event of tax changes, will not attract the requirement of notice. ⁹⁴⁴ A term in a credit or hire agreement that enables the creditor or owner to alter unilaterally the terms of the agreement or any characteristic of the product or service to be provided may, in certain circumstances, not be binding on the debtor or hirer if challenged under the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999. ⁹⁴⁵ ⚠

Unilateral variation of interest rate under a power in agreement

39-147

Originally, unilateral variations in interest rate were covered by the general rule in s.82(1). ⁹⁴⁶ The implementation of the Consumer Credit Directive ⁹⁴⁷ has resulted in the addition of a new s.78A, ⁹⁴⁸ which generally imposes more onerous conditions when the interest rate is varied, although s.82(1) continues to apply to agreements secured on land (which are outside the Directive ⁹⁴⁹) unless the agreement secured on land is an overdraft and the rate is reduced. ⁹⁵⁰ Section 78A generally requires certain information to be given in writing before a change in interest rate under a regulated credit agreement can take effect. The information (set out in s.78A(3)) comprises: (a) the variation, (b) the new repayment amounts (if changed), and (c) if the number or frequency of payments is to change, the new number or frequency. However, there are some qualifications to this general obligation. First, ⁹⁵¹ the obligation does not arise (and hence the rate may be varied without more) where, essentially, the rate varies according to a publicly available reference rate (with information about the reference rate being available on the creditor's premises) and the creditor is contractually obliged to inform the debtor in writing periodically of the information set out in s.78A(3). Second, ⁹⁵² in the case of overdrafts, the obligation only arises if the rate of interest increases and it is only an obligation to inform of the variation (and not the other matters in relation to changes in payments). Third, ⁹⁵³ the obligation does not apply to two categories of agreement (so-called "excluded agreements"): (a) so-called overdraft "overrunning" (a debtor-creditor agreement arising where the a current account holder overdraws on the account without a pre-arranged overdraft or exceeds a pre-arranged overdraft limit) ⁹⁵⁴; or (b) agreements secured on land (as these are outside the Directive and governed by s.82(1)).

Mutual variation by subsequent agreement: "modifying agreement"

39-148

Section 82(2) deals with the situation where an agreement (a "modifying agreement") "varies or supplements" an earlier agreement. ⁹⁵⁵ A modifying agreement will arise, for example, where a further advance is made under an existing fixed-sum loan agreement ⁹⁵⁶; where additional goods are agreed to be let together with those already let under an existing hire-purchase agreement (an "add-on" agreement); where part of the goods comprised in an existing agreement are released from that agreement, or other goods substituted therefor; where a fixed-term hire agreement is extended by agreement for a further term; and where the security provided in respect of an existing agreement is augmented, changed or released, or where security is now provided for an existing unsecured agreement. The effect of a modifying agreement is:

- (i) to revoke the earlier agreement; and
- (ii) to reproduce the combined effect of the two agreements, so that (inter alia) obligations outstanding in relation to the earlier agreement are treated as outstanding instead in relation to the modifying agreement. ⁹⁵⁷

However, so that the effect of s.82(2) does not result in overlap between the two regulatory regimes presently applicable to mortgages (the one now operated by the FCA under the 1974 Act and the other by the FCA under the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000), ⁹⁵⁸ it does not apply ⁹⁵⁹ if the earlier agreement or the modifying agreement is an FCA-regulated exempt agreement under RAO art.60C(2). ⁹⁶⁰ Similarly, s.82(2) does not apply if the earlier agreement or the modifying agreement is an exempt agreement under RAO art.60D. ⁹⁶¹ Moreover, when the statutory right to part settle a regulated credit agreement was introduced as a result of the Consumer Credit Directive, ⁹⁶² s.82(2) was disappplied to any consequent variations of the agreement. ⁹⁶³

39-149

If the earlier agreement is a regulated agreement, but the modifying agreement is not, then the modifying agreement is treated as a regulated agreement, unless the modifying agreement is for running-account credit ⁹⁶⁴ or is an exempt agreement regulated under the Financial Services and

Markets Act 2000 or an exempt agreement under RAO art.60D.⁹⁶⁵ Thus if the earlier agreement was a loan of £20,000 for a business purposes but that agreement is varied or supplemented by a further advance so that the balance payable is now fixed-sum credit of £30,000, the agreement is still a regulated agreement.⁹⁶⁶ If the earlier agreement was not a regulated agreement, but the effect of the variation is such as to make the modifying agreement a regulated agreement, the modifying agreement will be a regulated agreement for the purposes of the Act.⁹⁶⁷ For example, if the earlier agreement was for a loan of £26,000 for a business purpose (and so not a regulated credit agreement⁹⁶⁸), but the outstanding balance under that agreement has been reduced to £18,000 and there is a further advance of £5,000, so that the balance payable is now £23,000, the modifying agreement (comprising as it does the combined effect of the earlier agreement and the variation) is a regulated agreement. On the other hand, in this example, if the amount of the further advance exceeded £7,000, so that the total balance now payable under the modifying agreement is in excess of £25,000, the modifying agreement is not regulated.⁹⁶⁹

39-150

A variation may convert one type of agreement mentioned in the 1974 Act into another type of agreement. For example, the taking of a land mortgage as security for a previously unsecured loan agreement will mean that the modifying agreement attracts the “special pause” provisions in ss.58 and 61(2) and (3) of the Act⁹⁷⁰ even though the earlier agreement did not do so. And an exempt agreement⁹⁷¹ may become a regulated agreement by reason of the fact that the agreement, as varied, no longer falls within the exemption.⁹⁷²

Cancellation of modifying agreement

39-151

If the earlier agreement is an agreement to which the s.66A “right of withdrawal”⁹⁷³ applies or is a “cancellable” agreement⁹⁷⁴ and the modifying agreement is made within the period allowed for withdrawal from or cancellation of the earlier agreement, then whether or not the modifying agreement is itself subject to the right of withdrawal or is itself a cancellable agreement, it can be withdrawn from or cancelled within that period,⁹⁷⁵ unless the modifying agreement is an exempt agreement under RAO art.60C(2) or RAO art.60D.⁹⁷⁶ Otherwise the modifying agreement cannot be withdrawn from or cancelled.⁹⁷⁷

Mere indulgence

39-152

It would appear that the word “varies” should be construed in its technical and legal sense, that is to say, an alteration, as a matter of contract, of contractual obligations by mutual agreement of the parties.⁹⁷⁸ A mere indulgence by the creditor or owner in allowing the debtor or hirer further time to pay, even at his request, would not constitute a modifying agreement, but take effect as a waiver or equitable forbearance.⁹⁷⁹ And if, for example, a creditor, on request, agrees to take payment by instalments,⁹⁸⁰ or to reduce the amount of the instalments payable, or to extend the repayment period, or to grant to the debtor a payment “holiday”, this will ordinarily not amount to a variation if the amount payable by the debtor under the agreement remains unchanged, i.e. there is no additional credit charge.⁹⁸¹ On the other hand, there will undoubtedly be situations where, for example, by mutual agreement, accumulated arrears and future instalments are to be discharged in accordance with a new rescheduled payment pattern. In such a case, it seems probable that this will vary the earlier agreement and so give rise to a modifying agreement.

Form, etc. of modifying agreement

39-153

A modifying agreement that is a regulated agreement must, as a general rule, comply with all the provisions of Pt V of the 1974 Act, including the special provisions applicable to modifying agreements contained in the Consumer Credit (Agreements) Regulations.⁹⁸² Moreover, the other provisions applicable, e.g. to the supply of copies,⁹⁸³ must also be observed. However, if the earlier agreement is a regulated agreement for running account credit,⁹⁸⁴ and by the modifying agreement the creditor allows the credit limit to be exceeded but intends the excess to be merely temporary, e.g. a temporary excess drawing on a bank overdraft, Pt V of the 1974 Act (except s.56) does not apply to the modifying agreement.⁹⁸⁵

Protected goods

39-154

Where an agreement varies or supplements a regulated hire-purchase or conditional sale agreement, provision is made in s.90 of the 1974 Act to safeguard the position of the debtor in relation to so-called “protected goods”.⁹⁸⁶

Unilateral or consensual variation?

39-155

It is not always easy to draw the line between s.82(1) (variation under a power in the agreement)⁹⁸⁷ and s.82(2) (where a subsequent “agreement” varies or supplements the agreement).⁹⁸⁸ In particular, it is unclear if s.82(1) applies in all cases where a creditor or owner reserves a contractual power to vary, even though the power can only be (or is in fact) exercised at the request or with the consent of the debtor or hirer, or whether it only applies where the creditor or owner has a unilateral power of variation so that any requisite request or consent of the debtor or hirer inevitably gives rise to an “agreement” that engages s.82(2) (and the onerous requirements applicable to “modifying agreements”⁹⁸⁹). It may be that much will depend on the appropriateness of imposing the more onerous requirements when s.82(2) applies.

^{1.} See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf); Goode, Consumer Credit: Law and Practice (looseleaf); Goode, Consumer Credit Law (1989); Harding, Consumer Credit and Consumer Hire (1995); Philpott, The Law of Consumer Credit and Hire (2009).

^{930.} See generally, Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf), para.2-083; and Goode, Consumer Credit: Law and Practice, Pt C, Ch.35.

^{931.} But see CCA 1974 s.98A (added from February 1, 2011 by SI 2010/1010 reg.38, in implementation of the Consumer Credit Directive (see para.39-011)), below, para.39-173, which makes special provision for the termination of “open-ended” (i.e. of indefinite duration: see s.189(1)) consumer credit agreements, other than overdrafts and agreements secured on land.

^{932.} See Vol.I, paras 22-025 et seq.

^{933.} See above, paras 39-080 et seq.

^{934.} See Vol.I, paras 22-032 et seq. But variation may discharge a guarantor: see below, para.45-104.

^{935.} As amended by the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (Consequential Amendments) Orders 2005 (SI 2005/2967) and 2008 (SI 2008/733). These amendments sought to ensure that a variation under s.82(2) (see below) does not result in dual regulation of a varied mortgage under both the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 and the Consumer Credit Act 1974. See also the amendment made by SI 2008/2826 in relation to agreements exempt under RAO art.60D (previously CCA 1974 s.16C), above para.39-040. Further amendments were effected in consequence of the Consumer Credit Directive (see above, para.39-011): see SI 2010/1010 regs 15, 28 and 29 (addition of new subss.(6A)-(6B), (1A)-(1E) and (2B), respectively). For amendments consequent on the transfer of regulation to the FCA (see above, para.39-002), see SI 2013/1881 art.20(3). See also CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in s.82, references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see below, para.39-257) are to be read as references to the “improver”/“current bill payer”/“previous bill payer” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6)).

936. But CCA 1974 s.82 (see s.82(7)) does not apply to non-commercial agreements (defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1); above, para.39-049). For regulations made: see SI 1977/328 (as amended by SI 1979/661; SI 1979/667; SI 2010/1010).

937. Morris v Baron & Co [1918] A.C. 1, 26; United Dominions Corp (Jamaica) Ltd v Shoucair [1969] 1 A.C. 340. See Vol.I, para.22-034.

938. For CCA 1974 s.82(2), see below, paras 39-148 et seq.

939. The more complex notice provisions imposed by the Payment Services Regulations 2009 (SI 2009/209) reg.42 in relation to agreements within their scope (as to which, see generally, above, paras 34-223 et seq.), have been disapplied in relation to CCA 1974-regulated agreements: see SI 2009/209 reg.34(a).

940. i.e. prescribed by regulation: see SI 1977/328 (as amended by SI 1979/661; SI 1979/667; SI 2010/1010).

941. See above, para.39-011.

942. See CCA 1974 s.82(1A)-(1D) s.78A and below, para.39-147. Section 82(1) also does not apply (see s.82(1E)) to a so-called current account “overrunning”: see the special provisions in the FCA Handbook CONC 4.7 and CONC 6.3.3 and 6.3.4 (previously CCA 1974 ss.74A and 74B), above, para.39-127.

943. See SI 1977/328 (as amended by SI 1979/661; SI 1979/667; SI 2010/1010).

944. Moreover, if the owner reserves the right to determine whether or not to pass on VAT changes (by virtue of the VAT Act 1994 s.89, changes in VAT are automatically incorporated in the consideration unless the agreement provides otherwise) the notice requirement is relaxed should the owner decide to pass on the VAT change.

945.  SI 1999/2083 Sch.1 para.1(j) and (k) and para.2(b), see further, above, paras 38-202 et seq., especially paras 38-286 et seq. It is submitted that a term which complies with SI 1977/328 (see n.942, above) is not for that reason exempted from the 1999 Regulations by reg.4(2)(a). See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf), para.2-083; and above, paras 38-214 et seq. and below, para.39-293. As noted above at para.39-201, these regulations are replaced, for contracts made on or after October 1, 2015, by provisions in the Consumer Rights Act 2015 Pt 2.

946. See above, para.39-146 and Lombard Tricity Finance Ltd v Paton [1989] 1 All E.R. 918; Paragon Finance Plc v Nash [2001] EWCA Civ 1466.

947. See above, para.39-011.

948. With effect from February 1, 2011, by SI 2010/1010 reg.27. See CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in s.78A, references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see below, para.39-257) are to be read as references to the “improver”/“current bill payer” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6)).

949. See CCA 1974 s.78A(6)(b). Note also that whilst s.82 does not apply to “non-commercial agreements” (see s.82(7)); for non-commercial agreements see above, para.39-049), s.78A does.

- 950. See CCA 1974 s.82(1B), (1D). There are no special provisions for such reductions (and compare the similar provision in relation to other overdrafts in CCA 1974 s.78A(4), below). Similarly, s.82(1) does not apply to the reduction of charges for overdrafts: 82(1C), (1D).
- 951. See CCA 1974 s.78A(2).
- 952. See CCA 1974 s.78A(4).
- 953. See CCA 1974 s.78A(6).
- 954. Because the special provisions in the FCA Handbook CONC 4.7 and CONC 6.3.3 and 6.3.4 (previously CCA 1974 ss.74A and 74B), see above, para.39-127, apply in such a case.
- 955. See SI 2008/831 art.4: the removal of the financial limit by the Consumer Credit Act 2006 s.2(1) (see above, para.39-005 n.16) has no effect for the purposes of the application of s.82(2) where no fresh credit in the form of a “cash loan” is provided or where an exempt agreement varies or supplements an existing agreement. The former provision sought to ensure that the removal of the financial limit did not have the unintended consequence of bringing agreements that were originally exempt from regulation, into regulation as a result of a variation that did not increase the cash available. See Santander UK Plc v Harrison [2013] EWHC 199 (QB), [2013] C.C.L.R. 4 (noted above at para.39-019 n.94): art.4 inapplicable as, although new “credit” was provided, it was not in the form of a “cash loan”.
- 956. But see Swift Advances Plc v McKay [2013] NI Ch 3: subsequent extensions of credit held not to be modifying agreements varying or supplementing the original regulated agreement but new freestanding separate agreements.
- 957. CCA 1974 s.82(2). See also CCA 1974 Sch.2 Pt II Example 24.
- 958. See further below, para.39-529.
- 959. CCA 1974 s.82(2A), added by SI 2005/2967 and amended by SI 2008/733. See also the new CCA 1974 s.82(3)(b) added by SI 2005/2967, noted below at para.39-149 and SI 2008/831 art.4 (variation of agreements above the financial limit made before it was removed), n.957, above.
- 960. Previously, CCA 1974 s.16(6C); see above, para.39-039.
- 961. Previously, CCA 1974 s.16C; see above, para.39-040. This is provided for in s.82(2A), as amended by SI 2008/2826.
- 962. By amendment to CCA 1974 s.94 (see below, para.39-157).
- 963. CCA 1974 s.82(2B), added by SI 2010/1010 reg.29.
- 964. Defined in ss.10, 189(1); above, para.39-024. See also s.82(4): if by the modifying agreement the creditor allows the credit limit to be exceeded merely temporarily, Pt V of the Act (i.e. ss.55-74 dealing with the formalities etc. of entering into the agreement), apart from s.56, does not apply to the modifying agreement.
- 965. Previously, CCA 1974 s.16C, see above, para.39-040. This is provided for in s.82(3), as amended by SI 2005/2967 to add the reference to agreements that are exempt by virtue of s.16(6C) (as to which, see above, para.39-039) and by SI 2008/2826 to add the reference to s.16C agreements (as to which, see above, para.39-040). Hence again (see s.82(2A) and above, para.39-148) by virtue of the first amendment, potential overlap between the two regulatory regimes for mortgages is avoided. See also, SI 2008/831 art.4 (variation of agreements above the financial limit made before it was removed), n.957, above. On the transfer of consumer credit regulation to the FCA (see above, para.39-002), further amendments were made by the SI 2013/1881 art.20(31) so as to (essentially) substitute (i) RAO art.60C(2) for s.16(6C) and (ii) RAO art.60D for s.16C.

- 966. And not exempted under RAO art.60C(3)-(7) (previously CCA 1974 s.16B) despite providing credit in excess of the financial limit in that article, see above, para.39-046.
- 967. Unless the earlier or modifying agreement is an exempt agreement under RAO art.60C(2) (previously CCA 1974 s.16(6C), i.e. regulated by the FCA under the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000) or an exempt agreement under RAO art.60D (previously CCA 1974 s.16C): see s.82(2A) noted above at para.39-148.
- 968. Being exempted under RAO art.60C(3)-(7) (previously CCA 1974 s.16B), see above, para.39-046.
- 969. This is supported (indirectly) by CCA 1974 Sch.2 Pt II Example 24. For the calculation of the amount of credit under a modifying agreement, see SI 1983/1553 reg.7 (amended by SI 2004/1482 reg.9, SI 2004/2619), and Sch.8 Pt I para.5 (as amended by SI 2004/1482).
- 970. See below, para.39-535.
- 971. See above, paras 39-038 et seq., unless exempt under (i) RAO art.60C(2) (see CCA 1974 s.82(2A), added by SI 2005/2967 and amended by SI 2008/733 and SI 2013/1881, to ensure that the two regulatory regimes remain mutually exclusive (see above, para.39-148)) or (ii) RAO art.60D (see s.82(2A), as amended by SI 2008/2826 and SI 2013/1881 art.20(31)).
- 972. Bersey v Evans [2001] C.L.Y. 886 Cty Ct.
- 973. See above, para.39-101.
- 974. i.e. cancellable under CCA 1974 s.67; above, para.39-102 (see the definition of “cancellable agreement” in CCA 1974 s.189(1)).
- 975. CCA 1974 s.82(5), (6A). But see s.82(4): if by the modifying agreement the creditor under an earlier regulated agreement for running-account allows the credit limit to be exceeded merely temporarily, Pt V of the CCA 1974 (which includes CCA 1974 ss.66A and 67) does not apply to the modifying agreement and hence in such a case it will not be subject to the right of withdrawal or cancellation.
- 976. s.82(5A), added by SI 2005/2967 and amended (to add the references first to ss.16(6C) and 16C, and then to RAO arts 60C(2) and 60D) by SI 2008/2826 and 2013/1881 art.20(31). For exemption under RAO art.60C(2) see above, para.39-039 and for exemption under RAO art.60D see above, para.39-040.
- 977. CCA 1974 s.82(6), (6B).
- 978. See Vol.I, para.22-032.
- 979. See Vol.I, paras 22-040 et seq.; Broadwick Financial Services Ltd v Spencer [2002] EWCA Civ 35, [2002] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 46 (“concession letter” did not contractually vary the repayment terms).
- 980. Re Selectmove Ltd [1995] 1 W.L.R. 474.
- 981. If interest is charged under the agreement at a fixed or variable rate on the balance outstanding, it is submitted that there will be no modifying agreement if the rate is not increased, even though an extension of the period of the loan will result in the debtor paying more interest (in total) in £p terms.
- 982. Either SI 2010/1014 reg.5 or SI 1983/1553 reg.7 and Sch.8 (as amended by SIs 2004/1482, 2004/2619, 2004/3236); see above, paras 39-082 and 39-081, respectively.

- 983. SI 1983/1557 (as amended by SIs 1984/1108, 1985/666, 1989/591, 2004/2619, 2004/3236); see above, para.39-086.
- 984. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.10, 189(1); above, para.39-024.
- 985. CCA 1974 s.82(4). See also CCA 1974 ss.10(2), 18(5) Sch.2 Pt I Examples 22, 23.
- 986. See below, para.39-361.
- 987. See above, paras 39-146 et seq.
- 988. See above, paras 39-148 et seq.
- 989. See above, para.39-153.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 39 - Credit and Security
Section 1. - The Regulation of Consumer Credit ¹
(i) - Appropriation of Payments and Early Settlement ⁹⁹⁰

Appropriation of payments

39-156

Where a debtor or hirer is liable to make payments in respect of two or more regulated agreements, and makes a payment in respect of them which is not sufficient to discharge the total amount then due under all the agreements, he may appropriate the payment in or towards satisfaction of the sum due under any one of the agreements or under any two or more of them in such proportions as he thinks fit. ⁹⁹¹ If he fails to appropriate, the ordinary rule of appropriation by a creditor in principle applies. ⁹⁹² But, in case of such failure to appropriate, where one or more of the agreements is a hire-purchase or conditional sale agreement, a consumer hire agreement, or an agreement in relation to which any security ⁹⁹³ is provided, the payment must be appropriated towards the satisfaction of the sums due under the several agreements respectively in the proportions which those sums bear to one another.

Early settlement

39-157

The debtor under a regulated consumer credit agreement enjoys an indefeasible ⁹⁹⁴ right at any time, by notice ⁹⁹⁵ to the creditor and the payment to the creditor of all amounts payable by the debtor to him under the agreement, ⁹⁹⁶ to discharge the debtor's indebtedness under the agreement. ⁹⁹⁷ In consequence of the implementation of the Consumer Credit Directive, ⁹⁹⁸ debtors (other than those with agreements secured on land as these are outside the scope of the Directive) now also enjoy an indefeasible right at any time by notice ⁹⁹⁹ to the creditor, to settle the outstanding amount in part by part-payment before the end of the period of 28 days beginning with the day following that on which notice was received by the creditor or such later date as the debtor specifies in the notice. ¹⁰⁰⁰

Rebate on early settlement, etc

39-158

The Treasury is empowered by s.95 of the 1974 Act to make regulations for the allowance of a rebate of charges for credit to the debtor under a regulated consumer credit agreement where on the exercise of his right of early settlement, ¹⁰⁰¹ on refinancing, on breach of the agreement, ¹⁰⁰² or for any other reason, his indebtedness is discharged in whole or in part or becomes payable before the time fixed by the agreement, ¹⁰⁰³ or any sum becomes payable by him before the time so fixed. ¹⁰⁰⁴ Pursuant to this power, ¹⁰⁰⁵ the Consumer Credit (Early Settlement) Regulations 2004 ¹⁰⁰⁶ have been made, replacing earlier Regulations. ¹⁰⁰⁷ Subject to certain exceptions, ¹⁰⁰⁸ an entitlement to rebate arises in the situations referred to in s.95. ¹⁰⁰⁹ The terms of the regulations, however, have the effect that a rebate need only be allowed when the debtor actually pays any sum. ¹⁰¹⁰

39-159

The rebate is, of course, a rebate of charges only. Under the old Regulations, ¹⁰¹¹ the appropriate formula for calculation of the rebate was a pro rata rule for fixed-sum credit agreements where the credit was repayable in a single lump sum ¹⁰¹² and the “rule of 78” for agreements where the credit was repayable by instalments. ¹⁰¹³ However, the 2004 Regulations ¹⁰¹⁴ provide for an actuarial formula for calculating the rebate. ¹⁰¹⁵ In order to compensate the creditor for his setting-up costs and other costs involved in early settlement, the regulations permit the settlement date ¹⁰¹⁶ to be deferred by one month for agreements with a term of more than one year thus making the rebate less than it would have been had that date not been deferred. ¹⁰¹⁷

Compensatory amount

39-160

In consequence of the implementation of the Consumer Credit Directive, ¹⁰¹⁸ a new s.95A was added ¹⁰¹⁹ enabling the creditor, in certain circumstances, to claim compensation that is “fair”, “objectively justifiable” and limited in amount, for costs incurred as a result of early repayment of credit (in whole or in part). The circumstances in which this right arises are: (i) that repayment is made during a period where the interest rate is fixed and (ii) the amount of repayment exceeds £8,000 (as long as it is not paid out of the proceeds of payment protection insurance). The right is not available in two categories of agreement: (i) those secured on land (as they are outside the scope of the Directive), and (ii) overdrafts. A new s.95B was added by the Energy Act 2011 ¹⁰²⁰ as part of the “Green Deal” introduced by that Act. ¹⁰²¹ The new section makes alternative (to s.95A) provision enabling the creditor to claim compensation should the debtor discharge his indebtedness under a “green deal plan” early. ¹⁰²²

Hire

39-161

The right of early repayment in s.94 is inapplicable to hire agreements. ¹⁰²³

Calculation of rebate: linked transactions

39-162

Subject to certain exceptions, ¹⁰²⁴ the rebate is to be calculated by reference to all sums paid or payable by the debtor or a relative ¹⁰²⁵ of his under or in connection with the agreement (whether to the creditor or any other person) and included in the total charge for credit. ¹⁰²⁶ Sums paid or payable under linked transactions ¹⁰²⁷ may therefore be included. ¹⁰²⁸

Effect on linked transactions

39-163

Where for any reason the indebtedness of the debtor under a regulated consumer credit agreement is discharged before the time fixed by the agreement, he and any relative ¹⁰²⁹ of his is at the same time discharged from any liability under a linked transaction, ¹⁰³⁰ other than a debt which has already become payable. ¹⁰³¹

¹ See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf); Goode, Consumer Credit: Law and Practice (looseleaf); Goode, Consumer Credit Law (1989); Harding, Consumer Credit and Consumer Hire (1995); Philpott, The Law of Consumer Credit and Hire (2009).

- 990. See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf), paras 2-082, 2-095—2-098; and Goode, Consumer Credit: Law and Practice, Pt C, Ch.36.
- 991. FCA Handbook CONC 6.4.2R (previously CCA 1974 s.81(1)). But he cannot appropriate so as to place one agreement in credit while leaving another in debit. This provision only applies if there is more than one regulated agreement. If there is only one agreement and there has been no appropriation of payments by the debtor or creditor, in the case of a current account the presumption in Clayton's case (1816) 1 Mer. 572, 608, will apply so that payments discharge the oldest debts first. However, in West Bromwich Building Society's Crammer [2002] EWHC 2618 (Ch) (a mortgage case) it was held that where there is no appropriation in the case of a debt bearing interest, the general presumption is that payments will discharge interest first, before the earliest items of principal.
- 992. See Vol.I, para.21-061.
- 993. Defined in RAO art.60L (to include a guarantee or indemnity): see FCA Handbook, Glossary.
- 994. See CCA 1974 s.173(1).
- 995. Which need not be in writing unless the agreement is secured on land: s.94(6)(a).
- 996. Including any amount claimed by the creditor under CCA 1974 s.95A(2) or 95B(2) (see below, para.39-160) and less any rebate allowable under CCA 1974 s.95 (see below, para.39-158).
- 997. CCA 1974 s.94(1). See also CCA 1974 s.94(2) (notice may embody the exercise by the debtor of any option to purchase goods conferred by the agreement, etc.) and CCA 1974 s.97 (right to settlement statement, above, para.39-141). See CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in s.94, references to "debtor" in relation to "green deal plans" (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see below, para.39-257) are to be read as references to the "improver"/"current bill payer" (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6)).
- 998. See above, para.39-011.
- 999. Which need not be in writing: CCA 1974 s.94(6)(b).
- 1000. CCA 1974 s.94(3)-(6), added from February 1, 2011, by SI 2010/1010 reg.30. The indebtedness is discharged by an amount equal to the sum of the payment and any rebate allowable under CCA 1974 s.95 (see below, para.39-158) less any amount claimed by the creditor under CCA 1974 s.95A(2) or 95B(2) (see below, para.39-160). Note CCA 1974 s.82(2B), above, para.39-148: s.82(2) inapplicable when repayment amounts and/or duration of the agreement are varied as a result of the discharge of part of the debtor's indebtedness by virtue of s.94(3). For the obligation of the creditor to provide information to the debtor after part settlement, see CCA 1974 s.97A.
- 1001. Under CCA 1974 s.94; above, para.39-157.
- 1002. See, e.g. Overstone Ltd v Shipway [1962] 1 W.L.R. 117; Yeoman Credit Ltd v McLean [1962] 1 W.L.R. 131 (common law).
- 1003. e.g. under an acceleration clause.
- 1004. s.95(1), as amended by SI 2010/1010 reg.31, to add a reference to part-payment. See CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in s.95, references to "debtor" in relation to "green deal plans" (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see below, para.39-257) are to be read as references to the "improver"/"current bill payer" (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6)).
- 1005. Previously (before the transfer of consumer credit regulation to the FCA, see above, para. 39-002) vested in the Secretary of State.
- 1006. SI 2004/1483, amended by SI 2004/2619, in force May 31, 2005. For transitional provisions, see reg.10 thereof. The regulations were also amended by SI 2010/1010 regs 77-84 (and see SI 2011/11, amending reg.78) and SI 2010/1969 reg.26, from February 1, 2011 (subject to transitional provisions), in implementation of the Consumer Credit Directive (see above, para.39-011). They were further amended by the Consumer Credit (Green Deal) Regulations 2012 (SI 2012/2798), implementing the “Green Deal” introduced by the Energy Act 2011 (see below, para.39-257).

- 1007. Consumer Credit (Rebate on Early Settlement) Regulations 1983 (SI 1983/1562), which applied to agreements made before May 19, 1985 if they would have been regulated if made on that date.
- 1008. Agreements for running-account credit (see above, para.39-024), agreements “under which no payments of items included in the total charge for credit are required to be made in respect of the period of time commencing on the settlement date” and certain residential mortgages where no instalments are due whilst the debtor resides on the mortgaged land are excepted by reg.2(2).
- 1009. SI 2004/1483 reg.2(1).
- 1010. In consequence, a creditor may claim and be given judgment for the balance of instalments due under an acceleration clause in the agreement without any deduction of rebate (the rebate to be allowed on actual payment): Forward Trust Plc v Whymark [1990] 2 Q.B. 70.
- 1011. SI 1983/1562.
- 1012. SI 1983/1562 reg.4(1) and Sch.1. See also reg.6.
- 1013. SI 1983/1562 reg.4(2) and Sch.2 Pts I and II. See also regs 4(3), 6, 7 and Schs 3, 5. For an explanation of the “rule of 78”, see Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf) at para.3-264. It should be noted that “the rule of 78”, though prescribed by regulation, had been criticised, especially when applied to long-term agreements: OFT Consultation Document (June 1994), DTI Consultation Document (August 1995) and White Paper Cm. 6040 (2003). Further, the OFT Guidelines concerning “non-status” lenders, provided that lenders inappropriately extracting penalties for early settlement on the basis of “the rule of 78” risked losing their licences. See also Grangewood Securities Ltd v Ellis Unreported November 9, 2000, Milton Keynes County Court (extortionate credit bargain); but cf. Broadwick Financial Services Ltd v Spencer [2002] EWCA Civ 35, [2002] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 446 at [61]–[78].
- 1014. SI 2004/1483, as amended: see above, para.39-158, n.1008.
- 1015. SI 2004/1483 reg.4, as amended by SI 2010/1010 reg.81 from February 1, 2011 (subject to transitional provisions). Note also the new reg.4A (rebate when indebtedness is discharged in part), added from February 1, 2011 (subject to transitional provisions) by SI 2010/1010 reg.81. But see the Home Credit Market Investigation Order 2007, as amended, made by the Competition Commission under the Enterprise Act 2002 ss.161 and 164, which provides for a more generous (to the debtor) rebate in agreements (“home credit loan agreements”) subject to that Order.
- 1016. SI 2004/1483 reg.5, as amended by SI 2010/1010 reg.83 from February 1, 2011 (subject to transitional provisions), to provide for part-settlement, in implementation of the Consumer Credit Directive (see above, para.39-157).
- 1017. SI 2004/1483 reg.6. But the Home Credit Market Investigation Order 2007, as amended, made by the Competition Commission under the Enterprise Act 2002 ss.161 and 164, renders reg.6 inapplicable to agreements (“home credit loan agreements”) subject to that Order.
- 1018. See above, para.39-011.
- 1019. With effect from February 1, 2011 by SI 2010/1010 reg.32 (as amended by SI 2011/11). See

CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in s.95A, references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see below, para.39-257) are to be read as references to the “improver”/“current bill payer” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6)).

1020. s.29(2). It was amended by SI 2014/436.

1021. See below, para.39-257 and note CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in s.95B, references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” are to be read as references to the “improver”/“current bill payer” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6)).

1022. See also the Consumer Credit (Green Deal) Regulations 2012 (SI 2012/2798) made under CCA 1974 s.95B.

1023. But see the right of early termination conferred by CCA 1974 s.101, above, para.33-088.

1024. See SI 2004/1483 reg.3(2), as amended by (i) SI 2004/2619 and (ii) SI 2010/1010 reg.80 from February 1, 2011 (subject to transitional provisions), to provide for part-settlement, in implementation of the Consumer Credit Directive (see above, para.39-157).

1025. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.184(1), 189(1).

1026. CCA 1974 s.95(2). For “total charge for credit”, see above, para.39-059. The creditor may thus be compelled to give a rebate on sums payable, not to himself, but to some other person.

1027. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.19(1), 189(1); above, paras 39-055 et seq.

1028. Subject to reg.3(b), (c) and SI 1983/1560.

1029. Defined in ss.184(1), 189(1).

1030. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.19(1), 189(1); above, paras 39-055 et seq.

1031. CCA 1974 s.96(1). See CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in s.96, references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see below, para.39-257) are to be read as references to the “improver”/“current bill payer” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6)). See also CCA 1974 s.96(2) (non-application to a linked transaction which is itself an agreement providing the debtor or his relative with credit). But see s.96(3) and SI 1983/1560 (exceptions).

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 39 - Credit and Security

Section 1. - The Regulation of Consumer Credit ¹

(j) - Restrictions on Enforcement or Termination of Agreement ¹⁰³²

Enforcement notice (non-default cases)

39-164

A number of restrictions are imposed upon the power of the creditor or owner to enforce the terms of, or to terminate, a regulated agreement. The first of these restrictions is contained in s.76 of the 1974 Act, which imposes a duty on the creditor or owner to give notice before taking certain action. Section 76(1) provides that a creditor or owner is not entitled to enforce a term of a regulated agreement by:

- (a) demanding earlier payment of any sum; or
- (b) recovering possession of any goods or land; or
- (c) treating any right conferred on the debtor or hirer by the agreement as terminated, restricted or deferred, ¹⁰³³ except by or after giving the debtor or hirer not less than seven days' notice ¹⁰³⁴ of his intention to do so. ¹⁰³⁵ The purpose of this provision is not only to give some warning to the debtor or hirer of the action contemplated, but also to allow him to apply to the court for a "time order" under s.129 of the 1974 Act if he has difficulty in paying any sum owing under the agreement. ¹⁰³⁶ Section 76 does not apply to a right of enforcement arising by reason of any breach by the debtor or hirer of the regulated agreement, since action by reason of breach is dealt with in s.87 of the Act. ¹⁰³⁷ Nor is a s.76 notice required for termination of the agreement, since termination otherwise than for breach is dealt with in s.98 of the Act. ¹⁰³⁸

Specified duration has not ended

39-165

The requirement of notice applies only where a period for the duration of the agreement is specified in the agreement, and that period has not ended when the creditor does an act mentioned above; but it so applies notwithstanding that, under the agreement, any party is entitled to terminate it before the end of the period so specified. ¹⁰³⁹ A s.76 notice is therefore required, for example, where an overdraft is granted for 12 months subject to a stipulation that it can be called in at any time, and the overdraft is called in before the 12 months have elapsed. But it is not required where a loan is simply repayable

“on demand”. Exemption from this section has been granted by regulation to non-commercial agreements ¹⁰⁴⁰ where no security ¹⁰⁴¹ is provided. ¹⁰⁴²

Default notice

39-166

Section 87(1) of the 1974 Act requires the service ¹⁰⁴³ of a “default notice” on the debtor or hirer before the creditor or owner can be entitled, by reason of any breach by the debtor or hirer of a regulated agreement:

- (a)
to terminate the agreement ¹⁰⁴⁴;
- (b)
to demand earlier payment of any sum ¹⁰⁴⁵;
- (c)
to recover possession of any goods or land;
- (d)
to treat any right conferred on the debtor or hirer by the agreement as restricted or deferred ¹⁰⁴⁶; or
- (e)
to enforce any security. ¹⁰⁴⁷

Exemption has been granted from the need to serve a default notice to noncommercial agreements ¹⁰⁴⁸ where no security ¹⁰⁴⁹ is provided. ¹⁰⁵⁰

Form and content of default notice

39-167

The default notice must be in the form prescribed by the Consumer Credit (Enforcement, Default and Termination Notices) Regulations 1983, ¹⁰⁵¹ must include a copy of the “default information sheet” ¹⁰⁵² and must specify the nature of the alleged breach. ¹⁰⁵³ If the breach is “capable of remedy”, the notice must further specify what action is required to remedy it and the date before which that action is to be taken. ¹⁰⁵⁴ Where the breach consists of non-payment of money, the amount of the debt must be accurately stated so that the debtor can know how much he must pay to remedy the breach. ¹⁰⁵⁵ If the breach is “not capable of remedy”, the notice must further specify the sum (if any) ¹⁰⁵⁶ required to be paid as compensation ¹⁰⁵⁷ for the breach, and the date before which it is to be paid. ¹⁰⁵⁸ The date before which remedial action is to be taken or before which compensation is to be paid must not be less than 14 days ¹⁰⁵⁹ after the date of service of the default notice, and the creditor must not take the action mentioned above before the date so specified (if no remedial action or compensation is required) before those 14 days have elapsed. ¹⁰⁶⁰ In addition, the default notice must contain information in the prescribed terms about the consequences of failure to comply with it and any other prescribed matters relating to the agreement. ¹⁰⁶¹

“Breach capable of remedy”

39-168

The 1974 Act does not define or specify which breaches are and which are not capable of remedy. But some guidance may possibly be obtained from cases decided on the identical expression employed in s.146(1) of the Law of Property Act 1925 (restrictions on and relief against forfeiture of leases). Breach of a covenant to repay the credit or to pay interest is clearly capable of remedy, as is breach of a covenant to pay hire rentals. On the other hand, bankruptcy (if made a breach) ¹⁰⁶² would be an irremediable breach ¹⁰⁶³ and the sale of goods let under a hire-purchase or agreed to be sold under a conditional sale agreement would, it is submitted, likewise be an irremediable breach. ¹⁰⁶⁴ If goods are subject to execution or other legal process, or to a lien, whether or not the breach is remediable will depend on the circumstances of the case. ¹⁰⁶⁵ Breach of a covenant to repair will normally be remediable; but breach of a covenant to insure will not necessarily be so. It would seem to be immaterial that the breach is not capable of remedy within the time stipulated in the default notice (not being less than 14 days), provided that it could be remedied within a reasonable time.

Cumulative breaches

39-169

The default notice must not treat as a breach failure to comply with a provision of the agreement which becomes operative only on breach of some other provision, e.g. a provision whereby the debtor is to pay the whole balance of the credit outstanding in the event of non-payment of a single instalment. But if the breach of that other provision (i.e. the failure to pay the instalment) is not duly remedied or compensation duly paid or (if no remedial action or compensation is required) the 14 days have elapsed, then the creditor may treat the failure (i.e. the failure to pay the balance) as a breach, and the action specified in s.87(1) can be taken without the need for any further default notice. ¹⁰⁶⁶ Otherwise, however, it would appear that the creditor or owner cannot take any action specified in s.87(1) unless that action is specified in the notice. ¹⁰⁶⁷

Application to court

39-170

A debtor or hirer on whom a default notice has been served may apply to the court for a “time order” under s.129 of the 1974 Act. ¹⁰⁶⁸

Compliance with default notice

39-171

If before the date specified for that purpose in the default notice the debtor or hirer takes the required remedial action or pays the required compensation, the breach is treated as not having occurred. ¹⁰⁶⁹

Notice of termination (non-default cases) ¹⁰⁷⁰

39-172

Section 98(1) of the 1974 Act provides that the creditor or owner is not entitled to terminate early a regulated agreement (other than an agreement of indeterminate duration ¹⁰⁷¹) except by or after giving the debtor seven days’ notice ¹⁰⁷² of the termination. ¹⁰⁷³ The section does not, however, apply to termination by reason of any breach by the debtor or hirer of the agreement. ¹⁰⁷⁴ In cases of breach, a default notice ¹⁰⁷⁵ must be served. Bankruptcy is, for example, not in itself a breach and if made a ground of termination would require the service of a s.98 notice. No remedial action need be stipulated in the s.98 notice. Nor will any remedial action or payment by the debtor or hirer prevent the notice from taking effect. The remedy of the debtor or hirer is to apply to the court for a “time order” under s.129 of the 1974 Act. ¹⁰⁷⁶ The remaining provisions of s.98, ¹⁰⁷⁷ which limit its application, correspond with those of s.76. ¹⁰⁷⁸ Exemption has been granted by regulation from the requirements of s.98 in the case of a non-commercial agreement ¹⁰⁷⁹ where no security ¹⁰⁸⁰ is provided. ¹⁰⁸¹

Termination etc. of open-end consumer credit agreements

39-173

In consequence of the implementation of the Consumer Credit Directive ¹⁰⁸² a new s.98A has been added ¹⁰⁸³ to the 1974 Act governing the termination of regulated credit agreements that are “open-ended” (that is, of indefinite duration). However, it does not apply to overdrafts or to agreements secured on land (mortgages are outside the scope of the Directive). ¹⁰⁸⁴ First, ¹⁰⁸⁵ it enables a debtor by notice and free of charge, to terminate such an agreement at any time. The agreement may provide for a period of notice but this must not exceed one month. Moreover, the creditor may require the notice of termination to be in writing, otherwise it may take any form. But this provision does not affect any right that the debtor has to terminate an agreement for breach of contract in the usual way. ¹⁰⁸⁶ Second, ¹⁰⁸⁷ it limits the exercise of any contractual right that the creditor has to terminate such an agreement in that the termination must be effected by notice in writing and may not take effect for two months, or such longer period as the agreement may provide. But again, this does not affect any right that the creditor has to terminate an agreement for breach of contract. ¹⁰⁸⁸ Third, ¹⁰⁸⁹ special provision is made governing the termination or suspension of the debtor's right to draw on credit (whether prompted by the debtor's breach of contract or not, although in the former case the usual default notice provision does not apply ¹⁰⁹⁰). Generally, the creditor must serve a notice in writing, with objectively justified reasons, on the debtor before the termination or suspension takes effect or, if that is “not practicable”, immediately afterwards.

Copy of notices to “surety”

39-174

When a default notice under s.87(1) ¹⁰⁹¹ or a notice under ss.76(1) ¹⁰⁹² or 98(1) ¹⁰⁹³ is served on a debtor or hirer, a copy of the notice ¹⁰⁹⁴ must be served by the creditor or owner on any surety (if a different person from the debtor or hirer). ¹⁰⁹⁵ A failure to comply means that the security is enforceable against the surety, in respect of the breach or other matter to which the notice relates, on an order of the court only. ¹⁰⁹⁶

Death of debtor or hirer

39-175

Section 86 of the 1974 Act is designed to restrict the right of a creditor or owner, e.g. to terminate the agreement or to accelerate payment by reason of the death of the debtor or hirer. ¹⁰⁹⁷ Section 86(1) provides that the creditor or owner under a regulated agreement is not entitled, by reason of the death of the debtor or hirer, to do an act specified in paras (a) to (e) of s.87(1) ¹⁰⁹⁸ if at the death the agreement is “fully secured”. And s.86(2) provides that, if at the death, the agreement is only “partly secured” or “unsecured”, the creditor or owner is entitled, by reason of the death of the debtor or hirer, to do such an act on an order of the court only. ¹⁰⁹⁹ The terms “fully secured”, “partly secured” and “unsecured” are not defined, and difficulties of interpretation arise. In the first place it is uncertain whether “secured” should be construed in its popular sense of supported by real security, or whether personal security, ¹¹⁰⁰ i.e. a contract of guarantee or indemnity, will suffice. Secondly, it is uncertain whether an agreement is fully secured if it is expressed to be given in respect of the entire debt or whether reference must be made to the actual value of the security. In the latter case it involves a difficult assessment as to the precise value of the security at the death.

39-176

For the purposes of the section, an act is done “by reason of” the death of the debtor or hirer if it is done under a power conferred by the agreement which is either exercisable on his death or exercisable at will and exercised at any time after his death. ¹¹⁰¹ But the application of the section is otherwise limited ¹¹⁰² by provisions corresponding to those contained in s.76(2) and (4) of the 1974 Act. ¹¹⁰³ It should be emphasised that nothing in s.86 prevents a creditor or owner from taking action under a power conferred by the agreement which is exercisable on the debtor or hirer’s default.

Increase of interest rate on default ¹¹⁰⁴

39-177

Section 93 of the 1974 Act prevents a debtor under a regulated consumer credit agreement from being obliged to pay interest on sums which, in breach of the agreement, are unpaid by him at a rate exceeding the rate payable on the principal apart from any default. ¹¹⁰⁵ And where the charge made for credit is not technically interest but, e.g. a finance charge, then that rate of charge is likewise not to be increased on default. ¹¹⁰⁶ But the section does not prevent interest being charged on interest due but unpaid at a rate not exceeding the rate payable on the principal apart from any default. ¹¹⁰⁷ Nor, it is submitted, does the section prevent a creditor (e.g. a bank) stipulating two rates of interest, one for “authorised” overdrafts and the other for overdrafts which are unauthorised.

39-178

The provisions of the Late Payment of Commercial Debts (Interest) Act 1998 do not apply to consumer credit agreements. ¹¹⁰⁸

Contracting out forbidden

39-179

The restrictions thus placed upon the right of the creditor or owner to enforce the agreement, or to terminate it, are provisions “for the protection of the debtor or hirer or his relative or any surety”, and in consequence cannot be abrogated or diminished, whether directly or indirectly, by a term contained in a regulated agreement or linked transaction, or in any other agreement relating to an actual or prospective regulated agreement or linked transaction. ¹¹⁰⁹

¹. See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf); Goode, Consumer Credit: Law and Practice (looseleaf); Goode, Consumer Credit Law (1989); Harding, Consumer Credit and Consumer Hire (1995); Philpott, The Law of Consumer Credit and Hire (2009).

¹⁰³². See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf), paras 2-077, 2-087—2-090, 2-099, 2-112.

¹⁰³³. But see s.76(4): s.76(1) does not prevent a creditor from treating the right to draw on any credit as restricted or deferred (e.g. by putting a stop to further drawings on the same or another account), and taking such steps as may be necessary to make the restriction or deferment effective. Where the Payment Services Regulations 2009 (SI 2009/209) apply (see generally, above, paras 34-223 et seq.), the provisions in reg.56(3)-(6) as to stopping the use of a “payment instrument” are disapplied in cases covered by s.76: see SI 2009/209 reg.52(d). See also the specific requirements as to notice in such cases in CCA 1974 s.98A(4) for certain “open-ended” agreements (i.e. credit agreements of no fixed duration), below para.39-173.

- 1034. The notice must be in a form prescribed by the Consumer Credit (Enforcement, Default and Termination Notices) Regulations 1983 (SI 1983/1561, as amended by SI 2004/3237 to require it to be in paper form) reg.2(1) and Sch.1. See (i) CCA 1974 s.86E(3) (if a “default sum” (see CCA 1974 s.187A and above, para.39-135) is payable, the notice may incorporate the notice of default sum required by CCA 1974 s.86E) and (ii) CCA 1974 s.130A(5) (if post-judgment interest is payable, the notice may incorporate the notice required under s.130A(5)).
- 1035. See CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in s.76, references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see below, para.39-257) are to be read as references to the “current bill payer”/“previous bill payer” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6)). A copy must be served on any surety: s.111; below, para.39-174.
- 1036. CCA 1974 s.129(1)(b)(ii); below, para.39-202. Hence s.76 does not apply once the term of the agreement has expired: Evans v Finance-U-Ltd [2013] EWCA Civ 869.
- 1037. CCA 1974 s.76(6). For CCA 1974 s.87, see below, para.39-166.
- 1038. For CCA 1974 s.98, see below, para.39-172. See also CCA 1974 s.98A, see below, para.39-173.
- 1039. CCA 1974 s.76(2).
- 1040. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see above, para.39-049.
- 1041. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1); see below, para.39-180.
- 1042. CCA 1974 s.76(5); SI 1983/1561 reg.2(9). See also CCA 1974 s.130(3).
- 1043. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.176, 189(1). See Lombard North Central v Power-Hines [1995] C.C.L.R. 24 Cty Ct (notice posted but never received validly served).
- 1044. For termination in non-breach cases, see CCA 1974 s.98; below, para.39-172. See also CCA 1974 s.98A(3): termination in non-breach cases of certain “open-ended” consumer credit agreements, below para.39-173.
- 1045. e.g. under an “acceleration clause” in the agreement.
- 1046. See s.87(2): this does not prevent the creditor from treating the right to draw upon any credit as restricted or deferred, and taking such steps as may be necessary to make the restriction or deferment effective. See also s.87(5) (added on February 10, 2011 by SI 2010/1010 reg.37): s.87(1)(d) inapplicable to certain “open-ended” agreements (i.e. credit agreements of no fixed duration) as the specific requirements as to notice in such cases is in CCA 1974 s.98A(4), see below para.39-173. And where the Payment Services Regulations 2009 (SI 2009/209) apply (see generally, above, paras 34-223 et seq.), the provisions in reg.56(3)–(6) as to stopping the use of a “payment instrument” are disapplied in cases covered by s.87: see SI 2009/209 reg.52(d).
- 1047. s.87(1). See CCA 1974 Sch.2A, para.196A: in s.87, references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see below, para.39-257) are to be read as references to the “current bill payer”/“previous bill payer” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6)). The doing of an act whereby a floating charge becomes fixed is not an enforcement of a security (see CCA 1974 s.185(5) (as amended by the Consumer Credit Act 2006 s.5(8))) and the Agricultural Credits Act 1928): s.87(3). See also CCA 1974 s.111 (service on surety) below, para.39-174.
- 1048. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1); see above, para.39-049.
- 1049. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1); see below, para.39-180.
- 1050. s.87(4); SI 1983/1561 reg.2(9). See also CCA 1974 s.130(3).

- 1051. SI 1983/1561 reg.2(2) and Sch.2, as amended by SI 1984/1109; SI 2004/3237; SI 2007/1167; 2014/2369. The default notice must in paper form: see SI 2004/3237.
- 1052. Under CCA 1974 s.86A, see above, para.39-131. See s.88(4A), added with effect from October 1, 2008 (see SI 2007/3300), by the Consumer Credit Act 2006 s.14.
- 1053. CCA 1974 s.88(1)(a). Although the nature of the breach must be specified, it would seem that a notice is not invalidated by the addition of alleged breaches which are disproved, or of acts which are not in fact breaches of the agreement, or of other useless and irrelevant matter: see (on the similar provision in the Law of Property Act 1925 s.146) Pannell v City of London Brewery Co [1900] 1 Ch. 496; Fox v Jolly [1916] 1 A.C. 1; Silvester v Ostrowska [1959] 1 W.L.R. 1060. Contrast Guillemard v Silverthorne (1908) 99 L.T. 584. See NRAM Plc v McAdam & Hartley [2015] EWCA Civ 751, reversing [2014] EWHC 4174 (Comm): (obiter) s.88 does not apply to non-regulated agreements that are documented as regulated agreements.
- 1054. CCA 1974 s.88(1)(b).
- 1055. Woodchester Lease Management Services Ltd v Swain & Co [1999] 1 W.L.R. 263 cf. Rankine (Basil) v Halifax Plc [2009] C.C.L.R. 3 (de minimis error overlooked).
- 1056. The creditor or owner need not claim compensation if he does not desire to do so: Lock v Pearce [1893] 2 Ch. 271; Rugby School (Governors) v Tannahill [1935] 1 K.B. 87. But he must still serve a default notice.
- 1057. See Duke of Westminster v Swinton [1948] 1 K.B. 525 (compensation is the amount of the loss or damage sustained by the breach).
- 1058. CCA 1974 s.88(1)(c).
- 1059. This period was increased (on October 1, 2006, see SI 2006/1508) from 7 days by the Consumer Credit Act 2006 s.14. See Brandon v American Express Services Europe Ltd [2011] EWCA Civ 1187: start of 14 day period mis-stated.
- 1060. CCA 1974 s.88(2).
- 1061. CCA 1974 s.88(4) (as amended by the Consumer Credit Act 2006 s.14 to include “any other prescribed matters relating to the agreement”); SI 1983/1561 Sch.2. See also s.88(5), whereby the default notice may contain a provision for the creditor or owner taking certain action, e.g. recovering possession of goods at the end of the 14-day or other period, provided that it is stated that the provision will be ineffective if the breach is duly remedied or the compensation duly paid. See also (i) CCA 1974 s.86E(3) (if a “default sum” (see CCA 1974 s.187A and above, para.39-135) is payable, the notice may incorporate the notice of default sum required by s.86E) and (ii) CCA 1974 s.130A(5) (if post-judgment interest is payable, the notice may incorporate the notice required under s.130A(5)).
- 1062. It is rarely made a breach, so that either s.76 or s.98 would apply: see above, para.39-164; below, para.39-172.
- 1063. Civil Service Co-operative Socy Ltd v McGrigor's Trustee [1923] 2 Ch. 347, 356.
- 1064. Scala House & District Property Co Ltd v Forbes [1974] Q.B. 575. This, at any rate, would be the case where the purchaser acquired a good title to the goods, and probably also where he did not, for repurchase is too speculative a possibility. See also Kemp v United Dominions Corp (Australia) Ltd [1970] Qd.R. 323 (hire-purchase).
- 1065. Hartley v Larkin (1950) 66 T.L.R. (Pt 1) 896.
- 1066. CCA 1974 s.88(5).
- 1067. CCA 1974 ss.87, 88(4) and SI 1983/1561 Sch.2.

- 1068. CCA 1974 s.129(1)(b)(i); below, para.39-202. See also Vol.I, para.26-211 (relief from forfeiture).
- 1069. s.89. Partial compliance is insufficient: Price v Romilly [1960] 1 W.L.R. 1360. See NRAM Plc v McAdam & Hartley [2015] EWCA Civ 751, reversing [2014] EWHC 4174 (Comm): (obiter) s.89 does not apply to non-regulated agreements that are documented as regulated agreements. See also CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in s.89, references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see below, para.39-257) are to be read as references to the “current bill payer”/“previous bill payer” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6)).
- 1070. See CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in s.98, references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see below, para.39-257) are to be read as references to the “current bill payer”/“previous bill payer” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6)). Where the Payment Services Regulations 2009 (SI 2009/209) apply (see generally, above, paras 34-223 et seq.) reg.43 (termination of “framework contract”) s.98 has been disapplied in relation to CCA 1974-regulated agreements: see SI 2009/209 reg.34(a).
- 1071. CCA 1974 s.98(2). But see CCA 1974 s.98A(3) (termination of certain “open-ended” agreements, i.e. agreements of no fixed duration), below para.39-173. And note the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999 (SI 1999/2083) Sch.2 paras 1(g) and 2(a), above, para.38-283 (replaced, for contracts made on or after October 1, 2015, by the Consumer Rights Act 2015 Sch.2 paras 8 and 21, see above, para.38-360).
- 1072. The notice must be in the form prescribed by the Consumer Credit (Enforcement, Default and Termination Notices) Regulations 1983 (SI 1983/1561, as amended by SI 2004/3237 to require it to be in paper form) reg.2(3) and Sch.3. A copy must be served on any surety: CCA 1974 s.111; below, para.39-174. See CCA 1974 s.130A(5) (if post-judgment interest is payable, the notice may incorporate the notice required under s.130A(5)).
- 1073. Hence s.98 does not apply once the term of the agreement has expired: Evans v Finance-U-Ltd [2013] EWCA Civ 869.
- 1074. CCA 1974 s.98(6).
- 1075. See above, para.39-166.
- 1076. CCA 1974 s.129(1)(b)(ii); below, para.39-202. See also Vol.I, para.26-211 (relief from forfeiture).
- 1077. subss.(2), (4).
- 1078. subss.(2), (4). See above, para.39-164.
- 1079. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see above, para.39-049.
- 1080. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1); see below, para.39-180.
- 1081. CCA 1974 s.98(5); SI 1983/1569 reg.2(9). See also CCA 1974 s.130(3).
- 1082. See above, para.39-011.
- 1083. With effect from February 1, 2011 by SI 2010/1010 reg.38.
- 1084. CCA 1974 s.98A(8).
- 1085. CCA 1974 s.98A(1).
- 1086. CCA 1974 s.98A(7).
- 1087. CCA 1974 s.98A(3). Note that CCA 1974 s.129 (time orders, see below, para.39-202) does not apply in relation to a s.98A(3) notice (cf. CCA 1974 ss.76, 87 and 98 notices).

- 1088. CCA 1974 s.98A(7). But note that generally a default notice must then be served under CCA 1974 s.87, see above, para.39-166.
- 1089. CCA 1974 s.98A(4)–(6). Where the Payment Services Regulations 2009 (SI 2009/209) apply (see generally, above, paras 34-223 et seq.), the provisions in reg.56(3)–(6) as to stopping the use of a “payment instrument” are disapplied in cases covered by s.98A(4)–(6): see SI 2009/209 reg.52(e), added by SI 2010/1010 reg.97.
- 1090. See CCA 1974 s.87(5), added by SI 2010/1010 reg.37.
- 1091. See above, para.39-166.
- 1092. See above, para.39-164.
- 1093. See above, para.39-172.
- 1094. Complying with SI 1983/1557 (as amended by SI 2004/2619 and SI 2004/3236), especially reg.10.
- 1095. CCA 1974 s.111(1). For the definition of “surety”, see below, para.39-183. Perhaps because of an oversight, s.111 has not been amended to apply also to a s.98A(3) or (4)(b) creditor’s notice (see above, para.39-173).
- 1096. CCA 1974 ss.111(2), 127(1)(c), 142(1). See also CCA 1974 ss.106, 113(3) (effect on security) and below, para.39-200 (powers of court). See CPR Pt 7 PD 7B.
- 1097. See CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in s.86, references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see below, para.39-257) are to be read as references to the “current bill payer”/“previous bill payer” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6)). See also s.185(4) (death of one of two or more hirers or debtors).
- 1098. See above, para.39-166.
- 1099. For the powers of the court, see CCA 1974 s.128; below, para.39-201. See also CPR Pt 7 r.9 7PD-003, 3.1(6), 7.4, 9.3. CPR Pt 7 PD 7B.
- 1100. See the definition of “security” in CCA 1974 s.189(1) and below, para.39-180.
- 1101. CCA 1974 s.86(6).
- 1102. CCA 1974 s.86(3), (4).
- 1103. See above, para.39-165. See also CCA 1974 s.98(2), (4); above, para.39-172. The section does not affect the operation of any agreement providing for payment of sums due under the regulated agreement, or becoming due under it on the death of the debtor or hirer, out of the proceeds of a policy of assurance on his life e.g. under a mortgage protection policy or endowment policy: s.86(5).
- 1104. For interest payable on default sums see CCA 1974 s.86F, above, para.39-136 and for interest on judgment debts, see CCA 1974 s.130A, below, para.39-206. See also CCA 1974 s.78A (notification of change of interest, above, para.39-147).
- 1105. i.e. “where the total charge for credit includes an item in respect of interest, at a rate exceeding that rate of interest”: s.93(a). See McMullon v Secure the Bridge Ltd [2015] EWCA Civ 884 (so-called “fee” was clearly “interest”). A similar (but not identical) provision was contained in s.7 of the Moneylenders Act 1927 (see Mutual Loan Fund Association v Sanderson [1937] 1 All E.R. 380). This section causes particular difficulty in the case of “interest free” credit, see Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf), para.2-094. See CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in s.93, references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see below, para.39-257) are to be read as references to the “current bill payer"/"previous bill payer" (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6)).

1106. s.93(b). In this case, items included in the total charge for credit by virtue of rules made by the FCA under RAO art.60M(2)(d) ("linked transactions" see above, paras 39-055 et seq.) are to be disregarded.

1107. For the positions at common law, see below, paras 39-285 et seq. Similarly a provision that "on the debtor making default in payment of any instalment, the whole amount of principal and interest remaining unpaid shall forthwith become due and payable" would not appear to contravene s.93 since "the whole amount of principal and interest" are not sums which are unpaid in breach of the agreement and thus the interest may be increased on them by virtue of the provision. But see CCA 1974 s.95(1) (rebate on early settlement, above para.39-158). As to whether a clause providing for accelerated payment of principal and interest is a penalty, see below, para.39-272, and Wadham Stringer Finance Ltd v Meaney [1981] 1 W.L.R. 39. The provision for a rebate in CCA 1974 s.95 (see above, para.39-158) may prevent it being penal: Forward Trust Plc v Robinson [1987] C.C.L.R. 10 Cty Ct.

1108. See s.2(5)(a) of the 1998 Act.

1109. CCA 1974 s.173(1), (2).

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 39 - Credit and Security
Section 1. - The Regulation of Consumer Credit ¹
(k) - Security ¹¹¹⁰

“Security” defined

39-180

The term “security”, in relation to an actual or prospective consumer credit agreement or consumer hire agreement, or any linked transaction ¹¹¹¹ is defined to mean a mortgage, charge, pledge, bond, debenture, indemnity, guarantee, bill, note or other right provided by the debtor or hirer, or at his request (express or implied), to secure the carrying out of the obligations of the debtor or hirer under the agreement. ¹¹¹² For the purposes of the 1974 Act, ¹¹¹³ therefore, security may be either real or personal, and it may be provided by the debtor or hirer, or by a third party (in which case it must be provided at the request, express or implied, of the debtor or hirer). A guarantee or indemnity given by a dealer by way of “recourse” at the request of the financier would not therefore ordinarily constitute security. ¹¹¹⁴

39-181

Difficulty may arise in deciding whether or not certain acts done by the debtor or hirer, or at his request, constitute security. ¹¹¹⁵ It has, for example, been suggested ¹¹¹⁶ that a “form of consent” given to a mortgagee at the request of the mortgagor by a person in actual occupation of the property to be mortgaged by which that person agrees that his rights in the property under the Land Registration Act 1925 ¹¹¹⁷ will be postponed and subject to the rights of the mortgagee, and will not be asserted against the mortgagee, would fall within the definition of “security”. ¹¹¹⁸ It is thought that the common term in bank loan contracts where a bank reserves the right to take missed repayments from other accounts kept by the debtor with the bank, in so far as this confers rights on the bank beyond its common law right to combine current accounts, ¹¹¹⁹ constitutes “security”. Further, it would seem that an insurance policy effected by the debtor or hirer in respect of goods the subject of a hire-purchase, conditional sale or hiring agreement does not fall within the definition, even though the agreement requires such insurance to be effected and provides that, in the event of a total loss, the policy moneys are to be paid to the creditor or owner. The primary purpose of such insurance is to protect the creditor against loss caused by the events insured against, and not to secure, i.e. make more certain, the carrying out of the obligations of the debtor or hirer under the agreement. ¹¹²⁰ On the other hand, an assignment or charge by a debtor of, for instance, a life insurance policy, or moneys standing to his credit in another account, in order to secure a loan, could undoubtedly constitute security. ¹¹²¹

“Security instrument”

39-182

Any security provided in relation to a regulated agreement by a third party ¹¹²² is required by s.105(1) of the 1974 Act to be expressed in writing. A document made in compliance with this requirement is termed a “security instrument”. ¹¹²³

“Surety”

39-183

The word “surety” is used in the 1974 Act to mean the person by whom any security is provided, or the person to whom his rights and duties in relation to the security have passed by assignment or operation of law. ¹¹²⁴ The expression therefore goes beyond the ordinary legal sense of a guarantor or indemnifier, ¹¹²⁵ and can in appropriate situations even refer to the debtor or hirer himself if he provides security himself.

Form and content of security instrument

39-184

The Treasury is empowered to make regulations prescribing the form and content of security instruments. ¹¹²⁶ Regulations have been made, confined to guarantees and indemnities, in the Consumer Credit (Guarantees and Indemnities) Regulations 1983. ¹¹²⁷ These prescribe the form and content of guarantees and indemnities provided in relation to regulated agreements at the request (express or implied) of the debtor or hirer, and also provide for the legibility and signing of such guarantees and indemnities. A guarantee or indemnity is not properly executed unless a document in the prescribed form, itself containing all the prescribed terms and conforming to these regulations, is signed in the prescribed manner by or on behalf of the surety. ¹¹²⁸

39-185

Any security instrument (whether or not a contract of guarantee or indemnity) is not properly executed unless the document embodies all the terms of the security, other than implied terms, and the document, when presented or sent for the purpose of being signed by or on behalf of the surety, is in such a state that its terms are readily legible. ¹¹²⁹

Supply of copies to surety ¹¹³⁰

39-186

When the document is presented or sent for the purpose of being signed by the surety or on his behalf, there must also be presented or sent a copy of the document. ¹¹³¹ In addition, the surety is entitled to receive a copy of the executed credit or hire agreement. The precise time at which the copy must be given to him depends on whether the security is provided after or at the time when the regulated agreement is made, or before it is made. In the former case, a copy of the executed agreement, together with a copy of any other document referred to in it, must be given to the surety at the time the security is provided. ¹¹³² In the latter case, a copy of the executed agreement, together with a copy of any other document referred to in it, must be given to the surety within seven days after the regulated agreement is made. ¹¹³³ Failure to supply such copies means that the security instrument is not properly executed.

Consequence of improper execution

39-187

The consequence of improper execution of a security instrument is that the security, so far as provided in relation to a regulated agreement, is enforceable against the surety on an order of the court only. ¹¹³⁴ The same consequence applies if a security is not expressed in writing in contravention of s.105(1). ¹¹³⁵ If an application for an order is dismissed by the court, except on technical grounds ¹¹³⁶ only, the security, so far as it is provided in relation to a regulated agreement, is rendered invalid. ¹¹³⁷

Security provided by debtor or hirer

39-188

The Consumer Credit (Agreements) Regulations, 1138 include provision governing any security provided in relation to a regulated agreement by the debtor or hirer. 1139 The 1983 regulations 1140 require documents embodying regulated agreements also to embody 1141 the security whilst the 2010 regulations 1142 impose the less onerous requirement that documents embodying regulated credit agreements need only “contain details of any security” provided.

Withdrawal of security

39-189

If security is provided in relation to a prospective agreement or transaction, the security is enforceable in relation to the agreement or transaction only after the time (if any) when the agreement is made. Until that time the person providing the security is entitled, by notice to the creditor or owner, to withdraw the security. 1143

Enforcement of security

39-190

Section 113 of the 1974 Act is designed to ensure that the creditor or owner cannot, by enforcing security, recover more than they would have been entitled to under the regulated agreement, and so prevents evasion of the Act by the use of security. Where a security is provided in relation to an actual or prospective regulated agreement, the security is not to be enforced so as to benefit the creditor or owner, directly or indirectly, to an extent greater (whether as respects the amount of any payment or the time or manner of its being made) than would be the case if the security were not provided and any obligations of the debtor or hirer, or his relative, under or in relation to the agreement were carried out to the extent (if any) to which they would be enforced under the Act. 1144

39-191

In accordance with this principle, where a regulated agreement is enforceable on an order of the court 1145 or of the FCA 1146 only, any security provided in relation to the agreement is enforceable (so far as provided in relation to the agreement) where such an order has been made in relation to the agreement, but not otherwise. 1147 The same rules also apply (with appropriate changes of language) where a security is provided in relation to an actual or prospective linked transaction. 1148

Security rendered invalid

39-192

Section 106 provides that where, under any provision of the 1974 Act, that section “is applied” to any security provided in relation to a regulated agreement, then 1149:

(a)

the security, so far as it is so provided, is to be treated as never having effect 1150;

(b)

any property lodged with the creditor or owner solely for the purposes of the security as so provided shall be returned by him forthwith;

(c)

the creditor or owner shall take any necessary action to remove or cancel an entry in any register, so far as the entry relates to the security as so provided; and any amount received by the creditor or owner on realisation of the security 1151 shall, so far as it is referable to the agreement, be repaid to the surety.

(d)

39-193

Examples of situations where s.106 “is applied” to a security are as follows:

(i)

where a regulated agreement is cancelled under s.69(1) 1152 or becomes subject to s.69(2) 1153;

(ii)

where a regulated agreement is terminated under s.91 1154;

(iii)

where the FCA dismisses, except on technical grounds 1155 only, an application for an order 1156 validating agreements made in the context of unauthorised trading 1157;

(iv)

where a court dismisses, except on technical grounds 1158 only, an application for an order under s.65(1) for the enforcement of an improperly executed agreement 1159 or under s.105(8) for enforcement of a security which is not in writing 1160 or improperly executed 1161 or under subs.(1) or (2) of s.124 1162 for enforcement of an agreement or security after contravention of the prohibition on taking or negotiating negotiable instruments 1163;

(v)

where a declaration is made by a court under s.142(1) (refusal of an enforcement order) 1164 as respects any regulated agreement 1165; and

(vi)

where security is provided in relation to a prospective agreement or transaction, and, before the agreement is made, the person providing the security by notice requires that s.106 shall apply to the security. 1166

Pledges

39-194

Sections 114 to 122 of the 1974 Act contain special provisions ¹¹⁶⁷ relating to articles taken in pawn ¹¹⁶⁸ under a regulated agreement, other than a non-commercial agreement. ¹¹⁶⁹ The sections do not apply to a pledge of documents of title ¹¹⁷⁰ or of bearer bonds ¹¹⁷¹; nor, if submitted, do they apply to choses in action ¹¹⁷² or to deeds or certificates of title to land ¹¹⁷³ deposited with a creditor as security.

Pledges: Consumer Credit Directive

39-195

The Consumer Credit Directive ¹¹⁷⁴ does not apply to pawn agreements but, to maintain a coherent regime, the implementing provisions (which made significant changes to the Consumer Credit Act 1974 regime) generally also apply to pawn agreements. However, the duty to provide pre-contractual explanations ¹¹⁷⁵ is modified. Moreover, s.55C (copy of draft agreement ¹¹⁷⁶) and s.77B (statement of account to be provided on request ¹¹⁷⁷) are inapplicable and there is no duty to assess the creditworthiness of the pawnor. ¹¹⁷⁸

Negotiable instruments

39-196

The 1974 Act also contains provisions ¹¹⁷⁹ restricting the taking and negotiating of negotiable instruments ¹¹⁸⁰ in connection with regulated agreements, other than non-commercial agreements. ¹¹⁸¹ In the first place, a creditor or owner is prohibited from taking a negotiable instrument, other than a banknote or cheque, ¹¹⁸² in discharge of any sum payable by the debtor or hirer under a regulated agreement, or by any person as surety ¹¹⁸³ in relation to the agreement. ¹¹⁸⁴ Bills of exchange or promissory notes cannot therefore be taken in payment. Secondly, the creditor or owner is prohibited from negotiating ¹¹⁸⁵ a cheque taken by him in discharge of a sum payable as mentioned above except to a banker. ¹¹⁸⁶ Thirdly, the creditor or owner is prohibited from taking a negotiable instrument as security for the discharge of any sum payable as mentioned above. ¹¹⁸⁷ The old practice of taking, for example, a promissory note as security for payment under an instalment credit agreement has therefore been ruled out.

Effect of contravention

39-197

After any contravention of these provisions in relation to a sum payable by the debtor or hirer under a regulated agreement, the agreement under which the sum is payable is enforceable against the debtor or hirer on an order of the court only. ¹¹⁸⁸ After any contravention of these provisions in relation to a sum payable by any surety, the security ¹¹⁸⁹ is enforceable on an order of the court only ¹¹⁹⁰ and, in such case, if an application for an order is dismissed, except on technical grounds ¹¹⁹¹ only, the security is rendered invalid. ¹¹⁹²

39-198

A person who takes a negotiable instrument in contravention of s.123(1) or (3) is not a holder in due course and is not entitled to enforce the instrument. ¹¹⁹³ The 1974 Act does not, however, otherwise seek to undermine the protection of a holder in due course and deals specifically with the effect of contravention on the rights arising under and on the instrument. ¹¹⁹⁴

1. See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf); Goode, Consumer Credit: Law and Practice (looseleaf); Goode, Consumer Credit Law (1989); Harding, Consumer Credit and Consumer Hire (1995); Philpott, The Law of Consumer Credit and Hire (2009).
1110. See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf), paras 2-106—2-127; and Goode, Consumer Credit: Law and Practice, Pt C, Ch.37.
1111. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.19(1), 189(1); above, paras 39-055 et seq.
1112. CCA 1974 s.189(1). See the almost identical definition in the RAO art.60L(1) and in the FCA Handbook Glossary (for the purpose of CONC).
1113. And the RAO and the FCA Handbook CONC; see the previous footnote.
1114. cf. Unity Finance Ltd v Woodcock [1963] 1 W.L.R. 455. See also Governor and Company of the Bank of Scotland v Euclidian (No.1) Ltd [2007] EWHC 1732: indemnity provided in that case not “security” within the CCA 1974 as it neither secured the carrying out of the debtor’s obligations nor was it provided at his request. For recourse agreements, see below, para.39-328.
1115. See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf) at para.2-106.
1116. Putnam [1983] L.S.Gaz. 219.
1117. s.70(1)(g). See Williams & Glyn’s Bank v Boland [1981] A.C. 487.
1118. Much may depend on the precise wording of the consent.
1119. See above, para.34-320 and Bradford Old Bank Ltd v Sutcliffe [1918] 2 K.B. 833 (CA).
1120. This submission was reflected in (the now revoked) Advertisements and Quotations Regulations 1989 (SI 1989/1125) Sch.1 Pt III paras 2, 3; and SI 1989/1126 Sch.1 paras 2, 3, where “security” was stated as an alternative to an insurance policy where the proceeds were to be used to repay the loan. However, the subsequent regulations (SI 2004/1481 and SI 1999/2725, respectively, now revoked, see above, para.39-067) were less complex and did not contain corresponding provisions.
1121. See CCA 1974 Sch.2 Example 11.
1122. Which, to be “security” (see above, para.39-180), must be provided at the request, express or implied, of the debtor or hirer. Section 105(6) confines s.105(1) to security provided by third parties. For security provided by the debtor or hirer, see below, para.39-188.
1123. CCA 1974 s.105(2).
1124. CCA 1974 s.189(1).
1125. See below, Ch.45.
1126. CCA 1974 s.105(2), (3). For the meaning of “security instrument”, see above, para.39-182.
1127. SI 1983/1556, as amended by SI 2004/3236 (electronic form). Previously (before the transfer of consumer credit regulation to the FCA, see above, para.39-002) the power to make the regulations was vested in the Secretary of State.
1128. CCA 1974 s.105(4)(a).
1129. CCA 1974 s.105(4)(b)(c).

- 1130. See SI 1983/1557, as amended by SI 2004/2619 and SI 2004/3236 (form of copies). See also above, para.39-137 (supply of information).
- 1131. CCA 1974 s.105(4)(d).
- 1132. CCA 1974 s.105(5)(a).
- 1133. CCA 1974 s.105(5)(b).
- 1134. CCA 1974 s.105(7)(a). See also CCA 1974 ss.127, 173(3); below, para.39-200 and CPR Pt 7 PD 7B.
- 1135. CCA 1974 s.105(7)(b). CPR Pt 7 PD 7B.
- 1136. See CCA 1974 s.189(1), (5).
- 1137. CCA 1974 ss.105(8), 106; below, para.39-193.
- 1138. Made under CCA 1974 s.60, see above, paras 39-080 et seq.
- 1139. CCA 1974 s.105(9).
- 1140. Which now generally only apply to agreements outside the scope of the Consumer Credit Directive (see above, para.39-011), unless the creditor has (in effect) opted out by opting in to the "Directive Regime". See SI 1983/1553 (as amended by SI 1984/1600; SI 1985/666; SI 1988/2047; SI 1999/3177; (especially) SI 2004/1482; SI 2004/2619; SI 2004/3236; SI 2010/1010; SI 2010/1969) reg.2(10) (credit) and reg.3(7) (hire).
- 1141. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), (4).
- 1142. SI 2010/1014, as amended by SI 2010/1969 regs 41–45. See reg.3(5) and Sch.1 para.23.
- 1143. CCA 1974 s.113(6). The notice must require "that section 106 shall thereupon apply to the security": see below, para.39-192.
- 1144. s.113(1). See CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in s.113 references to "debtor" in relation to "green deal plans" (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see below, para.39-257) are to be read as references to the "improver" (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6)). See Wilson v First County Trust Ltd [2001] Q.B. 407; Wilson v Secretary of State for Trade and Industry [2003] UKHL 40, [2003] 3 W.L.R. 568. But s.113(7) (as amended by the Minors' Contracts Act 1987 s.4) provides in effect that, where the debtor or a hirer is, e.g. a minor, s.113(1) does not produce the result that a contract of guarantee or indemnity becomes unenforceable merely by reason of his minority: see Yeoman Credit Ltd v Latter [1961] 1 W.L.R. 828; below, para.45-040; Vol.I, paras 9-005 et seq.
- 1145. See CCA 1974 s.65(1) (above, para.39-093) and CCA 1974 s.124(1) (below, para.39-197).
- 1146. Previously the OFT. See now the power of the FCA to so order under FSMA 2000 s.28A (above, paras 39-064 and 39-065 and below, paras 39-249 and 39-250).
- 1147. CCA 1974 s.113(2).
- 1148. CCA 1974 s.113(8). This subsection also applies to s.113(3), see below. For the difficulties with the wording of subs.(8), see Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf), para.2–114.
- 1149. Subject to s.177 (saving for registered charges); below, para.39-538.
- 1150. Nor can an unpaid vendor's lien be asserted: Orakpo v Manson Investments Ltd [1978] A.C. 95.

- 1151. On the meaning of “realisation” in s.106 see the contrasting decisions: Re London Scottish Finance (In Administration) [2013] EWHC 4047 (“realisation” should be given its conventional meaning of the creditor taking steps to release the value of the collateral (cf. “redemption” meaning the repayment by the debtor to obtain the return of the collateral)) and Wilson v Howard (t/a Howard Pawnbrokers) [2005] EWCA 147, [2005] C.C.L.R. 2 (“realisation” covers repayment by debtor as well as realisation by sale). It is suggested that the former interpretation is to be preferred as otherwise debtors providing security are in a more favourable position than ordinary debtors (who cannot recover payments made under unenforceable agreements unless the “unfair relationship” provisions (see below, paras 39-212 et seq.) apply). See also Wilson v Robertsons (London) Ltd (No.2) [2006] EWCA Civ 108, [2007] C.C.L.R. 1 (not “realisation” on the facts).
- 1152. CCA 1974 s.113(3)(a); see above, para.39-106. See also s.113(5).
- 1153. CCA 1974 s.113(3)(c); see above, para.39-107. See also s.113(5).
- 1154. CCA 1974 s.113(3)(b); see below, para.39-365.
- 1155. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), (5).
- 1156. Under the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 s.28A.
- 1157. CCA 1974 s.113(3)(c). For such orders, see above, paras 39-064 and 39-065 and below, paras 39-249 and 39-250.
- 1158. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), (5).
- 1159. CCA 1974 s.113(3)(c); see above, para.39-093.
- 1160. CCA 1974 s.105(1), (7), (8); above, para.39-187.
- 1161. CCA 1974 s.105(4), (5), (7), (8); above, para.39-187.
- 1162. See below, para.39-197.
- 1163. CCA 1974 ss.113(3)(c), 124(3).
- 1164. See below, para.39-210.
- 1165. CCA 1974 s.113(3)(d). But see s.113(4) (declaration as to part only).
- 1166. CCA 1974 s.113(6); above, para.39-189.
- 1167. See above, paras 33-137—33-144. See also CCA 1974 s.130(3). Section 114(3)(a) was amended by the Banking Act 1979 s.38(2). For regulations made, see SI 1983/1553; SI 1983/1565; SI 1983/1566; SI 1983/1568; SI 1998/998; SI 2004/3236.
- 1168. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1); but the definitions of “pawn” and “pledge” contained in that subsection are circular, for “pawn” refers to “pledge” and “pledge” to “pawn”.
- 1169. CCA 1974 s.114(3)(b). “Non-commercial agreement” is defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1); above, para.39-049.
- 1170. “Documents of title” is not defined and it is submitted does not therefore bear the extended meaning given by s.1(4) of the Factors Act 1889. Credit advanced against the security of documents of title is not otherwise exempted from the regulation of the Act.
- 1171. Added by the Banking Act 1979: see above, n.1169.
- 1172. Harrold v Plenty [1901] 2 Ch. 314.

- 1173. Which create a mortgage or charge. See also Swanley Coal Co v Denton [1906] 2 K.B. 873.
- 1174. See above, para.39-011.
- 1175. FCA Handbook CONC 4.2 (previously in CCA 1974 s.55A), see above, para.39-077.
- 1176. See above, para.39-079.
- 1177. See above, para.39-130.
- 1178. The duty was previously imposed by the (new repealed) CCA 1974 s.55B and is now in the FCA Handbook, see above, para.39-078.
- 1179. CCA 1974 ss.123–125. See CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in ss.123 and 124, references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see below, para.39-257) are to be read as references to the “current bill payer”/“previous bill payer” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6)). See also above, paras 34-007, 34-081.
- 1180. Some doubt exists as to the meaning of “negotiable instrument” in these sections. An instrument is only a negotiable instrument if it can be negotiated: Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s.31(1). An instrument may not be in a state of negotiability: see ss.8(1), 36(1). cf. ss.81, 81A (inserted by s.1 of the Cheques Act 1992). See also Hibernian Bank Ltd v Gyson and Hanson [1939] 1 K.B. 483.
- 1181. s.123(5). For the definition of “non-commercial agreement”, see CCA 1974 s.189(1); above, para.39-049. See also the exemption by order under s.123(6): SI 1984/435 (certain consumer hire agreements which have a connection with a country outside the UK).
- 1182. Not defined in the Act, but see s.73 of the Bills of Exchange Act 1882.
- 1183. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1); above, para.39-183.
- 1184. CCA 1974 s.123(1).
- 1185. Not defined in the Act, but see s.31 of the Bills of Exchange Act 1882.
- 1186. CCA 1974 s.123(2). To a banker within the meaning of s.1 of the Bills of Exchange Act 1882; see above, para.34-245.
- 1187. CCA 1974 s.123(3). As to when a negotiable instrument is considered to have been taken by way of security, see s.123(4).
- 1188. CCA 1974 s.124(1). See also CCA 1974 ss.127 (below, para.39-200), 129(1), 142(1). CPR Pt 7 PD 7B.
- 1189. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1); above, para.39-180.
- 1190. CCA 1974 s.124(2). See also CCA 1974 ss.127 (below, para.39-200), 129(1), 142(1). CPR Pt 7 PD 7B.
- 1191. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), (5).
- 1192. CCA 1974 ss.106, 124(3). See above, para.39-192. The same result ensues if an application to enforce the agreement is dismissed except on technical grounds only: see CCA 1974 ss.106, 113(3)(c).
- 1193. CCA 1974 s.125(1).
- 1194. CCA 1974 s.125(2)–(4); see above, paras 34-082 and 34-083.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 39 - Credit and Security
Section 1. - The Regulation of Consumer Credit ¹
(I) - Judicial Control ¹¹⁹⁵

Jurisdiction and parties

39-199

In England and Wales the county court has exclusive ¹¹⁹⁶ jurisdiction to hear and determine any action by the creditor or owner ¹¹⁹⁷ to enforce ¹¹⁹⁸ a regulated agreement ¹¹⁹⁹ or any security ¹²⁰⁰ relating to the action, and any action to enforce a linked transaction ¹²⁰¹ against the debtor or hirer or his relative. ¹²⁰² The High Court has no jurisdiction to entertain such an action and it must be transferred to the county court. ¹²⁰³ A judgment or order of a county court for payment of a sum in proceedings arising out of a regulated agreement is enforceable in a county court only. ¹²⁰⁴ Except as provided by rules of court, ¹²⁰⁵ all the parties to a regulated agreement, and any surety, ¹²⁰⁶ must be made parties to any proceedings relating to the agreement. ¹²⁰⁷

Enforcement orders in cases of infringement

39-200

⚠ Section 127(1) ¹²⁰⁸ of the 1974 Act confers upon the court a wide discretion as to whether, and, if so, on what terms, it will make an enforcement order ¹²⁰⁹ ⚠ in cases of various infringements of the Act. In the case of an application for an enforcement order under s.55(2) (disclosure of information), ¹²¹⁰ s.61B(3) (duty to supply copy of overdraft agreement), ¹²¹¹ s.65(1) (improperly executed agreements), ¹²¹² s.105(7)(a) or (b) (improperly executed security instruments), ¹²¹³ s.111(2) (failure to serve copy of notice on surety), ¹²¹⁴ or s.124(1) or (2) (taking of a negotiable instrument in contravention of s.123), ¹²¹⁵ the court is to dismiss the application ¹²¹⁶ if, but only if, it considers it just to do so having regard to:

(i)

the prejudice caused to any person by the contravention in question, and the degree of culpability for it ¹²¹⁷; and

(ii)

the powers conferred on the court by s.127(2) (which permits the court, if it appears just to do so, to reduce or discharge any sum payable by the debtor or hirer, or any surety, ¹²¹⁸ so as to compensate him for prejudice suffered as a result of the contravention in question ¹²¹⁹), and by ss.135 ¹²²⁰ and 136 ¹²²¹ of the Act. ¹²²²

As has already been pointed out, ¹²²³ the provisions providing for “irredeemably unenforceable” agreements, ¹²²⁴ where the court was precluded altogether from making an enforcement order, have been repealed. ¹²²⁵

Enforcement orders on death of debtor or hirer

39-201

The court may make an order under s.86(2) of the 1974 Act enforcing an unsecured or partly secured agreement on the death of a debtor or hirer ¹²²⁶ if, but only if, the creditor or owner proves that he has been unable to satisfy himself that the present and future obligations of the debtor or hirer under the agreement are likely to be discharged. ¹²²⁷

Time orders

39-202

Section 129 of the 1974 Act empowers the court in certain circumstances to make a “time order”. ¹²²⁸ The four situations where a time order can be made are as follows ¹²²⁹: first, ¹²³⁰ on an application by the creditor or owner for an enforcement order ¹²³¹; second, ¹²³² on an application made by a debtor or hirer after service on him of a default notice under s.87, ¹²³³ or a notice under s.76(1) ¹²³⁴ or 98(1) ¹²³⁵; third, ¹²³⁶ on an application made by a debtor or hirer after he has been given a “NOSIA” under s.86B ¹²³⁷ or 86C ¹²³⁸; fourth ¹²³⁹ in an action brought by a creditor or owner to enforce a regulated agreement or any security, ¹²⁴⁰ or recover possession of any goods or land to which a regulated agreement relates. ¹²⁴¹ It will be seen that the court’s power to make a time order extends to practically all ¹²⁴² applications and actions connected with the enforcement of a regulated agreement or security provided in relation thereto.

Types of order

39-203

The time order must provide for one or both of the two following orders, as the court considers just—(1) payment by the debtor or hirer or any surety ¹²⁴³ of any sum owed ¹²⁴⁴ under a regulated agreement or a security ¹²⁴⁵ by such instalments, payable at such times, as the court, having regard to the means of the debtor or hirer and any surety, ¹²⁴⁶ considers reasonable ¹²⁴⁷; (2) the remedying by the debtor or hirer of any breach of a regulated agreement (other than non-payment of money) within such period as the court may specify. ¹²⁴⁸ The first type of order is not dissimilar to the type of instalment order that can already be made by the county court under the County Courts Act 1984. ¹²⁴⁹ The second type of order, however, has a more far-reaching effect. Without prejudice to anything done ¹²⁵⁰ by the creditor or owner before the commencement of the period specified in this type of order (“the relevant period”), he is precluded, while the relevant period subsists, from taking in relation to the agreement any action such as is mentioned in s.87(1) ¹²⁵¹ of the 1974 Act (terminating the agreement, demanding earlier payment of any sum, recovering possession of goods or land, enforcing a security, etc). ¹²⁵² Further, if the agreement, for example, provides for the payment of compensation in the event of failure to repair, he cannot treat the provision as to compensation as operative while the relevant period relating to remedying the failure to repair subsists. ¹²⁵³ During the relevant period the rights and remedies of the creditor or owner are completely suspended. If the breach to which the order relates is remedied within the relevant period, it is treated as not having occurred. ¹²⁵⁴ If it is not remedied, at the end of the relevant period, but not before, ¹²⁵⁵ the creditor or owner may proceed to enforce his contractual rights. ¹²⁵⁶

Discretionary

39-204

The power of the court to make a time order is discretionary. In First National Bank Plc v Syed ¹²⁵⁷ the Court of Appeal looked to the position of both the creditor and the debtor in deciding whether it was “just” to make a time order. Thus where there was history of default and merely sporadic payments by the debtor and a merely speculative (as opposed to realistic) prospect of an improvement in the debtor’s finances, it considered that it was not “just” to require the creditor to accept instalments which were too small even to keep down the accruing interest on the debtor’s account.

Variation and revocation

39-205

On the application of any person affected by a time order, the court may vary or revoke the order. ¹²⁵⁸

Interest payable on judgment debts

39-206

Section 130A ¹²⁵⁹ of the 1974 Act imposes notification requirements in relation to post-judgment interest ¹²⁶⁰ arising by virtue of a term in a regulated agreement, as it is not always obvious to judgment debtors that such interest is still payable. ¹²⁶¹ (The section does not apply in relation to post-judgment interest required to be paid under certain statutory provisions. ¹²⁶²) The section provides that a creditor or owner under a regulated agreement (other than a “non-commercial” ¹²⁶³ or “small” ¹²⁶⁴ agreement) ¹²⁶⁵ cannot recover such interest on a judgment debt until he gives ¹²⁶⁶ the debtor or hirer, free of charge, ¹²⁶⁷ notice in the prescribed form ¹²⁶⁸ after judgment and continues to give such a notice at intervals of not more than six months. Interest can only start running on the day the first notice is given ¹²⁶⁹ and ceases to run if the requisite subsequent notice is not given within the six-month period, although it resumes running the day after notice is given. ¹²⁷⁰

Protection orders

39-207

The court on the application of the creditor or owner under a regulated agreement may make such orders as it thinks just for protecting any property of the creditor or owner, or property subject to any security, from damage or depreciation pending the determination of any proceedings under the Act, including orders restricting or prohibiting use of the property or giving directions as to its custody. ¹²⁷¹

Power to impose conditions, or suspend operation of order

39-208

If it considers it just to do so, the court may, in an order made by it in relation to a regulated agreement, include provisions making the operation of any term of the order conditional on the doing of specified acts by any party to the proceedings. ¹²⁷² In the same circumstances, the court may include provisions suspending the operation of any term of the order either until such time as the court subsequently directs, or until the occurrence of a specified act or omission. ¹²⁷³ This latter power is used most frequently to suspend an order requiring the debtor under a hire-purchase or conditional sale agreement to deliver up the goods, ¹²⁷⁴ or to suspend a possession order in the case of an agreement secured on land, ¹²⁷⁵ but it is not confined to those situations. On the application of any person affected by a provision so inserted by the court, the court may vary the provision. ¹²⁷⁶

Power to vary agreements and securities

39-209

The court may in an order made by it under the 1974 Act include such provision as it considers just for amending any agreement or security in consequence of a term of the order. ¹²⁷⁷

Declaratory orders

39-210

Section 142 of the 1974 Act confers upon the county court ¹²⁷⁸ jurisdiction to make declaratory orders in two situations. First, where under any provision of the Act a thing can be done by a creditor or owner on an enforcement order ¹²⁷⁹ only, and either (a) the court dismisses (except on technical grounds only) ¹²⁸⁰ an application for an enforcement order, or (b) where no such application has been made or such an application has been dismissed on technical grounds only, an interested party applies specially ¹²⁸¹ to the court for a declaration, the court may if it thinks just make a declaration that the creditor or owner is not entitled to do that thing, ¹²⁸² and thereafter no application for an enforcement order in respect of it can be entertained. ¹²⁸³ A debtor or hirer, or a surety, can thus obtain a declaration that the creditor or owner is not entitled to do the thing in question, whether or not the creditor or owner applies to the court for an enforcement order. But this provision does not appear to entitle the creditor or owner to apply for a declaration that he is entitled to do the thing in question. ¹²⁸⁴ In Carey v HSBC Bank Plc ¹²⁸⁵ it was confirmed that s.142 is without prejudice to the general (discretionary) power of the court to grant declarations and that its purpose is to extend this general power so as to, in effect, enable the court (as well as granting the declaration) to bar any further application.

39-211

Secondly, where (a) a regulated agreement or linked transaction ¹²⁸⁶ is cancelled under s.69(1), ¹²⁸⁷ or becomes subject to s.69(2), ¹²⁸⁸ or (b) a regulated agreement is terminated under s.91, ¹²⁸⁹ and an interested party ¹²⁹⁰ applies specially ¹²⁹¹ to the court for a declaration, the court may make a declaration to that effect. ¹²⁹²

¹. See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf); Goode, Consumer Credit: Law and Practice (looseleaf); Goode, Consumer Credit Law (1989); Harding, Consumer Credit and Consumer Hire (1995); Philpott, The Law of Consumer Credit and Hire (2009).

¹¹⁹⁵. See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf), paras 2–128—2–145; and Goode, Consumer Credit: Law and Practice, Pt C, Ch.46.

¹¹⁹⁶. In Northern Ireland the jurisdiction of the county court is permissive and not mandatory: CCA 1974 ss.141(4), 143, SR 1981/225 Ord.30 r.3. See (on Northern Irish position): AIB Group (UK) Plc v Keenan [2012] NIQB 16. For transfer from the High Court, see CCA 1974 s.141(2), and below. See Guildprime Specialists Contractors Ltd v Knight Unreported September 24, 2012, EAT (EAT has no jurisdiction to consider enforceability of regulated credit agreement (loan to employee)).

¹¹⁹⁷. But a debtor or hirer is not so restricted.

¹¹⁹⁸. See Mills v Grove Securities Ltd [1996] C.C.L.R. 74 CA: service of statutory demand under Insolvency Act 1986 s.268 and (by concession) presentation of a bankruptcy petition by creditor under regulated agreement not “action ... to enforce a regulated agreement”.

¹¹⁹⁹. The exclusive jurisdiction does not apply to exempt agreements (see above, para.39-038), but it does apply to “non-commercial agreements” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), above, para. 39-049). See CPR Pt 7 r.9 7PD-003. Section 21 of the County Courts Act 1984 (actions for recovery of land and actions where title is in question) does not apply to a mortgage securing an agreement which is a regulated agreement (s.21(9)). CPR Pt 7PD 7B.

¹²⁰⁰. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1); see above, para.39-180.

- 1201. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.19(1), 189(1); see above, paras 39-055 et seq.
- 1202. CCA 1974 s.141(1). See CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in s.141(1), (2), (3A), (3B), references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see below, para.39-257) are to be read as references to the “improver”/“current bill payer”/“previous bill payer” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6)). See also the Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Act 1982 Pt II and Schs 4–7 (and SI 1990/2591) and the Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Act 1991. For “relative”, see CCA 1974 ss.184(1), 189(1).
- 1203. CCA 1974 s.141(2); Sovereign Leasing Plc v Ali [1992] C.C.L.R. 1. The High Court must of its own motion set aside any default judgment entered in such an action: Automobile Financial Services v Docherty Unreported November 10, 1987. Originally it was held that the High Court had no power to strike out such an action, but only to transfer it: Sovereign Leasing Plc v Ali, above. But see now s.40(1)(b) of the County Courts Act 1984, as substituted by s.2(1) of the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990 and Restick v Crickmore The Times, December 3, 1993 CA; Barclays Bank Plc v Brooks [1997] C.C.L.R. 60.
- 1204. High Court and County Courts (Jurisdiction) Order 1991 (SI 1991/724) art.8(1A) (as amended by SI 1995/205).
- 1205. CPR Pt 7 r.9 7PD-003 9.1. CPR Pt 7 PD 7B 9.1 and 9.2.
- 1206. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1); see above, para.39-183.
- 1207. CCA 1974 s.141(5).
- 1208. See CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in s.127, references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see below, para.39-257) are to be read as references to the “improver”/“current bill payer”/“previous bill payer” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6)).
- 1209.  Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1). See CPR Pt 7 r.9 7PD-003 3.1(6), 7.4. CPR Pt 7 PD 7B. Given the “multifactorial assessment” that must be made by the court, summary judgment is unlikely to be available: Newmafruit Farms Ltd v Pither [2016] EWHC 2205 (QB), [2017] C.C.L.R. 8.
- 1210. See above, para.39-076, added on February 10, 2011 by SI 2010/1010 reg.18.
- 1211. See above, para.39-092 n.558, added on February 10, 2011 by SI 2010/1010 reg.12.
- 1212. See above, para.39-093.
- 1213. See above, para.39-187.
- 1214. See above, para.39-174.
- 1215. See above, para.39-197.
- 1216. For the effect of dismissal on security, see CCA 1974 ss.106, 113(3); above, para.39-193.
- 1217. For cases where no enforcement order was made, see: PB Leasing Ltd v Patel and Patel (t/a Plankhouse Stores) [1995] C.C.L.R. 82 Cty Ct; Smerdon v Ellis [1997] C.L.Y. 960 Cty Ct; Re Dixon-Vincent [1997] C.L.Y. 958; Rendle v Hicks [1998] C.L.Y. 2504; Rahman v Brassil [1998] C.L.Y. 2503 Cty Ct.
- 1218. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1); see above, para.39-183.
- 1219. See National Guardian Mortgage Corp v Wilkes [1993] C.C.L.R. 1 Cty Ct (interest rate reduced); Rank Xerox Ltd v Hepple [1994] C.C.L.R. 1 Cty Ct (amount payable reduced); Hatfield v Hiscock [1998] C.C.L.R. 68 Cty Ct; London North Securities Ltd v Meadows [2005]

EWCA Civ 956, [2005] C.C.L.R. 7 (PPP premium not payable); Wilson v Hurstanger Ltd 206 WL 2334292 Cty Ct, affirmed [2007] EWCA Civ 299, [2007] C.C.L.R. 2 (administrative and legal costs discharged).

1220. See below, para.39-208.

1221. See below, para.39-209 n.1279.

1222. See Nissan Finance UK v Lockhart [1993] C.C.L.R. 39 CA: Court of Appeal will not normally interfere with the exercise of the discretion conferred by CCA 1974 s.127(1) unless there has been a failure to exercise it on the right principles.

1223. See above, para.39-094.

1224. The now repealed CCA 1974 s.127(3)–(5).

1225. Consumer Credit Act 2006 s.15 (in relation to agreements made on or after April 6, 2007).

1226. See above, para.39-175; and see CPR Pt 7 r.9 7PD–003 7.4; CCR Ord.49 r.4(9). CPR Pt 7 PD 7B.

1227. CCA 1974 s.128. See CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in s.128, references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see below, para.39-257) are to be read as references to the “current bill payer”/“previous bill payer” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6)).

1228. See CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in s.129, references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see below, para.39-257) are to be read as references to the “current bill payer”/“previous bill payer” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6)). For the content on an application for a time order, see CPR Pt 7 r.9 7PD–003 7.3; CCR Ord.49 r.4(5). CPR Pt 7 PD 7B 3.1; Pt 55 PD 55, 7.1; Form N440. See Jenkins v Cedar Holdings Ltd [1988] C.C.L.R. 34 Cty Ct: time order made by Registrar was a final and not interlocutory order (so any appeal subject to (now) CPR Sch.2, CCR Ord.37 r.6). See CCA 1974 s.129(3) in relation to Scotland.

1229. CCA 1974 s.129(1), as amended (i) by the Debtors (Scotland) Act 1987 s.108(1) and Sch.6 para.17 (to refer to the qualification in subs.(3) in relation to Scotland); and (ii) by the Consumer Credit Act 2006 s.16 (to add subs.(1)(ba), see below).

1230. CCA 1974 s.129(1)(a).

1231. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1) to mean an order under (i) CCA 1974 s.65(1) (above, para.39-093), (ii) CCA 1974 s.105(7)(a) or (b) (above, para.39-187), (iii) CCA 1974 s.111(2) (above, para.39-174) or (iv) CCA 1974 s.124(1) or (2) (above, para.39-197).

1232. s.129(1)(b). Note that a notice under CCA 1974 s.98A (see above, para.39-173) is not listed.

1233. See above, para.39-170.

1234. See above, para.39-164.

1235. See above, para.39-172.

1236. October 1, 2008, see SI 2007/330) by the Consumer Credit Act 2006 s.16, but regardless of when the agreement was made.

1237. See above, para.39-131.

1238. See above, para.39-134. But see CCA 1974 s.129A (inserted by Consumer Credit Act 2006 s.16(2)): debtor or hirer may only make an application for a time order if he has (i) given the creditor or owner a “notice of intent” indicating that he intends to apply for a time order and making proposals as to payment and (ii) waited 14 days.

1239. s.129(1)(c).

1240. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1); see above, para.39-180.

1241. See also CCA 1974 ss.90 (below, para.39-361), 92 (below, para.39-366), 126 (below, para.39-537).

1242. But not after the service of a s.98A(3) or (4)(b) notice (see above, para.39-173). See also Mills v Grove Securities Ltd [1996] C.C.L.R. 74 (statutory demand under the Insolvency Act 1986 can be set aside). But see s.130(3) (pledges).

1243. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1); see above, para.39-183.

1244. See Cedar Holdings Ltd v Jenkins [1988] C.C.L.R. 34 Ct; First National Bank Plc v Syed [1991] 2 All E.R. 250; Ashbroom Facilities v Bodley [1992] C.C.L.R. 31 Ct; Cedar Holdings Ltd v Thompson [1993] C.C.L.R. 7 Ct; Taylor [1993] Legal Action (8)14. In Southern and District Finance Plc v Barnes [1995] C.L.Y. 726 CA Leggatt L.J. stated that, once a creditor brings possession proceedings, he demands payment of the whole sum outstanding under the charge and so, whether or not the loan has actually been called in, that that sum is “owed”.

1245. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1); see above, para.39-180.

1246. Although by CCA 1974 s.130(1) the court is relieved from hearing evidence of means where, in accordance with rules of court, an offer to pay any sum by instalments is made by the debtor or hirer and accepted by the creditor or owner, difficulties can arise where the debtor or hirer makes no such offer, and does not appear, so that there may be no evidence of means.

1247. CCA 1974 s.129(2)(a). See also CCA 1974 s.136; below, para.39-209.

1248. CCA 1974 s.129(2)(b).

1249. County Courts Act 1984 s.71. A time order of this type does not suspend the remedies of the creditor or owner. But see (in relation to hire-purchase, conditional sale and consumer hire agreements) CCA 1974 ss.130(2), 130(4), 133 and also s.135.

1250. e.g. the creditor or owner may, for example, already have terminated the agreement but not repossessed goods, or both terminated and repossessed, but not recovered arrears of money due.

1251. See above, para.39-166.

1252. CCA 1974 s.130(5)(a).

1253. CCA 1974 s.130(5)(b).

1254. CCA 1974 s.130(5)(c).

1255. Unless the order is revoked under CCA 1974 s.130(6).

1256. Unless a fresh order is made.

1257. [1991] 2 All E.R. 250. See also Southern and District Finance Plc v Barnes [1995] C.L.Y. 726 CA (no time order to be made where debtor unlikely to be able to resume repayment by at least the contractual instalments). cf. Director General of Fair Trading v First National Bank Plc [2001] UKHL 52, [2002] 1 A.C. 481 at [28].

1258. CCA 1974 s.130(6). Presumably the court would revoke a time order on the application of the creditor or owner if the debtor or hirer failed to pay the instalments ordered to be paid.

- 1259. Inserted by the Consumer Credit Act 2006 s.17 on October 1, 2008 (SI 2006/3300) and applicable to agreements whenever made but only as regards judgments debts arising after commencement (see the 2006 Act Sch.3 para.13). See CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in s.130A, references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see below, para.39-257) are to be read as references to the “current bill payer”/“previous bill payer” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6)).
- 1260. CCA 1974 s.130A(9) defines this as interest calculated by reference to the period after the giving of the judgment under which the judgment debt is payable.
- 1261. See Director General of Fair Trading v First National Bank Plc [2001] UKHL 52, [2002] 1 A.C. 481: such a term, although it took the debtor by surprise, held not to be “unfair” under the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contract Regulations 1999 (SI 1999/2083), above paras 38-225 et seq. As noted above at para.38-201, those regulations are replaced, for contracts made on or after October 1, 2015, by provisions in the Consumer Rights Act 2015 Pt 2.
- 1262. viz (a) the AJ (Scotland) Act 1972 s.4; (b) the Judgments Enforcement (NI) Order 1981; and (c) County Courts Act 1984 s.74. The County Court (Interest on Judgments Debts) Order 1991 (SI 1991/1184) (L12) (made under County Courts Act 1984 s.74) provides that interest shall not be payable under that Order where the relevant judgment debt relates to a CCA 1974-regulated agreement.
- 1263. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see above, para.39-049.
- 1264. Defined in CCA 1974 s.17, see above, para.39-048.
- 1265. CCA 1974 s.130A(8). And see the further limitation as to interest awarded under statute, noted above.
- 1266. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1) (as amended by SI 2004/3236 art.2(2)) to mean “deliver or send by appropriate method”.
- 1267. CCA 1974 s.130A(4).
- 1268. CCA 1974 s.130A(6) and see the Consumer Credit (Information Requirements and Duration of Licences and Charges) Regulations 2007 (SI 2007/1167) regs 34–35 and Sch.5 (as amended by SI 2008/1751). The notice may be incorporated in a statement (e.g. a statement under CCA 1974 ss.77–78) or other notice (e.g. under CCA 1974 s.86B, 86C or 87) given under the Act: CCA 1974 s.130A(5).
- 1269. CCA 1974 s.130A(2).
- 1270. CCA 1974 s.130A(3).
- 1271. CCA 1974 s.131. See also CPR Pt 25; CPR Pt 23.
- 1272. CCA 1974 s.135(1)(a). See also CCA 1974 s.136, below, para.39-209.
- 1273. CCA 1974 s.135(1)(b), subject to the limitations contained in s.135(2) (goods not in possession or control of a person) and s.135(3) (consumer hire agreements).
- 1274. See below, paras 39-375, 39-377 and 39-454. But see CCA 1974 s.135(2).
- 1275. See Southern and District Finance Plc v Barnes [1995] C.L.Y. 726 CA: possession order suspended so long as terms of time order complied with.
- 1276. CCA 1974 s.135(4). Presumably the court is entitled thereby to revoke the provision.

- 1277. CCA 1974 s.136. In Southern and District Finance Ltd v Barnes [1995] C.L.Y. 726, the Court of Appeal held that the court had jurisdiction in consequence of a time order under CCA 1974 s.129 to reduce the contractual rate of interest in rescheduling the debt. See also Director General of Fair Trading v First National Bank Plc [2001] UKHL 52, [2002] 1 A.C. 481 at [28]. See also the power of the court to reopen agreements in the case of “unfair relationships”: CCA 1974 s.140B, below, paras 39-212 et seq.
- 1278. CCA 1974 s.189(1).
- 1279. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1) to mean an order under (i) CCA 1974 s.65(1) (above, para.39-093), (ii) CCA 1974 s.105(7)(a) or (b) (above, para.39-187), (iii) CCA 1974 s.111(2) (above, para.39-174) or (iv) CCA 1974 s.124(1) or (2) (above, para.39-197). See Carey v HSBC Bank Plc [2009] EWHC 3417 (QB): no declaration under s.142 where the debtor alleged breach of CCA 1974 s.78 (see above, para.39-132), as the court has no power to make an enforcement order in such a case.
- 1280. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), (5).
- 1281. i.e. under CCA 1974 s.142(1).
- 1282. See CCA 1974 s.113(3)(d): effect on security.
- 1283. CCA 1974 s.142(1). In Watson v Progressive Financial Services Ltd (Liverpool County Court; April 21, 2009) it was held that the wording of s.142(1) (“is not entitled”; “and thereafter no application ... shall be entertained”) presupposes an extant agreement where the creditor still needs to obtain an enforcement order and hence an order under s.142(1) could no longer be made once the debtor had fulfilled his obligations.
- 1284. Nevertheless, it seems the creditor or owner could bring such an action in the High Court (CPR Pt 50 r.2), since it is not an action to which CCA 1974 s.141 or CCA 1974 s.189(1) applies.
- 1285. [2009] EWHC 3417 (QB).
- 1286. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.19(1), 189(1); above, paras 39-055 et seq.
- 1287. See above, para.39-106.
- 1288. See above, para.39-108.
- 1289. See below, para.39-365.
- 1290. This presumably includes the creditor or owner.
- 1291. i.e. under CCA 1974 s.142(2).
- 1292. CCA 1974 s.142(2). Again, this provision would appear to preclude an application for a declaration that the agreement or transaction has not been cancelled or not become subject to CCA 1974 s.69(2), or that the agreement has not been terminated under CCA 1974 s.91.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 39 - Credit and Security
Section 1. - The Regulation of Consumer Credit ¹
(m) - Unfair Relationships ¹²⁹³

Extortionate credit bargains

39-212

⚠ The Consumer Credit Act 1974 ¹²⁹⁴ originally contained provisions ¹²⁹⁵ enabling the court to reopen a credit agreement if it found that the credit bargain was “extortionate”. ¹²⁹⁶ The threshold for intervention (that payments were “grossly exorbitant” or the bargain otherwise “grossly” contravened fair dealing) was very high ¹²⁹⁷ and hence very few challenges on this basis were successful. ¹²⁹⁸ The Consumer Credit Act 2006 repealed and replaced these provisions ¹²⁹⁹ with new ss.140A–140D. ¹³⁰⁰ The new provisions essentially lower the threshold to one of a relationship between the creditor and the debtor (taking into account both the credit agreement and “any related agreement”) that is “unfair to the debtor”. ¹³⁰¹ Such a claim succeeded in the Supreme Court in the context of the sale of PPI in Plevin v Paragon Personal Finance Ltd. ¹³⁰² ⚠

Wide application of “unfair relationship” provisions

39-213

⚠ It is important to note four points concerning the application of the “unfair relationship” provisions. First, the scope of the provisions is wide in generally extending to all consumer credit agreements with individuals ¹³⁰³ ⚠ and hence they apply irrespective of the size of the loan or purpose of the credit. ¹³⁰⁴ ⚠ The provisions apply not only to regulated credit agreements but also to most “exempt agreements”, ¹³⁰⁵ as well as “non-commercial agreements” ¹³⁰⁶ (and even, in theory, “small agreements” ¹³⁰⁷). They do not, however, apply to an agreement that is an exempt agreement by virtue of being a land mortgage or home purchase plan regulated under the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000. ¹³⁰⁸ ⚠

“Any related agreement”

39-214

⚠ Second, the power of the court is not confined to an examination and reopening of the terms of the credit agreement itself (the “main agreement” ¹³⁰⁹), but extends to an examination and reopening of “any related agreement”. ¹³¹⁰ This term is defined ¹³¹¹ to cover three categories of agreement: (a) any earlier credit agreement(s) consolidated by the main agreement to be reopened ¹³¹²; (b) a “linked transaction” ¹³¹³ ⚠ in relation to the main agreement or any previous agreement consolidated by it ¹³¹⁴; and (c) any security ¹³¹⁵ provided in relation to the main agreement, any previous credit agreement consolidated by it or a linked transaction within (b). ¹³¹⁶

“Spent” agreements

39-215

Third, even if the relationship between the creditor and debtor has come to an end, most usually if the debtor has repaid the credit, this does not preclude the court making a determination. ¹³¹⁷ Thus it may reopen credit agreements even if they have ended. ¹³¹⁸

Discretion

39-216

Finally, even if the relationship is found to be “unfair to the debtor”, the court has a discretion whether or not to reopen the credit agreement. The court might refuse to do so if, for example, the debtor unduly delayed in seeking relief ¹³¹⁹ or the debtor failed to disclose his true financial position ¹³²⁰ or the debtor obtained the credit by false representations. ¹³²¹

When relationship is “unfair to the debtor”

39-217

Section 140A(1) enables a court to make an order under s.140B ¹³²² if it finds that the relationship between the creditor and the debtor arising out of a credit agreement, or that agreement taken with any “related agreement”, ¹³²³ is “unfair to the debtor” as a result of one or more of three factors. Those factors ¹³²⁴ are: (a) any of the terms of the agreement (or any “related agreement”); (b) the way in which the creditor has exercised or enforced any of his rights under the agreement (or any “related agreement”); (c) “any other thing done (or not done) by, or on behalf of, the creditor (whether occurring before or after the making of the agreement or any ‘related agreement’)”. In relation to (b) and (c), the court is required ¹³²⁵ to look not only to the creditor’s actions (or inaction) but also to those of an “associate” or “former associate” of the creditor. ¹³²⁶

In determining whether one or more of the three factors in s.140A(1) give rise to an “unfair” relationship, s.140A(2) requires the court to “have regard to all matters it thinks relevant”, the subsection making it clear that these may include matters “relating to” the debtor and to the creditor (or an “associate” or “former associate” of the creditor ¹³²⁷). This general wording is a departure from the old “extortionate credit bargain” provisions; they listed various “factors” in relation to the debtor and creditor that the court was obliged to have regard to. ¹³²⁸ It seems clear that this reference to “matters relating to” the debtor or creditor is intended to preserve the relevance of those previously listed factors. ¹³²⁹

Post-contracting behavior

39-218

Factors (b) and (c) in s.140A(1) ¹³³⁰ are novel in that they relate to post-contracting behaviour. ¹³³¹ Other statutory provisions, for example the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 ¹³³² and the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contract Regulations 1999 ¹³³³ are more limited in focusing on the contractual terms at the time of contracting. ¹³³⁴

“Terms of the agreement or any related agreement”

39-219

The first factor ¹³³⁵ that can render the relationship “unfair to the debtor” is the actual terms of the credit agreement or any “related agreement”.¹³³⁶ It should be noted that, unlike the position under the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contract Regulations 1999,¹³³⁷ the question is not whether the terms themselves are “unfair”, but whether the terms render the relationship “unfair to the debtor”. Usually, the most relevant terms are likely to be those concerning the charge for credit (especially interest).¹³³⁸ However, other terms, for example those requiring the payment of excessive early redemption fees¹³³⁹ may, at least if considered in the context of other terms of the credit agreement, be held to render the relationship “unfair to the debtor”.¹³⁴⁰ Moreover, the terms of “any related agreement”¹³⁴¹ are also relevant, for example those in linked transactions that might impose obligations on a debtor¹³⁴² to a third party. Hence in *Link Financial Ltd v North Wilson*¹³⁴³ the credit relationship was held to be “unfair” because of the “draconian effect” of a term in the timeshare agreement that was financed by the credit agreement.

Charge for credit

39-220

It is clear that the charge for credit, although normally a “core term” under the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contract Regulations 1999¹³⁴⁴ and hence generally not open to challenge under those regulations, is very relevant in determining if the relationship is “unfair to the debtor” under the “unfair relationship” provisions.¹³⁴⁵ The previous “extortionate credit bargain” provisions explicitly required the court to have regard to the “interest rates prevailing at the time [the agreement] was made”.¹³⁴⁶ The case-law under the “unfair relationship” provisions has so far generally followed¹³⁴⁷ the previous approach under the old “extortionate credit bargain” provisions of judging interest rates against the market rate for that type of loan.¹³⁴⁸ Thus rates charged by banks, building societies and finance houses are of little relevance where money has been borrowed from a moneylender in circumstances that or for a purpose for which such institutions would not have lent money. Further, in relation to the (now repealed) Moneylenders Act, it had been said that “the rate of interest might in certain circumstances be of itself a fallacious test as to whether the transaction was harsh and unconscionable. In many circumstances one shilling interest for a week on £1, or five shillings interest on £1 for a short period, though an enormous rate of interest ought not to be set aside”.¹³⁴⁹ However, whilst under the old extortionate credit bargain provisions a subsequent rise or fall in interest rates was irrelevant,¹³⁵⁰ this may now be a relevant “matter”,¹³⁵¹ especially as the third factor¹³⁵² refers to inaction (for example, not lowering interest rates) by the creditor after the making of the agreement.

Exercise or enforcement of rights by creditor

39-221

⚠ The second factor¹³⁵³ that can render a relationship “unfair to the debtor” is “the way in which the creditor has exercised or enforced any of his rights” under either the credit agreement itself or “any related agreement”.¹³⁵⁴ Although it is the exercise or enforcement of the creditor’s rights that are material (and not, for example, the rights of third parties to any “related agreements”), the court must have regard¹³⁵⁵ to activities by or on behalf of an “associate”¹³⁵⁶ or “former associate” of the creditor.¹³⁵⁷ Requiring the court to evaluate how a creditor exercises or enforces his contractual rights is a further novel feature of these provisions. In the business context, the courts have so far not found that the enforcement by creditors of agreements on default have given rise to “unfair relationships”, although there are dicta that “arbitrary” or “exploitative” enforcement could do so.¹³⁵⁸ ⚠ Similarly, in so far as it was held that the reporting of arrears to a credit reference agency was not an “enforcement” of a temporarily unenforceable agreement (due to a breach of s.77¹³⁵⁹) it was further held that this did not give rise to an “unfair relationship”.¹³⁶⁰ However, in the consumer context there are various regulatory standards requiring creditors to exercise forbearance and consideration towards borrowers experiencing difficulty¹³⁶¹ ⚠ and it is likely these will inform decisions on whether enforcement in those contexts has rendered a relationship “unfair”. In *Re London Scottish Finance (In Administration)*¹³⁶² it was held that in the case of “irredeemably”¹³⁶³ unenforceable credit agreements, the sending of letters demanding payment of arrears and stating that failure could result in the loss of the debtors’ home (which was untrue) gave rise to an “unfair relationship” if this threat was a (not necessarily the only) cause of the debtors’ decision to pay. But demanding payment in the case of an unenforceable (but potentially enforceable under s.127) agreement did not. ¹³⁶⁴

Any other action by creditor

39-222

⚠ The third factor ¹³⁶⁵ that can render a relationship “unfair to the debtor” is any other ¹³⁶⁶ action or inaction ¹³⁶⁷ by, or on behalf of, ¹³⁶⁸ the creditor either before or after the making of the credit agreement or “any related agreement”. ¹³⁶⁹ Again, ¹³⁷⁰ the court must have regard ¹³⁷¹ to activities by or on behalf of an “associate” ¹³⁷² or “former associate” of the creditor ¹³⁷³ but not the activities of third parties to any “related agreements” (unless they are agents or associates). This third factor covers pre-contracting behaviour such as (mis)statements ¹³⁷⁴ made by the creditor, his agents or “associates” before the credit agreement (or “related” agreement) as well as their postcontracting behaviour. Initially, the courts were generally reluctant to undermine well-established principles of common law ¹³⁷⁵ or to augment existing regulatory regimes by imposing novel duties on creditors whether at the time of contracting or thereafter. ¹³⁷⁶ ⚠ However, in Plevin v Paragon Personal Finance Ltd ¹³⁷⁷ the sale of (expensive ¹³⁷⁸) PPI (payment protection insurance) in circumstances where neither the large amount nor existence of the commission received by the creditor ¹³⁷⁹ ⚠ was revealed to the debtor, was held by the Supreme Court to give rise to an “unfair relationship” despite the sale having been effected in accordance with the relevant regulatory regime. ¹³⁸⁰ Moreover, on the special facts of Patel v Patel, ¹³⁸¹ the omission to reduce the interest rate (when the bank base rate reduced) and to provide any elementary periodic documentary evidence of the debtor’s (rising) indebtedness over a long period of time (together with an initial “extortionate” interest rate) gave rise to an “unfair relationship”. An expansive approach to the jurisdiction was also adopted in Scotland v British Credit Trust Ltd. ¹³⁸² The limitation period for a claim in misrepresentation had expired but, citing Patel, ¹³⁸³ the Court of Appeal did not regard this as precluding a finding that those misrepresentations rendered the credit relationship “unfair”. ¹³⁸⁴

Applications ¹³⁸⁵

39-223

An application that the credit or “related agreement” be reopened may be made by the debtor or a surety, ¹³⁸⁶ even though no proceedings have been instituted by the creditor. ¹³⁸⁷ Such an application may, in England and Wales, be brought only in the county court. ¹³⁸⁸ Moreover, a credit or “related agreement” may also be reopened at the instance of the debtor or a surety:

(i)

in any proceedings to which the debtor and creditor are parties, being proceedings to enforce the credit agreement or any “related agreement” ¹³⁸⁹, or at the instance of a debtor or a surety in other proceedings in any court where the amount paid or payable under the credit agreement is relevant. ¹³⁹⁰

(ii)

A party to any such proceedings is entitled, in accordance with the rules of court, to have any person who might be the subject of an order under s.140B to be made a party. ¹³⁹¹

Onus of proof

39-224

⚠ Section 140B(9) ¹³⁹² of the 1974 Act provides that if, in proceedings under s.140B, the debtor or a surety alleges that the relationship between the creditor and debtor is “unfair to the debtor”, it is for the creditor to prove the contrary. ¹³⁹³ Hence it is clear, that the “legal” or persuasive burden of proof rests throughout on the creditor, who must satisfy the court, on the balance of probabilities, that the credit relationship is not “unfair to the debtor”. In earlier editions of this work it was submitted that the “evidential burden”, that is, the burden of producing sufficient evidence to raise the issue rests initially on the debtor, and that the court need not consider the issue if the debtor does no more than plead that the credit relationship is “unfair” to him without producing any or any sufficient evidence to require the court to consider it. ¹³⁹⁴ This approach appears to have been applied in Carey v HSBS Bank Plc, ¹³⁹⁵ where the claimant debtor adduced no evidence but merely relied on the creditor’s failure to supply a s.78 copy in breach of that provision. ¹³⁹⁶ It was held that this in itself could not found an “unfair relationship” claim and the claim was dismissed. ¹³⁹⁷ However, in Bevin v Datum Finance Ltd, ¹³⁹⁸ ⚠ where the debtor was seeking to set aside a statutory demand in bankruptcy proceedings and it was not clear that all the relevant evidence was before the court, Peter Smith J. disapproved the suggestion that the evidential burden lay on the debtor and required the creditor to adduce evidence to disprove the mere allegation of “unfair relationship”. It is suggested that whilst in principle it is enough for the debtor merely to allege an “unfair relationship” for the issue to be raised, if the debtor is the claimant then in practice he will need to provide supporting evidence if a CPR Pt 18 request for “further information” is served by the creditor. Moreover, even if the debtor is the defendant, it is suggested that if the creditor’s evidence provides no suggestion that the relationship is unfair, the court is likely to regard the creditor as having discharged the burden and to dismiss the debtor’s claim. ¹³⁹⁹ ⚠

Nature of relief ¹⁴⁰⁰

39-225

⚠ In reopening the agreement, the court may, ¹⁴⁰¹ make one or more of the seven types of order listed in s.140B(1) of the 1974 Act, viz:

(a)

require the creditor, or any associate ¹⁴⁰² or former associate of his, to repay the whole or part of any sum paid by the debtor or surety ¹⁴⁰³ by virtue of the agreement or any related agreement, ¹⁴⁰⁴ whether paid to the creditor or to any other person ¹⁴⁰⁵ ⚠; require the creditor, or any associate ¹⁴⁰⁶ or former associate of his, to do or not to do (or to cease doing) anything specified in the order in connection with the agreement or any related agreement ¹⁴⁰⁷; reduce or discharge any sum payable by the debtor or surety ¹⁴⁰⁸ by virtue of the agreement or any related agreement ¹⁴⁰⁹;

(b)

(c)

(d)

direct the return to a surety ¹⁴¹⁰ of any property provided by him for the purposes of the security ¹⁴¹¹;

(e) otherwise set aside the whole or part of any duty imposed on the debtor or a surety ¹⁴¹² by virtue of the agreement or any related agreement ¹⁴¹³;

(f) alter the terms of the agreement or any related agreement ¹⁴¹⁴;

(g) direct accounts to be taken ¹⁴¹⁵ between any persons. ¹⁴¹⁶

39-226

It is important to note that the court may require the creditor to repay sums paid to a person other than himself, ¹⁴¹⁷ and this is reinforced and extended by a specific provision ¹⁴¹⁸ to the effect that an order may be made notwithstanding that its effect is to place a burden on the creditor (or any associate or former associate of his) in respect of an advantage unfairly enjoyed by another person.

Reopening past or “spent” transactions

39-227

Although the old “extortionate credit bargain” provisions ¹⁴¹⁹ contained no such express words, the courts assumed that they were entitled to reopen an agreement which has been closed and settled, ¹⁴²⁰ but exercised their discretion with some reluctance after the lapse of a considerable period of time. The new “unfair relationship” provisions explicitly state that the court may determine that a relationship is unfair “notwithstanding that the relationship may have ended” ¹⁴²¹ and therefore the court may clearly make an order under s.140B in such a case.

Retrospective effect and limitation

39-228

The court’s powers are not limited to agreements made after the entry into force of the “unfair relationship” provisions but, subject to transitional provisions, extends to agreements and transactions made before that date. ¹⁴²² The limitation period for actions under the old “extortionate credit bargain” provisions caused controversy and similar issues arise under the new provisions. First, it seems ¹⁴²³ that a debtor who invokes the provisions is making a “claim for relief” for the purposes of the Limitation Act 1980 and, hence, that claim (even if raised by way of defence ¹⁴²⁴) is subject to the appropriate limitation period. Second, in principle, the limitation period for an action under the new provisions is 12 years under s.8(1) of the Limitation Act 1980 since the claim is a claim on a specialty. ¹⁴²⁵ But in relation to a claim for repayment (as opposed, for example, to a claim for relief from future liability), s.9(1) of the 1980 Act prescribes a limitation period of six years for “an action to recover any sum recoverable by virtue of any enactment”. ¹⁴²⁶ The limitation period will run from the date on which the cause of action accrued. It was held in Patel v Patel ¹⁴²⁷ that the cause of action under the new provisions is a continuing one accruing from day to day until the relationship ends. ¹⁴²⁸ This is in contrast to the position under the old extortionate credit bargain provisions where, after much controversy, it was assumed ¹⁴²⁹ that the cause of action accrued at the date of the agreement. Patel concerned the post-contracting behaviour (and omissions) of the creditor and it may be that if the allegations relate only to the terms and/or the pre-contracting behaviour of the debtor, then the date of the agreement is a more appropriate date from which the limitation period should run. In any event, if the provisions are invoked by way of legal setoff or counterclaim, such a claim is deemed to have been commenced on the date of the original action. ¹⁴³⁰

“Unfair terms”

39-229

The terms of a credit agreement where the debtor is a consumer may also be challenged by him as “unfair” and so not binding on him under the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999. ¹⁴³¹

-
- ^{1.} See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf); Goode, Consumer Credit: Law and Practice (looseleaf); Goode, Consumer Credit Law (1989); Harding, Consumer Credit and Consumer Hire (1995); Philpott, The Law of Consumer Credit and Hire (2009).
 - ^{1293.} See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf), paras 2–141A–2–141D; and Goode, Consumer Credit: Law and Practice, Pt C, Ch.47; Brown [2009] L.M.C.L.Q. 90; Lomnicka [2012] J.B.L. 713. Brown (2016) 36(2) L.S. 230-257.
 - ^{1294.} See also (on the existing equitable jurisdiction of the Chancery Division in relation to mortgages) Cityland and Property (Holdings) Ltd v Dabrah [1968] Ch. 166.
 - ^{1295.} See the similar provision in the Insolvency Act 1986 s.343 for the reopening of credit transactions of an individual who is adjudged bankrupt. See also Insolvency Act 1986 s.244 (winding-up of companies).
 - ^{1296.} ss.137–140 came into force on May 16, 1977, SI 1977/325 (c.11). See 29th edn of this work, paras 39-191 and Bentley and Howells [1989] Conv. 234. The OFT reviewed ss.137–140 in Unjust Credit Transactions (1991) and recommended the widening of the operation of the sections by the substitution of “unjust credit transaction” for “extortionate credit bargain”, but this was never implemented.
 - ^{1297.} Broadwick Financial Services v Spencer [2002] EWCA Civ 35, [2002] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 446 at [80]. See also First National Securities Ltd v Bertrand [1980] C.C.L.R. 1 Ct Ct; A Ketley Ltd v Scott [1981] I.C.R. 241; Wills v Wood (1984) 128 S.J. 222 CA; Davies v Directloans Ltd [1986] 1 W.L.R. 823.
 - ^{1298.} In Woodstead Finance v Petrou, The Times, January 23, 1986, the Court of Appeal did not disturb a mortgage at an APR of 42.5 per cent p.a. as this rate was normal for short-term loans. And see A Ketley Ltd v Scott [1981] I.C.R. 241; and Davies v Directloans Ltd [1986] 1 W.L.R. 823, where interest rates of 48 per cent and 21.7 per cent (APR), on agreements that were secured by a land mortgage, were upheld. Contrast, however, Barcabe v Edwards [1983] C.C.L.R. 11 Ct Ct, interest of 100 per cent p.a. (APR 319 per cent) on unsecured loan reduced to 40 per cent p.a.; Devogate v Jarvis Unreported 1987 Ct Ct, interest of APR 39 per cent reduced to 30 per cent where loan was well secured; Shahabinia v Gyachi (1988) Lexis interest rates on non-commercial loans of 104 per cent, 78 per cent and 156 per cent reduced to 15 per cent; Prestonwell Ltd v Capon (1988) Lexis, Ct Ct, interest rate of 42 per cent flat reduced by half, the risk being low; Castle Phillips & Co v Wilkinson [1992] C.C.L.R. 83 Ct Ct interest rate of 4 per cent per month (interest being deducted from the loan) on secured “bridging” loan reduced to 20 per cent p.a.; Batooneh v Asombang [2003] EWHC 2111 (QB) (interest rate of 100 per cent on informal commercial loan reduced to 25 per cent); County Leasing Ltd v East [2007] EWHC 2907 (reopening of business loan of over £370,000).
 - ^{1299.} Consumer Credit Act 2006 ss.19–22 on April 6, 2007 (SI 2007/123). The new provisions essentially apply to agreements whenever made, as long as they have not been paid off (become “completed agreements”) by April 6, 2008 (see the (complex) transitional provisions in the 2006 Act Sch.3 para.1(2) (definition of “completed agreement”) and para.14). On the application of the transitional provisions, see Soulsby and Soulsby v FirstPlus Financial Group Plc (unreported, March 5, 2010, QBD, Leeds & District Registry Mercantile Court) (old provisions applied) and Barnes v Black Horse Ltd [2011] EWHC 1416 (QB) (new provisions applied, see below, para.39–214 n.1314).

1300. s.140D (Advice and information from OFT) was repealed on April 1, 2014, by SI 2013/1881 art.20(4), when consumer credit regulation was transferred to the FCA (see above, para.39–002) as the FCA has general power to issue guidance under the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 s.139A).

1301. See further, below, para.39–217—39–222.

1302. ![2014] UKSC 61 (see further below, para.39–222) and see Scotland v British Credit Trust Ltd [2014] EWCA Civ 790. For previous cases where the claim was successful, see: Patel v Patel [2009] EWHC 3264 (“exorbitant” interest and lack of transparency in loans between friends); Morrison v Betterpace Ltd (t/a Log Book Loans) (Lowestoft Cty Ct, September 1, 2009) (APR of 485.25 of refinancing loan reduced to APR of 343.4 per cent charged on previous loan); MBNA Europe Ltd v Thorius (Newcastle Cty Ct) [2010] E.C.C. 8 (sale of PPI); Barons Finance Ltd v Olubisi (Mayor’s & City of London Court, April 26, 2010) (vulnerable consumer “exploited”); Nelmes v NRAM Plc [2016] EWCA Civ 491 (in business context, payment by the lender of a “procurement fee” (being half the arrangement fee charged by the lender to the borrower) to the borrower’s broker deprived the borrower of the disinterested advice of his broker and hence rendered the credit relationship “unfair”; lender accountable to borrower for all the undisclosed “procurement fee” plus interest from the date of payment); Townson v FCE Bank Plc (t/a Ford Credit), Unreported, June 23, 2016, (Birmingham Cty Ct) (“unfair relationship” found where PPI (of which the debtor was unaware and by implication did not want) was sold by car dealer to a debtor under a hire-purchase agreement). For cases where the claim was unsuccessful, see: Khodari v Tamimi [2009] EWCA 1109, [2010] C.C.L.R. 3 (“very large” 10 per cent charge for short-term loans to wealthy compulsive gambler, where credit risk was high and “defendant wanted these loans and could well afford to repay them”); Maple Leaf Macro Volatility Master Fund v Rouvroy [2009] EWHC 257, [2009] C.C.L.R. 9 ((obiter) funding agreement to assist acquisition of control of company); McGuffick v RBS Plc [2009] EWHC 2386 (reporting to credit reference agencies whilst agreement was “temporarily unenforceable” due to breach of CCA 1974 s.77); Carey v HSBC Bank Plc [2009] EWHC 3417 (QB) (breach of CCA 1974 s.78); Shaw v Nine Regions Ltd [2009] EWHC 3514 (“log book” loan with high interest rate of 119 per cent per annum); Black Horse Ltd v Speak [2010] EWHC 1866 (QB); Consolidated Finance Ltd v Hunter [2010] B.P.I.R. 1322 (loan at market rate for similar short-term bridging loans); Paragon Mortgages Ltd v McEwan-Peters [2011] EWHC 2491 (Comm); Rahman v HSBC Bank Plc [2012] EWHC 11 (Ch); Deutsche Bank (Suisse) SA v Khan [2013] EWHC 482 (Comm), noted at [2013] C.C.L.R. 5; Chubb v Dean [2013] EWHC 1282 (Ch); Conlon v Black Horse Ltd [2013] EWCA Civ 1658, [2014] C.C.L.R. 4; Gardner v Clydesdale Bank Ltd [2013] EWHC 4356 (Ch); Link Financial Ltd v North Wilson [2014] EWHC 252 (Ch), [2014] C.C.L.R. 6; Scotland v British Credit Trust Ltd [2014] EWCA Civ 790 (mis-selling of PPI); Graves v Capital Home Loans [2014] EWCA Civ 1297 (buy-to-let loan); McMullon v Secure the Bridge Ltd [2015] EWCA Civ 884 (bridging loan); Barclays Bank Plc v McMillan [2015] EWHC 1596 (Comm) (loan to finance US law firm’s partner’s capital subscription on usual terms); Bluestone Mortgages Ltd v Momoh [2015] EW Misc B4 (CC) (refusal of permission to appeal the decision of the county court that failure to notify in advance that mortgagee would invoke usual clause in buy-to-let mortgage permitting him to pay outstanding lease charges if mortgagor failed to do so, did not give rise to an unfair relationship); Commercial First Business Ltd v Pickup [2017] C.T.L.C. 1, [2017] C.C.L.R. 15 (although only the fact (and not the amount) of commission was disclosed by the brokers, as the debtors were experienced property investors and knew all the relevant facts; Deutsche Bank (Suisse) SA v Khan [2013] EWHC 482 (Comm), see this footnote in Main Work, Vol.II, was applied to deny that the relationship was “unfair”).

1303. !“Credit agreement” for these purposes is defined in CCA 1974 s.140C(1)(a) to mean (essentially) a consumer credit agreement (see above, para.39–016). Moreover, s.140C(2) defines “debtor” and “creditor” for these purpose to cover assignees, in the same way as does CCA 1974 s.189(1) in relation to consumer credit agreements. See the definition of “credit” in CCA 1974 s.9(1): above, para.39–019. The power to reopen does not apply to hiring agreements, but see CCA 1974 s.132 (above, para.33–090). Nor does it apply to a sale and leaseback transaction: Lavin v Johnson [2002] EWCA Civ 1138 (not “credit”, for the purposes of the previous extortionate credit bargain provisions). See also Maple Leaf Macro Volatility Master Fund v Rouvroy [2009] EWHC 257 (funding agreement did not provide “credit”); Bank of Ireland (UK) Plc v McLaughlin [2016] NICA 33; [2017] C.C.L.R. 5 (refusal of appeal from the lower court ([2014] NIQB 104) that a guarantor of a corporate debtor could not invoke the unfair relationship provisions); Newmafruit Farms Ltd v Pither [2016] EWHC 2205 (QB), [2017] C.C.L.R. 8 (corporate debtor could not invoke the unfair relationship provisions). See s.140C(5)–(6) (adaptation of language). And see CCA 1974 s.189C(1)(a): a “green deal consumer credit agreement” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(8) to mean a green deal plan (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see below, para.39–257) that is to be treated as a consumer credit agreement for the purpose of this Act by virtue of CCA 1974 s.189B(1) is to be treated as credit agreement for the purposes of s.140A and 140B. And note CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in s.140A, references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” are to be read as references to the “improver”/“current bill payer”/“previous bill payer” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6)).

1304.

! Patel v Patel [2009] EWHC 3264: business loan (albeit between family members) of £200,000 re-opened. And note the “buy-to-let” loans considered in Paragon Mortgages Ltd v McEwan-Peters [2011] EWHC 2491 (Comm); Graves v Capital Home Loans Ltd [2014] EWCA Civ 1297; Bluestone Mortgages Ltd v Momoh [2015] EW Misc B4 (CC) and Nelmes v NRAM Plc [2016] EWCA Civ 491.

1305.

For exempt agreements, see above, paras 39–038 et seq. There are two exceptions: see below, n.1310.

1306.

Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1); above, para.39–049; Khodari v Tamimi [2009] EWCA 1109.

1307.

CCA 1974 s.17; above, para.39-048.

1308.

! i.e. exempt under RAO art.60C(2) (see above, para.39–039); s.140A(5). See AIB v Donnelly [2015] NI Master 13 (Master Hardstaff) (confirmation that unfair relationship provisions do not apply to FCA regulated mortgage contracts). Hence when the Mortgage Credit Directive (see above, para.39–003) is implemented on March 21, 2016 and the regulation of second charge residential mortgages is transferred to the 2000 Act regime, this protection will be lost for such mortgages. The Mortgage Credit Directive came into force on March 21, 2016 and hence the relevant protection has been lost.

1309.

As so designated in CCA 1974 s.140C(4).

1310.

CCA 1974 s.140A(1); s.140B.

1311.

CCA 1974 s.140C(4).

1312.

CCA 1974 s.140C(4)(a). See s.140C(7) (meaning of “consolidated” for these purposes) and s.140C(8) (series of consolidated agreement are “related agreements” in relation to final main agreement). See Barnes v Black Horse Ltd [2011] EWHC 1416 (QB): “related” agreements that were consolidated into a new agreement were subject to the old “extortionate credit bargain” provisions (see above, para.39–212) and not the new “unfair relationship” regime (because they were “completed” agreements, see the transitional provisions in the Consumer Credit Act 2006 Sch. para.14, above, para.39–213 n.1301), but they were nevertheless held relevant to the application of s.140A to the new agreement (even though no order under s.140B could be made in relation to them).

1313.

! CCA 1974 s.19, see above, paras 39–055 et seq. And see CCA 1974 s.140A(5): if main (credit) agreement is not regulated, to be treated as such for purposes of deciding if a transaction is a “linked transaction”. Examples are compulsory PPI (CCA 1974 s.19(1)(a)) and optional PPI (CCA 1974 s.19(1)(c)). See Townson v FCE Bank Plc (t/a Ford Credit), Unreported, June 23, 2016 (Birmingham Cty Ct), (PPI policy held to be a “linked transaction” within s.19(1)(c) in relation to the credit agreement (and hence a “related transaction”); “unfair relationship” found where that PPI (of which the debtor was unaware and by implication did not want) was sold by car dealer to a debtor under a hire-purchase agreement).

- 1314. CCA 1974 s.140C(4)(b).
- 1315. CCA 1974 s.189(1) and see above, para.39–180. See CCA 1974 s.140A(6) (if main (credit) agreement is not regulated, to be treated as such for purposes of definition of “security” in CCA 1974 s.189(1) in this context).
- 1316. CCA 1974 s.140C(4)(c).
- 1317. CCA 1974 s.140A(4), see below.
- 1318. See further, below, para.39–227.
- 1319. This would apply especially to a “spent” agreement: see para.39–227 (and, for decisions under the old “extortionate credit bargain” provisions, see First National Securities Ltd v Bertrand [1980] C.C.L.R. 1 Cty Ct; and Davies v Directloans Ltd [1986] 1 W.L.R. 823).
- 1320. A Ketley Ltd v Scott [1981] I.C.R. 241 (a decision under the old “extortionate credit bargain” provisions).
- 1321. A Ketley Ltd v Scott, above (inflated valuation of security given); for further refusals under the old “extortionate credit bargain” provisions, see First National Securities Ltd v Bertrand Unreported 1978 Cty Ct; Premier Finance Co Ltd v Gravesande [1983] C.C.L.R. 1 Cty Ct. But in Link Financial Ltd v North Wilson [2014] EWHC 252 (Ch), [2014] C.C.L.R. 6, misrepresentations by the debtor did not, on the facts, preclude a finding that the relationship was “unfair”.
- 1322. See below, para.39–225.
- 1323. See above, para.39-214.
- 1324. CCA 1974 s.140A(1)(a)–(c).
- 1325. CCA 1974 s.140A(3).
- 1326. “Associate” is defined in CCA 1974 s.184. But, as noted below (para.39-221 and 39-222), the actions (or inaction) of a third party to a related agreement (who is not an “associate” or “former associate”) is not relevant.
- 1327. See previous note.
- 1328. The (repealed) s.138(2)(b), (3)–(5), As well as these factors, the court had to have regard to “interest rates prevailing” at the time of contracting and “any other relevant considerations”: (repealed) s.138(2)(a), (b).
- 1329. The (repealed) s.138(3) listed (as factors applicable in relation to the debtor) the debtor’s age, experience, business capacity and state of health, and the degree to which he was under financial pressure, and the nature of that pressure. Although there was no specific requirement that these subjective factors should have been known to the creditor, nor that a particular factor should have influenced the terms of the credit bargain, the courts implied such requirements: Coldunell Ltd v Gallon [1986] 1 Q.B. 1184 (CA) and see Deutsche Bank (Suisse) SA v Khan [2013] EWHC 482 (Comm), noted at [2013] C.C.L.R. 5, where Hamblen J. adopted a similar approach. The (repealed) s.138(4) listed (as factors applicable in relation to the creditor) the degree of risk accepted by him (having regard to the value of any security provided), his relationship to the debtor and whether a “colourable cash price” was quoted for any goods or services included in the credit bargain.

- 1330. See below, paras 39–221 and 39–222.
- 1331. CCA 1974 s.140A(1)(c) also covers pre-contracting behaviour: see below, para.39–222.
- 1332. See above, Vol.I, paras 15–062 et seq.
- 1333. SI 1999/2083, see above, paras 38–202 et seq. As noted above at para.38–201, for contracts made on or after October 1, 2015, these regulations are to be replaced by provisions in the Consumer Rights Act 2015 Pt 2.
- 1334. As did the (now repealed) “extortionate credit bargain” provisions themselves.
- 1335. CCA 1974 s.140A(1)(a).
- 1336. Defined in s.140C(4), see above, para.39–214.
- 1337. SI 1999/2083, see above, paras 38–202 et seq. For the application of the predecessor regulations to a mortgage, see Falco Finance Ltd v Gough [1999] C.C.L.R. 16, Cty Ct. As noted above at para.38–201, these regulations are replaced, for contracts made on or after October 1, 2015, by provisions in the Consumer Rights Act 2015 Pt 2.
- 1338. See below, para.39–220.
- 1339. Early redemption payments under regulated agreements are controlled by the Act (see above, para.39–158) and it is a moot point whether those protections will, in effect, be extended to nonregulated agreements on the basis that any other approach would be “unfair to the debtor”.
- 1340. For case-law under the old “extortionate credit bargain” provisions (which required “grossly exorbitant” payments), see Grangewood Securities Ltd v Ellis Unreported November 9, 2000, Milton Keynes County Court. But see Broadwick Financial Services v Spencer [2002] EWCA Civ 35, [2002] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 446 [61]–[78].
- 1341. Defined in s.140C(4), see above, para.39–214.
- 1342. Or his relative.
- 1343. [2014] EWHC 252 (Ch), [2014] C.C.L.R. 6.
- 1344. See above, paras 38–202 et seq. As noted above at para.38–201, these regulations are replaced, for contracts made on or after October 1, 2015, by provisions in the Consumer Rights Act 2015 Pt 2.
- 1345. For successful challenges see: Patel v Patel [2009] EWHC 3264 (inter alia, “exorbitant” interest) and some county court decisions (Morrison v Betterpace Ltd (t/a Log Book Loans) Lowestoft Cty Ct, September 1, 2009 (APR of 485.25 of refinancing loan reduced to APR of 343.4 per cent charged on previous loan) and Barons Finance Ltd v Olubisi Mayor’s & City of London Court, April 26, 2010 (vulnerable consumer “exploited”)). For unsuccessful challenges see Khodari v Tamimi [2009] EWCA 1109, [2010] C.C.L.R. 3 (“very large” 10 per cent charge for short-term loans); Shaw v Nine Regions Ltd [2009] EWHC 3514 (APR 341 per cent and interest rate of 119 per cent p.a.); Consolidated Finance Ltd v Hunter [2010] B.P.I.R. 1322 (loan at market rate for similar short-term bridging loans); Chubb v Dean [2013] EWHC 1282 (Ch) (charges ((i) interest of 1.85 per cent per month compounded monthly and (ii) a 1.25 per cent per month “facility fee”) “even in combination” merely represented a “stiff commercial bargain”; an unfair relationship would have required a “very much higher interest rate”).
- 1346. (The repealed) s.138(2)(a).
- 1347. Implicitly; the case-law under the new provisions has made no reference to the old “extortionate credit bargain” case-law. See the cases cited in n.1347. For the old case-law on interest rates, see: A Ketley Ltd v Scott [1981] I.C.R. 241; Davies v Directloans Ltd [1986] 1 W.L.R. 823;

Woodstead Finance v Petrou, The Times, January 23, 1986 (CA); Broadwick Financial Services Ltd v Spencer [2002] EWCA Civ 35, [2002] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 446.

- 1348. The OFT's Guidance under (the now repealed) CCA 1974 s.140D (Unfair Relationships: Enforcement action under Part 8 of the Enterprise Act 2002 (OFT 854Rev), May 2008, revised August 2011) also accepted that this should be the approach, para.3.21, even requiring the cost to be "much higher" than market rates for an "unfair relationship" to arise.
- 1349. Blair v Buckworth (1908) 24 T.L.R. 474, 476.
- 1350. The wording was: "prevailing at the time [the agreement] was made". See Paragon Finance Plc v Nash [2001] EWCA Civ 1466, [2002] 1 W.L.R. 685; Broadwick Financial Services v Spencer [2002] EWCA Civ 35, [2002] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 446; Paragon Finance Plc v Pender [2005] EWCA Civ 760, [2005] C.C.L.R. 5.
- 1351. CCA 1974 s.140A(2). See Patel v Patel [2009] EWHC 3284.
- 1352. CCA 1974 s.140A(1)(c), see below, para.39–222.
- 1353. CCA 1974 s.140A(1)(b).
- 1354. Defined in CCA 1974 s.140C(4), see above, para.39–214.
- 1355. "except to the extent that it is not appropriate to do so".
- 1356. Defined in CCA 1974 s.184.
- 1357. CCA 1974 s.140A(3).
- 1358.  Maple Leaf Macro Volatility Master Fund v Rouvroy [2009] EWHC 257 (Comm); Paragon Mortgages Ltd v McEwan-Peters [2011] EWHC 2491 (Comm); Rahman v HSBC Bank Plc [2012] EWHC 11 (Ch); Deutsche Bank (Suisse) SA v Khan [2013] EWHC 482 (Comm), noted at [2013] C.C.L.R. 5; Graves v Capital Home Loans [2014] EWCA Civ 1297. See also Bluestone Mortgages Ltd v Faith Momoh [2015] EW Misc B4 (CC) (refusal of permission to appeal the decision of the county court that failure to notify in advance that mortgagee would invoke usual clause in buy-to-let mortgage permitting him to pay outstanding lease charges if mortgagor failed to do so, did not give rise to an unfair relationship).
- 1359. See above, para.39–128.
- 1360. McGuffick v RBS Plc [2009] EWHC 2386 (Comm).
- 1361.  See the FCA Handbook (a) CONC Module, especially CONC 7 and (b) (in relation to regulated mortgages) MCOB Module, especially MCOB 13. See also the Standards of Lending Practice (financial difficulties sections), above, para.39-013.
- 1362. [2013] EWHC 4047 (Ch).
- 1363. By virtue of the now repealed CCA 1974 s.127(3), see above, para.39–094.
- 1364. McGuffick v RBS Plc [2009] EWHC 2386 (Comm) (above, n.1362) followed.
- 1365. CCA 1974 s.140A(1)(c).
- 1366. i.e. other than the exercise or enforcement of rights by the creditor, referred to in CCA 1974 s.140A(1)(b), see above, para.39–221.
- 1367. "any other thing done (or not done)".

- 1368. It was confirmed in Plevin v Paragon Personal Finance Ltd [2014] UKSC 61 (reversing [2013] EWCA Civ 1658 (followed in Scotland v British Credit Trust Ltd [2014] EWCA Civ 790)) that these words required an agency relationship and should not be construed more broadly. It would also seem (although this issue was not determined by the Supreme Court) that (if applicable) the “deemed agency” in CCA 1974 s.56(2) (see, above, para.39–075 and below, para.39–302) could also render a creditor liable under s.140A(1)(c) for the acts of a “negotiator” (and see Scotland v British Credit Trust Ltd [2014] EWCA Civ 790)).
- 1369. Defined in CCA 1974 s.140C(4), see above, para.39–214.
- 1370. See the similar position under CCA 1974 s.140A(1)(b), above, para.39–221.
- 1371. “except to the extent that it is not appropriate to do so”.
- 1372. Defined in CCA 1974 s.184.
- 1373. CCA 1974 s.140A(3).
- 1374. For cases under the Moneylenders Acts jurisdiction reopening loans on this basis, see Victorian Daylesford Syndicate Ltd v Dott [1905] 2 Ch. 624; Carringtons Ltd v Smith [1906] 1 K.B. 79; and (debtor improperly induced to borrow) Lewis v Mills (1914) 30 T.L.R. 438. See also (debtor’s vulnerability known to creditor): Bonnard v Dott (1906) 21 T.L.R. 491; Part v Bond (1906) 22 T.L.R. 253; Blair v Buckworth (1908) 24 T.L.R. 474; and (debtor did not understand terms): Levene v Greenwood (1904) 20 T.L.R. 389; Carringtons Ltd v Smith, above; Levene v Titchener (1907) 23 T.L.R. 508; Harris v Clarson (1910) 27 T.L.R. 30; Stirling v Rose (1913) 30 T.L.R. 67. See Deutsche Bank (Suisse) SA v Khan [2013] EWHC 482 (Comm), noted at [2013] C.C.L.R. 5 (misrepresentations alleged but not proved).
- 1375. Such as (i) the law on misrepresentation (see Neuberger L.J. in Harrison v Black Horse Ltd [2011] EWCA Civ 1128 at [30]–[31], criticising the “open-ended approach” of the judge in Yates v Nemo Personal Finance, Manchester Cty Ct, May 14, 2010); (ii) promissory estoppel (see Paragon Mortgages Ltd v McEwan-Peters [2011] EWHC 2491 (Comm)); (iii) fiduciary law, breaches of statutory duty and negligence (see Harrison v Black Horse Ltd [2010] EWHC 3152 (QB)). But see Barnes v Black Horse Ltd [2011] EWHC 1426 (QB), per H.H.J. Waksman Q.C.: “it is not inconceivable that matters that may not be sufficient to generate duties of a fiduciary or tortious nature, or breaches thereof”, may be relevant in the unfair relationship context.
- 1376.  See Lomnicka [2012] J.B.L. 713 at 727 and Lomnicka, “The impact of rule-making by financial services regulators on the common law: the lessons of PPI”, in Gullifer and Vogenauer, English and European Perspectives on Contract and Commercial Law: Essays in Honour of Hugh Beale (Hart, 2014), Ch.4. See Carey v HSBC Bank Plc [2009] EWHC 3417 (QB): refusal to give the “more dramatic remedy” available under the “unfair relationship” provisions when a more limited sanction (temporary unenforceability) was available under the CCA 1974. But note Scotland v British Credit Trust Ltd [2014] EWCA Civ 790 per Kitchen L.J. (the fact that there was an alternative (albeit time-barred) claim under CCA 1974 s.75 (see below, para.39–303) did not preclude application of s.140A).
- 1377. [2014] UKSC 61.
- 1378. The premium (for a £60,000 loan) was £10,200 for five years; equivalent standalone cover would only have cost £2,083.84.
- 1379.  87 per cent of the premium, paid by the insurer, an associated company of the creditor. The FCA has intervened in relation to PPI (see FCA PS 17/3: Payment protection insurance complaints: Feedback on CP16/20 and final rules and guidance (March 2017)) and has set a single 50 per cent commission “tipping point” (with undisclosed profit-share (as defined) being treated in the same way as undisclosed commission) at which it states that firms should presume, for the purposes of handling PPI complaints and making recompense (the excess over 50 per cent together with interest), that the failure to disclose commission gives rise to an unfair relationship under s.140A.

- 1380. In the “ICOB” (now ICOBS) Module of the FCA Handbook, issued by the FSA under statutory powers (FSMA 2000 s.138 replaced by new s.137A) after the requisite rigorous consultation which considered at length, and decided against, requiring positive disclosure of the fact and amount of commissions. In the Court of Appeal (reversed by the Supreme Court) Neuberger M.R. had stated that the “touchstone must ... be the standard imposed by the regulatory authorities ... not resort to a visceral instinct that the relevant conduct is beyond the pale” ([2011] EWCA Civ 1128, at [58]).
- 1381. [2009] EWHC 3264 (QB). A family elder was advanced a loan of £200,000 in 1992 for his small retail businesses by his younger, but commercially much more sophisticated, former protege at the “exorbitant” rate of 20 per cent per annum compounded monthly when the bank rate was 7 per cent. With very few repayments demanded, the indebtedness had grown to over £1m.
- 1382. [2014] EWCA Civ 790.
- 1383. See also below, para.39–228.
- 1384. This was so even when the creditor’s right of recourse against the misrepresenter (whether statutory (under s.75(2), see below, para.39–303) or common law/contractual (in relation to a s.56 agency claim, see above, para.39–075)) was also time-barred.
- 1385. The relevant provisions (CCA 1974 s.140B(1) and s.140B(2)) are similar to the now repealed CCA 1974 s.139(2) and s.139(1) (as amended). See CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A in CCA 1974 s.140B, references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see below, para.39–257) are to be read as references to the “improver”/“current bill payer”/“previous bill payer” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6)).
- 1386. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1); see above, para.39–183. See also CCA 1974 s.140C(2).
- 1387. CCA 1974 s.140B(2)(a).
- 1388. CCA 1974 s.140B(4) For applications in the county court, see CPR Pt 9 7PD–003. For Scotland, see s.140A(3)(b), (5). For Northern Ireland, see s.140B(4)(c), (6), (7). See also the Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Act 1982 ss.16–19 and sch.4. CPR Pt 7PD 7B.
- 1389. Defined in CCA 1974 s.140C(4); see above, para.39–214. For case-law under the (now repealed) “extortionate credit bargain” provisions, see City Mortgage Corp Ltd v Baptiste [1997] C.C.L.R. 64. See also Rahman v Sterling Credit Ltd [2001] 1 W.L.R. 496 CA: an application by way of counterclaim (under (the now repealed) CCA 1974 s.139(1)) could be made in proceedings to enforce a possession order already made, as these were proceedings to enforce any security (and see now the definition of “related agreement” in CCA 1974 s.140C(4) which covers security).
- 1390. CCA 1974 s.140C(2)(c).
- 1391. CCA 1974 s.140B(8).
- 1392. See the (now repealed) provision to similar effect in relation to the “extortionate credit bargain” provisions in CCA 1974 s.171(7).
- 1393. cf. the “watershed” of 48 per cent in the (repealed by the Consumer Credit Act 1974) Moneylenders Act 1927 s.10 below, under which the burden of proof rested upon the debtor.
- 1394. The position was clearer under the now repealed “extortionate credit bargain” provisions in that CCA 1974 s.138(2) referred to “such evidence as is adduced”. In Coldunell v Gallon [1986] Q.B. 1184, 1202 Oliver L.J. said that the creditor’s burden in relation to the old “extortionate credit bargain” provisions “is sufficiently discharged by showing that the bargain was on its face a proper and not an extortionate credit bargain and that the [creditor] acted in a way that an ordinary commercial lender would be expected to act”.

1395. [\[2009\] EWHC 3417 \(QB\)](#), [134], [193]–[194].

1396. On CCA 1974 s.78, see above, para.39-132.

1397. [\[2009\] EWHC 3417 \(QB\)](#), [134], [193]–[194]. H.H.J. Waksman Q.C. also stated: “It is equally appropriate to strike [the claim] out on the basis of no reasonable grounds”.

1398. ![\[2011\] EWHC 3542 \(Ch\)](#). Carey v HSBS Bank Plc was not cited. Bevin v Datum Finance Ltd was noted in Bluestone Mortgages Ltd v Momoh [2015] EW Misc B4 (CC) but the Court of Appeal nevertheless refused permission to appeal a summary judgment that the relationship was not unfair even though no evidence was adduced by the creditor to discharge the burden of proof.

1399. !As occurred in Carey v HSBS Bank Plc and Axton v GE Money Mortgages Ltd [2015] EWHC 1343 (QB) (Datum Finance Ltd distinguished and summary judgment given where debtor had no prospects of success) as was the case in Bluestone Mortgages Ltd v Momoh [2015] EW Misc B4 (CC), see previous note. And see Re M [2010] EWHC 2324 (Admin): leave to amend to include a s.140A claim on appeal refused, where no supporting evidence provided.

1400. The relevant provision (CCA 1974 s.140B(1)) is very similar to the (now repealed) CCA 1974 s.139(2), as amended, but note the new s.140B(1)(b) and (c).

1401. See above, para.39-216, as to the court’s discretion.

1402. Defined in CCA 1974 s.184.

1403. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see above, para.39-183.

1404. See above, para.39-214.

1405. !CCA 1974 s.140B(1)(a), previously CCA 1974 s.139(2)(c), with the addition of the power to make an order against an associate or former associate as well as the creditor. And see s.140B(3), noted below. For orders to repay premiums of mis-sold PPI policies see Scotland v British Credit Trust Ltd [2014] EWCA Civ 790 and Plevin v Paragon Personal Finance Ltd [2016] C.C.L.R. 5, March 2, 2015, Manchester Cty Ct (the sequel to Plevin v Paragon Personal Finance Ltd [2014] UKSC 61), where the amount of commission received by the PPI seller was, on the facts, regarded as the appropriate remediation. In Nelmes v NRAM Plc [2016] EWCA Civ 491 the court ordered the repayment of a secret commission paid by the lender to the borrower’s broker, plus interest.

1406. Defined in CCA 1974 s.184.

1407. See above, para.39-214. CCA 1974 s.140B(1)(b). There was no corresponding provision in the (now repealed) CCA 1974 s.139(2). See Link Financial Ltd v North Wilson [2014] EWHC 252 (Ch) (order that no further sum was payable under the credit agreement) and Scotland v British Credit Trust Ltd [2014] EWCA Civ 790 (debtor not liable to pay the loan so far as it related to a mis-sold PPI policy).

1408. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see above, para.39-183.

1409. CCA 1974 s.140B(1)(c). See above, para.39-214. There was no corresponding provision in the (now repealed) CCA 1974 s.139(2). See Patel v Patel [2009] EWHC 3284: reduction of amount contractually due by ordering the debtor to repay the amount initially advanced, with such repayments as the debtor had made being regarded as satisfying any entitlement to interest. See also s.140B(3), noted below.

1410. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see above, para.39-183.

- 1411. CCA 1974 s.140B(1)(d), previously CCA 1974 s.139(2)(d).
- 1412. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see above, para.39-183.
- 1413. CCA 1974 s.140B(1)(e), previously s.139(2)(e). See above, para.39-214. See Pye v Ambrose [1994] C.L.Y. 594, [1994] N.P.C. 53: jurisdiction in s.139(2)(e) confined to relieving the debtor from payment of a sum of money and did not extend to relieving him from an obligation to convey property.
- 1414. CCA 1974 s.140B(1)(f), previously s.139(2)(f). See above, para.39-214.
- 1415. Or in Scotland, an accounting to be made.
- 1416. CCA 1974 s.140B(1)(g), previously s.139(2)(g).
- 1417. CCA 1974 s.140B(1)(a).
- 1418. CCA 1974 s.140B(3).
- 1419. The now repealed CCA 1974 ss.137–140, see above, para.39-212. There was express provision in the Moneylenders Act 1900 s.1 allowing past transactions to be reopened and excess payments recovered, although the courts imposed certain limitations on their exercise of this power: see Meston on Moneylenders, 5th edn, pp.197–200.
- 1420. Davies v Directloans Ltd [1986] 1 W.L.R. 823. See also First National Securities Ltd v Bertrand [1980] C.C.L.R. 1 Cty Ct. And note Consumer Credit Act 2006 Sch.3 para.15(2) (reopening, under the old provisions, of agreement coming to an end before their repeal).
- 1421. CCA 1974 s.140A(4).
- 1422. See Patel v Patel [2009] EWHC 3264 (agreement made in 1992). The (complex) transitional provisions are in Consumer Credit Act 2006 Sch.3 paras 14–16. See above, para.39-212 n.1301.
- 1423. It was so held (in relation to the old provisions) in Nolan v Wright [2009] EWHC 305, [2009] C.C.L.R. 8.
- 1424. In Nolan v Wright [2009] EWHC 305 (Ch), [2009] C.C.L.R. 8 the view that the limitation period would not apply if the debtor raised the provisions by way of defence to reduce the amount claimed (put forward by Dobson (1998) 142 S.J. 274, and see, in another context, Henriksens A/S v Rolimpex [1974] 1 Q.B. 233 CA, especially 245G, above, para.28-123) was rejected. But see text accompanying n.1433, below.
- 1425. Which covers an obligation imposed by statute: Collin v Duke of Westminster [1985] Q.B. 581. See (on the old provisions) Nolan v Wright [2009] EWHC 305, [2009] C.C.L.R. 8, relying on dicta in Rahman v Sterling Credit Ltd [2001] 1 W.L.R. 498 CA.
- 1426. Rahman v Sterling Credit Ltd [2001] 1 W.L.R. 496 CA.
- 1427. [2009] EWHC 3284, see above, para.39-222.
- 1428. Hence, it accrues at the date of trial in the case of an extant relationship and otherwise at the date when the relationship ended.
- 1429. In Nolan v Wright [2009] EWHC 305 (Ch), [2009] C.C.L.R. 8 (relying on dicta in Rahman v Sterling Credit Ltd [2001] 1 W.L.R. 496 (CA)). It was so held in First National Bank Plc v Ann [1997] C.L.Y. 963 Cty Ct.
- 1430. Limitation Act 1980 s.35(1)(b)—although the court has a discretion to order that it be dealt with as a separate action (CPR Pt 20 r.9(1), made under Limitation Act 1980 s.35), in which case the limitation period will start when that cause of action accrued (see Ernst and Young v Butte Mining Plc [1997] 1 W.L.R. 1485).

- 1431. SI 1999/2083, as amended by SI 2001/1186. See above, paras 38-202 et seq.; Falco Finance Ltd v Gough [1999] C.C.L.R. 16 (above, para.39-219 n.1339). As noted above at para.38-201, these regulations are replaced, for contracts made on or after October 1, 2015, by provisions in the Consumer Rights Act 2015 Pt 2.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 39 - Credit and Security
Section 1. - The Regulation of Consumer Credit ¹
(n) - Ancillary Credit Businesses ¹⁴³²

Ancillary credit businesses

39-230

The consumer credit regulatory regime applies not only to business concerned with consumer credit and consumer hire agreements themselves but also extends to what the Consumer Credit Act 1974 terms “ancillary credit businesses” and affects certain agreements made by, with or through a person who carries on an “ancillary credit business”. The categories of “ancillary credit businesses” were originally defined in s.145 of the 1974 Act, but the definitions are now found in the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (Regulated Activities) Order 2001 (“RAO”), ¹⁴³³ as amended since the transfer of regulation from the OFT to the FCA. ¹⁴³⁴

Credit broking: general

39-231

The definition of “credit broking” is now in art.36A of the RAO. ¹⁴³⁵ There are six categories of “credit broking”, the first three ¹⁴³⁶ essentially replace (but reword) the old categories of “credit brokerage” ¹⁴³⁷ and the last three ¹⁴³⁸ are new. It is important to note that the definition extends to cover, not merely brokers in the ordinary sense of that word, but also, in certain circumstances, (i) dealers and providers of services financed by regulated credit agreements, (ii) estate agents and (iii) accountants and lawyers. ¹⁴³⁹ Moreover, although termed “credit broking”, the first three categories also cover brokers of hire agreements. Credit broking only arises in relation to an “individual” or “relevant recipient of credit” (which excludes bodies corporate and partnerships with over three partners ¹⁴⁴⁰) and hence (for example) the effecting of introductions of companies to sources of credit, etc. is not credit broking. However, the agreements need not be “regulated agreements” but only agreements that would be regulated but for the exemptions, other than the “number of payment” exemption in art.60F of the RAO. ¹⁴⁴¹ The first three categories of credit broking comprise the introduction of individuals, etc. desiring to obtain credit (or to obtain goods on hire) to a source of credit (or hire) or to other credit brokers. The last three (new) categories of credit broking only apply to credit and not hire agreements and cover certain activities on behalf of the borrower or lender preparatory to the making of the credit agreement. A person undertaking credit broking is excluded from the definition of “providing credit information services” in art.89A of the RAO. ¹⁴⁴²

Promotion

39-232

Credit broking activity should be distinguished from the mere promotion of credit or hire ¹⁴⁴³ in that the first three categories presuppose an individual who (already) “wishes” to obtain credit or hire whilst the last three concern concrete steps taken towards a particular credit agreement.

Credit broking: exclusions39-233

⚠ There are a number of exclusions that apply to the general definition of “credit broking” in art.36A of the RAO. In particular, the old exclusion for individuals who “canvass off trade premises”, ¹⁴⁴⁴ “restricted-use credit agreements” ¹⁴⁴⁵ financing a transaction between the lender and the borrower or regulated consumer hire agreements, is maintained. ¹⁴⁴⁶ The old exclusion for members of the legal profession in the context of “contentious business” has been widened. ¹⁴⁴⁷ Other exclusions ensure that if the activity is regulated under another category, it is not also credit broking. ¹⁴⁴⁸ ⚠

Debt-adjusting: general39-234

The definition of “debt-adjusting” is now in art.39D of the RAO. ¹⁴⁴⁹ It re-enacts, with some terminological differences, the definition in the now repealed s.145(5) of the 1974 Act. It should be noted that, like all ancillary credit activities in relation to debt, ¹⁴⁵⁰ it applies to debts due under “credit agreements” and “consumer hire agreements”, as defined in arts 60B and 60N (respectively) of the RAO ¹⁴⁵¹ to cover agreements that are not necessarily “regulated” agreements, although the borrower or hirer (as the case may be) must be an individual or “relevant recipient of credit” (which excludes bodies corporate and partnerships with over three partners ¹⁴⁵²). Debt-adjusting is defined to mean, in relation to debts due (whether overdue or not) under such agreements: (a) negotiating with the lender or owner, on behalf of the borrower or hirer, terms for the discharge of a debt; or (b) taking over, in return for payments by the borrower or hirer, his obligation to discharge a debt; or (c) any similar activity concerned with the liquidation of a debt. Examples of debtadjusters are, or may be, professionals such as solicitors ¹⁴⁵³ and accountants as well as dealers who negotiate settlements for their customers, and consumer advice agencies. A person undertaking debt-adjusting is excluded from the definition of “providing credit information services” in art.89A of the RAO. ¹⁴⁵⁴

Debt-adjusting: exclusions39-235

There are a number of exclusions that apply to “debt-adjusting”. First, it is not debt-adjusting for a person to do anything in relation to a debt arising under an agreement if he already has a certain status in relation to the agreement. ¹⁴⁵⁵ Thus (i) the lender or owner under the agreement (this includes an assignee such as a factoring or block-discounting firm) or (ii) the supplier (such as a dealer in relation to loans made by “connected” lenders that finance his sales (but not in relation to hire-purchase, conditional sale or hire agreements made by his customer)) or (iii) the credit-broker who has acquired the business of the person who was the supplier in relation to the agreement, are all excluded from the definition. Second, the old exclusion for members of the legal profession in the context of “contentious business” is widened. ¹⁴⁵⁶ Third, if the activity is in relation to regulated mortgages and home purchase plans (and hence regulated as such), it is excluded from the definition. ¹⁴⁵⁷ Finally there are exclusions for energy suppliers, ¹⁴⁵⁸ local authorities ¹⁴⁵⁹ and insolvency practitioners. ¹⁴⁶⁰

Debt-counselling: general39-236

The definition of “debt-counselling” is now in art.39E of the RAO. ¹⁴⁶¹ It re-enacts, with some terminological differences, the definition in the now repealed s.145(6) of the 1974 Act. It should be noted that, like all ancillary credit activities in relation to debt, ¹⁴⁶² it applies to debts and payments under “credit agreements” and “consumer hire agreements”, as defined in arts 60B and 60N of the RAO (respectively) ¹⁴⁶³ to cover agreements that are not necessarily “regulated” agreements, although the borrower or hirer (as the case may be) must be an individual or “relevant recipient of credit” (which excludes bodies corporate and partnerships with over three partners ¹⁴⁶⁴). The FCA has issued Guidance on the scope of debt-counselling: see the FCA Handbook, PERG 17. Essentially it covers the giving of “advice” (which connotes recommendations and not just information) to borrowers or hirers about the liquidation of debts “due” (whether overdue or not) under such agreements. Professionals such as solicitors ¹⁴⁶⁵ and accountants as well as bankers, brokers and consumer advice agencies, may be debt-counsellors. A person undertaking debt-counselling is excluded from the definition of “providing credit information services” in art.89A of the RAO. ¹⁴⁶⁶

Debt-counselling: exclusions

39-237

⚠ Essentially the same exclusions as those applicable to debt-adjusting ¹⁴⁶⁷ ⚠ apply to debt-counselling.

Debt-collecting: general

39-238

The definition of “debt-collecting” is now in art.39F of the RAO. ¹⁴⁶⁸ It re-enacts, with some terminological differences (and the addition of the reference to art.39H of the RAO), the definition in the now repealed s.145(7) of the 1974 Act. It should be noted that, like all ancillary credit activities in relation to debt, ¹⁴⁶⁹ it applies to debts and payments under “credit agreements” and “consumer hire agreements”, as defined in arts 60B and 60N of the RAO (respectively) ¹⁴⁷⁰ to cover agreements that are not necessarily “regulated” agreements, although the borrower or hirer (as the case may be) must be an individual or “relevant recipient of credit” (which excludes bodies corporate and partnerships with over three partners ¹⁴⁷¹). It also applies to debts under a so-called “relevant article 36H agreement”. ¹⁴⁷² However an activity does not fall within the definition of “debt-collecting” if the activity itself falls within the definition of “operating an electronic system in relation to lending” within art.36H of the RAO. ¹⁴⁷³ The definition of “debt-collecting” covers “the taking of steps to procure payment of debts” due under such agreements. This will obviously cover debt-collecting agencies. A person undertaking debt-collecting is excluded from the definition of “providing credit information services” in art.89A of the RAO. ¹⁴⁷⁴

Debt-collecting: exclusions

39-239

Essentially the same exclusions as those applicable to debt-adjusting ¹⁴⁷⁵ apply to debt-collecting. Hence, for example, if the creditor or owner (including a factoring or block-discounting firm collecting debts as assignee) merely collecting debts due to himself or a “supplier” procures the payment of debts under an agency discounting agreement, this is not “debt-collecting” within the definition. Moreover, if the activity falls within art.36H of the RAO (operating an electronic system in relation to lending) ¹⁴⁷⁶ it is not “debt-collecting” within art.39F of the RAO. ¹⁴⁷⁷

Debt administration: general

39-240

The definition of “debt administration” is now in the art.39G of the RAO. ¹⁴⁷⁸ It re-enacts, with some terminological differences (and the addition of the reference to art.36H of the RAO) the now repealed s.145(7A) of the 1974 Act. ¹⁴⁷⁹ It should be noted that, like all ancillary credit activities in relation to debt ¹⁴⁸⁰ it applies to rights and duties under “credit agreements” and “consumer hire agreements”, as defined in arts 60B and 60N of the RAO (respectively) ¹⁴⁸¹ to cover agreements that are not necessarily “regulated” agreements, although the borrower or hirer (as the case may be) must be an individual or “relevant recipient of credit” (which excludes bodies corporate and partnerships with over three partners ¹⁴⁸²). As with debt-collecting, it also applies to debts under a so-called “relevant article 36H agreement”. ¹⁴⁸³ However, an activity does not fall within the definition of “debt administration” if the activity itself falls within the definition of “operating an electronic system in relation to lending” within art.36H of the RAO. ¹⁴⁸⁴ The definition covers the taking of steps (so far as this is not “debt-collecting” ¹⁴⁸⁵) on behalf of the lender or owner, either (a) to perform duties under such an agreement or (b) to exercise or to enforce rights under such an agreement. A person undertaking debt administration is excluded from the definition of “providing credit information services” in art.89A of the RAO. ¹⁴⁸⁶

Debt administration: exclusions

39-241

Essentially the same exclusions as those applicable to debt-adjusting ¹⁴⁸⁷ apply to debt administration. Hence, for example, if the creditor or owner (including a factoring or block-discounting firm collecting debts as assignee) merely takes those steps that would amount to “debt administration” in relation to agreements with himself or a “supplier”, it is not undertaking “debt administration” within the definition. Moreover, if the activity falls within art.36H of the RAO (operating an electronic system in relation to lending) ¹⁴⁸⁸ it is not “debt administration” within art.39G of the RAO. ¹⁴⁸⁹

Providing credit information services: general

39-242

The definition of “providing credit information services” is now in art.89A of the RAO. ¹⁴⁹⁰ It replaces the old definition in the now repealed s.145(7B)–(7D) of the 1974 Act. ¹⁴⁹¹ The definition covers two categories of activity. The first is acting on behalf of an “individual” or “relevant recipient of credit” (which excludes bodies corporate and partnerships with over three partners ¹⁴⁹²) so as to discover and correct records “relevant to their financial standing” held by certain business (credit reference agencies and others in the credit and hire industries (collectively referred to as “credit information agencies” and defined in art.89A(6) of the RAO)). It should be noted that the information need not specifically relate to regulated credit agreements. The second is the giving of advice (to an individual or relevant recipient of credit) in relation to the first activity. Hence it is enough to advise the borrower how they might discover and correct records themselves (rather than acting on their behalf).

Providing credit information services: exclusions

39-243

There are a number of exclusions that apply to this ancillary credit activity. First, there is the usual exclusion for lawyers. ¹⁴⁹³ Second, anyone already regulated (as lender or other ancillary credit service provider) does not also fall within art.89A. ¹⁴⁹⁴ Moreover, art.89A(5) of the RAO makes it clear that arts 89A and 36H (operating an electronic system in relation to lending) ¹⁴⁹⁵ are mutually exclusive so if an activity falls within the latter, it cannot also be the provision of credit information services within art.89A. Finally, there are exclusions for local authorities ¹⁴⁹⁶ and insolvency practitioners. ¹⁴⁹⁷

Providing credit references: general

39-244

The definition of “providing credit references” is now in art.89B of the RAO. ¹⁴⁹⁸ It replaces and clarifies the old definition of “credit reference agency” in the now repealed s.145(8) of the 1974 Act. The new definition adds the requirement that the business must “primarily consist of” furnishing the information. That “information” must satisfy three conditions. First, it must be information relevant to the financial standing of an “individual” or “relevant recipient of credit” (which excludes bodies corporate and partnerships with over three partners ¹⁴⁹⁹), although the information need not relate to “regulated” credit agreements. Hence providing financial information about companies is not covered. Second, the information must be “collected”, that is to say, assembled or brought together. Third, it must be collected “for that purpose”, i.e. for the purpose of furnishing persons with information relevant to the financial standing of individuals, etc. Thus a referee (for example a bank) who habitually furnishes information based on its own accounts as between itself and its customers does not come within the definition since the information arises simply in the course of conducting its own business and is not collected for that purpose. Even more obviously, information about an employee collected by his employer in a personnel file, though it may in some respects be information relevant to the financial standing of the employee, is not collected by the employer for that purpose. In any event, under the new version of the definition in art.89B both the bank and the employer would be excluded as their business does not “primarily” consist of furnishing such information. Credit reference agencies are obliged to disclose and correct information. ¹⁵⁰⁰ Moreover, as a result of the implementation of the Consumer Credit Directive, ¹⁵⁰¹ when a creditor under a prospective regulated agreement refuses credit on the basis of information obtained from a credit reference agency, he is obliged (unless the agreement was to be secured on land), when informing the debtor of the refusal, also to inform the debtor that the refusal is on that basis and to provide the particulars of the agency. ¹⁵⁰² Failure to comply is an offence. ¹⁵⁰³

Providing credit references: exclusions

39-245

Essentially similar exclusions as those applicable to providing credit information services ¹⁵⁰⁴ apply to providing credit references. They are: (i) the usual exclusion for lawyers ¹⁵⁰⁵; (ii) if an activity falls within art.36H of the RAO (operating an electronic system in relation to lending) ¹⁵⁰⁶ it cannot also be the provision of credit references within art.89B ¹⁵⁰⁷; (iii) the usual exclusions for local authorities ¹⁵⁰⁸ and insolvency practitioners. ¹⁵⁰⁹

Authorisation

39-246

As noted above ¹⁵¹⁰ from April 1, 2014, the licensing regime under the 1974 Act (as reformed by the Consumer Credit Act 2006) was replaced by the authorisation regime under the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (FSMA 2000), operated by the Financial Conduct Authority (FCA). Section 19 of FSMA 2000 imposes a “general prohibition” on anyone undertaking a “regulated activity” in the United Kingdom unless they are either an “authorised” or “exempt” person. The ancillary credit activities considered above ¹⁵¹¹ are “specified” under the RAO. This means that if undertaken “by way of business”, ¹⁵¹² they are “regulated activities” ¹⁵¹³ and hence a person needs authorisation in order to undertake them in the United Kingdom unless he is an “exempt person” (under FSMA 2000 s.38 (exemption by Treasury Order) or s.39 (“appointed representatives”)).

“Business”

39-247

Only “specified activities” undertaken “by way of business” are “regulated activities” requiring authorisation. ¹⁵¹⁴ A special meaning is given to the term “by way of business” in relation to “not-for-profit bodies” (as defined) that carry on debt-adjusting, ¹⁵¹⁵ debt-counselling ¹⁵¹⁶ or providing credit information services, ¹⁵¹⁷ by Order made under s.419 of the FSMA 2000. ¹⁵¹⁸ Essentially, as long as such a body does not carry on that activity only on an occasional basis, it is to be regarded as carrying on that activity “by way of business” whether or not it would otherwise be regarded as doing so. Otherwise the phrase “by way of business” is left undefined in the FSMA 2000. ¹⁵¹⁹

Regulatory control

39-248

Authorisation under the FSMA 2000 brings with it all the regulatory control that the FCA may exercise under that Act over “authorised persons”. ¹⁵²⁰ There are special provisions in relation to ancillary credit businesses in the FCA Handbook, CONC Module. ¹⁵²¹

Trading whilst unauthorized

39-249

The consequences (criminal and civil) for undertaking regulated activities whilst not authorised or exempt are considered above. ¹⁵²²

Regulated agreements made on introduction by unauthorised credit-broker

39-250

The effect on agreements made on an introduction by an unauthorised person, in particular an unauthorised broker, are considered above. ¹⁵²³ Essentially, this means, for example, that a bank or other lender must ensure that, where business is introduced by a broker or dealer (whether under pre-existing arrangements or not), that broker or dealer is authorised, otherwise, without an order of the FCA, the consequent agreement and security may be unenforceable and voidable.

Seeking business: promotion

39-251

 The original provisions in the 1974 Act regulating advertisements and quotations in relation to ancillary credit businesses have been replaced ¹⁵²⁴ by the provisions of the FSMA 2000 “financial promotion” regime. ¹⁵²⁵ The relevant provisions are now the FCA rules in the FCA Handbook, CONC 3 (promotion) and 4.1 (quotations). Infringement of these provisions is no longer a criminal offence but (as well as giving rise to the usual consequences for breach of FCA rules ¹⁵²⁶) may also breach the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008. ¹⁵²⁷

Canvassing certain ancillary credit services off trade premises

39-252

Section 154 of the 1974 Act renders it an offence to canvas off trade premises (as defined in s.153 in similar terms to those used in s.48(1) ¹⁵²⁸) certain ancillary credit services, namely, credit-broking, ¹⁵²⁹ debt-adjusting, ¹⁵³⁰ debt-counselling ¹⁵³¹ or the provision of credit information services. ¹⁵³²

Right to recover brokerage fees

39-253

Section 155 of the 1974 Act confers a right in certain circumstances to recover from the credit-broker brokerage fees paid in advance in the event that an introduction by a credit-broker does not bear fruit within six months. ¹⁵³³ The section applies ¹⁵³⁴ where an individual has sought an introduction for a purpose that would have been fulfilled by his entry into (a) a regulated agreement or (b) an agreement for credit secured on land (in the case of an individual desiring to obtain credit to finance the acquisition or provision of a dwelling) or (c) an exempt agreement ¹⁵³⁵ or (d) an agreement which is not a regulated credit agreement or a regulated consumer hire agreement but which would be such an agreement if the law applicable to the agreement were the law of a part of the United Kingdom. However, it does not apply ¹⁵³⁶ where the creditbroker is an authorised person (or appointed representative) and the fee relates to a regulated mortgage ¹⁵³⁷ or home purchase plan (i.e. the activity is excluded from the definition of “credit broking” by art.36E of the RAO ¹⁵³⁸).

⚠ When s.155 applies, the excess over £5 ¹⁵³⁹ of a fee or commission for his services charged by a credit-broker to an individual ceases to be payable or, as the case may be, is recoverable by the individual if the introduction does not result in his entering into a “relevant agreement” within the six months following the introduction. ¹⁵⁴⁰ For this purpose, an agreement is a “relevant agreement” in relation to an individual if it is the type of agreement sought by that individual. ¹⁵⁴¹ ⚠

Right to recover other payments

39-254

In the case of an individual desiring to obtain credit under a consumer credit agreement, any sum payable or paid by him to a credit-broker otherwise than as a fee or commission for the credit-broker's services is to be treated as such a fee or commission if it enters, or would enter, into the total charge for credit. ¹⁵⁴² Since the provisions as to the total charge for credit ¹⁵⁴³ in certain circumstances embrace sums paid under a linked transaction, e.g. surveyor's or valuer's fees, such fees will become recoverable from the credit-broker notwithstanding that he has paid them over to a third party.

“Credit intermediaries”

39-255

As a result of the implementation of the Consumer Credit Directive ¹⁵⁴⁴ various obligations are imposed on so-called “credit intermediaries”, i.e. persons (other than the creditor) who, in the course of business, carry out, for a fee, various activities preparatory to the conclusion of regulated credit agreements (other than those secured on land as these are outside the scope of the Directive) with or for “individuals”. The term “credit intermediaries” covers not only those regulated as credit-brokers ¹⁵⁴⁵ but also certain other persons who escape such regulation. ¹⁵⁴⁶ As regards the former, the FCA Handbook, CONC 3.7.3R and CONC 4.4.2R impose the relevant obligations. As regards the latter, the obligations are imposed by the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (Regulated Activities) (Amendment) (No.2) Order 2013. ¹⁵⁴⁷ Three obligations are imposed on such persons. First, they must disclose the extent to which they act independently (and in particular whether they work exclusively with a creditor). Second, if they act for a debtor and charge him a fee, they must “ensure” that the fee is disclosed to the debtor and then agreed in writing before the agreement is concluded. Third, they must also disclose such a fee to the creditor if he needs it to calculate the APR. ¹⁵⁴⁸

^{1.} See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf); Goode, Consumer Credit: Law and Practice (looseleaf); Goode, Consumer Credit Law (1989); Harding, Consumer Credit and Consumer Hire (1995); Philpott, The Law of Consumer Credit and Hire (2009).

^{1432.} See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf), paras 2–146—2–161; and Goode, Consumer Credit: Law and Practice, Pt C, Ch.48.

^{1433.} SI 2001/544.

^{1434.} Especially by the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (Regulated Activities) (Amendment)

- (No.2) Order 2013 (SI 2013/1881) arts 4, 5 and 8. See above, para.39-002.
- 1435. With exclusions in RAO arts 36B–36G, see below, para.39-233.
- 1436. RAO art.36A(1)(a)–(c).
- 1437. In the now repealed CCA 1974 s.145(2)–(4). Note the change in terminology from “credit brokerage” (in the CCA 1974) to “credit broking” (in the RAO).
- 1438. RAO art.36A(1)(d)–(f).
- 1439. But note the exclusion in the context of contentious business, below, para.39-233.
- 1440. As defined in RAO art.60L.
- 1441. For these exemptions, see above, paras 39-041 et seq.
- 1442. See below, para.39-242.
- 1443. See above, para.39-067.
- 1444. For example in the context of mail order.
- 1445. See above, para.39-027.
- 1446. RAO art.36B.
- 1447. RAO art.36F (as substituted by SI 2015/853 art.3(2)).
- 1448.  See (i) RAO art.36(2): activity within RAO art.36H (operating an electronic system in relation to lending, see below, para.39-256); (ii) RAO art.36D (activities within RAO arts 60B(1) and 60L(1): entering into agreements as lender or owner respectively, see above, para.39-061); (iii) RAO art.36E (activities in relation to regulated mortgages and home purchase plans—but note the new version of art.36E to be inserted on March 21, 2016, by SI 2015/910 art.3 and Sch.1 para.4(7), when the Mortgage Credit Directive (see above, para.39-003) is implemented. The Mortgage Credit Directive (and hence the relevant new version of art.36E) came into force on March 21, 2016.
- 1449. With exclusions in RAO arts 39H–39L, see below, para.39-235.
- 1450. See below, paras 39-236—39-241.
- 1451. See above, paras 39-016 and 39-035.
- 1452. As defined in RAO art.60L.
- 1453. But note the exclusion for lawyers, below, para.39-235.
- 1454. See below, para.39-242.
- 1455. RAO art.39H.
- 1456. RAO art.39K (as substituted by SI 2015/853 art.3(3)).
- 1457. RAO art.39J.
- 1458. RAO art.39I.
- 1459. RAO arts 39L and 72G.

- 1460. RAO arts 39L and 72H.
- 1461. With exclusions in arts 39H–39L of the RAO, see below, para.39-237.
- 1462. See above, para.39-234 and below, paras 39-234 and 39-235, 39-238—39-241.
- 1463. See above, para.39-016 and 39-035.
- 1464. As defined in RAO art.60L.
- 1465. But note the exclusion in the context of contentious business, below, para.39-237.
- 1466. Below, para.39-242.
- 1467.  See above, para.39-235. But see the exclusion from art.39E for pensions guidance in art.39KA, added by SI 2015/489 art.2(4).
- 1468. With exclusions in arts 39H–39L of the RAO, see below, para.39-239.
- 1469. See above, paras 39-234—39-237 and below, para.39-240.
- 1470. See above, para.39-016 and 39-035
- 1471. As defined in RAO art.60L.
- 1472. As defined in RAO art.39F(4) and hence art.39H(4)–(6), see below, paras 39-256 and 39-241.
- 1473. See below, para.39-256.
- 1474. See below, para.39-242.
- 1475. See above, para.39-235.
- 1476. See below, para.39-256.
- 1477. See RAO art.39F(3).
- 1478. With exclusions in arts 39H–39L of the RAO, see below, para.39-240.
- 1479. Added on June 16, 2006 by the Consumer Credit Act 2006 s.24(2).
- 1480. See above, paras 39-234—39-238.
- 1481. See above, paras 39-016 and 39-035.
- 1482. As defined in RAO art.60L.
- 1483. As defined in RAO art.39F(4) and hence art.39H(4)–(6), see below, para.39-256.
- 1484. See below, para.39-256.
- 1485. See above, para.39-238.
- 1486. See below, para.39-242.
- 1487. See above, para.39-235.
- 1488. See below, para.39-256.

- 1489. See RAO art.39G(3).
- 1490. With the exclusions in arts 89C–89D of the RAO, see below, para.39-243.
- 1491. Added on October 1, 2008 by the Consumer Credit Act 2006 s.25.
- 1492. As defined in RAO art.60L.
- 1493. RAO art.89C (as substituted by SI 2015/853 art.3(7)).
- 1494. See RAO art.89A(4).
- 1495. See below, para.39-256.
- 1496. RAO arts 89D(2) and 72G.
- 1497. RAO arts 89D(2) and 72H.
- 1498. With the exclusions in arts 89C–89D of the RAO, see below, para.39-245.
- 1499. As defined in RAO art.60L.
- 1500. See CCA 1974 ss.157–160, as amended by the Data Protection Act 1998 s.62 (and for regulations made under ss.157 and 158, see SI 2000/291).
- 1501. See above, para.39-011.
- 1502. CCA 1974 s.157(A1), added from February 1, 2011 by SI 2010/1010 reg.40.
- 1503. See CCA 1974 s.157(3).
- 1504. See above, para.39-243.
- 1505. RAO art.89C (as substituted by SI 2015/853 art.3(7)).
- 1506. See below, para.39-256.
- 1507. See RAO art.89B(3).
- 1508. RAO arts 89D(2) and 72G.
- 1509. RAO arts 89D(2) and 72H.
- 1510. See para.39-061.
- 1511. See paras 39-230—39-243.
- 1512. See below, para.39-247.
- 1513. See the FSMA 2000 s.22.
- 1514. See FSMA 2000 s.22.
- 1515. See above, para.39-234.
- 1516. See above, para.39-236.
- 1517. See above, para.39-242.

- 1518. See the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (Carrying on Regulated Activities by Way of Business) Order 2001 (SI 2001/1177) art.3E, added on April 1, 2014 by SI 2013/1881 art.13.
- 1519. See further, above para.39-062.
- 1520. See further, above, para.39-063.
- 1521. See especially, CONC 2.4–2.6.
- 1522. See above, para.39-064.
- 1523. See above, para.39-065.
- 1524. Since April 1, 2014, following the transfer of consumer credit regulation to the FCA (see above, para.39-002).
- 1525. See further, above, para.39-067.
- 1526. See above, para.39-063.
- 1527.  See above, paras 38-153 et seq.
- 1528. See above, para.39-068.
- 1529. See above, para.39-231.
- 1530. See above, para.39-234.
- 1531. See above, para.39-236.
- 1532. See above, para.39-242.
- 1533. For a fuller discussion, see Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf), para.2–156 and see the guidance in FCA Handbook, CONC 2.5.9 and CONC 6.8.3 (more limited than the now revoked OFT's Guidance: Credit brokers and intermediaries: OFT guidance for brokers, intermediaries and the consumer credit and hire businesses which employ or use their services (OFT 1288, November 2011), especially Ch.6). There are particular difficulties in deciding what is a “fee or commission” (e.g. sums charged by brokers for “packaging agents”) for these purposes. And note s.173 (contracting out not possible). Apart from s.155 there may be rights to recovery at common law (for example on the grounds of total failure of consideration, see above paras 29-057 et seq.).
- 1534. See CCA 1974 s.155(2).
- 1535. See above, paras 39-038 et seq.
- 1536. See CCA 1974 s.155(2A).
- 1537. See below, para.39-529.
- 1538. See above, para.39-233.
- 1539. The amount was raised from £1 to £3 by SI 1983/1571 and to £5 by SI 1998/997.
- 1540. CCA 1974 s.155(1). See also CCA 1974 ss.70(7), 181. If, after making a “relevant agreement”, the debtor exercises his right to withdraw (under CCA 1974 s.66A, see above, para.39-101) or cancel (CCA 1974 s.67, see above, para.39-102), s.155 applies as the agreement is (in terms) “treated as if it had never having been entered into”.

- 1541.  CCA 1974 s.155(3). The OFT Guidance (see n.1535) stated that the credit-broker's licence was at risk if he did not inform the debtor of (a) the amount of the fee before undertaking the credit brokerage services and (b) the debtor's right under s.155. For similar obligations, see now the FCA Handbook, CONC 4.4.1R(2) and (4).
- 1542. CCA 1974 s.155(4).
- 1543. See above, para.39-059.
- 1544. See above, para.39-011.
- 1545. See above, para.39-231.
- 1546. For example, by virtue of the exclusions in RAO arts 36B(1), 36F and 72G (see above, para.39-233).
- 1547. SI 2013/1881 art.12.
- 1548. See above, para.39-059.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 39 - Credit and Security
Section 1. - The Regulation of Consumer Credit ¹
(o) - Operating an electronic system in relation to lending

Operating an electronic system in relation to lending

39-256

⚠ The development of the “peer to peer” (P2P) lending industry required a regulatory response as the borrowers were largely not protected by the 1974 Act (as the relevant agreements were usually “non-commercial agreements” ¹⁵⁴⁹) and the lenders were largely unprotected because “P2P platforms” were not regulated under the FSMA 2000. Hence on April 1, 2014 ¹⁵⁵⁰ a number of new “regulated activities” in relation to P2P lending were introduced by art.36H of the RAO. ¹⁵⁵¹ ⚠ Article 36H is a very complex provision and specifies nine activities in total, the main activity being that specified by art.36H(1) (operating an electronic system) whilst the others (in art.36H(3)) cover activities carried on in the course of, or in connection with, the carrying on of that “main” activity. The “main” activity of “operating an electronic system” is defined as enabling the operator (“A”) to “facilitate” persons (“B” and “C”) becoming the lender and borrower under a so-called “article 36H agreement” (as defined), where that system is capable of determining which agreements should be made available to each of B and C. As is the case with the regulated activities of lending under regulated credit agreements ¹⁵⁵² and undertaking ancillary credit businesses, ¹⁵⁵³ all the consequences of regulation under the FSMA 2000 follow in relation to this P2P regulated activity. In particular there is the requirement of authorisation from the FCA ¹⁵⁵⁴ and consequent control of that activity. ¹⁵⁵⁵ ⚠

^{1.} See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf); Goode, Consumer Credit: Law and Practice (looseleaf); Goode, Consumer Credit Law (1989); Harding, Consumer Credit and Consumer Hire (1995); Philpott, The Law of Consumer Credit and Hire (2009).

^{1549.} See above, para.39-049.

^{1550.} See above, para.39-002.

^{1551.} ⚠ Added by the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (Regulated Activities) (Amendment) (No.2) Order 2013 (SI 2013/1881) art.4, as amended by the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (Regulated Activities) (Amendment) Order 2014 (SI 2014/366) art.2(9). See the exclusions in arts 36I and 36IA.

^{1552.} See above, para.39-062.

^{1553.} See above, para.39-230.

^{1554.} See, in relation to ordinary lending, above, para.39-062.

1555.

⚠ See, in relation to ordinary lending, above, para.39-063. For special P2P regulatory provisions, see FCA Handbook, CONC 3.7A (financial promotion); CONC 4.3 (pre-contractual requirements); CONC 5.5 (creditworthiness assessment); CONC 7.17-7.19 (NOSIAs etc.); CONC 11.2 (cancellation).

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 39 - Credit and Security
Section 1. - The Regulation of Consumer Credit ¹
(p) - Green Deal Plans

Green deal plans

39-257

The introduction of “green deal plans” by the Energy Act 2011 has necessitated the amendment ¹⁵⁵⁶ and modification ¹⁵⁵⁷ of the 1974 Act in so far as it applies to the loan component of such plans. ¹⁵⁵⁸ “Green deal plans” are defined by s.1 of the Energy Act 2011, essentially as arrangements that enable owners or occupiers of residential or commercial property to finance energysaving measures to their property by instalments added to their energy bills (which bills are reduced because of the energy savings). If the property is a domestic property or the occupier or owner of the property is an individual, a “green deal plan” (as so defined) is treated as a “consumer credit agreement” for the purposes of the 1974 Act and is termed a “green deal consumer credit agreement”. ¹⁵⁵⁹ It is treated as an agreement for fixed-sum credit within s.10(1)(b) of the 1974 Act ¹⁵⁶⁰ and if a regulated agreement, ¹⁵⁶¹ it is to be treated as a restricted-use agreement within s.11(1)(a). ¹⁵⁶² It is also treated as credit agreement for the purposes of the “unfair relationship” provisions. ¹⁵⁶³ As well as amending various provisions of the 1974 Act in so far as they apply to a “green deal consumer credit agreement” (in particular, ss.77, 77A, 77B, 86B ¹⁵⁶⁴) and introducing a new s.95B (compensatory amount of early settlement), ¹⁵⁶⁵ the definitions of “debtor” and “creditor” when they occur in the various sections of 1974 Act are given an extended meaning ¹⁵⁶⁶ to cover persons beyond the original parties to the green deal financing agreement. In particular, as the liability for repayment attaches to whoever is the “bill payer” from time to time, the definition of “debtor” is modified accordingly.

^{1.} See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf); Goode, Consumer Credit: Law and Practice (looseleaf); Goode, Consumer Credit Law (1989); Harding, Consumer Credit and Consumer Hire (1995); Philpott, The Law of Consumer Credit and Hire (2009).

^{1556.} See especially, the Energy Act 2011 ss.25–30 and the Consumer Credit (Green Deal) Regulations 2012 (SI 2012/2798).

^{1557.} See especially the Consumer Credit Act 1974 (Green Deal) (Amendment) Order 2014 (SI 2014/436) and the Consumer Credit (Information Requirements and Duration of Licences and Charges) (Amendment) Regulations 2014 (SI 2014/2369).

^{1558.} Note the transitional provisions for green deal plans made between April 1, 2014 and July 14, 2014 in the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (Regulated Activities) (Green Deal) (Amendment) Order 2014 (SI 2014/1850) art.12.

^{1559.} See CCA 1974 s.189B.

^{1560.} See above, para.39-026 and CCA 1974 s.189C(1)(a).

^{1561.} See s.8(3), above, para.39-017.

1562. See above, para.39-027 and CCA 1974 s.189C(2).

1563. See CCA 1974 s.189C(1)(a)—although CCA 1974 s.140C(2) does not apply (see CCA 1974 s.189C(3)). For these provisions, see above, paras 39-212 et seq.

1564. See above, paras 39-128—39-131.

1565. See above, para.39-160.

1566. By CCA 1974 s.189B and Sch.2A.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 39 - Credit and Security

Section 2. - Loans and Interest

(a) - Loans of Money

Definition of loan

39-258

A contract of loan of money is a contract whereby one person lends or agrees to lend a sum of money to another, in consideration of a promise express or implied to repay that sum on demand, or at a fixed or determinable future time, or conditionally upon an event which is bound to happen, with or without interest. ¹⁵⁶⁷ In many circumstances, the question whether a particular transaction is, in law, a "loan" or not will be immaterial, since the transaction will take effect according to the intention of the parties, however the contract may be classified. But in some circumstances it is necessary to define the nature of a transaction because of particular statutory provisions which may apply to contracts of "loan" but not to other contracts. ¹⁵⁶⁸ In these circumstances the question is, in the last resort, always a question of construction of the particular provision, and it would be unsafe to assume that a transaction which would be classified as a loan for the purposes of one statute will necessarily be so classified for the purposes of other statutory provisions. But subject to this caveat, the authorities on the meaning to be attached to the word "loan" in a particular statutory context are useful in showing the normal commercial definition of a contract of loan.

Money paid to third party

39-259

Where A pays money to B at the request of C, on the terms that he is to be repaid by C, it is sometimes difficult to say whether the transaction amounts to a loan by A to C. There is no doubt that, in certain contexts, money paid by A to B at the request of C could properly be said to be money paid by A to C, ¹⁵⁶⁹ but that does not necessarily mean that the transaction is a loan for all purposes. ¹⁵⁷⁰ In Potts Executors v IRC ¹⁵⁷¹ a company director had an arrangement with the company whereby the company paid various accounts on behalf of the director, debiting him with the payments in its books, and crediting him with director's fees and sums paid by him to the company. It was held by the House of Lords (in the context of a taxing statute) that the payments by the company were not payments by way of loan to the director. It was said in this case that whether a payment of this kind amounts to a loan must depend on all the circumstances. Thus disbursements by a solicitor on behalf of a client could not be said to be payments by way of loan to the client in the ordinary way because the payments would be made as an incident to a wider relationship than that merely of lender and borrower. "On the other hand, [this] kind of wider relationship ... may provide opportunity for transactions within it which are exceptional and beyond the normal scope of the relationship and which may properly be describable as loans and as nothing else". ¹⁵⁷²

39-260

Similarly, in Re HPC Productions Ltd ¹⁵⁷³ it was held that payments made by an overseas company at the request of a United Kingdom resident were not loans made to him within the meaning of the Exchange Control Act 1947. In this case it was suggested that an important factor to be considered in deciding whether such a transaction amounts to a loan is whether the recipient of the money is accountable for it to the person at whose request it has been paid. If he is so accountable, this points to the transaction being a loan. On the other hand this is not a decisive consideration, for there is no doubt that in some circumstances the transaction will be a loan even where the recipient is not so accountable. Thus money paid by a banker by means of a cheque drawn on an overdrawn account is undoubtedly money lent to the customer whether the recipient is liable to repay the money to the customer, or whether he is entitled to retain it in settlement of some obligation due to him. ¹⁵⁷⁴ "If a customer draws a cheque for a sum in excess of the amount standing to the credit of his current account, it is really a request for a loan, and if the cheque is honoured the customer has borrowed money". ¹⁵⁷⁵

Loans distinguished from other forms of debt

39-261

Although the Consumer Credit Act 1974 deliberately extends its coverage to embrace forms of financial accommodation other than loans, ¹⁵⁷⁶ at common law not every form of indebtedness amounts to a loan. A person who buys goods on credit is not borrowing money from the seller. ¹⁵⁷⁷ And a company that issues loan or debenture stock as a consideration for the acquisition of property is not borrowing money. ¹⁵⁷⁸ Even where money passes from one party to the other, this does not necessarily make the transaction one of loan for there are many ways of raising cash besides borrowing money. ¹⁵⁷⁹ The purchase of bills ¹⁵⁸⁰ or book debts ¹⁵⁸¹ at a discount is not a lending of money, even where the seller gives a collateral security which has the effect of making him personally liable for the amount raised. ¹⁵⁸² Nor does the ordinary hire-purchase transaction amount to a loan of money; although the economic effect of such a transaction may be the same as that of a loan, the legal effect is quite different. ¹⁵⁸³

39-262

Borderline cases may, however, arise, and it is difficult to state with any certainty whether or not certain types of instalment credit transaction, for example, check and voucher trading, ¹⁵⁸⁴ revolving shop credit accounts, ¹⁵⁸⁵ and credit cards, ¹⁵⁸⁶ involve loans of money. Further, transactions of the kinds referred to in the preceding paragraph may sometimes amount to contracts of loan, for the real purpose of the parties may be to effect a loan, and the other features of the transaction (such as the purchase of book debts or the making of a hire-purchase agreement) may be merely a front, intended to hide the real nature of the transaction. But it must be stressed that what matters is the real legal nature of the transaction and not its economic nature, and the courts will not go behind the actual agreement made unless there is evidence that the parties did not intend the relationship between them to be governed by the ostensible agreement which they have made. ¹⁵⁸⁷ Thus, if a company wishes to acquire property in consideration of the issue of loan stock, a transaction in these terms will not amount to a borrowing of money as mentioned above. If, on the other hand, the parties make a contract which indicates that their intention is that the company should purchase the property at a stated sum, and that the company should then borrow that sum from the seller, and secure the loan by an issue of debenture or loan stock, there will undoubtedly be a loan to the company. ¹⁵⁸⁸

Borrower not personally liable

39-263

Although a borrower is in the ordinary way personally liable to repay a loan, whatever security he may give for it, it is perfectly possible to have a contract of loan in which the borrower is under no personal liability. ¹⁵⁸⁹ Thus, where property was conveyed to a trustee on trust for the creditors of the settlor, and one of the creditors lent money to the trustee for the purpose of enabling the trustee the better to realise the property, and the money was expressed to be repayable out of the trust property, the court refused to imply any personal obligation on the part of the trustee. ¹⁵⁹⁰ So also, where a trustee advanced money to herself and a co-trustee for the purposes of the trust estate, the transaction was held to be a loan under s.408 of the Income Tax Act 1952 even on the assumption that her only right was to reimbursement in equity out of the trust property. ¹⁵⁹¹

Proof of loan39-264

If money is proved, or admitted, to have been paid by A to B, then in the absence of any circumstances suggesting a presumption of advancement, there is prima facie an obligation to repay the money; accordingly if B claims that the money was intended as a gift, the onus is on him to prove this fact. ¹⁵⁹²

Breach of executory contract: remedies of borrower ¹⁵⁹³39-265

❗ If a person contracts to lend money, ¹⁵⁹⁴ and then, in breach of contract, refuses or fails to advance the money, the borrower cannot sue for the money agreed to be loaned as a debt, for this would be tantamount to an order of specific enforcement, and such an order will not normally be granted for a contract of loan. ¹⁵⁹⁵ But the borrower can claim damages for the failure to advance the money. The damages will very often be merely nominal, ¹⁵⁹⁶ but if expense has been reasonably incurred in procuring the loan elsewhere, that expense is recoverable as special damage provided it was caused by the breach and was within the contemplation of the parties. ¹⁵⁹⁷ If the borrower can only procure the loan from other sources at a higher rate of interest than that agreed under the contract, and this was reasonably foreseeable at the time when the contract was made, it seems that the borrower can recover the additional interest he will have to pay as damages from the lender. ¹⁵⁹⁸ If the borrower is unable to raise the money from other sources at all, and he is consequently unable to enter into or complete some transaction for which the money is required, the lender may be liable for loss of profit on such a transaction or other consequential loss. ¹⁵⁹⁹ But it would have to be shown that the lender had express notice of the purpose for which the money was required, ¹⁶⁰⁰ and possibly also that the loan was agreed to be made for that purpose and for no other. The same principles will no doubt apply where it is agreed that the borrower shall be entitled to draw down the loan in tranches during a specified period, but the lender, without any breach on the part of the borrower, refuses to allow the borrower to draw down the balance of the loan. ¹⁶⁰¹

Breach of executory contract: remedies of lender39-266

An action by a person who has agreed to lend money against a borrower who has refused to take the loan would be something of a rarity in practice, but (although specific performance is again unavailable ¹⁶⁰²) there seems no reason in principle why an action for damages should not lie where the lender can prove actual damage as a result of the breach, and the damage was reasonably foreseeable at the time of making the contract. ¹⁶⁰³ Damages would presumably be assessed on the same principles as those discussed in the preceding paragraph.

Time for repayment39-267

Where money is lent without any stipulation as to the time of repayment, a present debt is created which is generally repayable at once without any previous demand. ¹⁶⁰⁴ But it is, of course, open to the parties to fix a time for repayment, or to agree that the loan will only be repayable on demand, and doubtless suitable implications as to such matters would readily be made in appropriate circumstances. In some cases, as, for example, in the case of money in a bank account, it is well settled that the loan is only repayable on demand, either on the ground of an implied term to that effect or on the ground of mercantile custom. ¹⁶⁰⁵ Where the loan is repayable on demand, the making of a valid demand is a pre-condition of the debt becoming due. In order to constitute a valid demand:

“there must be a clear intimation that payment is required ...; nothing more is necessary, and the word ‘demand’ need not be used, neither is the validity of a demand lessened by its being clothed in the language of politeness; it must be of a peremptory character and unconditional, but the nature of the language is immaterial provided it has this effect.” ¹⁶⁰⁶

The demand may be for “all monies due” and the amount need not be specified. ¹⁶⁰⁷ Money payable on demand is repayable immediately on demand being made. The borrower is allowed only such time as is necessary to implement the mechanics of payment needed to discharge the debt before being in default; he is not allowed a reasonable time, for example, to muster the resources to pay the debt. ¹⁶⁰⁸

Term loans

39-268

⚠ A loan may be made for a specified period (a term loan). In such a case repayment is due at the end of the specified period and, in the absence of any express provision or implication to the contrary, no further demand for repayment is necessary. Sometimes when making a term loan the lender will stipulate, either in the contract of loan or in the security document, that the loan is repayable on demand. Such a provision might be construed simply to mean that the loan is in fact repayable on demand but, if no demand is made, then in any event at the end of the term. However, if the loan is made for a fixed period of time and for a specific purpose, the two provisions will in some cases be inconsistent with each other, since the parties cannot be taken to have agreed both that the borrower is to have the use of the money for the fixed period and that the lender is to have the unqualified right to require repayment on demand at any time. It is submitted that, in the event of an inconsistency, the court is entitled to construe the contract in accordance with its main object and intent ¹⁶⁰⁹ ⚠: if the lender makes the loan for a purpose which to his knowledge clearly involves the borrower in incurring expenditure and liabilities with a view to ultimate profit, the court may be entitled to read the repayment on demand provision as subject to the provision as to the duration of the loan, or possibly even to ignore it altogether. ¹⁶¹⁰

Proof of repayment

39-269

Once a debt is proved to have existed, its continuation is presumed ¹⁶¹¹; thus the obligation to repay a loan is presumed to continue to exist unless the borrower proves that the loan has been repaid ¹⁶¹² or otherwise discharged, or such repayment or discharge can properly be inferred from all the circumstances. ¹⁶¹³ A receipt is not conclusive but only prima facie evidence that a loan has been repaid. ¹⁶¹⁴

Breach of contract to repay

39-270

Where the borrower fails to repay the loan in accordance with the terms of the contract, the lender has an action against the borrower for the money. It had been held that at common law the lender could not normally recover interest by way of damages for the period between the date when the loan should have been repaid and the date of payment or judgment, ¹⁶¹⁵ although he could do so where the loan was expressly made to carry interest, even though no express agreement was made for the payment of interest for any period after repayment should have been made. ¹⁶¹⁶ Moreover, if, by reason of the late payment the lender had actually incurred interest charges in obtaining finance from an alternative source, such loss could be recoverable as special damage, provided that it was in the reasonable contemplation of the parties at the time the contract was made that such charges would be incurred. ¹⁶¹⁷ Thus in most cases, in the absence of contractual provision, any right of the lender to obtain interest would arise only under statute. ¹⁶¹⁸ The general common law rule that damages were not recoverable for late payment was heavily criticised over the years and eventually departed from in Sempra Metals Ltd v Commissioners of Inland Revenue. ¹⁶¹⁹ Hence there is no longer such an exception to the general principles applicable to damages. A creditor receiving late payment may now therefore, in accordance with ordinary principles applicable to damages for breach of contract (including remoteness and mitigation), ¹⁶²⁰ recover any lost interest (including compound interest ¹⁶²¹), provided that the loss is pleaded and proven.

“No set-off” clauses

39-271

⚠ A “no set-off” clause in a loan agreement is not contrary to public policy or to s.49(2) of the Senior Courts Act 1981. ¹⁶²² But such a clause might be held to be unenforceable in certain circumstances under the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 ¹⁶²³ ⚠ or the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999, ¹⁶²⁴ although in Deutsche Bank (Suisse) SA v Khan ¹⁶²⁵ a “conventional ‘no set-off’ clause” withstood challenge under those provisions. The statutory set-off in a bankruptcy or winding-up is mandatory. ¹⁶²⁶

Acceleration clauses

39-272

Loan agreements, and in particular those that provide for repayment of the loan by instalments, frequently stipulate that, if the borrower defaults, ¹⁶²⁷ the loan and interest are to become immediately due and payable. The question then arises whether such a stipulation imposes a penalty and is therefore unenforceable. ¹⁶²⁸ A clause that stipulates for accelerated payment of principal together with accrued interest is not penal. ¹⁶²⁹ But if interest is payable on the balance outstanding, then it would seem that a stipulation for payment of future interest is penal and unenforceable. ¹⁶³⁰ On the other hand, it has been held that, if the agreement stipulates for repayment of principal together with a certain sum by way of interest on a given date or by (say) monthly instalments of principal and interest, then a stipulation for accelerated payment of the entire sum payable is not penal. ¹⁶³¹

Events of default

39-273

Except where the loan agreement expressly or impliedly provides that the loan is repayable on demand, ¹⁶³² the right of the lender to accelerate payment will depend upon the occurrence of one or more of a number of “events of default” specified in the loan agreement. The principal occurrences in respect of which an event of default will be stated to occur are failure to pay interest or an instalment of principal when due, non-compliance with any other covenant in the agreement, and breach of any representation or warranty made or given in respect of the agreement. In addition, the following occurrences are often made events of default: the insolvency of the borrower, the presentation of a petition or the passing of a resolution for the winding-up of the borrower, the appointment of an administrator, the appointment of a receiver of any of the assets of the borrower, the levying of execution or any legal process on any of his property, and (if the borrower is a partnership) the dissolution of the partnership. In some cases it may be required that any breach by the borrower of the loan agreement be “material” or “substantial” before it is to have this effect, or, if the breach is remediable, that the borrower be notified of the breach and allowed a certain period of time within which to remedy it. But, unless otherwise stipulated, there is generally no obligation ¹⁶³³ on the lender, for example to notify the borrower that he is in arrears or to allow him further time to pay, and the right of the lender to call for immediate repayment of the outstanding balance of the loan may arise automatically upon the occurrence of an event of default.

Defective notice

39-274

A notice of acceleration purporting to have been given under an “events of default” clause when no event of default has arisen will normally be merely ineffective and will not, in the absence of any contractual obligation (express or implied) between the person giving the notice and the borrower, give rise to any liability on the part of that person to the borrower. ¹⁶³⁴

Cross-default clauses

39-275

The purpose of a cross-default clause is to enable the lender to accelerate payment upon default by the borrower in the performance of his obligations under any other agreement with the lender or, in some cases, with any associated company of the lender. The cross-default clause may be drafted even more widely so as to confer a right to accelerate should any indebtedness of the borrower to any other lender not be paid when due for payment or, if payable on demand, should not be paid when demanded. While it may be objected that it is unfair to the borrower that a lender should be entitled to require immediate repayment under a loan agreement when the borrower has fully performed all of his obligations under that agreement, there is no doubt that such a clause will be upheld in a commercial agreement. ¹⁶³⁵

Failure of purposes for which money lent

39-276

Where money is lent for some specific purpose, and the purpose fails for one reason or another, the lender may sometimes have equitable remedies in rem under a so-called “Quistclose Trust” (after the case of that name) for the recovery of his money which are superior to an action in personam on the loan, since they may enable the lender to recover the money even where the borrower is insolvent. ¹⁶³⁶ The nature of such a trust and when it arises are of some complexity, but in the loan context it has been said that “the question in every case is whether the parties intended the money to be at the free disposal of the recipient”. ¹⁶³⁷

Secured loans

39-277

A loan may, and in practice commonly will, be secured in one of a number of different ways. But the existence of security does not mean that the lender is bound to look only to the security for repayment of the debt. Prima facie the borrower’s personal obligation remains unaffected by the security, and the lender may either disregard the security and sue the borrower on the loan, ¹⁶³⁸ or he may realise the security, and, if it proves insufficient, sue for the balance. But if the lender chooses to sue on the loan he is under an obligation, on payment of the debt, to hand over the security, and if he is unable to do so (e.g. because he has improperly parted with it) he cannot have judgment for the debt. ¹⁶³⁹ Acceptance of a negotiable instrument, such as a promissory note, as security for a loan does not suspend the lender’s right of action on the loan or extinguish the debt ¹⁶⁴⁰; but if it is accepted in payment, the lender’s right of action on the loan may be suspended during the currency of the instrument, since it normally amounts to conditional payment of the debt. ¹⁶⁴¹ It is also possible that the lender may agree to look only to the security for repayment, thereby leaving the borrower free of any personal obligation, so that the borrower will not be liable even if the security is insufficient: whether this is so in any particular case depends on the intention of the parties and the construction of any written agreement between them. ¹⁶⁴² But in the absence of special circumstances a court is unlikely to infer that the borrower is under no personal liability. Indeed, even in the absence of an express promise to repay the loan, a personal liability may be inferred despite the existence of some security. ¹⁶⁴³

39-278

There are, broadly, two kinds of security that may be given for a loan. The first is so-called personal security, consisting in a guarantee by a third party of the borrower's indebtedness or an indemnity by a third party against loss sustained by the lender in the event that the borrower fails to repay, ¹⁶⁴⁴ or a negotiable instrument such as a promissory note. The second is so-called real security, consisting in rights in or over property belonging to the borrower (or, sometimes, a third party) which are created in favour of or transferred to the lender and to which the lender can have resort in the event of the borrower's failure to repay and in priority to the claims of other (unsecured) creditors of the borrower. Real security may be taken over land or an interest in land, chattels, documents representing chattels such as bills of lading, sea and air waybills, delivery orders and warehouse receipts, ¹⁶⁴⁵ or over legal rights only, such as stocks and shares, insurance policies, ¹⁶⁴⁶ credit balances, ¹⁶⁴⁷ accounts receivable, ¹⁶⁴⁸ or intellectual or industrial property rights. The lender may take physical possession of the property, as in the case of a pledge. ¹⁶⁴⁹ But more often the security will be nonpossessory, and will consist of a mortgage, charge (fixed or floating), bill of sale, hypothecation, assignment or declaration of trust of rights in or over the property. The formalities for the creation or transfer of the security, the remedies available for its enforcement, priorities, the right to the proceeds and the right to trace, and the circumstances in which a third party may acquire an overriding title to the collateral will depend upon the form of security employed and the nature of the collateral. It would be impractical to attempt to discuss such matters in this chapter and reference should therefore be made to specialist works. There is at present no general system for the registration of security interests in property other than land. ¹⁶⁵⁰ But certain security interests may require to be registered (though not necessarily as a condition of their validity), for example, under the Bills of Sale Act (1878) Amendment Act 1882, ¹⁶⁵¹ the Companies Act 2006, ¹⁶⁵² the Agricultural Credits Act 1928 ¹⁶⁵³ and the Agricultural Marketing Act 1958, ¹⁶⁵⁴ the Merchant Shipping Act 1995, ¹⁶⁵⁵ the Civil Aviation Act 1982, ¹⁶⁵⁶ the Insolvency Act 1986 ¹⁶⁵⁷ and the Co-operative and Community Benefit Societies Act 2014. ¹⁶⁵⁸

Pari passu and negative pledge clauses

39-279

So-called negative pledge clauses take a variety of forms. Their purpose is to protect a first lender should the borrower seek to incur further indebtedness from subsequent lenders. Historically they were included in floating charge agreements and limited the authority of the chargor to deal with the collateral, in particular to create any subsequent security ranking in priority to or pari passu with the charge. ¹⁶⁵⁹ But modern more complex forms of clause can arise in any loan contract ¹⁶⁶⁰ and often preclude the borrower from incurring any further secured debt without the consent of the lender or even (the so-called affirmative negative pledge clause ¹⁶⁶¹) requiring the borrower to give parity of position to the first lender should the borrower incur further secured debt. ¹⁶⁶² Whilst such a clause clearly has contractual effect and can be enforced by the lender by injunction should he realise that the borrower is about to breach it, ¹⁶⁶³ whether it has any effect on third parties is less clear. Much will depend on the terms of the clause but it seems clear that in some circumstances it will affect subsequent lenders. Ordinary principles of agency will determine if third parties dealing with collateral that is the subject of a floating charge with a negative pledge clause, are bound by it. ¹⁶⁶⁴ Moreover, such a clause is now registrable under the Companies Act 2006. ¹⁶⁶⁵ But beyond this, whether the clause can have any proprietary effect is subject to much dispute and has yet to be authoritatively determined. ¹⁶⁶⁶

Subordination agreements

39-280

A subordination agreement is one by which a creditor agrees that his security or claim to a debt shall be subordinated to the security or claim of another creditor of the borrower. Subordination agreements may take many forms. ¹⁶⁶⁷ The legal problems created by subordination and, in particular, whether it is possible to contract out of pari passu distribution on insolvency, ¹⁶⁶⁸ lie outside the scope of this chapter. ¹⁶⁶⁹

Unconscionable bargains with expectant heirs

39-281

During the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries courts of equity developed a principle that enabled them to set aside loans ¹⁶⁷⁰ at exorbitant rates of interest made to “expectant heirs”. ¹⁶⁷¹ In the Earl of Aylesford’s case, ¹⁶⁷² the plaintiff, who was 22 years of age, and entitled to large property in the event of his surviving his father, borrowed money at about 60 per cent on bills; the court restrained an action upon the bills and decreed that they should be delivered up on payment of the sums actually advanced and interest at 5 per cent. Since most of these cases were decided, a number of statutes have been passed which make recourse to this equitable principle unnecessary in most circumstances, most recently, the Consumer Credit Act 1974. ¹⁶⁷³ In a modern case in which the principle was invoked, the Court of Appeal refused to apply it on the ground that the borrower had renewed bills several times after he had sold his reversion and therefore ceased to be an “expectant heir”. ¹⁶⁷⁴ The court also used language which might be understood to mean that they thought the whole principle was obsolete; but there have been a number of cases in which contracts have been set aside as unconscionable. ¹⁶⁷⁵

Illegal loans

39-282

A loan prohibited by statute is illegal and irrecoverable, ¹⁶⁷⁶ and so is a loan made for the express purpose of accomplishing an illegal object. ¹⁶⁷⁷

Student loans

39-283

These are governed by Pt II of the Teaching and Higher Education Act 1998 and regulations ¹⁶⁷⁸ made thereunder.

^{1567.} It is arguable that a promise to make a loan without interest is, while still executory, unsupported by consideration and therefore unenforceable. There appears to be no authority on the question.

^{1568.} For an example of a statutory provision that only applied to a “loan” (and hence where the meaning of that term was crucial), see Belize Bank Ltd v Association of Concerned Belizeans [2011] UKPC 35. See also Santander UK Plc v Harrison [2013] EWHC 199 (QB), [2013] C.C.L.R. 4 on the meaning “cash loan” (see above, para.39-019 n.94 and para.39-148 n.957).

^{1569.} Parsons v Equitable Investment Co Ltd [1916] 2 Ch. 527; Law v Coburn [1972] 1 W.L.R. 1238.

^{1570.} See, e.g. Hussey v Palmer [1972] 1 W.L.R. 1286 (constructive or resulting trust).

^{1571.} [1951] A.C. 443.

^{1572.} [1951] A.C. 443 at 465.

^{1573.} [1962] Ch. 466.

^{1574.} Brooks & Co v Blackburn Benefit Society (1884) 8 App. Cas. 857.

- 1575. Cuthbert v Robarts, Lubbock & Co [1909] 2 Ch. 226, 233.
- 1576. s.9(1); above, para.39-019.
- 1577. Chow Yoong Hong v Choong Fah Rubber Manufactory [1962] A.C. 209, 216 (for the purposes of money lending control).
- 1578. IRC v Port of London Authority [1923] A.C. 507 (tax context).
- 1579. Chow Yoong Hong v Choong Fah Rubber Manufactory, above, at 216.
- 1580. Transport & General Credit Corp Ltd v Morgan [1939] Ch. 531; IRC v Rowntree & Co Ltd [1948] 1 All E.R. 482; Chow Yoong Hong case, above.
- 1581. Olds Discount Co Ltd v John Playfair Ltd [1938] 3 All E.R. 275.
- 1582. Olds Discount Co Ltd v John Playfair, above; and see Chow Yoong Hong v Choong Fah Rubber Manufactory [1962] A.C. 209; Re Securitibank Ltd [1978] 1 N.Z.L.R. 97.
- 1583. British Ry Traffic and Electric Co v Kahn [1921] W.N. 52; Automobile and General & Finance Corp Ltd v Morris (1929) 73 S.J. 451; Olds Discount Co Ltd v Cohen [1938] 3 All E.R. 281n.; Trade Promotion Trust Ltd v Young (1940) 84 S.J. 646; Premor Ltd v Shaw Bros [1964] 1 W.L.R. 978. For hire purchase, see below, paras 39-306 et seq.
- 1584. Goldberg v Tait [1950] N.Z.L.R. 976; Cash Order Purchases v Brady [1952] N.Z.L.R. 898; Premier Clothing Co v Hillcoat [1969] C.L.Y. 2279a; see below, para.39-481.
- 1585. NG Napier Ltd v Patterson, 1959 S.C.(J.) 48; MacDonald v NG Napier Ltd, 1960 S.L.T. 345; NG Napier Ltd v Corbett, 1962 S.L.T. Sh Ct 90.
- 1586. See below, paras 39-472 et seq.
- 1587. On the characterisation of transactions generally, see Welsh Development Agency v Export Finance Co Ltd [1992] B.C.C. 270 (sale or security); and Agnew v Commissioner of Inland Revenue [2001] UKPC 28, [2001] 2 A.C. 710 (fixed or floating charge).
- 1588. Spargo's Case (1873) L.R. 8 Ch. 407.
- 1589. Levett v Barclays Bank Plc [1995] 1 W.L.R. 1260, 1271.
- 1590. Mathew v Blackmore (1857) 1 H. & N. 762.
- 1591. De Vigier v IRC [1964] 1 W.L.R. 1073.
- 1592. Seldon v Davidson [1968] 1 W.L.R. 1083.
- 1593. For a discussion in the context of the model contract of the Loan Markets Association, Multicurrency Term and Revolving Facilities Agreement (April 2009), see Rawlings, (2012) J.B.L. 89.
- 1594. Exceptionally, a loan agreement may confer a discretion on the lender whether to make an advance or not: McKay (t/a McKay Law Solicitors and Advocates) v Centurion Credit Resources LLC [2012] EWCA Civ 1941.
- 1595. Sichel v Mosenthal (1862) 30 Beav. 371; South African Territories v Wallington [1898] A.C. 309; Re Smelting Corp [1915] 1 Ch. 472. But specific performance may now be ordered of a contract to take debentures in a company although such a contract is in law an agreement to make a loan: Companies Act 2006 s.740. cf. also Beswick v Beswick [1968] A.C. 58.
- 1596. Manchester and Oldham Bank v Cook (1884) 49 L.T. 674, 678; Western Wagon & Property Co

- v West* [1892] 1 Ch. 271, 277; South African Territories v Wallington [1897] 1 Q.B. 692 (affirmed [1898] A.C. 309). See Vol.I, para.26-175.
- 1597. Prehn v Royal Bank of Liverpool (1870) L.R. 5 Ex. 92; Bahamas Sisal Plantation v Griffin (1897) 14 T.L.R. 139; Astor Properties Ltd v Tunbridge Wells Equitable Friendly Society [1936] 1 All E.R. 531.
- 1598. South African Territories v Wallington, above, at 696–697. The damages would doubtless have to be discounted to allow for the fact that the additional interest would have to be paid over a period of time.
- 1599. Manchester and Oldham Bank v Cook (1884) 49 L.T. 674; Astor Properties Ltd v Tunbridge Wells Equitable Friendly Society, above; General Securities Ltd v Don Ingram Ltd [1940] 3 D.L.R. 641.
- 1600. Manchester and Oldham Bank v Cook, above, at 678, 679.
- 1601. Bank Bumiputra Malaysia Bhd v Mae Perkayuan Sdn Bhd [1993] 1 S.C.R. 385 Malaysia.
- 1602. Rogers v Challis (1859) 27 Beav. 175.
- 1603. McGregor on Damages, 19th edn, para.28–031.
- 1604. Norton v Ellam (1837) 2 M. & W. 461; Atterbury v Jarvie (1857) 2 H. & N. 114, 120; Re George (1890) 44 Ch. D. 627.
- 1605. Joachimson v Swiss Bank Corp [1921] 3 K.B. 110; National Bank of Commerce v National Westminster Bank [1990] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 514.
- 1606. Re Colonial Finance, Mortgage, Investment and Guarantee Corp Ltd (1905) 6 S.R.N.S.W. 6, 9; cited with approval in Re a Company [1985] B.C.L.C. 37 and in Bank of Credit and Commerce International SA v Blattner (CA) Unreported November 20, 1986 (available on Westlaw).
- 1607. Bunbury Foods Pty Ltd v National Bank of Australia Ltd (1984) 153 C.L.R. 491; Bank of Baroda v Panessar [1987] Ch. 335.
- 1608. Brighty v Norton (1862) 3 B. & S. 305, 312; Toms v Wilson (1862) 4 B. & S. 442, 453; Moore v Shelley (1883) 8 App. Cas. 285, 293; R.A. Cripps & Son Ltd v Wickenden [1973] 1 W.L.R. 944; Bank of Baroda v Panessar, above. But see the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999 (SI 1999/2083) Sch.2 para.1(g) above, para.38-283. As noted above at para.38-201, these provisions are replaced, for contracts made on or after October 1, 2015, by the Consumer Rights Act 2015 Sch.2 para.8.
- 1609.  See Vol.I, para.13-080. Note Alexander v West Bromwich Mortgage Co Ltd [2016] EWCA Civ 496.
- 1610. Titford Property Co Ltd v Cannon Street Acceptances Unreported 1975 (Goff J.), reproduced in Cresswell, Encyclopedia of Banking Law, pp.71–72. But see Lloyds Bank Plc v Lambert [1999] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 161; Bank of Ireland AMCD (Property Holdings) Ltd [2001] 2 All E.R. (Comm) 494.
- 1611. Jackson v Irvin (1809) 2 Camp. 48, 50; Penny v Foy (1828) 8 B. & C. 11.
- 1612. This may be proved by any evidence: see Vol.I, para.21-060.
- 1613. Douglass v Lloyds Bank (1929) 34 Com. Cas. 263.
- 1614. See Vol.I, para.21-060.
- 1615. Page v Newman (1829) 9 B. & C. 378; London, Chatham & Dover Ry v South Eastern Ry

- [1893] A.C. 429; President of India v La Pintada Compania Navegacion SA [1985] A.C. 104.
- 1616. Cook v Fowler (1874) L.R. 7 H.L. 27; Re Roberts (1880) 14 Ch. D. 49. Damages for the “detention” of the debt were recoverable, though not necessarily at the contract rate.
- 1617. Trans Trust SPRL v Danubian Trading Co [1952] 2 Q.B. 297, 306, 307; Wadsworth v Lydell [1981] 1 W.L.R. 598. See also Ozalid Group (Export) Ltd v African Continental Bank Ltd [1979] 2 Lloyd’s Rep. 231; Bacon v Cooper (Metals) Ltd [1982] 1 All E.R. 397. cf. Compania Financiera “Soleada” SA v Hamoor Tanker Corp Inc [1981] 1 W.L.R. 274. See Vol.I, paras 26-175, 26-229 et seq.
- 1618. In particular under the Senior Courts Act 1981 s.35A, the County Courts Act 1984 s.69, and the Arbitration Act 1996 s.49. See Vol.I, paras 26-236 et seq.; below, para.39-295.
- 1619. [2007] UKHL 34, [2007] 3 W.L.R. 354. The decision was technically obiter on this point (the claim being for repayment of sums) but their Lordships went out of their way to review the general law on the recovery of interest as damages and the case has since been regarded as authority for that proposition (see e.g. Prudential Assurance Co Ltd v Revenue and Customs Commissioners [2013] EWHC 3249 (Ch)).
- 1620. See generally, Vol.I, Ch.26.
- 1621. See below, para.39-289.
- 1622. Coca-Cola Financial Corp v Finsat International Ltd [1998] Q.B. 43.
- 1623.  See Vol.I, para.15-104 n.541. As noted above at para.38-334, for consumer contracts made on or after October 1, 2015, the 1977 Act is replaced by provisions in the Consumer Rights Act 2015 Pt 2, see above paras 38-334 et seq. But see Surzur Overseas Ltd v Ocean Reliance Shipping Ltd [1997] C.L.Y. 906; Skipskredittforeningen v Emperor Navigation [1998] 1 Lloyd’s Rep. 66; WRM Group Ltd v Wood [1998] C.L.C. 189; FG Wilson (Engineering) Ltd v John Holt & Co (Liverpool) Ltd [2012] EWHC 2477 (Comm), [2012] 2 Lloyd’s Rep 479. See the unsuccessful attempt to invoke that Act in African Export-Import Bank v Shebah Exploration and Product Co Ltd [2016] EWHC 311 (Comm) (syndicated loan).
- 1624. SI 1999/2083. See above, paras 38-202 et seq. As noted above at para.38-201, these regulations are replaced, for contracts made on or after October 1, 2015, by provisions in the Consumer Rights Act 2015 Pt 2.
- 1625. [2013] EWHC 482 (Comm). It was also held not to give rise to an “unfair relationship” under the CCA 1974 (see above, paras 39-212 et seq.).
- 1626. National Westminster Bank Ltd v Halesowen Presswork & Assemblies Ltd [1972] A.C. 785; Stein v Blake [1996] A.C. 243.
- 1627. See below, para.39-273.
- 1628. See Vol.I, para.26-199.
- 1629. The Angelic Star [1988] 1 Lloyd’s Rep. 122.
- 1630. The Angelic Star, above.
- 1631. Protector Endowment Loan & Annuity Co v Grice (1880) 5 Q.B.D. 592; Wallingford v Mutual Society (1880) 5 App. Cas. 685. See also Wadham Stringer Finance Ltd v Meaney [1981] 1 W.L.R. 39. Contrast United Dominions Trust Ltd v Patterson [1973] N.I. 142; United Dominions Trust v Thomas [1976] C.L.Y. 1618 Cty Ct. See Vol.I, para.26-199. But see the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999 (SI 1999/2083) above paras 38-202 et seq. As noted above at para. 38-201, these regulations are replaced, for contracts made on or after October 1, 2015, by provisions in the Consumer Rights Act 2015 Pt 2.

- 1632. A loan may be advanced for a fixed term but nevertheless be repayable at any time on demand, see above, para.39-263.
- 1633. Except in the case of a regulated agreement under the Consumer Credit Act 1974, see ss.76, 86B, 86C, 87, 98, 98A(3) (see above, paras 39-131, 39-134, 39-164, 39-166, 39-172, 39-173). See also the “unfair relationship” provisions (above, paras 39-212 et seq., especially Patel v Patel [2009] EWHC 3264 (QB), above, para.39-222) and the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999 (SI 1999/2083) Sch.2 para.1(g); above, para.38-283 (replaced, for contracts made on or after October 1, 2015, by provisions in the Consumer Rights Act 2015 Pt 2).
- 1634. Concord Trust v Law Debenture Trust Corp Plc [2005] UKHL 27, [2005] 1 W.L.R. 1592 at [30]–[45].
- 1635. Such a clause survived challenge (in the business context) under the “unfair relationship” provisions (above, paras 39-212 et seq.) in Rahman v HSBC Bank Plc [2012] EWHC 11 (Ch). But where the borrower is a consumer, see Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999 (SI 1999/2083) reg.5, above, paras 38-220 et seq. (replaced, for contracts made on or after October 1, 2015, by provisions in the Consumer Rights Act 2015 Pt 2).
- 1636. Barclays Bank Ltd v Quistclose Investment Ltd [1970] A.C. 567; affirming [1968] Ch. 540. See also Carreras Rothmans Ltd v Freeman Matthews Treasure Ltd [1985] Ch. 207; Re EVTR [1987] BCLC 646 (CA); Twinsectra Ltd v Yardley [2002] UKHL 12, [2002] 2 A.C. 164. Contrast Westdeutsche Landesbank Girozentrale v Islington London BC [1996] A.C. 669 (loan for ultra vires purpose).
- 1637. per Lord Millett in Twinsectra Ltd v Yardley [2002] 2 A.C. 164, 185. See discussions (and further references) in the specialist texts, e.g. Beale, Bridge, Gullifer and Lomnicka, The Law of Security and Title-Based Financing (2012), paras 8.126 et seq., See also Swadling (ed.) The Quistclose Trust: Critical Essays (2004); Chambers, Resulting Trusts (1997), Ch.3; Worthington, Proprietary Interests in Commercial Transactions (1996), Ch.3; Millett (1985) 101 L.Q.R. 269; Rickett (1991) 107 L.Q.R. 608; Bridge (1992) 12 O.J.L.S. 333; Ho and Smart (2001) 21 O.J.L.S. 267; Glister [2004] L.M.C.L.Q. 460.
- 1638. China and Southsea Bank Ltd v Tan Soon Gin [1990] 1 A.C. 536, 545; National Westminster Bank Plc v Kitch [1996] 1 W.L.R. 1316; Re Bank of Credit and Commerce International SA (No.8) [1998] A.C. 214.
- 1639. Ellis & Co's Trustee v Dixon-Johnson [1925] A.C. 489.
- 1640. Re Rankin and Shiliday [1927] N.I. 162; Modern Light Cars Ltd v Seals [1934] 1 K.B. 32.
- 1641. See, e.g. Bolt & Nut Co (Tipton) Ltd v Rowlands, Nicholls & Co Ltd [1964] 2 Q.B. 10; Vol.I, para.21-075.
- 1642. Barclays Bank v Beck [1952] 2 Q.B. 47; Lloyds Bank v Margolis [1954] 1 W.L.R. 644; Levett v Barclays Bank [1995] 1 W.L.R. 1260, 1271. See also Tam Wing Chuen v Bank of Credit and Commerce Hong Kong Ltd [1996] B.C.C. 388; Re Bank of Credit and Commerce International SA (No.8) [1998] A.C. 214; Fairmile Portfolio Management Ltd v Davies Arnold Cooper [1998] C.L.Y. 2520.
- 1643. Yates v Aston (1843) 4 Q.B. 182; Marryat v Marryat (1860) 28 Beav. 224; Isaacson v Harwood (1868) L.R. 3 Ch. App. 225; Saunders v Milsome (1866) L.R. 2 Eq. 573; Jackson v North Eastern Ry (1877) 7 Ch. D. 573; MS Fashions Ltd v Bank of Credit and Commerce International SA [1993] Ch. 425, 431 (but see the observations on this case in Re Bank of Credit and Commerce International SA (No.8), above).
- 1644. See below, Ch.45.
- 1645. See, e.g. Factors Act 1889 s.1(4).

- 1646. See below, Ch.42.
- 1647. Re Bank of Credit and Commerce International SA (No.8) [1998] A.C. 214; see above, Ch.34.
- 1648. See Vol.I, Ch.19.
- 1649. See above, para.33-121.
- 1650. But see the Professor A.L. Diamond, A Review of Security Interests in Property by Professor A.L. Diamond (DTI Paper, 1989) and the Law Commission's Company Security Interests (Law Com No.296, 2005).
- 1651. See below, para.39-519.
- 1652. s.860. See Vol.I, para.10-046.
- 1653. s.9.
- 1654. s.15.
- 1655. s.16 and Sch.1; see below, para.39-524.
- 1656. s.86; see below, para.39-525.
- 1657. s.344.
- 1658. Pt 5 (Charges over society's assets).
- 1659. See Re Automatic Bottle Makers Ltd [1926] Ch. 412 CA.
- 1660. They are particularly prevalent in international/syndicated loans. See Wood, International Loans, Bonds Guarantees and Legal Opinions, 2nd edn (2007), paras 5-008 et seq.; Tennekoon, The Law and Regulation of International Finance, 2nd edn (1998); Cranston, Principles of Banking Law, 2nd edn (2002), p.315; Boardman & Crosthwaite (1986) 3 J.I.B.L. 162; Maxton [1993] J.B.L. 458; Wo (1999) 14 J.I.B.L. 360; McKnight (2002) 17 J.I.B.L.193, 203.
- 1661. Stone (1991) 6 J.I.B.L. 364.
- 1662. Either pari passu security over the collateral or security over other collateral of equal value. For the many varieties of such clauses and their possible different consequences, see the texts cited in n.1661.
- 1663. And breach is a "default event", see above, para.39-273.
- 1664. In particular, the issue will turn on whether the chargor has ostensible authority to deal with the collateral. See above, Ch.31.
- 1665. s.859D(2)(c), added on April 3, 2013 by SI 2013/600.
- 1666. For discussions written before the possibility of registering negative pledge clauses under the 2006 Act, see Gough, Company Charges, 2nd edn (1996), p.357; Goode on Legal Problems of Credit and Security, 4th edn (2008), paras 1.71–1.78; Farrar (1974) 38 Conv. N.S. 315, 319; Beale, Bridge, Gullifer and Lomnicka, The Law of Security and Title-Based Financing (2012), paras 8.76 et seq.
- 1667. See, e.g. Cheah v Equiticorp Finance Group Ltd [1992] 1 A.C. 472 (variation of mortgage priorities); Banque Financière de la Cité SA v Parc (Battersea) Ltd [1999] 1 A.C. 221 (letter of postponement); Re SSSL Realisations (20–02) Ltd [2004] EWHC 1760 (Ch).
- 1668. See National Westminster Bank Ltd v Halesowen Presswork and Assemblies Ltd [1972] A.C.

785; British Eagle International Airlines Ltd v Air France [1975] 1 W.L.R. 758; Re Maxwell Communications Corp Plc (No.3) [1993] B.C.C. 369.

- 1669. See Wood, Project Finance, Securitisations, Subordinated Debt (2007), Chs 10–14; Beale, Bridge, Gullifer and Lomnicka, The Law of Security and Title-Based Financing (2012), paras 14-103 et seq. (“priority agreements” between secured creditors) and paras 8.100 et seq. (“contractual subordination” between unsecured creditors); Powell [1993] L.M.C.L.Q. 357.
- 1670. The principle also applied to the sale of a reversion at an undervalue. By s.174 of the Law of Property Act 1925, a sale of a reversion can no longer be set aside merely because it was at an undervalue, but this does not affect the court’s jurisdiction to deal with unconscionable bargains.
- 1671. Earl Chesterfield v Janssen (1750) 2 Ves. Sen. 125; Earl Aylesford v Morris (1873) L.R. 8 Ch. 484; O’Rourke v Bolingbroke (1877) 2 App. Cas. 814; Nevill v Snelling (1880) 15 Ch. D. 679; Fry v Lane (1888) 40 Ch. D. 312; James v Kerr (1889) 40 Ch. D. 449; Rees v De Bernardy [1896] 2 Ch. 437.
- 1672. (1873) L.R. 8 Ch. 484.
- 1673. ss.140A–140C (above, paras 39-212 et seq.). Previous statutes (repealed by that Act) were: the Infants Relief Act 1874 and Betting and Loans (Infants) Act 1892.
- 1674. Levin v Roth [1950] 1 All E.R. 698n.
- 1675. See above, Vol.I, paras 8-130—8-143.
- 1676. Boissevain v Weil [1950] A.C. 327; see Vol.I, paras 16-152 et seq.
- 1677. Boissevain v Weil, above; as to money lent for gaming or to pay gaming debts, see below, para.41-035.
- 1678. Education (Student Support) Regulations 2011 (SI 2011/1986). See also the Education (Student Loans) (Repayment) Regulations 2009 (SI 2009/470), as amended.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 39 - Credit and Security

Section 2. - Loans and Interest

(b) - Interest ¹⁶⁷⁹

General rule at common law

39-284

At common law, the general rule was that interest was not payable on a debt or loan in the absence of express agreement or some course of dealing or custom to that effect. ¹⁶⁸⁰ Thus, in the absence of express stipulation, it has been held that interest was not payable on the price of goods sold, although the price was payable on a certain day ¹⁶⁸¹; nor for money lent to, or paid for, the defendant ¹⁶⁸²; nor on a claim for money had and received to the plaintiff's use unless fraud was proved ¹⁶⁸³; nor on a guarantee ¹⁶⁸⁴; nor on money due on a building contract for work done by the contractor, payment for which is in arrear. ¹⁶⁸⁵ This principle differs from the (now abolished) rule already noted, ¹⁶⁸⁶ that interest could not normally be awarded by way of damages for non-payment of money. The former principle means that interest is not payable under the contract itself, in the absence of express agreement or custom; the latter rule meant that interest could not be awarded by way of damages for breach of contract. The former principle remains in force, though its scope has been reduced by both equitable and statutory developments. ¹⁶⁸⁷

Interest payable by agreement, course of dealing or custom

39-285

Contractual interest is, of course, payable wherever there is an express agreement to that effect. Such an agreement may also be inferred from a course of dealing between the parties, e.g. if it has been frequently charged and paid without objection in similar accounts. ¹⁶⁸⁸ Similarly, an obligation to pay interest may arise from the custom or usages of a particular trade or business. ¹⁶⁸⁹

39-286

A contract to pay interest up to the date of repayment of the debt does not necessarily imply an agreement to pay interest beyond that date in the event of default in repayment ¹⁶⁹⁰ but in this situation interest (though not necessarily at the contract rate) can be awarded by way of damages. ¹⁶⁹¹

Interest payable in equity

39-287

In certain circumstances, the rule in equity is that interest is payable even in the absence of any agreement or custom to that effect, though subject, of course, to a contrary agreement. Thus, interest is payable on a mortgage debt even though the deed contains no mention of interest. ¹⁶⁹² So also the right of a surety who has paid the creditor, to be indemnified by the principal debtor, carries a right to interest. ¹⁶⁹³ Again, where the debtor is in a fiduciary position towards the creditor, and has in his hands moneys due to the creditor, any interest actually earned by the use of the money is recoverable by the creditor, ¹⁶⁹⁴ and, indeed, it seems that interest would be recoverable even if it had not actually been earned. ¹⁶⁹⁵ A trustee or fiduciary may be charged compound interest where he has wrongly profited, or may be presumed to have so profited, from having the use of another person's money. ¹⁶⁹⁶ A claim for compound interest on money obtained or retained by fraud is also maintainable in equity. ¹⁶⁹⁷

Sale of land

39-288

A vendor of land is entitled to require the purchaser to pay interest on his unpaid purchase-money from the date when he takes, or might safely take, possession of the land. ¹⁶⁹⁸ This principle is not confined to the sale of land, but extends to any contract, specific performance of which would be ordered by the court, and in which the defendant has obtained possession of the subject matter before payment of the price. ¹⁶⁹⁹ It also extends to the expropriation of land under statutory powers, ¹⁷⁰⁰ but not to the requisitioning of goods, ¹⁷⁰¹ though subject, of course, to express statutory provision in both cases.

Compound interest

39-289

Compound interest is payable either by agreement or custom, but not otherwise. ¹⁷⁰² By the practice of bankers, interest on a customer's indebtedness is periodically added to the capital sum advanced, so that, in effect, compound interest is achieved. ¹⁷⁰³ At one time there was a tendency to look for actual acquiescence by the customer in the practice for holding that it was binding upon him. ¹⁷⁰⁴ But it is now clear that the right to capitalise interest can be implied into the banker-customer relationship by the usage of bankers. ¹⁷⁰⁵ In National Bank of Greece SA v Pinios Shipping Co (No.1), ¹⁷⁰⁶ the House of Lords held that a banker's entitlement to capitalise interest did not, as had previously been suggested, ¹⁷⁰⁷ arise only in respect of "mercantile accounts current for mutual transactions" and that the entitlement continued until payment or judgment, notwithstanding that the banker demanded repayment of the balance due to him from the customer. It may therefore be assumed that earlier authorities to the effect that the banker's entitlement ceases when the customer dies, ¹⁷⁰⁸ becomes bankrupt, ¹⁷⁰⁹ or closes his account ¹⁷¹⁰ are no longer good law.

Trustees and fiduciaries

39-290

Compound interest has always been awarded in equity against a trustee or other person owing fiduciary duties who is accountable for profits made from his position. The justification for this is that, if he has improperly obtained or retained or misapplied trust money, then he must account for the profit which he made, or ought to or is presumed to have made, from the use of the money. ¹⁷¹¹

Tender of payment

39-291

Where a debt carries interest, and the creditor refuses a proper tender of the full amount of the capital sum and interest, he is not entitled to claim interest for any further period if the money is set aside by the debtor, and is available for repayment at any time thereafter. ¹⁷¹²

Rates of interest

39-292

Since the Usury Laws Repeal Act 1854 there was, until recently (apart from the discretionary power of the court to alter interest rates conferred by the “unfair relationship” provisions in the Consumer Credit Act 1974 ¹⁷¹³ and by the Insolvency Act 1986 ¹⁷¹⁴) no specific statutory control over the rate of interest that may be agreed by the parties to a transaction. ¹⁷¹⁵ But in response to the rise of the “pay-day lending” industry, the Financial Conduct Authority was initially given the power to control the cost of credit and various other terms in credit agreements ¹⁷¹⁶ and now has an obligation to make rules controlling the cost of “high-cost short-term credit” (as defined) ¹⁷¹⁷ and such rules came into force on January 2, 2015. ¹⁷¹⁸

Variation of interest rate

39-293

❗ The rate of interest stipulated in a loan agreement may be either a fixed rate or a rate that automatically varies, for example, in accordance with movements in a base rate or inter-bank rate or by reference to an index or some other factor specified in the agreement. But some loan agreements provide that the lender has the power to vary the interest rate unilaterally at his discretion. ¹⁷¹⁹ Such a provision is not unlawful as such at common law, but clear words are required to achieve that result.

¹⁷²⁰ ❗ The power is, however, even at common law not completely unfettered. In Paragon Finance Plc v Nash ¹⁷²¹ the Court of Appeal held that the unilateral power of a mortgagee to set the rate of interest from time-to-time was subject to an implied term that the discretion to vary rates should not be exercised dishonestly, for an improper purpose, capriciously, arbitrarily or in a way in which no reasonable lender, acting reasonably, would do, although on the facts it was held that there was no real prospect of the defendant borrower proving a breach of this implied term at trial. ¹⁷²² Some further protection is afforded to a borrower who is a consumer ¹⁷²³ by Sch.2 to the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999 ¹⁷²⁴ which contains an indicative and non-exhaustive list ¹⁷²⁵ of the terms which may be regarded as unfair. It includes terms “enabling ... the supplier [of services] to alter the terms of the contract unilaterally without a valid reason stated in the contract”, ¹⁷²⁶ although this is expressly stated to be ¹⁷²⁷:

“... without hindrance to terms under which a supplier of financial services reserves the right to alter the rate of interest payable by the consumer ... or the amount of other charges for financial services without notice where there is a valid reason provided that the supplier is required to inform the other contracting party or parties thereof at the earliest opportunity and that the latter are free to dissolve the contract immediately.”

How a creditor exercises its powers of variation may also render a credit relationship “unfair” under the “unfair relationship” provisions of the Consumer Credit Act 1974 ¹⁷²⁸ and hence enable the court to exercise its wide powers to re-open a credit agreement under those provisions. In addition, now that consumer credit is regulated by the Financial Conduct Authority under the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000, ¹⁷²⁹ the wide regulatory powers under that Act may be used to control the exercise of such a power. ¹⁷³⁰ Moreover, consumers are also protected by various statutory notification requirements ¹⁷³¹ as regards interest rate variations and the Standards of Lending Practice ¹⁷³² also stipulates for the provision by banks and building societies of information as to changes in interest rates.

Default interest

39-294

❗ A contractual provision for payment of a higher rate of interest after a default in payment by the borrower is open to attack as a penalty. ¹⁷³³ ❗ But a clause that provides for interest to increase on default will not be held to give rise to a penalty if the increase is not retrospective but only prospective from the date of default, if the dominant contractual purpose of the clause is not to deter default, and if the increase is modest and commercially justifiable by reason of the increased credit risk represented by a debtor in default. ¹⁷³⁴ ! It is submitted that the current practice of banks to charge a certain rate of interest on “authorised” overdrafts, i.e. overdrafts incurred by prior arrangement with the bank, and a higher rate on “unauthorised” overdrafts (incurred without prior arrangement or in excess of the authorised overdraft limit), would not be held to impose a penalty. ¹⁷³⁵ However, where the borrower is a consumer, a provision for payment of a higher rate of interest on default is open to challenge as being “unfair”, and so not binding on the consumer, under the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999. ¹⁷³⁶ Moreover, the “unfair relationship” provisions of the Consumer Credit Act 1974 may apply to enable the court to reopen the agreement. ¹⁷³⁷

Interest payable by statute

39-295

Various statutes provide for the payment of interest in special cases. The most important of these enactments is the Late Payment of Commercial Debts (Interest) Act 1998, ¹⁷³⁸ which imports an obligation to pay statutory (simple) interest on debts arising under certain contracts for the supply of goods or services ¹⁷³⁹ where the purchaser and the supplier are each acting in the course of a business. The rate of interest is that prescribed by order. ¹⁷⁴⁰ Other general statutory provisions are contained in: the Judgments Act 1838 (interest on High Court judgment debts), ¹⁷⁴¹ the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 (interest on dishonoured bills and notes), ¹⁷⁴² the Partnership Act 1890 (interest on money advanced by partner to firm and on profits made after dissolution), ¹⁷⁴³ the Arbitration Act 1996 (power of the arbitral tribunal to award interest), ¹⁷⁴⁴ the Senior Courts Act 1981 (interest on debt or damages in the High Court) ¹⁷⁴⁵ and the County Courts Act 1984 (interest on debt or damages and on judgements in the county court). ¹⁷⁴⁶

39-296

Further provision for the payment of interest is made by a number of miscellaneous enactments. Thus, after payment of all debts of a bankrupt, interest for the period since the commencement of the bankruptcy is payable under the Insolvency Act 1986 ¹⁷⁴⁷ if any assets remain, and similar provisions exist in relation to insolvent companies. ¹⁷⁴⁸ There are also a number of rules of court dealing with payment of interest in various circumstances. ¹⁷⁴⁹

Contractual interest after judgment

39-297

Often it is agreed that interest at the contractual rate is payable “after as well as before any judgment”. ¹⁷⁵⁰ The validity of such a provision depends on “whether the covenant for the payment of interest is an independent covenant or a covenant which is merely ancillary to the payment of the principal money”. ¹⁷⁵¹ If the covenant is merely ancillary, the promise merges in the judgment. ¹⁷⁵² In Director General of Fair Trading v First National Bank Plc ¹⁷⁵³ the House of Lords held that a term in a consumer contract that the borrower was to continue to pay interest at the contractual rate until the discharge of any judgment obtained by the lender, was not an unfair term under the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1994. ¹⁷⁵⁴ However, if an agreement regulated by the Consumer Credit Act 1974 contains such a term, the creditor or owner is now ¹⁷⁵⁵ obliged to notify the debtor or hirer that such post-judgment interest is accruing. ¹⁷⁵⁶

¹⁶⁷⁹. See also Vol.I, paras 26-227 et seq.

¹⁶⁸⁰. Page v Newman (1829) 9 B. & C. 378, 381; Re Gosman (1881) 17 Ch. D. 771; London, Chatham & Dover Ry v South Eastern Ry [1893] A.C. 429; President of India v La Pintada Compania Navegacion SA [1985] A.C. 104; Mathew v TM Sutton Ltd [1994] 1 W.L.R. 1455.

- 1681. Gordon v Swan (1810) 12 East 419; Chalie v Duke of York (1806) 6 Especially 45.
- 1682. Calton v Bragg (1812) 15 East 223; Carr v Edwards (1822) 3 Stark. 132.
- 1683. Johnson v The King [1904] A.C. 817. But see below, para.39-287.
- 1684. Hare v Rickards (1831) 7 Bing. 254, 256.
- 1685. Hill v South Staffs Ry (1874) L.R. 18 Eq. 154.
- 1686. Above, para.39-270.
- 1687. See below, paras 39-287, 39-295.
- 1688. Great Western Insurance Co v Cunliffe (1874) L.R. 9 Ch. 525; Re Marquis of Anglesey [1901] 2 Ch. 548; Re Duncan & Co [1905] 1 Ch. 307.
- 1689. Ikin v Bradley (1818) 8 Taunt. 250; Lloyds Bank Plc v Voller [2000] 2 All E.R. (Comm) 987 and Emerald Meats (London) Ltd v AIB Group (UK) Plc [2002] EWCA Civ 460 (interest on bank overdrafts). See also below, para.39-289 (compounding of interest).
- 1690. Cook v Fowler (1874) L.R. 7 H.L. 27, 37.
- 1691. Above, para.39-270. In Chubb v Dean [2013] EWHC 1282 (Ch) it was confirmed that, in absence of agreement, the High Court only had power to award post-judgment interest pursuant to statute (in particular only at the rate provided for by the Judgments Act 1838, see below, para.39-295).
- 1692. Re Kerr's Policy (1869) L.R. 8 Eq. 331; Re Drax [1903] 1 Ch. 781; Mendl v Smith (1943) 112 L.J. Ch. 279; Ezekiel v Orakpo [1997] 1 W.L.R. 340, 346; Al Wazir v Islamic Press Agency Inc [2001] EWCA Civ 1276, [2002] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 410.
- 1693. Petre v Duncombe (1851) 20 L.J.Q.B. 242; Re Fox, Walker & Co (1880) 15 Ch. D. 400.
- 1694. Brown v IRC [1965] A.C. 244; but as to the particular case of solicitors, see now Solicitors Act 1974 s.33.
- 1695. Burdick v Garrick (1870) L.R. 5 Ch. App. 233; Harsant v Blaine Macdonald & Co (1887) 56 L.J.Q.B. 511; Dominion Coal Co v Maskinonge SS Co [1922] 2 K.B. 132; Mathew v TM Sutton Ltd [1994] 1 W.L.R. 1455; Westdeutsche Landesbank Girozentrale v Islington LBC [1996] A.C. 669. In Barclay v Harris (1915) 85 L.J.K.B. 115 it was held that interest can only be claimed as from the time when payment is requested, even in cases of fiduciary relationships, but where interest has actually been earned this cannot stand with Brown v IRC, above.
- 1696. See para.39-290 n.1712.
- 1697. Johnson v The King [1904] A.C. 817, 822. But not on damages for deceit at common law: Black v Davies [2005] EWCA Civ 531.
- 1698. Birch v Joy (1852) 3 H.L.C. 565; International Ry v Niagara Parks Commission [1941] A.C. 328, 344; Re Priestley's Contract [1947] Ch. 469. See also De Bernales v Wood (1812) 3 Camp. 258 ; Babacomp Ltd v Rightside Properties Ltd (1975) 234 E.G. 201 (interest payable by vendor on deposit not returned).
- 1699. International Ry v Niagara Parks Commission [1941] A.C. 328.
- 1700. Inglewood Pulp Co v New Brunswick Electric Power Commission [1928] A.C. 492.
- 1701. Swift & Co v Board of Trade [1925] A.C. 520.

- 1702. Fergusson v Fyffe (1841) 8 Cl. & F. 121, 140; Williamson v Williamson (1869) L.R. 7 Eq. 542. Re M [2010] EWHC 2324 (Admin) (contractual requirement for compound interest after the indebtedness not repaid); Porter Capital Corp v Masters [2013] EWHC 3929 (agreement expressly provided for payment of compound interest). Note Consumer Credit Act 1974 s.86F(2) (above, para.39-136: debtor or hirer under an agreement regulated by that Act (see paras 39-005 et seq., above) is only liable to pay simple interest in connection with a “default sum” (as defined in s.187A) payable under the agreement).
- 1703. But the question arises whether interest can be capitalised, in the absence of express agreement, at shorter periods than yearly or half-yearly rests. This was discussed in National Bank of Greece SA v Pinios Shipping Co (No.1) [1990] 1 A.C. 637 (where quarterly rests were conceded). See also Kitchen v HSBC Bank Plc [2000] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 787 (quarterly rests).
- 1704. Lord Clancarty v Latouche (1810) 1 Ball. & B. 120; Crosskill v Bower (1863) 32 Beav. 86, 100; Deutsche Bank v Banque des Marchands de Moscou (1931) 4 Legal Decisions Affecting Bankers 293, 295; IRC v Graham [1937] 2 K.B. 179, 192.
- 1705. Paris Banking Co Ltd v Yates [1898] 2 Q.B. 460, 466; Yourell v Hibernian Bank Ltd [1918] A.C. 372; IRC v Holder [1931] 2 K.B. 81, 96, 98; affirmed on different grounds: Holder v IRC [1932] A.C. 624; Paton v IRC [1938] A.C. 341, 349, 357, 364; National Bank of Greece SA v Pinios Shipping Co (No.1) [1990] 1 A.C. 637.
- 1706. [1990] 1 A.C. 637.
- 1707. Fergusson v Fyffe (1841) 8 Cl. & F. 121; Deutsche Bank v Banque des Marchands de Moscou (1931) 4 Legal Decisions Affecting Bankers 293; National Bank of Greece SA v Pinios Shipping Co (No.1) [1988] 2 Lloyd’s Rep. 126 CA.
- 1708. Fergusson v Fyffe (1841) 8 Cl. & F. 121, 140; Williamson v Williamson (1869) L.R. 7 Eq. 542.
- 1709. Crosskill v Bower (1863) 32 Beav. 86.
- 1710. Crosskill v Bower, above.
- 1711. Attorney-General v Alford (1855) 4 De G.M. & G. 843, 851; Burdick v Garrick (1870) L.R. 5 Ch. App. 233; Wallersteiner v Moir (No.2) [1975] Q.B. 373; President of India v La Pintada Compania Navigacion SA [1985] A.C. 104, 116; Westdeutsche Landesbank Girozentrale v Islington LBC [1996] A.C. 669. See also Guardian Ocean Cargoes Ltd v Banco do Brasil SA [1994] 2 Lloyd’s Rep. 152.
- 1712. Kinnaird v Trollope (1889) 42 Ch. D. 610; Bank of NSW v O’Connor (1889) 14 App. Cas. 273, 282–284; Edmondson v Copland [1911] 2 Ch. 301; Barratt v Gough-Thomas [1951] Ch. 242.
- 1713. ss.140A–140C, see above, paras 39-212 et seq.
- 1714. ss.244 and 343.
- 1715. However, there is power under the Credit Unions Act 1979 s.11(5) to limit the interest that can be charged by credit unions: see the Credit Unions (Maximum Interest Rate on Loans) Order 2013 (SI 2013/2589) (3 per cent per month).
- 1716. Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 s.137C (added by the Financial Services Act 2012 s.24).
- 1717. Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 s.137C, as amended by the Financial Services (Banking Reform) Act 2013 s.131(1).
- 1718. They are in the CONC Module of the FCA Handbook: see CONC 5A.
- 1719. Subject to any statutory notification requirements noted below.

- 1720. ! Lombard Tricity Finance Ltd v Paton [1989] 1 All E.R. 918. Applied (in context of raising fees) in: Amberley UK Ltd v West Sussex CC [2011] EWCA Civ 11. See Alexander v West Bromwich Mortgage Co Ltd [2016] EWCA Civ 496 (power to vary interest inconsistent with mortgage offered as “tracker mortgage”).
- 1721. [2001] EWCA Civ 1466, [2000] 1 W.L.R. 685 (pet. dis. [2002] 1 W.L.R. 2263) followed in Broadwick Financial Services Ltd v Spencer [2002] EWCA Civ 35, [2002] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 446 and applied (in context of raising fees and costs) in Addison v Esso Petroleum Co Ltd [2003] EWHC 1730 (Comm) (affirmed, on a different point, [2004] EWCA Civ 1470).
- 1722. And see Sterling Credit Ltd v Rahman (No.2) [2002] EWHC 3008 (Ch), [2003] C.C.L.R. 13 (no implied obligation to reduce interest rate); Paragon Finance Plc v Plender [2005] EWCA Civ 760, [2005] C.C.L.R. 5 (lender increased rates due to adverse financial circumstances).
- 1723. But in a commercial context see Myers v Kestrel Acquisitions Ltd (Kestrel) [2015] EWHC 916 (Ch) (no implied duty to vary in good faith).
- 1724. SI 1999/2083, as amended; above paras 38-202 et seq. As noted above at para.38-201, these regulations are replaced, for contracts made on or after October 1, 2015, by provisions in the Consumer Rights Act 2015 Pt 2.
- 1725. SI 1999/2083 reg.5(5) (replaced, for contracts made on or after October 1, 2015, by the Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.63).
- 1726. SI 1999/2083 Sch.1 para.1(j) and see also SI 1999/2083 Sch.1 para.1(k), above, paras 38-286 et seq. These regulations are replaced (for contracts made on or after October 1, 2015, with minor changes in wording) by the Consumer Rights Act 2015 Sch.2 paras 11 and 12.
- 1727. SI 1999/2083 Sch.3 para.2(b). See also second paragraph thereof. See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf), para.2–083. These regulations are replaced (for contracts made on or after October 1, 2015, with minor changes in wording) by the Consumer Rights Act 2015 Sch.2 paras 22 and 23.
- 1728. See above, paras 39-212 et seq.
- 1729. See above, para.39-002.
- 1730. Via disciplinary powers, see above, para.39-063. See also, in relation to “regulated mortgage contracts”, the FCA’s discussion paper, DP14/2: Variation Terms: Assessing the Fairness of Changes to Mortgage Contracts (July 2014).
- 1731. Consumer Credit Act 1974 s.82(1) (above, para.39-146) and the FCA Handbook, CONC 4.7 (replacing the repealed Consumer Credit Act 1974 s.78A (above, para.39-147) (notice required in the case of regulated agreements); Payment Services Regulations 2009 (SI 2009/209) (above, paras 34-223 et seq.) (notice required in the case of certain “payment services contracts”).
- 1732. See above, para.39-013.
- 1733. ! Astley v Weldon (1801) 2 B. & P. 346, 353; Wallis v Smith (1882) 21 Ch. D. 243; Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co Ltd v New Garage and Motor Co Ltd [1915] A.C. 79, 86; Cavendish Square Holdings BV v Makdessi [2015] UKSC 67, see above, paras 26-178 et seq. See also Consumer Credit Act 1974 s.93 (above, para.39-177) and s.86F (above, para.39-136: interest on default sum can only be simple). A reduction in the rate of interest in the event of prompt payment will not make the unreduced interest penal: Astley v Weldon, above, at 353; Herbert v Salisbury and Yeovil Railway Co (1866) L.R. 2 Eq. 221; Wallingford v Mutual Society (1880) 5 App. Cas. 685, 702. See also Euro London Appointments Ltd v Claessens International Ltd [2006] EWCA Civ 385, [2006] 2 Lloyd’s Rep. 436.

- 1734. ! Lordsvale Finance Plc v Bank of Zambia [1996] Q.B. 752 (approved in Cavendish Square Holdings BV v Makdessi [2015] UKSC 67 at [26]–[28], [146]–[148], [222] and [239]–[241]); Lancore Services Ltd v Barclays Bank Plc [2008] EWHC 1264 (Ch); Deutsche Bank (Suisse) SA v Khan [2013] EWHC 482 (Comm), noted at [2013] C.C.L.R. 5. Contrast Jeancharm Ltd v Barnet Football Club Ltd [2003] EWCA 58, [2003] 92 Const. L.R. 26 (default interest of 5 per cent per week held penal).
- 1735. See also above, para.39-177.
- 1736. See above, paras 38-202 et seq.; Falco Finance Ltd v Gough (1999) 149 N.L.J. 7. As noted above at para.38-201, these regulations are replaced, for contracts made on or after October 1, 2015, by provisions in the Consumer Rights Act 2015 Pt 2.
- 1737. See below, para.39-301.
- 1738. As amended, especially by the Late Payments of Commercial Debts Regulations 2002 (SI 2002/1674). See Vol.I, paras 26-232 et seq.
- 1739. s.2 (other than an excepted contract). Consumer credit agreements are excepted (s.2(5)(a)).
- 1740. SI 2002/1675(8 per cent over the official dealing rate of the Bank of England).
- 1741. s.17 (as replaced by SI 1998/2940 art.3). See Vol.I, para.26-246.
- 1742. s.57, as amended. See above, para.34-117.
- 1743. s.24(3) and 42.
- 1744. s.49. See above, para.32-136.
- 1745. s.35A, inserted by s.15 and Sch.1 Pt I of the Administration of Justice Act 1982. See Vol.I, para.26-236 (high court).
- 1746. s.69, as amended (interest on debt or damages) and s.74, as amended (and County Courts (Interest on Judgment Debts) Order 1991 (SI 1991/1184) (L.12)) (interest on county court judgment debts). See McMullon v Secure the Bridge Ltd [2015] EWCA Civ 884 (award of 8 per cent interest in case of CCA 1974-regulated agreement).
- 1747. s.328(4), (5). cf. s.322(2).
- 1748. s.189.
- 1749. See, e.g. CPR rr.12.6, 14.14, 40.8.
- 1750. For a case where there was no such agreement (and hence where the High Court only had power to award post-judgment interest pursuant to statute) see Chubb v Dean [2013] EWHC 1282 (Ch).
- 1751. Economic Life Assurance Socy v Usborne [1902] A.C. 147, 152 (no merger). See also Popple v Sylvester (1882) 22 Ch. D. 98; Re Sneyd (1883) 25 Ch. D. 338; Ealing London BC v El Isaac [1980] 1 W.L.R. 932, 936; Director General of Fair Trading v First National Bank Plc [2001] UKHL 52, [2002] 1 A.C. 481.
- 1752. Re Sneyd (1883) 25 Ch. D. 338; see Vol.I, para.25-009.
- 1753. [2001] UKHL 52, [2002] 1 A.C. 481.
- 1754. SI 1994/3159, subsequently replaced by the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999 (SI 1999/2083), and revoked and replaced, for contracts made on or after October 1, 2015, by the Consumer Rights Act 2015 Pt 2; see above, paras 38-201 et seq.

1755. From October 1, 2008: see SI 2007/330 art.3(3) and Sch.3.

1756. See Consumer Credit Act 1974 s.130A (added by the Consumer Credit Act 2006 s.17), above, para.39-206.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 39 - Credit and Security
Section 2. - Loans and Interest
(c) - Effect of Consumer Credit Regulation

Moneylenders Acts

39-298

The Moneylenders Acts 1900 to 1927 placed severe restrictions upon the conduct of business by persons engaged in money lending. However, the Acts applied only to loans made by moneylenders. ¹⁷⁵⁷ Further, as a general rule, the slightest infringement of the statutory requirements rendered the whole loan irrecoverable and any security unenforceable, with the result that borrowers were encouraged to take technical points which were wholly devoid of merit. ¹⁷⁵⁸ The Acts were entirely repealed by the Consumer Credit Act 1974. ¹⁷⁵⁹

Consumer credit regulation

39-299

The consumer credit regulation regime applies to contracts of loan. Any agreement whereby one person lends or agrees to lend to an individual ¹⁷⁶⁰ (including a sole trader or partnership of three or fewer persons) any amount ¹⁷⁶¹ is a consumer credit agreement ¹⁷⁶² for the purposes of regulation, and, if the agreement is not an exempt agreement, ¹⁷⁶³ it is a “regulated agreement”. ¹⁷⁶⁴ The regulatory provisions relating to the authorisation and control of consumer credit businesses, ¹⁷⁶⁵ and the regulation of regulated credit agreements, have been discussed in the first section of the present chapter.

Overdrafts

39-300

Special dispensation was originally provided for most overdrafts from the documentation and cancellation provisions in Pt V of the Consumer Credit Act 1974. However, the implementation of the Consumer Credit Directive, ¹⁷⁶⁶ which itself contains special provisions for overdrafts, has resulted in complex modifications (which depend on the type of overdraft) of Pt V in relation to overdrafts. ¹⁷⁶⁷ In particular, there is now an obligation to supply a copy of an overdraft agreement. ¹⁷⁶⁸ Moreover, non-business overdrafts are subject to (special) pre-contract disclosure obligations ¹⁷⁶⁹ and to the new (general) duty to assess creditworthiness. ¹⁷⁷⁰ There are also special information provisions regarding the consequences of “overrunning” (i.e. overdrawn without a prearranged overdraft or exceeding a pre-arranged overdraft limit). ¹⁷⁷¹ The remainder of the 1974 Act generally continues to apply, for example, the provisions of the Act relating to the variation of agreements, ¹⁷⁷² the service of enforcement, ¹⁷⁷³ default ¹⁷⁷⁴ or termination ¹⁷⁷⁵ notices (and other requisite notices during the course of the agreement), ¹⁷⁷⁶ security, ¹⁷⁷⁷ the form of guarantees and indemnities given in respect of the overdraft, ¹⁷⁷⁸ and in particular the exclusive jurisdiction of the county court over actions brought by the creditor to enforce the overdraft agreement or any security relating to it. ¹⁷⁷⁹

Unfair relationships

39-301

⚠ The provisions of the Consumer Credit Act 1974 relating to “unfair relationships” apply to loans to individuals ¹⁷⁸⁰ and they have been invoked in a number of cases concerning loans. ¹⁷⁸¹ ⚠

Liability of creditor for acts of supplier: antecedent negotiations

39-302

Where a creditor lends or agrees to lend money to a debtor under a regulated agreement in order to enable the debtor to obtain goods or services from a supplier, the creditor may in certain circumstances be liable in respect of misrepresentations made or undertakings given or breaches of contract committed by the supplier. In the first place, where negotiations ¹⁷⁸² (“antecedent negotiations”) are conducted with the debtor by the supplier ¹⁷⁸³ in relation to a transaction ¹⁷⁸⁴ financed or proposed to be financed by a debtor-creditor-supplier agreement ¹⁷⁸⁵ within s.12(b) ¹⁷⁸⁶ or 12(c) ¹⁷⁸⁷ of the Consumer Credit Act 1974, they are deemed to be conducted by the supplier (“the negotiator”) ¹⁷⁸⁸ in the capacity of agent of the creditor as well as in his actual capacity. ¹⁷⁸⁹ Thus the creditor will be liable in respect of any misrepresentations made or undertakings given by the negotiator on his behalf.

“Connected lender liability”: Misrepresentation or breach by supplier

39-303

Secondly, under s.75(1) of the Consumer Credit Act 1974, ¹⁷⁹⁰ if the debtor under a debtor-creditor-supplier agreement ¹⁷⁹¹ falling within s.12(b) ¹⁷⁹² or 12(c) ¹⁷⁹³ of that Act has, in relation to a transaction ¹⁷⁹⁴ financed by the agreement, any claim against the supplier ¹⁷⁹⁵ in respect of a misrepresentation ¹⁷⁹⁶ or breach of contract, he has a like claim ¹⁷⁹⁷ against the creditor, who, with the supplier, is accordingly jointly and severally liable to the debtor. ¹⁷⁹⁸ If, therefore, the transaction financed by the loan agreement is a contract of sale of goods, and the quality of the goods is such that the supplier is in breach, say, of the conditions as to satisfactory quality or fitness for purpose of the goods implied by the Sale of Goods Act 1979, ¹⁷⁹⁹ then the creditor is jointly and severally liable with the supplier in damages (including damages for consequential loss) to the debtor, and, in the event that the debtor is entitled to and does reject the goods, is similarly liable with the supplier to repay to the debtor any sums paid by or on behalf of the debtor to the supplier. However, subject to any agreement between them, the creditor is entitled to be indemnified by the supplier for loss suffered by the creditor in satisfying this liability, including costs reasonably incurred by him in defending proceedings instituted by the debtor. ¹⁸⁰⁰ Further, in any action brought against the creditor, he is entitled, in accordance with rules of court, ¹⁸⁰¹ to have the supplier made a party to the proceedings. ¹⁸⁰²

Exceptions

39-304

The liability of the creditor under s.75(1) of the Act does not apply to a claim under a non-commercial agreement. ¹⁸⁰³ Nor does it apply so far as the claim relates to any single item to which the supplier has attached a cash price not exceeding £100 or more than £30,000. ¹⁸⁰⁴

Additional “connected lender liability”

39-305

⚠ A new s.75A was added ¹⁸⁰⁵ to the Consumer Credit Act 1974 in implementation of the Consumer Credit Directive, ¹⁸⁰⁶ which contains additional provisions on creditor liability. The liability is generally ¹⁸⁰⁷ narrower in scope than that imposed by s.75. First, s.75A does not apply to credit agreements outside the scope of the Directive. ¹⁸⁰⁸ ⚠ Second, it only applies in the case of so-called “linked credit agreements” (a “Directive” concept), defined ¹⁸⁰⁹ to mean regulated consumer credit agreements that: (i) “exclusively” finance an agreement for the supply of specific goods or service; and (ii) where either: (a) the creditor uses the services of the supplier in connection with the preparation or making of the credit agreement, or (b) the specific goods or services are “explicitly specified” in the credit agreement. The section provides that if the debtor under such a “linked credit agreement” has a claim against the supplier in respect of a breach of contract (only), the debtor may pursue that claim against the creditor but only where, essentially, the debtor is unable to obtain satisfaction from the supplier. Third, the section does not apply if the cash value of the goods or services is £30,000 or less. ¹⁸¹⁰ Hence, it will apply (to situations otherwise within its scope), where s.75 is unavailable because the cash price exceeds that sum and s.75 will apply (to situations otherwise within its scope) where the cash price is £30,000 or less (as long as it is above £100).

¹⁷⁵⁷. They did not apply to other forms of credit and certain types of business, e.g. banking was exempted (see Moneylenders Act 1900 s.6(d); Companies Act 1967 s.123). Moreover, (although passed for the protection of the private borrower) the Acts protected large corporations borrowing substantial sums of money.

¹⁷⁵⁸. See, e.g. Askinex Ltd v Green [1969] 1 Q.B. 272; Congresbury Motors v Anglo-Belge Finance Co [1971] Ch. 81 (reversed by Orakpo v Manson Investments Ltd [1978] A.C. 95).

¹⁷⁵⁹. s.192(3)(b), (4) and Sch.5. These Acts were repealed in stages, but the final repeal (from May 19, 1985) was effected by SI 1983/1551 (c.44); but see art.6(3).

¹⁷⁶⁰. As defined, see above, para.39-016.

¹⁷⁶¹. Until April 6, 2007, the Consumer Credit Act 1974 imposed a financial limit, see above, para.39-005 n.16.

¹⁷⁶². See above, para.39-016.

¹⁷⁶³. See above, paras 39-038 et seq.

¹⁷⁶⁴. See above, para.39-017.

¹⁷⁶⁵. See above, para.39-063.

¹⁷⁶⁶. See above, para.39-011.

¹⁷⁶⁷. See s.74 as amended by SI 2010/1010 reg.17.

¹⁷⁶⁸. s.61B, added on February 1, 2011 by SI 2010/1010 reg.9, as amended by SI 2010/1969 reg.7.

¹⁷⁶⁹. See above, para.39-076.

¹⁷⁷⁰. See above, para.39-078.

¹⁷⁷¹. FCA Handbook, CONC 4.7 and CONC 6.3.3–6.3.4 (replacing the repealed Consumer Credit Act 1974 Pt VA (ss.74A and 74B), added on February 1, 2011 by SI 2010/1010 regs 21 and 22 (as amended by 2010/1969 regs 9 and 10)), noted above at para.39-127.

¹⁷⁷². s.82(1); above, para.39-145. But note, in relation to overdrafts, the new s.82(1B)–(1E) (added on February 1, 2011 by SI 2010/1010 reg.28) and the new s.78A(4), the combined effect of which is that only increases in charges and interest rate need be notified.

1773. s.76; above, para.39-164.

1774. s.87; above, para.39-166.

1775. s.98; above, para.39-172. But note that s.98A (above, para.39-173) dealing with the termination of agreements of indefinite duration, does not apply to overdrafts: s.98A(8).

1776. s.78 (above, para.39-132), s.86C (above, para.39-134) and s.86E (above, para.39-135).

1777. s.113; above, para.39-190.

1778. SI 1983/1556; above, para.39-184.

1779. s.141(1); above, para.39-199.

1780. ss.140A–140C, above, paras 39-212 et seq.

1781. ! Plevin v Paragon Personal Finance Ltd [2014] UKSC 61 (sale of PPI with loan rendered relationship “unfair” on facts); Patel v Patel [2009] EWHC 3264 (QB) (“exorbitant” interest “unfair”); cf. Khodari v Tamimi [2009] EWCA 1109, [2010] C.C.L.R. 3 (“very large” 10 per cent charge for short-term loans to wealthy compulsive gambler, where credit risk was high and “defendant wanted these loans and could well afford to repay them”, not “unfair relationship”); Consolidated Finance Ltd v Hunter [2010] B.P.I.R. 1322 (loan at market rate for similar short-term bridging loans not “unfair”); Carey v HSBC Bank Plc [2009] EWHC 3417 (QB); Black Horse Ltd v Speak [2010] EWHC 1866 (QB); Paragon Mortgages Ltd v McEwan-Peters [2011] EWHC 2491 (Comm); Rahman v HSBC Bank Plc [2012] EWHC 11 (Ch); Deutsche Bank (Suisse) SA v Khan [2013] EWHC 482 (Comm), noted at [2013] C.C.L.R. 5; Chubb v Dean [2013] EWHC 1282 (Ch); Gardner v Clydesdale Bank Ltd [2013] EWHC 4356 (Ch); Link Financial Ltd v North Wilson [2014] EWHC 252 (Ch), [2014] C.C.L.R. 6; McMullon v Secure the Bridge Ltd [2015] EWCA Civ 884. ; Barclays Bank Plc v McMillan [2015] EWHC 1596 (Comm).

1782. See Consumer Credit Act 1974 (CCA 1974) s.56(1), (4).

1783. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1).

1784. See above, para.39-027.

1785. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.12, 189(1); above, para.39-030.

1786. See above, para.39-031.

1787. See above, para.39-032.

1788. CCA 1974 s.56(1); above, para.39-073. See Scotland v British Credit Trust Ltd [2014] EWCA Civ 790.

1789. CCA 1974 s.56(2). See also s.56(3), (4), and above, para.39-075.

1790. For problems arising under s.75, see Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf), para.2–076; Hare [2008] L.M.C.L.Q. 338; Bisping [2011] J.B.L. 457. See also Rampion v Franfinance SA (C-429/05) [2008] C.M.L.R. 8 ECJ (scope of art.11(2) of Consumer Credit Directive (87/102), implemented in the UK by s.75). The Law Commissions’ Joint Paper: Consumer Redress for Misleading and Aggressive Practices Cm.8323 (March 2012), para.7.139 proposed that a “misleading practice” should qualify as a “misrepresentation” under s.75 but, although originally included in the draft of SI 2014/870, this did not appear in the enacted version. See below, n.1797.

- 1791. Defined in CCA 1974 ss.12, 189(1); above, para.39-030.
- 1792. See above, para.39-031.
- 1793. See above, para.39-032.
- 1794. See above, para.39-027. For liability if the transaction is effected abroad, see Office of Fair Trading v Lloyds TSB Bank Plc [2007] UKHL 48 and below, para.39-486. The transaction financed (or to be financed) by the loan will be a “linked transaction” (see CCA 1974 s.19(1)(b), above, para.39-056).
- 1795. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1).
- 1796. See Misrepresentation Act 1967 s.2(6) added by the Consumer Protection (Amendment) Regulations 2014 (SI 2014/870) reg.5: new s.2(4) and (5) (also added by those regulations) do not preclude a CCA 1974 s.75(1) damages claim if one would, but for those provisions, be available. (This is because the new s.2(4) and (5) essentially preclude a claim under s.2(1) of the 1987 Act if a claim for redress under the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1277), as amended by SI 2014/870, is available; such a claim under the regulations (as opposed to a claim for “misrepresentation” under the 1967 Act) is not covered by s.75.)
- 1797. Whilst the “like claim” does not include a right to rescind the credit agreement on the ground that the debtor is entitled to rescind the supply agreement, it is an implied term of the credit agreement that it is conditional on the survival of the supply agreement and hence the credit agreement may be rescinded on that (implied term) ground: Durkin v DSG Retail Ltd [2014] UKSC 21 (disapproving United Dominions Trust v Taylor, 1980 S.L.T. 28 Sh Ct). Alternatively (see below) the debtor is entitled to recover from the creditor sums paid to the supplier under the supply agreement when rescinded. For the right of the debtor to set off his monetary claim under s.75(1) against any claim by the creditor under the credit agreement, see Morgan & Sons Ltd v Martin Johnson & Co Ltd [1949] 1 K.B. 107; Hanak v Green [1958] 2 Q.B. 9 and CPR Pt 16 r.6.
- 1798. s.75(1) applies notwithstanding that the debtor, in entering into the transaction, exceeded the credit limit (defined in CCA 1974 ss.10(2), 189(1); above, para.39-024) or otherwise contravened any term of the agreement: s.75(4).
- 1799. Grant v Electro Centre Ltd [2007] 4 C.L. 66 Cty Ct and see below, paras 44-094 et seq. and for “consumer contracts” made on or after October 1, 2015, the Consumer Rights Act 2015, see generally paras 38-458 et seq.
- 1800. s.75(2). See the discussion of the nature and scope of the indemnity in Office of Fair Trading v Lloyds TSB Bank Plc [2007] UKHL 48, [2008] 1 A.C. 316. And note Parker v Black Horse Ltd (unreported, December 17, 2010, Dartford Cty Ct) where it was held that a creditor, who could not recover his costs from an unsuccessful “small claims” claimant under CPR r.27.14, could recover those costs from the supplier under s.75(2): “liability” in s.75(2) covered mere “exposure to a claim” and hence there was no need for any actual liability under s.75(1) to the claimant to be established against the supplier.
- 1801. CPR Pt 20.
- 1802. s.75(5).
- 1803. s.75(3)(a). For “non-commercial agreement”, see above, para.39-049. But no exception exists under CCA 1974 s.56(2) (above, para.39-302) for non-commercial agreements: see s.74(1)(a). See also the exception for charge cards (s.75(3)(c) noted below, para.39-487).
- 1804. s.75(3)(b). The lower limit was raised from £30 to £100, and the upper limit from £10,000 to £30,000, by SI 1983/1878. But the limitations in s.75(3)(b) do not apply to the liability of the creditor under CCA 1974 s.56(2) (above, para.39-302).

1805. On February 1, 2011 by 2010/1010 reg.25 (as amended by SI 2010/1969 reg.11). See CCA 1974 Sch.2A para.196A: in s.75A, references to “debtor” in relation to “green deal plans” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1), see above, para.39-257) are to be read as references to the “improver” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189B(6)).

1806. See above, para.39-011. See especially art.15.2 (and 15.3) of the Directive.

1807. But see below: it (unlike s.75) applies where the cash price is over £30,000.

1808.  s.75A(6)(b)–(c) and (7), viz: (i) credit in excess of £60,260, (ii) “business” credit and (iii) agreements secured on land. When the Mortgage Credit Directive (see above, para.39-003) is implemented on March 21, 2016, exemption (i) will not apply to so-called “residential renovation agreements” (as defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1)): see amendment to s.75A in SI 2015/910 art.3 and Sch.1 para.2(7). The Mortgage Credit Directive (and hence the relevant amendment) came into force on March 21, 2016.

1809. In s.75A(5).

1810. s.75A(6)(a).

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 39 - Credit and Security

Section 3. - Hire-Purchase Agreements

(a) - In General ¹⁸¹¹

Nature of hire-purchase

39-306

A hire-purchase agreement may be defined as an agreement under which an owner lets chattels of any description out on hire and further agrees that the hirer may either return the goods and terminate the hiring or elect to purchase the goods when the payments for hire have reached a sum equal to the amount of the purchase price stated in the agreement or upon payment of a stated sum. ¹⁸¹² The essence of the transaction is therefore (i) a bailment of goods by the owner to the hirer; and (ii) an agreement by which the hirer has the option to return or purchase the goods at some time or other.

Option to purchase goods

39-307

One reason for the popularity of hire-purchase as a vehicle of instalment credit lies in the fact that, until the full price is paid, the property in the goods remains in the owner, and in such a way that the hirer is normally unable to pass a good title to a third party during the continuance of the bailment. ¹⁸¹³ If the agreement gives to the hirer a true option to return or purchase the goods, he is under no obligation to purchase them; he is therefore not a person who has "agreed to buy the goods" and so cannot pass a good title to a third party under s.25 of the Sale of Goods Act 1979. ¹⁸¹⁴

Moneylenders Acts

39-308

A second reason for the popularity of hire-purchase is that it does not involve any lending of money, ¹⁸¹⁵ and so fell outside the control of the (now repealed) Moneylenders Acts 1900 to 1927. The normal methods of financing hire-purchase transactions by the "direct collection" method ¹⁸¹⁶ or by block discounting ¹⁸¹⁷ or the purchase of bills of exchange at a discount ¹⁸¹⁸ were not within the Acts. Thus the financier did not have to hold a moneylender's licence; he was free to employ agents, e.g. dealers, to obtain business; and the hire-purchase agreement itself did not have to meet the highly technical requirements of the Acts. However, as noted above, the Consumer Credit Act repealed the Moneylenders Acts and brought hire-purchase within its control. ¹⁸¹⁹

Bills of sale

39-309

Yet a third reason for the growth of hire-purchase is that hire-purchase agreements are not bills of sale. ¹⁸²⁰ As the property in the chattels remains in the owner, the document by which the hiring is effected does not require to be registered as a bill of sale under the Bills of Sale Acts 1878 and 1882

¹⁸²¹ unless it does not represent the real transaction between the parties, and its intention is merely to create a security for money; in such a case, the courts must disregard the form, and look to the true nature of the transaction. ¹⁸²² The most satisfactory way of deciding what is the true nature of the transaction is to see whether the documents set out the deal between the parties as it took place and at the time it took place, or whether the facts, or some of them, therein recorded do not represent that which happened, but were falsified in order to give the transaction an innocent appearance. ¹⁸²³ A “refinancing” transaction under which the owner of goods sells the goods to a finance company and then immediately enters into a hire-purchase agreement whereby he agrees to hire back the goods is unimpeachable if there is a genuine sale of the goods and a genuine and independent hiring back. ¹⁸²⁴ But if the sale and rehiring are, in fact, a sham, the transaction may be invalid and unenforceable by reason of the Bills of Sale Acts. ¹⁸²⁵ In order that the transaction should be considered to be a sham, it is not sufficient if one party alone, e.g. the hirer, intends to deceive the other into thinking that the transaction is genuine. There must be a common intention that the acts or documents are not to create the legal rights and obligations that they give the appearance of creating. ¹⁸²⁶

Common law and statute

39-310

The most important question for the lawyer is whether or not a hire-purchase agreement falls within the statutory control of the consumer credit regulatory regime, in particular the Consumer Credit Act 1974. ¹⁸²⁷ However, only certain aspects of hire-purchase are regulated and hence it will often be necessary to consider common law principles as laid down by the courts. The implied conditions on the part of the owner relating to title, quality, fitness for purpose, and correspondence with description or sample are those contained in the Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) Act 1973 and for “consumer contracts” made on or after October 1, 2015, those in the Consumer Rights Act 2015. ¹⁸²⁸ The rights and liabilities of third parties relating to the goods let on hire are determined by the Factors Act 1889, ¹⁸²⁹ the Sale of Goods Act 1979, the Hire-Purchase Act 1964, and a number of other enactments. ¹⁸³⁰

¹⁸¹¹. The treatises on this subject are Campbell-Salmon, Hire-Purchase and Credit-Sales Law and Practice (1962); Goode, Hire-Purchase Law and Practice, 2nd edn (1970); Guest, The Law of Hire-Purchase (1966) and Supplement (1969); Wild, The Law of Hire-Purchase, 2nd edn (1965). See also Beale, Bridge, Gullifer, Lomnicka, The Law of Security and Title-Based Financing (2012), paras 7.34–7.42; 19.23–19.29.

¹⁸¹². For the definition of “hire-purchase agreement” in the consumer credit regulatory regime, see below, para.39-356.

¹⁸¹³. Helby v Matthews [1895] A.C. 471; Payne v Wilson [1895] 2 Q.B. 537; Belsize Motor Supply Co v Cox [1914] 1 K.B. 244; Lewis v Thomas [1919] 1 K.B. 319; Modern Light Cars Ltd v Seals [1934] 1 K.B. 32; Staffs Motor Guarantee Ltd v British Wagon Co Ltd [1934] 2 K.B. 305; United Dominions Trust (Commercial) Ltd v Parkway Motors Ltd [1955] 1 W.L.R. 719; Close Asset Finance Ltd v Care Graphics Machinery Ltd [2000] C.C.L.R. 43. But see Forthright Finance Ltd v Carlyle Finance Ltd [1997] 4 All E.R. 90.

¹⁸¹⁴. Re-enacting s.9 of the Factors Act 1889 and replacing s.25(2) of the Sale of Goods Act 1893; see below, paras 44-218 et seq. and 39-399. The option to purchase fee may be nominal even if the hirer is bound to pay all instalments: Close Asset Finance Ltd v Care Graphics Machinery Ltd [2000] C.C.L.R. 43.

¹⁸¹⁵. British Ry Traffic and Electric Co Ltd v Kahn [1921] W.N. 52; Automobile and General & Finance Corp Ltd v Morris (1929) 73 S.J. 451; Old Discount Co Ltd v Cohen [1938] 3 All E.R. 281n.; Premor Ltd v Shaw Bros [1964] 1 W.L.R. 978, 985. Unless the hire-purchase agreement is a refinancing transaction (below, para.39-309) and a sham: North Central Wagon and Finance Co Ltd v Brailsford [1962] 1 W.L.R. 1288.

¹⁸¹⁶. Trade Promotion Trust Ltd v Young (1940) 84 S.J. 646.

- 1817. Olds Discount Co Ltd v John Playfair Ltd [1938] 3 All E.R. 275.
- 1818. Transport & General Credit Corp Ltd v Morgan [1939] Ch. 531; Chow Yoong Hong v Choong Fah Rubber Manufactory [1962] A.C. 209.
- 1819. See below, paras 39-356 et seq.
- 1820. See below, para.39-519.
- 1821. Re Robertson (1878) 9 Ch. D. 419; Crawcour v Salter (1881) 18 Ch. D. 30; Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Ry v North Central Wagon Co (1888) 13 App. Cas. 554; United Forty Pound Loan Club v Bexton [1891] 1 Q.B. 28n.; Modern Light Cars Ltd v Seals [1934] 1 K.B. 32; Olds Discount Co Ltd v Krett [1940] 2 K.B. 117; Re Apex Supply Co Ltd [1942] Ch. 108. See Diamond (1960) 23 M.L.R. 399, 516.
- 1822. See the cases cited in n.1826, below, and generally below, para.39-519.
- 1823. Polsky v S and A Services [1951] 1 All E.R. 185, 189.
- 1824. Yorkshire Ry Wagon Co v Maclure (1882) 21 Ch. D. 309; British Ry Traffic and Electric Co v Kahn [1921] W.N. 52; Staffs Motor Guarantee Ltd v British Wagon Co Ltd [1934] 2 K.B. 305; Olds Discount Co Ltd v Krett [1940] 2 K.B. 117.
- 1825. Re Watson (1890) 25 Q.B.D. 27; Madell v Thomas & Co [1891] 1 Q.B. 230; Maas v Pepper [1905] A.C. 102; Motor Trade Finance Ltd v HE Motors Ltd Unreported March 26, 1926 HL; Polsky v S and A Services, above; R. v Deller (1952) 36 Cr. App. R. 184; North Central Wagon and Finance Co v Brailsford [1962] 1 W.L.R. 1288; Bennett v Griffin Finance Ltd [1967] 2 Q.B. 46. See also the now repealed (and not replaced) Companies Act 1985 s.396(1)(c) and relevant case-law (Stoneleigh Finance Ltd v Phillips [1965] 2 Q.B. 537; Re Curtain Dream Plc [1990] B.C.L.C. 925; Welsh Development Agency v Export Finance Co [1992] B.C.C. 270).
- 1826. Stoneleigh Finance Ltd v Phillips, above; Snook v London and West Riding Investments Ltd [1967] 2 Q.B. 786. See generally on shams, Vella [2008] L.M.C.L.Q. 488.
- 1827. The Act entirely repealed (s.192(3)(b) and Sch.5) the Hire-Purchase Act 1965 as from May 19, 1985: see SI 1983/1551 (c.44); but see art.6(1), (2).
- 1828. See below, paras 39-316—39-318.
- 1829. See above, paras 31-079 et seq.
- 1830. See below, paras 39-398—39-413.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 39 - Credit and Security

Section 3. - Hire-Purchase Agreements

(b) - At Common Law

The agreement

39-311

At common law a hire-purchase agreement may be made in any form, i.e. it may be made under seal, in writing or by word of mouth. ¹⁸³¹ The normal rules of construction apply, and any ambiguity in a written agreement will be construed against the maker of the document. ¹⁸³² Capacity to contract is regulated by the general law of contract. ¹⁸³³

Formation

39-312

An offer to enter into a contract of hire-purchase is normally constituted by the hirer signing the hire-purchase document, and the acceptance by the owner executing the document that the hirer has signed. ¹⁸³⁴ But the acceptance must also be communicated to the hirer, and, until this is done, the hirer is free to withdraw his offer. ¹⁸³⁵ At common law, ¹⁸³⁶ a dealer who negotiates the transaction is not an agent of the owner for the purpose of fixing the owner with knowledge that the offer was made subject to an oral stipulation qualifying the hirer's liability ¹⁸³⁷; but the dealer is the agent of the owner for the purpose of communicating the withdrawal of the offer. ¹⁸³⁸ Where a fraudster assumes the identity of another person whose signature he forges on the hire-purchase agreement, the agreement may be void for mistake. ¹⁸³⁹

Hirer bound by apparent agreement

39-313

Where the hirer signs the document in blank, leaving the dealer to fill in the details in accordance with a collateral understanding between them, and the dealer fills in details that are at variance with this understanding, the hirer will ordinarily be precluded from denying the validity of the ostensible agreement, ¹⁸⁴⁰ unless the circumstances are such that he could successfully plead non est factum. ¹⁸⁴¹

Effect if contract void

39-314

Where a hire-purchase agreement is void for lack of agreement, any sum paid by the hirer to the dealer by way of deposit, whether in cash or by way of allowance for goods tendered in part-exchange, is recoverable from the owner as money paid on a consideration that has totally failed. ¹⁸⁴²

Delivery of goods

39-315

In the absence of any term to the contrary, it is the duty of the owner to deliver the goods to the hirer whose hiring commences when the goods are delivered to him. ¹⁸⁴³ If, after entering into the agreement, the owner does not deliver the goods, the hirer cannot as a rule obtain specific performance, ¹⁸⁴⁴ but is entitled to damages for breach of contract. ¹⁸⁴⁵

Title to goods

39-316

Owing to the element of sale in hire-purchase transactions, the common law implied into the agreement a condition that the owner is capable of conferring a good title both at the time when the goods are delivered to the hirer and at the time when the hirer exercises his option to purchase. ¹⁸⁴⁶ But the implied terms as to title are now contained in s.8 of the Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) Act 1973. ¹⁸⁴⁷ For contracts made on or after October 1, 2015, the relevant provision for “consumer contracts” will be in the Consumer Rights Act 2015. ¹⁸⁴⁸ There is a statutory implied condition ¹⁸⁴⁹ on the part of the creditor ¹⁸⁵⁰ that he will have a right to sell the goods at the time when the property is to pass. ¹⁸⁵¹ Where the breach of this term consists in a failure to pass a good title to the goods, at common law the hirer is entitled to recover all sums paid by him as on a total failure of consideration, and it seems that the creditor will not be entitled, either by set-off or counterclaim, to payment by the hirer for the period during which the hirer had use of them. ¹⁸⁵² In consumer contracts the Consumer Rights Act 2015 provides additional remedies. ¹⁸⁵³ There are also implied warranties ¹⁸⁵⁴: that (i) the goods are free, and will remain free until the time when the property is to pass, from any charge or encumbrance not disclosed or known to the hirer before the agreement is made; and (ii) that the hirer will enjoy quiet possession of the goods except so far as it may be disturbed by any person entitled to the benefit of any charge or encumbrance so disclosed or known. ¹⁸⁵⁵

Limited title

39-317

In a hire-purchase agreement, in the case of which there appears from the agreement or is to be inferred from the circumstances of the agreement an intention that the creditor should transfer only such title as he or a third person may have, ¹⁸⁵⁶ there is:

(a)

an implied warranty ¹⁸⁵⁷ that all charges or encumbrances known to the creditor and not known to the hirer have been disclosed to the hirer before the agreement is made; and an implied warranty ¹⁸⁵⁸ that neither:

(b)

(i)

the creditor; nor

(ii)

in a case where the parties to the agreement intend that any title which may be transferred shall only be such title as a third person may have, that person; nor

(iii)

anyone claiming through or under the creditor or that third person otherwise than under a charge or encumbrance disclosed or known to the hirer, before the agreement is made, will disturb the hirer's quiet possession of the goods. ¹⁸⁵⁹

39-318

Liability for breach of the obligations arising from s.8 of the Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) Act 1973 above cannot be excluded or restricted by reference to any contract term. ¹⁸⁶⁰

Acceptance of delivery

39-319

It is the duty of the hirer to accept delivery of the goods hired; if he refuses to do so, the owner's remedy is not to sue for the rent agreed, but to bring an action for damages. ¹⁸⁶¹ The measure of damages is prima facie a sum representing the whole of future unpaid instalments, less (i) the value of the goods at the time of refusal to accept; and (ii) a discount in respect of the earlier return to the owner of his capital outlay. ¹⁸⁶²

Payment of rent

39-320

The hirer must pay the rent agreed upon. In the absence of a contrary stipulation, he has no right to pay in advance, ¹⁸⁶³ nor, if allowed to pay in advance, to deduct a sum by way of rebate of interest. ¹⁸⁶⁴ Failure by the hirer to pay one or two instalments of rent does not necessarily amount to a repudiation of the agreement ¹⁸⁶⁵; the default must either be a breach of condition ¹⁸⁶⁶ or be such as to evince an intention not to go on with the agreement. ¹⁸⁶⁷ In the absence of a repudiation, the owner's remedy is to sue for arrears of rent alone. ¹⁸⁶⁸

Care of goods

39-321

The hirer is under a duty to take reasonable care of the goods hired, ¹⁸⁶⁹ but he is not responsible for fair wear and tear unless there is an express term of the contract to this effect. ¹⁸⁷⁰ Most hire-purchase agreements, however, require the hirer to keep the goods in good order, repair and condition. In such a case, the hirer's duty is to keep the goods in the condition in which they may reasonably be expected to be if he looks after them properly: he need not put the goods in a better condition than they were when he hired them. ¹⁸⁷¹

Insurance

39-322

The hirer is under no duty to insure unless there is an express stipulation to this effect in the agreement. ¹⁸⁷²

Guarantee and indemnity

39-323

It is common practice for the owners of goods let on hire-purchase to require a third party to guarantee the due performance by the hirer of his obligations under the contract. ¹⁸⁷³ Such a guarantee, or some memorandum or note thereof, must be in writing and signed by the guarantor or some other person thereunto by him lawfully authorised, otherwise it is unenforceable. ¹⁸⁷⁴ It must also be supported by consideration, and it is usual to state that the guarantee is made in consideration of the owner entering into the hire-purchase agreement or of his letting the goods on hire. ¹⁸⁷⁵ Past consideration, e.g. where the owner has already executed the agreement or let the goods on hire, is insufficient. ¹⁸⁷⁶ There can, in general, be no valid guarantee of a debt or obligation incurred under a hire-purchase agreement which is for some reason void. ¹⁸⁷⁷

39-324

A contract of guarantee must be distinguished from a contract of indemnity. ¹⁸⁷⁸ A contract of indemnity is subject to no requirement of form; if made in connection with a void hire-purchase agreement, it is itself not invalidated ¹⁸⁷⁹; and the rights and obligations of the parties differ materially from those incurred under a contract of guarantee. ¹⁸⁸⁰

Rights of guarantor

39-325

If sued by the owner on the contract of guarantee, a guarantor is entitled to be credited with any sums paid by the hirer to the owner ¹⁸⁸¹ and he can also rely on any defence which the hirer possesses against the owner. ¹⁸⁸² When he has paid what is due, he is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the owner against the hirer and can claim the benefit of any security given to the owner by the hirer. ¹⁸⁸³ But he does not succeed to the owner's licence to seize the goods let on hire nor to the owner's right to possession of them, and it is probable that he is not entitled to exercise the hirer's option to purchase the goods. ¹⁸⁸⁴ A guarantor who has paid what is due is also normally entitled to be indemnified by the hirer against all payments properly made by him to the owner. ¹⁸⁸⁵ And, once he becomes compellable to pay the debt, he can claim contribution from any other guarantor who is liable on the same demand. ¹⁸⁸⁶

Discharge of guarantor

39-326

Except where it is provided to the contrary, ¹⁸⁸⁷ any variation of the principal agreement by the owner and hirer without his consent will normally discharge the guarantor from his obligations under the contract of guarantee. ¹⁸⁸⁸ The guarantor will also be released if the owner enters into a binding agreement with the hirer to grant him an extension of time for payment, unless the owner at the same time expressly reserves his rights against the guarantor or the extension of time is allowed with the guarantor's consent. ¹⁸⁸⁹ But a mere omission to press the hirer for payment will not have this effect. The termination of the hiring or the hire-purchase agreement, whether upon a repudiation by the hirer accepted by the owner, ¹⁸⁹⁰ or by the owner under the terms of the agreement, or voluntarily by the hirer, ¹⁸⁹¹ will not discharge the guarantor from liability. ¹⁸⁹²

39-327

Any terms or conditions attached to the enforcement of the contract of guarantee must be strictly complied with ¹⁸⁹³; but a failure by the owner to comply with such terms or conditions will not necessarily render the guarantee unenforceable, but may give rise to a counterclaim for damages only. ¹⁸⁹⁴

Recourse agreements

39-328

Many modern hire-purchase transactions are conducted under the “direct collection” system of finance, in which the dealer does not himself let the goods to the hirer, but sells them to a finance company which then lets them to the hirer. In order to safeguard themselves, finance companies occasionally require the dealer to enter into an agreement under which the dealer becomes a surety for the due performance by the hirer of his obligations. This agreement is known as a “recourse agreement”. ¹⁸⁹⁵ The dealer may, at the same time, be appointed the company’s agent to collect the hire-purchase instalments ¹⁸⁹⁶ or to take possession of the goods on behalf of the company in the event of breach by the hirer. ¹⁸⁹⁷ Recourse agreements normally take the form of a guarantee of the hirer’s obligations under the hire-purchase agreement ¹⁸⁹⁸ or of an indemnity against loss caused to the finance company by the hirer’s default, ¹⁸⁹⁹ and the dealer’s liability will depend upon which form of agreement is entered into.

Termination of agreement by performance

39-329

The most usual way in which a hire-purchase agreement is terminated is by performance, i.e. where the hirer pays all the instalments and exercises his option to purchase. If payment is made by a third party, for example, where another finance company or dealer “settles” the balance outstanding under the agreement, this payment is considered to have been made on behalf of the hirer and the owner’s title to the goods vests in the hirer and not in the third party. ¹⁹⁰⁰

Termination of agreement by repudiation

39-330

A hire-purchase agreement will also be terminated if one party repudiates the agreement and the repudiation is accepted by the other. A clear case of repudiation will arise when the hirer renounces the agreement by refusing to go on with it. ¹⁹⁰¹ On the other hand, where the hirer does not renounce the agreement, but is merely guilty of a failure of performance, the owner will not be entitled to treat the agreement as repudiated unless the hirer’s default is a breach of condition or goes to the root of the contract. ¹⁹⁰² A failure by the hirer to pay any of the instalments, other than the initial deposit, has been held to amount to a repudiation where the default continued for six months. ¹⁹⁰³ But a mere failure to pay one or two instalments, even after a warning letter from the owner, has been held not to amount to a repudiation. ¹⁹⁰⁴ However, the agreement itself may make punctual payment of instalments of the essence of the contract, ¹⁹⁰⁵ so that any default in payment will entitle the owner to treat the contract as repudiated. ¹⁹⁰⁶

Termination of agreement by the hirer

39-331

All hire-purchase agreements must confer upon the hirer an option (as opposed to an obligation) to buy the goods. ¹⁹⁰⁷ The terms of the agreement must be looked at to ascertain whether and under what conditions he is entitled to terminate the agreement before it has run its full course. ¹⁹⁰⁸

Termination of agreement by the owner

39-332

The terms of the hire-purchase agreement invariably confer upon the owner a power to terminate the agreement, or the bailment thereunder, in the event of any breach by the hirer, even though such a breach does not amount to a repudiation of the contract. ¹⁹⁰⁹ The owner may also reserve the right to terminate upon the happening of an event other than breach, for example, upon the hirer's death, or bankruptcy. It is important to note that it is possible to terminate the hiring (bailment) without terminating the agreement for all purposes.

Termination of the hiring

39-333

It is well established as a general rule of the law of bailment that any act which is inconsistent with the terms of the bailment, such as a sale, ¹⁹¹⁰ or pledge, ¹⁹¹¹ of the chattel bailed, determines the bailment and the immediate right to possession of the chattel reverts to the bailor. ¹⁹¹² The fact that the agreement makes specific provision for termination of the hiring, e.g. on notice, in the event of default by the hirer does not ordinarily displace this rule. ¹⁹¹³ But, in other events, the terms of the agreement must be looked at to ascertain what the rights of the owner are in respect of the event which has taken place. Where the agreement states that the hiring is automatically to determine, it will be terminated forthwith if the event occurs. But if the termination is made contingent upon notice being given or a declaration being made, the hiring is not terminated until the notice is given or the declaration is made. ¹⁹¹⁴

39-334

A term in the form that the owner "may forthwith and without notice terminate the hiring" does not automatically terminate the hiring upon the happening of the event, and there must be some further unequivocal act on the part of the owner (such as seizure of the goods) which demonstrates his intention to terminate the hiring. ¹⁹¹⁵ But since the owner can terminate the hiring at any time, he has an immediate right to possession of the goods and this entitles him to retake possession of them from the hirer, or to claim damages from any person who wrongfully interferes with the goods. ¹⁹¹⁶

Contrasted with termination of the agreement

39-335

Although the hiring may have been terminated by the owner, the hire-purchase agreement can nevertheless continue in existence. ¹⁹¹⁷ In such a case, the hirer may still be entitled in theory to pay the balance of the hire-purchase price and exercise his option to purchase. ¹⁹¹⁸ The continued existence of the agreement may possibly affect the measure of damages recoverable in an action of conversion brought by the owner against the hirer or a third party. ¹⁹¹⁹

39-336

As in the case of the termination of the bailment, a provision that the agreement shall ipso facto determine upon the happening of a certain event will terminate the agreement automatically when the event occurs ¹⁹²⁰; and a provision that the owner may terminate the agreement by notice to the hirer requires the giving of such notice. ¹⁹²¹ Where the agreement provides that the owner "may terminate this agreement", such a term confers upon the owner an option to terminate; but the option has to be exercised, otherwise the agreement continues in force. ¹⁹²²

Notice of default

39-337

At common law, ¹⁹²³ it is not necessary for the owner to give the hirer notice of his default before terminating the agreement or the hiring, unless there is an express term to this effect. ¹⁹²⁴

Waiver of right to terminate39-338

The owner may be held to have waived his right to terminate the agreement upon breach, or to have waived a notice of termination, if he accepts arrears of hire-rent with knowledge of the breach or does some act which unequivocally indicates his intention to allow the agreement to continue. ¹⁹²⁵

Repossession of the goods39-339

Before the owner can lawfully repossess the goods let on hire, he must have a right to immediate possession of the goods, and so must prove that the hiring has determined or is terminable at will. ¹⁹²⁶ A wrongful repossession by the owner will render him liable in damages to the hirer. ¹⁹²⁷

Retaking without action39-340

In the absence of any statutory restriction, ¹⁹²⁸ an owner who is entitled to immediate possession may retake his goods either peaceably or by reasonable force from anyone who is wrongfully detaining them. ¹⁹²⁹ But, unless he is given a licence to do so, it seems he may not enter upon the land of the hirer, or of a third party, in order to retake them. ¹⁹³⁰ If a licence to seize is granted by the terms of the agreement, it is personal to the licensee and cannot be assigned. ¹⁹³¹ In any event, it is an offence under the Criminal Law Act 1977 ¹⁹³² to enter by force. By resuming possession of the goods the owner does not abandon his right to sue for arrears of rent ¹⁹³³; and where a judgment for arrears of rent is unsatisfied, the owner is not deprived by the judgment of his right to retake the goods. ¹⁹³⁴

Recovery by action ¹⁹³⁵39-341

In most cases where the hirer refuses permission for the retaking of the goods, it will be more prudent for the owner to resort to court action to recover them. In an action for wrongful interference with goods the court may make an order for delivery up of the goods, with or without the option to pay their value, ¹⁹³⁶ and for payment of any consequential damages. ¹⁹³⁷ Alternatively a claim may be made for damages alone. The measure of damages is normally the value of the goods ¹⁹³⁸; but where the balance of the hire-purchase price outstanding is less than the value of the goods, the measure of damages is the balance of the hire-purchase price outstanding at the date of their conversion. ¹⁹³⁹

Retention of sums paid by the hirer39-342

Upon the termination of the hire-purchase agreement, the owner is prima facie entitled to retain all sums already paid by the hirer whether by way of deposit, initial payment or instalments of hire-rent. If a deposit or initial payment is stated in the agreement to have been made in consideration of the grant of an option to purchase, it can nevertheless not be recovered if the agreement is prematurely determined. It cannot be claimed that the consideration for the deposit has totally failed, since the option to purchase exists from the moment of signing the contract even though it may be subject to the condition that the hirer should duly perform the whole of his obligations under the agreement. ¹⁹⁴⁰

Relief from forfeiture

39-343

The court has the power to relieve the hirer from forfeiture of the goods and to reinstate his rights under the contract ¹⁹⁴¹ by granting him an extension of time to pay off the arrears or to remedy any other breach by him of the agreement. ¹⁹⁴² In exercising its discretion to grant relief, the court will take into account the following factors:

- (i) whether or not the hirer is in default under the agreement;
- (ii)
whether significant prejudice would be caused to the owner by the grant of the relief; and
- (iii)
whether to refuse relief would give the owner a substantial windfall profit or cause the hirer a disproportionate loss. ¹⁹⁴³

Sums paid by hirer

39-344

❗ The view has been advanced ¹⁹⁴⁴ that the court also has power in equity to relieve the hirer from the forfeiture of instalments and other sums already paid. In Stockloser v Johnson, ¹⁹⁴⁵ a buyer under a terminated conditional sale agreement ¹⁹⁴⁶ claimed the return of the instalments that he had paid on the ground that the forfeiture clause in the agreement was penal and unconscionable. The Court of Appeal found that it was not in fact penal, but by a majority ¹⁹⁴⁷ they recognised the general power of the court to grant equitable relief against the forfeiture of instalments upon the buyer's breach where the sum forfeited was out of all proportion to the damage suffered and where it would be unconscionable for the seller to retain the money. ¹⁹⁴⁸ But such a principle has not so far been applied to the retention of sums paid by the hirer under a hire-purchase agreement. When Stockloser v Johnson was discussed by the Court of Appeal in Campbell Discount Co Ltd v Bridge, ¹⁹⁴⁹ the court showed itself disinclined to accept the principle. And when that decision was considered by the House of Lords, ¹⁹⁵⁰ it was reversed on a ground which did not involve consideration of Stockloser v Johnson, and only Lord Denning mentioned the ability of equity to restore money already paid by the hirer if it was a penal sum. ¹⁹⁵¹ ❗ Further, in Galbraith v Mitchenall Estates Ltd, ¹⁹⁵² Sachs J. refused to apply the principle to the forfeiture of instalments paid under a contract of simple hire even though the terms of the contract were "hideously harsh". This reluctance may be justified in hire and hire-purchase cases as in law the payments are "rent" under a bailment for possession and use of the goods (rather than part-payment for goods, as in the case of conditional sale) and are recoverable as an accrued debt even when the owner subsequently terminates. ¹⁹⁵³ In Cavendish Square Holdings BV v Makdessi ¹⁹⁵⁴ ❗ the Supreme Court declined to opine at length on forfeiture clauses (as the allegation was that the relevant clauses were penalty not forfeiture clauses) and hence only referred to Stockloser v Johnson in passing.

Recovery of instalments in arrear

39-345

The owner is entitled to recover from the hirer as an accrued debt any instalment of hire-rent in arrear at the termination of the hiring ¹⁹⁵⁵ and the right to receive payment of such a debt is a separate cause of action from the right to recover possession of the goods let on hire ¹⁹⁵⁶ and from the right to recover damages for breach of contract. ¹⁹⁵⁷

Damages for breach of contract by hirer

39-346

Any breach by the hirer of the terms of the hire-purchase agreement will entitle the owner to sue for damages for breach of contract. But the measure of the damages recoverable depends on whether or not the breach by the hirer amounts to a repudiation ¹⁹⁵⁸ of the agreement.

Breach amounting to repudiation

39-347

Where a breach by the hirer amounts to a repudiation, with the result that the owner terminates the agreement and recovers possession of the goods, the owner is entitled to recover damages based on his loss of profit unless the right to damages is excluded by the terms of the agreement ¹⁹⁵⁹ or he elects to proceed under an effective minimum payment provision. ¹⁹⁶⁰ In Yeoman Credit Ltd v Waragowski, ¹⁹⁶¹ the Court of Appeal held that, where the hirer repudiates the agreement, the measure of damages recoverable is based on the hire-purchase price of the goods, less:

- (i) the sums already paid or payable ¹⁹⁶² by the hirer at the moment of termination;
- (ii) the value of the goods repossessed, or, if the goods have been sold, the proceeds of their sale ¹⁹⁶³;
- (iii) the amount (if any) payable on the exercise of the option to purchase ¹⁹⁶⁴; And
- (iv) a discount in respect of the earlier return to the owner of his capital outlay. ¹⁹⁶⁵

The owner is, however, under a duty to mitigate his loss ¹⁹⁶⁶ and must, for example, obtain the best price which can reasonably be obtained if he sells the goods repossessed. ¹⁹⁶⁷ If the hire-purchase agreement is subject to the Consumer Credit Act 1974 and hence the debtor has a statutory right to terminate the contract on payment of half the total price, ¹⁹⁶⁸ it would seem that the possibility that the hirer could limit his liability by voluntarily terminating in this way should be taken into account in assessing the amount of damages recoverable by the owner. ¹⁹⁶⁹

No repudiation

39-348

Where, on the other hand, the breach by the hirer does not amount to a repudiation by him of the hire-purchase agreement, but the owner terminates the hiring or the agreement by virtue of a right vested in him under the terms of the agreement, ¹⁹⁷⁰ he cannot claim damages for loss of profit as upon a repudiation. He can only recover from the hirer:

- (i) the arrears of instalments (with interest) (if any) up to the time when he terminates the hiring ¹⁹⁷¹;
- (ii) damages for any other breach committed up to the date of such termination, e.g. for failure to repair ¹⁹⁷²; and
- (iii) the cost of searching for and repossessing the goods, if this should be specifically provided for in the agreement. ¹⁹⁷³

The reason for this limitation is that the termination is due, not to the hirer's breach of contract, but to the owner's election to determine. He is therefore not entitled to recover damages for his loss of profit, depreciation of the goods, or any breaches committed after the termination. ¹⁹⁷⁴ Where an owner expressly undertakes to sell the goods on termination and to apply the proceeds to reduce the liability of the hirer, a term that he will take reasonable care to obtain the true market value will be implied. ¹⁹⁷⁵

Minimum payment clauses. ¹⁹⁷⁶

39-349

Where the agreement provides that, on termination of the hiring, the owner shall be entitled to repossess the goods and to claim in addition either a proportion of the outstanding instalments or a further fixed sum by way of depreciation or otherwise, it was at one time considered that the owner was in all cases entitled to rely on the terms of the agreement and that the question of a penalty or liquidated damages could not arise; and this was so whether the agreement was terminated by the owner or by the hirer. ¹⁹⁷⁷ But in Cooden Engineering Co Ltd v Stanford ¹⁹⁷⁸ the Court of Appeal, by a majority, held that the question whether a minimum payment clause imposed a penalty or liquidated damages would have to be considered if a breach of the contract was in fact proved. This case was followed by Denning L.J. in Lamdon Trust v Hurrell, ¹⁹⁷⁹ where a clause in the agreement bound the hirer, in the event of breach and consequent repossession, to pay such further sum as would bring up his total payments to 75 per cent of the hire-purchase price by way of depreciation of the goods. It was held that this sum was a penalty, since it was imposed as a mere "rule of thumb" and was not a genuine pre-estimate of the damage likely to be suffered.

Operative on events other than breach

39-350

❗ In both of these cases, the event relied upon to substantiate the owner's claim was a breach by the hirer in failing to pay the rent by the due date and the question remained open whether a different conclusion would be reached if the right to determine the agreement and to claim payment were based on some event other than breach, such as the death, bankruptcy or liquidation of the hirer. ¹⁹⁸⁰ In the earlier case of Associated Distributors Ltd v Hall ¹⁹⁸¹ the Court of Appeal had held that the question of a penalty or liquidated damages did not arise where the hirer voluntarily terminated the agreement: a sum payable upon such a contingency could not be considered a penalty since it was not payable in respect of any breach. Moreover, in Cavendish Square Holdings BV v Makdessi ¹⁹⁸²  the Supreme Court declined to follow Australian authority extending the doctrine of penalties to clauses operative on events other than breach. ¹⁹⁸³

Bridge v Campbell Discount Co Ltd

39-351

 The law relating to minimum payment clauses in hire-purchase agreements was reviewed, and to some extent clarified, by the House of Lords in Bridge v Campbell Discount Co Ltd. ¹⁹⁸⁴ The respondents let to the appellant a van under a hire-purchase agreement. The terms of the agreement provided (i) that the appellant hirer might at any time terminate the agreement by giving notice to the respondents; and (ii) that if for any reason the agreement was terminated before the vehicle became his property, he would pay to the respondents “by way of compensation for depreciation” of the vehicle such further sums as would with those already paid or payable, be equal to two-thirds of the hire-purchase price. Subsequently the appellant wrote to the respondents saying that he would not be able to pay any further instalments, and asking to be informed when and where he would have to return the van. The Court of Appeal ¹⁹⁸⁵ construed the letter as a voluntary termination of the agreement in accordance with the power conferred upon the appellant by its terms; since there had been no breach of the agreement, the law relating to penalties did not apply. ¹⁹⁸⁶ The appellant was therefore liable to pay the sum stipulated in the minimum payment clause. See now the new Supreme Court decision on penalties in Cavendish Square Holdings BV v Makdessi [2015] UKSC 67, in particular that the general test is not whether the clause is not a genuine estimate of the respondents’ loss (a liquidated damages clause) but whether it comprises “a secondary obligation which imposes a detriment on the contract breaker out of all proportion to any legitimate interest of the innocent party in the enforcement of the primary obligation” (per Lord Neuberger J.S.C. at [32]; see also Lord Mance J.S.C. at [152] and Lord Hodge J.S.C. at [255]). Hence where the legitimate interest is in performance (and hence compensation) the approach in Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co Ltd v New Garage and Motor Co Ltd was regarded as “usually ... perfectly adequate to determine [the clause’s] validity” (at [32]).

39-352

This decision of the Court of Appeal was reversed by the House of Lords. Their Lordships held that the letter written by the appellant was not an exercise by him of his right to terminate, but a breach of contract. ¹⁹⁸⁷ As a result, the law relating to penalties did apply, and their Lordships unanimously concluded that the minimum payment clause imposed a penalty. It could not, so it was said, be a genuine estimate of the respondents’ loss through depreciation of the goods, since the sum payable under it was largest at the commencement of the hiring and grew progressively smaller as time went on. ¹⁹⁸⁸ It was also pointed out that the sum exigible was expressed as a proportion of the hire-purchase price regardless of the fact that this contained a considerable interest element ¹⁹⁸⁹ and also of the fact that the realisable value of the goods repossessed might, in many circumstances, exceed the one-third balance that the owner had not received. The House of Lords therefore ordered the actual damage suffered by the respondents to be assessed. ¹⁹⁹⁰

39-353

The House of Lords did not specifically strike down every clause designed to compensate the owner for depreciation of the goods let on hire, but it is unlikely that any such clause will now be upheld if it purports to give the owner a sum expressed as a proportion of the hire-purchase price. ¹⁹⁹¹ Such a clause, it is submitted, will only be valid if:

- (i)
it is expressed in some other way, e.g. as a proportion of the cash price of the goods;
- (ii)
it increases rather than decreases as the hiring continues ¹⁹⁹²;
- (iii)
it does not secure to the owner a profit over and above the hire-purchase price when the value of the goods repossessed is taken into account ¹⁹⁹³; and
- (iv)
it has regard to the particular nature and condition of the goods in question. ¹⁹⁹⁴

In view of these difficulties, minimum payment clauses are now invariably formulated, not to compensate the owner for depreciation of the goods, but to compensate him for his loss of profit or as liquidated damages for breach of the agreement. But it must be remembered that the owner can only recover substantial damages including his loss of profit if the hirer repudiates the agreement. ¹⁹⁹⁵ So, for example, if a minimum payment clause simply provides for the payment to the owner of the outstanding balance of the hire-purchase price as liquidated damages for breach, it is unlikely that it will be held to do other than impose a penalty. ¹⁹⁹⁶ Damages for loss of future rentals are irrecoverable where there has been no repudiation, ¹⁹⁹⁷ and a clause designed to confer upon the owner a right to such damages in this event will be penal and void.

39-354

⚠ Since the House of Lords came to the conclusion in Bridge v Campbell Discount Co Ltd that the appellant was in breach of the hire-purchase agreement, it was strictly unnecessary for them to decide whether the law relating to penalties, or any form of equitable relief, ¹⁹⁹⁸ was available to a hirer when the hiring was determined by a hirer's option or by an event specified in the contract and not involving breach. But Lord Simonds and Morton thought that there was no possibility of alleviation where the hirer terminated the contract and that the case of Associated Distributors v Hall ¹⁹⁹⁹ was rightly decided. ²⁰⁰⁰ Lord Denning thought that the courts had power to grant relief no matter for what reason the hiring was terminated. ²⁰⁰¹ Lord Devlin also considered that a court could intervene, but on the narrower ground that, when (as in this case) the clause falsely stated that a sum was payable as compensation for "depreciation", it was in any event unenforceable. ²⁰⁰² Lord Radcliffe refused to express an opinion. ²⁰⁰³ In the light of of this difference of opinion, the Court of Appeal has subsequently taken the view ²⁰⁰⁴ ⚠ that the case of Associated Distributors v Hall still stands, so that no question of a penalty can arise if the hirer voluntarily terminates the agreement or the agreement is terminated on some event other than breach. ²⁰⁰⁵

Challenge under statute

39-355

A minimum payment clause in an agreement would be open to challenge under the "unfair relationship" provisions of the Consumer Credit Act 1974 ²⁰⁰⁶ and under the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999. ²⁰⁰⁷

- 1831. Re Fowler (1883) 23 Ch. D. 261. For the requirements of form and copies under the Consumer Credit Act 1974 ss.60, 61, 61A see above, paras 39-080 et seq.
- 1832. Webster v Higgin [1948] 2 All E.R. 127; Abingdon Finance Ltd v Champion [1961] C.L.Y. 3931. See Vol.I, para.13-086.
- 1833. See, e.g. Mercantile Union Guarantee Corp v Ball [1937] 2 K.B. 498; Yeoman Credit Ltd v Latter [1961] 1 W.L.R. 828; Stadium Finance Ltd v Helm (1965) 109 S.J. 471 (minority). See Vol.I, Chs 9-12.
- 1834. Contrast Carlyle Finance Ltd v Pallas Industrial Finance Ltd [1999] 1 All E.R. (Comm.) 659; Hitchens v General Guarantee Corp Ltd [2001] EWCA Civ 359.
- 1835. Financings Ltd v Stimson [1962] 1 W.L.R. 1184. cf. Lowe v Lombank Ltd [1960] 1 W.L.R. 196, 206; Robophone Facilities Ltd v Blank [1966] 1 W.L.R. 1428; Maurice Lee Ltd v Rotheroe and Unipower Ltd Unreported May 16, 1973 CA Tr 198. See Vol.I, Ch.2. But the agreement may, and usually does, otherwise provide.
- 1836. But see the Consumer Credit Act 1974 s.56, see above, paras 39-071 and 39-302.
- 1837. Eastern Distributors Ltd v Goldring [1957] 2 Q.B. 600; Northgran Finance Ltd v Ashley [1963] 1 Q.B. 476.
- 1838. Financings Ltd v Stimson [1982] 1 W.L.R. 1184.
- 1839. Shogun Finance Ltd v Hudson [2003] UKHL 62, [2003] 3 W.L.R. 1371; see Vol.I, paras 3-037 et seq.
- 1840. United Dominions Trust Ltd v Western [1976] Q.B. 513, disapproving Campbell Discount Co Ltd v Gall [1961] 1 Q.B. 431. cf. Unity Finance Ltd v Hammond (1965) 109 S.J. 70; Mercantile Credit Co Ltd v Hamblin [1965] 2 Q.B. 242. See also British Ry Traffic and Electric Co v Roper (1939) L.T. 217; Eastern Distributors Ltd v Goldring [1957] 2 Q.B. 600; Spencer v North Country Finance Co Ltd [1963] C.L.Y. 212; Hodge Industrial Securities Ltd v Cooper, The Guardian, December 14, 1961, CA; Astley Industrial Trust Ltd v Rollinson, The Guardian, February 19, 1963, CA; General & Finance Facilities v Hughes (1966) 116 New L.J. 1474 CA; P.B. Leasing Ltd v Patel [1995] C.C.L.R. 82.
- 1841. Mercantile Credit Co Ltd v Hamblin, above; Saunders v Anglia Building Society [1971] A.C. 1004. See Vol.I, para.3-049; but contrast Consumer Credit Act 1974 s.61 (above, paras 39-102 et seq.).
- 1842. Branwhite v Worcester Works Finance Ltd [1969] 1 A.C. 552.
- 1843. National Cash Register Co Ltd v Stanley [1921] 3 K.B. 292; Karsales (Harrow) Ltd v Wallis [1956] 1 W.L.R. 936. cf. Bentworth Finance v Lubert [1968] 1 Q.B. 680 (car log-book not handed over).
- 1844. See Vol.I, Ch.27. cf. Sale of Goods Act 1979 s.52; see below, para.44-440.
- 1845. The measure of damages is presumably to be calculated on the same principle as in the case of failure to deliver goods sold: see below, paras 44-387 et seq., and Sale of Goods Act 1979 s.51(2).
- 1846. Karflex Ltd v Poole [1933] 2 K.B. 251, as interpreted in Mercantile Union Guarantee Corp Ltd v Wheatley [1938] 1 K.B. 490; and Warman v Southern Counties Car Finance Corp Ltd [1949] 2 K.B. 576.
- 1847. Amended by (i) s.192 and Sch.4 para.35, of the Consumer Credit Act 1974 and by s.7 and Sch.2 para.4, of the Sale and Supply of Goods Act 1994 and (ii) amended, for contracts made on or after October 1, 2015, by the Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.60 and Sch.1 para.2. Section 8 corresponds closely in language to s.12 of the Sale of Goods Act 1979. See below, para.44-075.

- 1848. Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.17. See above, paras 38-473 et seq.
- 1849. Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) Act 1973 s.8(3). Except in a case where s.8(2) applies.
- 1850. Defined in Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) Act 1973 s.15(1) to mean the owner or his assignee.
- 1851. Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) Act 1973 s.8(1)(a). Corresponding terms are “treated as included” in consumer contracts made on or after October 1, 2015 under Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.17(1)(b).
- 1852. Karflex Ltd v Poole [1933] 2 K.B. 251; Warman v Southern Counties Car Finance Corp Ltd [1949] 2 K.B. 576; Barber v NWS Bank Plc [1996] 1 W.L.R. 641.
- 1853. Consumer Rights Act 2015 ss.19–27. See above, paras 38-477 et seq.
- 1854. Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) Act 1973 s.8(3). Except in a case where s.8(2) applies.
- 1855. Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) Act 1973 s.8(1)(b); see also below, para.44-078. Corresponding terms are “treated as included” in consumer contracts made on or after October 1, 2015 under Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.17(2)), with the extended statutory rights available in such cases (Consumer Rights Act 2015 ss.19–27 and above, paras 38-477 et seq.).
- 1856. See below, para.44-084.
- 1857. Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) Act 1973 s.8(3).
- 1858. Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) Act 1973 s.8(3).
- 1859. Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) Act 1974 s.8(2). Corresponding terms are “treated as included” in consumer contracts made on or after October 1, 2015 ((Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.17(4)–(7)), with the extended statutory rights available in such cases (Consumer Rights Act 2015 ss.19–27 and above, paras 38-477 et seq.).
- 1860. Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.6(1) and s.31(4) (repealing Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) Act 1973 s.12(2), (8), (9)). For contracts made on or after October 1, 2015, the relevant provision for “consumer contracts” is the Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.31(1)(i)), above, para.38-492.
- 1861. National Cash Register Co Ltd v Stanley [1921] 3 K.B. 292; Karsales (Harrow) Ltd v Wallis [1956] 1 W.L.R. 936.
- 1862. Interoffice Telephones v Robert Freeman Co [1958] 1 Q.B. 190 (overruling British Stamp and Ticket Automatic Delivery Co Ltd v Haynes [1921] 1 K.B. 377); Robophone Facilities Ltd v Blank [1966] 1 W.L.R. 1428. cf. Bentworth Finance v Jennings (1961) 111 L.J. 488; Bentworth Finance v Reader (1961) 112 L.J. 208.
- 1863. Aliter in a credit sale; Lancashire Waggon Co Ltd v Nuttall (1879) 42 L.T. 465.
- 1864. Taylor v Wylie Lockhead Ltd, 1912 S.C. 978; Higgs v Hodge Industrial Securities Ltd (1966) 111 S.J. 14. But see the rebate provisions in Consumer Credit Act 1974 ss.94, 95 (above, paras 39-157 et seq.).
- 1865. Financings Ltd v Baldock [1963] 2 Q.B. 104; Brady v St Margaret's Trust [1963] 2 Q.B. 494; Anglo-Auto Finance Co Ltd v James [1963] 1 W.L.R. 1042; Kelly v Sovereign Leasing [1995] C.L.Y. 720 Cty Ct. Contrast Cramer v Giles (1883) Cab. El. 151.

- 1866. Lombard North Central Plc v Butterworth [1987] Q.B. 527 (where time of payment was expressly made of the essence of the agreement). But such a term in a consumer contract may be unfair and so not binding on the hirer under the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999 (SI 1999/2083); above, paras 38-202 et seq. (but as noted above at para.38-201, these regulations are replaced, for contracts made or after October 1, 2015, by provisions in the Consumer Rights Act 2015 Pt 2) or it might give rise to an “unfair relationship” under the Consumer Credit Act 1974 ss.140A–140C, above, paras 39-212 et seq.
- 1867. Yeoman Credit Ltd v Waragowski [1961] 1 W.L.R. 1124; Overstone Ltd v Shipway [1962] 1 W.L.R. 117, 123; Financings Ltd v Baldock [1963] 2 Q.B. 104, at 117, 122. See below, para.39-330.
- 1868. Financings Ltd v Baldock [1963] 2 Q.B. 104.
- 1869. See above, para.33-079; below, para.39-370.
- 1870. Blakemore v Bristol & Exeter Ry (1858) 8 E. & B. 1035; Coupé Co v Maddick [1891] 2 Q.B. 413; see above, para.33-082.
- 1871. Brady v St Margaret's Trust Ltd [1963] 2 Q.B. 494. See also Acceptance Co v Pike (1961) 111 L.J. 424 (statutory agreement).
- 1872. See also Spruce v Unity Finance (1960) 105 S.J. 254 (no duty to inform owner of insurance taken out).
- 1873. For the position under the Consumer Credit Act 1974, see above, paras 39-180 et seq.
- 1874. Statute of Frauds 1677 s.4; see below, paras 45-042 et seq. But see Consumer Credit Act 1974 s.105; above, para.39-184.
- 1875. The consideration need not be mentioned in the note or memorandum: Mercantile Law Amendment Act 1856 s.3.
- 1876. Astley Industrial Trust Ltd v Grimston Electric Tools Ltd (1965) 109 S.J. 149. cf. Hewison v Ricketts (1894) 63 L.J.Q.B. 711.
- 1877. Coutts & Co v Browne-Lecky [1947] K.B. 104; Stadium Finance Ltd v Helm (1965) 109 S.J. 471 (minority, under the Infants' Relief Act 1874, now repealed). See also Brown v Blaine (1884) 1 T.L.R. 158 (non-compliance with the Bills of Sale Acts), and below, paras 45-027, 45-041.
- 1878. See below, para.45-008. But see the position under the Consumer Credit Act 1974, above, para.39-190.
- 1879. Yorkshire Ry Wagon Co v Maclure (1881) 19 Ch. D. 478; reversed on different grounds (1882) 21 Ch. D. 309; Yeoman Credit Ltd v Latter [1961] 1 W.L.R. 828.
- 1880. Sterling Industrial Facilities v Lydiate Textiles (1962) 106 S.J. 669; Scottish Midland Guarantee Trust v Woolley (1964) 114 L.J. 272; Goulston Discount Co Ltd v Clark [1967] 2 Q.B. 493. But see Goulston Discount Co Ltd v Sims (1967) 111 S.J. 682; Goulston Discount Co Ltd v Sims (1968) 112 S.J. 670.
- 1881. But not with sums paid by a third party without the authority of the hirer: Chatterton v Maclean [1951] 1 All E.R. 761.
- 1882. Bechervaise v Lewis (1872) L.R. 7 C.P. 372. As to the availability of rights of set-off or counterclaim, see below, para.45-087.
- 1883. See below, para.45-143.
- 1884. Chatterton v Maclean [1951] 1 All E.R. 761.

- 1885. See below, para.45-125.
- 1886. See below, para.45-135.
- 1887. British Motor Trust Co Ltd v Hyams (1934) 50 T.L.R. 230.
- 1888. Holme v Brunskill (1877) 3 Q.B.D. 495; see below, para.45-104.
- 1889. Midland Motor Showrooms Ltd v Newman [1929] 2 K.B. 256. Contrast Midland Counties Motor Finance Co Ltd v Slade [1951] 1 K.B. 346 (express provision inserted).
- 1890. Moschi v Lep Air Services Ltd [1973] A.C. 331; Hyundai Heavy Industries Co Ltd v Papadoupoulos [1980] 1 W.L.R. 1129, below, paras 45-099 and 45-100.
- 1891. Contrast Western Credit Ltd v Alberry [1964] 1 W.L.R. 945.
- 1892. Chatterton v Maclean [1951] 1 All E.R. 761. A lawful seizure of the goods by the owner does not discharge the guarantor's liability: Brooks v Beirnsstein [1909] 1 K.B. 98. cf. Hewison v Ricketts (1894) 63 L.J.Q.B. 711 (conditional sale).
- 1893. Midland Counties Motor Finance Co Ltd v Slade [1951] 1 K.B. 346. cf. United Dominions Trust (Commercial) Ltd v Eagle Aircraft [1968] 1 W.L.R. 74.
- 1894. Bowmaker (Commercial) Ltd v Smith [1965] 1 W.L.R. 855; United Dominions Trust (Commercial) Ltd v Eagle Aircraft [1968] 1 W.L.R. 74.
- 1895. It does not constitute "security" for the purposes of the consumer credit regime; see above, para.39-130.
- 1896. Olds Discount Ltd v John Playfair Ltd [1938] 3 All E.R. 275; Olds Discount Ltd v Krett [1940] 2 K.B. 117.
- 1897. Watling Trusts Ltd v Briffault Range Co Ltd [1938] 1 All E.R. 525; Reliance Car Facilities Ltd v Roding Motors [1952] 2 Q.B. 844. A dealer who repossesses goods on the company's behalf cannot pass a good title to a third party under s.24 of the Sale of Goods Act 1979: Olds Discount Ltd v Krett [1940] 2 K.B. 117.
- 1898. Midland Counties Motor Finance Co Ltd v Slade [1951] 1 K.B. 346; Unity Finance Ltd v Woodcock [1963] 1 W.L.R. 455.
- 1899. Sterling Industrial Facilities v Lydiate Textiles (1962) 106 S.J. 669; Scottish Midland Guarantee Trust v Woolley (1964) 114 L.J. 272; Goulston Discount Co Ltd v Clark [1967] 2 Q.B. 493; Goulston Discount Co Ltd v Sims (1967) 111 S.J. 682; Goulston Discount Co Ltd v Sims (1968) 112 S.J. 670.
- 1900. Bennett v Griffin Finance Ltd [1967] 2 Q.B. 46; Hodge Industrial Securities Ltd v Hynes Unreported March 22, 1971 CA.
- 1901. Overstone Ltd v Shipway [1962] 1 W.L.R. 117. Contrast United Dominions Trust (Commercial) Ltd v Ennis [1968] 1 Q.B. 54.
- 1902. See Vol.I, Ch.24.
- 1903. Yeoman Credit Ltd v Waragowski [1961] 1 W.L.R. 1124.
- 1904. Financings Ltd v Baldock [1963] 2 Q.B. 104. See also Brady v St Margaret's Trust Ltd [1963] 2 Q.B. 494; Anglo-Auto Finance Co Ltd v James [1963] 1 W.L.R. 1042; Kelly v Sovereign Leasing [1995] C.L.Y. 720 Cty Ct.
- 1905. See Vol.I, para.21-013. cf. Kelly v Sovereign Leasing [1995] C.L.Y. 720 Cty Ct.

- 1906. Lombard North Central Plc v Butterworth [1987] Q.B. 527; BMW Financial Service (GB) Ltd v Hart [2012] EWCA Civ 1959. But such a term in a consumer contract may be unfair and so not binding on the hirer under the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999 (SI 1999/2083) (see above, paras 38-202 et seq. but as noted above at para.38-201, these regulations are replaced, for contracts made or or after October 1, 2015, by provisions in the Consumer Rights Act 2015 Pt 2)) or that it might give rise to an “unfair relationship” under the Consumer Credit Act 1974 ss.140A–140C, above, paras 39-212 et seq.
- 1907. See above, para.39-307. For the statutory right of termination under the Consumer Credit Act 1974 s.99, see below, para.39-367.
- 1908. In United Dominions Trust (Commercial) Ltd v Ennis [1968] 1 Q.B. 54, it was held that the hirer must be aware of any onerous conditions before he will be considered to have exercised his right to terminate.
- 1909. But see Consumer Credit Act 1974 ss.86B, 86E, 87, 98 (above, paras 39-131, 39-135, 39-166, 39-172). On the owner’s rights on such termination see below, paras 39-339 et seq.
- 1910. Cooper v Willomatt (1845) 1 C.B. 672; Fenn v Bittleston (1851) 7 Exch. 152. Offering goods for sale is enough: Northern General Wagon & Finance Co Ltd v Graham [1950] 2 K.B. 7 (instructing auctioneer to sell).
- 1911. Singer Manufacturing Co v Clark (1879) 5 Ex. D. 37; Nyberg v Handelaar [1892] 2 Q.B. 202.
- 1912. See above, para.33-014.
- 1913. Union Transport Finance Ltd v British Car Auctions [1978] 2 All E.R. 385. cf. North General Wagon & Finance Co Ltd v Graham [1950] 2 K.B. 7, 11.
- 1914. North General Wagon & Finance Co Ltd v Graham [1950] 2 K.B. 7, at 13; Reliance Car Facilities v Roding Motors [1952] 2 Q.B. 844.
- 1915. North General Wagon & Finance Co Ltd v Graham [1950] 2 K.B. 7; Moorgate Mercantile Co Ltd v Finch and Read [1962] 1 Q.B. 701.
- 1916. Jelks v Hayward [1905] 2 K.B. 460; North General Wagon & Finance Co Ltd v Graham [1950] 2 K.B. 7; Moorgate Mercantile Co Ltd v Finch and Read, above; Union Transport Finance Ltd v British Car Auctions Ltd [1978] 2 All E.R. 385.
- 1917. Whiteley Ltd v Hilt [1918] 2 K.B. 808, 822.
- 1918. Most hire-purchase agreements, however, make the exercise of the option to purchase dependent upon the due observance by the hirer of the terms of the agreement.
- 1919. Belsize Motor Supply Co v Cox [1914] 1 K.B. 244; Whiteley Ltd v Hilt [1918] 2 K.B. 808. cf. Wickham Holdings Ltd v Brooke House Motors Ltd [1967] 1 W.L.R. 295; Belvoir Finance Co Ltd v Stapleton [1971] 1 Q.B. 210; VFS Financial Services (UK) v Euro Auctions (UK) Ltd [2007] EWHC 1492 and below, para.39-416.
- 1920. But see Hackney Furnishing Co v Watts [1912] 3 K.B. 225; Jay’s Furnishing Co v Brand [1915] 1 K.B. 458; see below, para.39-427.
- 1921. Smart v Holt [1929] 2 K.B. 303; Drages Ltd v Owen (1935) 52 T.L.R. 108; Reliance Car Facilities Ltd v Roding Motors [1952] 2 Q.B. 844.
- 1922. Belsize Motor Supply Co v Cox [1914] 1 K.B. 244; United Dominions Trust (Commercial) Ltd v Marcus (1951) 101 L.J. 417. See also BMW Financial Service (GB) Ltd v Hart [2012] EWCA Civ 1959 (limitation period for recovery of unpaid balance ran from the date the owner gave notice of termination for hirer’s breach since, as matter of construction of the contract, the owner’s right to claim that amount only arose then (and not earlier, when hirer failed to pay two instalments, see above para.39-330)).

- 1923. For the position under the Consumer Credit Act 1974, see above, para.39-166. See also the “unfair relationship” provisions (ss.140A–140C, above, paras 39-212 et seq.), especially s.140A(1)(b), para.39-218.
- 1924. But see Reynolds v General and Finance Facilities (1963) 107 S.J. 889; Eshun v Moorgate Mercantile Co Ltd [1971] 1 W.L.R. 722, 725.
- 1925. Keith, Prowse & Co v National Telephone Co [1894] 2 Ch. 147; Reynolds v General and Finance Facilities, above. See also Tommey v Finextra (1962) 106 S.J. 1012 and Vol.I, Ch.24. Waiver of the right to terminate does not necessarily preclude an action for damages for breach: Stephens v Junior Army and Navy Stores Ltd [1914] 2 Ch. 516.
- 1926. See above, para.39-333.
- 1927. For the measure of damages, see Kelly v Sovereign Leasing [1995] C.L.Y. 720 Cty Ct.
- 1928. See the Consumer Credit Act 1974 s.90 (below, para.39-363), and the Reserve and Auxiliary Forces (Protection of Civil Interests) Act 1951, below, para.39-436.
- 1929. Blades v Higgs (1861) 10 C.B.(N.S.) 713; (1865) 11 H.L.C. 621; Devoe v Long [1951] 1 D.L.R. 203. But the position is far from clear, especially when, as here, the goods have come into the defendant’s hands, not by a trespass, but by a consensual delivery. See Branston (1912) 28 L.Q.R. 262; and generally Clerk & Lindsell on Torts, 21st edn (2014), para.30–14. See also the restriction imposed by the Consumer Credit Act 1974 s.92; below, para.39-366.
- 1930. Again, the question is disputed; see Clerk & Lindsell on Torts, 21st edn (2014), para.30–14.
- 1931. Brown v Metropolitan Counties Life Assurance Socy (1859) 1 E. & E. 832; Re Davis & Co (1888) 22 Q.B.D. 193; Chatterton v Maclean [1951] 1 All E.R. 761.
- 1932. s.6 (as amended). cf. Hemmings v Stoke Poges Golf Club [1920] 1 K.B. 720.
- 1933. Brooks v Beirnsstein [1909] 1 K.B. 98. Compare the position in regard to a conditional sale (below, para.39-440); Hewison v Ricketts (1894) 63 L.J.Q.B. 711; Att-Gen v Pritchard (1928) 97 L.J.Q.B. 561; Taylor v Thompson [1930] W.N. 16.
- 1934. South Bedfordshire Electrical Finance Ltd v Bryant [1938] 3 All E.R. 580.
- 1935. CPR Pt 16, PD 16, para.6.1.
- 1936. Torts (Interference with Goods) Act 1977 s.3. Note s.3(8)(a): the section is without prejudice to the remedies afforded by the Consumer Credit Act 1974 s.133 (see below, para.39-374).
- 1937. Strand Electric and Engineering Co Ltd v Brisford Entertainments Ltd [1952] 2 Q.B. 246; Hillesden Securities v Ryjack [1983] 1 W.L.R. 159. See also BMW Financial Services (GB) Ltd v Taylor [2006] 1 C.L. 113 Cty Ct (costs of recovery and tracing hirer recoverable under express term).
- 1938. Chubb Cash Ltd v John Crilley & Son [1983] 1 W.L.R. 599. Consequential damages are recoverable if not too remote: Hillesden Securities v Ryjack [1983] 1 W.L.R. 159.
- 1939. Wickham Holdings Ltd v Brooke House Motors Ltd [1967] 1 W.L.R. 295; Belvoir Finance Co Ltd v Stapleton [1971] 1 Q.B. 210; VFS Financial Services (UK) v Euro Auctions (UK) Ltd [2007] EWHC 1492. See also Belsize Motor Supply Co v Cox [1914] 1 K.B. 244; Whiteley v Hilt [1918] 2 K.B. 808. cf. Astley Industrial Trust v Miller [1968] 2 All E.R. 36 (detinue).
- 1940. Kelly v Lombard Banking Co Ltd [1959] 1 W.L.R. 41. See also Brooks v Beirnsstein [1909] 1 K.B. 98.

- 1941. Note that automatic relief, without the need to go to court, is given by the Consumer Credit Act 1974 for hirers under agreements regulated by that Act who remedy a breach after the service of the requisite default notice: see above, paras 39-166 et seq.
- 1942. Goker (Ali) v NWS Bank Queen's [1990] C.C.L.R. 34 (but, on facts, relief refused); Transag Haulage Ltd v Leyland Daf Finance Plc [1994] B.C.L.C. 88. See generally, Vol.I, para.26-211 and Stockloser v Johnson [1954] 1 Q.B. 476, at 499, 502; Re Piggin, Dicker v Lombank (1962) 112 L.J. 424; Barton Thompson & Co Ltd v Stapling Machine Co Ltd [1966] Ch. 499, 509; Shiloh Spinners Ltd v Harding [1973] A.C. 691, 722, 723; Starside Properties Ltd v Mustapha [1974] 1 W.L.R. 816, 822; BICC Plc v Burndy Corp [1985] Ch. 232; On Demand Information Plc v Michael Gerson (Finance) Plc [2002] UKHL 13, [2003] 1 A.C. 368. Contrast Hyundai Heavy Industries Co Ltd v Papadopoulos [1980] 1 W.L.R. 1129 (HL); Scandinavian Trading Co AB v Flota Petrola Ecuatoriana (The Scaptrade) [1983] Q.B. 529; affirmed [1983] 2 A.C. 694; Sport International Bussum BV v Inter-Footwear Ltd [1984] 1 W.L.R. 776 (HL); The Jotunheim [2004] EWHC 671 (Comm), [2005] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 181; Celestial Aviation 71 Ltd v Paramount Airways Private Ltd [2010] EWHC 185 (operating lease).
- 1943. Transag Haulage Ltd v Leyland Daf Finance Plc [1994] B.C.L.C. 88; cf. Goker (Ali) v NWS Bank Queen's [1990] C.C.L.R. 34.
- 1944. Diamond (1956) 19 M.L.R. 498; (1958) 21 M.L.R. 199. Contrast Prince (1957) 20 M.L.R. 620. See also Atiyah (1958) 5 B.L.R. 24, 35 and Beatson (1981) 97 L.Q.R. 389. For agreements regulated by the Consumer Credit Act 1974, note (a) the power of the court in relation to "unfair relationships" to re-open agreements and hence order repayment, above, paras 39-223 et seq.; (b) that breach of the "protected goods" provision by the creditor requires him to repay all sums paid by the hirer, below, para.39-361.
- 1945. [1954] 1 Q.B. 476.
- 1946. The distinction is important: contrast Brooks v Beirnsstein [1909] 1 K.B. 98; with Hewison v Ricketts (1894) 63 L.J.Q.B. 711; Att-Gen v Pritchard (1928) 97 L.J.K.B. 561; Taylor v Thompson [1930] W.N. 16.
- 1947. Somervell and Denning L.JJ. The dissenting judge (Romer L.J.) said that no relief from forfeiture could be given "in the absence of some special circumstances such as fraud, sharp practice or other unconscionable conduct".
- 1948. Following Steedman v Drinkle [1916] 1 A.C. 275; see Vol.I, para.26-209.
- 1949. [1961] 1 Q.B. 431, 445; below, para.39-351. See also Cadogan Petroleum Holdings Ltd v Global Process Systems LLC [2013] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 26 (Stockloser v Johnson considered when availability of jurisdiction conceded but not applied in relation to repayments towards acquisition of gas plants).
- 1950. Bridge v Campbell Discount Co Ltd [1962] A.C. 600.
- 1951.  At 631. The relationship between the doctrines of "penalties" and "relief against forfeiture" was inconclusively discussed by the Supreme Court in Cavendish Square Holdings BV v Makdessi [2015] UKSC 67, approving BICC Plc v Bundy Corp [1985] Ch. 232. See above, paras 26-216X et seq.
- 1952. [1965] 2 Q.B. 473. And see UK Housing Alliance (North West) Ltd v Francis [2010] EWCA Civ 117: no jurisdiction to relieve from forfeiture of 30 per cent of purchase price retained by buyer in sale and leaseback agreement.
- 1953. Brooks v Beirnsstein [1909] 1 K.B. 98: see above, n.1947.
- 1954.  [2015] UKSC 67. See above, paras 26-216S et seq.

- 1955. Overstone Ltd v Shipway [1962] 1 W.L.R. 117; Anglo-Auto Finance Ltd v Race Unreported January 28, 1971 CA; Hyundai Heavy Industries Co Ltd v Papadopoulos, above. For procedure, see CPR Pt 16 PD 16 6.2. See also CPR Pt 7 PD 7B 3.3, 8.2. For interest on arrears, see Financings Ltd v Baldock [1963] 2 Q.B. 104; Senior Courts Act 1981 s.35A; County Courts Act 1984 s.69.
- 1956. South Bedfordshire Electrical Finance Ltd v Bryant [1938] 3 All E.R. 580.
- 1957. Overstone Ltd v Shipway [1962] 1 W.L.R. 117.
- 1958. See above, para.39-330.
- 1959. Overstone Ltd v Shipway [1962] 1 W.L.R. 117; Yeoman Credit Ltd v Odgers [1962] 1 W.L.R. 215.
- 1960. See below, para.39-349.
- 1961. [1961] 1 W.L.R. 1124.
- 1962. Arrears of instalments are in any event recoverable: see above, para.39-345.
- 1963. In Bentworth Finance v Jennings (1961) 111 L.J. 488, it was said that the owner was under a duty to mitigate his loss by re-letting the goods: sed quaere? See also Bentworth Finance v Reader (1961) 112 L.J. 208 (sale permitted). A sale is standard practice.
- 1964. This does not refer to any sum already paid by the hirer in consideration of the grant of an option to purchase (see above, para.39-307) but to a (usually nominal) sum to be paid by the hirer at the end of the hiring period.
- 1965. Overstone Ltd v Shipway [1962] 1 W.L.R. 117; Yeoman Credit Ltd v McLean [1962] 1 W.L.R. 131.
- 1966. In Yeoman Credit Ltd v Coleman, The Times, September 28, 1960, Master Jacob held that a finance company was under a duty to mitigate its loss by suing the dealer who negotiated the transaction in respect of defects in the goods before suing the hirer for damages for breach of contract. But see Samuels (1962) 25 M.L.R. 25.
- 1967. Bridge v Campbell Discount Co Ltd [1962] A.C. 600, 635; Financings Ltd v Baldock [1963] 2 Q.B. 104, 107.
- 1968. The “voluntary termination right” (VTR) under s.99, see below, para.39-367.
- 1969. See above, Vol.I, para.26-075. But see a county court decision to the contrary: First Response Finance v Donnelly [2007] C.C.L.R. 4 Cty Ct.
- 1970. See above, para.39-332.
- 1971. See above, para.39-345.
- 1972. Brady v St Margaret's Trust Ltd [1963] 2 Q.B. 494.
- 1973. Anglo-Auto Finance Ltd v James [1963] 1 W.L.R. 1042; BMW Financial Services (GB) Ltd v Taylor [2006] 1 C.L. 113 (a breach case).
- 1974. Elsey & Co Ltd v Hyde (1926), Jones and Proudfoot, Notes on Hire-Purchase Law, 2nd edn, p.113; Financings Ltd v Baldock [1963] 2 Q.B. 104; Brady v St Margaret's Trust Ltd, above; Anglo-Auto Finance Ltd v James, above; Charterhouse Credit Co Ltd v Tolly [1963] 2 Q.B. 683; Eshun v Moorgate Mercantile Co Ltd [1971] 1 W.L.R. 722; Capital Finance Co v Donati (1977) 121 S.J. 270 CA; Lombard North Central Plc v Butterworth [1987] Q.B. 527, 540–543. Contrast Esanda Finance Corp v Plessnig (1988) 166 C.L.R. 131 High Ct of Australia.

- 1975. Lombard North Central Plc v Nugent [2013] EWHC 1588 (QB).
- 1976. See generally Atiyah (1958) 5 B.L.R. 24, 31; Goode (1962) 112 L.J. 216, 231; Hughes [1962] J.B.L. 252; Ziegel [1964] C.L.J. 60; Vol.I, paras 26-178 et seq.; below, paras 39-355, 39-368.
- 1977. Elsey & Co Ltd v Hyde (1926), Jones and Proudfoot, Notes on Hire-Purchase Law, 2nd edn, p.107; Chester & Cole Ltd v Avon (1926), Jones and Proudfoot at p.115; Chester & Cole Ltd v Wright (1930), Jones and Proudfoot at p.124; Associated Distributors Ltd v Hall [1938] 2 K.B. 83; Re Apex Supply Co Ltd [1942] Ch. 108. cf. Roadways Transport Development Ltd v Browne and Gray (1928), Jones and Proudfoot at p.118.
- 1978. [1953] 1 Q.B. 86.
- 1979. [1955] 1 W.L.R. 391.
- 1980. See Elsey & Co Ltd v Hyde (1926), Jones and Proudfoot at p.107; Re Garrod, Jones and Proudfoot, above p.167; Bell Bros (HP) Ltd v Aitken, 1939 S.C. 577; Re Apex Supply Co Ltd [1942] Ch. 108. cf. Cooden Engineering Co Ltd v Stanford [1953] 1 Q.B. 86, at 98.
- 1981. [1938] 2 K.B. 83. But see below, para.39-354.
- 1982.  [2015] UKSC 67 at [41]–[43], [129]–[130], [163]–[165].
- 1983.  See above, para.26-216C.
- 1984. [1962] A.C. 600.
- 1985. [1961] 1 Q.B. 445.
- 1986. The court also considered that no other form of “equitable” relief was available to the hirer on the particular facts of the case: see above, para.39-344; below, para.39-354.
- 1987. [1962] A.C. 600, 615, 621, 631, 632. cf. at 613. See also United Dominions Trust Ltd v Ennis [1968] 1 Q.B. 54.
- 1988. 1986 [1962] A.C. 600 at 614, 616, 623, 628, 634.
- 1989. See above, para.39-347 n.1965.
- 1990. The county court judge subsequently assessed the damages as £30, instead of the £206 claimed by the respondents.
- 1991. Lombank Ltd v Excell [1964] 1 Q.B. 415; EP Finance Co Ltd v Dooley [1963] 1 W.L.R. 1313. It would seem from these cases that Phonographic Equipment Ltd v Muslu [1961] 1 W.L.R. 1379 is inconsistent with the decision of the House of Lords in Bridge, despite the fact that it was followed in Lombank Ltd v Cook [1962] 1 W.L.R. 1133; and in Lombank Ltd v Archbold [1962] C.L.Y. 1409.
- 1992. Bridge v Campbell Discount Co Ltd [1962] A.C. 600; EP Finance Co Ltd v Dooley [1963] 1 W.L.R. 1313.
- 1993. Bridge v Campbell Discount Co Ltd [1962] A.C. 600; Lombank Ltd v Excell [1964] 1 Q.B. 415.
- 1994. Lombank Ltd v Excell [1964] 1 Q.B. 415.
- 1995. See above, para.39-347.
- 1996. Anglo-Auto Finance Co Ltd v James [1963] 1 W.L.R. 1042. Contrast Robophone Facilities Ltd v Blank [1966] 1 W.L.R. 1428 (hire); JA Leasing v Humphrey (1971) 46 A.L.J.R. 106.

- 1997. Financings Ltd v Baldock [1963] 2 Q.B. 104; Brady v St Margaret's Trust Ltd [1963] 2 Q.B. 494; Anglo-Auto Finance Co Ltd v James, above; Charterhouse Credit Co Ltd v Tolly [1963] 2 Q.B. 683; Capital Finance Co v Donati (1977) 121 S.J. 270. Contrast Esanda Finance Corp v Plessnig (1988) 166 C.L.R. 131 High Ct of Australia.
- 1998. In the Court of Appeal, there was a difference of opinion as to the circumstances (if any) in which a court could intervene by granting the hirer some form of equitable relief: see [1961] 1 Q.B. 445.
- 1999. [1938] 2 K.B. 83; above, para.39-350.
- 2000. [1962] A.C. 600, 613, 614.
- 2001. [1962] A.C. 600 at 631, a view supported by McGregor on Damages, 19th edn, paras 15–114—15–115 and the Law Commission in Penalty Clauses and Forfeiture of Moneys Paid (WP No.61, 1975), para.17.26.
- 2002. [1962] A.C. 600 at 634.
- 2003. [1962] A.C. 600 at 635.
- 2004.  Goulston Discount Co Ltd v Harman (1962) 106 S.J. 369. cf. United Dominions Trust Ltd v Ennis [1968] 1 Q.B. 54, 64, 67. See also Granor Finance Ltd v Liquidator of Fastore Ltd, 1974 S.L.T. 296 (termination on liquidation); and Export Credits Guarantee Department v Universal Oil Products Co [1983] 1 W.L.R. 399; Vol.I, paras 26-195 et seq. And see the confirmation that the penalty jurisdiction does not apply in nonbreach cases by the Supreme Court in Cavendish Square Holdings BV v Makdessi [2015] UKSC 67, noted above, para.39-351 and see above, para.26-216C.
- 2005. Associated Distributors v Hall was followed (in a swaps agreement context) in Lomas v JFB Firth Rixson Inc [2010] EWHC 3372 (Ch) (reversed, on other points: [2012] EWCA Civ 419).
- 2006. See above, paras 39-212 et seq. See also below, para.39-368.
- 2007. SI 1999/2083; see above, paras 38-202 et seq. But as noted above at para.38-201, these regulations are replaced, for contracts made or or after October 1, 2015, by provisions in the Consumer Rights Act 2015 Pt 2.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 39 - Credit and Security
Section 3. - Hire-Purchase Agreements
(c) - Effect of Consumer Credit Regulation

Definition39-356

The consumer credit regulatory regime defines ²⁰⁰⁸ “hire-purchase agreement” to mean an agreement, other than a conditional sale agreement, ²⁰⁰⁹ under which (a) goods ²⁰¹⁰ are bailed in return for periodical payments by the person to whom they are bailed, and (b) the property in the goods will pass to that person if the terms of the agreement are complied with and one or more of the following occurs—(i) the exercise of an option to purchase by that person, (ii) the doing of any other specified act by any party to the agreement, (iii) the happening of any other specified event. ²⁰¹¹

Scope of regulation39-357

Hire-purchase agreements are essentially treated in the same way as conditional sale agreements ²⁰¹² and hence as credit, not hire, agreements. Hence a hire-purchase agreement with an individual ²⁰¹³ is to be regarded as a fixed-sum credit ²⁰¹⁴ agreement where the amount of credit is the balance financed. ²⁰¹⁵ A hire-purchase agreement with an individual is therefore a regulated credit agreement unless it is an exempt agreement. ²⁰¹⁶ A regulated hire-purchase agreement is a debtor-creditor-supplier agreement ²⁰¹⁷ for restricted-use credit. ²⁰¹⁸ But it cannot be a “small” agreement. ²⁰¹⁹

Parties39-358

By reason of the fact that a hire-purchase agreement is deemed to be a fixed-sum credit agreement, the owner is referred to as the “creditor” or “lender” and the hirer as the “debtor” or “borrower”. ²⁰²⁰ The terms “owner” and “hirer” refer to consumer hire agreements only. ²⁰²¹

Unfair relationships39-359

The provisions of the Consumer Credit Act 1974 relating to “unfair relationships” apply to hire-purchase agreements where the debtor is an individual. ²⁰²²

Application of the regulatory regime

39-360

The provisions of the regime relating to the authorisation and control, etc. of consumer credit businesses and the regulation of consumer credit agreements have been dealt with in the first section of this chapter ²⁰²³ and they apply to the business of bailing goods on hire-purchase and to hire-purchase agreements. Although the Consumer Credit Directive ²⁰²⁴ does not apply to hire-purchase agreements, in order to maintain a coherent regime (in particular because conditional sales are within the Directive), the consumer credit regime, as amended in implementation of that Directive, has been extended to hire-purchase agreements. But there are a number of specific provisions that apply in particular to regulated hire-purchase (and conditional sale) agreements. ²⁰²⁵

Protected goods

39-361

Restrictions are imposed on the recovery of possession where the debtor is in breach of a regulated hire-purchase agreement ²⁰²⁶ and the debtor has paid or tendered ²⁰²⁷ to the creditor one-third or more of the total price ²⁰²⁸ of the goods. The goods then become “protected goods”. ²⁰²⁹ Under s.90(1) of the Consumer Credit Act 1974, the creditor is not entitled to recover possession of protected goods from the debtor except on an order of the court. ²⁰³⁰ An exception exists if the debtor has terminated, or terminates, the agreement ²⁰³¹; and the restriction does not apply to the recovery of protected goods from a person other than the debtor. ²⁰³² But otherwise the creditor's right to seize the goods is curtailed, ²⁰³³ and if the restriction applies to an agreement at the death of the debtor, it continues to apply (in relation to the possessor of the goods) until the grant of probate or administration. ²⁰³⁴

39-362

It is to be noted that goods are not protected goods, even though one-third or more of the total price may have been paid, unless the debtor is in breach of the agreement. ²⁰³⁵ Before one-third of the total price has been paid or tendered, or if the debtor is not in breach of the agreement, the creditor may retake possession of the goods, ²⁰³⁶ provided that he is then entitled to immediate possession of them. ²⁰³⁷

Successive agreements

39-363

Section 90 of the 1974 Act also contains provisions designed to ensure that a debtor who has paid one-third or more of the total price under an earlier agreement does not lose the possibility of protection under the section by entering into a new agreement with the creditor whereby the goods comprised in the earlier agreement are transferred to a new agreement, with or without other goods. ²⁰³⁸ Section 90(3) of the Act, in effect, provides that where one-third or more of the total price has been paid under the earlier agreement, any goods comprised in both the earlier and the new agreement will be protected goods if the debtor is in breach of the new agreement, whether or not one-third or more of the total purchase price has been paid under the new agreement. Further, if the new agreement is a modifying agreement, as defined in s.82(2) of the 1974 Act, ²⁰³⁹ it seems that, on breach of the modifying agreement, all the goods in the modifying agreement become protected goods. ²⁰⁴⁰

Consent to repossession

39-364

There is, however, no contravention of s.90(1) of the 1974 Act if, at the time of recovery of possession, the debtor consents thereto. ²⁰⁴¹ But the consent of the debtor must be an “unqualified and informed” consent. ²⁰⁴²

Consequences of contravention

39-365

The consequences of recovery of possession of protected goods in breach of s.90 are severe. ²⁰⁴³ The regulated agreement, if not previously terminated, terminates. ²⁰⁴⁴ The debtor is further released from all liability under the agreement and is entitled to recover from the creditor all sums paid by the debtor under the agreement. ²⁰⁴⁵ Any security ²⁰⁴⁶ provided in relation to the agreement, or to a linked transaction, ²⁰⁴⁷ is rendered invalid. ²⁰⁴⁸

Entry on premises

39-366

The creditor is not entitled to enter any premises ²⁰⁴⁹ to take possession of goods subject to a regulated hire-purchase agreement ²⁰⁵⁰ except under an order of the court. ²⁰⁵¹ This restriction applies whether or not the goods are “protected goods”. Contravention of this prohibition is actionable as a breach of statutory duty. ²⁰⁵² A licence to enter and seize the goods conferred by the agreement will be of no effect. ²⁰⁵³ But this does not prevent entry upon premises with the consent of the occupier given at the time. ²⁰⁵⁴

Debtor's right to terminate agreement

39-367

Section 99 of the Consumer Credit Act 1974 gives to the debtor an indefeasible ²⁰⁵⁵ right (VTR—voluntary termination right) to terminate a regulated hire-purchase agreement ²⁰⁵⁶ at any time before the final payment falls due. ²⁰⁵⁷ The right is exercisable by giving notice to any person entitled or authorised to receive the sums payable under the agreement, e.g. to a person deputed by the creditor to collect the instalments. ²⁰⁵⁸ Termination, however, does not affect any liability under the agreement which has accrued before the termination. ²⁰⁵⁹

Minimum payment

39-368

Upon termination under s.99, the debtor becomes prima facie liable (unless the agreement provides for a smaller payment, ²⁰⁶⁰ or does not provide for any payment) to pay to the creditor the amount (if any) by which one-half ²⁰⁶¹ of the total price ²⁰⁶² exceeds the aggregate of the sums paid and the sums due in respect of the total price immediately before the termination. ²⁰⁶³ But if he has paid, or becomes liable to pay, more than one-half of the total price before the termination, he is not entitled to recover, or be relieved from, the excess.

39-369

It is important, however, to note the qualification attached to this “minimum payment” by s.100(3) of the 1974 Act:

“If in any action the court is satisfied that a sum less than the amount [of one-half the total price] would be equal to the loss sustained ²⁰⁶⁴ by the creditor in consequence of the termination of the agreement by the debtor, the court may make an order for the payment of that sum in lieu of the amount [of one-half the total price].”

The one-half minimum payment is thus merely the maximum amount recoverable by the creditor when the debtor exercises his statutory right of termination. ²⁰⁶⁵

Recompense

39-370

If the debtor has contravened an obligation to take reasonable care of the goods, the amount of one-half the total price is to be increased by the sum required to recompense the creditor for that contravention, and the qualification mentioned above likewise has effect accordingly. ²⁰⁶⁶

Wrongful possession

39-371

Where the debtor, on his termination of the agreement, wrongfully retains possession of goods to which the agreement relates, then, in any action brought by the creditor to recover possession of the goods from the debtor, the court, unless it is satisfied that having regard to the circumstances it would not be just to do so, must order the goods to be delivered to the creditor without giving the debtor an option to pay the value of the goods. ²⁰⁶⁷

Installation charges

39-372

Where under a hire-purchase agreement ²⁰⁶⁸ the creditor is required to carry out any installation and the agreement specifies, as part of the total price, the amount to be paid in respect of the installation ²⁰⁶⁹ (the “installation charge”) the reference in s.90(1)(b) ²⁰⁷⁰ of the Act to one-third of the total price and the reference in s.100(1) ²⁰⁷¹ of the Act to one-half of the total price are to be construed as references to the aggregate of the installation charge and (as the case may be) to one-third or one-half of the remainder of the total price. ²⁰⁷² This is best explained by illustration:

(i)

In a case where the total price is £1,400, of which £200 is specified as an installation charge, if it is sought to discover whether the goods have become protected goods (s.90), the statutory one-third would be £600, arrived at by deducting the installation charge from the total price, taking one-third of the balance, viz £400, and then adding the £200 installation charge.

(ii)

If it is sought to discover the statutory one-half of the total price (s.100) in the above example, the installation charge is first deducted from the total price leaving a balance of £1,200. Take one-half of this, viz £600, and then add back the installation charge in full, making a total of £800.

Time orders

39-373

In the case of a regulated hire-purchase agreement, as with any regulated agreement, the court is empowered to make a “time order” under s.129 of the Consumer Credit Act 1974 in certain circumstances. ²⁰⁷³ But, in the case of a hire-purchase agreement, ²⁰⁷⁴ the court may, when making a time order under s.129(2)(a) (for payment of any sum owed by instalments), deal with sums which, although not payable by the debtor at the time the order is made, would, if the agreement continued in force, become payable under it subsequently. ²⁰⁷⁵ Thus the court can, for example, not only order that the debtor be allowed time to pay off arrears and by instalments commensurate with his means, but also that his obligation to pay future instalments of rentals be rescheduled in a similar manner. Also, if the debtor is in possession of the goods following the making of a time order, he is to be treated as a bailee of the goods under the terms of the agreement, notwithstanding that the agreement has been terminated. ²⁰⁷⁶ His position in this respect may therefore be described as that of a “statutory bailee”. ²⁰⁷⁷

“Return orders” and “transfer orders”

39-374

Certain special powers are conferred upon the court by s.133 of the Consumer Credit Act 1974 in relation to a regulated hire-purchase agreement ²⁰⁷⁸ where an application is made for an enforcement order ²⁰⁷⁹ or for a time order, ²⁰⁸⁰ or where an action is brought by the creditor to recover possession of goods to which the agreement relates. ²⁰⁸¹ These special powers are, if it appears to the court just to do so, to make a return order or a transfer order. ²⁰⁸²

39-375

A return order is an order for the return to the creditor of goods to which the agreement relates. ²⁰⁸³ Such an order can be either unconditional or (by virtue of s.135 of the 1974 Act) ²⁰⁸⁴ suspended. Thus the court can, by combining a time order made under s.129 with a suspended return order, make an order equivalent to the “postponed order” under (the now repealed) s.35(4)(b) of the Hire-Purchase Act 1965, that is to say, to order that the goods be returned to the creditor and suspend the operation of the order on condition that the debtor pays the unpaid balance of the total price by such instalments and at such times as the court provides in the time order. It is this combination of orders that is most extensively used.

39-376

A transfer order is an order for the transfer to the debtor of the creditor’s title to certain goods to which the agreement relates (“the transferred goods”), and the return to the creditor of the remainder of the goods. ²⁰⁸⁵ Where a transfer is made, the transferred goods are to be such of the goods to which the agreement relates as the court thinks just; but a transfer order can be made only where “the paid-up sum ²⁰⁸⁶ exceeds the part of the total price referable to the transferred goods ²⁰⁸⁷ by an amount equal to at least one-third of the unpaid balance of the total price”. ²⁰⁸⁸

39-377

Even though a return order or transfer order has been made, the debtor can, before the goods enter the possession of the creditor, on payment of the balance of the total price and fulfilment of any other necessary conditions, claim the goods ordered to be returned to the creditor. ²⁰⁸⁹ Similarly, if in pursuance of a time order or under s.133, the total price of goods is paid and any other necessary conditions are fulfilled, the creditor’s title vests in the debtor. ²⁰⁹⁰

Monetary judgment on non-compliance

39-378

If, in contravention of a return order or transfer order, any goods to which the order relates are not returned to the creditor, the court, on the application of the creditor, may—(a) revoke so much of the order as relates to those goods; and (b) order the debtor to pay to the creditor the unpaid portion of so much of the total price as is referable to those goods. ²⁰⁹¹

Adverse possession

39-379

In an action for the return of goods wrongfully detained a claimant must show that the defendant has wrongfully neglected or refused to deliver up the goods so that the defendant's possession of the goods is adverse. ²⁰⁹² Since the creditor is, for example, precluded from recovering protected goods otherwise than by action, ²⁰⁹³ and he might in consequence be said to be bound to acquiesce in the debtor's continuing in possession of the goods, difficulties could arise in relation to the creditor's need to prove adverse possession in an action to recover possession of the goods. ²⁰⁹⁴ Such difficulties are obviated by s.134(1) of the 1974 Act, ²⁰⁹⁵ which provides that where the creditor brings an action or makes an application to enforce a right to recover possession of goods comprised in a regulated hire-purchase agreement ²⁰⁹⁶ from the debtor and proves that a demand for delivery of the goods was included in the default notice, ²⁰⁹⁷ or that, after the right to recover possession of the goods accrued but before the action was begun or the application was made, he made a request in writing to the debtor to surrender the goods, then, for the purposes of the claim of the creditor to recover possession of the goods, the possession of them by the debtor is to be deemed to be adverse to the owner. However, nothing in s.134(1) is to affect a claim for damages for conversion. ²⁰⁹⁸

²⁰⁰⁸. See Consumer Credit Act 1974 ("CCA 1974") s.189(1) and the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (Regulated Activities) Order 2001 (SI 2001/544) ("RAO") art.60L(1), as inserted by SI 2013/1881 art.6. See also the almost identical definition in the Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.7.

²⁰⁰⁹. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1) and RAO art.60L(1); see below, para.39-439.

²⁰¹⁰. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1) (but not in the RAO).

²⁰¹¹. cf. R. v RW Proffitt Ltd [1954] 2 Q.B. 35.

²⁰¹². See below, paras 39-439 et seq.

²⁰¹³. See above, para.39-016.

²⁰¹⁴. See above, para.39-026.

²⁰¹⁵. See CCA 1974 s.9(3) (and Sch.2 Pt II Example 10) and RAO art.60L(8). The balance financed is therefore equal to the total price (defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1) and RAO art.60L(1)) of the goods less the aggregate of the deposit (also defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1) and RAO art.60L(1)) (if any) and the total charge for credit (see above, para.39-059). Hence the £25,000 ceiling in the "business" exemption (see above, para.39-046) is calculated by taking the total price and deducting any deposit.

²⁰¹⁶. See above, para.39-017.

²⁰¹⁷. See above, para.39-030.

²⁰¹⁸. See above, para.39-027.

²⁰¹⁹. See above, para.39-048.

²⁰²⁰. See above, para.39-016.

²⁰²¹. See above, para.39-037.

²⁰²². ss.140A–140C, above, paras 39-212 et seq.

- 2023. paras 39-001—39-257.
- 2024. See above, para.39-011. Article 2(2)(d) of the Directive excludes hire-purchase from its scope.
- 2025. See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf), paras 2–091—2–093, 2–100—2–101, 2–130—2–136.
- 2026. Or conditional sale agreement: see below, para.39-448.
- 2027. See CCA 1974 s.189(1): “payment” includes tender.
- 2028. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1). For installation charges, see below, para.39-372. The “total price” does not include default interest or other charges payable on default: Julian Hodge Bank Ltd v Hall [1998] C.C.L.R. 14.
- 2029. CCA 1974 s.90(7).
- 2030. CPR Pt 7 PD 7B. Grace v Black Horse Ltd [2014] EWCA 1413 (“order of court” can be an oral rather than the usual written order). A similar restriction was imposed by s.33 of the Hire-Purchase Act 1965. Contrast Bentinck Ltd v Cromwell Engineering Co Ltd [1971] 1 Q.B. 324 (abandoned goods); Lombank v Dowdall (1973) 118 S.J. 96 CA (deteriorating vehicle garaged by creditor to order of debtor); Black Horse Ltd v Smith [2002] 5 C.L. 105 Cty Ct (damaged car “released” to garage).
- 2031. CCA 1974 s.90(5). cf. United Dominions Trust (Commercial) Ltd v Ennis [1968] 1 Q.B. 54; FC Finance Ltd v Francis (1970) 114 S.J. 568 CA (termination as a result of repudiation by the debtor is not termination by the debtor); Chartered Trust Plc v Pitcher [1988] R.T.R. 72.
- 2032. Contrast Bentinck Ltd v Cromwell Engineering Co Ltd [1971] 1 Q.B. 324. See also FC Finance Ltd v Francis (1970) 114 S.J. 568 CA; Kassam v Chartered Trust Plc [1998] R.T.R. 220.
- 2033. Menzies v United Motor Finance Corp [1940] 1 K.B. 559; Carr v James Broderick & Co Ltd [1942] 2 K.B. 275; Thomas v Varney (1957) 107 L.J. 412; United Dominions Trust (Commercial) Ltd v Kesler (1963) 107 S.J. 15; Unity Finance Ltd v Woodcock [1963] 1 W.L.R. 455; Capital Finance Co Ltd v Bray [1964] 1 W.L.R. 323.
- 2034. CCA 1974 s.90(6). cf. Peacock v Anglo-Auto Finance Co Ltd (1968) 112 S.J. 746. After the grant of probate or administration, the restriction continues to apply, since the personal representatives become the “debtor”: CCA 1974 s.189(1).
- 2035. This was a departure from the regime of s.33 of the Hire-Purchase Act 1965.
- 2036. But see the need for notices under CCA 1974 ss.76, 86B, 86E, 98 (above, paras 39-164, 39-131, 39-135, 39-172).
- 2037. See above, para.39-347.
- 2038. This is similar to the position under s.47 of the Hire-Purchase Act 1965.
- 2039. See above, para.39-148.
- 2040. CCA 1974 s.90(4) and see Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf), para.2–091.
- 2041. CCA 1974 s.173(3): consent cannot be given earlier. See McDonald v Bowmaker (Ireland) Ltd (1950) 84 I.L.T. 64; Thomas v Varney (1957) 107 L.J. 412; Mercantile Credit Co Ltd v Cross [1965] 2 Q.B. 205; Hunter v Lex Vehicle Finance Ltd [2005] EWHC 223, [2005] B.P.I.R. 586. cf. United Dominions Trust (Commercial) Ltd v Kesler (1963) 107 S.J. 15.
- 2042. Chartered Trust Plc v Pitcher [1988] R.T.R. 72.

- 2043. CCA 1974 s.91. See also CCA 1974 s.142(2) (declaration) and Capital Finance Co Ltd v Bray [1964] 1 W.L.R. 323.
- 2044. CCA 1974 s.91(a).
- 2045. CCA 1974 s.91(b). But see Carr v James Broderick & Co Ltd [1942] 2 K.B. 275.
- 2046. As defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1); see above, para.39-180. But see Unity Finance Ltd v Woodcock [1963] 1 W.L.R. 455 (guarantor under a recourse agreement also protected).
- 2047. CCA 1974 s.113(8). For “linked transaction”, see CCA 1974 ss.19(1), 189(1); above, paras 39-055 et seq.
- 2048. CCA 1974 ss.106, 113(3)(b); above, para.39-193 n.1156.
- 2049. For the meaning of “premises”, in other contexts, see, e.g. Andrews v Andrews and Mears [1908] 2 K.B. 567, 570; West Mersea UDC v Fraser [1950] 2 K.B. 119; Gardiner v Sevenoaks RDC [1950] 2 All E.R. 84; John A Pike (Butchers) Ltd v Independent Insurance Co Ltd [1998] Lloyd’s Rep. I.R. 410 CA; Spring House v Mount Cook Land [2001] EWCA Civ 1833, [2002] 2 All E.R. 822.
- 2050. The provision is applicable also to a regulated conditional sale agreement (below, para.39-443) and to a regulated consumer hire agreement (above, para.39-036).
- 2051. CCA 1974 s.92(1). See CPR Pt 7 PD 7B.
- 2052. CCA 1974 s.92(3). Moreover, the usual disciplinary sanctions are available to the FCA, see above para.39-063. See Bowmaker Ltd v Tabor [1914] 2 K.B. 1; Carr v James Broderick & Co Ltd [1942] 2 K.B. 275; Smart Bros Ltd v Ross [1943] A.C. 84; Fileman v British Ry Traffic and Electricity Co Ltd (1945) 173 L.T. 407; Harris v Lombard (New Zealand) Ltd [1974] 2 N.Z.L.R. 161. In many situations, damages may be nominal only.
- 2053. CCA 1974 s.173(1).
- 2054. CCA 1974 s.173(3).
- 2055. See CCA 1974 s.173(1). See also Acceptance Co v Pike (1961) 111 L.J. 424.
- 2056. The provision applies also to conditional sale agreements, with certain modifications: see below, para.39-451.
- 2057. CCA 1974 s.99(1). cf. Wadham Stringer Finance Ltd v Meaney [1981] 1 W.L.R. 39 (acceleration clause in conditional sale agreement). Despite calls for its abolition, it was decided, after consultation, to retain the VTR, see: A Consultation on Voluntary Termination of Hire Purchase and Conditional Sale Agreements under the Consumer Credit Act 1974, DTI, Sept 2004 and OFT 761.
- 2058. CCA 1974 s.99(1).
- 2059. CCA 1974 s.99(2).
- 2060. See above, paras 39-349—39-354 for the effectiveness of minimum payment clauses at common law.
- 2061. For installation charges, see below, para.39-372.
- 2062. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1).
- 2063. CCA 1974 s.100(1). This corresponds to (the now repealed) s.28(1) of the Hire-Purchase Act 1965. Thus, for example, if the total price is £3,600, and the debtor terminates after he has paid

£1,000 and owes £200 in unpaid instalments, he must pay the £200 (s.99(2) and see above, paras 39-345, 39-346) and a further £600 so as to bring his total payments up to one-half of the total price.

- 2064. For a discussion of the meaning of the “loss sustained”, see Goode, Hire-Purchase Law and Practice, 2nd edn, pp.406–407; Guest, The Law of Hire-Purchase (1966), para.609; Booth & Phipps Garages Ltd v Milton [2000] C.L.Y. 2601 Cty Ct.
- 2065. See also CCA 1974 s.113(1), (8) (security); above, para.39-190. See above, para.39-347 as to the possible relevance of the VTR in limiting the damages recoverable when the debtor breaches the agreement.
- 2066. CCA 1974 s.100(4).
- 2067. CCA 1974 s.100(5).
- 2068. Or conditional sale agreement: see below, paras 39-448, 39-451.
- 2069. Defined in s.189(1).
- 2070. See above, para.39-361.
- 2071. See above, para.39-369.
- 2072. CCA 1974 ss.90(2), 100(2).
- 2073. See above, para.39-202 and CPR Pt 7 PD 7B; Pt 55 PD 55 7.1 Form N440.
- 2074. Or conditional sale agreement.
- 2075. CCA 1974 s.130(2).
- 2076. CCA 1974 s.130(4). This provision applies also to a regulated consumer hire agreement.
- 2077. As was the case under the Hire-Purchase Act 1965 s.38(1) when the goods were protected goods. See also Bentworth Finance v Jones (1963) 114 L.J. 140.
- 2078. Or conditional sale agreement.
- 2079. See above, para.39-200.
- 2080. CCA 1974 s.129; above, para.39-202.
- 2081. This is not confined to actions to recover protected goods. For the particulars required in the case of such a claim, see CPR Pt 7 PD 7B.
- 2082. CCA 1974 s.133(1). See Torts (Interference with Goods) Act 1977 s.3(8)(a): power of court under s.3 is without prejudice to the remedies afforded by CCA 1974 s.133.
- 2083. CCA 1974 s.133(1)(i).
- 2084. See above, para.39-208.
- 2085. CCA 1974 s.133(1)(ii). This corresponds to the rarely used “split order” that could be made under s.35(4)(c) of the Hire-Purchase Act 1965.
- 2086. See CCA 1974 s.133(2) for the definition of “the paid-up sum” and for its adjustment to take account of a sum owed by the creditor to the debtor, and for the deduction of any sum owed by the debtor in relation to the goods (otherwise than as part of the total price) from the paid-up sum.

- 2087. See CCA 1974 s.133(6).
- 2088. “Total price” is defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1). As a mathematical formula the maximum value of the goods capable of being transferred (V) can be expressed as: “ $V = p - u/3$ ” where p is the paid up sum and u the unpaid balance of the total price.
- 2089. CCA 1974 s.133(4).
- 2090. CCA 1974 s.133(5).
- 2091. CCA 1974 s.133(6).
- 2092. Clements v Flight (1846) 16 M. & W. 42.
- 2093. See above, para.39-361.
- 2094. Smart Bros Ltd v Pratt [1940] 2 K.B. 498, 504.
- 2095. Similar but narrower provisions appeared in s.10 of the Hire-Purchase Act 1938 and s.48 of the Hire-Purchase Act 1965.
- 2096. CCA 1974 s.134(1) also applies to regulated conditional sale and consumer hire agreements.
- 2097. Under CCA 1974 s.88(5), see above, para.39-167. It is therefore clear that CCA 1974 s.134(1), unlike (the now repealed) s.48(1) of the Hire-Purchase Act 1965, allows the demand for delivery up of the goods to be included in the default notice.
- 2098. CCA 1974 s.134(2).

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 39 - Credit and Security

Section 3. - Hire-Purchase Agreements

(d) - Defective Goods

Warranties and representations by dealers

39-380

In many hire-purchase transactions, the hirer enters into the agreement on the faith of statements made to him by a dealer with whom he is in no direct contractual relationship. The dealer sells the goods to a finance company, and the hire-purchase agreement is made between the hirer and the finance company. At common law the dealer is not normally an agent of the finance company in respect of any statements made by him to the hirer, even though he may decide and state the purchase price, receive the proposal form and initial deposit, and be paid a commission by the finance company. ²⁰⁹⁹ But the courts have held that, in appropriate circumstances, the hirer may sue the dealer on a collateral warranty and recover damages for the breach of it. ²¹⁰⁰ The dealer may also be liable in deceit and possibly for negligent misstatement ²¹⁰¹ even if the statements do not amount to a warranty. ²¹⁰² He can also be sued in tort for negligence if he puts into circulation goods that he knows or ought to know are dangerous or defective and the hirer or some third person is injured as a result. ²¹⁰³

39-381

However, under the Consumer Credit Act 1974, ²¹⁰⁴ any representations (including any condition or warranty, and any other statement or undertaking, whether oral or in writing) ²¹⁰⁵ made by a dealer who is a negotiator ²¹⁰⁶ in antecedent negotiations ²¹⁰⁷ prior to the making of a regulated hire-purchase agreement are deemed to have been made by him in the capacity of agent of the creditor as well as in his actual capacity. ²¹⁰⁸ The finance company will therefore be liable for representations made by the dealer in such circumstances.

Implied terms

39-382

Sections 9 to 11 of the Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) Act 1973 ²¹⁰⁹ import into every hire-purchase agreement certain implied terms as to the quality and fitness for purpose of the goods, and their correspondence with description and sample. These implied terms correspond very closely with the terms implied in contracts of sale of goods by virtue of ss.13 to 15 of the Sale of Goods Act 1979. ²¹¹⁰ The Consumer Rights Act 2015, for contracts made on or after October 1, 2015, makes separate provision for "consumer" agreements and treats similar (but more expansive ²¹¹¹) terms "as included" in "consumer" hire-purchase agreements (the terms being the same as for sales contracts). ²¹¹² It also confers extensive remedies for their breach. ²¹¹³ The exclusion of these implied terms and of the liability of the creditor for the breach of them is ineffective, either absolutely or subject to certain qualifications, the extent depending on whether they are "consumer" contracts or not. ²¹¹⁴

Letting by description

39-383

By s.9(1) of the 1973 Act, where under a hire-purchase agreement goods are bailed by description, there is implied in the agreement a term ²¹¹⁵ that the goods will correspond with the description ²¹¹⁶; and if under the agreement the goods are bailed by reference to a sample as well as a description, it is not sufficient that the bulk of the goods corresponds with the sample if the goods do not also correspond with the description. ²¹¹⁷ Goods are not prevented from being bailed by description by reason only that, being exposed for sale or hire, they are selected by the hirer. ²¹¹⁸ The Consumer Rights Act 2015 makes almost identical provision for “consumer” hire-purchase (and sales) agreements made on or after October 1, 2015. ²¹¹⁹

Satisfactory quality39-384

By s.10(2) of the 1973 Act, ²¹²⁰ where the creditor ²¹²¹ bails goods under a hire-purchase agreement in the course of a business ²¹²² there is an implied term ²¹²³ that the goods supplied under the agreement are of satisfactory quality. ²¹²⁴ But this implied term does not extend to any matter making the quality of goods unsatisfactory (a) which is specifically drawn to the hirer’s attention before the agreement is made; or (b) where the hirer examines the goods before the agreement is made, which that examination ought to reveal; or (c) where the goods are bailed by reference to a sample, which would have been apparent on reasonable examination of the sample. ²¹²⁵ If the hirer deals as consumer ²¹²⁶ the creditor may be responsible for any public statements on the specific characteristics of the goods made about them by himself, the producer ²¹²⁷ or his representative particularly in advertising or on labelling. ²¹²⁸ The Consumer Rights Act 2015 makes almost identical provision for “consumer” hire-purchase (and sales) agreements made on or after October 1, 2015. ²¹²⁹

Fitness for purpose39-385

By s.10(3) of the 1973 Act, where the creditor ²¹³⁰ bails goods under a hire-purchase agreement in the course of a business ²¹³¹ and the hirer, expressly or by implication, makes known to the creditor, or to a creditbroker ²¹³² in the course of negotiations conducted by that broker in relation to goods sold by him to the creditor before forming the subject matter of the hire-purchase agreement, any particular purpose for which the goods are being bailed, there is an implied term ²¹³³ that the goods supplied under the agreement are reasonably fit for that purpose, whether or not that is a purpose for which such goods are commonly supplied, ²¹³⁴ except where the circumstances show that the hirer does not rely, or that it is unreasonable for him to rely, ²¹³⁵ on the skill or judgment of the creditor or credit-broker. ²¹³⁶ The Consumer Rights Act 2015 treats a similar term “as included” in “consumer” hire-purchase (and sales) agreements made on or after October 1, 2015. ²¹³⁷

Sample39-386

By s.11 of the 1973 Act, where under a hire-purchase agreement goods are bailed by reference to a sample, there is an implied term ²¹³⁸—(a) that the bulk will correspond with the sample in quality; and (b) that the hirer will have a reasonable opportunity of comparing the bulk with the sample; and (c) that the goods will be free from any defect, making their quality unsatisfactory, ²¹³⁹ which would not be apparent on reasonable examination of the sample. ²¹⁴⁰ The Consumer Rights Act 2015 treats a similar term as included in ‘consumer’ hire-purchase (and sales) agreements made on or after October 1, 2015. ²¹⁴¹ Moreover, it includes an additional term that the goods match a model seen or examined. ²¹⁴²

Remedies for breach

39-387

Breach of any of the terms implied by ss.9 to 11 of the Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) 1973 Act normally entitles the hirer to assert the remedies available to him for breach of condition, that is to say, he can reject the goods and treat the agreement as repudiated and sue for damages for any loss or damage (including consequential loss) which he may have suffered as a result of the breach. ²¹⁴³ The hirer may elect not to treat the breach of condition as a ground for treating the contract as repudiated, but mere acceptance of the goods does not preclude this remedy. ²¹⁴⁴ A refusal by the creditor to remedy the defects in the goods bailed constitutes a continuing breach of the agreement and the hirer may refuse to continue with the agreement as the creditor will not honour his obligation. ²¹⁴⁵ Alternatively the hirer can affirm the agreement and sue for damages. ²¹⁴⁶ However, if the hirer does not deal as consumer, ²¹⁴⁷ and the breach is so slight that it would be unreasonable for him to reject them, the breach is not to be treated as a breach of condition but may be treated as a breach of warranty, ²¹⁴⁸ i.e. be remediable in damages only. The additional remedies conferred on the consumer by Pt 5A of the Sale of Goods Act 1979 ²¹⁴⁹ and by Pt 1B of the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 ²¹⁵⁰ do not apply to hire-purchase agreements. ²¹⁵¹ The Consumer Rights Act 2015 repeals those provisions and extends to hirers under contracts made on or after October 1, 2015 the much more extensive remedies provided for under that Act. ²¹⁵²

Total failure of consideration

39-388

There is some authority for the view that, where the goods are so defective that they are totally unfit for the purpose for which they are let or where they seriously fail to correspond with description, the hirer is entitled at common law to recover all sums which he has paid as upon a total failure of consideration, ²¹⁵³ provided that he takes immediate steps to rescind the agreement. ²¹⁵⁴

Measure of damages

39-389

If the hirer elects to treat the contract as repudiated and to sue for damages, there is some doubt as to the measure of damages which he is entitled to recover at common law. ²¹⁵⁵ But it would seem that he is entitled to claim the return of all moneys paid by him at the time of the termination of the agreement, together with any sum actually expended on repairing the goods bailed, less a deduction for the use of the goods during the period they were in his possession. ²¹⁵⁶ He would also be entitled to recover any additional cost involved in obtaining equivalent goods on hire-purchase elsewhere. If, on the other hand, the breach of the agreement amounts to or is to be treated as a breach of warranty only, or if the hirer elects to affirm the contract and sue for damages, the measure of damages would appear to be the cost of putting the goods into a proper state of repair together with damages for loss of use while they are being put into repair. ²¹⁵⁷

Exclusion of implied terms: consumer agreements

39-390

Liability for breach of the obligations arising from ss.9, 10 or 11 of the Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) Act 1973 cannot be excluded or restricted by any contract term as against a person "dealing as consumer" as presently defined in the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977. ²¹⁵⁸ It is important to note that this definition is in no way connected with the concept of a consumer credit agreement in the Consumer Credit Act 1974. ²¹⁵⁹ For the purposes of the 1977 Act, the hirer "deals as consumer" if he neither makes the agreement in the course of a business ²¹⁶⁰ nor holds himself out as so doing, and if the creditor does make the agreement in the course of a business and (unless the hirer is an individual) the goods ²¹⁶¹ bailed are of a type ordinarily supplied for private use or consumption. ²¹⁶²

The onus of proving that the hirer did not deal as a consumer lies upon the creditor. ²¹⁶³ Terms excluding or restricting liability may also be held to be unfair and so not binding the consumer under the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999. ²¹⁶⁴ The Consumer Rights Act 2015 also provides, for contracts made on or after October 1, 2015, that liability for breach of the corresponding terms “treated as included” by that Act cannot be excluded or restricted by any contract term as against the consumer. ²¹⁶⁵ Terms excluding or restricting liability may also be held to be unfair and so not binding the consumer under the more general provisions on unfair terms in that Act. ²¹⁶⁶

Exclusion of implied terms: non-consumer agreements

39-391

In the case where the hirer does not “deal as consumer” (as defined above) the liability under ss.9, 10 or 11 of the 1973 Act can be excluded or restricted by reference to a contract term, but only insofar as the term satisfies the requirement of reasonableness. ²¹⁶⁷ In order to assist the court to determine whether or not any such term would be reasonable, certain “guidelines” are set out in Sch.2 to the 1977 Act. But the court is also specifically enjoined to have regard in general ²¹⁶⁸ to the circumstances which were, or ought reasonably to have been, known to or in the contemplation of the parties when the contract was made. ²¹⁶⁹ It might be thought that an exemption clause in a commercial hire-purchase agreement which excluded the terms as to quality and fitness implied by the 1973 Act would be considered reasonable in circumstances where the owner (a finance company) would not see the goods before their delivery to the hirer by the supplying dealer, ²¹⁷⁰ but it would appear that this may not be the case. ²¹⁷¹

Construction of clause

39-392

A number of cases have arisen where the courts, applying the principle of “fundamental breach” ²¹⁷² have held that the exemption clause in question did not cover the breach which occurred. ²¹⁷³ Such cases must now be considered to have been decided by reference to the true construction of the particular clause, since there is no rule of common law which would prevent an owner, by means of an appropriately drafted exemption clause, from excluding or restricting his liability even for a “fundamental breach”. ²¹⁷⁴ In any event, such cases are of much less importance since the enactment of the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977, the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999 ²¹⁷⁵ and the “unfair relationship” provisions of the Consumer Credit Act 1974. ²¹⁷⁶

Collateral warranty: acknowledgment by hirer

39-393

The protection afforded by an otherwise effective exemption clause may prove nugatory where either the owner or his agent has furnished an independent collateral warranty in return for which the hirer has entered into the hire-purchase agreement. ²¹⁷⁷ However, it now seems that a properly drafted “acknowledgement” by a contracting party of past or present facts (e.g. that he has not, expressly or by implication, made known any particular purpose for which the goods are being hired) can, contrary to previous authority, ²¹⁷⁸ in principle be binding on the basis of the developing doctrine of contractual estoppel. ²¹⁷⁹

²⁰⁹⁹. North Central Wagon and Finance Co Ltd v White and Powell [1955] C.L.Y. 1204; Campbell Discount Co Ltd v Gall [1961] 1 Q.B. 431; Yeoman Credit Ltd v Apps [1962] 2 Q.B. 508; Branwhite v Worchester Works Finance Ltd [1969] 1 A.C. 552; Williams (JD) & Co v McCauley Parsons and Jones [1994] C.C.L.R. 78; Woodchester Equipment (Leasing) Ltd v British Association of Canned and Preserved Foods Importers and Distributors Ltd [1995] C.L.Y. 2459; PB Leasing Ltd v Patel [1995] C.C.L.R. 82; Lombard North Central Plc v Gate [1998] C.C.L.R.

51 Cty Ct; Brewer v Mann [2012] EWCA Civ 246. See Guest (1963) 79 L.Q.R. 33; Hughes (1964) 27 M.L.R. 395. Contrast Purnell Secretarial Services Ltd v Lease Management Services Ltd [1994] C.C.L.R. 127.

- 2100. Webster v Higgin [1948] 2 All E.R. 127; Brown v Sheen and Richmond Car Sales Ltd [1950] 1 All E.R. 1102; Andrews v Hopkinson [1957] 1 Q.B. 229; Smith v Spurling Motor Bodies Ltd (1961) 105 S.J. 967; Yeoman Credit Ltd v Odgers [1962] 1 W.L.R. 215. See Vol.I, paras 13-004, 13-033. It is possible that a warranty similar to the term implied by s.14(3) of the Sale of Goods Act 1979 might be imported into such a transaction: Andrews v Hopkinson, above, at 237. Contrast Drury v Victor Buckland Ltd [1941] 1 All E.R. 269.
- 2101. See Vol.I, Ch.7. The Misrepresentation Act 1967 s.2(1), would not appear to apply in this situation.
- 2102. cf. Garbett v Rufford Motor Co Ltd, The Guardian, March 12, 1962.
- 2103. Herschtal v Stewart Arden Ltd [1940] 1 K.B. 155; Andrews v Hopkinson [1957] 1 Q.B. 229. See also the Consumer Protection Act 1987; below, paras 44-449 et seq.
- 2104. See above, para.39-071.
- 2105. See CCA 1974 s.189(1): definition of “representation”.
- 2106. Defined in CCA 1974 s.56(1), see above, para.39-073.
- 2107. Defined in CCA 1974 s.56(1), see above, para.39-071.
- 2108. CCA 1974 s.56(2).
- 2109. Re-enacted (as from May 19, 1985: see SI 1983/1551 (c.44)) by s.192 of and Sch.4 para.35, to the Consumer Credit Act 1974 and amended by the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 s.17(1), the Sale and Supply of Goods Act 1994 s.7 and Sch.2, and the Sale and Supply of Goods to Consumers Regulations 2002 (SI 2002/3045) reg.13 (revoked, with effect from October 1, 2015, by the Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.60 and Sch.1 para.53).
- 2110. See below, paras 44-086—44-115.
- 2111. See, in particular, the new terms as to conformity with model seen or examined (s.14, above, para.38-467) and as to incorrect installation (s.15, above, para.38-468).
- 2112. And note that certain pre-contract information provided under the Consumer Contract (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 (SI 2013/3134) are treated as terms of the contract: Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.12 and see above, para.38-465.
- 2113. The terms are set out in the Consumer Rights Act 2015 ss.9–15, 18 (see above, paras 38-462 et seq.) and the remedies in ss.19–27 (above, paras 38-477 et seq.).
- 2114. See Vol.I, para.15-093; below, para.44-117.
- 2115. In England and Wales and Northern Ireland, this term is a condition: s.9(1A).
- 2116. Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) Act 1973 s.9(1). See, e.g. Karsales (Harrow) Ltd v Wallis [1956] 1 W.L.R. 936; Astley Industrial Trust Ltd v Grimley [1963] 1 W.L.R. 584, 597; Charterhouse Credit Co Ltd v Tolly [1963] 2 Q.B. 683, 708; Brewer v Mann [2012] EWCA Civ 246.
- 2117. For the analogous case of sale by description, see below, para.44-086.
- 2118. Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) 1973 Act s.9(2).

- 2119. See Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.11 (but note the additional provisions in s.11(4)–(5)). See above, para.38-464.
- 2120. As amended by s.17(1) of the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 and s.7 of the Sale and Supply of Goods Act 1994. See Garside v Black Horse Ltd [2010] EWHC 190 (QB) (not a sale by sample, hence s.10(2) applied).
- 2121. Defined in s.15(1) of the 1973 Act to mean the owner or his assignee.
- 2122. Defined in s.15(1) of the 1973 Act. See also s.10(5).
- 2123. In England and Wales and Northern Ireland, this term is a condition: s.10(7).
- 2124. Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) 1973 Act s.10(2), as amended by (i) s.17(1) of the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982; (ii) Sale and Supply of Goods Act 1994, and (iii) Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.60 and Sch.1 para.3. See Garside v Black Horse Ltd [2010] EWHC 190 (QB) (not a sale by sample, hence s.10(2) applied). “Satisfactory quality” is defined in s.10(2A), (2B) of the 1973 Act. See below, paras 44-099—44-100. For second hand goods, see, e.g. Bartlett v Sidney Marcus Ltd [1965] 1 W.L.R. 1013; Crowther v Shannon Motor Co [1975] 1 W.L.R. 30. See also Lamarra v Capital Bank Plc, 2006 S.L.T. 1045 (relevance of warranty in determining satisfactory quality): below, para.44-099.
- 2125. For the corresponding provision in the Sale of Goods Act 1979, see below, para.44-095.
- 2126. This expression is not defined in the 1973 Act. cf. below, para.44-121.
- 2127. Defined in s.15(1) of the 1973 Act.
- 2128. Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) 1973 Act s.10(2D), (2E), (2F), inserted by the Sale and Supply of Goods to Consumers Regulations 2002 (SI 2002/3045) reg.13. Note the corresponding provisions for “consumer” hire-purchase (and sales) agreements in the Consumer Rights Act s.9(5)–(7), above, para.38-467 and note s.18 (no other implied requirement as to quality), above, para.38-470.
- 2129. Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.9(5)–(7), above, para.38-467 and note s.18 (no other implied requirement as to quality), above, para.38-470.
- 2130. Defined in Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) 1973 Act s.15(1) to mean the owner or his assignee.
- 2131. Defined in s.15(1) of the 1973 Act. See also s.10(5).
- 2132. Defined ins.10(6) of the 1973 Act.
- 2133. In England and Wales and Northern Ireland, this term is a condition: s.10(7).
- 2134. Lowe v Lombank Ltd [1960] 1 W.L.R. 196; Unity Finance Ltd v Hammond (1965) 109 S.J. 70; Porter v General Guarantee Corp [1982] R.T.R. 384.
- 2135. cf. Yeoman Credit Co Ltd v Apps [1962] 2 Q.B. 508; Astley Industrial Trust Ltd v Grimley [1963] 1 W.L.R. 584.
- 2136. Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) 1973 Act s.10(3). For the corresponding provision in the Sale of Goods Act 1979, see below, para.44-105.
- 2137. See Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.10, above, para.38-463 (and note s.18: no other implied requirement as to quality), above, para.38-470.
- 2138. In England and Wales and Northern Ireland, this term is a condition: s.11(2).

- 2139. Defined in s.10(2A), (2B), (2D)–(2F) of the 1973 Act.
- 2140. Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) 1973 Act s.11. For the corresponding provision in the Sale of Goods Act 1979, see below, para.44-113.
- 2141. See Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.13. See above, para.38-466.
- 2142. See Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.14. See above, para.38-467.
- 2143. See Yeoman Credit v Odgers Vospers Motor House (Plymouth) (Third Party) [1962] 1 W.L.R. 215 (CA); Brewer v Mann [2012] EWCA Civ 246 (obiter, breach of s.9(1)).
- 2144. cf. Sale of Goods Act 1979 s.11(4); below, para.44-068.
- 2145. Yeoman Credit Ltd v Apps [1962] 2 Q.B. 508; Ditchburn Equipment Ltd v Crich (1966) 110 S.J. 266 CA. This sentence was cited with approval in Garside v Black Horse Ltd [2010] EWHC 190 (QB) [30].
- 2146. See below, para.39-389.
- 2147. Defined as in Pt I of the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977; see Vol.I, para.15-073 and below, para.44-121.
- 2148. s.11(A). For the corresponding provision in the Sale of Goods Act 1979, see below, para.44-070.
- 2149. Inserted by reg.4 of the Sale and Supply of Goods to Consumers Regulations 2002 (SI 2002/3045); below, paras 38-408 et seq.
- 2150. Inserted by reg.9 of the Sale and Supply of Goods to Consumer Regulations 2002 (SI 2002/3045).
- 2151. At least until the hirer exercises his option to purchase and buys the goods.
- 2152. See above, paras 38-477 et seq. See especially ss.19–27, in part replacing those now available under Pt 5A (ss.48A to 48F) of the 1979 Act for buyers dealing “as consumer” (now defined in Sale of Goods Act 1979 s.61(1) by reference to (now repealed) Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.12) when the goods do not conform to the contract of sale.
- 2153. Karsales (Harrow) Ltd v Wallis [1956] 1 W.L.R. 936; Yeoman Credit Ltd v Apps [1962] 2 Q.B. 508 at 521, 524; Unity Finance Ltd v Hammond (1965) 109 S.J. 70.
- 2154. cf. Yeoman Credit Ltd v Apps, above; Charterhouse Credit Co Ltd v Tolly [1963] 2 Q.B. 683.
- 2155. Contrast Yeoman Credit Co Ltd v Apps [1962] 2 Q.B. 508 with Charterhouse Credit Co Ltd v Tolly [1963] 2 Q.B. 683, both considered in Brewer v Mann [2012] EWCA Civ 246.
- 2156. Charterhouse Credit Co Ltd v Tolly [1963] 2 Q.B. 683; Garside v Black Horse Ltd [2010] EWHC 190 (QB); Brewer v Mann [2012] EWCA Civ 246.
- 2157. Charterhouse Credit Co Ltd v Tolly [1963] 2 Q.B. 683 at 711–712; Brewer v Mann [2012] EWCA Civ 246. See also Brown v Sheen and Richmond Car Sales Ltd [1950] 1 All E.R. 1102. Contrast Doobay v Mohabeer [1967] 2 A.C. 278.
- 2158. s.6(2). See Vol.I, para.15-093. See also Hughes v Hall & Hall [1981] R.T.R. 430 DC (offence to include void exclusion term by (now repealed) Consumer Transactions (Restrictions on Statements) Order 1976 (SI 1976/1813)).
- 2159. See above, para.39-016.

- 2160. Defined in s.14 of the 1977 Act.
- 2161. Defined in s.14 of the 1977 Act.
- 2162. s.12, as amended by the Sale and Supply of Goods to Consumers Regulations 2002 (SI 2002/3045) reg.14. See Vol.I, para.15-073; below, para.44-121.
- 2163. s.12(3).
- 2164. SI 1999/2083 as amended; see above, paras 38-202 et seq. As noted above at para.38-201, these regulations are replaced, for contracts made on or after October 1, 2015, by provisions in the Consumer Rights Act 2015 Pt 2. See also the “unfair relationship” provisions of the Consumer Credit Act 1974 (above, paras 39-212 et seq.).
- 2165. Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.31. See above, para.38-392. See also Hughes v Hall & Hall [1981] R.T.R. 430 DC (offence to include void exclusion term by (now revoked) Consumer Transactions (Restrictions on Statements) Order 1976 (SI 1976/1813)).
- 2166. i.e. ss.61–76 (and see s.62(8)(a)), see further above, paras 38-358 et seq. See also the “unfair relationship” provisions of the Consumer Credit Act 1974 ss.140A–140C (above, paras 39-212 et seq.).
- 2167. 1977 Act s.6(3) (replaced by s.6(1A), by the Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.60 and Sch.4 para.8, when in force). The burden of proving that the contract term satisfies the requirements of reasonableness is on the person claiming that it does: s.11(5) of the 1977 Act. See Vol.I, para.15-078.
- 2168. As opposed to the particular guidelines: s.11(2). See Vol.I, para.15-097; below, para.44-122.
- 2169. Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.11(1). See Vol.I, para.15-096.
- 2170. R & B Customs Brokers Co Ltd v United Dominions Trust Ltd [1988] 1 W.L.R. 321, 331–332 (conditional sale); Abbey National Business Equipment Leasing Ltd v Dora Ife [2003] 12 C.L. 70 Cty Ct.
- 2171. Sovereign Finance Ltd v Silver Crest Furniture Ltd [1997] C.C.L.R. 76, following Purnell Secretarial Services v Lease Management Services [1994] C.C.L.R. 127 (hire).
- 2172. See Vol.I, para.15-023.
- 2173. Karsales (Harrow) Ltd v Wallis [1956] 1 W.L.R. 936; Yeoman Credit Co Ltd v Apps [1962] 2 Q.B. 508; Charterhouse Credit Co Ltd v Tolly [1963] 2 Q.B. 683; Farnworth Finance Facilities v Attryde [1970] 1 W.L.R. 1053; Guarantee Trust of Jersey Ltd v Gardner (1973) 117 S.J. 564. Contrast Handley v Marston (1962) 106 S.J. 327; Astley Industrial Trust Ltd v Grimley [1963] 1 W.L.R. 584. See Vol.I, para.15-031.
- 2174. Suisse Atlantique Société d'Armement Maritime SA v NV Rotterdamsche Kolen Centrale [1967] 1 A.C. 361; Photo Production Ltd v Securicor Transport Ltd [1980] A.C. 827; George Mitchell (Chesterhall) Ltd v Finney Lock Seeds Ltd [1983] 2 A.C. 803; see Vol.I, paras 15-023–14-027.
- 2175. SI 1999/2083 as amended; see above, paras 38-202 et seq. As noted above at para.38-201, these regulations are replaced, for contracts made on or after October 1, 2015, by provisions in the Consumer Rights Act 2015 Pt 2.
- 2176. ss.140A–140C, above, paras 39-212 et seq.
- 2177. See above, para.39-380 n.2098, especially Webster v Higgin [1948] 2 All E.R. 127; see generally, Vol.I, para.15-148.
- 2178. That this could only operate by way of estoppel by representation: Lowe v Lombank Ltd [1960]

1 W.L.R. 196, see Vol.I, para.15-147.

2179. Springwell Navigation Corp v JP Morgan Chase Bank [2010] EWCA Civ 1221, disapproving Lowe v Lombank Ltd [1960] 1 W.L.R. 196.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 39 - Credit and Security
Section 3. - Hire-Purchase Agreements
(e) - Rights and Liabilities of Third Parties
(i) - Assignment

Assignment by owner

39-394

The owner of goods let under a hire-purchase agreement can assign two things: his interest in the agreement and his interest in the goods themselves. An assignment by the owner of his entire interest in the agreement will transfer to the assignee all the owner's rights under the agreement except those that are personal to him such as a licence to enter and seize the goods hired. Such an assignment does not have to be registered as a bill of sale ²¹⁸⁰ and is governed by the normal rules regarding the assignment of choses in action. ²¹⁸¹

39-395

Where, however, the owner assigns or purports to assign his interest in the goods themselves, the document by which the assignment is effected may be registrable as a bill of sale under the Bills of Sale Acts 1878 and 1882. If the assignment is by way of security or if the owner retains the contractual right to possession of the goods, ²¹⁸² the assignment is within the provisions of the Acts. ²¹⁸³ But an assignment that is absolute and made in pursuance of a "block discounting" agreement between the owner and a finance company is unlikely to be invalidated as an unregistered bill of sale.

Charge over rentals

39-396

Where the owner of goods charges in favour of a bank the rentals payable under hire-purchase agreements but continues to collect them as agent of the bank, he does not receive the rentals in a fiduciary capacity, being free to deal with the money as his own until required by the bank to pay them into a separate account. ²¹⁸⁴

Assignment by hirer

39-397

The hirer can legitimately assign only his interest in the agreement since he has no property in the goods themselves. ²¹⁸⁵ Most agreements, however, specifically prohibit such assignment.

^{2180.} Re Davis & Co (1888) 22 Q.B.D. 193; Re Isaacson [1895] 1 Q.B. 333. Nor is it (if absolute) a loan; Olds Discount Co Ltd v John Playfair Ltd [1938] 3 All E.R. 275. But see the now repealed

(and not replaced) Companies Act 1985 s.396(1)(e), (f) and relevant case-law: Re George Inglefield Ltd [1933] Ch. 1; Illingworth v Houldsworth [1904] A.C. 355; Lloyds and Scottish Finance v Cyril Lord Carpet Sales Ltd (1979) 129 New L.J. 366 HL.

2181. See Vol.I, Ch.19.

2182. Ancona v Rogers (1876) 1 Ex. D. 285, 292; Lincoln Waggon and Engine Co v Mumford (1880) 41 L.T. 655, 658. This can only happen in the unlikely event of the owner assigning his property interest alone, while retaining a contractual right to recover possession of the goods.

2183. It was previously within the now repealed (but not replaced) Companies Act 1985 s.396(1)(c).

2184. Royal Trust Bank v National Westminster Bank Plc [1996] B.C.L.C. 699. See also Re Spectrum Plus Ltd [2005] UKHL 41, [2005] 2 A.C. 680.

2185. But see Belsize Motor Supply Co v Cox [1914] 1 K.B. 244; Whiteley Ltd v Hilt [1918] 2 K.B. 808; Wickham Holdings Ltd v Brooke House Motors Ltd [1967] 1 W.L.R. 295 (disapproving United Dominions Trust (Commercial) Ltd v Parkway Motors Ltd [1955] 1 W.L.R. 719).

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 39 - Credit and Security
Section 3. - Hire-Purchase Agreements
(e) - Rights and Liabilities of Third Parties
(ii) - Title of Third Parties

Nemo dat quod non habet

39-398

The absence of any property in the goods in the hirer means that, as a general rule, he can pass no title to a third party. Any purported conveyance of the goods, as by way of sale, ²¹⁸⁶pledge ²¹⁸⁷ or execution of a bill of sale, ²¹⁸⁸ will not cause the property in the goods to vest in a third party, for nemo dat quod non habet. ²¹⁸⁹ In certain exceptional circumstances, however, statute or common law provides that a person who has no right to dispose of goods may nevertheless pass a good title to another. It is therefore necessary to examine these situations and to inquire whether they will affect the owner's title to the goods.

Buyer in possession

39-399

Section 25 of the Sale of Goods Act 1979 ²¹⁹⁰ provides that where a person "having bought or agreed to buy goods obtains, with the consent of the seller, possession of the goods", he may transfer a title to the goods to a third party who receives the same in good faith and without notice of the right of the original seller in respect of the goods. By virtue of this section the hirer of goods under a true hire-purchase agreement, which gives him an option to return or purchase the goods, can pass no title since, until he exercises his option to purchase, he has neither bought nor agreed to buy the goods. ²¹⁹¹

Seller in possession

39-400

Section 24 of the Sale of Goods Act 1979 ²¹⁹² provides that where a person, "having sold goods, continues, or is, in possession of the goods", he is similarly enabled to transfer a good title to a third party who receives the goods in good faith and without notice of the previous sale. It was at one time thought that a person who sold goods to a finance company, which then let the goods to him under a hire-purchase agreement, could pass no title to the goods even though they had never left his possession. He was considered to be in possession of the goods as bailee under the agreement, and not as seller under the contract of sale. ²¹⁹³ But in Pacific Motor Auctions (Pty) Ltd v Motor Credits (Hire-Finance) Ltd ²¹⁹⁴ the Privy Council held that the subsection applied unless there was a break in the continuity of the physical possession of the seller ²¹⁹⁵ and that it was not sufficient for the seller to attorn to the buyer as bailee.

Mercantile agents

39-401

Section 2 of the Factors Act 1889 provides that where a mercantile agent ²¹⁹⁶ is, with the consent of the owner, in possession of goods, any sale, pledge or other disposition of the goods made by him when acting in the ordinary course of business as a mercantile agent shall be as valid as if he were expressly authorised by the owner of the goods to make the same. ²¹⁹⁷ Where goods are let to a mercantile agent under a hire-purchase agreement, this section will not normally apply, for he is in possession of the goods as hirer and not as mercantile agent. ²¹⁹⁸ But the position is otherwise if the hire-purchase agreement is part of a “stocking transaction” under which the mercantile agent keeps the goods for display and sale with the implied authority of the owner to dispose of the goods to his customers. ²¹⁹⁹

Dispositions of motor vehicles

39-402

Part III (ss.27 to 29) of the Hire-Purchase Act 1964 ²²⁰⁰ enables a hirer or a conditional buyer of a motor vehicle (referred to as “the debtor”) to pass a good title in certain circumstances to a third party. ²²⁰¹ It applies to all hire-purchase agreements, ²²⁰² even if the debtor is a body corporate. ²²⁰³ Part III prima facie applies “where a motor-vehicle ²²⁰⁴ has been let under a hire-purchase agreement, and, at a time before the property in the vehicle has become vested in the debtor ²²⁰⁵ he disposes ²²⁰⁶ of the vehicle to another person”. ²²⁰⁷ The debtor continues as such whether the agreement has before that time been terminated ²²⁰⁸ or not. This covers the situation where the terms of the agreement provide that, if the debtor disposes of, or attempts to dispose of, the vehicle, the agreement is ipso facto determined. Such a device cannot defeat the operation of the Act.

Trade or finance purchasers

39-403

The Act draws a distinction between a “trade or finance purchaser” (who does not acquire a good title) and a “private purchaser” (who acquires a good title if bona fide). A “trade or finance purchaser” is a purchaser ²²⁰⁹ who, at the time of the disposition made to him, carries on a business which consists, wholly or partly:

- (a) of purchasing motor vehicles for the purpose of offering or exposing them for sale; or
- (b) of providing finance by purchasing motor vehicles for the purpose of bailing or (in Scotland) hiring them under hire-purchase agreements or agreeing to sell them under conditional sale agreements.

A “private purchaser” means a purchaser who, at the time of the disposition made to him, does not carry on any such business. ²²¹⁰ Obvious examples of trade or finance purchasers are motor dealers and finance companies but the definition has been held to cover any financier that uses motor vehicles as security. ²²¹¹ No title passes to trade or finance purchasers, ²²¹² and they can only take advantage indirectly of the Act’s provisions, i.e. where they derive title from a bona fide private purchaser. ²²¹³

Situations covered

39-404

The circumstances in which a third party will acquire a good title to the goods are three in number:

First disposition to private purchaser39-405

First, where the disposition is to a private purchaser, and he is a purchaser of the motor vehicle in good faith and without notice of the hire-purchase agreement, the disposition has effect as if the title of the owner to the vehicle (the "creditor") had been vested in the debtor immediately before the disposition. ²²¹⁴ Thus if a motor vehicle is let under a hire-purchase agreement to A, who wrongfully disposes of it to B, a bona fide private purchaser, B will acquire a good title to the vehicle.

Subsequent disposition to private purchaser39-406

Secondly, if the first disposition of the vehicle is to a trade or finance purchaser (known as the original purchaser), then if the person who is the first private purchaser of the vehicle after that disposition is a purchaser in good faith and without notice of the hire-purchase agreement, the disposition to that private purchaser has effect as if the title of the creditor to the vehicle had been vested in the debtor immediately before he disposed of it to the original purchaser. ²²¹⁵ Thus if a motor vehicle is let under a hire-purchase agreement to A, who wrongfully disposes of it to B, a trade or finance purchaser, who then disposes of it to C, a bona fide private purchaser, C will acquire a good title to the vehicle. Even if the vehicle has passed through the hands of a number of trade or finance purchasers, the first bona fide private purchaser is protected. But if the first private purchaser is mala fide, ²²¹⁶ this provision does not apply so as to protect subsequent private purchasers in good faith.

Subsequent disposition to private purchaser under hire purchase agreement39-407

Thirdly, if, in the second instance mentioned above, the disposition whereby the first private purchaser becomes a purchaser of the vehicle in good faith and without notice of the hire-purchase agreement is itself a letting under a hire-purchase agreement, and the person who is the creditor in relation to that agreement disposes of the vehicle to the first private purchaser, or a person claiming under him, by way of transferring to him the property in the vehicle in pursuance of a provision in the agreement in that behalf, the first private purchaser can acquire a good title to the vehicle by reason of this transfer of property, whether he is then bona fide or not. ²²¹⁷ Suppose, therefore, that a motor vehicle is let under a hire-purchase agreement to A. A sells the vehicle to a finance company, which then lets it under a hire-purchase agreement to B. Provided that B was, at the time of the letting, a bona fide private purchaser, the letting under the hire-purchase agreement is a valid letting; and if, in pursuance of this agreement, the finance company transfers the property in the vehicle to B, he acquires a good title even though at the time the property is transferred he had been informed of the original hire-purchase agreement and so had notice thereof.

Good faith and notice39-408

The expression "in good faith" is not defined in the 1964 Act, but generally a purchaser is deemed to be in good faith when he acts honestly, whether he acts negligently or not. ²²¹⁸ The Act provides that he is to be taken to be a purchaser without notice of a hire-purchase agreement if, at the time of the disposition made to him, he has no actual notice that the vehicle is or was the subject of any such agreement. ²²¹⁹ Constructive notice is therefore insufficient.

Presumptions

39-409

Once it is proved in any proceedings (whether criminal or civil) relating to a motor vehicle (i) that the vehicle was let under a hire-purchase agreement; and (ii) that a person (whether a party to the proceedings or not) became a private purchaser of the vehicle in good faith and without notice of the hire-purchase agreement; certain rebuttable presumptions arise in favour of a litigant who seeks to rely on the protection conferred by Pt III of the 1964 Act. ²²²⁰ A litigant might otherwise find it difficult to prove the precise chain of dealings between himself and the debtor, or the state of mind of the parties to these transactions. The presumptions enable him to surmount these difficulties and to connect the links in the chain; but they do not apply where all the transactions are fully known. ²²²¹

Extent of protection

39-410

It is important to realise that the only persons who can claim the protection of Pt III of the 1964 Act are the first bona fide private purchaser and those who claim under such a purchaser. An intermediate trade or finance purchaser is not protected, and will be liable for wrongful interference to the true owner of the vehicle. ²²²² If the first private purchaser is mala fide, neither he nor any person claiming under him will be protected. ²²²³ And the liability of the debtor, both civil and criminal, remains. ²²²⁴

39-411

The third party does not obtain a guaranteed title, but only such title as, immediately before the disposition by the debtor, was vested in the person who was then the creditor in relation to the hire-purchase agreement. ²²²⁵ But the provisions of the Act operate without prejudice to the provisions of the Factors Acts or of any other enactment enabling the apparent owner of the goods to dispose of them as if he were the true owner. ²²²⁶

39-412

Part III of the 1964 Act leaves few loopholes of which the creditor could take advantage, except, possibly, if the hire-purchase agreement was completely void, e.g. for mistake as to the person. ²²²⁷ It is submitted that a bona fide private purchaser would not fail to acquire a good title merely because the agreement was voidable for fraud (even if subsequently avoided), ²²²⁸ or "void" for illegality, ²²²⁹ or unenforceable against the hirer by reason of the fact that it failed to satisfy the formal and other requirements laid down by the Consumer Credit Act 1974. ²²³⁰

Sale in market overt

39-413

Section 22(1) of the Sale of Goods Act 1979, which provided for the acquisition by the buyer of a good title to goods sold in market overt, has been repealed. ²²³¹

Estoppel against owner

39-414

The owner of goods comprised in a hire-purchase agreement will not be estopped from asserting his title to the goods by the mere fact that he has delivered possession of the goods to the hirer. ²²³² And in the case of a motor car let on hire-purchase, the delivery of the registration document to the hirer will raise no estoppel. ²²³³ Failure by a finance company to notify a central agency ²²³⁴ that keeps a record of hire-purchase transactions will not ordinarily give rise to an estoppel. ²²³⁵ However, if a finance company alters such an entry so as to represent that the agreement has been settled and that it no longer has title to the goods, this creates an estoppel precluding it from asserting its title in a claim for conversion. ²²³⁶

Estoppel against hirer

39-415

If a person who owns goods enters into an arrangement with a dealer to deceive a finance company, and signs and delivers to the dealer hire-purchase forms which either represent that the goods are the property of the dealer or that the dealer has the owner's authority to sell the goods to the company, the company will acquire a good title to the goods by estoppel. ²²³⁷ This title will prevail, not only against the owner of the goods, but also against his privies and assigns. ²²³⁸ Further, he will be precluded from denying the validity of the consequent hire-purchase agreement. However, even if the "hirer" is not privy to the representation of title made by the dealer, but merely provides the means for the dealer's fraud (as by signing the hire-purchase agreements in blank without examining them), he may still be bound, unless he can rely on a plea of non est factum. ²²³⁹

Recovery from third parties

39-416

If the goods come into the hands of a third party from whom the owner wishes to recover them, he must rely upon his rights of action in tort. Although an owner is entitled to retake his goods peaceably from a third party without title who refuses to deliver them up to him, ²²⁴⁰ any licence to enter premises contained in the agreement will not extend to this situation. ²²⁴¹ In practice, however, an owner will normally sue the third party for wrongful interference with the goods. ²²⁴² In the action, he must probably prove his right to immediate possession of the goods. ²²⁴³ The measure of damages is normally the value of the goods converted ²²⁴⁴; but where the unpaid balance of the hire-purchase price is less than the value of the goods, the measure of damages is limited to the loss which the owner has suffered. ²²⁴⁵

Rights of third party

39-417

Unless the disposition of the goods by the hirer to the third party constitutes an assignment to the third party of the hirer's rights under the contract, ²²⁴⁶ the third party cannot claim to exercise the hirer's option to purchase. His only remedy lies against the person from whom he himself obtained the goods. In the case of a sale of goods, the third party may recover the whole purchase price as money paid upon a consideration which has totally failed. ²²⁴⁷ Yet a sale by the hirer to a third party is not void, but at most voidable for fraud, so that if the "price" paid by the third party consists wholly or in part of chattels, the third party cannot recover the chattels from a person who buys them from the hirer in good faith and for value. ²²⁴⁸

Feeding title

39-418

Where the hirer, having parted with the goods, pays to the owner the balance of the instalments and exercises his option to purchase, the title so acquired may go to feed the previously defective titles of subsequent buyers and enure to their benefit. ²²⁴⁹ Except in the case of claims that are made before the option to purchase is exercised, there will be no total failure of consideration, nor even a breach of condition, but merely a breach of warranty. ²²⁵⁰

-
- ^{2186.} Modern Light Cars Ltd v Seals [1934] 1 K.B. 32; Staffs Motor Guarantee Ltd v British Wagon Co Ltd [1934] 2 K.B. 305; North General Wagon and Finance Co Ltd v Graham [1950] 2 K.B. 7; United Dominions Trust (Commercial) Ltd v Parkway Motors Ltd [1955] 1 W.L.R. 719.
- ^{2187.} Helby v Matthews [1895] A.C. 471; Belsize Motor Supply Co v Cox [1914] 1 K.B. 244.
- ^{2188.} Lewis v Thomas [1919] 1 K.B. 319.
- ^{2189.} Sale of Goods Act 1979 s.21(1); below, para.44-191.
- ^{2190.} Re-enacting s.9 of the Factors Act 1889 and replacing s.25(2) of the Sale of Goods Act 1893. See below, para.44-218.
- ^{2191.} Payne v Wilson [1895] 2 Q.B. 537; Helby v Matthews [1895] A.C. 471; Belsize Motor Supply Co v Cox [1914] 1 K.B. 244; Modern Light Cars Ltd v Seals [1934] 1 K.B. 32; United Dominions Trust (Commercial) Ltd v Parkway Motors Ltd [1955] 1 W.L.R. 719; Close Asset Finance Ltd v Care Graphics Machinery Ltd [2000] C.C.L.R. 43. But see Forthright Finance Ltd v Carlyle Finance Ltd [1997] 4 All E.R. 90.
- ^{2192.} Re-enacting s.8 of the Factors Act 1889 and replacing s.25(1) of the Sale of Goods Act 1893. See below, para.44-212.
- ^{2193.} Staffs Motor Guarantee Ltd v British Wagon Co Ltd [1934] 2 K.B. 305; Eastern Distributors Ltd v Goldring [1957] 2 Q.B. 600; Halfway Garage (Nottingham) v Lepley, The Guardian, February 8, 1964. Contrast Union Transport Finance Ltd v Ballardie [1937] 1 K.B. 510 (transaction a complete sham).
- ^{2194.} [1965] A.C. 867, followed in Worcester Works Finance Ltd v Cooden Engineering Co Ltd [1972] 1 Q.B. 210 CA.
- ^{2195.} Mitchell v Jones (1905) 24 N.Z.L.R. 932; Olds Discount Co Ltd v Krett [1940] 2 K.B. 117.
- ^{2196.} Defined in s.1 of the Act.
- ^{2197.} See above, paras 31-079—31-081; below, para.44-202.
- ^{2198.} Staffs Motor Guarantee Ltd v British Wagon Co Ltd [1934] 2 K.B. 305 at 313; Astley Industrial Trust v Miller [1968] 2 All E.R. 36; Belvoir Finance Co Ltd v Harold G Cole & Co Ltd [1969] 1 W.L.R. 1877.
- ^{2199.} St Margaret's Trust v Castle [1964] C.L.Y. 1685; Pacific Motor Auctions (Pty) Ltd v Motor Credits (Hire-Finance) Ltd, above. cf. Belvoir Finance Co Ltd v Harold G. Cole & Co Ltd [1969] 1 W.L.R. 1877.
- ^{2200.} As amended (from May 19, 1985: see SI 1983/1551 (c.44)) by s.192 of and Sch.4 para.22 to the Consumer Credit Act 1974. And note the amendment of s.27(5) (as so re-enacted) by the Sale of Goods Act 1979 s.63 and Sch.2. See Davies [1995] J.B.L. 36.
- ^{2201.} See below, paras 39-404 et seq.
- ^{2202.} Even if they fall outside the Consumer Credit Act 1974: see above, para.39-016.
- ^{2203.} Ford Motor Credit Co v Harmack [1972] C.L.Y. 1649.
- ^{2204.} Defined in s.29(1).

- 2205. Defined in s.29(4) and including the “statutory bailee” following the making of a time order under the Consumer Credit Act 1974 s.130(4). See also Ford Motor Credit Co v Harmack [1972] C.L.Y. 1649 (company hirer); Keeble v Combined Lease Finance Plc [1996] C.C.L.R. 63 CA (partners); Majid v TMV Finance [1999] C.L.Y. 2448 Cty Ct (agent).
- 2206. “Disposition” is defined in s.29(1) to mean “sale” or “hire-purchase”. In VFS Financial Services Ltd v JF Plant Tyres Ltd [2013] EWHC 346 (QB), [2013] 1 Lloyd’s Rep. 462 “sale” was given its normal meaning and hence did not cover a transfer in settlement of debts (as opposed to a transfer for money). See also Dodds v Yorkshire Bank Finance [1992] C.C.L.R. 92 CA, Kulkarni v Manor Credit (Davenham) Ltd [2010] EWCA Civ 69.
- 2207. s.27(1). “Person” includes a body corporate: Interpretation Act 1978 s.5 and Sch.1.
- 2208. s.29(2). See Chartered Trust Plc v Conlay [1998] C.L.Y. 2516 Cty Ct (termination held to include rescission for fraud).
- 2209. See s.29(3).
- 2210. s.29(2). A trade purchaser who purchases a vehicle for his own use does not thereby become a private purchaser: Stevenson v Beverley Bentinck Ltd [1976] 1 W.L.R. 483. But in GE Capital Bank Ltd v Rushton [2005] EWCA 1556, [2006] 1 W.L.R. 899 at [39] Moore-Bick L.J. stated that s.29(2) “is intended to direct attention not merely to the business of the purchaser immediately prior to and at the time of the disposition but also the purpose for which the vehicle is bought”.
- 2211. On the basis that such secured creditors fall within both s.29(2)(a) (in that a secured creditor sells the security on default) and s.29(2)(b) (sed quaere): Welcome Financial Services Ltd v Nine Regions Ltd (t/a Log Book Loans) [2010] 2 Lloyd’s Rep. 426 (loans secured against the borrower’s vehicle by means of a bill of sale).
- 2212. They are likely to consult one or more of the databases (HPI, Autocheck) that list outstanding hire-purchase and conditional sale agreements. See, Beale, Bridge, Gullifer and Lomnicka, The Law of Security and Title-Based Financing (2012), paras 9.26 et seq.
- 2213. cf. Soneco Ltd v Barcross Finance Ltd [1978] R.T.R. 444.
- 2214. s.27(2).
- 2215. s.27(3).
- 2216. For a presumption of good faith, see s.28(4).
- 2217. s.27(4).
- 2218. Dodds v Yorkshire Bank Finance [1992] C.C.L.R. 92 CA; GE Capital Bank Ltd v Rushton [2005] EWCA 1556, [2006] 1 W.L.R. 899; Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s.90; Sale of Goods Act 1979 s.61(3). cf. Mercantile Credit Co Ltd v Waugh (1978) 32 Hire Trading 16.
- 2219. Hire-Purchase Act 1964 s.29(3). See Barker v Bell [1971] 1 W.L.R. 983.
- 2220. s.28. See also s.28(5) (admission of facts) and Ford Motor Credit Co v Harmack [1972] C.L.Y. 1649.
- 2221. Soneco Ltd v Barcross Finance Ltd [1978] R.T.R. 444.
- 2222. s.27(6).
- 2223. Soneco Ltd v Barcross Finance Ltd, above.
- 2224. Soneco Ltd v Barcross Finance Ltd, above; Barber v NWS Bank Plc [1996] 1 W.L.R. 641; cf. Freeman v Walker [2001] EWCA 923, [2003] C.C.L.R. 4.

- 2225. s.29(5).
- 2226. s.27(5)(b) as amended by the Sale of Goods Act 1979 s.63 and Sch.2.
- 2227. See Vol.I, paras 3-036 et seq.; Moorgate Mercantile Co Ltd v Bowman (1974) 28 Hire Trading (No.2), at 25 Cty Ct. Shogun Finance Ltd v Hudson [2003] UKHL 62, [2003] 3 W.L.R. 586.
- 2228. See Vol.I, Ch.7; Chartered Trust Plc v Conlay [1998] C.L.Y. 2516 Cty Ct; Chartered Trust Plc v Bamford [1999] C.L.Y. 2512 Cty Ct. Contrast Morley v Maybray Motors Ltd (1971) 25 Hire Trading (No.3) 15 Cty Ct; Cawston v Chartered Trust Plc [2002] C.L.Y. 2602 Cty Ct.
- 2229. See Vol.I, Ch.16. But see Morley v Maybray Motors Ltd, above.
- 2230. See above, paras 39-076—39-094. See R. v Modupe [1991] Crim. L.R. 531; Hitchens v General Guarantee Corp Ltd [2001] EWCA Civ 359.
- 2231. Sale of Goods (Amendment) Act 1994 (as from January 3, 1995); see below, para.44-205.
- 2232. Heap v Motorists Advisory Agency Ltd [1923] 1 K.B. 577; Central Newbury Car Auctions Ltd v Unity Finance Ltd [1957] 1 Q.B. 371, 388; Astley Industrial Trust v Miller [1968] 2 All E.R. 36; see below, para.44-195.
- 2233. Central Newbury Car Auctions Ltd v Unity Finance Ltd [1957] 1 Q.B. 371, 388.
- 2234. Such as HPI Ltd or Autocheck.
- 2235. Moorgate Mercantile Co Ltd v Twitchings [1977] A.C. 890; United Dominions Trust (Commercial) Ltd v Cartwright [1961] C.L.Y. 3925 CA. See also Cadogan Finance Ltd v Lavery and Fox [1982] Com. L.R. 248 (aircraft).
- 2236. Chatfields-Martin Walter Ltd v Lombard North Central Plc [2014] EWHC 1222 (QB) (Moorgate Mercantile Co Ltd v Twitchings distinguished).
- 2237. Eastern Distributors Ltd v Goldring [1957] 2 Q.B. 600; Spencer v North Country Finance Co Ltd [1963] C.L.Y. 212; Stoneleigh Finance Ltd v Phillips [1965] 2 Q.B. 537; Kingsley v Sterling Industrial Securities Ltd [1967] 2 Q.B. 747; Snook v London and West Riding Investments Ltd [1967] 2 Q.B. 786. See below, para.44-197.
- 2238. Eastern Distributors Ltd v Goldring [1957] 2 Q.B. 600.
- 2239. United Dominions Trust Ltd v Western [1976] Q.B. 513. cf. Mercantile Credit Co Ltd v Hamblin [1965] 2 Q.B. 242. See also Saunders v Anglia Building Society [1971] A.C. 1004 (Vol.I, paras 3-049 et seq.).
- 2240. cf. Greenwood v Bennett [1973] 1 Q.B. 195; and Thomas v Robinson [1977] 1 N.Z.L.R. 385 (improvements).
- 2241. See above, para.39-340. See also Miller v Strohmenger (1887) 4 T.L.R. 133; British Economical Lamp Co Ltd v Empire (Mile End) Ltd (1913) 29 T.L.R. 386.
- 2242. Torts (Interference with Goods) Act 1977 ss.1, 3. See CPR Pt 16 PD 16 6.1.
- 2243. Belsize Motor Supply Co v Cox [1914] 1 K.B. 244; and see above, para.39-333. cf. North West Securities v Alexander Breckon [1981] R.T.R. 518.
- 2244. See Chubb Cash Ltd v John Crilley & Son [1983] 1 W.L.R. 599. In addition the owner may recover consequential loss: see Strand Electric and Engineering Co Ltd v Brisford Entertainments Ltd [1952] 2 Q.B. 246; Hillesden Securities Ltd v Ryjack [1983] 1 W.L.R. 959 (hire charges). But see the Torts (Interference with Goods) Act s.6 (improvements).

- 2245. Belsize Motor Supply Co v Cox [1914] 1 K.B. 244; Whiteley Ltd v Hilt [1918] 2 K.B. 808; Wickham Holdings Ltd v Brooke House Motors Ltd [1967] 1 W.L.R. 295; Belvoir Finance Co Ltd v Stapleton [1971] 1 Q.B. 210. cf. Astley Industrial Trust v Miller [1968] 2 All E.R. 36 (detinue). See also Torts (Interference with Goods) Act s.3(6).
- 2246. See above, para.39-397.
- 2247. Butterworth v Kingsway Motors [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1286. See also Rowland v Divall [1923] 2 K.B. 500; Bowmaker (Commercial) Ltd v Day [1965] 1 W.L.R. 1396; below, para.44-081.
- 2248. Robin and Rambler Coaches Ltd v Turner [1947] 2 All E.R. 284.
- 2249. Butterworth v Kingsway Motors [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1286. See also Blundell-Leigh v Attenborough [1921] 3 K.B. 235. Contrast Karflex Ltd v Poole [1933] 2 K.B. 251; Mercantile Union Guarantee Corp Ltd v Wheatley [1938] 1 K.B. 490; West (HW) Ltd v McBlain [1950] N.I. 144.
- 2250. Butterworth v Kingsway Motors [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1286.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 39 - Credit and Security
Section 3. - Hire-Purchase Agreements
(e) - Rights and Liabilities of Third Parties
(iii) - Fixtures and Accession

Fixtures to land 2251

39-419

The owner of goods let on hire-purchase may lose the property in the goods by reason of the fact that they have been so attached to land as to become a fixture. 2252 The mere fact that the goods attached are let under a hire-purchase agreement does not in itself prevent them from becoming fixtures, nor does an express prohibition in the hire-purchase agreement against attaching the goods to land. 2253 The owner may nevertheless, as against the hirer, validly reserve the right to enter and seize the goods affixed. 2254 Such a right of entry and seizure creates an equitable interest in land. 2255 This interest is important because it may bind third parties such as a mortgagee of the hirer. The respective rights of a mortgagee of the hirer and the owner of the goods will depend on whether the mortgage was created before or after the goods were affixed to the mortgaged land and whether the mortgage is legal or equitable. Prima facie the mortgagee, if he has registered his mortgage, is entitled to the goods as fixtures. But, where the mortgage is a legal mortgage and was created before the goods were affixed, the owner of the goods will have priority if the goods let on hire are trade fixtures, since by leaving the mortgagor (the hirer) in possession a legal 2256 mortgagee impliedly authorises 2257 him to hire and bring and fix goods necessary for his business and to agree with their owner that he shall have the right to remove them at the end of the term for which they were hired. 2258 Where the mortgage is created after the goods are affixed, then the owner of the goods will have priority only if (i) the mortgage is equitable 2259, or (ii) the mortgage is a legal mortgage of unregistered land 2260; and the mortgagee took the mortgage with actual notice that the fixtures were the subject of a hire-purchase agreement. 2261

39-420

As against a landlord of the hirer, it would seem that the owner of goods let to a tenant and which have become tenant's fixtures may enter the premises and remove them if and so long as the hirer would himself as tenant be entitled to sever the fixtures and remove them. 2262

Accession

39-421

Goods let on hire-purchase which are attached to, or combined with, goods which are the property of another person may be affected by the common law principles of accession and confusion of chattels. 2263 If livestock let on hire-purchase produce young, in the absence of any contrary agreement, the young belong to the hirer and not to the owner of the dams. 2264

- 2251. See generally: Goode, Hire-Purchase Law and Practice, 2nd edn, Ch.32; Guest, The Law of Hire-Purchase (1966) Ch.18; Guest and Lever (1963) 27 Conv. N.S. 30; Giddings (1993) Butterworths Journal of International Banking and Financial Law (June) 263; Bennett and Davis (1994) 110 L.Q.R. 448.
- 2252. Melluish v BMI (No.3) Ltd [1996] A.C. 454.
- 2253. Hobson v Gorringe [1897] 1 Ch. 182, 193, 195; Reynolds v Ashby & Son Ltd [1903] 1 K.B. 87, 97; affirmed [1904] A.C. 466. See also Gough v Wood & Co [1894] 1 Q.B. 713; Crossley Bros Ltd v Lee [1908] 1 K.B. 86; Ellis v Glover & Hobson Ltd [1908] 1 K.B. 388, 398; Vaudeville Electric Cinema Ltd v Muriset [1923] 2 Ch. 74, 87. Contrast Lyon & Co v London City and Midland Bank [1903] 2 K.B. 135 (hire).
- 2254. But such a right is excluded in the case of CCA1974-regulated agreements by CCA 1974 ss.92, 173(1), above, para.39-366.
- 2255. Gough v Wood & Co [1894] 1 Q.B. 713 at 722; Hobson v Gorringe [1897] 1 Ch. 182 at 192; Reynolds v Ashby & Son Ltd [1903] 1 K.B. 87 at 101; Re Samuel Allen & Sons Ltd [1907] 1 Ch. 575; Re Morrison, Jones & Taylor Ltd [1914] 1 Ch. 50; Harmer v London City and Midland Bank Ltd (1918) 87 L.J.K.B. 973. The interest is not registrable: Poster v Slough Estates Ltd [1969] 1 Ch. 495; Shiloh Spinners Ltd v Harding [1973] A.C. 631.
- 2256. But not an equitable mortgagee, since the mortgagor then remains in possession as of right.
- 2257. But the implied authority will be negated where the mortgage expressly prohibits the removal of fixtures; Ellis v Glover & Hobson Ltd [1908] 1 K.B. 388.
- 2258. Gough v Wood & Co [1894] 1 Q.B. 713 at 720; Huddersfield Banking Co Ltd v Henry Lister & Son Ltd [1895] 2 Ch. 273. See also Ellis v Glover & Hobson Ltd [1897] 1 Ch. 182 at 396. But the right to enter, sever and remove the fixture ends when the mortgagee takes possession of the mortgaged land: Hobson v Gorringe [1897] 1 Ch. 182 at 189; Reynolds v Ashby & Son Ltd [1903] 1 K.B. 87.
- 2259. See Meux v Jacobs (1873) L.R. 7 H.L. 481 (bill of sale).
- 2260. Because the right to enter and remove fixtures is not registrable, a mortgagee of registered land will not be bound by it even with express notice.
- 2261. Gough v Wood & Co [1894] 1 Q.B. 713 at 717, 722; Hobson v Gorringe [1897] 1 Ch. 182 at 192; Reynolds v Ashby & Son Ltd [1903] 1 K.B. 87 at 101; Re Samuel Allen & Sons Ltd [1907] 1 Ch. 575 at 581; Re Morrison, Jones & Taylor Ltd [1914] 1 Ch. 50 at 59.
- 2262. Crossley Bros Ltd v Lee [1908] 1 K.B. 86; Becker v Riebold (1913) 30 T.L.R. 142. See Goode, Hire-Purchase Law and Practice, 2nd edn (1975) at p.736; Guest, The Law of Hire-Purchase (1966) at p.960. See also the Agricultural Holdings Act 1986 s.10: tenant's right to remove fixtures.
- 2263. Guest (1964) 27 M.L.R. 505; Matthews [1981] C.L.J. 340; Matthews [1981] C.L.P. 159. See Thomas v Robinson [1977] 1 N.Z.L.R. 385.
- 2264. Tucker v Farm and General Investment Trust Ltd [1966] 2 Q.B. 244.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 39 - Credit and Security
Section 3. - Hire-Purchase Agreements
(e) - Rights and Liabilities of Third Parties
(iv) - Liens

Liens

39-422

Certain classes of persons, such as innkeepers, ²²⁶⁵ artificers ²²⁶⁶ and common carriers ²²⁶⁷ are entitled to a lien on goods owned by one person until a debt owed to them by another person has been paid. ²²⁶⁸ The hirer of goods let under a hire-purchase agreement may allow the goods to pass into the possession of such persons with the result that the owner of the goods, when he seeks to retake them, may be met by the claim of a lien. Cases concerning hire-purchase agreements have mainly been decided in relation to the lien of artificers for repairs executed to the goods comprised in the agreement.

Authority to create lien

39-423

A hirer can create a lien binding on the owner of the goods if he has actual or ostensible authority to do so. ²²⁶⁹ He will have actual authority to create a lien if:

- (i)
the owner specifically authorised him to give possession of the goods to an artificer for repair; or
- (ii)
the terms of the agreement are such that the owner must have envisaged the possibility of the creation of a lien, for example, by requiring the hirer to keep the goods in repair; or
- (iii)
it is reasonably incidental to the ordinary use of the goods that the hirer should give possession of them to an artificer for the purpose of repair. ²²⁷⁰

But even if the actual authority of the hirer to create a lien is excluded by an express term of the agreement, he may still have ostensible authority to do so. ²²⁷¹ In order, however, to create an artificer's lien, the hirer must be in lawful possession of the goods, so that, if the hiring has come to an end, no lien can arise which is binding on the owner. ²²⁷²

Determination of lien

39-424

The existence of the lien is dependent on the repairer continuing in possession of the goods ²²⁷³; but a temporary loss of possession, as where the hirer takes the goods out each day to use them, does not determine the lien. ²²⁷⁴

Power of sale

39-425

At common law, an artificer is not entitled to sell the goods over which he exercises a lien. ²²⁷⁵ But under the Torts (Interference with Goods) Act 1977, a bailee of uncollected goods is empowered to sell the goods upon compliance with certain conditions. ²²⁷⁶ Except where it is authorised by the court, ²²⁷⁷ the sale does not deprive the owner of his property in the goods. But the bailee is placed under a duty to return to the hirer, rather than to the owner, the amount by which the gross proceeds of sale exceed his charges in relation to the goods. ²²⁷⁸

²²⁶⁵. An innkeeper has a lien over all goods brought by a guest to his inn even though the goods are the property of a third party: Threlfall v Borwick (1875) L.R. 10 Q.B. 210; Robins & Co v Gray [1895] 2 Q.B. 501; Chesham Automobile Supply Ltd v Beresford Hotel (Birchington) Ltd (1913) 29 T.L.R. 584. See also Hotel Proprietors Act 1956 (extent of lien); Innkeepers Act 1878 s.3 (power of sale). See above, para.33-101.

²²⁶⁶. See below, paras 39-422—39-424.

²²⁶⁷. Exeter Carriers' Case, cited in Yorke v Grenaugh (1702) 2 Ld.Raym. 866, 867; see above, para.36-052. cf. Singer Manufacturing Co v L & SW Ry [1894] 1 Q.B. 833, where the railway probably held the goods as warehousemen, and not as carriers.

²²⁶⁸. See Halsbury's Laws of England, 4th edn, Vol.28, Title "Lien". See also Beale, Bridge, Gullifer and Lomnicka, The Law of Security and Title-Based Financing (2012), Ch.5B (possessory liens).

²²⁶⁹. Tappenden v Artus [1964] 2 Q.B. 185. Contrast Hiscox v Greenwood (1802) 4 Especialty 174; Buxton v Baughan (1834) 6 C. & P. 674; Pennington v Reliance Motor Works [1923] 1 K.B. 127 (no authority).

²²⁷⁰. Keene v Thomas [1905] 1 K.B. 136; Green v All Motors Ltd [1917] 1 K.B. 625; Albemarle Supply Co Ltd v Hind & Co [1928] 1 K.B. 307; Tappenden v Artus [1964] 2 Q.B. 185.

²²⁷¹. Albemarle Supply Co Ltd v Hind & Co [1928] 1 K.B. 307, where the artificer had knowledge of the hire-purchase agreement, but not of its terms.

²²⁷². Bowmaker Ltd v Wycombe Motors Ltd [1946] K.B. 505. Contrast Keene v Thomas [1905] 1 K.B. 136; Green v All Motors Ltd [1917] 1 K.B. 625 (mere breach of agreement).

²²⁷³. Pennington v Reliance Motor Works [1923] 1 K.B. 127.

²²⁷⁴. Albemarle Supply Co Ltd v Hind & Co [1928] 1 K.B. 307.

²²⁷⁵. Thames Iron Works Co v Patent Derrick Co (1860) 1 J. & H. 93. But see CPR Pt 25.

²²⁷⁶. s.12. See above, paras 33-095—33-099.

2277. s.13(2).

2278. s.12(5).

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 39 - Credit and Security
Section 3. - Hire-Purchase Agreements
(e) - Rights and Liabilities of Third Parties
(v) - Execution

Execution39-426

Goods which are in the possession of a hirer under a hire-purchase agreement may be seized in execution against him, and his interest therein sold; but the general property in the goods cannot be disposed of by the person charged with the enforcement of a writ or warrant of execution. ²²⁷⁹ If the hirer has no interest in the goods, or if his interest determines before or upon seizure in execution, the seizure will be unlawful. ²²⁸⁰ Nevertheless, a certain measure of protection is afforded to sheriffs and other officers by the Courts Act 2003. ²²⁸¹ Where such protection exists, the remedy of the owner is to bring an action against the execution creditor to recover the proceeds of sale. ²²⁸² A purchaser who buys the goods obtains a good title to them unless it is proved that he had notice, or might by making reasonable enquiry have ascertained, that the goods were not the property of the execution debtor. ²²⁸³

Distress39-427

A landlord's power at common law to distrain upon all goods found upon the demised premises has now been abolished. ²²⁸⁴ Historically, the position in relation to hire-purchase was complex. Essentially, in order to bring himself within the general protection from distress provided for goods of third parties ²²⁸⁵ the owner had to both (a) provide for the termination of the agreement, either automatically ²²⁸⁶ or by notice to the hirer, ²²⁸⁷ before or upon the levying of distress by the landlord ²²⁸⁸ and (b) effectively notify the hirer, before the landlord levied distress, of the withdrawal of his consent to the hirer's being in possession of the goods. ²²⁸⁹

^{2279.} Dean v Whittaker (1824) 1 C. & P. 347.

^{2280.} Jelks v Hayward [1905] 2 K.B. 460. But see Consumer Credit Act 1974 s.98, above, para.39-172.

^{2281.} Sch.7 para.11 (previously the Supreme Courts Act 1981 s.138B(1), inserted by s.1(2) of and Sch.2 to the Statute Law (Repeals) Act 1989).

^{2282.} Jones Brothers (Holloway) Ltd v Woodhouse [1923] 2 K.B. 117.

^{2283.} Courts Act 2003 Sch.7 para.11(2) (previously Supreme Courts Act 1981 s.138B(1), inserted by s.1(2) and Sch.2 of the Statute Law (Repeals) Act 1989). On similar statutory provisions, see Curtis v Maloney [1951] 1 K.B. 736; Singh v Kenyan Insurance [1954] A.C. 287.

2284. By the Tribunals Courts and Enforcement Act 2007 s.71 (from April 6, 2014).

2285. Provided by the (now repealed) Law of Distress Amendment Act 1908 s.4.

2286. Times Furnishing Co Ltd v Hutchings [1938] 1 K.B. 775. But see Consumer Credit Act 1974 s.98, above, para.39-172.

2287. Smart Bros Ltd v Holt [1929] 2 K.B. 303. See also Consumer Credit Act 1974 s.98, above, para.39-172.

2288. Because “goods bailed under a hire-purchase agreement” where the relevant agreement had not been terminated were excluded from protection by the (now repealed) Law of Distress Amendment Act 1908 s.4A. Hence the owner’s rights could be overridden by the landlord: see Hackney Furnishing Co v Watts [1912] 3 K.B. 225; Jay’s Furnishing Co v Brand & Co [1915] 1 K.B. 458 (decided on the previous wording “goods comprised in any hire-purchase agreement made by such tenant” in s.4(1) of the 1908 Act). This was so even if some other person (not the tenant) was the hirer: contrast Shenstone v Freeman [1910] 2 K.B. 84; Rogers, Eungblut & Co v Martin [1911] K.B. 19 (decided on the previous wording in s.4(1) of the 1908 Act). But where a default notice was required to be served (under the Consumer Credit Act 1974 s.87(1)) before the owner termination (see above, para.39-166) the statutory protection of the 1908 Act was not excluded during the period between the service of the default notice and the date on which the notice expired or was earlier complied with: s.4A(1) of the 1908 Act.

2289. Because the general protection for third party goods was lost where the tenant was the “reputed owner” of them, even if the agreement was terminated (see Times Furnishing Co Ltd v Hutchings [1938] 1 K.B. 775). See Smart Bros Ltd v Holt [1929] 2 K.B. 303; Drages Ltd v Owen (1935) 52 T.L.R. 108; Perdana Properties Bhd v United Orient Leasing Co Sdn Bhd [1981] 1 W.L.R. 1496.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 39 - Credit and Security
Section 3. - Hire-Purchase Agreements
(e) - Rights and Liabilities of Third Parties
(vi) - Insolvency

Bankruptcy of hirer

39-428

The estate ²²⁹⁰ of a bankrupt hirer vests in the trustee in bankruptcy immediately on his appointment taking effect or, in the case of the official receiver, on his becoming trustee. ²²⁹¹ Most hire-purchase agreements, however, provide that, if a bankruptcy order is made against the hirer or the hirer petitions for his own bankruptcy, then either the hire-purchase agreement and the hiring are forthwith and automatically to come to an end ²²⁹² or the owner is entitled to terminate the agreement. Once the agreement so terminates, it would seem that the hirer will have no interest in the goods or in the agreement which could pass to his trustee in bankruptcy. ²²⁹³

39-429

There is no longer any "reputed ownership" provision, such as once existed in the Bankruptcy Act 1914, ²²⁹⁴ whereby the trustee was entitled to claim goods in the reputed ownership of the bankrupt. But, if the trustee seizes or disposes of any property which is not comprised in the bankrupt's estate, and at the time of the seizure or disposal the trustee believes and has reasonable grounds for believing that he is entitled to seize or dispose of that property, the trustee is not liable to any person in respect of any loss or damage resulting from the seizure or disposal except insofar as that loss or damage is caused by the negligence of the trustee. ²²⁹⁵

39-430

The trustee may disclaim any unprofitable contract. ²²⁹⁶

Winding-up or receivership of hirer

39-431

Where the hirer is a company, the hire-purchase agreement again normally provides for its automatic determination or termination by the owner in the event of a winding-up petition being presented against the hirer or the hirer passing a resolution for voluntary winding-up. The hirer company will, after termination, have no interest in the goods which can vest in the liquidator. ²²⁹⁷ The same applies where an administrative receiver is appointed. ²²⁹⁸

39-432

A liquidator may disclaim any unprofitable contract. ²²⁹⁹

Administration ²³⁰⁰39-433

Where an administration application in respect of a company has been made, no step may be taken to repossess goods in the company's possession under any hire-purchase agreement, ²³⁰¹ except with permission of the court. ²³⁰² Further, during the period while the company is in administration, no step may be taken to repossess goods in the company's possession under any hire-purchase agreement, ²³⁰³ except with the consent of the administrator or the permission of the court. ²³⁰⁴ A moratorium or "freeze" is thus imposed on the owner's right of repossession. On an application by the administrator, the court may, if it is satisfied that the disposal of the goods would be likely to promote the purpose of administration in respect of the company, enable the administrator to dispose of the goods as if all rights of the owner under the agreement were vested in the company. ²³⁰⁵ The administrator may thus overreach the property rights of the owner in the goods. Some protection is, however, afforded to the owner in that the net proceeds of the disposal ²³⁰⁶ are required to be applied towards discharging the sums payable under the hire-purchase agreement. ²³⁰⁷

Voluntary arrangements

39-434

A similar moratorium against repossession of goods in a company's possession under a hire-purchase agreement can be obtained by the directors of the company where they propose a voluntary arrangement under Pt I of the Insolvency Act 1986. ²³⁰⁸ This facility is, however, restricted to "eligible companies", that is to say small companies (with certain exceptions). ²³⁰⁹

^{2290.} See Insolvency Act 1986 s.283.

^{2291.} Insolvency Act 1986 s.306.

^{2292.} This is not permissible where the agreement is a regulated agreement under the Consumer Credit Act 1974: see CCA 1974 s.98(1), above, para.39-172.

^{2293.} Crawcour v Salter (1881) 18 Ch. D. 30; McEntire v Crossley Bros Ltd [1895] A.C. 457; Re Apex Supply Co Ltd [1942] Ch. 108. Contrast Re Piggin, Dicker v Lombank (1962) 112 L.J. 424.

^{2294.} s.38(c).

^{2295.} Insolvency Act 1986 s.304(3). And the trustee has a lien on the property or its proceeds of sale for expenses in connection with the seizure or disposal.

^{2296.} Insolvency Act 1986 s.315.

^{2297.} Under s.145 of the Insolvency Act 1986 or otherwise.

^{2298.} But see above, para.39-343 (relief against forfeiture) and Re Piggin, Dicker v Lombank (1962) 112 L.J. 424. See also Lipe Ltd v Leyland DAF Ltd [1993] B.C.C. 385 (conditional sale agreement).

^{2299.} Insolvency Act 1986 s.178.

^{2300.} Sch.B1 to the Insolvency Act 1986 was inserted by s.248 and Sch.16 to the Enterprise Act 2002 and replaces Insolvency Act 1986 Pt II.

^{2301.} This includes conditional sale agreements and chattel leasing agreements and retention of title agreements: Sch.B1 para.111(1).

2302. Insolvency Act 1986 Sch.B1 para.44.

2303. See n.2299, above.

2304. Insolvency Act 1986 Sch.B1 para.43.

2305. Insolvency Act 1986 Sch.B1 para.72(1).

2306. In the event of a shortfall in the proceeds below the open market value of the goods, an additional amount may be added to make good the deficiency: Sch.B1 para.72(3).

2307. Insolvency Act 1986 Sch.B1 para.72.

2308. Insolvency Act 1986 s.1A and Sch.A1, inserted by the Insolvency Act 2000 s.1.

2309. Insolvency Act 1986 Sch.A1 para.2.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 39 - Credit and Security

Section 3. - Hire-Purchase Agreements

(f) - Miscellaneous Restrictions

Control of hire-purchase finance

39-435

The disposition of goods on hire-purchase terms can be controlled by orders made in pursuance of powers conferred by the Emergency Laws (Re-enactments and Repeals) Act 1964. ²³¹⁰ Historically, the orders made restricted the credit facilities offered by hire-purchase, conditional sale and credit-sale transactions relating to consumer goods by laying down minimum payments to be made before the contract was entered into and by limiting the time over which the instalments might be spread. All such orders have now been revoked, ²³¹¹ but the Act remains in force in this respect.

Reserve and auxiliary forces

39-436

By the Reserve and Auxiliary Forces (Protection of Civil Interests) Act 1951 ²³¹² wide discretionary powers are conferred upon the court in respect of hire-purchase and conditional sale agreements entered into by members of the reserve and auxiliary forces. It may be necessary to obtain leave of the court before retaking possession of the goods or before enforcing any judgment against such a hirer. ²³¹³ The court may even make an order restoring the goods to the hirer where the owner has taken possession of them. ²³¹⁴

Consumer protection

39-437

Part I of the Consumer Protection Act 1987 ²³¹⁵ imposes strict liability in respect of defective (i.e. unsafe) products, and Pt II of the Act ²³¹⁶ empowers the Secretary of State to make safety regulations, ²³¹⁷ to serve "prohibition notices", "suspension notices" and "notices to warn" in respect of unsafe goods. References in the Act to supplying goods include entering into a hire-purchase agreement to furnish the goods. ²³¹⁸

Enterprise Act 2002

39-438

The provisions of Pt 8 of the Enterprise Act 2002 ²³¹⁹ relating to the enforcement of certain consumer legislation extend to the supply of goods under a hire-purchase agreement, a credit sale agreement or a conditional sale agreement. ²³²⁰

- 2310. As amended by s.192 of and Sch.4 para.23, to the Consumer Credit Act 1974 from May 19, 1985: see SI 1983/1551 (c.44).
- 2311. By SI 1982/1034.
- 2312. As amended by s.192 of and Sch.4 paras 12, 13, to the Consumer Credit Act 1974 from May 19, 1985: SI 1983/1551 (c.44).
- 2313. Reserve and Auxiliary Forces Act 1951 s.2. cf. Smart Bros Ltd v Ross [1943] A.C. 84.
- 2314. Reserve and Auxiliary Forces Act 1951 s.4.
- 2315. Consumer Protection Act 1987 ss.1–9; below, paras 44-449 et seq. Pt III (dealing with misleading price indications) was repealed by the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1277) reg.30(1) and Sch.2 para.34.
- 2316. ss.11–19; below, para.44-464.
- 2317. For details of the regulations made, see Miller, Product Liability and Safety Encyclopedia (1991, looseleaf), IV. See also the General Product Safety Regulations 2005 (SI 2005/1803).
- 2318. s.46(1)(b). But where a finance company acquires the goods from a dealer in order to finance their acquisition by a consumer, it is the dealer not the finance company that is regarded as supplying the goods for the purposes of liability: s.46(2).
- 2319. ss.210–236.
- 2320. See above, paras 38-128 et seq.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 39 - Credit and Security
Section 4. - Conditional Sale Agreements

Conditional sale of goods

39-439

A contract of sale of goods may be absolute or conditional. ²³²¹ An agreement to sell ²³²² goods may therefore be made subject to a condition that the transfer of property from the seller to the buyer is to take place only when the total price of the goods has been paid and that, until that time, although possession of the goods is to be delivered to the buyer, they are to remain the property of the seller. As an instrument of instalment credit, a conditional sale agreement closely resembles a hire-purchase agreement. ²³²³ But it differs from a hire-purchase agreement in that the buyer is bound under the terms of the agreement to purchase the goods ²³²⁴ and does not (as in the case of a hire-purchase agreement) hire the goods with an option to purchase them. ²³²⁵

Remedies of seller

39-440

Conditional sale agreements invariably contain a provision for termination of the agreement and resumption of possession of the goods by the seller in the event of the buyer's default in the payment of instalments and of other contingencies, e.g. bankruptcy of the buyer. ²³²⁶ But it has been held that, in the absence of a stipulation to the contrary, the repossession of the goods by the seller determines the agreement and the seller thereby abandons his right to recover from the buyer or any guarantor ²³²⁷ the arrears of instalments remaining unpaid, but accrued due, before he repossessed the goods. ²³²⁸ This, of course, is not so in the case of hire-purchase agreements. ²³²⁹ But it would seem that the seller could recover an equivalent sum as damages for breach of contract. ²³³⁰ Certain conditional sale agreements further provide, as an alternative to termination and repossession, that the seller may elect to pass the property in the goods to the buyer and recover from the buyer the unpaid balance of the purchase price of the goods.

Conditional sale of land

39-441

A modern phenomenon has been the appearance of conditional sales of land, especially of dwelling-houses, with a provision in the agreement for resumption of possession by the seller in the event of non-payment of instalments of the purchase price. ²³³¹

Definition

39-442

A conditional sale agreement is defined in the consumer credit regulatory regime ²³³² to mean "an agreement for the sale of goods or land under which the purchase price or part of it is payable by instalments and the property in the goods or land is to remain in the seller (notwithstanding that the buyer is to be in possession of the goods or land) until such conditions as to the payment of instalments or otherwise as may be specified in the agreement are fulfilled". It will be noted that this definition embraces land ²³³³ as well as goods.

Scope of regulation

39-443

A conditional sale agreement is a consumer credit agreement, for fixed-sum credit, ²³³⁴ if the debtor, i.e. the buyer, is an individual. ²³³⁵ The agreement will be a regulated credit agreement unless it is an exempt agreement. ²³³⁶ A regulated conditional sale agreement is a debtor-creditorsupplier agreement ²³³⁷ for restricted-use credit. ²³³⁸

39-444

Unlike a credit-sale agreement, ²³³⁹ a conditional sale agreement under £50 cannot be a "small agreement". ²³⁴⁰

39-445

Authorisation is required to carry on a business involving consumer credit agreements (other than exempt agreements) ²³⁴¹ and the general provisions of the regulatory regime apply, ²³⁴² although there are certain provisions that apply in particular to regulated conditional sale agreements. ²³⁴³ Most of these provisions are equally applicable to hire-purchase agreements. ²³⁴⁴

Parties

39-446

In the regulatory regime, the seller under a conditional sale agreement is referred to as the "creditor" or "lender" and the buyer as the "debtor" or "borrower". ²³⁴⁵

Unfair relationships

39-447

The provisions of the Consumer Credit Act 1974 relating to "unfair relationships" apply to conditional sale agreements where the debtor is an individual. ²³⁴⁶

Protected goods

39-448

The concept of "protected goods" ²³⁴⁷ applies to a regulated conditional sale agreement as it does to a regulated hire-purchase agreement, ²³⁴⁸ provided that the property in the goods remains in the creditor. ²³⁴⁹

Entry on premises

39-449

The restriction placed upon entry on premises without an order of the court applies to a regulated conditional sale agreement as it does to a regulated hire-purchase agreement. ²³⁵⁰

Recovery of land

39-450

At any time when the debtor is in breach of a regulated conditional sale agreement relating to land, the creditor is entitled to recover possession of the land from the debtor, or any person claiming under him, on an order of the court only. 2351 Any clause to the contrary contained in the agreement is void 2352, but recovery of possession is permissible with the consent of the debtor given at the time. 2353 An entry in contravention of this prohibition is actionable as a breach of statutory duty. 2354

Right to terminate conditional sale agreement

39-451

The statutory right of the debtor under s.99 of the Consumer Credit Act 1974 to terminate the agreement (VTR) applies to a regulated conditional sale agreement as it does to a regulated hire-purchase agreement, 2355 except in the case of an agreement relating to land after the title to the land has passed to the debtor. 2356 The right to terminate is also taken away in the case of a conditional sale agreement relating to goods, where the property in the goods, having become vested in the debtor, is transferred to a person who does not become the debtor under the agreement. 2357 But otherwise the fact that the property in the goods has become vested in the debtor does not abrogate his right of termination. If, however, in those circumstances, the debtor does terminate the agreement, the property in the goods thereupon reverts in the person (the "previous owner") in whom it was vested immediately before it became vested in the debtor. 2358

Liability of debtor

39-452

The liability of the debtor on the exercise of his statutory right of termination is the same as in the case of a hire-purchase agreement. 2359

Time orders

39-453

The supplemental provisions relating to time orders in the case of hire-purchase agreements apply also in the case of conditional sale agreements. 2360

Return orders and transfer orders

39-454

The power of the court to make a return order or transfer order in respect of goods applies to a regulated conditional sale agreement. 2361

Adverse possession

39-455

The provisions of s.134 of the Consumer Credit Act 1974 relating to evidence of adverse possession of goods apply to conditional sale agreements. 2362

Title to goods

39-456

The terms about title implied on the part of the seller in any conditional sale agreement are those contained in s.12 of the Sale of Goods Act 1979, ²³⁶³ and these cannot be excluded. ²³⁶⁴ The Consumer Rights Act 2015 contains the relevant statutory terms for “consumer” contracts made on or after October 1, 2015. ²³⁶⁵

Defective goods

39-457

The terms as to quality, fitness for purpose, and correspondence with description and sample implied on the part of the seller in contracts of sale of goods by ss.13 to 15 of the Sale of Goods Act 1979 ²³⁶⁶ are implied in every conditional sale agreement. The Consumer Rights Act 2015 treats similar (but more expansive ²³⁶⁷) terms “as included” in “consumer” conditional sales contracts made on or after October 1, 2015, (the terms being the same as for hire-purchase agreements) ²³⁶⁸ and will confer extensive remedies for their breach. ²³⁶⁹ The exclusion of such implied terms and of the liability of the creditor for their breach are and will continue to be ineffective, either absolutely or subject to certain qualifications, the extent depending on whether they are “consumer” contracts or not. ²³⁷⁰

39-458

In relation to the term as to fitness for purpose implied by s.14(3) of the 1979 Act, ²³⁷¹ since under a conditional sale agreement the purchase price or part of it is payable by instalments, the particular purpose for which the goods are being bought may be made known, expressly or by implication, to the credit-broker ²³⁷² (e.g. to a dealer) by whom the goods have been previously sold to the seller, in order to satisfy the requirements of the subsection. ²³⁷³ Moreover, in order to displace the implied term, the seller has to prove that the circumstances show that the buyer did not rely, or that it was unreasonable for him to rely, on the skill or judgment both of the seller and of the credit-broker. ²³⁷⁴

Special provisions as to remedies

39-459

Section 11(4) of the Sale of Goods Act 1979 (whereby in certain circumstances a breach of condition in a contract of sale is treated only as a breach of warranty) ²³⁷⁵ presently does not apply to conditional sale agreements ²³⁷⁶ where the buyer deals as consumer. ²³⁷⁷ In this context, “dealing as consumer” has no connection with the Consumer Credit Act 1974, but refers to the definition of that expression in s.12 of the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977. ²³⁷⁸ Further, a breach of condition (whether express or implied) to be fulfilled by the seller under any such agreement is to be treated as a breach of warranty, and not as grounds for rejecting the goods and treating the agreement as repudiated, if (but only if) it would have fallen to be so treated had the condition been contained or implied in a corresponding hire-purchase agreement ²³⁷⁹ as a condition to be fulfilled by the owner. ²³⁸⁰

39-460

Where the buyer “deals as consumer” ²³⁸¹ and the goods do not conform to the contract of sale at the time of delivery, he will have the additional remedies of repair or replacement of the goods, reduction of the purchase price or rescission of the contract, ²³⁸² conferred by Pt 5A (ss.48A to 48F) of the Sale of Goods Act 1979. ²³⁸³ For contracts made on or after October 1, 2015, the Consumer Rights Act 2015 repeals ²³⁸⁴ and replaces these provisions (and extends them to hire-purchase agreements). ²³⁸⁵

Title of third parties

39-461

One of the most significant differences between a hire-purchase and a conditional sale agreement lies in the fact that a conditional buyer can pass a good title to a third party under s.25(1) of the Sale of Goods Act 1979. ²³⁸⁶ But, where a conditional sale agreement is a consumer credit agreement, ²³⁸⁷ the buyer is deemed not to be a person who has bought or agreed to buy goods ²³⁸⁸ and in consequence cannot pass a good title to a third party by virtue of that subsection. ²³⁸⁹ The provisions of Pt III of the Hire-Purchase Act 1964, ²³⁹⁰ which relate to the disposition of motor vehicles, nevertheless apply to motor vehicles that have been agreed to be sold under a conditional sale agreement ²³⁹¹ as they apply to motor vehicles which have been let under a hire-purchase agreement. ²³⁹² As a result, a conditional sale agreement now confers less security than a hire-purchase agreement vis-à-vis third parties only if the agreement is not a consumer credit agreement and either (i) the goods agreed to be sold do not consist of a motor vehicle; or (ii) they do consist of a motor vehicle, but the vehicle is wrongfully disposed of to a trade or finance purchaser (and not to a private purchaser) within the meaning of the Hire-Purchase Act 1964. ²³⁹³ In these situations a third party may acquire a good title from a buyer under a conditional sale agreement where he would not acquire one from a hirer under a hire-purchase agreement, but otherwise the security is identical.

Distress39-462

As noted above, a landlord's power at common law to distrain upon all goods found upon the demised premises has now been abolished. ²³⁹⁴

Miscellaneous restrictions39-463

The miscellaneous restrictions referred to in paras 39-406 to 39-409 of this chapter also apply to conditional sale agreements.

^{2321.} Sale of Goods Act 1979 s.2(3).

^{2322.} Sale of Goods Act 1979 s.2(5).

^{2323.} Conditional sale in many cases ousted hire-purchase because it was possible so to draft the agreement as to confer partial exemption from value added tax and to obtain tax relief on finance charges by turning them into interest. But the value added tax exemption was extended to hire-purchase and the tax relief on interest has been (to a great extent) withdrawn.

^{2324.} But see Consumer Credit Act 1974 s.99, below, para.39-451.

^{2325.} For the consequences, see below, para.39-461.

^{2326.} See below, para.39-448.

^{2327.} Hewison v Ricketts (1894) 63 L.J.Q.B. 711.

^{2328.} Hewison v Ricketts (1894) 63 L.J.Q.B. 711; Att-Gen v Pritchard (1928) 97 L.J.K.B. 561.

^{2329.} Brooks v Beirnsstein [1909] 1 K.B. 98; see above, para.39-340.

^{2330.} Att-Gen v Pritchard (1928) 97 L.J.K.B. 561; Taylor v Thompson [1930] W.N. 16.

- 2331. No doubt the object has been to avoid both the Rent Acts and the relief traditionally given to mortgagors of land. But see Starside Properties Ltd v Mustapha [1974] 1 W.L.R. 816.
- 2332. See Consumer Credit Act 1974 (“CCA 1974”) s.189(1) and the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (Regulated Activities) Order 2001 (SI 2001/544) (“RAO”) art.60L(1), as inserted by SI 2013/1881 art.6. This definition corresponds to that contained in (the now repealed) s.1(1) of the Hire-Purchase Act 1965, but is extended to land. See the similar definition of “conditional sales contract” (but not covering land) in the Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.5(3) (for the purposes of Pt 1 of that Act), above, para.38-454.
- 2333. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1).
- 2334. See above, para.39-026.
- 2335. See above, para.39-016.
- 2336. See above, para.39-017. The £25,000 ceiling in the “business purpose” exemption (see above, para.39-046) is calculated by taking the total amount payable under the agreement (less any deposit or initial payment paid), but subtracting any item in the total charge for credit such as credit charges or interest (as these are not “credit”: see above, para.39-059).
- 2337. See above, para.39-030.
- 2338. See above, para.39-027.
- 2339. See below, para.39-464.
- 2340. CCA 1974 s.17(1)(a). But a hire-purchase agreement similarly cannot qualify as a “small agreement”, see above, para.39-357.
- 2341. See above, para.39-061.
- 2342. See above, paras 39-001—39-257.
- 2343. Especially CCA 1974 ss.90–92, 99–100, 129–130, 133–135.
- 2344. See above, paras 39-356—39-379.
- 2345. See above, para.39-018.
- 2346. CCA 1974 ss.140A–140C, paras 39-212 et seq.
- 2347. CCA 1974 s.90(7).
- 2348. CCA 1974 ss.90, 91. See above, para.39-361.
- 2349. CCA 1974 s.90(1)(c).
- 2350. CCA 1974 s.92(1); above, para.39-366.
- 2351. CCA 1974 s.92(2). See also CCA 1974 s.113(1), (2), (8).
- 2352. CCA 1974 s.173(1).
- 2353. CCA 1974 s.173(3).
- 2354. CCA 1974 s.92(3). See above, para.39-366.
- 2355. See above, para.39-367.

- 2356. CCA 1974 s.99(3).
- 2357. CCA 1974 s.99(4). See the definition of “debtor” in CCA 1974 s.189(1); above, para.39-018.
- 2358. CCA 1974 s.99(5) (i.e. normally in the creditor, and not in the dealer who negotiated the transaction). If the previous owner has died, or any other event has occurred whereby the property, if vested in him immediately before that event, would thereupon have vested in some other person, the property is to be treated as having devolved as if it had been vested in the previous owner immediately before that event, as the case may be: s.99(5), proviso.
- 2359. CCA 1974 s.100; see above, paras 39-368—39-372.
- 2360. CCA 1974 s.130(2), (4); see above, para.39-373.
- 2361. CCA 1974 s.133; above, paras 39-374—39-377 (including a suspended return order coupled with a time order: above, para.39-375).
- 2362. Above, para.39-379.
- 2363. Below, para.44-075.
- 2364. Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.6(1)(a). See below, para.44-085.
- 2365. See s.17, above, para.38-473. Exclusion will also not be possible: the Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.31(1)(i), above, para.38-492.
- 2366. See below, paras 44-086—44-115.
- 2367. See, in particular, the more extensive implied term as to quality (s.9, above, para.38-462) and the new terms as to conformity with model seen or examined (s.14, above, para.38-467) and as to incorrect installation (s.15, above, para.38-468).
- 2368. And note that certain pre-contract information provided under the Consumer Contract (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 (SI 2013/3134) are treated as terms of the contract: s.12 and see above, para.38-465.
- 2369. The terms are set out in the Consumer Rights Act ss.9–15, 18 (see above, paras 38-462 et seq.) and the remedies in ss.19–27 (above, paras 38-477 et seq.).
- 2370. See Vol.I, para.15-093; below, paras 44-117—44-125. See also Hughes v Hall & Hall [1981] R.T.R. 430 DC (offence to include void exclusion term by (now repealed) Consumer Transactions (Restrictions on Statements) Order 1976 (SI 1976/1813)).
- 2371. See below, para.44-105. The statutory term for consumer contracts made on or after October 1, 2015 is in the Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.10, see above, para.38-463.
- 2372. Defined in Sale of Goods Act 1979 s.61(1).
- 2373. See below, para.44-106.
- 2374. See below, para.44-108.
- 2375. See below, para.44-068.
- 2376. Defined in s.15(1) of the Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) Act 1973, as amended by s.192 of and Sch.4 para.36 to the Consumer Credit Act 1974.
- 2377. Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) Act 1973 s.14(1), as amended by the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.31(3) and Sch.3 (and by s.192 of and Sch.4 para.26 to the Consumer Credit Act 1974). The Consumer Rights Act 2015 repeals s.14(1) for contracts made on or after October 1, 2015 (see the 2015 Act s.60 and Sch.1 para.6) and s.11(4) will be confined to non-consumer contracts (see new s.11(4A), to be added by 2015 Act s.60 and Sch.1 para.10).

2378. See Vol.I, para.15-073.

2379. Defined in the Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) Act 1973 s.15(1) (amended as above).

2380. s.14(2) (amended as above).

2381. See Vol.I, para.15-073.

2382. Defined in s.48F of the Sale of Goods Act 1979.

2383. Inserted by the Sale and Supply of Goods to Consumers Regulations 2002 (SI 2002/3045); below, paras 38-408 et seq.

2384. Consumer Rights Act 2015 Act s.60 and Sch.1 para.27.

2385. See Consumer Rights Act 2015 Act s.3, applying ss.19–27 (as to remedies) to “goods contracts”, a term that includes both sales contracts and hire-purchase agreements.

2386. Or s.9 of the Factors Act 1889; Lee v Butler [1893] 2 Q.B. 318; Hull Rope Works Co Ltd v Adams (1895) 73 L.T. 446; Wylde v Legge (1901) 84 L.T. 121. But see Newtons of Wembley Ltd v Williams [1965] 1 Q.B. 560.

2387. Within the meaning of s.8(1) of the Consumer Credit Act 1974 (see above, para.39-443).

2388. Sale of Goods Act 1979 s.25(2), (4), Sch.1 para.9 and Sch.4 para.2; Consumer Credit Act 1974 s.192 and Sch.4 paras 2 and 4.

2389. Or of s.9 of the Factors Act 1889.

2390. As amended by s.192 of and Sch.4 para.22 to the Consumer Credit Act 1974.

2391. Defined in s.29(1) of the 1964 Act. These provisions apply regardless of the fact that the debtor is not an individual, i.e. is a body corporate.

2392. See above, para.39-402.

2393. See above, para.39-403.

2394. See above, para.39-427. Historically, the position of goods subject to a conditional sale agreement was similar to that of those subject to a hire-purchase agreement.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 39 - Credit and Security

Section 5. - Credit-Sale Agreements

Credit-sale

39-464

A credit-sale agreement may be defined as an absolute ²³⁹⁵ contract of sale of goods in pursuance of an agreement under which payment of the whole or part of the purchase price is deferred. Statutory definitions of a creditsale have sometimes included conditional sales, ²³⁹⁶ but this is not so in the case of the Consumer Credit Act 1974 ²³⁹⁷ where "credit-sale agreement" is defined to mean "an agreement for the sale of goods under which the purchase price or part of it is payable by instalments, but which is not a conditional sale agreement". Unlike a conditional sale agreement, the property in goods sold under a creditsale agreement is transferred to the buyer when the agreement is made. Since the seller is no longer the owner of the goods he cannot repossess them in the event of default of the buyer in the payment of the instalments or otherwise, ²³⁹⁸ his only remedy being to sue for the unpaid instalments of the price. ²³⁹⁹

Scope of regulation

39-465

A credit-sale agreement is a consumer credit agreement ²⁴⁰⁰ if the debtor, i.e. the buyer, is an individual ²⁴⁰¹ and it is a regulated agreement if it is not an exempt agreement. ²⁴⁰² A regulated credit-sale agreement is a debtor-creditor-supplier agreement ²⁴⁰³ for restricted-use credit. ²⁴⁰⁴ It is usually, but not invariably, for fixed-sum credit. ²⁴⁰⁵ The general provisions of the consumer credit regulatory regime apply in respect of authorisation and the regulation of the credit aspect of the agreements. ²⁴⁰⁶ In the regime, the seller under a credit-sale agreement is referred to as the "creditor" or "lender" and the buyer as the "debtor" or "borrower". ²⁴⁰⁷

Unfair relationships

39-466

The provisions of the Consumer Credit Act 1974 relating to "unfair relationships" apply to credit sale agreements where the debtor is an individual. ²⁴⁰⁸

Under-£50 agreements

39-467

Most of Pt V of the Consumer Credit Act 1974, relating to the making of the agreement, its form and content, signature, and supply of copies to the debtor, ²⁴⁰⁹ do not apply to "small" (under-£50) restricted-use ²⁴¹⁰ (and hence credit-sale agreements) nor can such agreements be "cancellable" agreements. ²⁴¹¹

Implied terms

39-468

The terms as to title, quality, fitness for purpose, ²⁴¹² and correspondence with description and sample, implied in any credit-sale agreement are those contained in ss.12 to 15 of the Sale of Goods Act 1979. ²⁴¹³ The Consumer Rights Act 2015 treats similar (but more expansive ²⁴¹⁴) terms “as included” in “consumer” sales contracts made on or after October 1, 2015, and will confer extensive remedies for their breach. ²⁴¹⁵ The exclusion of these implied terms and of the liability of the creditor for the breach of them is ineffective, either absolutely or subject to certain qualifications, depending on whether they are “consumer” contracts or not. ²⁴¹⁶

Remedies of buyer

39-469

The remedies of the buyer are those conferred by the Sale of Goods Act 1979, ²⁴¹⁷ including where the buyer “deals as consumer” ²⁴¹⁸ and the goods do not conform to the contract of sale, ²⁴¹⁹ the additional remedies of repair or replacement of the goods, reduction of the purchase price or rescission of the contract conferred by Pt 5A (ss.48A to 48F) of the 1979 Act. ²⁴²⁰ For contracts made on or after October 1, 2015, the Consumer Rights Act 2015 repeals ²⁴²¹ and replaces these provisions. ²⁴²²

Title of third parties

39-470

Since the property in the goods passes to the buyer when the agreement is made, he can pass a title to the goods to a third party by virtue of his ownership of them. ²⁴²³

Other statutes

39-471

The Consumer Protection Act 1987 ²⁴²⁴ and the Enterprise Act 2002 ²⁴²⁵ apply to the supply of goods under credit-sale agreements.

²³⁹⁵. Sale of Goods Act 1979 s.2(1), (3).

²³⁹⁶. e.g. Advertisements (Hire-Purchase) Act 1967 s.7(2) (now repealed).

²³⁹⁷. s.189(1). There is no corresponding definition in the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (Regulated Activities) Order 2001 (SI 2001/544) (“RAO”) art.60L(1), ²³⁹⁸. A provision to this effect in the agreement would render the agreement void as an unregistered bill of sale: see Bills of Sale Act 1878 s.3; and below, para.39-519.

²³⁹⁹. Most credit-sale agreements provide that, on default by the buyer, the balance of the purchase price shall immediately become payable. But see the notices required under Consumer Credit Act 1974 ss.76(1)(a), 86D, 87(1)(b), 98(1) (above, paras 39-164, 39-134, 39-166, 39-172) and see also the repayment and rebate provisions in Consumer Credit Act 1974 ss.94, 95 (above, paras 39-143—39-145).

²⁴⁰⁰. CCA 1974 s.8(2); see above, para.39-016. See also Sch.2 Pt II Example 5.

- 2401. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1); see above, para.39-016.
- 2402. See above, para.39-017 and for “exempt agreements”, above, paras 39-038 et seq. For the calculation of the ceiling for the “business purpose” exemption in RAO art.60C(3)–(7), see above, para.39-443, n.2334 and Sch.2 Pt II Example 5.
- 2403. CCA 1974 s.12(a); above, para.39-030.
- 2404. CCA 1974 s.11(1)(a); above, para.39-027.
- 2405. CCA 1974 s.10(1)(b); above, para.39-026. In certain cases, e.g. shop “option” or “budget” or “subscription” accounts, a credit-sale agreement can be for running-account credit. Also if a credit card is provided by the retailer, it can also be a credit-token agreement within CCA 1974 s.14 (above, para.39-034; below, para.39-494). But see CCA 1974 ss.51, 66, 74(2), 78(7), 85(3) on exemptions for “small” credit-sale agreements.
- 2406. See above, paras 39-005—39-255.
- 2407. See above, para.39-018.
- 2408. ss.140A–140C, above, paras 39-212 et seq.
- 2409. CCA 1974 ss.60–65. Sections 59 and 66 also do not apply.
- 2410. CCA 1974 s.74(1)(d). For the definition of small agreement, CCA 1974 see ss.17(1), 189(1); above, para.39-048. The limit was raised from £30 by SI 1983/1878.
- 2411. However, the right of withdrawal under CCA 1974 s.66A is available (see above, para.39-101) and CCA 1974 ss.55 (regulations on disclosure of information, above, para.39-076) and CCA 1974 s.56 (antecedent negotiations, above, para.39-071) do apply: CCA 1974 s.74(2). But see CCA 1974 s.74(2A) (in s.74(2) limit is £42 for agreements within the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 (SI 2013/3134)).
- 2412. The particular purpose for which the goods are bought may be made known to the creditbroker (e.g. a dealer) who has previously sold the goods to the seller: see above, para.39-458, below and para.44-106.
- 2413. See below, paras 44-075—44-115.
- 2414. See, in particular, the more extensive term as to quality (s.9) and the new terms as to conformity with model seen or examined (s.14, above, para.38-467) and as to incorrect installation (s.15, above, para.38-468). And note that certain pre-contract information provided under the Consumer Contract (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 (SI 2013/3134) are treated as terms of the contract: s.12 and see above, para.38-465.
- 2415. The terms are set out in the Consumer Rights Act ss.9–15, 18 (see above, paras 38-462 et seq.) and the remedies in ss.19–27 (see above, paras 38-477 et seq.).
- 2416. See Vol.I, above para.15-093; below, paras 44-117—44-125. See also Hughes v Hall & Hall [1981] R.T.R. 43 DC (offence to include void exclusion term by (now repealed) Consumer Transactions (Restrictions on Statements) Order 1976 (SI 1976/1813)).
- 2417. See below, Ch.44.
- 2418. Defined in s.61(1) of the 1979 by reference to s.12 of the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977; Vol.I, para.15-073; below, para.44-121.
- 2419. Defined in s.48F of the 1979 Act.
- 2420. Inserted by the Sale and Supply of Goods to Consumers Regulations 2002 (SI 2002/3045).

2421. Consumer Rights Act 2015 Act s.60 and Sch.1 para.27.

2422. See especially ss.19–27, above, paras 38-477 et seq.

2423. cf. Car and Universal Finance Co Ltd v Caldwell [1965] 1 Q.B. 525; Newtons of Wembley Ltd v Williams [1965] 1 Q.B. 560; below, para.44-209.

2424. See above, para.39-437.

2425. See above, para.39-438.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 39 - Credit and Security

Section 6. - Credit and Other Payment Cards, and Checks

Credit cards

39-472

Credit cards are a relatively modern phenomenon, ²⁴²⁶ but credit card business has grown rapidly in recent years. A credit card transaction may be two-party or three-party or four-party. In a two-party transaction the issuer of the card is itself the supplier of the goods or services bought on credit and the cardholder purchases the goods or services from it. In the United Kingdom two-party credit cards are mainly issued by retail shops and stores. The holder of the card produces the card at the shop or store, or at a branch, and is then permitted to make a purchase on credit. The card will have been issued to the holder in pursuance of an agreement made between himself and the issuer of the card, which agreement will, for example, establish his credit limit and the terms of payment. A two-party transaction, at least insofar as it relates to the purchase of goods, would appear to constitute a credit-sale agreement. ²⁴²⁷

39-473

In a three-party transaction, the issuer of the card is not the same person as the supplier but a separate entity. The issuer enters into arrangements (usually in the form of a "master" or "merchant" agreement) with approved suppliers who undertake to supply goods or services to the cardholder on production of the card. In a four-party transaction the arrangements are indirect, e.g. through membership of the "Mastercard" or "Visa" scheme so that the issuer is not the person who approves the supplier but both the issuer and supplier are members of a scheme. ²⁴²⁸ Payment for the goods or services is agreed to be made by the issuer of the card (subject to discount) on the rendering of an account by the supplier (in the three-party case) or the operator of the scheme (in the four-party case), usually electronically in the form of or accompanied by a sales document authenticated by the customer. A separate agreement is also entered into between the issuer and the cardholder establishing the holder's credit limit, the terms of payment and the other conditions governing the use of the card. ²⁴²⁹ In some three-party or four-party credit card transactions the documentation may be so formulated as to involve an assignment ²⁴³⁰ by the supplier to the issuer of the cardholder's account with (i.e. his debt to) the supplier created by the purchase. ²⁴³¹ But in most such transactions there is no such assignment, and the issuer relies directly and solely on the rights created by his agreement with the cardholder. ²⁴³² In Re Charge Card Services Ltd, ²⁴³³ the Court of Appeal stated that, in a three-party transaction, the underlying contractual scheme was established by two separate bilateral contracts, i.e. between the issuer and the supplier and between the cardholder and the issuer. The actual sale and purchase of the commodity was the subject of a third bilateral contract between the supplier and the cardholder. In that case it was held that, unlike payment by cheque, ²⁴³⁴ payment by credit card was not conditional payment only, but absolute payment. Accordingly, where the issuer company became insolvent and went into liquidation, suppliers had no recourse against the cardholders. The debts incurred by the use of the card were payable to the issuer or (in that case) to a factor to whom they had been assigned by the issuer company.

39-474

The term "credit card" is not a term of art. But it has become increasingly common for that term to be reserved for a card issued under an agreement by which the cardholder can obtain extended credit, as opposed to a "charge card" which provides credit only for a limited period. Credit is provided by a credit card agreement in one of two ways. First, the cardholder may be given the option either to pay off the entire debit balance outstanding on the account, or to pay only a minimum sum, interest being charged on the debit balance remaining unpaid. ²⁴³⁵ This is sometimes referred to as an “option” account. Secondly, the agreement may provide for the making by the cardholder of fixed monthly payments (a “budget” or “subscription” account) and the cardholder’s credit limit may be a specified sum or a multiple (say, 24 times) of the fixed monthly payment. ²⁴³⁶ Interest is again charged on the debit balance from time to time outstanding. In either case, payments made by the cardholder will “refresh” the account, that is to say, will enable them to obtain further credit up to their stipulated credit limit.

39-475

Certain credit cards now in use also enable the cardholder to obtain cash on presentation of the card. ²⁴³⁷ Many credit card agreements further provide for the issue of additional cards to relatives, employees, etc. of the principal cardholder or for use on a company account. The principal cardholder (or account holder) is liable for debts incurred by the use of the additional cards by the so-called “authorised users”.

Charge cards

39-476

The expression “charge card” is usually reserved for a card issued under an agreement that requires the cardholder to settle their account in full within a fixed period after a statement is rendered. If they fail to pay by the due date, there is a breach of the agreement and default interest (or “liquidated damages” for the breach) will be payable. No extended credit is, however, allowed. The cardholder’s commitment is to make a single payment to settle their entire indebtedness recorded on the statement by the due date. Like credit cards, a charge card transaction may be two-party ²⁴³⁸ or three-party. ²⁴³⁹ Some charge cards also enable the holder to obtain cash on presentation of the card.

Debit cards

39-477

Debit cards ²⁴⁴⁰ resemble credit cards and charge cards in appearance and similarly enable the cardholder to purchase goods and services from suppliers with whom arrangements have been made for the acceptance of the card. The issuer of the card is usually (but not invariably) a bank or building society with whom the cardholder maintains an ordinary (e.g. current) account. By their agreement with the issuer of the card, the cardholder authorises the issuer to debit that account with the debts incurred by the use of the card. Debits will reach the account within a short period of time, i.e. usually within two or three days. If, for example, the account to be debited is the cardholder’s current account with a bank, and the account is in credit, the debits will reduce the credit balance standing on the account. If the account is in overdraft, then the debits will increase the debit balance on the account. The extent of the credit facility afforded by the card depends, therefore, for the most part, on the overdraft arrangements arrived at between the cardholder and the issuer of the card. Debit cards issued by banks and building societies can normally also be used as cash cards ²⁴⁴¹ to obtain cash.

39-478

Debit cards have become more prevalent with the development of EFTPOS facilities (electronic funds transfer at point of sale). In an EFTPOS transaction, the card is passed through a reader in a terminal installed at the supplier’s point of sale and, subject to acceptance, payment is made to the supplier by an electronic transfer of funds from the account of the cardholder to the account of the supplier. Transactions will not be accepted unless the cardholder’s account is in credit or within a previously agreed overdraft limit. The customer is required to key in a personal identification number (PIN) or (increasingly rarely in the UK) sign a receipt (his signature being checked against that on the card) as a protection against fraud.

Cash cards

39-479

Cash cards, or ATM (automatic teller machine) cards, are again usually, but not invariably, issued by banks and building societies and enable the cardholder to obtain cash by using the card to operate an automatic teller machine. Withdrawals by this means are normally debited by electronic means directly to the account (e.g. a current account) of the customer with the issuer of the card. The machine will be programmed so as to refuse payment unless the cardholder's instruction is accompanied or preceded by his PIN, and unless the cardholder's account is in credit or there is a previously agreed credit facility. However, although most machines are online, thus enabling the withdrawal instruction to be checked against the cardholder's current balance at the time the instruction is received, in other cases the balance is the previous day's balance, and there may even be a "down time" each day during which the cardholder's balance cannot be checked. Many such cards can nowadays be used, not only to obtain cash from the ATMs of the issuer of the card, but also from machines of other banks and building societies with whom arrangements have been made for acceptance of the card. Networks (e.g. "Link") are currently in operation, which provide arrangements for wider or reciprocal acceptance of such cards.

Electronic purses

39-480

These are sometimes referred to as "digital cash cards" or "stored value cards". They are cards on which "value" is stored electronically in the form of pre-paid units of money. The card can be used by the cardholder to pay for goods or services supplied, units of value being transferred electronically from buyer to seller. Some cards contain a magnetic strip, but others carry more complex information stored in a microchip. Some cards are reloadable and can be charged with additional value, while others lack this facility and are considered disposable once the entire value has been spent. In some cases, the card can be used by the cardholder to purchase goods or services only from the card issuer or card issuer's organisation. In other cases, however, as in multi-party credit card or charge card transactions, the card may be used to effect purchases from any supplier who has agreed to accept payment in this form and the supplier will be reimbursed in respect of the purchases made by use of the card. Electronic purses are a relatively recent development and the exact relationships between the participants (the scheme originator, participating banks, supplier and cardholder) have yet to be established. ²⁴⁴²

Check and voucher trading

39-481

A check is a document issued by the check trader, and purchased by the customer, which entitles the customer to purchase goods of the face value of the check from retail shops approved by the check trader. The customer may make an initial payment to the check trader, usually of 5 per cent of the face value of the checks purchased, and is then issued with checks of a total value of (say) £100 in smaller denominations. The total face value of the checks so purchased is paid by the customer to the check trader by instalments, the instalments being collected from the customer at their home by a collecting agent (who also supplies fresh checks when required). An agreement is entered into between the check trader and each approved retailer whereby the retailer undertakes to honour checks presented to them by supplying goods to the face value of the check, and the check trader undertakes to reimburse the retailer, but after deduction of a discount, at periodic intervals on receipt of invoices backed by the returned checks. Check trading involves, in relation to each customer, regular, but relatively small, sums. It arguably results in a loan of money by the check trader to the customer, ²⁴⁴³ but an alternative view is that the proper form of action for recovery of instalments unpaid is one for money paid by the check trader to the retailer at the customer's request. ²⁴⁴⁴

39-482

Voucher trading, which is now almost obsolete, closely resembles check trading, the voucher taking the place of the check. But the voucher is usually of a much larger face value, and that face value is frequently of the precise value of the goods to be purchased; the repayment period is much longer; there is no initial “poundage”, but finance charges are levied and paid together with the instalments; and the voucher may be tenable at only one retail shop or chain of shops. ²⁴⁴⁵

The consumer credit regulatory regime39-483

The application of the consumer credit regulatory regime to the various types of card agreement mentioned above is a matter of some complexity, ²⁴⁴⁶ and, in some cases, not free from doubt. Moreover, with the appearance of “multi-function” cards, each separate function has to be considered in the context of the regime. In broad terms, the position is as set out in the following paragraphs:

(i) Credit card ²⁴⁴⁷ agreements39-484

(Whether two-party, three-party or four-party) made between the issuer (the creditor) and the cardholder (the debtor) under which extended credit is provided to the debtor will almost invariably ²⁴⁴⁸ be regulated agreements for the purposes of the regime, unless the debtor is not an individual, i.e. is a body corporate or large partnership. ²⁴⁴⁹ The conduct of its business by the creditor will require FCA authorisation, ²⁴⁵⁰ but suppliers will not ordinarily require authorisation, ²⁴⁵¹ unless they introduce customers to the creditor. Such agreements will be regulated by the general provisions of the regime.

39-485

⚠ A two-party credit card agreement will normally be for running-account credit. ²⁴⁵² Insofar as the card may be used to obtain goods or services from the creditor, it will be a debtor-creditor-supplier ²⁴⁵³ for restricted-use credit. ²⁴⁵⁴ The creditor, as supplier of the goods or services, will be liable directly to the debtor if the goods or services are defective. ²⁴⁵⁵ ⚠ Insofar as the card may be used to obtain cash, it will be a debtor-creditor ²⁴⁵⁶ agreement for unrestricted-use credit. ²⁴⁵⁷

39-486

A three-party or four-party credit card agreement will likewise normally be for running-account credit. ²⁴⁵⁸ Insofar as the card may be used to obtain goods or services, it will be a debtor-creditor-supplier agreement ²⁴⁵⁹ for restricted-use credit. ²⁴⁶⁰ The issuer of the card, as creditor, will be liable, under s.75 of the Consumer Credit Act 1974, ²⁴⁶¹ jointly and severally with the supplier in respect of any claim that the debtor may have in respect of a misrepresentation or breach of contract in relation to the transaction financed by the agreement, i.e. the supply of the goods or services. Insofar as the card may be used to obtain cash, the agreement is probably a debtor-creditor ²⁴⁶² agreement for unrestricted-use credit. ²⁴⁶³

(ii) Charge card ²⁴⁶⁴ agreements39-487

Although before the implementation of the Consumer Credit Directive ²⁴⁶⁵ these agreements were often “exempt agreements”, ²⁴⁶⁶ this is no longer generally ²⁴⁶⁷ the case. Hence they are treated no differently from credit card agreements, except in one important respect: their exemption from the “connected lender” liability under s.75 has been preserved. ²⁴⁶⁸

(iii) Debit card ²⁴⁶⁹ agreements39-488

Give rise to greater difficulties. ²⁴⁷⁰ If the cardholder has an overdraft facility, then it is clear that, insofar as the card may be used to obtain goods or services from suppliers on credit, there will be a debtor-creditor-supplier agreement ²⁴⁷¹ for restricted-use credit. ²⁴⁷² The issuer of the card will therefore be subject to liability under s.75 of the Consumer Credit Act 1974. ²⁴⁷³ If the cardholder does not have an overdraft facility, the position is less clear as a result of s.14(3) of the 1974 Act, which appears to “deem” credit to arise whenever a debit card is used. ²⁴⁷⁴ However, the preferred view is that s.14(3) merely clarifies, but only in circumstances where the debtor uses a credit facility, when and by whom credit is provided (on the supply of the goods or services ²⁴⁷⁵). In an EFTPOS transaction, it is clear that the EFTPOS arrangements between the suppliers and the card issuers do not themselves give rise to a debtor-creditor-supplier agreement. ²⁴⁷⁶ The most significant consequence is that the card issuer, as creditor, will not (merely because of those arrangements) be subject to liability under s.75 of the 1974 Act. ²⁴⁷⁷

39-489

Insofar as the debit card may be used to obtain cash, ²⁴⁷⁸ it will be a debtor-creditor agreement ²⁴⁷⁹ for unrestricted-use credit. ²⁴⁸⁰ Insofar as the agreement enables the debtor to overdraw on a current account, the Consumer Credit Act 1974 (especially Pt V) will apply, as modified in relation to such overdraft agreements. ²⁴⁸¹

(iv) Cash card (ATM card) ²⁴⁸² agreements39-490

Also give rise to some uncertainty. Since withdrawals are normally debited directly to the account (e.g. a current account) of the customer with the issuer of the card, it is necessary to ascertain whether the issuer of the card has agreed to provide the customer with credit, for example, an overdraft, in which case there will be a debtor-creditor agreement ²⁴⁸³ for unrestricted-use credit. ²⁴⁸⁴ But if the automated teller machine is so programmed as to prevent any withdrawal when the customer's account is overdrawn or which would cause a debit balance to arise on the customer's account, or (seem) if the terms of the agreement are such as to prohibit the use of the card except in respect of a credit balance on the account, then there will be no agreement to provide the customer with credit and no regulated agreement. However, different considerations may apply if the customer may use the card to obtain cash from ATMs of banks and building societies other than the issuer of the card. It is possible that a deemed extension of credit may then in some cases ²⁴⁸⁵ arise under s.14(3) of the 1974 Act, ²⁴⁸⁶ and in such a case it is immaterial that there is no agreement by the issuer to provide the customer with credit.

39-491

Cash cards operated in connection with current accounts with banks ²⁴⁸⁷ will, in so far as they enable the debtor to overdraw on a current account, be subject to the modified provisions of the regulatory regime (especially Consumer Credit Act 1974 Pt V) applicable to overdraft agreements. ²⁴⁸⁸

(vi) Electronic purse ²⁴⁸⁹ agreements39-492

In principle, since the cardholder prepays the value loaded electronically on the card, it would seem that no credit is provided and so there will be no consumer credit agreement. But the provision is not free from doubt. ²⁴⁹⁰ The only credit that would be provided is if the issuer provides credit facilities to the cardholder when issuing the digital cash.

(vi) Checks ²⁴⁹¹ trading agreements

39-493

Will be debtor-creditor-supplier agreements ²⁴⁹² for restricted-use credit. ²⁴⁹³ The credit is fixed-sum credit. ²⁴⁹⁴

“Credit-token” and “credit-token agreements”

39-494

The definitions of “credittoken” ²⁴⁹⁵ and “credit-token agreement” ²⁴⁹⁶ have been referred to previously in this chapter. ²⁴⁹⁷ It should be noted that the definition of “credit-token” is not limited to a regulated agreement, but only a regulated agreement can be a “credittoken agreement”. For credit-token agreements that are (exceptionally) not covered by the Consumer Credit (Agreements) Regulations 2010 ²⁴⁹⁸ and hence subject to the “old” regime, ²⁴⁹⁹ certain special provisions are made for such agreements. ²⁵⁰⁰ Moreover, for all credit-token agreements there are certain special requirements as to copies. ²⁵⁰¹

39-495

Both two-party, three-party and four-party credit cards will be credit-tokens as will charge cards ²⁵⁰² and, since extended credit is granted, the agreement will (if the debtor is an individual and the agreement is not an exempt agreement) be a regulated agreement ²⁵⁰³ and a credit-token agreement. ²⁵⁰⁴

39-496

Debit cards will certainly be credit-tokens if the cardholder has an overdraft and may even be credit-tokens if this is not the case. ²⁵⁰⁵ Whether or not a debit card agreement is a credit-token agreement depends on whether the agreement is a regulated agreement. ²⁵⁰⁶

39-497

Cash (ATM) cards will not be credit-tokens if the card can only be used to effect withdrawals from machines operated by the issuer of the card and only when the account is in credit. ²⁵⁰⁷ But if the card can be used to effect withdrawals from the machines of others than the issuer of the card, the card may be a credittoken ²⁵⁰⁸ and the card agreement a credit-token agreement. ²⁵⁰⁹

39-498

Electronic purses are probably not credit-tokens. ²⁵¹⁰

39-499

Checks are credit-tokens ²⁵¹¹ and the agreements are credit-token agreements. ²⁵¹²

Prohibition of unsolicited credit-tokens ²⁵¹³

39-500

Under the Consumer Credit Act 1974 s.51, it was formally an offence to give a person a credit-token if he had not asked for it and the request had to be contained in a document signed by the person making the request. When consumer credit regulation was transferred to the FCA ²⁵¹⁴ that section was repealed ²⁵¹⁵ and its provisions essentially replaced by FCA rules in the FCA Handbook. ²⁵¹⁶ Hence breach of the prohibition now gives rise to the usual sanctions for breach of FCA rules. ²⁵¹⁷

Restrictions on provision of “credit card cheques”

39-501

In the wake of disquiet about the unsolicited sending of “credit card cheques” by credit card issuers to their cardholders, new Consumer Credit Act 1974 ss.51A-51B were enacted prohibiting ²⁵¹⁸ the provision of such cheques unless the recipient had “asked for them” or the underlying credit-token agreement was a “business” agreement. When consumer credit regulation was transferred to the FCA ²⁵¹⁹ those sections were repealed ²⁵²⁰ and their provisions were replaced by FCA rules in the FCA Handbook. ²⁵²¹ Hence breach of the prohibition now gives rise to the usual sanctions for breach of FCA rules. ²⁵²²

Acceptance of credit-token

39-502

The debtor accepts a credit-token when it is signed, or a receipt for it is signed, or it is first used, either by the debtor himself or by a person who, pursuant to the agreement, is authorised by him to use it. ²⁵²³ Unless the debtor has previously accepted the credit-token, or the use constitutes an acceptance of it by him, he is not liable under a credit-token agreement for use made of the credit-token. ²⁵²⁴

Misuse of credit-token ²⁵²⁵

39-503

Section 84 of the Consumer Credit Act 1974 contains provisions designed to limit the debtor's liability for misuse of a credit-token. Although, in principle, the debtor under a regulated consumer credit agreement is not liable to the creditor for any loss arising from use of the credit facility by another person not acting, or to be treated as acting, ²⁵²⁶ as the debtor's agent, ²⁵²⁷ this does not prevent the debtor under a credit-token agreement from being made liable to the extent of £50 ²⁵²⁸ (or the credit limit ²⁵²⁹ if lower) for loss to the creditor arising from use of the credit-token ²⁵³⁰ by other persons during a period beginning when the credit-token ceases to be in the possession of any authorised person ²⁵³¹ and ending when the credit-token is once more in the possession of an authorised person. Hence, misuse, for example, of a lost or stolen credit card by an unauthorised person, will involve the debtor in a maximum liability of £50. But this limitation does not extend to a term of the credit-token agreement which makes the debtor liable (to any extent) for loss to the creditor from use of the credit-token by a person who acquired possession of it with the debtor's consent, ²⁵³² though without his authority to use it.

39-504

The further protection previously conferred on consumers ²⁵³³ by the two sets of regulations made in implementation of two EC Directives on “distance contracts” ²⁵³⁴: the Consumer Protection (Distance Selling) Regulations 2000 ²⁵³⁵ and the Financial Services (Distance Marketing) Regulations 2004 ²⁵³⁶ has been revoked. ²⁵³⁷

39-505

In any event, however, no liability can be imposed on the debtor in respect of any use of the credit-token after the creditor has been given notice that the credit-token has been lost or stolen, or is for any other reason liable to misuse. ²⁵³⁸ Notice may be given orally or in writing, ²⁵³⁹ and takes effect when it is received; but where it is given orally, and the agreement so requires, it is to be treated as not taking effect if not confirmed in writing within seven days. ²⁵⁴⁰ The credit-token agreement must contain, in the prescribed ²⁵⁴¹ manner, particulars of the name, address and telephone number of a person stated to be the person to whom notice is to be given. Failure to comply with this requirement results in the release of the debtor from liability for misuse of the credit-token. ²⁵⁴²

39-506

Where proceedings are brought by the creditor under a credit-token agreement, if the debtor alleges that any use made of the credit-token was not authorised by him, it is for the creditor to prove either (i) that the use was so authorised; or (ii) that the use occurred before the creditor had been given notice as mentioned above. ²⁵⁴³

39-507

Any sum paid by the debtor for the issue of the credit-token (such as a “membership” or annual fee) is, to the extent (if any) that it has not been previously offset by use made of the credit-token, to be treated as paid towards satisfaction of any liability of the debtor. ²⁵⁴⁴

39-508

 It is important, however, to appreciate that, under the 1974 Act, ²⁵⁴⁵ the limitation of the debtor's liability applies only to loss arising from use of the credit facility provided by the creditor to the debtor, and there is nothing in the Act ²⁵⁴⁶ to prevent the debtor from being made fully liable to the creditor for misuse of a credit-token in connection with a credit balance in favour of the debtor. So, for example, where a cash card is a credit-token, the conditions of use of the card could require the debtor fully to indemnify the creditor against any unauthorised withdrawal of cash while the debtor's account is in credit. ²⁵⁴⁷

Issue of new credit-tokens

39-509

Except in the case of a “small” (under-£50) ²⁵⁴⁸ credit-token agreement, ²⁵⁴⁹ if a credit-token (other than the first) is given by the creditor to the debtor, a copy of the executed agreement (if any) and of any other document referred to in it must also be given to the debtor. ²⁵⁵⁰ Non-compliance with this requirement means that, while the default continues, the creditor is not entitled to enforce the agreement. ²⁵⁵¹

Payment Services Regulations 2009: general

39-510

The Payment Services Regulations 2009 (PSRs) ²⁵⁵² are of relevance to payment cards in that all the cards considered in this section ²⁵⁵³ fall within the definition in those Regulations of a “payment instrument” issued under a “payment services” contract. Hence, such cards are subject to the consumer protection provisions in those Regulations concerning information provision and the rights and liabilities of the parties. Part 5 of the Regulations imposes a number of “information” obligations in relation to payment services provided under a “framework contract” and so is applicable to the contract between the cardholder and the card issuer. Part 6 of the Regulations regulates the rights and obligations of the parties in relation to the provision of payment services and hence the legal relationship between the cardholder and the issuer. For example, there are elaborate, general provisions concerning the imposition of charges, ²⁵⁵⁴ consent and withdrawal of consent by the cardholder to a payment transaction, ²⁵⁵⁵ incorrectly executed payment transactions, ²⁵⁵⁶ unauthorised payment transactions ²⁵⁵⁷ and the execution of payment transactions. ²⁵⁵⁸ Contracting-out of most of these protections ²⁵⁵⁹ is permitted, unless the “payment services user” is a “consumer”, a “micro-enterprise” or a “charity”, terms that are all defined in the Regulations. ²⁵⁶⁰

Relationship with consumer credit regulatory regime

39-511

If payment cards are issued under “regulated agreements” within the meaning of the consumer credit regulatory regime, ²⁵⁶¹ then the PSRs consumer protection provisions are generally excluded in so far as (but only in so far as) they would otherwise duplicate the provisions of that regime. ²⁵⁶² In addition, the PSRs provisions are significantly modified in relation to certain “low-value payment instruments”, that is cards that can be used only to execute individual payment transactions of €60 or less, ²⁵⁶³ or have a spending limit of €300 or less ²⁵⁶⁴ or (in the case of electronic purses) that store funds that do not exceed €500. ²⁵⁶⁵ Broadly speaking, only minimal information need be provided ²⁵⁶⁶ and contracting-out of some of the provisions is permitted. ²⁵⁶⁷

Payment Services Regulations 2009: misuse of cards

39-512

The PSRs provide a comprehensive liability framework in relation to the misuse of those payment cards within their scope. First, express obligations are imposed on the cardholder both to “take all reasonable steps” to keep his personalised security features (for example, his PIN) safe ²⁵⁶⁸ and to notify the issuer “in the agreed manner and without undue delay” once he becomes aware of the loss, theft, misappropriation or unauthorised use of the card. ²⁵⁶⁹ These obligations apply even in relation to “credit tokens” covered by the consumer credit regulatory regime. ²⁵⁷⁰

39-513

Except in the case of agreements that are regulated by that regime (which has other detailed provisions concerning credit token misuse ²⁵⁷¹), failure to comply with these obligations “with intent or gross negligence” renders the cardholder liable for all losses incurred in respect of an unauthorised transaction. ²⁵⁷² Corresponding obligations are imposed on the card issuer to ensure that “appropriate means are available at all times” to so notify of possible misuse ²⁵⁷³ and to prevent any use once notification has been made. ²⁵⁷⁴ The issuer is also obliged to ensure that personalised security features “are not accessible” to persons other than the cardholder ²⁵⁷⁵ and the issuer bears the risk of sending the card or any personalised security features. ²⁵⁷⁶ If the cardholder disputes a transaction, the onus is on the issuer to prove that the transaction was “authenticated”, ²⁵⁷⁷ accurately recorded and “not affected by a technical breakdown or some other deficiency”. ²⁵⁷⁸ And the mere use of the card as recorded by the issuer “is not in itself necessarily sufficient” to prove either that the transaction was authorised by the payer or that the payer acted fraudulently or failed with intent or gross negligence to comply with his notification obligation ²⁵⁷⁹ so as to make him liable to an unlimited extent. ²⁵⁸⁰ Again, all these card issuer obligations also apply in relation to regulated agreements covered by the consumer credit regulatory regime. ²⁵⁸¹

Comparison with consumer credit Act regulatory regime

39-514

The PSRs liability provisions for misuse of cards are similar, but by no means identical, to those applicable to credit tokens issued under “credit-token agreements” in the Consumer Credit Act 1974. ²⁵⁸² To avoid duplication, if the card is issued under an agreement that is regulated by the consumer credit regulatory regime, the 1974 Act provisions will apply “in place of” those in the PSRs. ²⁵⁸³ The overall result under both liability regimes is similar but there are significant differences in the detail. First, there is a general provision in the PSRs ²⁵⁸⁴ requiring the card issuer immediately to refund transactions that are “not authorised” in accordance with the PSRs’ provision relating to the giving (and withdrawal) of consent to payment transactions by the cardholder. ²⁵⁸⁵ This corresponds to the general provision in s.83 of the 1974 Act ²⁵⁸⁶ but there are clear differences in that s.83 only applies to the use of a “credit facility” ²⁵⁸⁷ and says nothing about immediate refunds.

39-515

Second, as is the case under the 1974 Act, the PSRs provide derogations from this general principle so as to impose a degree of liability on the cardholder. However, these PSRs derogations apply as a matter of law and so, unlike the position under the 1974 Act, do not need to be contractually imposed. Moreover, although they are similar in effect to those under the 1974 Act, there are differences in the detail. Thus the cardholder is generally liable up to a maximum of £50 for loss arising from the use of a lost, stolen or misappropriated ²⁵⁸⁸ card. ²⁵⁸⁹ However, the cardholder is liable for all loss in two cases. The first is where he has acted “fraudulently”, a term that is not defined but that clearly connotes knowing that misuse is occurring. The second case where the cardholder is liable for all the loss is where he has “with intent or gross negligence” failed to comply with his obligations ²⁵⁹⁰ to “take all reasonable steps” to keep his personalised security features safe and to notify the issuer “in the agreed manner and without undue delay” once he becomes aware of the possible misuse of the card. ²⁵⁹¹ Where the issuer has not complied with the obligation to ensure that “appropriate means are available at all times” to so notify of possible misuse, ²⁵⁹² then, unless the cardholder has acted fraudulently, he is not liable for any loss (not even for the first £50). ²⁵⁹³ And again, unless the cardholder has acted fraudulently, his liability terminates (even for the first £50) when he gives the issuer notice “in the agreed manner” ²⁵⁹⁴ of possible misuse.

39-516

There is no provision in the PSRs that corresponds directly with s.66 of the 1974 Act, which only imposes liability on a cardholder once he has “accepted” the card. ²⁵⁹⁵ The PSRs state ²⁵⁹⁶ that the provisions as to misuse considered above ²⁵⁹⁷ apply in place of s.66 when it comes to payment cards issued under agreements not regulated by the 1974 Act. However, other PSRs provisions that are not disapplied in relation to agreements regulated by the 1974 Act will also be relevant in the case of a card that has not reached the cardholder. Thus, the PSRs state that the issuer is to bear the risk of sending the card or any personalised security features ²⁵⁹⁸ and the burden is on him to prove that the transaction was “authenticated”. ²⁵⁹⁹

Payment Services Regulations 2009: unsolicited payment cards

39-517

The PSRs forbid the sending of an unsolicited “payment instrument” ²⁶⁰⁰ except by way of replacement of one already issued. ²⁶⁰¹ Again, to avoid duplication, this prohibition is disapplied in the case of agreements regulated by the consumer credit regulatory regime, which will therefore continue to be subject to that regime. ²⁶⁰²

Payment Services Regulations 2009: the card agreement

39-518

Card agreements are “framework contracts” for the purposes of the PSRs. Hence the relevant “information” provisions in Pt 5 ²⁶⁰³ of those regulations apply. However, again to avoid duplication, these PSRs provisions are generally excluded in relation to agreements that are “regulated agreements” under the consumer credit regulatory regime. ²⁶⁰⁴ But the exclusion is not total and there are a few “extra” items of information that are required under the Regulations, which must also be given in the case of regulated agreements. ²⁶⁰⁵ In outline, the PSRs “information” requirements are as follows. First, pre-contracting information (which may take the form of the draft contract) must usually be provided “in good time” to the cardholder before he is bound by the contract. ²⁶⁰⁶ Second, the cardholder is given the right, during the contract and free of charge, ²⁶⁰⁷ to obtain certain information and the terms of the contract. ²⁶⁰⁸ Third, there are elaborate provisions concerning the notification of variations in the contractual information and terms. ²⁶⁰⁹ Finally, there are provisions concerning information to be provided in relation to each payment transaction ²⁶¹⁰ and provisions governing the termination of the contract by either party. ²⁶¹¹ Note also the rights and obligations imposed by Pt 6 of the PSRs, some of which are again excluded or modified in relation to agreements that are “regulated agreements” under the consumer credit regulatory regime. ²⁶¹²

-
- ^{2426.} For an excellent historical review, see E. E. Bergsten, “Credit Cards—A Prelude to a Cashless Society” (1967) 8 BC Ind. & Com. L Rev. 485. See also Diamond (ed.) Instalment Credit (1970), pp.86 et seq., (R. M. Goode); Stephenson, Credit, Debit and Cheque Cards (1993); Smith and Robertson, Law of Bank Payments, 4th edn (2010).
- ^{2427.} See NG Napier Ltd v Patterson, 1959 S.C. (J.) 48; Napier (NG) Ltd v Corbett, 1962 S.L.T. 90 Sh Ct. An alternative hypothesis is that there is a loan made by the issuer to the holder for the purchase of the issuer’s goods. See MacDonald v NG Napier Ltd, 1960 S.L.T. 345.
- ^{2428.} On four-party cards, see Office of Fair Trading v Lloyds TSB Bank Plc [2007] UKHL 48. See also Bank of Scotland v Truman [2005] EWHC 583, [2005] C.C.L.R. 3.
- ^{2429.} Mekwin v National Westminster Bank Plc [1998] C.C.L.R. 22 (issuer retains ownership of card).
- ^{2430.} Or an agreement to assign.
- ^{2431.} The arrangement is then: (a) an immediate debt of the whole amount of the purchase is created between the holder and the supplier; (b) this debt is assigned by the supplier to the issuer; (c) the debt is paid by the holder to the issuer in accordance with the terms of the agreement made between them. But see Commissioners of Customs and Excise v Diners Club Ltd [1988] 2 All E.R. 1016.
- ^{2432.} This arrangement arguably involves a loan of money by the issuer to the holder; see above, para.39-262.
- ^{2433.} [1989] Ch. 497. See also Commissioners of Customs and Excise v Diners Club Ltd, above; Richardson v Worrall (1985) 58 T.C. 642; R. v Department of Social Security Ex p. Overdrive Credit Card Ltd [1991] 1 W.L.R. 635.
- ^{2434.} See Vol.I, para.21-076.
- ^{2435.} Most three-party and four-party cards are in this form.
- ^{2436.} This type of transaction is usually designed to enable the cardholder to purchase goods or services from a particular store or group of stores.
- ^{2437.} An additional charge may be made for the use of this facility, or interest may be charged (sometimes at a higher rate) from the date the cash is withdrawn.
- ^{2438.} Issued by a shop or store.
- ^{2439.} e.g. Diners’ Club and American Express.
- ^{2440.} e.g. Visa Debit.
- ^{2441.} See below, para.39-479.
- ^{2442.} See Reed and Davies, Digital Cash—the Legal Implications (1995); Finlayson-Brown (1997) J.I.B.L. 362; Effros, Current Law Issues Affecting Central Banks (1998), Ch.6; Hooley, The Realm of Company Law—A Collection of Papers in honour of Professor Leonard Sealy (1998), p.245; Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf), para.2-015.
- ^{2443.} Goldberg v Tait [1950] N.Z.L.R. 976; Cash Order Purchases Ltd v Brady [1952] N.Z.L.R. 898; Premier Clothing and Supply Co Ltd v Hillcoat [1969] C.L.Y 2279a Cty Ct. cf. Progressive Supply Co Ltd v Dalton [1942] 2 All E.R. 646; [1943] Ch. 54; Davies v Customs and Excise

Commissioners [1975] S.T.C. 28.

2444. See above, para.39-262.

2445. The voucher trader is very often a wholly-owned subsidiary of the retailing company.

2446. See, in particular, Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf), especially at para.2-015; and Goode, Consumer Credit: Law and Practice, Pt C, Ch.39.

2447. See above, para.39-472.

2448. Unless exempt as high net worth or business debtors, see above, paras 39-045 and 39-046.

2449. Neither are “individuals”, as defined: see above, para.39-016.

2450. See above, para.39-061.

2451. i.e. as credit-brokers: Brookes v Retail Credit Cards Ltd [1986] Crim. L.R. 327; above, para.39-231.

2452. See above, para.39-024.

2453. See above, para.39-030. It will be a category 12(a) agreement.

2454. See above, para.39-027.

2455.  i.e. under the Sale of Goods Act 1979, or under the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982, or under the Consumer Rights Act 2015, or at common law.

2456. See above, para.39-033.

2457. See above, para.39-029.

2458. See above, para.39-024.

2459. See above, para.39-030. It will be a category 12(b) agreement, see above, para.39-031. Office of Fair Trading v Lloyds TSB Bank Plc [2006] EWCA Civ 268 (affirmed, on another point: [2007] UKHL 48) confirmed that there were the requisite “arrangements” in a four-party credit card transaction. And see Bank of Scotland v Truman [2005] EWHC 583, [2005] C.C.L.R. 3 (still “arrangements” between a fifth party with agency relationship with party to four-party credit card).

2460. See above, para.39-027.

2461. See above, para.39-303 (subject, in particular, to the £100 minimum cash price referred to in that section). And it was held that the protection applies even where card (issued under a “United Kingdom credit agreement”) finances a “foreign transaction”: Office of Fair Trading v Lloyds TSB Bank Plc [2007] UKHL 48.

2462. See above, para.39-033.

2463. See above, para.39-029.

2464. See above, para.39-476.

2465. See above, para.39-011.

2466. Under the (now repealed) original version of art.3(1)(a)(ii) of the Consumer Credit (Exempt Agreements) Order 1989 (SI 1989/869), see above, para.39-041 and n.238.

- 2467. Unless the agreement falls within any of the general exemptions, see above, paras 39-038 et seq.
- 2468. CCA 1974 s.75(3)(b), added on February 1, 2011, by SI 2010/1010 reg.24.
- 2469. See above, para.39-477.
- 2470. See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf), para.2-015.
- 2471. See above, para.39-030 (unless debtor is a body corporate or large partnership). It will be a category 12(b) agreement; see above, para.39-031.
- 2472. See above, para.39-027.
- 2473. See above, para.39-303.
- 2474. It states that the card issuer “shall be taken to provide him with credit drawn on whenever a third party supplies him with cash, goods or services”. This provision is not replicated in the FCA Handbook Glossary definition of “credit token”, see below, para.39-494 n.2493.
- 2475. See previous note: “whenever a third party supplies him ...”.
- 2476. See CCA 1974 s.187(3A) (inserted by the Banking Act 1987 s.89) which states that “arrangements shall ... be disregarded for the purposes of subs.(1) and (2) if they are arrangements for the electronic transfer of funds from a current account at a bank within the meaning of the Bankers' Books Evidence Act 1879”. See above, para.39-030.
- 2477. See above, para.39-303.
- 2478. See above, para.39-488 as to the uncertainty whether the cardholder must use a credit facility.
- 2479. See above, para.39-033.
- 2480. See above, para.39-029.
- 2481. See above, para.39-300.
- 2482. See above, para.39-479.
- 2483. See above, para.39-033.
- 2484. See above, para.39-029.
- 2485. Unless, as in many cases, the cash-dispensing bank acts merely as agent for the issuer of the card.
- 2486. See above, para.39-488, n.2472.
- 2487. Or building societies.
- 2488. See above, para.39-300.
- 2489. See above, para.39-480.
- 2490. Owing to the provisions of CCA 1974 ss.14(1)(b), 14(3) of the Act; see Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf), para.2-015.
- 2491. See above, para.39-481.
- 2492. See above, para.39-030. They will be a category 12(b) agreements, see above, para.39-031.

- 2493. See above, para.39-027.
- 2494. See above, para.39-026.
- 2495. CCA 1974 s.14(1), (3), (4). The definition in the FCA Handbook Glossary is similar (omitting the provisions in s.14(3), considered above, para.39-488 n.2472).
- 2496. CCA 1974 s.14(2).
- 2497. See above, para.39-034. And note that the definition of “relevant voucher” in the Home Credit Market Investigation Order 2007, made by the Competition Commission under the Enterprise Act 2002 ss.161, 164 is in almost identical terms to that of “credit-token” in the CCA 1974.
- 2498. SI 2010/1014, above, para.39-082.
- 2499. See above, para.39-081.
- 2500. See CCA 1974 s.63(4): copy of executed agreement required under CCA 1974 s.63(2) (see above, para.39-088) need not be given within the seven days following the making of the agreement if it is given before or at the time when the credit-token is given to the debtor. And see CCA 1974 s.64(2): the notice of cancellation rights under s.64(1)(b) (see above, para.39-091) need not be sent by post within those seven days if either is sent by post to the debtor before the credit-token is given to him, or if it is sent by post to him together with the credit-token.
- 2501. Consumer Credit (Cancellation Notices and Copies of Documents) Regulations 1983 (SI 1983/1557) reg.8 (copies under CCA 1974 s.85).
- 2502. Under CCA 1974 s.14(1)(a) or (b) and the equivalent provisions in the FCA Handbook Glossary definition of “credit token”.
- 2503. See above, para.39-017.
- 2504. CCA 1974 s.14(2).
- 2505. Under s.14(1)(b) and the equivalent provisions in the FCA Handbook Glossary definition of “credit token”. See above, para.39-488 as to whether CCA 1974 s.14(3) operates to “deem” credit to be provided in all s.14(1)(b) cases.
- 2506. See above, para.39-017.
- 2507. See CCA 1974 s.14(1)(a) and the equivalent provisions in the FCA Handbook Glossary definition of “credit token”.
- 2508. Under CCA 1974 s.14(1)(b), (4) and the equivalent provisions in the FCA Handbook Glossary definition of “credit token”.
- 2509. See CCA 1974 s.14(3) and above, paras 39-488 and 39-490.
- 2510. But again (see above, para.39-488) CCA 1974 s.14(3) may “deem” credit to be provided.
- 2511. Under CCA 1974 s.14(1)(a) or (b) and the equivalent provisions in the FCA Glossary definition of “credit token”.
- 2512. CCA 1974 s.14(2); see above, para.39-034.
- 2513. There is a more general prohibition of unsolicited credit in the Financial Services (Distance Marketing) Regulations 2004 (SI 2004/2095) reg.15 (as partly revoked by SI 2008/1277). And see the disapplication of the provisions in the Payment Services Regulations 2009 (SI 2009/209) reg.58(1)(b) (below, para.39-517) prohibiting unsolicited “payment instruments”, noted in n.2600, below.

2514. See above, para.39-002.

2515. On April 1, 2014 by the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (Regulated Activities) (Amendment) (No.2) Order 2013 (SI 2013/1881) art.20(15). But see the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (Regulated Activities) (Amendment) Order 2014 (SI 2014/366) art.13: notwithstanding the repeal of s.51, it continues to have effect for the purposes of the Payment Services Regulations 2009 reg.52(a) (disapplication of certain regulations in the case of consumer credit agreements) and hence it continues to apply in relation to regulated credit agreements in place of reg.58(1)(b) of those regulations.

2516. See CONC 2.9 (prohibiting the giving of unsolicited credit-tokens by FCA-authorised persons).

2517. See above, para.39-063. Hence breach is no longer criminal.

2518. The sanction was criminal but the consequent transactions were not affected.

2519. See above, para.39-002.

2520. On April 1, 2014 by the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (Regulated Activities) (Amendment) (No.2) Order 2013 (SI 2013/1881) art.20(16).

2521. See CONC 2.3.5R (restricting the provision of credit card cheques by FCA-authorised persons).

2522. See above, para.39-063. Hence breach is no longer criminal.

2523. CCA 1974 s.66(2). The burden of proof is on the creditor: CCA 1974 s.171(4)(a). Compare the position in relation to “payment instruments” under the Payment Services Regulations 2009 (SI 2009/209) noted below, para.39-516 (inapplicable to cases covered by s.66: SI 2009/209 reg.52(b)).

2524. CCA 1974 s.66(1).

2525. Compare the position in relation to the misuse of “payment instruments” under the Payment Services Regulations 2009 (SI 2009/209), noted below, paras 39-512—39-515.

2526. Presumably by reason of ostensible authority.

2527. CCA 1974 s.83(1). See NRAM Plc v McAdam & Hartley [2015] EWCA Civ 751, reversing [2014] EWHC 4174 (Comm): (obiter) s.83 does not apply to non-regulated agreements that are documented as regulated agreements.

2528. The amount was raised from £30 by SI 1983/1571. It was not increased by SI 1998/997.

2529. See above, para.39-025.

2530. For the position where two or more credit-tokens are given under one agreement, see CCA 1974 s.84(8).

2531. The debtor, the creditor, and any person authorised by the debtor to use the credit-token are “authorised persons” CCA 1974 s.84(7).

2532. CCA 1974 s.84(2).

2533. “Consumer” is defined in reg.3(1) of the 2000 Regulations and reg.2(1) of the 2004 Regulations.

2534. Defined in both sets of Regulations (in regs 3(1) and 2(1), respectively) as contracts “concluded ... under an organised distance sale or service provision scheme run by the supplier who ... makes exclusive use of ... distance communication”.

- 2535. SI 2000/2334, as amended by SI 2004/2095 and SI 2005/689. These implemented the Distance Contracts Directive 97/7.
- 2536. SI 2004/2095. These implement the Distance Marketing Directive (DMD) 2002/65.
- 2537. The relevant provisions were repealed by the Payment Services Regulations 2009 (SI 2009/209) Sch.6 Pt 2.
- 2538. CCA 1974 s.84(3).
- 2539. CCA 1974 s.84(3).
- 2540. CCA 1974 s.84(5).
- 2541. By the Consumer Credit (Credit-Token Agreements) Regulations 1983 (SI 1983/1555).
- 2542. CCA 1974 s.84(4).
- 2543. CCA 1974 s.171(4)(b).
- 2544. CCA 1974 s.84(6).
- 2545. CCA 1974 s.84 is drafted as an exception to CCA 1974 s.83, and CCA 1974 s.83(1) only applies to “loss arising from use of the credit facility”.
- 2546. But protection may be afforded for misuse of cards when the account is in credit by (a) the Payment Services Regulations 2009 (see below, paras 39-510 et seq., especially para.39-512) or (b) the “BCOBS” Module of the Financial Conduct Authority’s Handbook (see above, paras 34-218 et seq.), see BCOBS 5.1.11-5.1.12.
- 2547.  But a creditor who is a member of a trade association may be constrained by provisions in the association’s code (e.g. the Standards of Lending Practice, above, para.39-013).
- 2548. See CCA 1974 s.17; above, para.39-048.
- 2549. CCA 1974 s.85(3).
- 2550. CCA 1974 s.85(1). See also SI 1983/1557 reg.8.
- 2551. CCA 1974 s.85(2)(a). Originally, if the default continued for one month, an offence was committed (s.85(2)(b)) but this provision was repealed by the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1277) reg.30(1) and Sch.2 para.22.
- 2552. SI 2009/209, in force from November 1, 2009. See also above, paras 34-223 et seq.
- 2553. There is an exclusion for store cards issued by a retailer for use in his store and for electronic purses that can only be used in a limited number of outlets: PSRs Sch.2 para.2(k).
- 2554. PSRs reg.54. This applies both to agreements regulated under the consumer credit regime and to “low value payment instruments”. But see reg.51(3)(a) (contracting out).
- 2555. PSRs reg.55. This also applies both to agreements regulated under the consumer credit regime and to “low value payment instruments”. But see reg.51(3)(a) (contracting out). Regulation 61 requires the card issuer to refund unauthorised transactions, but this does not apply to agreements regulated under the consumer credit regime, which have their own provisions (CCA 1974 ss.83 and 84, see above, para.39-503).
- 2556. PSRs reg.59. This is disapplied in relation to agreements regulated under the consumer credit regime (in the light of CCA 1974 ss.66, 83 and 84, see above, paras 39-502—39-503), but it applies to “low value payment instruments”. Contracting out is generally (but see reg.51(3)(b)) not permitted.

- 2557. PSRs regs 60-64.
- 2558. PSRs regs 65-79, applicable also both to agreements regulated under the consumer credit regime and to “low value payment instruments”. But see reg.51(3)(a) (contracting out permitted to some extent).
- 2559. Contracting-out is permitted in relation to all of Pt 5 (information provisions) but some provisions in Pt 6 are mandatory (see especially reg.56 (limits on use of cards), reg.57 (obligations of cardholder), reg.58 (obligations of card issuer), reg.59 (notification of errors) and reg.61 (liability of issuer)).
- 2560. PSRs reg.2(1). A “consumer” is “an individual ... acting for purposes other than a trade, business or profession”.
- 2561. See above, paras 39-483 et seq.
- 2562. PSRs regs 34 and 52.
- 2563. If the payment transaction is executed wholly in the UK, otherwise the limit is €30.
- 2564. If the payment transaction is executed wholly in the UK, otherwise the limit is €150.
- 2565. PSRs regs 35 and 53. There are special provisions in relation to liability for misuse in relation to electronic purses in reg.53(3).
- 2566. PSRs reg.35(2)(a).
- 2567. PSRs reg.35(2)(b), (c) and reg.53(2). Note also reg.53(3) (electronic money).
- 2568. PSRs reg.57(2).
- 2569. PSRs reg.57(1).
- 2570. See above, para.39-494. Moreover, contracting-out (except in the case of non-consumers) is not permitted (see reg.51(3)) but as regards “low value instruments”, contracting out of the second obligation (in reg.57(1)(b)) is permitted.
- 2571. See above, para.39-503.
- 2572. PSRs reg.62(2), see below.
- 2573. PSRs reg.58(1)(c), and, on request, to provide the cardholder with the means to prove that such notification was made (reg.58(1)(d)).
- 2574. PSRs reg.58(1)(e).
- 2575. PSRs reg.58(1)(a).
- 2576. PSRs reg.58(2).
- 2577. Defined to mean the use of any procedure to verify the use of the card, including its personalised security features: reg.60(2).
- 2578. PSRs reg.60(1).
- 2579. i.e. his obligation to notify on becoming aware of possible misuse imposed by reg.57(1)(b), see above.

- 2580. Under PSRs reg.62(2), see below.
- 2581. Moreover, contracting-out (except in the case of non-consumers) is not permitted in relation to obligations in reg.58 (although it is allowed for those in reg.60) and, as regards “low value instruments”, some contracting out is permitted. See PSRs reg.51(3) and reg.53(2), respectively.
- 2582. See above, para.39-503.
- 2583. PSRs reg.52.
- 2584. PSRs reg.61.
- 2585. PSRs reg.55.
- 2586. See para.39-503 n.2525, above.
- 2587. See above, para.39-508.
- 2588. “where the [cardholder] has failed to keep the personalised security features safe”.
- 2589. PSRs reg.62(1). The corresponding provision in the 1974 Act refers to the card not being in the cardholder’s “possession”.
- 2590. Under PSRs reg.57, see above, para.39-512.
- 2591. PSRs reg.62(2). The corresponding provision in the 1974 Act refers to losses caused by misuse of the card by a person who acquires possession with the cardholder’s consent.
- 2592. Imposed by PSRs reg.58(1)(c).
- 2593. PSRs reg.62(3)(b).
- 2594. “under” PSRs reg.57(1)(b) which refers to notice “in the agreed manner and without due delay”.
- 2595. See above, para.39-502.
- 2596. PSR reg.52(b).
- 2597. i.e. PSRs regs 59, 61 and 62.
- 2598. PSRs reg.58(2).
- 2599. PSRs reg.60(1), “authenticated” being defined to mean the use of any procedure to verify the use of the card, including its personalised security features: reg.60(2).
- 2600. See above, para.39-510.
- 2601. PSRs reg.58(1)(b).
- 2602. i.e. the otherwise repealed Consumer Credit Act 1974 s.51, see above, para.39-500. A comparison of the two provisions reveals that not only is the PSRs provision less elaborate than s.51 but the sanctions for breach of the respective provisions differ slightly: they arise under the PSRs for the purposes of breach of the PSRs and under the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 for the purposes of breach of s.51. In addition, whilst breach of s.51 is a criminal offence, breach of the PSRs provision is actionable as a breach of statutory duty by a private person suffering loss (see PSRs reg.120(1)(b)).
- 2603. See above, para.39-510.

- 2604. PSRs reg.34.
- 2605. In particular: (i) information as to interest and currency exchange rates: reg.34(b); and (ii) information prior to individual transactions, if requested: reg.34(c).
- 2606. PSRs reg.40 (the requisite information is set out in Sch.4)—unless this cannot be done in the case of a “distance” contract concluded at the user’s request, in which case it must be provided immediately after the contract is made. See also reg.47 (communication of information). Regulation 40 does not generally apply to CCA 1974 regulated agreements, which have their own requirements as to pre-contract information (see above, para.39-076), but information as to details of interest and exchange rates must be supplied (reg.34(b)).
- 2607. PSRs reg.48(1).
- 2608. PSRs reg.41(the requisite information is set out in Sch.4). Further information may be charged for, at cost: reg.48(2). See also reg.47 (communication of information). Regulation 41 does not apply to agreements regulated under the consumer credit regime (reg.34(a)), which have their own as to information requirements (see above, paras 39-127 et seq.).
- 2609. PSRs reg.42. Regulation 42 does not apply to agreements regulated under the consumer credit regime (reg.34(a)), which have their own provisions as to variation (CCA 1974 s.82, above, paras 39-145 et seq.).
- 2610. PSRs regs 44-46. These apply, to some extent, to agreements regulated under the consumer credit regime (see reg.34(c)). See also reg.47 (communication of information).
- 2611. PSRs reg.43. Regulation 43 does not apply to agreements regulated under the consumer credit regime (reg.34(a)), which have their own provisions as to termination (CCA 1974 s.87, 98 above, paras 39-166 and 39-172).
- 2612. See PSRs reg.52. In particular, CCA 1974 s.51 (which, despite its repeal, continues to have effect for these purposes, see n.2513 above) and CCA 1974 ss.66 83, 76, 87 and 98A(4)-(6) apply in place of equivalent provisions in the PSRs.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 39 - Credit and Security
Section 7. - Mortgages of Personal Property

Bills of Sale Act 1882

39-519

❗ Credit provided on the security of personal chattels ²⁶¹³ that are retained in the possession of the debtor is likely to fall within the control of the Bills of Sale Act (1878) Amendment Act 1882 if the transaction is contained in, or represented by, a document. Under this Act, a bill of sale given as security for the payment of money by the grantor of the bill must be in the statutory form, ²⁶¹⁴ and it must be attested ²⁶¹⁵ and registered. ²⁶¹⁶ If it is not in the statutory form, it is absolutely void, although the creditor can recover the money lent, with reasonable interest, as money had and received. ²⁶¹⁷ If it is in the statutory form, but is not duly attested or not duly registered, it is void as regards the personal chattels comprised in it, that is to say, the security is rendered void, although the creditor remains entitled to enforce the personal covenants contained in the bill, such as those which relate to the repayment of money advanced and the payment of interest. ²⁶¹⁸ It is expected that the Bills of Sale Acts will be replaced with a new Goods Mortgages Act which is expected to introduce protection measures for borrowers mortgaging their personal property (e.g. their cars under so-called “log-book loans”) similar to those available under the Consumer Credit Act 1974 in relation to hire purchase and conditional sale (see Main Work, Vol.II, paras 39-356 and 39-443).

39-520

Such a bill of sale cannot, in general, include any reference to after-acquired chattels ²⁶¹⁹; and a bill of sale made or given in consideration of any sum under £30 is void. ²⁶²⁰

39-521

The 1882 Act has been interpreted with great strictness, and the technicality of this branch of the law is notorious. ²⁶²¹ While a substantial number of security bills are in fact registered each year, the Act has severely inhibited the use of chattel mortgages as security for credit transactions, although so-called “logbook loans”, where a loan is provided on the security of a car, are not uncommon. ²⁶²² But the Act does not apply to mortgages or charges of goods created by companies incorporated under the Companies Acts. ²⁶²³

Consumer credit

39-522

The 1882 Act was not repealed by the Consumer Credit Act 1974. Agreements within the control of the consumer credit regulatory regime which are secured by a bill of sale given as security for the payment of money must therefore comply with the requirements (including those relating to security) of that regime as well as those of the Act of 1882. More particularly, however, para.1 of s.7 of the 1882 Act (which entitles a grantee of a bill of sale to take possession of the chattels assigned in the event of default in payment or in performance of any covenant contained in the bill) is, by s.7A(1) of the Act, ²⁶²⁴ made inapplicable to a default relating to a bill of sale given by way of security for the payment of money under a regulated agreement to which s.87(1) ²⁶²⁵ of the Consumer Credit Act

1974 applies—(a) unless the restriction imposed by s.88(2) of that Act (preventing certain action before the expiry of time for remedying the default) ²⁶²⁶ has ceased to apply to the bill of sale; or (b) if, by virtue of s.89 of that Act, the default is to be treated as not having occurred. ²⁶²⁷ Further, where para.1 of s.7 of the 1882 Act does apply, application by the debtor for relief must be made in the case of such a bill of sale to the county court instead of to the High Court as provided in the 1882 Act. ²⁶²⁸

Distress

39-523

As noted above, a landlord's power at common law to distrain upon all goods found upon the demised premises has now been abolished. ²⁶²⁹ Historically, goods comprised in a bill of sale were excluded from the protection of the Law of Distress Amendment Act 1908 except during the period between the service of a default notice ²⁶³⁰ under s.87 of the Consumer Credit Act 1974 in respect of the goods and the date on which the notice expired or was earlier complied with. ²⁶³¹

Ships or vessels

39-524

Transfers or assignments of any ship or vessel or any share thereof fall outside the Bills of Sale Acts. ²⁶³² A mortgage of a registered ship or a share therein is governed by the Merchant Shipping Act 1995. ²⁶³³ A mortgage of an unregistered vessel may be effected at common law. ²⁶³⁴

Aircraft

39-525

The mortgaging of aircraft registered in the United Kingdom nationality register is governed by the Civil Aviation Act 1982 ²⁶³⁵ and orders made relating thereto. ²⁶³⁶ The Bills of Sale Acts do not apply to such mortgages. ²⁶³⁷

Agricultural charges

39-526

An agricultural charge on farming stock and assets is not within the Bills of Sale Acts ²⁶³⁸ but must be registered in the register of agricultural charges at the Land Registry. ²⁶³⁹

Mortgage or charge of choses in action

39-527

A mortgage or charge of a chose in action, ²⁶⁴⁰ e.g. a debt, life insurance policy, ²⁶⁴¹ a contractual right, share in a company, etc. if made by an individual, is outside the Bills of Sale Act 1882 ²⁶⁴² but may be within the consumer credit regulatory regime. ²⁶⁴³

Book debts

39-528

A general assignment of book debts by a trader may in certain circumstances require registration as if the assignment were an absolute bill of sale ²⁶⁴⁴ and a charge on book debts of a company or of certain other intangible moveable property vested in a company must be registered under the Companies Act 2006. ²⁶⁴⁵

-
- 2613. Bills of Sale Act 1878 s.4; Bills of Sale Act 1890.
 - 2614. Bills of Sale Act (1878) Amendment Act 1882 s.9 and Sch.
 - 2615. ss.8, 10.
 - 2616. ss.8, 11.
 - 2617. Davies v Rees (1886) 17 Q.B.D. 408; North Central Wagon & Finance Co Ltd v Brailsford [1962] 1 W.L.R. 1288. See also Bradford Advance Co Ltd v Ayers [1924] W.N. 152.
 - 2618. s.8; Heseltine v Simmons [1892] 2 Q.B. 547.
 - 2619. s.5. There will also (seem) be a breach of ss.4 and 9 of the Act, and the bill will be void: Thomas v Kelly (1888) 13 App. Cas. 506.
 - 2620. s.12.
 - 2621. See Graham S McBain, "Repealing the Bills of Sale Acts", [2011] J.B.L. 475.
 - 2622. See, for example, Welcome Financial Services Ltd v Nine Regions Ltd (t/a Log Book Loans) [2010] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 426; Evans v Finance-U-Ltd [2013] EWCA Civ 869.
 - 2623. Re Standard Manufacturing Co [1891] 1 Ch. 627; Bills of Sale Act (1878) Amendment Act 1882 s.17. But a charge created by a company must be registered under Companies Act 2006 s.860 (see the previous more specific provision in Companies Act 2006 s.860(7)(b) (replacing s.396(1)(e) of the Companies Act 1985) cf. Stoneleigh Finance Ltd v Phillips [1965] 2 Q.B. 537.
 - 2624. Added by s.192 of and Sch.4 para.1 to the Consumer Credit Act 1974 from May 19, 1985: SI 1983/1551 (c.44).
 - 2625. See above, para.39-166.
 - 2626. See above, para.39-167.
 - 2627. See above, para.39-171.
 - 2628. Bills of Sale Act (1878) Amendment Act 1882 s.7A(2) (added by s.192 of and Sch.4 para.1 to the Consumer Credit Act 1974).
 - 2629. See above, para.39-427.
 - 2630. See above, para.39-166.
 - 2631. Law of Distress Amendment Act 1908 s.4A(2) (added by s.192 of and Sch.4 para.5 to the Consumer Credit Act 1974). See also s.4 (as amended by s.193(2)(b) of and Sch.5 to the 1974 Act).
 - 2632. Bills of Sale Act 1878 s.4.
 - 2633. s.16 and Sch.1. See also Companies Act 2006 s.860 (previously the more specific s.860(7)(h) (previously Companies Act 1985 s.396(1)(h)).
 - 2634. The exception in s.4 of the Bills of Sale Act 1878 was not limited to transfers or assignments within the Merchant Shipping Act 1894, nor were the words “ship or vessel” limited to ships registered or registrable under the 1894 Act: Union Bank of London v Lenanton (1878) 3 C.P.D. 213; Gapp v Bond (1887) 19 Q.B.D. 200.

2635. s.86.

2636. Mortgaging of Aircraft Order (SI 1972/1268) as amended by SI 1981/611.

2637. SI 1972/1268 para.16(1). But see Companies Act 2006 s.860 (previously the more specific s.860(7)(h) (replacing Companies Act 1985 s.396(1)(h)), above.

2638. Agricultural Credits Act 1928 s.8(1).

2639. s.9.

2640. See Vol.I, Ch.19.

2641. Policies of Assurance Act 1867; see below, para.42-067.

2642. Bills of Sale Act 1878 s.4; Re Isaacson [1895] 1 Q.B. 33.

2643. But a mortgage or charge of a chose in action is not a pledge: see above, para.39-194.

2644. Insolvency Act 1986 s.344. See Vol.I, para.19-063.

2645. s.860, previously the more specific s.860(7)(f). See Vol.I, para.19-066.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 39 - Credit and Security

Section 8. - Mortgages of Land

Consumer credit regulation

39-529

⚠ The Consumer Credit Act 1974 (CCA 1974) can apply to an agreement notwithstanding that it is secured by a mortgage or charge on land or relates to an advance for the purchase of land. ²⁶⁴⁶ But certain land mortgage transactions are “exempt agreements” under the regime. ²⁶⁴⁷ Most importantly ²⁶⁴⁸ presently first legal residential mortgages ²⁶⁴⁹ ⚠ and so-called “regulated home purchase plans”, ²⁶⁵⁰ are “exempt agreements” for the purposes of the regime because they are regulated under a special regime established under the Financial Services and Market Act 2000 (FSMA 2000). Hence there are presently two statutory regimes for the regulation of land mortgages, both now administered by the Financial Conduct Authority. ²⁶⁵¹ Other categories of “exempt” land mortgages are considered above. ²⁶⁵² Moreover, land mortgages may take advantage of the more general exemptions for “high net worth” debtors ²⁶⁵³ ⚠ and for credit agreements entered into for the debtor’s business purposes. ²⁶⁵⁴ ⚠ Although otherwise not covered by the CCA 1974 regime, such exempt agreements (apart from those regulated under the FSMA 2000 regime ²⁶⁵⁵ ⚠) are nevertheless not excepted from the “unfair relationship” provisions. ²⁶⁵⁶

Impact of Consumer Credit Directive

39-530

The Consumer Credit Directive ²⁶⁵⁷ does not apply to land mortgages. Hence, its implementation did not require changes to the old consumer credit regime applicable to mortgages and this generally remained applicable to them. Hence, the new “Directive” provisions, such as the new duties of pre-contractual explanation ²⁶⁵⁸ and of creditworthiness assessment ²⁶⁵⁹ and the new right to part settle a regulated agreement ²⁶⁶⁰ do not apply to agreements secured on land. However, as will be noted further below, mortgagees may opt into the new Disclosure of Information Regulations 2010 ²⁶⁶¹ and, hence, into the new Agreements Regulations 2010. ²⁶⁶² In such a case, the general Total Charge for Credit rules ²⁶⁶³ will then apply to determine the “total charge for credit” and “APR”.

The Mortgage Credit Directive

39-531

⚠ The Mortgage Credit Directive ²⁶⁶⁴ applies to most consumer residential land mortgages ²⁶⁶⁵ and is due for implementation on March 21, 2016. As the UK already had a well-developed residential land mortgage regulatory regime under the 2000 Act, it was decided that implementation be achieved by modifying that regime. ²⁶⁶⁶ Moreover, the opportunity has been taken to extend that regime to those (second charge) residential mortgages presently within the CCA 1974 regime. This will be achieved by altering the definition of “regulated mortgage contract” under the 2000 regime to cover all mortgages of land in the EEA where at least 40 per cent of the land is used as a dwelling. ²⁶⁶⁷ Hence such “regulated mortgage contracts” will be exempt from the CCA 1974 regime. ²⁶⁶⁸ In addition, as the Directive permits buy-to-let residential mortgages to be subject to an “appropriate framework” rather than the requirements of the Directive, ²⁶⁶⁹ the UK has decided to introduce a special regime (a modified version of “full” FSMA 2000 regulation requiring registration rather than Pt 4A permission) applicable to businesses lending to consumers for buy-to-let purposes. ²⁶⁷⁰ The Mortgage Credit Directive came into force on March 21, 2016 and hence the proposed changes noted in this paragraph have come into force, reducing the number of CCA-regulated mortgages. As a result (and see above, para.39-529) the Consumer Credit Act 1974 provisions considered below only apply to a small number of land mortgages.

Promotion

39-532

Since the transfer of consumer credit regulation to the FCA, ²⁶⁷¹ the advertising of residential land mortgages is regulated as “financial promotion” under the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000. ²⁶⁷² Hence the implementation on the Mortgage Credit Directive ²⁶⁷³ will have little effect in this regard. ²⁶⁷⁴

Form, etc

39-533

The requirements of the 1974 Act relating to the form and content, signature, supply of copies, etc. of the agreement and of the security ²⁶⁷⁵ apply where a regulated agreement is secured by a land mortgage. ²⁶⁷⁶ As land mortgages are outside the scope of the Consumer Credit Directive, ²⁶⁷⁷ the old Consumer Credit (Disclosure of Information) Regulations 2004, ²⁶⁷⁸ the old Consumer Credit (Agreements) Regulations 1983, ²⁶⁷⁹ and the old copy requirements in ss.61-64 ²⁶⁸⁰ prima facie remain applicable to land mortgages. However, mortgagees may choose to opt into and comply with the new “Directive” regime by providing pre-contract information in compliance with the new Consumer Credit (Disclosure of Information) Regulations 2010, ²⁶⁸¹ unless the agreement is one to which s.58 applies, ²⁶⁸² in which case (as the Disclosure of Information Regulations do not apply to such mortgages ²⁶⁸³) the mortgagee may opt-in by providing a copy of the unexecuted agreement complying with the Agreement Regulations 2010. ²⁶⁸⁴ If the mortgagee has chosen to opt into the Directive regime, then the new Consumer Credit (Agreements) Regulations 2010, ²⁶⁸⁵ and the new copy requirement in s.61A ²⁶⁸⁶ (unless s.58 applies to the agreement) will also become applicable. Finally, the “over-running” information requirements ²⁶⁸⁷ are modified in relation to overdrafts secured on land.

Cancellation

39-534

The right to cancel a regulated agreement conferred in certain circumstances by s.67 of the 1974 Act ²⁶⁸⁸ is removed where the agreement is secured on land, or is a restricted-use credit agreement to finance the purchase of land, or is an agreement for a bridging loan in connection with the purchase of land. ²⁶⁸⁹ Cancellation of an executed agreement would cause considerable difficulty in relation to mortgages and charges on land. But the right of cancellation is in part replaced by special provisions that give to the debtor an opportunity for withdrawal from a prospective land mortgage.

Special “pause” provisions ²⁶⁹⁰

39-535

These special provisions in principle apply in a case where a prospective regulated agreement is to be secured on land (the “mortgaged land”). ²⁶⁹¹ The procedure is then as follows: the creditor or owner must give the debtor or hirer an advance copy of the unexecuted agreement which contains notice in the prescribed ²⁶⁹² form indicating the right of the debtor or hirer to withdraw from the prospective agreement, and how and when the right is exercisable. This copy must be given to him before the unexecuted agreement is sent to him for his signature, and it must be accompanied by a copy of any other document ²⁶⁹³ referred to in the unexecuted agreement, e.g. a copy of the deed of mortgage or charge. ²⁶⁹⁴ Not less than seven days after this copy has been given, the unexecuted agreement must be sent to the debtor or hirer for his signature. ²⁶⁹⁵ The debtor must be allowed a period (“the consideration period”) in which to consider, in isolation, whether or not he wishes to go through with the transaction. The consideration period starts with the giving of the advance copy as mentioned above and ends at the expiry of seven days after the day on which the unexecuted agreement is sent to him for his signature, or on its return after signature by him, whichever first occurs. ²⁶⁹⁶ During the consideration period the creditor or owner must refrain from approaching the debtor or hirer, whether in person, by telephone or letter, or in any other way, except in response to a specific request made by the debtor or hirer after the beginning of the consideration period. ²⁶⁹⁷ Further, no notice of withdrawal must have been received by the creditor or owner before the sending of the unexecuted agreement. ²⁶⁹⁸ This procedure is very elaborate and cumbrous. Since an advance copy, and copies under ss.62 and 63 of the Act, must be sent to each debtor, ²⁶⁹⁹ no less than six copies may be required where there are joint mortgagors. ²⁷⁰⁰ The procedure is no doubt designed to ensure that borrowers are not exposed to undue, or, indeed any, pressure; but it also places a considerable period of delay in the path of those who wish to obtain immediate finance. The special pause provisions do not, however, apply to a restricted-use credit agreement to finance the purchase of the mortgaged land, or to an agreement for a bridging loan in connection with the purchase of the mortgaged land or other land. ²⁷⁰¹

Failure to comply

39-536

A failure to comply with the special pause provisions means that the agreement is not properly executed. ²⁷⁰² It is enforceable against the debtor or hirer on an order of the court only. ²⁷⁰³ The security, ²⁷⁰⁴ so far as it is provided in relation to the agreement, is enforceable where such an order has been made, but not otherwise. ²⁷⁰⁵ And where an application for an order is dismissed, except on technical grounds only, the security is rendered invalid. ²⁷⁰⁶

Enforcement

39-537

Section 126 of the Consumer Credit Act 1974 ²⁷⁰⁷ renders a land mortgage securing one of three categories of agreement enforceable on an order of the court only. Those three categories are: (a) a regulated agreement ²⁷⁰⁸; (b) a regulated mortgage contract ²⁷⁰⁹; and (c) a consumer credit agreement which would, but for the “investment mortgage” exemption, ²⁷¹⁰ be a “regulated agreement”. This does not, however, prevent enforcement at any time with the consent of the mortgagor given at that time. ²⁷¹¹ Breach of s.126 could result in the usual disciplinary consequences ²⁷¹² and an injunction could be obtained to restrain enforcement of a mortgage in contravention of the section or to restore possession to the mortgagor. ²⁷¹³ Moreover, the “unfair relationship” provisions may apply. ²⁷¹⁴ Control may be exercised by the court in accordance with Pt IX of the 1974 Act. ²⁷¹⁵

Saving for registered charges, etc

39-538

Protection is afforded in certain circumstances by the Consumer Credit Act 1974 s.177 to the proprietor of a registered charge (within the meaning of the Land Registration Act). ²⁷¹⁶

²⁶⁴⁶. See Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf), paras 2-059,

2-061, 2-066, 2-068, 2-127; Goode, Consumer Credit: Law and Practice, Pt C, Ch.38.

2647. See above, paras 39-038 et seq.

2648. See above, para.39-039. The relevant provision is now in the Regulated Activities Order 2001 (SI 2001/544) ("RAO") art.60C(2).

2649. !i.e. "regulated mortgage contracts" within the RAO art.61 as amended by SI 2001/3544 art.8 and SI 2006/2383 art.17. Article 61 was further amended on March 21, 2016 by the Mortgage Credit Directive Order 2015 (SI 2015/910) art.3 and Sch.1 para.4(21) so as to include second charge residential mortgages previously regulated by the CCA 1974.

2650. Within the RAO art.63F(3)(a) as added (on April 6, 2007) by SI 2006/2383 art.18.

2651. Since the transfer of consumer credit regulation from the OFT to the FCA: see above, para.39-002.

2652. para.39-039. There is also a special exemption for so-called "investment mortgages": RAO art.60D, see above, para.39-046.

2653. !See above, para.39-045. The relevant provision is in the RAO art.60H, although note the proposed amendments when the Mortgage Credit Directive (see above, para.39-003) is implemented on March 21, 2016 so as to ensure that the exemption is compatible with it: SI 2015/910 art.3 and Sch.1 para.4(18). The Mortgage Credit Directive (and hence the relevant amendments) came into force on March 21, 2016.

2654. !See above, para.39-046. The relevant provision is in the RAO art.60C(3)-(7) and note that when the Mortgage Credit Directive (see above, para.39-003) is implemented on March 21, 2016 second charge business loans will not be "regulated mortgage contracts": see new RAO art.61A(1)(c), to be added by SI 2015/910 art.3 and Sch.1 para.4(22). The Mortgage Credit Directive (and hence the relevant amendments) came into force on March 21, 2016.

2655. !See CCA 1974 s.140A(5). Hence when the Mortgage Credit Directive (see above, para.39-003 and below para.39-428) is implemented on March 21, 2016 and second charge loans become regulated under FSMA 2000, they will lose the protection of those provisions. The Mortgage Credit Directive (and hence the relevant amendments) came into force on March 21, 2016.

2656. See above, paras 39-212 et seq. For the application of those provisions to land mortgages, see Consolidated Finance Ltd v Hunter [2010] B.P.I.R. 1322 Ct Ct (Macclesfield); Paragon Mortgages Ltd v McEwan-Peters [2011] EWHC 2491 (Comm). See also McMurtry, "Consumer Credit Act mortgages: unfair terms, time orders and judicial discretion" [2010] J.B.L. 107.

2657. See above, para.39-011.

2658. FCA Handbook, CONC 4.2 and 4.3, see above, para.39-077.

2659. FCA Handbook, CONC 5 and 6.2, see above, para.39-078.

2660. See above, para.39-157.

2661. SI 2010/1013, as amended by SI 2010/1969 regs 31-40 and SI 2011/11 reg.8 (see above, para.39-076).

2662. SI 2010/1014, as amended by SI 2010/1969 regs 41-45 (see above, para.39-082).

2663. Above, para.39-059.

- 2664. Directive 2014/17/EU.
- 2665. See Directive 2014/17/EU art.3(1) and note the exemptions/qualifications in art.3(2).
- 2666. See in particular the legislative amendments in the Mortgage Credit Directive Order 2015 (SI 2015/910). See also the proposed amendments to the FCA Handbook.
- 2667. See the amendment to be made to RAO art.61(3) by SI 2015/910 art.3 and Sch.1 para.4(21). But note the exclusions in the new RAO art.61A, to be added by SI 2015/910 art.3 and Sch.1 para.4(22).
- 2668. See above, para.39-039.
- 2669. Directive 2014/17/EU art. 4.
- 2670. See Mortgage Credit Directive Order 2015 (SI 2015/910) Pt 3 and Sch.2 (and the FCA rules made thereunder).
- 2671. See above, para.39-002.
- 2672. See above, para.39-067.
- 2673. Directive 2014/17/EU, see above, para.39-531.
- 2674. Although note the amendment to the FPO made by SI 2015/910 art.3 and Sch.1 para.12.
- 2675. See above, paras 39-184 et seq.
- 2676. See also United Bank of Kuwait Plc v Sahib [1997] Ch. 107 (equitable mortgage outside the Act made by informal deposit of title deeds void for non-compliance with the requirements of s.2(1) of the Law of Property (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1989).
- 2677. See above, para.39-011 and below para.39-535.
- 2678. SI 2004/1481 (see above, para.39-076).
- 2679. SI 1983/1553 (see above, para.39-081). The old Consumer Credit (Total Charge for Credit) Regulations 1980 (SI 1980/51), now replicated in the FCA Handbook, also apply (see above, para.39-059).
- 2680. Above, paras 39-088—39-090.
- 2681. SI 2010/1013 (see above, para.39-076).
- 2682. Below, para.39-535.
- 2683. But see below, para.39-535.
- 2684. SI 2010/1014, as amended by SI 2010/1969 regs 41-45, above, para.39-082.
- 2685. As well as the new Consumer Credit (Total Charge for Credit) Regulations 2010 (SI 2010/1011), now replicated in the FCA Handbook, see above, para.39-059.
- 2686. Above, para.39-092.
- 2687. Now in the FCA Handbook, CONC 4.7 and CONC 6.3.3 and 6.3.4, see above, para.39-127.
- 2688. See above, para.39-102. The new 14-day “right of withdrawal” introduced by CCA 1974 s.66A as a result of the implementation of the Consumer Credit Directive (see above, paras 39-011 and 39-101) does not apply to land mortgages.

- 2689. CCA 1974 s.67(a).
- 2690. For the problems associated with these provisions, see Guest and Lloyd, Encyclopedia of Consumer Credit Law (1975, looseleaf), paras 2-059, 2-062.
- 2691. CCA 1974 s.58(1).
- 2692. i.e. prescribed by the Consumer Credit (Cancellation Notices and Copies of Documents) Regulations 1983 (SI 1983/1557), especially reg.4 (as amended by SI 2004/3236 art.6(3)) and Sch. Pt I paras 1, 2.
- 2693. See above, para.39-087, and CCA 1974 s.180.
- 2694. CCA 1974 s.58(1). The copy must be a “true” copy (SI 1983/1557 reg.3(1)), i.e. complete except for execution, and not merely the form of the mortgage or charge.
- 2695. CCA 1974 s.61(2)(b). The unexecuted agreement may now be transmitted in electronic form: SI 2004/3236 art.2(2).
- 2696. CCA 1974 s.61(3).
- 2697. CCA 1974 s.61(2)(c).
- 2698. CCA 1974 s.61(2)(d).
- 2699. See CCA 1974 s.185.
- 2700. But see the alleviation as to the supply of documents referred to in the agreement by an amendment of the Consumer Credit (Cancellation Notices and Copies of Documents) Regulations 1983 (SI 1983/1557), effected by SI 1989/591.
- 2701. CCA 1974 ss.58(2), 61(2)(a).
- 2702. CCA 1974 s.61(2).
- 2703. CCA 1974 s.65(1). A retaking of land to which a regulated agreement relates is an enforcement of the agreement: s.65(2). See CPR Pt 7 PD 7B 3.2; Pt 55 PD 55; and National Guardian Mortgage Corp v Wilkes [1993] C.C.L.R. 1 Cty Ct.
- 2704. Defined in CCA 1974 s.189(1); above, para.39-180.
- 2705. CCA 1974 s.113(2).
- 2706. CCA 1974 ss.106, 113(3)(c); above, para.39-193.
- 2707. As substituted on March 30, 2014 by Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (Consumer Credit) (Miscellaneous Provisions) (No.2) Order 2014 (SI 2014/506) art.5(4).
- 2708. See above, para.39-017.
- 2709. See above, paras 39-039 and 39-529.
- 2710. See RAO art.60D, above, paras 39-040 and 39-529.
- 2711. CCA 1974 s.173(3).
- 2712. See above, para.39-063.
- 2713. CCA 1974 s.170(2).

- 2714. ss.140A-140C (above, paras 39-212 et seq.), see especially s.140A(1)(b), above, para.39-218. However, they do not apply to “regulated mortgage contracts”: s.140A(5).
- 2715. See above, paras 39-199 et seq. The provisions of Pt IV of the Administration of Justice Act 1970 do not apply to a mortgage securing a regulated agreement: s.38A of the 1970 Act inserted by Consumer Credit Act 1974 s.192 and Sch.4 para.30, from May 19, 1985: SI 1983/1551 (c.44).
- 2716. CCA 1974 s.177(1) (but see s.177(3), (4)) (as amended by the Land Registration Act 2002 s.133 and Sch.11 para.11). Section 177(3) was extended to debt administration business by the Consumer Credit Act 2006 s.24(5). See also s.104 of the Law of Property Act 1925 and s.177(2) of the 1974 Act. It is doubtful whether breach of s.126 creates a “defect in title”, or whether these provisions relate, e.g. to a security rendered void under s.106.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 40 - Employment ¹

Section 1. - Introduction

Contract law and statute law in relation to employment

40-001

! The legal regulation of the individual employment relationship is a highly complex body of law which, while it still has at its core the common law of the contract of employment, today consists largely of provisions contained in statutes, statutory regulations and European Union measures. In this chapter, the first aim is to be as complete as space permits in the treatment of the common law of the contract of employment, both as a system of rights and remedies in itself, and as a conceptual system upon which much of the statutory regulation is constructed and depends. The other aim is to indicate in reasonable detail the main areas in which the common law of the contract of employment is overlaid by statute law. It is, however, to be stressed that a complete account of that body of statute law, together with all its interpretative case law, would now occupy much more space than is available for that purpose in this work, and would, moreover, depart further from the law of contract than is consonant with the purpose of this work. For more comprehensive treatments of the statute law of the individual employment relationship, reference should be made to treatises entirely devoted to employment law. ² Much, though by no means all, of the statute law regulating the individual employment relationship was consolidated first into the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978, and later into the Employment Rights Act 1996, into which many subsequent amendments have since been integrated, especially though not solely by the Employment Acts 2002 and 2008. Where the relevant statute law is not contained in the latter consolidation, that is specifically indicated in the course of this chapter.

The contract of employment or of service and contracts for services

40-002

Contracts ³ of employment were known to the law for many years as “master and servant” contracts, but this terminology now has archaic connotations, and is not found in modern legislation. There is no comprehensive definition of such a contract ⁴ and the decided cases merely indicate a number of indicia or factors which are relevant to a finding that a particular contract is one of employment, or a “contract of service”. ⁵ The presence or absence of any one such factor is not conclusive, since the decision depends on the combined effect of all the relevant factors, when those pointing towards “employment” are weighed up with those pointing against. A contract of employment or of service is generally contrasted with a contract in which an independent contractor is engaged to perform a particular task, often known as a “contract for services”. ⁶ In order to identify the contract of employment, it is useful first to describe its normal forms and then to indicate the current approach to defining it, which is developed in greater detail in the second section of this chapter.

The normal forms of the contract of employment

40-003

It could, at least until recent transformations in the practice of the labour market, be said that in the normal case of employment ⁷ the employee is selected by his or her employer, works “full-time” as part of the employer's organisation, with regular working hours, at a fixed place of work, with equipment provided by the employer, and under some degree of supervision (arranged by the employer) over his or her method of working; the employee enjoys a fixed wage or salary paid at regular intervals, fixed holidays on full pay, and has some security of employment in that he or she cannot be dismissed without notice (except for misconduct), and until the expiration of his notice of dismissal he or she is entitled to receive his or her full wages or salary, whether or not his or her employer can actually provide him or her with work to do.⁸ The instances which come before courts are those where some, but not all, of these normal features of employment are present, and it must be decided whether the departures from the normal patterns of employment are sufficiently important to justify the conclusion that the relationship is not employment for the purpose of the legal rule in question.⁹

40-004

However, a large and increasing proportion of the workforce is now employed in "marginal", "atypical" or "flexible" forms of employment, such as part-time, temporary or agency employment, as well as work under so-called "zero-hours contracts".¹⁰ In such cases, it may be even more than usually difficult to decide whether or not a contract of employment exists.¹¹

The modern approach to definition of the contract of employment

40-005

The traditional statements of what constitutes a contract of service placed most emphasis on the power of the employer to control the work of the employee,¹² when contrasting that contract with a contract with an independent contractor. The traditional distinction was that whereas the employer could merely direct what work was to be done by the independent contractor, he or she might also direct how the work was to be done by an employee.¹³ The current approach to this distinction, and hence to the definition of the contract of employment, has four main elements:

- (1)
the denial of the supremacy of the control test, whilst still acknowledging its importance¹⁴;
- (2)
the use of some form of "organisation" test¹⁵;
- (3)
a growing preference for asking whether the worker is "in business on his or her own account"—though it has been denied that this is the fundamental test¹⁶;
- (4)
the assertion that exhaustive definition is futile and that the method of classification is by the accumulation of relevant factors in each case¹⁷;
- (5)
an increasing tendency to treat the distinction as one to be applied at first instance rather than by an appellate court.¹⁸

It should also be noted that the relationship of employment is to be contrasted not only with that between employer and independent contractor but also with those of agency,¹⁹ bailment²⁰ and, at least traditionally, partnership.²¹ It may also still be important for certain purposes to distinguish between the contract of employment and the contract of apprenticeship²²; the way in which that distinction is to be drawn was considered by the Court of Appeal in Flett v Matheson.²³ The Consumer Rights Act 2015 explicitly distinguishes between “consumer contracts” and those of employment or apprenticeship.²⁴ This chapter will consider first the legal consequences which attach to employment (but not to other relationships) and then consider the tests used to decide whether a contract is one of employment, or one with an independent contractor.

Legal consequences of a contract of employment

40-006

The importance of the distinction between an employee and an independent contractor, agent, partner (or person in another such relationship), is that certain legal rules apply to the parties in a relationship of employment which do not apply (or do not normally apply) to other relationships. Some of the distinctive legal consequences of the employment relationship are:

(1)

An extensive duty (both at common law and by statute) is placed on the employer to take measures to protect the health, safety and welfare of his or her employees, and to provide safe equipment and premises, and a safe system of working.²⁵

(2)

An employer is vicariously liable for the torts committed by his or her employee “in the course of his or her employment”,²⁶ whereas the person who engages an independent contractor is not normally liable for torts committed by him or her during the work he contracted to do.²⁷

(3)

Many obligations (e.g. obedience to lawful and reasonable orders of the employer) are imposed on employers and employees as implied terms in the contract of employment, which may not be owed by or to an independent contractor.²⁸

Statutory consequences

40-007

A substantial number of statutory provisions impose duties on an employer in relation to its employees, or confer benefits on employees. For example:

(1)

The employer will be responsible for contributions in respect of an “employed earner” under the Social Security Contributions and Benefits Act 1992²⁹ and the employee will be entitled to claim the benefits payable to a person “employed in employed earner’s employment”.³⁰

(2)

The contracts of employment legislation³¹ and the redundancy payments legislation³² apply to “employees”. ³³

(3)

The unfair dismissal legislation ³⁴ applies to “employees” ³⁵ defined ³⁶ as workers under contracts of employment, other than in police service. ³⁷

(4)

The Employment Rights and Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Acts also embody a series of rights of “employees” (such as rights in relation to maternity, ³⁸ trade union membership and activities, ³⁹ and insolvency of the employer) ⁴⁰; and the procedures for handling redundancies apply to “employees” as defined in s.295 of the Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992.

(5)

The Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 2006 ⁴¹ deal with the rights and obligations relating to employers and employees on certain transfers or mergers of undertakings, businesses or parts of businesses. “Employee” is defined for this purpose as any individual who works for another person whether under a contract of service or apprenticeship or otherwise but so as not to include anyone who provides services under a contract for services. ⁴²

These and other statutory provisions assume that there is a general legal concept of “a contract of employment” or “a contract of service” by using these terms without any statutory definition. ⁴³ Thus, the trade dispute immunity contained in s.13(1) of the Trade Union and Labour Relations Act 1974 ⁴⁴ referred to the contract of employment. Similarly, the Companies Act 1948 was treated as referring to a contract of employment when it spoke of payments made “on account of wages or salary”. ⁴⁵ (The relevant provision has now been consolidated into the Insolvency Act 1986. ⁴⁶)

Classification for particular purposes

40-008

Although, as the foregoing paragraphs show, a uniform concept of the contract of employment or service seems to be assumed in legislation and judge-made law, it is nevertheless true that the court will generally classify a relationship in the light of the particular purpose for which the classification is required, and since there is no single test to determine who is an employee it may be possible for the court to classify a particular relationship as employment for the purpose of one of the foregoing rules, but not for another. ⁴⁷ Insofar as there is a current trend, it would seem to be towards unity rather than diversity of definition, but for the possible emergence of a greater willingness to engage in a different approach to classification in the safety at work field, see the decision of the Court of Appeal in Lane v Shire Roofing Company (Oxford) Ltd. ⁴⁸

The contract of service or personally to execute any work or labour: “workers” and “persons employed”

40-009

⚠ In the area of employment legislation, there is one major type of variant upon the contract “of employment” or “service” which is very extensively used and requires distinct consideration. This variant adds to the basic concept of the contract of employment by including any other contract personally to execute any work or labour. This addition brings in some contracts between employers and independent contractors, i.e. some contracts which are not contracts of employment. The conditions for this extension outside the contract of employment are that the contract shall be for personal performance by the worker⁴⁹ and probably that it shall be for work alone rather than for work and materials. The extended formula probably includes some labour-only sub-contractors who would be held not to have contracts of employment.⁵⁰ Where this kind of formula is used, it is sometimes coupled with the terminology of “workman” or “worker” to distinguish it from the simple concept of “employee”, but, as the ensuing examples show, there is a lack of consistency in this respect:

(1)

The provisions, formerly contained in the Industrial Courts Act 1919, for courts of inquiry into industrial disputes, apply in relation to trade disputes defined with reference to “workers” which includes both contracts of employment and any other contract whereby the worker undertakes to do or to perform personally any work or services for another party to the contract who is not a professional client of his.⁵¹ The provisions made by the Employment Relations Act 1999 concerning the recognition of trade unions by employers apply in relation to the same category of “workers”.⁵²

(2)

Employment Rights Act 1996 Pt II (which deals with protection of workers in relation to the payment of wages, and replaces the Truck Acts 1831–1940) applies to “workers”, the worker being defined as an individual who has entered into or works under a contract of service or apprenticeship or any other contract whereby the individual undertakes to do or perform personally any work or services for another party to the contract whose status is not by virtue of the contract that of a client or customer of any profession or business undertaking carried on by the individual.⁵³  The same formula has been used to identify the scope of a number of major pieces of recent employment legislation, such as the National Minimum Wage Act 1998,⁵⁴ the Working Time Regulations 1998,⁵⁵ and the Part-time Workers (Prevention of Less Favourable Treatment) Regulations 2000.⁵⁶

(3)

The Equality Act 2010 applies its various provisions concerning employment equality to persons in “employment”, defined as “employment under a contract of service or apprenticeship or a contract personally to execute any work or labour”.⁵⁷  In its decision in Jivraj v Hashwani,⁵⁸  the Supreme Court has adopted a narrow construction of the concept of “employment under a contract personally to execute any work or labour” as that concept is used in the various kinds of employment discrimination legislation detailed under this head of this paragraph, holding that it is in effect limited to work taking place under the direction of the employer.

(4)

The Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992 defines “trade disputes” and “trade unions” in terms of “workers” and defines “workers” as in example (2) above.⁵⁹

(5):

The concept of “worker”—defined as in example (4) above—is invoked in relation to the duty of employers to disclose information to the representatives of workers for the purposes of collective bargaining.⁶⁰

¹ Freedland, The Contract of Employment (2016). Freedland, The Personal Employment

Contract (2003); Gaymer, The Employment Relationship (2001); Brodie, The Employment Contract: Legal Principles, Drafting, and Interpretation (2008) (on Scottish law, but largely applicable to English law); and, for a comparative perspective, Freedland and Kountouris, The Legal Construction of Personal Work Relations (2011).

2. See, for instance, Hepple & Fredman, Labour Law and Industrial Relations in Great Britain, 2nd edn (1992); Deakin & Morris, Labour Law, 6th edn (2012); Harvey on Industrial Relations and Employment Law (1972 and updated).
3. On the question of whether the employment relationship should be viewed in terms of contract or as a “status” see Rideout [1966] C.L.P. 111; Kahn-Freund (1967) 30 M.L.R. 635; compare Hepple (1986) 15 I.L.J. 83.
4. Montreal Locomotive Works Ltd v Montreal and AG [1947] 1 D.L.R. 161, 169 PC; Construction Industry Training Board v Labour Force Ltd [1970] 3 All E.R. 220, 224; Maurice Graham Ltd v Brunswick (1974) 16 K.I.R. 158, 165.
5. Simmons v Heath Laundry [1910] 1 K.B. 543, 550; Short v J & W Henderson Ltd (1946) 62 T.L.R. 427, 429; Kilboy v South Eastern Fire Area Joint Committee, 1952 S.C. 280, 285–286; Market Investigations Ltd v Minister of Social Security [1969] 2 Q.B. 173, 184; Ready-Mixed Concrete (South East) Ltd v Minister of Pensions and National Insurance [1968] 2 Q.B. 497.
6. See below, para.40-005.
7. Denham v Midland Employers Mutual Assurance Ltd [1955] 2 Q.B. 437, 446.
8. All these features are considered in more detail, see below, paras 40-010—40-024.
9. Short v J. & W. Henderson Ltd (1946) 62 T.L.R. 427, 429.
10. See para.40-031, below.
11. See Lewis, Labour Law in Britain (1986), Ch.6 (Leighton) passim; Freedland, The Personal Employment Contract (2003), pp.18–22; and see below, paras 40-026—40-027.
12. e.g. Sadler v Henlock (1855) 4 E. & B. 570. For the importance of the control test in modern law, see below, paras 40-012—40-015.
13. R. v Walker (1858) 27 L.J.M.C. 207, 208. This distinction is considered in greater detail, see below, paras 40-012—40-014.
14. Ready-Mixed Concrete (South East) Ltd v Minister of Pensions and National Insurance [1968] 2 Q.B. 497; Construction Industry Training Board v Labour Force Ltd [1970] 3 All E.R. 220; Warner Holidays Ltd v Secretary of State for Social Services [1983] I.C.R. 440. See below, para.40-026.
15. Stevenson, Jordan and Harrison Ltd v Macdonald and Evans [1952] 1 T.L.R. 101, 111; cf. Market Investigations Ltd v Minister of Social Security [1969] 2 Q.B. 173, 184. See below, para.40-016.
16. Nethermere (St Neots) Ltd v Gardner [1984] I.C.R. 612, 619. But, for further evidence of the tendency, at least in the case of skilled workers, to prefer a business test—here in the form of “whose business is it?”—see Lane v Shire Roofing Company (Oxford) Ltd [1995] I.R.L.R. 593.
17. Argent v Minister of Social Security [1968] 1 W.L.R. 1749; Maurice Graham Ltd v Brunswick (1974) 16 K.I.R. 158, 165.
18. Global Plant Ltd v Secretary of State for Social Services [1972] 1 Q.B. 139; Maurice Graham Ltd v Brunswick (1974) 16 K.I.R. 158. See below, para.40-011.

- 19. See above, Ch.31.
- 20. See above, Ch.33.
- 21. For discussion, see para.40-029, below.
- 22. Compare para.40-187, and para.40-203 n.1437.
- 23. [2006] EWCA Civ 53, [2006] I.R.L.R. 277.
- 24. Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.61(2); See above, paras 38-027 et seq., above.
- 25. A new framework for the statutory duties was established by the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974. The Act is applied generally to “persons at work” (s.1(1)(a)), which includes the self-employed (s.52(1)); but within that framework certain duties are specifically imposed upon employers to their employees (s.2(1)). See below, paras 40-107—40-109.
- 26. See Atiyah, Vicarious Liability in the Law of Torts (1967).
- 27. Atiyah at pp.327 et seq. But some relationships other than that of employment may also invoke vicarious liability in tort, e.g. Ormrod v Crosville Motor Services Ltd [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1120; cf. Att-Gen for New South Wales v Perpetual Trustee Co Ltd [1955] A.C. 457.
- 28. See below, para.40-051.
- 29. Pt 1.
- 30. Social Security Contributions and Benefits Act 1992 ss.94(1), 108(1).
- 31. Contained in Employment Rights Act 1996 Pts I, IX; see below, paras 40-040 et seq., 40-163.
- 32. Contained in Employment Rights Act 1996 Pt XI; see below, paras 40-248 et seq.
- 33. Defined by Employment Rights Act 1996 s.230(1) (“employee”), s.230(2) (“contract of employment”).
- 34. See below, paras 40-214 et seq.
- 35. By Employment Rights Act 1996 s.230(1).
- 36. Employment Rights Act 1996 s.200. The exclusion of those in the police service has been held to extend to prison officers: Home Office v Robinson [1982] I.C.R. 31; and it has been held that police cadets are not “employees” within the meaning of that term in the unfair dismissal legislation: Wiltshire Police Authority v Wynn [1980] I.C.R. 649.
- 37. Employment Rights Act 1996 s.200.
- 38. See below, para.40-198.
- 39. Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992 Pt III. See below, paras 40-115—40-116.
- 40. See below, para.40-198.
- 41. SI 2006/246. See below, para.40-179.
- 42. SI 2006/246 reg.2(1).
- 43. Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988 s.19(1) (Sch.E); and see below, para.40-009, “Contract of service or personally to execute any work or labour”.

- 44. The corresponding provision, no longer confined to contracts of employment, is now contained in Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992 s.219(1).
- 45. s.319(4), dealing with preferential payments on a winding-up. See Re General Radio Co Ltd [1929] W.N. 172; Re CW & AL Hughes Ltd [1966] 1 W.L.R. 1369; Redbridge LBC v Dhinsa [2014] EWCA Civ 178, [2014] I.C.R. 834; and see below, paras 40-181—40-182.
- 46. s.386 and Sch.6 paras 9 et seq.
- 47. e.g. Wardell v Kent CC [1938] 2 K.B. 768; Hewitt v Bonvin [1940] 1 K.B. 188, 191–192 (cf. at 194–195); Denham v Midland Employers Mutual Assurance Ltd [1955] 2 Q.B. 437; but it has been suggested that where a worker who has elected to be treated as self-employed for tax purposes later claims statutory rights as an employee, the Inland Revenue should take action to recover the fiscal advantage the worker gained from being assessed under Sch.D rather than Sch.E: Young & Woods Ltd v West [1980] I.R.L.R. 201, 208, para.34 (per Ackner L.J.).
- 48. [1995] I.R.L.R. 493. Comparison should now be made with the decision in R. (on the application of Health and Safety Executive) v Pola [2009] EWCA Crim 655, where the Court of Appeal limited the application of the requirement of continuing mutuality of obligation, confirming that in this particular interpretative context there was no requirement of a continuing or overarching obligation between the periods when the workers in question were at work.
- 49. See Ingram v Barnes (1857) 7 E. & B. 115; Broadbent v Crisp [1974] I.C.R. 248. In Mirror Group Newspapers Ltd v Gunning [1986] I.C.R. 145 the Court of Appeal held that the expression referred to a contract the dominant purpose of which was the execution of personal work or labour. See Wright v Redrow Homes (North West) Ltd [2004] EWCA Civ 469, [2004] I.C.R. 1126 where the contracts of independent individual bricklaying contractors were construed as intended to require them to work “personally” so as to constitute them as “workers”; see also, nn.55, 57; compare para.40-022 nn.138–142.
- 50. Stuart v Evans (1883) 49 L.T. 138; and see below, para.40-026.
- 51. Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992 ss.215, 218.
- 52. See Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992 Sch.1A para.165, referring to s.296(a) and (b).
- 53.  Employment Rights Act 1996 s.230(3). A relatively inclusive approach to the construction of the category of “workers” was taken by the Employment Appeal Tribunal in James v Redcats (Brands) Ltd [2007] I.C.R. 1006. Compare the similarly inclusive approach to the category of “worker” taken by the Court of Appeal in Hospital Medical Group Ltd v Westwood [2012] EWCA Civ 1005, [2013] I.C.R. 415 which concerned a doctor engaged on a self-employed basis to carry out cosmetic surgical procedures, and contrast Suhail v Barking, Havering & Redbridge NHS Trust, Unreported June 11, 2015 EAT, and Pimlico Plumbers v Smith [2017] EWCA Civ 51, [2017] I.C.R. 657 which found self-employed plumbers to be workers. A recent string of cases arising from intermittent work arrangements in the so-called “on-demand economy” has similarly found individuals to be workers: see, for example, Aslam v Uber BV [2017] I.R.L.R. 4 (ET).
- 54. ss.1(2), 54(3). Many of the statutory formulations of categories of “workers” expressly include those working under contracts of apprenticeship. In Edmonds v Lawson [2000] I.C.R. 567, it was held that, on the particular facts, a pupil barrister did not have a contract of apprenticeship and hence was not a “worker” within the meaning of s.54 of the National Minimum Wage Act 1998.
- 55. SI 1998/1833 regs 3(2), 2(1). In Byrne Brothers (Formwork) Ltd v Baird [2002] I.R.L.R. 96, the Employment Appeal Tribunal held that building trade workers working as self-employed labour-only sub-contractors qualified as “workers” within the meaning of the Working Time Regulations 1998 (in which the term is defined in the same way as under s.230(6) of the Employment Rights Act 1996) although they clearly were not employed under contracts of employment and had some power to provide a substitute to carry out their work. See also n.49; compare para.40-022 nn.138–142. Compare Cotswold Developments Construction Ltd v Williams [2006] I.R.L.R. 181, which confirms the role of mutuality of obligation in deciding whether the contractual relationship of “worker” and employer exists in a given case. Compare also in this respect Community Dental Centres Ltd v Sultan-Darmon [2010] UKEAT/0532/09/1208, [2010] I.R.L.R. 1024 where the Employment Appeal Tribunal held that there was insufficient mutuality of obligation to support the conclusion that there was a contractual relation of “worker” and employer. Compare now also Conroy v Scottish Football Association Ltd [2014] UKEATS 0024/13/JW.

56. SI 2000/1551 regs 3(1), 2, 1(2). See below, para.40-155.

57.  s.83(2). See Mingeley v Pennock and Ivory [2004] EWCA Civ 328, [2004] I.C.R. 727, where the relationship between a taxi-driver and the organisation coordinating his work was held not to amount to a contract personally to execute any work or labour. It was expressly recognised in Quinnen v Hovells [1984] I.C.R. 525 that this category may include self-employed persons who comply with its requirements. See also Mirror Group Newspapers Ltd v Gunning [1986] I.C.R. 145. In Tanna v Post Office [1981] I.C.R. 374 it was held that full effect must be given to the word “personally”, so that the case was not covered of a sub-postmaster who was responsible for seeing that the work of the Post Office was carried out either by himself or by staff chosen by him. In Sheehan v Post Office Counters Ltd [1999] I.C.R. 734, the Employment Appeal Tribunal confirmed the “dominant purpose of personal performance” test as propounded in Mirror Group Newspapers Ltd v Gunning [1986] I.C.R. 145, and applied it to hold, much as in Tanna v Post Office [1981] I.C.R. 374, that a sub-postmaster was not employed under “a contract personally to do any work”. This view of the situation of those persons was confirmed in Wolstenholme v Post Office Ltd [2003] I.R.L.R. 546. Comparison should now be made with the decision in Muschett v HM Prison Service [2010] EWCA Civ 25, [2010] I.R.L.R. 451, where the Court of Appeal held that there was no contractual obligation between the agency worker and the Prison Service as the end-user of his services such as was necessary to establish a “contract personally to execute any work or labour”. In Burton v Higham [2003] I.R.L.R. 257 it was held that temporary agency workers came within this definition although not within the definition of “employees” having contracts of employment. See South East Sheffield Citizens Advice Bureau v Grayson [2004] I.R.L.R. 353 EAT, where an unpaid volunteer worker was held to fall outside this definition; and the Court of Appeal similarly so decided in X v Mid-Sussex Citizens Advice Bureau [2011] EWCA Civ 28. The Supreme Court, [2012] UKSC 59, [2013] 1 All E.R. 1038 confirmed the decision of the Court of Appeal, holding that unpaid volunteer workers were outside the scope of disability discrimination protection afforded by Directive 2000/78/EC. cf. also now Unite the Union v Nailard [2016] I.R.L.R. 906.

58.  [2011] UKSC 40, [2011] 1 W.L.R. 1872. This continues to cast some doubt, which it will require further litigation to resolve, on the standing and relevance of the authorities cited in the preceding footnote. In Halawi v WDFG UK Ltd (t/a World Duty Free) [2014] EWCA Civ 1387, [2015] I.R.L.R. 50, Arden L.J. expressed concern at the resulting exclusionary effects of this approach; though cf. also Windle v Secretary of State for Justice [2016] EWCA Civ 459, [2016] I.R.L.R. 628. In the case of personal service companies, another avenue for recourse could be found in EAD Solicitors LLP v Abrams [2015] I.R.L.R. 978 EAT.

59. ss.1, 218(1), 244(1), 296(1). Compare Smith v Carillion (JM) Ltd [2015] EWCA Civ 209; [2015] I.R.L.R. 467.

60. Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992 s.181.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 40 - Employment ¹

Section 2. - The Factors Identifying a Contract of Employment

The factors to be considered

40-010

The case law suggests ⁶¹ that the factors relevant to the process of identifying a contract of employment may usefully be listed as follows:

- (1)
the degree of control exercised by the employer;
- (2)
whether the worker's interest in the relationship involved any prospect of profit or risk of loss;
- (3)
whether the worker was properly regarded as part of the employer's organisation;
- (4)
whether the worker was carrying on business on his own account or carrying on the business of the employer;
- (5)
the provision of equipment;
- (6)
the incidence of tax and national insurance;
- (7)
the parties' own view of their relationship;
- (8)
the structure of the trade or profession concerned and the arrangements within it.

These and other aspects of the relationship that have been regarded as important to the task of classification are considered in the following paragraphs. Valuable guidance about the way classification should be approached is provided by the judgments of the Privy Council in the case of *Lee Ting Sang v Chung Chi-Keung*⁶² and of the Court of Appeal in Hall (Inspector of Taxes) v Lorimer.⁶³

The legal interpretation of the facts

40-011

The particular words found in the contract between the parties are not conclusive, since the law is only concerned with the nature or substance of the relationship which the contract has created.⁶⁴ Once the relevant facts (which may include the terms of the contract) have been ascertained, the determination whether it is a contract of employment or not is a question of placing the correct legal interpretation upon those facts.⁶⁵ “Once the primary facts are found, then it is a pure question of law as to what is the reasonable inference based on the legal interpretation of the contract”.⁶⁶ But the answer to the question involves issues of fact and of degree which it is for the tribunal of first instance to determine.⁶⁷ The recent tendency has been for appellate courts to confine their intervention to cases where they find a positive error of law at first instance; to cases, that is, where they find that there was no evidence to support the conclusion reached at first instance or where they find that no reasonable person acting judicially and properly instructed as to the relevant law could reach such a decision.⁶⁸

Control and superintendence

40-012

An employer normally has the power to direct and control the work of the employee; “but the ultimate question is not what specific orders, or whether any specific orders, were given but who is entitled to give the orders as to how the work should be done”.⁶⁹ The greater the amount of control exercised over the details of the work to be done, the more likely is the inference that the relationship is one of employment.⁷⁰ But the question of control is only one of the factors to be considered and it is far from conclusive,⁷¹ e.g. a superior employee may exercise control over subordinate employees,⁷² and even have the power to appoint and dismiss them, and yet both may be employees of the same employer. The control test must give way, within the same firm or organisation, to another factor, viz that both persons are on the same payroll.⁷³ Thus the master of a ship,⁷⁴ the general manager or director of a company,⁷⁵ or even the works foreman in a factory, may have authority to engage or dismiss employees, but this does not make them employers or prevent them from being employees.⁷⁶ The same holds for the relationship between senior civil servants and their subordinates.⁷⁷ A skilled employee will normally not be subject to actual control over the details of his or her work⁷⁸; but he or she is likely to be an employee if he or she is paid by and can be dismissed by the employer,⁷⁹ or if the employer can “give general directions as to the work the other is or is not to do”,⁸⁰ or as to working hours⁸¹ and working place,⁸² or “in incidental or collateral matters”.⁸³ However, it is generally true that the greater the degree of independence from continuous and detailed control enjoyed by the person in question, the more likely the inference that it is not a contract of employment.⁸⁴ Moreover, even if an apparent employer does exercise powers of control, discipline, engagement and dismissal over workers, the facts may be such that the workers in question are not working for the apparent employer at all, and that the apparent employer is merely licensing them to contract with others.⁸⁵

Method of control

40-013

Sometimes the distinction between an employee and an independent contractor depends on the method of control:

“... it is more usual to exercise the control desired through the medium of the contract itself when one is dealing with an independent contractor, and through day-to-day instructions during the performance of the contract when one is dealing with a servant”.⁸⁶

But some contracts may prescribe the employee's duties in great detail without ceasing to be contracts of employment, if there are other indications of the relationship of employment, e.g. the power to dispense with the services of the employee if the employer is not satisfied with the manner in which he or she carries them out.⁸⁷

Control and the corporate employer⁸⁸

40-014

Company directors with service agreements may be employees of the company, although there is virtually no control exercised over them by superiors⁸⁹; even a managing director of a “one-person” company may be an employee under a contract of service with the company he or she controls.⁹⁰ This reflects the legal separation between the company and its directors; it is an assertion of the corporate entity doctrine rather than a conscious departure from the control test. It would seem that there is no rule of law that an individual such as managing director with a controlling beneficial interest in the shares of a company cannot be regarded as an employee of the company for the purposes of employment protection legislation.⁹¹ On the other hand, the members of a cooperative association of workers do not turn themselves into employees merely by adopting a corporate form and electing a board of directors to manage their association.⁹² In Secretary of State for Business, Enterprise and Regulatory Reform v Neufeld,⁹³ the Court of Appeal provided guidance on the question of whether and when controlling shareholders and directors can claim to be treated as employees of their insolvent companies so as to enable them to claim payment from the Secretary of State.⁹⁴ While it was confirmed that a controlling shareholder and director can also be an employee, it was also indicated that there may need to be an inquiry as to whether the claimed contract of employment truly represents the character of the relationship, as in cases where an allegation is made that the purported contract is a sham.⁹⁵

Transfer of control

40-015

An employee may remain in a relationship of employment with his or her employer despite the fact that the employer has placed the employee temporarily under the control of another person⁹⁶ (e.g. an independent contractor⁹⁷). Thus the temporary transfer of an employee in connection with the hire of equipment—as where a crane driver is provided when a crane is hired out—does not normally result in a transfer of the contract of employment away from the original employer,⁹⁸ who may, moreover, be estopped from denying that he or she is the employer where no formal transfer has been agreed with the employee.⁹⁹ However, in a case where a company contracted for the provision of drivers for the operation of a private parcel delivery by another company, it was held by the Court of Appeal that the drivers were transferred into the temporary employment of the latter company, because the latter company had a sufficient degree of control over the work of the drivers.¹⁰⁰ The mere fact that a nurse is under the control of a surgeon while an operation is in progress in an operating theatre does not mean that the nurse becomes the surgeon's employee, at least not for the purposes of vicarious liability.¹⁰¹ If the owner or occupier of premises where work is in progress retains some control over the work in order to maintain some degree of supervision over the activities on his or her premises¹⁰² he or she will not, merely on that account, become an employer of those doing the work.¹⁰³ However, special considerations apply where an employment agency arranges for a worker to carry out work under the control of the agency's client. This situation is considered in a later paragraph.¹⁰⁴

The “organisation” test

40-016

An employee is usually a regular unit in the complex organisation of a business: he or she is an integral part of the firm, not a casual or temporary person engaged only for the purpose of completing a specific task which is accessory to the main business.¹⁰⁵ Thus, doctors and nurses who are paid by a hospital authority, and are part of the regular staff of the hospital, are employees¹⁰⁶, but a consultant or anaesthetist selected and employed by the patient themselves may not be an employee of the hospital authority.¹⁰⁷ The organisation test has more recently been reformulated in a negative form as: "Is the person who has engaged himself or herself to perform these services performing them as a person in business on his or her own account?".¹⁰⁸ Expressed in that form, this test has become one of the most significant criteria for identifying the contract of employment.¹⁰⁹ That this is the case was confirmed by the judgment of the Privy Council in the case of Lee Ting-Sang v Chung Chi-Keung.¹¹⁰

Power of selection and appointment

40-017

Usually, it is one indication of "employment" that the employer has the power to select and to appoint the employee,¹¹¹ but the absence of this power is not conclusive against a contract of employment, e.g. where shipowners accepted dockers on a rota basis.¹¹² The employer will often delegate the power of selection of employees, sometimes to a superior employee,¹¹³ sometimes even to an independent contractor.¹¹⁴ Although a statute may give to a specified official the power of making appointments to posts in a public body, the latter will be the employer.¹¹⁵ The power of a patient to select a surgeon to perform an operation used to be an important factor (especially when the patient pays the surgeon) indicating that the hospital is not the employer of the surgeon in this respect.¹¹⁶

The power to dismiss or suspend

40-018

The power of dismissal¹¹⁷ or suspension is an important indication of the relationship of employment¹¹⁸: although a person may have no right to control the manner in which another does work, if the former can dispense with the services of the latter by giving a certain period of notice, the relationship will normally be one of employment,¹¹⁹ since an independent contractor cannot be "dismissed". But other factors may outweigh the power to dismiss: thus, although a cloakroom attendant could be suspended or dismissed by restaurant proprietors, she was remunerated only by tips, did not need to keep any fixed working hours, and was free not to attend whenever she pleased: hence she was held not to be employed under a contract of service.¹²⁰ The fact that a public body has only a restricted power of dismissal does not preclude a contract of employment.¹²¹

Payment of wages or salary

40-019

The payment of "wages" or "salary"¹²² or of holiday pay¹²³ is another important pointer to the relationship of employment. Normally a regular, fixed sum is payable to an employee, but it is possible for an employee to be remunerated solely by tips received from others¹²⁴ or wholly on a commission basis.¹²⁵ Similarly, the manner in which the remuneration is to be calculated may point to a contract of employment; the typical employee is paid according to time worked,¹²⁶ but sometimes an employee may be paid by the piece,¹²⁷ and sometimes by commission.¹²⁸ If, however, payment is "by the job", i.e. in relation to a complete task, this points, though not conclusively, to a contract with an independent contractor.¹²⁹

Supply of equipment and ownership of assets

40-020

If one party to the contract supplies the tools, machines or equipment used by the other party, this points to a contract of employment, ¹³⁰ since an independent contractor normally provides these for herself or himself. ¹³¹ In Ready-Mixed Concrete (South-East) Ltd v Minister of Pensions and National Insurance ¹³² an owner-driver of a concretemixing lorry was held to be an independent contractor largely by reference to his ownership of the lorry, despite the facts that the lorry was subject to a hirepurchase agreement with an associated company and that the driver was in various senses required to work as part of the company's organisation.

The fixing of times and place of work

40-021

The power to fix the hours or times when a person is to work, ¹³³ or when he or she is to take his holidays, is another pointer to a contract of employment; another is the power to direct where he or she must work. ¹³⁴ But these factors are not conclusive: an independent contractor may work regularly on the employer's premises, ¹³⁵ whilst an employee may have complete freedom as to times of work within the period of a particular task assigned to the employee. ¹³⁶ These factors are closely linked with the question of the extent of the obligation to work or to employ, which is discussed in a later paragraph. ¹³⁷

Personal performance

40-022

A person cannot normally be an employee if he or she is entitled to delegate the entire performance of his or her work to another person ¹³⁸; but a person may possibly be an employee, although he or she personally (with the permission of the employer) employs assistants to help. ¹³⁹ The Court of Appeal has more recently reasserted the requirement of personal performance, ¹⁴⁰ in the form of a holding that the presence of a substitution clause in a lorry driver's work contract deprived that contract of the mutuality of obligation ¹⁴¹ of personal performance which would have been necessary to identify it as a contract of employment. ¹⁴²

The extent of the obligation to work or to employ

40-023

If the contract entitles ¹⁴³ some person to the full-time or exclusive services of the other person, this points to the contract being one of employment. ¹⁴⁴ But if it is left entirely to one party to the contract to choose whether to do any work or not (e.g. a travelling salesperson wholly on commission), there is almost certainly not a contract of employment. ¹⁴⁵ The courts may exceptionally recognise that there is a short-term contract of employment for each assignment undertaken or performed. ¹⁴⁶ However, the more likely analysis in such a case will be that there is no continuous contract in being between the parties, and that the short-term contracts in respect of each task are not contracts of employment. ¹⁴⁷ The case law at one stage seemed to suggest that there could be a continuing contract of employment although the employer had a power of indefinite lay-off. ¹⁴⁸ It has since been held ¹⁴⁹ that for there to be a continuing contract of employment linking up intermittent periods of employment (a so-called "global" contract of employment), there must be some degree of continuing mutual obligation on the employer to offer employment and on the employee to accept employment. The requisite degree of mutuality of obligation cannot be inferred from a "course of dealing" if that amounts to no more than the fact of intermittent employment with one employer, even over a long period of time. ¹⁵⁰ Where the employer of a casual worker has clearly disclaimed from the outset any continuing obligation to provide any work at all, it may amount to an error of law to hold that a continuing contract of employment exists with that worker between periods of actual employment. ¹⁵¹ The decision of the House of Lords in Carmichael v National Power Plc ¹⁵² reinforces the stringency with which the mutuality of obligation requirement is applied in order to decide whether casual workers have continuing contracts of employment. Difficult questions continue to arise with regard to multilateral employment situations, such as those involving service recipients or customers of a proprietor/employer. In Stringfellow Restaurants Ltd v Quashie, ¹⁵³ the Court of Appeal held that an Employment Tribunal had been entitled to conclude that the relation between a lap dancer and the club for which or at which she worked did not consist of a continuing contract of employment, primarily on the basis of an absence of continuing contractual obligations—thus identifying that worker as self-employed rather than an employee. ¹⁵⁴

Payment of social security contributions and income tax

40-024

The deduction by the employer of income tax and employed earner's social security contributions under the PAYE system (and formerly the payment of National Insurance contributions by the employer stamping the employee's national insurance card) are indications that the parties themselves view their relationship as one of employment. ¹⁵⁵ But neither this nor the failure to make these payments or deductions is conclusive as to the nature of the relationship in the eyes of the law. ¹⁵⁶

The intention of the parties

40-025

⚠ A number of decisions have considered the question of whether an express intention to constitute an employment relationship in the form of a contract for services succeeds in excluding the statutory effects accorded to the employment relationship when constituted as a contract of service. ¹⁵⁷ The result of those decisions would seem to be as follows. A genuine intention to transform an employment relationship into a situation where the worker is self-employed will be effective, as where the worker becomes an independent commission agent. ¹⁵⁸ Moreover, where a situation is in doubt or ambiguous, so that it can be brought under one relationship or the other, it is open to the parties by agreement to stipulate what the legal situation between them shall be. ¹⁵⁹ However, while the expression of the parties' intention may be a relevant factor, it is not a conclusive factor in deciding what is the true nature of the contract; and where there is no written contract, the court is entitled to find contractual terms by implication. ¹⁶⁰ Hence,

“It is by now well settled that the label which the parties choose to use to describe their relationship cannot alter or decide their true relationship; but, in deciding what the relationship is, the expression by them of their true intention is relevant but not conclusive. Its importance may vary according to the facts of the case.” ¹⁶¹

Moreover even where a worker has deliberately and openly chosen to be classified as self-employed, he or she may resile from that position where he or she is objectively an employee and would if held to his or her chosen classification be estopped from invoking a statute made for his or her benefit. ¹⁶² In Protectacoat Firthglow Ltd v Szilagyi, ¹⁶³ the Court of Appeal held that, in determining whether a person, who was working under documents purporting to create a partnership agreement and a service agreement with the partnership, was its employee within the meaning of s.230 of the Employment Rights Act 1996, the employment tribunal was entitled, if the document purporting to retain the services of a person did not represent the true relationship of the parties, to treat it as a sham and to assume jurisdiction on the footing that a contract of employment existed. A similar approach has since been taken both by the Court of Appeal and the Supreme Court in Autoclenz Ltd v Belcher. ¹⁶⁴ ⚠ The Supreme Court confirmed that the approach should be to identify the actual legal obligations between the parties by ascertaining what was actually agreed between the parties, either as set out in the written terms, or, if it is alleged that those terms are not accurate, what is proved to be their actual agreement at the time the contract was concluded. The Supreme Court, moreover, agreed with the Court of Appeal's view that:

“... while employment is a matter of contract, the factual matrix in which the contract is cast is not ordinarily the same as that of an arm’s length commercial contract” and asserted that “the relative bargaining power of the parties must be taken into account in deciding whether the terms of any written agreement in truth represent what was agreed.”¹⁶⁵

Special cases: (1) labour-only sub-contracting

40-026

Labour-only sub-contracting is the practice by which a main contractor on a project secures the labour required by contracting with one or more sub-contractors. It is normally the intention that there will be no contract of employment involved in this subcontracting relationship. Labour-only sub-contracting became widespread in the building industry.¹⁶⁶ In relation to that industry, successive Finance Acts have made provision for deduction in respect of income tax to be made by main contractors from any payments to labour-only sub-contractors unless the subcontractor holds a certificate of exemption.¹⁶⁷ Various different kinds of labouronly sub-contracting arrangement are found in practice, and their legal effects are a matter of difficulty. There are two main types of sub-contracting arrangement: the two-party arrangement where the worker contracts directly with the main contractor, and the three-party arrangement where there is an intermediary, such as a gang-leader or a sub-contracting company, who contracts with the main contractor to provide labour and with the worker to obtain labour. In any given case, there may be room for argument about whether the arrangement is of the two-party or three-party type. If the arrangement is of the two-party type, the contract will normally purport to be a contract for services and not a contract of employment. The courts have sometimes found that there is indeed no contract of employment in such cases¹⁶⁸; but the arrangement may be held to fall within statutes dealing with the employment relationship¹⁶⁹ and has even been classified as a true contract of service despite the parties’ clear intention that it should be regarded as a contract for services.¹⁷⁰ A variant upon the two-party type of arrangement is that whereby the worker contracts as one of a firm of partners; in this case the existence of a contract of employment is clearly negated. If the labour-only sub-contracting arrangement is held to be of the three-party type, more complex questions arise. The contract between the main contractor and the intermediate sub-contractor will normally not be a contract of employment.¹⁷¹ The contract between the intermediate sub-contractor and the worker may be a contract of employment,¹⁷² or a contract for services.¹⁷³ An important decision in favour of the contract of employment analysis was that of the Privy Council on appeal in Lee-Ting Sang v Chung Chi-Keung.¹⁷⁴ It should follow from the three-party classification of the arrangement that there is no contract (of employment or for services) between the main contractor and the worker; but there may be held to be an employment relationship between them for statutory purposes.¹⁷⁵ Some statutes have expressly deemed the worker an employee of the main contractor.¹⁷⁶

Special cases: (2) agency workers

40-027

⚠ Where, as now happens in an increasingly wide range of occupations, employment is obtained via an employment agency, radically divergent analyses of the legal relationships may occur. The worker may be held to have contracted with the agency and not with the client under whose control he or she is placed.¹⁷⁷ In other cases, the worker may be held to have contracted with the client and merely to have received an introduction from the agency.¹⁷⁸ On either view, it has then to be decided whether the worker is an employee. It has been suggested that in the case where the worker is under contract with the agency, there is a sui generis type of contract for the provision of services to a third party.¹⁷⁹ It has also been held¹⁸⁰ that where temporaries on the books of an employment agency were under no obligation to accept bookings offered by the employers, who in turn had no obligation to find work for their temporaries, the relationship between the employers and the temporaries lacked the elements of continuity and care associated with the contract of employment. Some labour-only sub-contracting arrangements are comparable to employment via an agency, ¹⁸¹ and both systems can raise problems insofar as they can involve the avoidance of the ordinary legal consequences of employment under contracts of employment. ¹⁸² The case law is rather fluctuating on the question whether and when an agency worker has a contract of employment either with the agency or with its client business to which the agency sends the worker. The prevailing trend seemed to have been set by the assertion in the leading case of McMeechan v Secretary of State for Employment ¹⁸³ that there is no rule of law against there being a contract of employment either with the agency or with the client business. However, the Court of Appeal in Dacas v Brook Street Bureau (UK) Ltd, held that the temporary agency worker was not an “employee” of the agency, though she might be an employee of the end-user of her services. ¹⁸⁴ The approach in the Dacas case was applied to similar effect in Bunce v Postworth Ltd (t/a Skyblue). ¹⁸⁵ There was at one stage in recent years a readiness to discern an “implied contract of employment” arising between the worker and the client business arising out of an assignment or series of assignments over a long period of time. ¹⁸⁶ However, the Court of Appeal ruled in James v Greenwich BC ¹⁸⁷ that such a contract can be implied only where it is “necessary” to do so, ¹⁸⁸  their view being that if this represented a lacuna in the law determining the rights of agency workers, it could be filled only by legislation. The fact that an individual has a contract of employment with one employer does not preclude their being a worker in the extended agency work sense under s.43K of the Employment Rights Act 1996. ¹⁸⁹  The conduct of the business of employment agencies is regulated by the Employment Agencies Act 1973, ¹⁹⁰ and by regulations made thereunder. ¹⁹¹  The conditions of employment of agency workers are further regulated by the Agency Workers Regulations 2010. ¹⁹² The main effect of these Regulations is to provide a right on the part of agency workers, after a qualifying period of 12 weeks’ employment, to the same basic terms and conditions of employment as those which they would have been accorded if they had been recruited directly by the hirer of their services from the temporary work agency. ¹⁹³

Special cases: (3) office-holders

40-028

There is authority to the effect that the fact that a person is the holder of a public ecclesiastical or tenured office does not ipso facto prevent that person from being classified as working under a contract of employment. ¹⁹⁴ Those authorities show that the holding of office neither requires nor excludes the conclusion that the holder is an employee, but simply leaves that question to be decided according to the normal criteria. ¹⁹⁵ A different set of criteria exists to determine who is an office-holder ¹⁹⁶; the two questions are not the same. There is a further, and again quite distinct, question as to whether a contract of employment contains:

“... elements of a public character which would enable the court to extend to the employee the protection flowing from the right to be heard enjoyed by the holders of an office.” ¹⁹⁷

Such a “right to be heard” may exist in conjunction with a contract of employment ¹⁹⁸ or in the absence of a contract of employment ¹⁹⁹; its presence or absence is in no way conclusive of whether or not the legal relationship takes the form of a contract of employment.

Special cases: (4) Partnerships and Limited Liability Partnerships

40-029

The traditional assumption that Partnership and Employment status are mutually exclusive categories ²⁰⁰ has come under scrutiny in the Supreme Court’s decision in Bates van Winkelhof v Clyde & Co LLP. ²⁰¹ In multi-tiered partnerships, the question as to whether an individual is a genuine

“co-adventurer” or an employee under the traditional tests will therefore become increasingly important. ²⁰² In the case of Limited Liability Partnerships, ²⁰³ previous decisions denying employee status to salaried LLP partners ²⁰⁴ are similarly likely to come under scrutiny. ²⁰⁵

Special cases: (5) employee shareholders

40-030

The Growth and Infrastructure Act 2013 s.31 introduced a new employment status, that of “employee shareholder”. Under this provision, if an employee or person entering into employment agrees to become an “employee shareholder” in consideration of receipt of shares to the value of £2,000 or more in the employing company, he or she becomes subject to a special kind of contract of employment of which the particular incident is that certain statutory rights normally enjoyed by employees under contracts of employment are not applicable—notably, the general right not to be unfairly dismissed, and to a redundancy payment upon dismissal by reason of redundancy. Reference should be made to the detailed legislation in order to ascertain the exact conditions upon which this new status may be conferred and the exact consequences that it will have. ²⁰⁶

Special cases: (6) zero-hours contracts

40-031

⚠ There has been considerable recent discussion of so-called zero-hours contracts, that is to say arrangements for employment without any fixed minimum working hours. Such arrangements will be regarded as constituting contracts of employment if the usual tests are met, in particular the requirement of continuing mutual obligation. ²⁰⁷ Following extensive consultation, provision was made in the Small Business, Enterprise and Employment Act 2015 to deal with one of the problems with such arrangements by ensuring that those working under zero-hours contracts cannot be required to work exclusively for the one employer concerned. ²⁰⁸ ⚠

-
1. Freedland, The Contract of Employment (2016). Freedland, The Personal Employment Contract (2003); Gaymer, The Employment Relationship (2001); Brodie, The Employment Contract: Legal Principles, Drafting, and Interpretation (2008) (on Scottish law, but largely applicable to English law); and, for a comparative perspective, Freedland and Kountouris, The Legal Construction of Personal Work Relations (2011).
 - ^{61.} Addison v London Philharmonic Ltd [1981] I.C.R. 261, 271. See also Warner Holidays Ltd v Secretary of State for Social Services [1983] I.C.R. 440; Collins (1990) 10 O.J.L.S. 353.
 - ^{62.} [1990] 2 A.C. 374.
 - ^{63.} [1994] I.C.R. 218.
 - ^{64.} Short v JW Henderson Ltd (1946) 62 T.L.R. 427; Morren v Swinton and Pendlebury BC [1965] 1 W.L.R. 576, 581; see below, para.40-025.
 - ^{65.} Benmax v Austin Motor Co Ltd [1955] A.C. 370.
 - ^{66.} Morren v Swinton and Pendlebury BC, see above, at 583. cf. cases decided under the old Workmen's Compensation Acts: Bobbey v WM Crosbie & Co Ltd (1915) 114 L.T. 244; Easdown v Cobb [1940] 1 All E.R. 49. (This was treated as a matter of law if it depended on the interpretation of a written contract: Performing Right Society Ltd v Mitchell and Booker (Palais de Danse) Ltd [1924] 1 K.B. 762.)

- 67. O'Kelly v Trusthouse Forte Plc [1983] I.C.R. 728.
- 68. Global Plant Ltd v Secretary of State for Health and Social Security [1972] 1 Q.B. 139; Maurice Graham Ltd v Brunswick (1974) 16 K.I.R. 158. The foregoing passage of text was judicially cited in Addison v London Philharmonic Ltd [1981] I.C.R. 268, D-F. This tendency has been confirmed and re-emphasised in O'Kelly v Trusthouse Forte Plc [1983] I.C.R. 728; and Nethermere (St Neots) Ltd v Gardner [1984] I.C.R. 612.
- 69. Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v Coggins and Griffith (Liverpool) Ltd [1947] A.C. 1, 17. See also Performing Right Society Ltd v Mitchell and Booker (Palais de Danse) Ltd [1924] 1 K.B. 762 at 776-779.
- 70. Simmons v Heath Laundry [1910] 1 K.B. 543, 550; Whittaker v Minister of Pensions and National Insurance [1967] 1 Q.B. 156.
- 71. In Ready-Mixed Concrete (South East) Ltd v Minister of Pensions and National Insurance [1968] 2 Q.B. 497, it was ruled that control by the employer was not sufficient to identify the contract as one of employment and that the other aspects of the contract must not be inconsistent with the relationship of employment; cf. Hitchcock v Post Office [1980] I.C.R. 100 (sub-postmaster not employee of Post Office despite their control of him). Compare also Jennings v Forestry Commission [2008] EWCA Civ 581, [2008] I.C.R. 988.
- 72. This will of necessity be the position when a corporation employs several persons. cf. Re Church of England Curates [1912] 2 Ch. 563.
- 73. See below, paras 40-016—40-019.
- 74. Hedley v Pinkney & Sons SS Co Ltd [1894] A.C. 222.
- 75. Performing Right Society Ltd v Caryl Theatrical Syndicates Ltd [1924] 1 K.B. 1. See also Folami v Nigerline (UK) Ltd [1978] I.C.R. 277; Eaton v Robert Eaton Ltd [1988] I.C.R. 302 (managing director).
- 76. Bird v O'Neal [1960] A.C. 907, 920.
- 77. Bainbridge v Postmaster-General [1906] 1 K.B. 178; Fraser v Balfour (1918) 87 L.J.K.B. 1116 HL.
- 78. Simmons v Heath Laundry [1910] 1 K.B. 543, 553; Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v Coggins & Griffith (Liverpool) Ltd [1947] A.C. 1. (See also the “organisation” test: see below, para.40-016.)
- 79. Morren v Swinton and Pendlebury BC [1965] 1 W.L.R. 576.
- 80. Stagecraft Ltd v Minister of National Insurance, 1952 S.C. 288, 302; Whittaker v Minister of Pensions and National Insurance [1967] 1 Q.B. 156.
- 81. e.g. if the contract provided that the person was to devote the whole of his working time to the employer: Whittaker v Minister of Pensions and National Insurance, above, at 167; cf. Greater London Council v Minister of Social Security [1971] 1 W.L.R. 641 (school dentist). See below, para.40-021.
- 82. Walker v Crystal Palace Football Club Ltd [1910] 1 K.B. 87 (professional football player); Zuijjs v Wirth Brothers Pty Ltd (1955) 93 C.L.R. 561, 572 (acrobat); Whittaker v Minister of Pensions and National Insurance, above (trapeze artist). See below, para.40-021.
- 83. Zuijjs v Wirth Brothers Pty Ltd, above, at 571. Doctors employed by a hospital are another illustration: see below, para.40-016.
- 84. Simmons v Heath Laundry [1910] 1 K.B. 543, 550; cf. Challinor v Taylor [1972] I.C.R. 129;

- Addison v London Philharmonic Ltd* [1981] I.C.R. 261 (part-time orchestral musicians self-employed where although there was control, it was the minimum necessary to do the work); to like effect is Midland Sinfonia Concert Society Ltd v Secretary of State for Social Services [1981] I.C.R. 454 at 466 F-G. Contrast now, however, White v Troutbeck SA [2013] EWCA Civ 1171, [2013] I.R.L.R. 949 (low level of day-to-day control not enough to negate employment status).
- 85. Cheng Yuen v Royal Hong Kong Golf Club [1988] I.C.R. 131 (golf caddie not employee of golf club). Compare now Stringfellow Restaurants Ltd v Quashie [2012] EWCA Civ 1735, [2013] I.R.L.R. 99; para.40-023 below.
- 86. Atiyah, Vicarious Liability in the Law of Torts (1967), p.42.
- 87. Amalgamated Engineering Union v Minister of Pensions and National Insurance [1963] 1 W.L.R. 441, 454. See below, para.40-018.
- 88. See J. Prassl, The Concept of the Employer (2015) 19ff.
- 89. Trussed Steel Concrete Co Ltd v Green [1946] Ch. 115, 121; see Parsons v AJ Parsons & Sons Ltd [1978] I.C.R. 456. See now also Stack v Ajar-Tec Ltd [2015] EWCA Civ 46; [2015] I.R.L.R. 474.
- 90. Lee v Lee's Air Farming Ltd [1961] A.C. 12 (workman's compensation case). See also Folami v Nigerline (UK) Ltd [1978] I.C.R. 277; Eaton v Robert Eaton Ltd [1988] I.C.R. 302 (managing director). See now also Secretary of State for Business, Innovation and Skills v Knight [2014] I.R.L.R. 605 EAT: sole shareholder and managing director can be employee of company so as to claim redundancy payment in insolvency.
- 91. Bottrill v Secretary of State for Trade and Industry [2000] 1 All E.R. 915. The compatibility of majority shareholding with employee status was further confirmed by the decision of the Court of Appeal in Sellars Arenascene Ltd v Connolly (No.2) [2001] I.R.L.R. 222. Compare also Nesbitt v Secretary of State for Trade and Industry [2007] I.R.L.R. 847.
- 92. Winfield v London Philharmonic Ltd [1979] I.C.R. 726; contrast Drym Fabricators Ltd v Johnson [1981] I.C.R. 274 which was decided on a simple corporate entity basis; sed quaere.
- 93. [2009] EWCA Civ 280, [2007] I.C.R. 1183.
- 94. Under Pt XII of the Employment Rights Act 1996, see para.40-199.
- 95. As to which, see below, para.40-025.
- 96. Wardell v Kent CC [1938] 2 K.B. 768, 783. But see now Construction Industry Training Board v Labour Force Ltd [1970] 3 All E.R. 220; Cross v Redpath Dorman Long Ltd [1978] I.C.R. 730 and see below, para.40-026.
- 97. Clelland v Edward Lloyd Ltd [1938] 1 K.B. 272.
- 98. Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v Coggins & Griffith Ltd [1947] A.C. 1.
- 99. Smith v Blandford Gee Cementation Ltd [1970] 3 All E.R. 154.
- 100. Interlink Express Parcels Ltd v Night Trunkers Ltd [2001] R.T.R. 23. Various passages from the present chapter were quoted with approval by Arden L.J.
- 101. Morris v Winsbury-White [1937] 4 All E.R. 494. See also Perionowsky v Freeman (1866) 4 F. & F. 977.
- 102. Or in order to protect his property: Doggett v Waterloo Taxi-Cab Co Ltd [1910] 2 K.B. 336, 341, 343.

- 103. Marrow v Flimby and Broughton Moor Coal and Fire Brick Co Ltd [1898] 2 Q.B. 588; Fitzpatrick v Evans & Co [1902] 1 K.B. 505; Gould v Minister of National Insurance [1951] 1 K.B. 731.
- 104. See below, para.40-027; cf. Road Transport Industry Training Board v Ongaro [1977] I.C.R. 523.
- 105. Stevenson, Jordan and Harrison Ltd v Macdonald and Evans [1952] 1 T.L.R. 101, 111; Bank voor Handel en Scheepvaart NV v Slatford [1953] 1 Q.B. 248, 295; Roe v Minister of Health [1954] 2 Q.B. 66, 90.
- 106. Cassidy v Ministry of Health [1951] 2 K.B. 343, 362.
- 107. Roe v Minister of Health, above, at 82; Higgins v North Western Metropolitan Regional Hospital Board [1954] 1 W.L.R. 411. See Atiyah at pp.87-89.
- 108. Market Investigations Ltd v Minister of Social Security [1969] 2 Q.B. 173, 187.
- 109. Ferguson v John Dawson Ltd [1976] I.R.L.R. 346, 352; Young & Woods Ltd v West [1980] I.R.L.R. 201, 205; Hitchcock v Post Office [1980] I.C.R. 100, 105 E-H; Addison v London Philharmonic Ltd [1981] I.C.R. 261, 272D-273C.
- 110. [1990] 2 A.C. 374.
- 111. See the cases cited in n.109, see above.
- 112. Short v J & W Henderson Ltd (1946) 62 T.L.R. 427, 429.
- 113. cf. Parker v Walker, 1961 S.L.T. 252.
- 114. Morren v Swinton and Pendlebury BC [1965] 1 W.L.R. 576.
- 115. Kilboy v South Eastern Fire Joint Area Committee, 1952 S.C. 280.
- 116. Roe v Minister of Health [1954] 2 Q.B. 66, 82, see above, para.40-016. cf. Hall v Lees [1904] 2 K.B. 602.
- 117. "Dismissal" is not relevant for this purpose if it merely means that the engagement of a person on a day-to-day basis will not be continued in future: Doggett v Waterloo Taxi-Cab Co Ltd [1910] 2 K.B. 336.
- 118. Short v J & W Henderson Ltd (1946) 62 T.L.R. 427, 429; Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v Coggins and Griffith (Liverpool) Ltd [1947] A.C. 1, 20.
- 119. Binding v Great Yarmouth Port and Haven Commissioners (1923) 16 B.W.C.C. 28; Amalgamated Engineering Union v Ministry of Pensions and National Insurance [1963] 1 W.L.R. 441, 454; Ferguson v John Dawson Ltd [1976] I.R.L.R. 346, 349; cf. Drym Fabricators Ltd v Johnson [1981] I.C.R. 274, 275, G-H.
- 120. Pauley v Kenaldo Ltd [1953] 1 W.L.R. 187, 191.
- 121. Barber v Manchester Regional Hospital Board [1958] 1 W.L.R. 181.
- 122. Short v J & W Henderson Ltd (1946) 62 T.L.R. 427, 429.
- 123. Hobbs v Royal Arsenal Co-operative Society Ltd (1930) 23 B.W.C.C. 254; cf. Wright v Att-Gen for Tasmania (1954) 94 C.L.R. 409.
- 124. Pauley v Kenaldo Ltd [1953] 1 W.L.R. 187, 191; Benjamin v Minister of Pensions and National Insurance [1960] 2 Q.B. 519.

- ^{125.} Hobbs v Royal Arsenal Co-operative Society Ltd, above. cf. Parker v Walker, 1961 S.L.T. 252. See Tyne & Clyde Warehouses Ltd v Hamerton [1978] I.C.R. 661; 102 Social Club v Bickerton [1977] I.C.R. 911.
- ^{126.} But sometimes an independent contractor is paid by time: Robinson v Scarisbrick (1939) 32 B.W.C.C. 285.
- ^{127.} Sadler v Henlock (1855) 4 E. & B. 570.
- ^{128.} See n.125, above.
- ^{129.} See below, para.40-023.
- ^{130.} Binding v Great Yarmouth Port and Haven Commissioners (1923) 16 B.W.C.C. 28. Compare, for the converse situation, Jennings v Forestry Commission [2008] EWCA Civ 581, [2008] I.C.R. 988.
- ^{131.} Humberstone v Northern Timber Mills (1949) 79 C.L.R. 389; cf. Hitchcock v Post Office [1980] I.C.R. 100, 108H.
- ^{132.} [1968] 2 Q.B. 497.
- ^{133.} M'Cready v DJ Dunlop & Co (1900) 2 F. 1027, 1031. cf. Neale v Atlas Products (Vic) Pty Ltd (1954) 94 C.L.R. 419.
- ^{134.} Simmons v Heath Laundry Co [1910] 1 K.B. 543, 550; Re Ashley and Smith Ltd [1918] 2 Ch. 378; Stagecraft Ltd v Minister of National Insurance, 1952 S.C. 288.
- ^{135.} Templeton v William Parkin & Co Ltd (1929) 140 L.T. 519; Westall Richardson Ltd v Roulson [1954] 1 W.L.R. 905.
- ^{136.} Market Investigations v Minister of Social Security [1969] 2 Q.B. 173.
- ^{137.} See below, para.40-012.
- ^{138.} Braddell v Baker (1911) 104 L.T. 673, 676. cf. Hill v Beckett [1915] 1 K.B. 578; Pauley v Kenaldo Ltd [1953] 1 W.L.R. 187, 191. See Atiyah, Vicarious Liability in the Law of Torts (1967), pp.59-62; cf. Hitchcock v Post Office [1980] I.C.R. 100, 109 AC.
- ^{139.} This was assumed in Robinson v Hill [1910] 1 K.B. 94. In certain cases, the assistants may be employees of the main employer, e.g. if he has delegated to the superior employee the power to engage assistants: see Bobbey v WM Crosbie & Co Ltd (1915) 114 L.T. 244; cf. above, para.40-017.
- ^{140.} In Express and Echo Publications Ltd v Tanton [1999] I.C.R. 693. The requirement of personal performance was strictly maintained and applied in Staffordshire Sentinel Newspapers Ltd v Potter [2004] I.R.L.R. 752 EAT, so that an express power for the worker to substitute another worker was treated as negating a contract of employment although the power was subject to the approval of the employer. Compare also para.40-009, nn.53, 57, 58.
- ^{141.} As to which see below, para.40-023.
- ^{142.} Compare, however, the decision of the Employment Appeal Tribunal in Macfarlane v Glasgow City Council [2001] I.R.L.R. 7, to the effect that the worker's capacity to perform via a substitute in exceptional circumstances is not necessarily inconsistent with the existence of a contract of employment.
- ^{143.} The mere fact that a person has for a long time worked exclusively for another is not relevant: Humberstone v Northern Timber Mills (1949) 79 C.L.R. 389.

- 144. Bauman v Hulton Press Ltd [1952] 2 All E.R. 1121, 1124. See also Hobbs v Royal Arsenal Co-operative Society Ltd (1930) 23 B.W.C.C. 254.
- 145. Egginton v Reader [1936] 1 All E.R. 7; Chadwick v Pioneer Private Telephone Co Ltd [1941] 1 All E.R. 522; Pauley v Kenaldo Ltd [1953] 1 W.L.R. 187, 191; WHPT Association v Social Services Secretary [1981] I.C.R. 737, 750H-751C; cf. also Mailway (Southern) Ltd v Willsher [1978] I.C.R. 511 (part-time packer); but contrast Airfix Footwear Ltd v Cope [1978] I.C.R. 1210 (regularly employed outworker held an employee). Compare now Mingeley v Pennock and Ivory [2004] EWCA Civ 328, [2004] I.C.R. 727, where the relationship between a taxi-driver and the organisation coordinating his work was held not to amount to a contract personally to execute any work or labour.
- 146. Market Investigations Ltd v Minister for Social Security [1969] 2 Q.B. 173; but they did not so recognise in O'Kelly v Trusthouse Forte Plc [1983] I.C.R. 728; Nethermere (St Neots) Ltd v Gardiner [1984] I.C.R. 612.
- 147. Writers Guild of GB v BBC [1974] I.C.R. 234.
- 148. Puttick v John Wright & Sons (Blackhall) Ltd [1972] I.C.R. 457; Airfix Footwear Ltd v Cope [1978] I.C.R. 1210.
- 149. O'Kelly v Trusthouse Forte Plc [1983] I.C.R. 728; Nethermere (St Neots) Ltd v Gardiner [1984] I.C.R. 612; Hellyer Bros Ltd v McLeod [1987] I.C.R. 526.
- 150. Hellyer Bros Ltd v McLeod [1987] I.C.R. 526.
- 151. Clark v Oxfordshire HA [1998] I.R.L.R. 125 (staff nurse on "nurse bank", but stated to have no entitlement to guaranteed or continuous work).
- 152. [1999] I.C.R. 126 (power station guides working on casual as required basis held not to have continuing contracts of employment). That decision of the House of Lords was applied by the Court of Appeal in Stevedoring & Haulage Services Ltd v Fuller [2001] EWCA Civ 651, [2001] I.R.L.R. 627 to the effect that dock workers working on an "ad hoc and casual basis" were held to have no continuing contracts of employment. Compare, however, Cornwall CC v Prater [2006] EWCA Civ 102, [2006] I.C.R. 731, where the Court of Appeal displayed a greater willingness than had previously been shown to regard a sequence of casual work contracts as each consisting of a contract of employment, and as all being linked up into a period of "continuous employment", as to which see para.40-164 n.1102. But in the rather different context of unpaid voluntary workers, the approach in the Carmichael case received a stricter application in Melhuish v Redbridge Citizens Advice Bureau [2005] I.R.L.R. 419. Contrast, however, in the context of remunerated employment, Wilson v Circular Distributors Ltd [2006] I.R.L.R. 38, where the attempt to argue that the employer was under no clear obligation to provide work and that the claimant accordingly had no contract of employment was unsuccessful. Compare now Littlewood v Revenue and Customs Commissioners [2009] S.T.C. (S.C.D.) 243.
- 153. [2012] EWCA Civ 1735, [2013] I.R.L.R. 99.
- 154. Contrast with that decision, however, Drake v Ipsos Mori UK Ltd [2012] I.R.L.R. 973 EAT.
- 155. Short v J & W Henderson Ltd [1946] 62 T.L.R. 427, 429; Denham v Midland Employers Mutual Assurance Ltd [1955] 2 Q.B. 437; cf. Pauley v Kenaldo Ltd [1953] 1 W.L.R. 187, 191 (person stamping her own card as a "self-employed person").
- 156. Maurice Graham Ltd v Brunswick (1974) 16 K.I.R. 158, pace the suggestion of Fisher J. in Construction Industry Training Board v Labour Force Ltd [1970] 3 All E.R. 220, 226 D-F; Ferguson v John Dawson Ltd [1976] I.R.L.R. 346, 349-50; Thames Television Ltd v Wallis [1979] I.R.L.R. 136, 137, para.15. cf. Narich Pty Ltd v Commissioner of Pay-Roll Tax [1984] I.C.R. 286.

- 157. Ferguson v John Dawson Ltd [1976] I.R.L.R. 346; Davis v New England College of Arundel [1977] I.C.R. 6; BSM (1257) Ltd v Secretary of State for Social Services [1978] I.C.R. 894; Massey v Crown Life Insurance Co [1978] I.C.R. 590; Tyne & Clyde Warehouses Ltd v Hamerton [1978] I.C.R. 661; Young & Woods Ltd v West [1980] I.R.L.R. 201; Addison v London Philharmonic Ltd [1981] I.C.R. 261.
- 158. Massey v Crown Life Insurance [1977] I.C.R. 590, 595 E-H.
- 159. [1977] I.C.R. 590 at 595C, per Lord Denning M.R.
- 160. Ferguson v John Dawson Ltd [1976] I.R.L.R. 346.
- 161. Young & Woods Ltd v West [1980] I.R.L.R. 201, 208, per Ackner L.J. cf. Warner Holidays Ltd v Secretary of State for Social Services [1983] I.C.R. 440; Narich Pty Ltd v Commissioner of Pay-roll Tax [1984] I.C.R. 286. In Smith v Reliance Water Controls Ltd [2003] EWCA Civ 1153, Arden L.J. stressed the importance, in cases where there was an express change of status from employee to selfemployed worker, of nevertheless weighing all the objective factors according to the test laid down in the Market Investigations case to assess whether the contract was a contract of employment. Compare also RNLI v Bushaway [2005] I.R.L.R. 675, in which a contract of employment was held to arise between the end-user and the worker in a triangular employment situation despite an express agreement that the claimant was to be regarded as self-employed, which agreement contained an “entire contract” clause; see also para.13-107.
- 162. Young & Woods Ltd v West [1980] I.R.L.R. 201 at 207, per Stephenson L.J.
- 163. [2009] EWCA Civ 98, [2009] I.C.R. 835.
- 164.  [2009] EWCA Civ 1046, [2011] UKSC 41, [2011] 4 All E.R. 745. For subsequent instances of this approach, see for example Boss Projects LLP v Bragg [2013] UKEAT 0330/13/SM (express term of “in business on own account” disregarded). Compare now also Farmer v Heart of Birmingham Teaching Primary Care Trust [2016] I.C.R. 1088 (EAT), where the employment judge found that a written agreement identifying a “legal employer” did not reflect the reality of the situation.
- 165. [2011] UKSC 41, at [32]-[35], per Lord Clarke.
- 166. See the Report of the Committee of Inquiry under Professor Phelps-Brown into certain matters concerning labour in Building and Civil Engineering, Cmnd. 3714 (1968).
- 167. See Finance Act 2004 Pt 3 Ch.3, “Construction Industry Scheme”.
- 168. Westall Richardson Ltd v Roulson [1954] 2 All E.R. 448; Re CW & AL Hughes Ltd [1966] 1 W.L.R. 1369.
- 169. cf. Rennisson & Son v Ministry of Social Security [1970] C.L.Y. 1755. The statutory formula, “a contract personally to execute any work or labour” (used, for example, in Equal Pay Act 1970 s.1(6)); Sex Discrimination Act 1975 s.82(1) presumably covers such a contract: see above, para. 40-009. In Byrne Brothers (Formwork) Ltd v Baird [2002] I.C.R. 667, the Employment Appeal Tribunal held that building trade workers working as self-employed labour-only sub-contractors qualified as “workers” within the meaning of the Working Time Regulations 1998 (in which the term is defined in the same way as under s.230(6) of the Employment Rights Act 1996) although they clearly were not employed under contracts of employment and had some power to provide a substitute to carry out their work.
- 170. Ferguson v John Dawson Ltd [1976] I.R.L.R. 346.
- 171. Emerald Construction Co Ltd v Lowthian [1966] 1 W.L.R. 691.
- 172. cf. Maurice Graham Ltd v Brunswick (1974) 16 K.I.R. 158.

- 173. Construction Industry Training Board v Labour Force Ltd [1970] 3 All E.R. 220; Jones v Minton Construction Ltd (1973) 15 K.I.R. 309.
- 174. [1990] 2 A.C. 374.
- 175. Donaghey v Boulton & Paul Ltd [1968] A.C. 1 (breach of statutory duty).
- 176. Wages Councils Act 1979 s.21 (now repealed by the Wages Act 1986 which is now spent). cf. Sex Discrimination Act 1975 s.9 (discrimination against contract workers).
- 177. O'Sullivan v Thompson-Coon (1973) 14 K.I.R. 108.
- 178. Alderton v Richard Burgon Associates (Manpower) Ltd [1974] Crim. L.R. 318.
- 179. Construction Industry Training Board v Labour Force Ltd [1970] 3 All E.R. 220, 225F (Cooke J.). cf. Ironmonger v Movefield Ltd [1988] I.R.L.R. 461.
- 180. Wickens v Champion Employment [1984] I.C.R. 365, 371D.
- 181. cf. Construction Industry Training Board v Labour Force Ltd [1970] 3 All E.R. 220.
- 182. See above, paras 40-025—40-026.
- 183. [1997] I.C.R. 549.
- 184. Dacas v Brook Street Bureau (UK) Ltd [2004] EWCA Civ 217, [2004] I.R.L.R. 358.
- 185. [2005] EWCA Civ 490, [2005] I.R.L.R. 557; compare the decision of the Court of Appeal in Consistent Group Ltd v Kalwak [2008] EWCA Civ 430, [2008] I.R.L.R. 505.
- 186. Franks v Reuters Ltd [2003] I.R.L.R. 423; contrast the earlier Hewlett Packard Ltd v O'Murphy [2002] I.R.L.R. 4.
- 187. [2008] EWCA Civ 35, [2008] I.R.L.R. 302. Comparison should now be made with the decision in Muschett v HM Prison Service [2010] EWCA Civ 25, [2010] I.R.L.R. 451, where the Court of Appeal held that there was no contractual obligation between the agency worker and the Prison Service as the end-user of his services such as was necessary to establish a “contract personally to execute any work or labour”. (It would follow that there was no contract of employment between them.) Compare also RSA Consulting Ltd v Evans [2010] EWCA Civ 866, where the Court of Appeal held that the assessment of whether it was necessary to imply a “worker’s” contract between the claimant and an intermediary agency must not be limited to documentary evidence alone and must extend to consideration of the actual relationship between the parties; a further exploration of that position is to be found in the decision of the Court of Appeal in Evans v Parasol Ltd [2010] EWCA Civ 866, [2011] I.C.R. 37. The negative tendency against finding a contract of employment between the agency worker and the end-user was further manifested in Alstom Transport v Tilson [2010] EWCA Civ 1308.
- 188.  The test being that laid down by Bingham L.J. in The Aramis [1989] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 213 at 224. Compare now also Smith v Carillion (JM) Ltd [2015] EWCA Civ 209, [2015] I.R.L.R. 467.
- 189.  Day v Lewisham and Greenwich NHS Trust [2017] EWCA Civ 329, [2017] I.R.L.R. 623; see also McTigue v University Hospital Bristol NHS Foundation Trust [2016] I.R.L.R. 742 (EAT).
- 190. As amended by Employment Protection Act 1975 s.114 and Sch.13, which transfer the licensing of private employment agencies from local authorities to the Secretary of State for Employment; and further amended by s.31 of and Sch.7 to the Employment Relations Act 1999.
- 191.  A series of regulations were revised and replaced by the Conduct of Employment Agencies and Employment Businesses Regulations 2003 (SI 2003/3319). Those have since been amended by the Conduct of Employment Agencies and Employment Businesses (Amendment) Regulations 2007 (SI 2007/3575) and by the Conduct of Employment Agencies and Employment Businesses Regulations 2010 (SI 2010/1782) with effect from October 1, 2010. See now also the Conduct of Employment Agencies and Employment Businesses (Amendment) Regulations 2016 (SI 2016/510).

192. SI 2010/93, in force from October 1, 2010, implementing the EU Temporary Agency Work Directive 2008/104/EC, [2008] O.J. L327/9. (SI 2010/93 was amended by SI 2011/1941 to correct drafting errors.)

193.  reg.5, subject to reg.7 which specifies the qualifying period. Compare, however, Moran v Ideal Cleaning Services Ltd [2014] 2 C.M.L.R. 37 EAT: permanent secondees from an agency not within scope of Agency Workers Regulations 2010. In Coles v Ministry of Defence [2015] I.R.L.R. 872 EAT the confinement of the equal treatment obligation to basic working and employment conditions was emphasised in the context of recruitment to jobs.

194. 102 Social Club v Bickerton [1977] I.C.R. 911; Barthorpe v Exeter Diocesan Board of Finance [1979] I.C.R. 900. It was also so held by the Employment Appeal Tribunal in Johnson v Ryan [2000] I.C.R. 236, where it was decided that the holding of the statutory office of rent officer was not inconsistent with employee status.

195. The older cases concerning ecclesiastical office-holders, particularly Re National Insurance Act 1911—Re Employment of Church of England Curates [1912] 2 Ch. 563 were doubted in the Barthorpe case so far as they suggested an inconsistency between employment and office—see [1979] I.C.R. at 903G–906D, per Slynn J.; though that suggestion had appeared to be reinstated, so far as ecclesiastical office is concerned, by a dictum in President of the Methodist Conference v Parfitt [1984] I.C.R. 176, 184H (Dillon L.J.), and when Re National Insurance Act 1911, above, was approved and applied, so far as it held that a curate in the Church of England is not employed under a contract of employment, in Diocese of Southwark v Coker [1998] I.C.R. 140. However, authority in favour of the approach taken in the Barthorpe case, and against the approach taken in the Parfitt case, is provided by the decision of the House of Lords in Percy v Church of Scotland Board of National Mission [2005] UKHL 73, [2006] 2 A.C. 28, followed in New Testament Church of God v Stewart [2007] I.R.L.R. 178 EAT (upheld by CA on its special facts, [2007] EWCA Civ 1004, [2008] I.C.R. 282) and in President of the Methodist Conference v Preston [2011] EWCA Civ 1581; taken cumulatively, these decisions effectively negate any presumptions against intention to create legal relations or against the existence of mutuality of obligation in the construction of the relationships between ministers of religion and their churches; see also JGE v Trustees of Portsmouth Roman Catholic Diocesan Trust [2012] EWCA Civ 938 in which a Roman Catholic priest was held to have been in a relationship sufficiently “akin to employment” to constitute a basis for imposing vicarious liability. In President of the Methodist Conference v Preston [2013] UKSC 29, [2013] 2 A.C. 163, however, the Supreme Court, reversing the above-cited decision of the Court of Appeal, held that the relationship between a Methodist minister and the Methodist Church did not, by reason of the particular way in which that relationship had been constituted, take the legal form of a contract of employment, rather consisting of the holding of an office under the constitutional provisions of that Church. Though compare Lady Hale’s dissenting opinion, and now also Sharpe v Worcester Diocesan Board of Finance Ltd [2015] EWCA Civ 399, [2015] I.R.L.R. 663. See further Ecclesiastical Offices (Terms of Service) Measure 2009 (No.1), as amended.

196. See McMillan v Guest [1942] A.C. 561; Edwards v Clinch [1982] A.C. 845.

197. 102 Social Club v Bickerton [1977] I.C.R. 911, 917F, per Phillips J.

198. cf. Malloch v Aberdeen Corp [1971] 1 W.L.R. 1578, 1595, per Lord Wilberforce; see below, para.40-191.

199. cf. Ridge v Baldwin [1964] A.C. 40, 65, per Lord Reid.

- 200. Derived from Partnership Act 1890 s.1.
- 201. [2014] UKSC 32, [2014] 1 W.L.R. 2047 at [29]. The case itself addressed the question of whether an equity partner in a limited liability partnership was a “worker” employed by the LLP within the meaning of s.230(3)(b) of the Employment Rights Act 1996. See also CVS Solicitors LLP v van der Borgh [2013] Eq. L.R. 934.
- 202. In line with the Supreme Court’s decision in Autoclenz Ltd v Belcher [2011] UKSC 41, [2011] 4 All E.R. 745; and para.40-025, above.
- 203. “Bodies corporate” under the Limited Liabilities Partnership Act 2000 s.1.
- 204. Kovats v TFO Management LLP [2009] UKEAT 0357/08/2104, [2009] I.C.R. 1140; Tiffin v Lester Aldridge LLP [2012] EWCA Civ 35, [2012] 1 W.L.R. 1887.
- 205. Especially by reason of Limited Liabilities Partnership Act 2000 s.4(4). See further J. Prassl, “Members, Partners, Employees, Workers? Partnership Law and Employment Status revisited” (2014) 43 I.L.J. 495; cf. also the treatment of salaried LLP members as employees for tax purposes: Income Tax (Trading and Other Income) Act 2005 Pt 9 (as amended).
- 206. s.31 introduced ss.47G, 104G, and 205A into Employment Rights Act 1996. The provisions came into force on September 1, 2013—SI 2013/1766. See J. Prassl, “Employee Shareholder ‘Status’: Dismantling the Contract of Employment” (2013) 42 I.L.J. 307.
- 207. See for example St Ives Plymouth Ltd v Haggerty [2008] UKEAT 0107/08/MAA; cf. para. 40-023, above.
- 208.  Small Business, Enterprise and Employment Act 2015 s.153, inserting a new s.27A into the Employment Rights Act 1996 (in force as of May 26, 2015). See now also The Exclusivity Terms in Zero Hours Contracts (Redress) Regulations 2015 (SI 2015/2021).

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 40 - Employment ¹

Section 3. - Formation of the Contract

Formation and variation of the contract

40-032

⚠ The general principles of the law of contract apply to contracts of employment, which must therefore comply with the rules, such as that requiring consideration, discussed in Vol.I, above. Although these general principles are relevant, there is often no genuine bargaining between the parties to the individual contract of employment, since the terms are typically determined either unilaterally by the employing enterprise itself or by collective agreements ²⁰⁹ and sometimes by statutory regulation. ²¹⁰ The terms are often not negotiable by the individual employee, and the contract is thus a “contract of adhesion” ²¹¹: the prospective employee must take employment on the proffered terms if he or she wishes to obtain any employment in that section of industry. It has long been recognised that “it is nowadays often impossible to regard the employment of each individual worker as the result of a separate bargain struck between master and servant”. ²¹² Similar arguments apply to variations of contractual terms as put forward by employers, ²¹³ ⚠ or as resulting from collective agreements. ²¹⁴ In Sparks v Department for Transport, ²¹⁵ ⚠ the High Court held that in the absence of an explicit agreement, the employer could only make unilateral changes to terms and conditions if they were not detrimental to employees. Moreover, any explicit contractual power to vary must be stated in express and clear terms. ²¹⁶ ⚠

40-033

The case-law increasingly identifies an important question as to the time at which the contract of employment is deemed to have been formed, in the frequent case where there is an interval of time between the acceptance of a job offer and the commencement of actual employment. In Welton v Deluxe Retail Ltd ²¹⁷ Langstaff J. in the Employment Appeal Tribunal lends support to the view that there is a contract of employment in being during that interval, rather than merely a preliminary “contract for employment”. There is also an important question as to whether and when the promotion or moving of an employee to a new post or grade with the same employer will involve the formation of a new contract of employment rather than the variation of an existing one; this may be determinative of whether terms and conditions are carried forward from the original contract of employment. In FW Farnsworth Ltd v Lacy ²¹⁸ Hildyard J. held that upon a “step change of grade”, the employment relationship obviously and materially changed to such an extent as to imply the making of a new contract. However, it should be noted that in Pat Systems v Neilly ²¹⁹ Underhill J. took the view that the validity of a restrictive covenant in a contract of employment should in any case be assessed as at the moment when it was explicitly entered into by the employee, rather than by considering whether subsequent variations or replacements of the contract of employment might have validated an originally invalid restrictive covenant, for example by promoting the employee into a position to which the covenant was more appropriate. ²²⁰

Capacity

40-034

The capacity of persons in special categories to enter contracts of employment is discussed in Vol.I, above. ²²¹ The special position of Crown servants is discussed fully in specialised texts, ²²² and is mentioned only briefly in this chapter. ²²³ It is clear that the relationship of employment is not incompatible with that of husband and wife, so that one spouse may enter into a contract of employment with the other. ²²⁴ Employment legislation tended to assume this, but to exclude some of the statutory consequences of employment in the case of contracts of employment between spouses. ²²⁵

Crown employment

40-035

Even when the relationship between a Crown employee and the Crown can be regarded as contractual ²²⁶ (a conclusion more readily reached in view of recent decisions such as that in R. v Lord Chancellor's Department Ex p. Nangle ²²⁷), the relationship may nevertheless be regarded as terminable at the pleasure of the Crown, so that no claim for wrongful dismissal will lie against the Crown. ²²⁸ Any agreement providing that the service can only be terminated on a certain procedure being complied with may be held to be a fetter upon the power of the Crown to dismiss at pleasure and therefore unenforceable. ²²⁹ Crown employees have been regarded as probably unable to sue for remuneration due to them ²³⁰; furthermore, the redundancy payments legislation ²³¹ does not bind the Crown. ²³² However, recent legislation concerning individual employment rights has in several instances been extended to Crown employment, ²³³ and the Crown employee has thus been placed in a position more akin to that of other employees than was formerly the case. ²³⁴

Public policy, restraint of trade, and illegality

40-036

The courts will not enforce a contract of employment the terms of which are so stringent that the employee is virtually treated as his employer's "slave or chattel", without any freedom in his or her private life. ²³⁵ Contracts of employment which unduly restrict the employee in the exercise of his or her profession or calling may, in certain circumstances, be subject to the doctrine of restraint of trade ²³⁶; that doctrine will also apply to covenants imposed upon an employee which restrict his freedom of action after the termination of his or her contract of employment. A full discussion of the principles applicable to such covenants can be found in Ch.16 on "Illegality and Public Policy" in Vol.I. ²³⁷

Effect of illegality on statutory rights

40-037

⚠ An apparent contract of employment may be unenforceable by reason of its illegality, ²³⁸ with the result that the worker may lack the status of an employee for statutory purposes. This may arise where the purported contract involves, for instance, sexually immoral purposes. ²³⁹ It might possibly occur where the worker is an immigrant and the purported contract contravenes restrictions placed upon his or her freedom to work under the legislation controlling immigration. (In this connection, it should be noted that the Asylum and Immigration Act 1996 made it an offence on the part of an employer to employ a person who is in the United Kingdom without valid and subsisting leave to be so). ²⁴⁰ ⚠ However, it appears from the decision of the Supreme Court in Hounga v Allen that there needs to be a sufficiently close connection between the illegality and the claim, and that any such connection may be disregarded in favour of workers who have been "trafficked" into the country or otherwise gravely exploited. ²⁴¹ The question of illegality has frequently arisen where the purported contract involves a fraud on the Revenue. ²⁴² But while unprepared to offer a forum where tainted contracts can be relied upon, ²⁴³ the courts have been reluctant to let employees easily lose their statutory rights by reason of illegalities of which their employers were the prime movers, and have accordingly required that the illegality should be part of the contract or of the employee's purpose in entering into the contract ²⁴⁴ or, if not ex facie part of the contract, then subjectively known to the employee as being integral to its performance. ²⁴⁵ In Hewcastle Catering Ltd v Ahmed it was held that where the employees had not benefited from and were not essential parties to the fraud, it would be contrary to public policy for them to be deprived of compensation for being unfairly dismissed because they had assisted in the investigation of the fraud. ²⁴⁶ It was held, moreover, in Leighton v Michael ²⁴⁷ that an employee whose wages were paid without deduction of tax could nevertheless complain of unlawful sex discrimination in employment without enforcing, relying on or founding a claim on the contract of employment. That decision was approved, and applied in circumstances regarded as comparable, in Hall v Woolston Hall Leisure Ltd. ²⁴⁸  It was held in Brigden v American Express Bank Ltd ²⁴⁹ that an employee may in certain circumstances be able to claim that a term of the contract of employment is void as being unreasonable by virtue of s.3 of the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 ²⁵⁰; the Court of Appeal, however, disapproved that decision and held to the contrary in Keen v Commerzbank AG. ²⁵¹

Gangmasters Licensing Act 2004

40-038

The Gangmasters Licensing Act 2004, the essential provisions of which were brought into effect from April 1, 2005, requires individuals to be licensed as gangmasters if they are to engage in the supplying of workers for the use of their services in agricultural work and various kinds of gathering, harvesting, processing or packaging of foodstuffs. Sections 12–14 of that Act create a series of criminal offences involving the disregarding of these licensing requirements, including an offence of acting as a gangmaster without a licence, and an offence of entering into arrangements with gangmasters who are not licensed. The principles discussed in this paragraph will apply to determine whether and when contracts of employment will be rendered unenforceable because their formation or performance involves the commission of one or more of those offences.

Selection for employment and the terms on which employment may be offered

40-039

Statute law imposes various restrictions upon the freedom of employers to select the individuals with whom they may make contracts of employment and the terms on which employment may be offered. These measures are mainly directed against various kinds of discrimination in the selection of employees.

They are as follows:

(1)

Racial discrimination

Under the Equality Act 2010, it is unlawful for an employer to discriminate on racial grounds ²⁵² against an applicant for employment; (a) in the arrangements made for determining who should be offered the employment; or (b) in the terms on which the employment is offered; or (c) by refusing to offer the employment. ²⁵³ Enforcement of these requirements is by means of employment tribunal proceedings, ²⁵⁴ which may lead to an order for compensation or other remedies. ²⁵⁵

(2)

Sex discrimination

Under the Equality Act 2010 it is unlawful for an employer to discriminate ²⁵⁶ as regards the sex ²⁵⁷ of applicants for a job: (a) in the arrangements the employer makes for determining who shall be offered the job; or (b) in the terms on which the job is offered; or (c) by refusal to offer the job. ²⁵⁸ Contravention of these requirements may be the subject of a complaint to an employment tribunal, ²⁵⁹ which may award compensation ²⁶⁰ among other remedies. ²⁶¹

(3) Discrimination against married persons and civil partners

Under the Equality Act 2010, provisions similar to those concerned with sex discrimination apply to discrimination against married persons and civil partners (by comparison with the treatment which a single person would in comparable circumstances receive). ²⁶²

(4) Pregnancy and maternity discrimination

Provision is made by the Equality Act 2010 against pregnancy and maternity discrimination in “work cases” ²⁶³; the provisions are described more fully in a later paragraph ²⁶⁴ in respect of such discrimination occurring during the period of employment; particular provision is made against such discrimination as to the arrangements which an employer makes for deciding to whom to offer employment, and as to the terms on which employment is offered, or by not offering employment. ²⁶⁵

(5) Disability discrimination

The Disability Discrimination Act 1995, which replaced the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944, conferred new rights on disabled persons in respect of access to employment and the terms on which employment may be offered. A number of significant amendments were made with effect from October 2004 by Regulations implementing EC Directive 2000/78. ²⁶⁶ The Disability Discrimination Act 2005 amended and extended in various respects the provisions of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 concerning disability discrimination in employment. Corresponding provisions are now made by the Equality Act 2010; in brief summary, the provisions are as follows. It is unlawful under the 2010 Act for an employer of employed persons ²⁶⁷ to discriminate against a disabled person in the arrangements made for determining who should be offered employment, or in the terms on which employment is offered, or by refusing to offer employment. ²⁶⁸ An employer engages in unlawful discrimination by failing without justification to discharge a duty to make reasonable adjustments to the arrangements under which employment is offered and to any physical feature of the employment premises which are such as to place the disabled person at a substantial disadvantage in comparison with persons who are not disabled. ²⁶⁹ Unlawful disability discrimination may be the subject of complaint to an employment tribunal, which has remedial powers similar to those which it has in relation to sex or race discrimination. ²⁷⁰

(6) Religion or belief and sexual orientation

Provisions concerning access to employment very closely comparable to those relating to sex and race discrimination, and victimisation in connection with sex and race discrimination, have been made, with effect from December 2, 2003, with regard to religion or belief and with regard to sexual orientation, by, respectively, the Employment Equality (Religion or Belief) Regulations 2003 ²⁷¹ and the Employment Equality (Sexual Orientation) Regulations 2003. ²⁷² Both of these sets of regulations were enacted in implementation of the requirements of Council Directive 2000/78 establishing a general framework for equal treatment in employment and vocational training. ²⁷³ Corresponding provisions are now contained in the Equality Act 2010. ²⁷⁴

(7) Age

Provisions concerning access to employment generally comparable to those relating to discrimination on the grounds of sex, race, disability, religion or belief and sexual orientation were made, with effect from October 2006, with regard to age by the Employment Equality (Age) Regulations 2006, ²⁷⁵ and corresponding provisions are now contained in the Equality Act 2010, ²⁷⁶ as since significantly amended by the Employment Equality (Repeal of Retirement Age Provisions) Regulations 2011. ²⁷⁷

(8) Victimisation in connection with discrimination

The provisions concerned with discrimination on all these grounds also apply to victimisation, in the sense of discriminatory treatment of persons taking action connected with asserting rights under or alleging contravention of the Equality Act 2010. ²⁷⁸

(9) Rehabilitation of offenders

The Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 provides that a conviction which has become spent or any circumstances auxiliary thereto or any failure to disclose a spent conviction shall not be a proper ground for excluding a person from any office, profession, occupation or employment. ²⁷⁹ However, no enforcement mechanism is provided, so that where the exclusion from employment takes the form of a simple refusal to engage a particular applicant not previously employed by the employer, it is not yet clear whether the applicant can found any claim on that statutory provision or make good any claim by invoking its aid. ²⁸⁰

(10) Trade union membership

It is unlawful for an employer to refuse a person employment because he or she is, or is not, a member or is unwilling to accept a requirement to become, or to cease to be, a member of a trade union. ²⁸¹ Once employed, moreover, an employee acquires certain statutory rights in connection with trade union membership, nonmembership, and activities. ²⁸²

Form: written particulars

40-040

By statute, the contracts of employment of merchant seamen must be in writing. ²⁸³ But the common law does not require any particular formalities or form for contracts of employment. ²⁸⁴ However, legislation now imposes on employers the obligation to give to employees written particulars of certain of the terms of their employment. By s.1 of the Employment Rights Act 1996, ²⁸⁵ an employer, subject to certain exceptions, is obliged not later than two months after the beginning of an employment to give to his employee a written statement identifying the parties, specifying the date when the employment began (stating whether any employment with a previous employer counts as part of the employee's continuous period of employment ²⁸⁶ with him and if so specifying the date on which the continuous period of employment began), and giving the following particulars of the terms of employment (as at a specified date not more than one week earlier than the statement):

- (a)
the scale or rate of remuneration (or the method of calculation);
- (b)
the intervals at which remuneration is paid;
- (c)
any terms and conditions relating to hours of work including terms relating to normal working hours;
- (d)
any terms and conditions relating to—
 - (i)
holidays and holiday pay (including entitlement to accrued holiday pay on the termination of employment);
 - (ii)
incapacity for work due to sickness or injury, including any provisions for sick pay;
 - (iii)
pensions and pension schemes ²⁸⁷;
- (e)
the length of notice which the employee is obliged to give and entitled to receive to determine his contract of employment ²⁸⁸;
- (f)
the title of the job which the employee is employed to do or a brief description of the work for which the employee is employed;
- (g)
where the employment is not intended to be permanent, the period for which it is expected to continue or, if it is for a fixed term, the date when it is to end;
- (h) either the place of work or an indication that the employee works at various places;
