Standing orders are used to arrange for periodic payments of fixed amounts, such as monthly rents, instalments due under hire-purchase agreements, and annual subscriptions. The clearing banks have their own pro forma standing order forms with the payer supplying the same information as he used to provide on blank inter-bank credit forms before pre-printed credit forms became the norm. The form also enables the payer to provide the bank with a direction concerning the frequency and dates of payments. No specific funds are earmarked by the bank at the time it receives the instructions in order to enable it to reimburse itself. But the current form used by banks includes a clause, which authorises the bank to debit his account with the amount of each payment when it is made. ¹²⁵⁰ The standing order is thus a self-contained instruction which need not be accompanied by the customer's cheque or by cash. Obviously, it can be used only by persons who maintain an account with the transferring bank.

34-397

In practice, organisations, such as charitable bodies, arrange for the printing of standard forms which set out the details of their account. The payer completes this form by inserting the details concerning his account with the transferring bank. The order is transmitted to this bank by the payee. From a legal point of view, the practice does not lead to a departure from the principles to be discussed subsequently. The payee transmits the form as the payer's agent. In other cases, the creditor supplies the debtor with a pre-printed book of encoded bank giro credits, which the debtor uses to effect payments. Under this procedure, used by some local authorities and finance companies, a series of bank giro credits performs the function of a standing order.

Direct debiting

34-398

The direct debiting scheme was introduced in 1967. ¹²⁵¹ It facilitates the prompt payment of amounts due under commercial and consumer contracts by enabling the supplier, dealer, or other creditor to obtain payment of amounts due to him by issuing a direct demand for payment to the debtor's bank. The procedure involves some extra paperwork at the initial stages but saves time thereafter. The creditor asks the debtor to sign a mandate executed on a standard form. ¹²⁵² The form is returned to the creditor, which either sends it to the debtor's bank or, where the Automated Direct Debit Instruction Service (AUDDIS) is used, kept by the creditor and details of the mandate are transmitted electronically to the debtor's bank. ¹²⁵³ The form authorises the debtor's bank to pay amounts demanded by the creditor; there is no need to require on each occasion the confirmation of the indebtedness by the debtor. Although intimation of the sum payable is in the hands of the creditor, the mandate remains that of the debtor and the direct debit does not operate so as to vest in the creditor any rights of the debtor against its own bank. ¹²⁵⁴

34-399

All mandate forms used under the scheme must be variable in terms of amount, date and frequency; as such, neither the amount of the debit, its date or its frequency is specified on the form. However, the creditor must give the debtor at least 10 working days' notice (unless a shorter period of notice has been agreed) of the amount and date of the first direct debit and of any subsequent change to the amount and date of the direct debit. The creditor must then collect the direct debit payment on or within three working days after the specified due date as advised to the debtor; failure to do so results in the creditor having to give the debtor further notice of the new collection date. Conceptually direct debiting can be used for the settlement of any type of payment. In the majority of cases, however, direct debiting is used to arrange for the payment of varying amounts falling due at regular or irregular intervals, such as amounts payable in respect of electricity bills or for the supply of different quantities of a commodity ordered by a purchaser from a supplier from time to time as old stock is used up.

34-400

⚠ It is obvious that direct debiting is open to abuse. There are, however, control measures in operation which reduce this risk. ¹²⁵⁵ ⚠ First, a firm that wants to collect payment by direct debit must be sponsored by one of the banks and building societies which operate the scheme. Sponsorship is dependent on the sponsor being satisfied as to a number of factors, including the financial status and administrative capability of the firm. Secondly, before being accepted into the scheme, the firm must provide all banks and building societies operating the scheme with an indemnity against any loss, including consequential loss, that may be caused to them, unless the loss was due to the bank or building society's own fault. Under the terms of the direct debit scheme, the debtor is guaranteed a full and immediate refund from his bank should there be an error in the direct debiting process by the creditor or the debtor's own bank, e.g. where a payment was made after the debtor cancelled his authority, where more than the notified sum was debited from the account, or the debit was made on the wrong date. Where the error is due to the fault of the creditor, the debtor's bank can claim a refund from the creditor under the terms of its indemnity.

Cancellation of a direct debit

34-401

Where the creditor and the debtor have agreed that payment shall be by direct debit, subsequent cancellation of the direct debit mandate by the debtor gives the creditor a claim for breach of contract against him. In Eso Petroleum Co Ltd v Milton, ¹²⁵⁶ the Court of Appeal treated such a claim as being similar to one that a creditor would have on a dishonoured cheque. In this case, the claimants owned two garages operated and managed by the defendant under licence. Under the terms of two licence agreements, one for each garage, the defendant was obliged to purchase all his petrol supplies from the claimants and pay for them on or before delivery by direct debit. The defendant was also forbidden from selling petrol at prices greater than those notified to him by the claimants. Towards the end of 1995, the claimants instructed the defendant to cut petrol prices in the face of stiff pricing competition and increased his site rentals. The defendant complained that this made his operations unprofitable and, in order to put pressure on the claimants, he cancelled his direct debit mandate when almost £170,000 was owing to the claimants for petrol supplied. The claimants applied for summary judgment against him. The defendant admitted the claim, but alleged that the increasingly stringent financial terms that the claimants had imposed amounted to a repudiatory breach of contract, and he counterclaimed damages which he sought to set off in equity in extinction of his debt to the claimants. The first instance judge dismissed the claimants' application for summary judgment, but the claimants successfully appealed on two grounds. The first was that the defendant's counterclaim, even if good, would not give rise to an equitable set-off. The second was that no set off or counterclaim is available where payment was made, or agreed to be made, by direct debit. On the second issue, the Court of Appeal held, by a majority, that the payment arrangements of the parties by direct debit were to be treated as assimilated to those of payment by cheque, and so applied the rule, well established in the case of cheques, that there can be no set-off or counterclaim arising from the underlying contract unless there is fraud or failure of consideration. This was, according to Thorpe L.J., ¹²⁵⁷ “a natural evolution” of the rule which applies to bills of exchange and cheques, and reflected, according to Sir John Balcombe, ¹²⁵⁸ the modern commercial practice of treating a direct debit in the same way as a payment by cheque. By contrast, Simon Brown L.J., dissenting, held that there were insufficient similarities between cheques and direct debit arrangements to treat the two as equivalent.

34-402

⚠ It is respectfully submitted that Simon Brown L.J. was right, and the majority were wrong, on this issue. ¹²⁵⁹ The analogy with a dishonoured cheque is flawed. Where a cheque is dishonoured, the payee obtains a cause of action through breach of the drawer's payment obligation embodied in the cheque itself. ¹²⁶⁰ There is no similar promise embodied in a direct debit mandate, revocation of which does not of itself create a separate cause of action. ¹²⁶¹ Where a direct debit mandate is revoked, the creditor is left only with his claim for the debt due on the underlying contract. Why should the debtor lose his right of set-off when sued on the underlying contract? The mere fact that the payment was to be by direct debit should not of itself be enough to imply an exclusion clause into the contract. Such a term is neither obvious, nor necessary for business efficacy. If the debtor's right of set-off is to be excluded, this should be done through an express term of the underlying contract. ¹²⁶² ⚠ The best explanation for applying the no set-off rule to bills of exchange and cheques is that it facilitates the free negotiation of such instruments for cash. ¹²⁶³ However, direct debits are not transferable and do not require the same protection. It does not answer this point simply to assert, as the claimants did, that as most cheques are now non-transferable, being crossed “account payee only”, no distinction should be drawn between such cheques and direct debits. Perhaps it would show greater consistency if non-transferable cheques were also kept outside the no set-off rule. There is, after all, a strong case to be made that “account payee only” cheques fall outside the Bills of Exchange Act 1882. ¹²⁶⁴

Legal nature of the relationships between the parties

34-403

The legal relationships between the parties to a giro transaction are governed by the law of contract in general and by the principles concerning agency in particular. Thus, for example, the instructions given to the paying banker in one of the bank giro forms constitutes a mandate reminiscent of the authority conferred on the drawee bank by a cheque.

Statutory controls

34-404

⚠ There is no comprehensive statutory regime within the United Kingdom governing money transfer operations. ¹²⁶⁵ Neither the law of negotiable instruments nor the principles of assignment are applicable. However, limited statutory provision was made for “cross-border credit transfers” within the EEA through the Cross-Border Credit Transfer Regulations 1999, ¹²⁶⁶ which implemented EC Directive 97/5. As from November 1, 2009, this regime was replaced by the Payment Services Regulations 2009 (PSRs), ¹²⁶⁷ implementing the EC Payment Services Directive. ¹²⁶⁸ ⚠ The PSRs impose conduct of business requirements on payment services (incorporating both payment transactions and the operation of payment accounts) that are within scope. ¹²⁶⁹ For these conduct of business requirements to apply, the payment services must be provided from an establishment maintained by a payment service provider or its agent in the UK, the payment service providers of both the payer and the payee must be located within the EEA, and the transaction or payment account must be in either euro or sterling or another Member State currency. ¹²⁷⁰ The PSRs conduct of business rules cover two areas: (a) information to be provided to the payment service user (Pt 5), and (b) the rights and obligations of payment service users and providers (Pt 6). Parts 5 and 6 apply to a wide range of transactions, and this includes entirely domestic payment transactions, ¹²⁷¹ as well as cross-border payments. However, the PSRs focus only on electronic means of payment; they do not apply to cash only transactions directly between payer and payee or paperbased transactions such as cheques. ¹²⁷² It is important to note that except where the payment service user is a consumer, a micro-enterprise or a charity as defined in the regulations, ¹²⁷³ payment service providers may contract out of most conduct of business requirements. ¹²⁷⁴ Any breach of the requirements of Pts 5 or 6 is actionable by a private person who suffers loss as a result of the contravention, subject to the defences and other incidents applying to actions for breach of statutory duty. ¹²⁷⁵

34-405

The wide scope of the PSRs mean that they are likely to apply to most domestic electronic funds transfers within the UK, and to a large number of international funds transfers from the United Kingdom to other EU Member States. ¹²⁷⁶ In so far as a money transfer falls outside the scope of the PSRs, it will be necessary to consider the position at common law. In respect of funds transfers falling within their scope, the PSRs do not expressly preserve the remedies that the parties might otherwise have had at common law. ¹²⁷⁷ Whether this means that the PSRs establish an exclusive remedial regime when applicable must await determination by the courts. ¹²⁷⁸

Position of payer's bank under the Payment Services Regulations 2009

34-406

⚠ The payer's bank is placed under certain minimum requirements as to information which it must provide to its customer. These requirements differ according to whether the payment transaction takes place under a "single payment service contract" or a "framework contract". ¹²⁷⁹ ⚠ Part 6 of the PSRs governs the authorisation and execution of a payment instruction and creates a regime governing the rights and obligations of parties to a payment transaction. In this regard special provision is made for the use of a "payment instrument" in order to initiate a payment transaction. A payment instrument is any device, password or procedure used by the payer in order to initiate a payment transaction. ¹²⁸⁰ ⚠

Non-execution or defective execution

34-407

⚠ An important difference from the position at common law is that under the PSRs the payer's bank is subjected to a regime of strict liability for non-execution or defective execution of the payer's instructions, whereas the bank's liability at common law turns on its failure to exercise reasonable care and skill in and about the execution of the payer's payment instructions. ¹²⁸¹ In the case of a payment order initiated by the payer, as with a CHAPS transfer or a standing order, the payer's bank is liable to the payer for the correct execution of the payment transaction unless it can prove to the payer that the correct amount was received by the payee's bank on time. ¹²⁸² ⚠ If the payer's bank is liable, it must refund the amount of the defective or non-executed transaction to the payer without undue delay, and, where applicable, restore the debited payment account to the state it would have been in had the transaction not occurred at all. ¹²⁸³ ⚠ Where the payment order is initiated by the payee, as with direct debits, the payer's bank will be liable to refund the payer the amount of the direct debit payment, and if necessary re-credit the payer's account, if the payee's bank has been able to prove that it carried out its end of the payment transaction properly, i.e. it has sent the payment instruction (in the correct amount and within the correct timescale), and the correct payee's details, to the payer's bank, so that failure to receive the correct amount of funds within the correct timescale lies with the payer's bank rather than with the payee's bank. ¹²⁸⁴ ⚠ The payer can also claim for any charges and any interest incurred as a result of the non-execution or defective execution of the payment transaction. ¹²⁸⁵  However, in order to obtain the redress stated above, the payer must notify the payer's bank without delay, and in any event no later than 13 months after the debit date, on becoming aware of any unauthorised or incorrectly executed payment transactions. ¹²⁸⁶  The payer's bank is given a right of recourse, which applies where the non-execution or defective execution of a payment transaction is "attributable" to the payee's bank or an intermediary bank. ¹²⁸⁷

Unauthorised transactions

34-408

 For a payment transaction to be authorised, the payer must have given his consent to the execution of the payment transaction or to the execution of a series of payment transactions of which the payment transaction forms part. ¹²⁸⁸  The payer may have given his consent before or, if agreed, after the execution of the payment transaction, and it must be in the form, and in accordance with the procedure, agreed between the payer and the payer's bank. ¹²⁸⁹  The payer's bank is liable to the payer for execution of an unauthorised payment transaction and it must refund the amount of the unauthorised payment to him. ¹²⁹⁰  If the unauthorised payment has been debited from the payer's account, the payer's bank must restore the debit to that account. ¹²⁹¹  In order to claim a refund or restoration of his account following an unauthorised payment transaction, the payer must notify his bank without delay on becoming aware of the unauthorised nature of the transaction and, in any event, this must be done no later than 13 months after the debit date. ¹²⁹²  In cases where the payer denies having authorised an executed payment transaction or claims that a payment transaction has not been correctly executed, it is for the payer's bank to prove that the payment transaction was authenticated, accurately recorded, entered in the bank's accounts and not affected by a technical breakdown or some other deficiency. ¹²⁹³  For these purposes, "authenticated" means the use of any procedure by which the bank is able to verify the use of a specific payment instrument, including its personalised security features. ¹²⁹⁴  Use of a "payment instrument" recorded by the bank is not in itself necessarily sufficient to prove either that the payment transaction was authorised by the payer or that the payer acted fraudulently or failed with intent or gross negligence to comply with reg.57. ¹²⁹⁵  Regulation 57 imposes a series of obligations on the payer in relation to a payment instrument: the payer must only use the payment instrument in accordance with its terms and conditions of use, he must notify his bank in the agreed manner and without undue delay on becoming aware of its loss, theft, misappropriation or unauthorised use, and he must take all reasonable steps to keep its personalised security features safe. ¹²⁹⁶  Under reg.62(2), the payer is liable for all losses incurred in respect of an unauthorised payment transaction where the payer has (a) acted fraudulently, or (b) has with intent or gross negligence failed to comply with reg.57, ¹²⁹⁷  otherwise the payer's liability is restricted to £50 at most. ¹²⁹⁸  However, in certain circumstances, a non-fraudulent payer will not be liable for any losses incurred in respect of an unauthorised payment transaction, namely where the losses arose after notification of the loss, theft, misappropriation or unauthorised use of the payment instrument to the payer's bank, ¹²⁹⁹  where the bank failed to provide him with the appropriate means for notification, ¹³⁰⁰  and where the payment instrument was used in connection with a "distance contract" (other than an excepted contract). ¹³⁰¹  The payer may also be entitled to a refund from the payer's bank where an authorised payment transaction is initiated by or through the payee, as with a direct debit. ¹³⁰²  This will occur where the payer did not specify the exact amount of the payment when initially authorising the direct debit and the amount of the payment "exceeded the amount that the payer could reasonably have expected taking into account the payer's previous spending pattern, the conditions of the framework contract

Position of the paying banker at common law

34-409

⚠ It is clear that the paying banker is under a duty to adhere to the terms of his authority. Presumably, he will be liable to compensate the customer for loss resulting from undue delay or from negligence in the execution of an order given in a giro form. ¹³⁰⁴ He may, likewise, be precluded from debiting the customer's account with a wrongfully made payment. ¹³⁰⁵ ⚠ It is, at the same time, accepted that the contract between the customer and the paying banker is not governed by the doctrine of strict compliance encountered in documentary credit cases. ¹³⁰⁶ In Royal Products Ltd v Midland Bank Ltd, ¹³⁰⁷ which concerned the construction of a money transfer order given by a customer to his bank, Webster J. rejected the submission that in construing those instructions, the court should, as a matter of law or banking practice, give a legal implication to each detail of them, for it seemed to his Lordship that the doctrine which would lead to that result had little application to cases involving giro instructions. ¹³⁰⁸ The main duty of the customer is to give unambiguous instructions and to exercise reasonable care in making out the giro forms. His liability is in all probability similar to that of a customer who gives an ambiguous notice countermanding payment of a cheque or who facilitates a fraudulent alteration by negligently leaving blank spaces when the cheque is drawn. ¹³⁰⁹

Position of the payee's bank under the Payment Services Regulations 2009

34-410

⚠ Statutory duties are imposed on the payee's bank by the Payment Services Regulations 2009 (PSRs). ¹³¹⁰ ⚠ Like the payer's bank, Pt 5 of the PSRs imposes information disclosure requirements on the payee's bank. ¹³¹¹ ⚠ Part 6 of the PSRs contains provisions relating to the rights and obligations of the payee's bank in the provision of payment services. ¹³¹² ⚠

34-411

⚠ First, a number of provisions deal with the transmission of payment instructions and the receipt of funds by the payee's bank. In the case of a direct debit, the payee's bank must transmit the payment order to the payer's bank within the time limits it has agreed with the payee. ¹³¹³ ⚠ The payee's bank must then credit the amount of the payment to the payee's account following its receipt of the funds. ¹³¹⁴ ⚠ The payee's bank must ensure that the amount of the payment is at the payee's disposal immediately after that amount has been credited to the payee bank's account. ¹³¹⁵ ⚠ The transferred funds must start to earn interest by the end of the business day upon which the payee's bank received those funds. ¹³¹⁶ ⚠

34-412

⚠ Secondly, several provisions deal with the right to levy charges on the payee. The starting point is that the payee's bank must ensure that the full amount of the payment is transferred to the payee and that no charges are deducted from that amount. ¹³¹⁷ ⚠ However, the payee and the payee's bank may agree to the deduction of the bank's charges before the funds are credited to the payee's account, ¹³¹⁸ ⚠ so long as the payee is given information as to the full amount of the payment

⚠ In the case of a direct debit, the payee's bank is liable to reimburse the payee for any unauthorised charges deducted from the amount transferred. ¹³²⁰ ⚠

34-413

⚠ Thirdly, a number of provisions deal with the payee bank's liability for the non-execution or defective execution of a payment transaction. In the case of a payment order initiated by the payer, as with a CHAPS sterling transfer or a standing order, the payer's bank is liable to the payer for the correct execution of the payment transaction unless it can prove that the funds were received by the payee's bank on time. ¹³²¹ ⚠ However, if the payer's bank can prove that the funds were transferred to the payee's bank within the relevant time-limits, responsibility for the non-execution or defective execution of the payment transaction shifts to the payee's bank, which must then immediately make available to the payee a sum equivalent to the amount of the transfer and, where applicable, credit the corresponding amount to the payee's account. ¹³²² ⚠ Where the payment transaction is initiated by the payee, as with direct debits, the payee's bank is liable to the payee for the correct transmission of the payment order to the payer's bank within the relevant time-limits. ¹³²³ ⚠ Where the payee's bank is so liable, it must immediately re-transmit the payment order to the payer's bank, ¹³²⁴ ⚠ and it must, on request, make immediate efforts to trace the payment transaction and notify the payee of the outcome. ¹³²⁵ ⚠ It remains open to the payee's bank to prove that it correctly transmitted the payment order to the payer's bank in time, and in such a case liability for the non-execution or defective execution of the payment transaction shifts to the payer's bank, which must refund the amount of the payment to the payer and, where necessary, re-credit his account. ¹³²⁶ ⚠ The payee can also claim for any charges and any interest incurred as a result of the non-execution or defective execution of the payment transaction. ¹³²⁷ ⚠ However, in order to obtain the redress stated above, the payee must notify the payee's bank without delay, and in any event no later than 13 months after the debit date, on becoming aware of any incorrectly executed payment transactions. ¹³²⁸ The payee's bank will not be liable for an incorrectly executed transfer where the unique identifier (e.g. the payer's account number, sort code or bank details) provided by the payee is incorrect, although the bank must make reasonable efforts to recover the funds involved in the transaction. ¹³²⁹ ⚠ The payee's bank can also avoid liability in cases of force majeure. ¹³³⁰ ⚠ It should also be noted that the payee's bank is given a right of recourse, which applies where the non-execution or defective execution of a payment transaction is "attributable" to the payer's bank or an intermediary bank. ¹³³¹ ⚠

Position of recipient (payee's) banker at common law

34-414

That the recipient banker—like the paying banker—is engaged as an agent is indisputable; it is less certain who is to be regarded as his principal. Is the principal the person or bank that remits the amount or is it the customer for whose credit the amount is received? It will be convenient to discuss separately the position prevailing in the different types of giro operation.

Giro credit transfers

34-415

In an ordinary giro credit transfer the transferor issues his instructions to the paying banker on the basis of the details concerning the payee's account, supplied in the payee's invoice or emerging from correspondence. When the payee furnishes these details to the transferor, he manifests his willingness to receive payment through giro channels. Thus, the payee's banker is to be treated as having the authority to receive on the payee's behalf any amount remitted for the credit of the designated account. ¹³³² It follows that the recipient banker is the payee's agent and that any amount remitted to him by a paying banker is tendered to him in that capacity. ¹³³³ The same analysis would appear to be applicable also to standing orders and to traders' credits.

34-416

Where a debtor makes a cash payment into a giro account, it is necessary to distinguish between a payment made directly to the bank at which the account is maintained and a payment to some other bank coupled with a request that the amount involved be remitted to the payee's bank. In the former case a single bank combines the roles of the paying banker and of the recipient banker; it seems clear that this bank receives payment from a stranger on behalf of its customer, the payee. In the latter case, just as in all other giro operations, the debtor effects payment by use of giro channels in reliance on the information supplied by the payee in an invoice or in correspondence. Presumably, the debtor makes payment to a bank other than the payee's for reasons of convenience. In such a case payment is accepted by that bank in compliance with its arrangement with other banks, as in the absence of such an agreement the bank would almost certainly refuse to act for a stranger. This reasoning suggests that a banker who receives a cash payment from a stranger for the credit of an account maintained with another bank, is to be regarded that other bank's agent. The bank which receives the cash payment does not enter into a contract with the debtor, or payer, and manifests no intention of acting on his behalf. Moreover, it is difficult to attribute to such a bank an intention to act on behalf of the payee, who—just like the payer—remains a stranger. ¹³³⁴

In direct debits

34-417

In direct debiting arrangements, the authority signed by the debtor is addressed to his own bank, i.e. the paying banker, who is, thus, engaged by the debtor. The fact that the document which contains the authority is delivered by the debtor to the payee, who delivers it to his own bankers (the recipient bankers), who in turn deliver or post it to the paying banker, has no bearing on the legal nature of the transaction. The ensuing presentation of direct debiting forms by the payee to the paying banker (usually through the recipient banker) is effected in reliance on the authority to pay, conferred by the debtor on the paying banker. In essence, the procedure involved in direct debiting resembles the presentation to the drawee bank of a cheque drawn by the payee to his own order on behalf of the owner of the cheque book. A cheque drawn by an agent on his principal's account for the payment of commission due to the agent and a cheque drawn by a firm's book-keeper on this firm's account for the payment of his own monthly wages, constitute illustrations in point. Moreover, when a direct debiting form is presented to the paying banker by a recipient banker engaged by the payee, the recipient banker acts on the payee's behalf in a manner resembling the presentation of a cheque by a collecting banker. However, a contractual relationship between the payee of the direct debiting form and the paying banker—who is acting on the debtor's behalf—is created by the indemnity furnished by the payee. It will be recollected that this indemnity is addressed to all bankers participating in the system.

Relationship between transferor and recipient (payee's) banker

34-418

The recipient (payee's) bank does not owe a duty of care to a non-customer transferor of a giro transfer to pay money received only to the recipient identified in the transferor's instructions, or to clarify any discrepancies in those instructions as to the recipient's identity with the transferor. ¹³³⁵

Position of correspondent (intermediary) bank under the Payment Services Regulations 2009

34-419

⚠ Where a funds transfer falls within the scope of the Payment Services Regulations 2009 (PSRs),¹³³⁶ ⚠ the potential liability of the correspondent or intermediary bank differs from that at common law. In a case where there has been a failure to execute a payment order at all or on time, and this is “attributable” to the actions of a correspondent or intermediary bank, that bank must compensate the payer’s bank (or payee’s bank in the case of a direct debit) for any losses incurred as a result of the defective execution or nonexecution of the payment order.¹³³⁷ ⚠ Liability may be avoided where the payer originally provided an incorrect unique identifier (identifying the payee and his account),¹³³⁸ ⚠ or in a case of force majeure.¹³³⁹ ⚠ The position under the PSRs appears to differ from that at common law in two ways.¹³⁴⁰ First, whereas at common law the correspondent or intermediary bank’s liability turns on its negligence, under the PSRs the bank’s liability appears to be strict.¹³⁴¹ Secondly, the common law appears to limit the payer’s bank to recoupment of losses from the correspondent bank that it actually instructed, whereas the PSRs appear to offer the payer’s bank a right of action against the correspondent bank responsible for the loss (or to which the loss is “attributable”), even though there is no direct contractual link between the two banks.

Position of correspondent (intermediary) bank at common law

34-420

Where there is no correspondent banking relationship between the paying bank and the payee’s bank, the paying bank effects the transfer by giving an appropriate instruction to an intermediary.¹³⁴² ¹³⁴³ has been applied to international money transfers in Royal Products Ltd v Midland Bank Ltd.¹³⁴⁴ The same authority further shows that the paying bank may be liable for its correspondent’s negligence or default. In this case, a Maltese merchant, who maintained a current account with the defendant bank, instructed it to transfer an amount of £13,000 to the credit of his account with the B Bank in Malta. The N Bank in Malta, which was instructed by the defendant bank to effect the necessary transfer, executed it despite the fact that strong rumours about the B Bank’s imminent collapse were circulating at the relevant time. The merchant claimed that the N Bank, with which he had his other account in Malta and with which he had accordingly a relationship of customer and banker, ought to have warned him about the position. He sought to hold the defendant bank responsible for the default and negligence alleged. Dismissing the action, Webster J. held that, on the facts, no negligence was attributable to the N Bank. But his Lordship observed that the paying bank owed its customer, the payer, a duty of care and skill in selecting its correspondent and added that, in the absence of a clause to the contrary, the paying bank could be vicariously liable for the negligence and default of its correspondent.¹³⁴⁵ It is, however, important to note that most modern banking forms include a clause under which a correspondent is engaged at the customer’s risk and expense. As the paying bank is not in a position to exercise any control over its correspondent, such a clause appears reasonable.

Revocation of payment order under the Payment Services Regulations 2009

34-421

⚠ The Payment Services Regulations 2009,¹³⁴⁶ ⚠ reg.55(3) (see also PSRs 2017 reg.67(3)), provide that the payer’s consent to a payment transaction can be withdrawn at any time before the point at which the payment order can no longer be revoked under reg.67 (see also PSRs 2017 reg.83).¹³⁴⁷ ⚠ Regulation 67(1) (see also PSRs 2017 reg.83(1)) restricts the ability of a payment service user to revoke a payment order by providing that, subject to certain exceptions, the payment service user may not revoke a payment order after it has been received by the payer’s payment service provider.¹³⁴⁸ ⚠ In the case of a payment transaction initiated by or through the payee, the payer may not revoke the payment order after transmitting the payment order or giving consent to execute the payment transaction to the payee (reg.67(2); see also PSRs 2017 reg.83(2), but note change in wording to include a payment transaction initiated by a “payment initiation service provider”, and making the payer’s “consent” alone the point at which the payer may not revoke the payment order). In the case of a direct debit, the payer may not revoke the payment order after the end of the business day preceding the day agreed for the debiting of funds (reg.67(3)) (see also PSRs 2017 reg.83(3)). ¹³⁴⁹

Countermand of order at common law

34-422

As the transferor is the paying banker’s principal, he is entitled to countermand or revoke an instruction before it has been executed. ¹³⁵⁰ The exact point of time at which the transfer is complete has to be discussed separately as regards two situations. The first is the “in house” payment, where a customer instructs his bank to credit the account of another customer who maintains his account with the same branch. The second type of case, involving “out house” payments, includes transfers made at the instruction of a customer for the credit of another customer’s account with a different branch of the same bank. Such a transfer is effected by computer entries made by means of a process similar to the one used where the transferor and the transferee maintain their respective accounts with different banks.

In-house transfers

34-423

The question of when is payment complete in the case of an in house transfer is covered by two conflicting authorities. In the first case—Rekstin v Severo Sibirsko Gosudarstvennoe Akcinernoe ¹³⁵¹—the facts were unusual. A customer instructed his bank to transfer his total balance to the credit of another customer’s account. After the bank had effected the transfer by making the necessary ledger entries but before notification was given to the payee, a judgment creditor served a garnishee order nisi (now called an “interim third party debt order”) attaching the transferor’s balance. It was held that at the time the order was served the amount transferred was still accruing to the transferor. It is important to emphasise that this conclusion was largely based on the fact that no debt was owed by the transferor to the transferee and that there was nothing to indicate that the transferee had anticipated payment. Thus, there was no evidence establishing the transferee’s assent to the transfer of the amount involved. The bank, therefore, could not be regarded as having the authority to hold the amount transferred on the transferee’s behalf. It appears clear that this reasoning is inapplicable to modern giro transactions, in which customers authorise their bankers to receive on their behalf amounts paid into their accounts.

Momm’s case

34-424

This submission derives support from the second authority in point, Momm v Barclays Bank International Ltd. ¹³⁵² On June 26, 1974 the defendant bank received an instruction from a customer, H, to credit the account of the plaintiff, another customer banking with the same branch, with an amount of £120,000. Although H’s account did not have a sufficient credit balance, the assistant manager decided to credit the plaintiff’s account. The necessary forms were prepared and processed forthwith by the defendant bank’s computer. Later in the day, H suspended payment. On the next day the defendant bank reversed the credit entry which had appeared in the plaintiff’s account. When the plaintiff, who was not notified of the credit entry and of its reversal, discovered the facts through a perusal of H’s books, he brought an action for a declaration that his account had been wrongfully debited on June 27. Giving judgment for the plaintiff, Kerr J. observed:

“The issue is whether or not a completed payment had been made by the defendants to the plaintiffs on June 26. This is a question of law. If the answer is ‘Yes,’ it is not contested that the plaintiffs have a good cause of action. If there were no authorities on this point, I think that the reaction, both of a lawyer and a banker, would be to answer this question in the affirmative. I think that both would say two things. First, that in such circumstances a payment has been made if the payee’s account is credited with the payment at the close of business on the value date, at any rate if it was credited intentionally and in good faith and not by error or fraud. Secondly, I think that they would say that if a payment requires to be made on a certain day by debiting a payor customer’s account and crediting a payee customer’s account, then the position at the end of that day in fact and in law must be that this has either happened or not happened, but that the position cannot be left in the air. In my view both these propositions are correct in law.”
1353

His Lordship distinguished Rekstin’s case as having been decided on its special facts.

Out-house transfers

34-425

The difficulty in determining the exact point of time at which an outhouse giro transfer is complete stems from the fact that the actual crediting of the payee’s account can often precede the time at which his bank makes its actual decision to receive payment on his behalf. This is so because the crediting of the payee’s account can be effected by the computer entry before the bank’s officer makes his conscious decision to accept the money. It is clear that the payee’s attitude to the problem may depend on the practical situation in which it arises. In cases in which the paying bank wishes to reverse the credit entry for its own purposes, e.g. because the transferor has countermanded payment or has become insolvent, the payee is likely to maintain that his consent to payment has been given in advance. On this basis, he would be able to argue that any countermand received after the execution of the credit entry in his account was ineffective. A reversal of entries would be ruled out altogether. The payee is likely to take a different stand where the amount involved is transferred under a contract which entitles him, in the event that an instalment due is not paid on time, to invoke an attractive forfeiture clause. If in such a case the computer credits the payee’s account before the stipulated deadline but the voucher is presented thereafter, the payee has an interest in maintaining that payment has been completed only insofar as payment has been validly received on his behalf by the bank within the stipulated period.

Cases where payee claims payment is complete

34-426

In Royal Products Ltd v Midland Bank Ltd 1354 Webster J. proceeded on the basis that a money transfer was complete and, accordingly, no longer subject to a countermand when the funds were made available to the payee’s bank and accepted by it, intentionally, on the payee’s behalf. This view derives further support from an observation made by Hirst J. in Libyan Arab Foreign Bank v Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co (No.2) 1355 in respect of a money transfer effected as between accounts maintained by two separate branches of a single bank. His Lordship concluded that the transfer was complete when the transferring branch debited the recipient branch’s account with itself and the latter branch effected a matching “intentional bona fide” credit entry in the payee’s account. Effectively, this meant that the transfer was complete, and hence irreversible, when the funds were made available to the payee. Similarly, in Tayeb v HSBC Bank Plc, 1356 where the payee’s bank became suspicious of the origins of funds transferred into the payee’s account using the CHAPS electronic transfer system and returned those funds to the payer’s bank, Colman J. held that a CHAPS transfer was ordinarily irreversible once the payee’s bank had authenticated the transfer, sent an acknowledgement message informing the payer’s bank that the transfer had been received and credited the funds to the payee’s account. 1357

US authority

34-427

A more detailed analysis is to be found in the decision of the United States Second Circuit Court of Appeals in Delbrueck & Co v Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co, ¹³⁵⁸ which involved another dispute arising out of the collapse of the Herstatt Bank on June 26, 1974. Here the plaintiff bank, which maintained an account with the defendant bank in New York, had entered into exchange contracts with Herstatt. On June 25, the plaintiff bank sent a telex to the defendant bank, instructing it to credit Herstatt's account with the C Bank with the amount due under these contracts. About one hour after Herstatt's closure (which under Eastern Standard Time took place at 10.30am on June 26) the defendant bank executed the transfer by means of the American automated clearing system known as CHIPS. Within the next 30 minutes the plaintiff bank countermanded payment by a telephone call and immediately thereafter confirmed this instruction by telex. However, as the CHIPS agreement precluded the countermand of a payment instruction after its release by the paying bank, the defendant bank did not order the C Bank to stop payment. Herstatt's account with the C Bank was actually credited with the amount involved at 9.00pm. Affirming the District Court's decision, Moore J. pointed out that a CHIPS message was received by the payee's bank almost as soon as it was released by the paying bank's computer terminal. Furthermore, it was common ground that funds transferred by means of CHIPS could be drawn upon by the payee as soon as the electronic message was received by the recipient bank. On this basis and taking into account the terms of the CHIPS agreement, Moore J. held that the payment became irrevocable and hence complete as soon as the message was received by the C Bank. The actual crediting of Herstatt's account by the C Bank was a mere matter of book-keeping and, accordingly, inconclusive.

Cases in which payee refuses funds

34-428

Obviously, Delbrueck's case is of persuasive authority only. But it is significant that the Second Circuit effectively held that payment was complete at the time the funds became available to the drawee. This conclusion is in accord with the principles laid down in English authorities involving cases in which the payee asserted that an amount was "paid" out of the time specified in a charterparty or, in other words, argued that payment had not been completed when due. In the leading case of Mardorf Peach Co Ltd v Attica Sea Carriers Corp of Liberia (The "Laconia") ¹³⁵⁹ the issue was whether an amount paid after the stipulated date was received by the bank in circumstances which indicated that the payee had waived the delay. It was established that the bank had commenced the steps required for the crediting of the payee's account but, on receiving his instruction to return the amount involved, remitted it back forthwith. One of the questions involved was whether the transfer of the funds to the payee had been executed before he issued his orders. Giving judgment for the payee, the shipowner, the House of Lords held inter alia that the transfer had not been executed before the amount was refunded as the bank had not made a conscious decision to accept payment. The steps taken by it for the processing of the telegraphic transfer order were purely provisional and procedural. ¹³⁶⁰

34-429

If this reasoning were applied to giro transfers, it would appear that the payee's bank must be given an opportunity to reject payment if ordered to do so by the payee within a reasonable time. At the same time, it seems unlikely that the payer has the right to countermand payment once the amount has been credited to the payee's account. Momm's case, discussed above, shows that notice to the payee is not required to effect transfer. It is arguable that the giro transfer should be regarded as executed as soon as the entries are made by the computer but that the recipient has the right to reject the payment made to him within a reasonable time. ¹³⁶¹

Availability as if cash

34-430

The Laconia was explained by the House of Lords in The Chikuma.¹³⁶² In this case an amount due under a charterparty was credited by the payee's bank in Rome to the payee's account as of the due date, which was Thursday, January 22, 1976, but coupled with an indication that the "value date" was to be January 26, which fell on the Monday of the following week. Under Italian law, the funds were apparently available to the payee as from January 22 but interest on this deposit was to commence running on the 26th, namely the value date. Furthermore, if the payee had chosen to withdraw the funds on the 22nd, he would have incurred a liability to pay interest up to the 26th. Lord Bridge pointed out that, on this basis, the amount involved was not available to the payee on January 22 in the same way as cash. In reality, the arrangement was akin to an overdraft facility granted for the four days involved. To constitute payment, the amount involved would have had to be available for the payee's unconditional use on the due date.

34-431

This decision has been forcefully criticised¹³⁶³ on the basis that the position should have been regarded as governed by English law, under which the funds would have been treated as unequivocally available to the payee when the amount was credited to his account on January 22. It is believed that this criticism is questionable. Under prevailing English practice the amount involved would in all probability not have been credited to the payee's account before the due date although he might have been given preliminary notification of its receipt. Alternatively, if his account had been credited forthwith, the payee would have been specifically advised that the funds were not available for drawings until the 26th. It is clear that, in either case, payment would not have been complete on January 22.

Giro not an assignment

34-432

The rules proposed in the foregoing paragraph in respect of countermand presuppose that bank giro credits and other giro forms amount to no more than instructions given by a principal (the transferor) to an agent (the paying banker). It would be necessary to reconsider the proposed rules if a giro operation amounted to a statutory or to an equitable assignment by the transferor (the assignor) to the payee (the assignee) of a debt due to the transferor from the paying banker (the debtor, in this context). To illustrate the point, take a standing order of which the payee is given a copy or notice; if the standing order were considered an assignment, the transferor would be precluded from revoking it by a unilateral countermand given to the bank. An attempt will be made to show that giro operations do not involve an assignment either under s.136 of the Law of Property Act 1925 or in equity.¹³⁶⁴

34-433

Two arguments demonstrate that a giro operation does not constitute a statutory assignment. First, in the usual course of events a giro transaction does not involve a transfer of the total debt owed by the banker to the transferor. The assignment of part of a debt is, of course, not sanctioned by s.136.¹³⁶⁵ It might, perhaps, be objected that this argument is without merit as the giro form separates the amount covered by it from the remaining balance in the transferor's account; that balance remains a debt payable on demand whilst the amount specified in the giro form, having been demanded by the issuing of the giro instruction, constitutes a matured debt. It is, however, submitted that as the giro form itself constitutes a notice requiring the bank (the debtor) to effect transfer, the separation of the amount to be transferred from the balance is effected by the alleged assignment. It follows that the transfer relates only to part of the debt and, thus, remains outside the scope of s.136. Secondly, a giro transaction does not always relate to funds standing to the credit of the transferor's account at the time the instruction is issued. A standing order is a typical case in point. Undoubtedly, the transferor contemplates that the required funds will be available at the time transfer is due. It is nevertheless unrealistic to regard the debt, to be owed to him by the bank in the future, as anything but an expectancy. As such it is not encompassed by s.136.¹³⁶⁶

Equitable assignment

34-434

The points raised in the previous paragraph do not necessarily rule out the possibility of regarding giro transactions as equitable assignments. ¹³⁶⁷ However, to attribute to the transferor an intention to effect an assignment militates against the true nature of the transaction. The one and only object of all the different types of giro forms is to instruct the paying banker to perform a service on behalf of his principal, who is the transferor. ¹³⁶⁸ It is clearly contemplated that such an instruction may be revoked. This is confirmed by the original explanation of the system in the Golden Memorandum of 1967, by the language of the forms used for standing orders and for traders' credits and, above all, by the authority signed by the debtor in direct debiting arrangements. Moreover, none of these forms, or indeed any other giro form, discloses an intention of conferring on the payee a right to claim payment of the amount involved from the paying banker. It is significant that the view that a money transfer involves no more than a string of instructions given by a principal to an agent, and hence does not constitute an assignment, derives support from a dictum of Webster J. ¹³⁶⁹

¹²²⁴. This section of the chapter draws heavily on E.P. Ellinger, E. Lomnicka and C.V.M. Hare, Ellinger's Modern Banking Law, 5th edn (2011).

¹²²⁵. Usually the payer instructs his bank to debit his account with the amount of the transfer, but it is possible for a non-customer to instruct a bank to make a giro transfer simply by paying cash over the counter; much turns on the practice of individual banks as to whether they will accept giro transfer instructions from non-customers. Where the payee does not have a bank account, the funds are usually deposited into a general account at the receiving bank, and left at the payee's disposal.

¹²²⁶. R. v Preddy [1996] A.C. 815, 834 HL.

¹²²⁷. See Foskett v McKeown [2001] 1 A.C. 102, 128, per Lord Millett: "No money passes from paying bank to receiving bank or through the clearing system (where the money flows may be in the opposite direction) there is simply a series of credits and debits which are causally and transactionally linked". See also Customs and Excise Commissioners v FDR Ltd [2000] S.T.C. 672 at [37]; and Dovey v Bank of New Zealand [2000] 3 N.Z.L.R. 641, 648 NZCA; European Bank Ltd v Citibank Ltd [2004] NSWCA 76 at [57]–[62]; Darkinjung Pty Ltd v Darkinjung Local Aboriginal Land Council [2006] NSWSC 1217 at [13]; Scottish Exhibition Centre Ltd v Commissioners for Revenue and Customs [2008] S.T.C. 967 at [19] Ct of Sess IH.

¹²²⁸. R. v Preddy, above (credit transfer); Mercedes-Benz Finance Ltd v Clydesdale Bank Plc [1997] C.L.C. 81 Ct of Sess OH (debit transfer). Assignment is considered further in para.34-432, below.

¹²²⁹. [1989] Q.B. 728, 750.

¹²³⁰. Presumably, Staughton J. was referring to Delbrueck & Co v Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co, 609 F. 2d. 1047 at 1051 (1979) (see below, para.34-427).

¹²³¹. See below, para.34-396.

¹²³². See below, para.34-398.

¹²³³. B. Geva, The Law of Electronic Funds Transfers (New York, 1992–2002, looseleaf, s.1.03[4].

¹²³⁴. As is the cheque clearing. But see above, paras 34-153–34-154, for new Pt 4A of the Bills of Exchange Act 1882, as inserted by s.13 of the Small Business, Enterprise and Employment Act 2015 (not yet fully in force), which allows for cheques and bank giro credits to be presented for payment by electronic means.

- 1235. CHAPS is an electronic real-time sterling credit transfer system, normally used for high value transfers. The Faster Payments Service began operation in May 2008 and offers a near real-time facility for internet and telephone transfers between bank accounts, with standing orders being processed on a same day basis.
- 1236. Libyan Arab Foreign Bank v Bankers Trust Co [1989] Q.B. 728, 750–751.
- 1237. The text which follows is only concerned with payment netting and not with the netting of contractual commitments, e.g. as carried out in a variety of contracts such as foreign exchange contracts, repurchase agreements, securities trades and derivatives.
- 1238. B. Geva (1991) 19 Can. B.L.J. 138.
- 1239. !The Financial Services (Banking Reform) Act 2013 creates a new competition focused, economic regulator of retail payment systems in the UK: the new Payment Systems Regulator became fully operational on April 1, 2015. In 2015 the Payments Council was replaced by Payments UK, which is the trade association representing the UK payments industry. From July 1, 2017, Payments UK was integrated into a new finance and banking industry trade association called UK Finance (<https://www.ukfinance.org.uk>).
- 1240. Probably on the same principle as applied in Clarke v Dunraven (The Satanita) [1897] A.C. 59.
- 1241. R. Cranston, Principles of Banking Law, 2nd edn (2002), pp.281–282.
- 1242. !Hare v Henty* (1861) 10 C.B.N.S. 65; Re Farrow's Bank Ltd [1923] 1 Ch. 41; Parr's Bank Ltd v Thomas Ashby & Co (1898) 14 T.L.R. 563; Tayeb v HSBC Bank Plc [2004] EWHC 1529 (Comm), [2004] 4 All E.R. 1024 at [57]. See also Tidal Energy Ltd v Bank of Scotland Plc [2014] EWCA Civ 1107, [2014] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 549, where the Court of Appeal, by a majority (Tomlinson L.J. at [48]–[49] and Lord Dyson M.R. at [59], Floyd L.J. dissenting at [23]), held that banking practice could be relied on in order to construe a CHAPS transfer form (the judgments, even of the majority, are not easy to reconcile, but all three Lord Justices appear to agree that there can be reliance on banking practice for the purposes of interpretation where the practice is known or reasonably available to both the bank and its customer).
- 1243. Barclays Bank Plc v Bank of England [1985] 1 All E.R. 385, 394; see also Turner v Royal Bank of Scotland Plc [1999] Lloyd's Rep. Bank. 231 CA.
- 1244. !See, e.g. CHAPS Reference Manual (version: July 31, 2017), p.12.
- 1245. There is also the cheque clearing, but this is not classified as a giro system: see B. Geva (1991) 19 Can. B.L.J. 138, s.1.03[3].
- 1246. See above, n.1223.
- 1247. !CHAPS used to operate a euro credit transfer system but that system closed in May 2008. Euro payments can now be made over a system called TARGET2, which can be used to make domestic and cross-border payments in euro throughout the EU. The Bank of England decided not to participate in TARGET2, accordingly UK banks have made individual arrangements for cross-border euro payments, using TARGET2 via other Member States. UK banks also have a range of other euro payment mechanisms available to them. In order to promote a Single European Payment Area (SEPA), the European Payment Council has developed the SEPA Credit Transfer Scheme (SCT) and the SEPA Direct Debit Scheme (SDD). Since January 2008 (for the SCT) and May 2009 (for the SDD), it has been possible for UK banks to register to participate in these schemes. The SCT and SDD are harmonised payment instruments for making domestic and cross-border payments in Euros within the SEPA. See E.P. Ellinger, E. Lomnicka and C.V.M. Hare, Ellinger's Modern Banking Law, 5th edn (2011), pp.563–564.
- 1248. !As from September 6, 2010, the maximum limit for all types of payment through the Faster

Payment Service was fixed at £100,000, although individual banks may set lower limits. It is now possible to send individual payments of up to £250,000 using the Faster Payments Service, but individual banks and building societies set their own limits depending on how the payment is sent and the type of account their customer is sending from (<http://www.fasterpayments.org.uk>).

- 1249. See E. Katz [2014] B.J.I.B.F.L. 462 on the elimination of settlement risk associated with net settlement in BACS and the Faster Payment Service.
- 1250. But the bank is under no obligation to make the transfer if there are insufficient funds in the account to cover it, nor is it obliged to monitor the account subsequently to see whether sufficient funds have been credited to the account to cover the standing order: Whitehead v National Westminster Bank Ltd, The Times, June 9, 1982.
- 1251. The system is currently administered by BACS and is governed by its own set of rules: The Service User's Guide and Rules to the Direct Debit Scheme.
- 1252. There is also a Paperless Direct Debit service.
- 1253. The creditor's failure properly to implement a correctly completed direct debit mandate might constitute a breach of an implied term of the underlying contract between them, or even a breach of a duty of care in tort owed by the creditor to the debtor: Weldon v GRE Linked Life Assurance Ltd [2000] 2 All E.R. (Comm) 914, Nelson J. With effect from January 1, 2008, the use of AUDDIS to submit direct debit instructions became mandatory for all new service users that submit direct to BACS (The Service User's Guide and Rules to the Direct Debit Scheme).
- 1254. Mercedes-Benz Finance Ltd v Clydesdale Bank Plc [1997] C.L.C. 81 Ct of Session OH.
- 1255.  The Payment Services Regulations 2009 (SI 2009/209), as amended, include requirements for the refund of payment transactions initiated by or through the payee: see regs 63, 64. For application of the Regulations in general, see above, para.34-223. The Payment Services Regulations 2017 (SI 2017/752) reg.79 provides for refunds of payment transactions initiated by or through a payee, and reg.80 provides for requests for refunds for payment transactions initiated by or through a payee. For application of the PSRs 2017, see para.34-223, n.676 above.
- 1256. [1997] 1 W.L.R. 938, applied in Gibbs Mew Plc v Gemmell [1999] 1 E.G.L.R. 43 CA; Courage Ltd v Crehan [1999] 2 E.G.L.R. 145 CA; Esso Petroleum Co Ltd v Ilanchelian Unreported, March 19, 2001; Geldof Metaalconstructie NV v Simon Carves Ltd [2010] EWCA Civ 667 at [43].
- 1257. Esso Petroleum Co Ltd v Milton [1997] 1 W.L.R. 938 at 606f.
- 1258. Esso Petroleum Co Ltd v Milton [1997] 1 W.L.R. 938 at 607j.
- 1259. See criticisms of R. Hooley [1997] C.L.J. 500 and A. Tettenborn (1997) 113 L.Q.R. 374.
- 1260. Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s.55(1)(a).
- 1261. See, by analogy, The Brimnes [1975] 1 Q.B. 929, 949, 964–965, 969 CA.
- 1262.  In fact, the claimants in this case did attempt to rely on an express term of the licence agreements which purported to exclude any right of set-off, but the Court of Appeal held the term to be unreasonable under the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 (applying Stewart Gill Ltd v Horatio Myer & Co Ltd [1992] Q.B. 600 CA). In some cases there may be an issue as to whether the 1977 Act is engaged in the first place, see African Export-Import Bank v Shebah Exploration and Production Co Ltd [2017] EWCA Civ 845 (no set-off clause in facilities agreement based on industry standard form).

- 1263. Nova (Jersey) Knit Ltd v Kammgarn Spinnerei GmbH [1977] 1 W.L.R. 713, 721 HL.
- 1264. See J.K. MacLeod (1997) 113 L.Q.R. 133, 156.
- 1265. But note that on November 25, 1992, by Resolution 47/34, the United Nations General Assembly approved the Report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) and the Model Law on International Credit Transfers finalised at UNCITRAL's 25th Session of May 4–22, 1992; see UN: General Assembly, Official Records, 4th Session, Supp. No.17, A/47/17. The General Assembly recommended that all States enact legislation based on the Model Law. At the time of writing there is, however, no indication of forthcoming legislation in the United Kingdom. In the United States two statutory regimes are in force: the Electronic Fund Transfer Act 1978, applicable to consumer transactions, and art.4A of the Uniform Commercial Code, which applies to wholesale transfers.
- 1266. SI 1999/1876.
- 1267. SI 2009/209, as amended. See above, paras 34-223 et seq. This section of Ch.34 can give no more than an outline of some of the key provisions in the PSRs. For detailed analysis, see E.P. Ellinger, E. Lomnicka and C.V.M. Hare, Ellinger's Modern Banking Law, 5th edn (2011), pp.601 et seq.
- 1268.  Directive 2007/64 of the European Parliament and of the Council on payment systems in the internal market ([2007] O.J. L319/1). The Revised Payment Services Directive 2015/2366/EU ("PSD2") repeals and replaces Directive 2007/64/EC. EU Member States have until January 13, 2018 to implement the requirements of PSD2. The Payment Services Regulations 2017 (SI 2017/752) ("PSRs 2017"), implement in part PSD2 in the UK. The PSRs 2017 revoke and replace the Payment Services Regulations 2009. With certain exceptions as set out in reg.1, which include where the implementation period is linked to the coming into force of the secure communication and authentication requirements adopted under art.98 of PSD2, the PSRs 2017 come into force on January 13, 2018 (PSRs 2017 reg.1(6)). See, generally, para.34-223 n.676 above.
- 1269. The PSRs also introduce a new authorisation regime for providers of payment services which are neither credit institutions nor e-money institutions.
- 1270. regs 33(1), 51(1). But the rules relating to value date and availability of funds in reg.73 apply regardless of whether both payer and payee are located within the EEA (reg.51(2)).
- 1271. This includes (arguably) entirely "in-house" transfers, as well as transfers between two branches of the same bank within the UK or different EEA states, and where the payer and payee are the same person: see E.P. Ellinger, E. Lomnicka and C.V.M. Hare, Ellinger's Modern Banking Law, 5th edn (2011), pp.595 and 601.
- 1272. PSRs Sch.1 Pt 2, (f) and (g).
- 1273. See above, para.34-226.
- 1274. regs 33(4), 51(3). Hereafter referred to as the "corporate opt-out". For example, see Tidal Energy Ltd v Bank of Scotland Plc [2013] EWHC 2780 (QB), [2013] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 605 at [21] (affirmed [2014] EWCA Civ 1107, [2014] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 549), where the PSRs were excluded by a clause in the bank's terms and conditions which governed the claimant's account.
- 1275. reg.120(1). In this regulation, a "private person" means (a) any individual, except where the individual suffers the loss in question in the course of providing payment services; and (b) any person who is not an individual, except where that person suffers the loss in question in the course of carrying on business of any kind (reg.120(3)). A fiduciary or representative may also, generally, bring the action on behalf of a private person: reg.120(2). See also above, para.34-221.
- 1276. With both domestic transfers and overseas transfers to other EU Member States, the application of the PSRs may turn on the currency of transfer.

1277. But note, e.g., the express preservation of general common law rights in the context of termination of a framework contract, see reg.43(7), and see also above, n.955.

1278. E.P. Ellinger, E. Lomnicka and C.V.M. Hare, Ellinger's Modern Banking Law, 5th edn (2011), pp.618–619. It seems to be arguable that the common law continues to apply in those cases where the payment service provider has exercised the “corporate opt-out” and contracted out of the PSRs conduct of business requirements (see above, para.34-404).

1279. !For a single payment service contract (defined in reg.2(1) of PSRs 2009 and 2017: essentially, a one-off transaction) information requirements of payer's bank and payee's bank are to be found in regs 36–39 and Sch.4 (see also PSRs 2017 regs 43–47 and Sch.4). For “framework contracts” (defined in n.955 above) information requirements relating to both banks are contained in regs 40–46 and Sch.4 (see also PSRs 2017 regs 48–54 and Sch.4). For provisions common to both types of contract, see regs 47–50 (see also PSRs 2017 regs 55–59). For other information requirements, see PSRs 2017 regs 60 (information requirements for account information service providers), 61 (information on ATM withdrawal charges) and 62 (provision of information leaflet). Also note disapplications in relation to regulated contracts falling within the scope of the Consumer Credit Act 1974 (reg.34) (see also PSRs 2017 reg.41), and for low-value payment instruments (reg.35) (see also PSRs 2017 reg.42). Part 6 of the PSRs 2017 does not apply to registered account information service providers or EEA registered account information service providers, except for regs 59 and 60 (PSRs 2017 reg.40(4)). The “corporate opt-out” (see above, para.34-404) applies to the information requirements of Pt 5 (reg.33(4)) (the “corporate opt-out” of the information requirements of Pt 6 of the PSRs 2017 is found in reg.40(7) of those Regulations).

1280. !Key terms are defined in reg.2(1): “payment instrument” means any (a) personalised device; or (b) personalised set of procedures agreed between the payment service user and the payment service provider, used by the payment service user in order to initiate a payment order”; “payment order” means any instruction by (a) a payer; or (b) a payee, to their respective payment service provider requesting the execution of a payment transaction”; “payment transaction” means an act, initiated by the payer or payee, of placing, transferring or withdrawing funds, irrespective of any underlying obligations between payer and payee”. Key same terms defined in reg.2(1) of the PSRs 2017. Note the slightly wider definition of “payment transaction” in the PSRs 2017 (“or on behalf of the payer”).

1281. See below, para.34-409.

1282. !reg.75(2) (see also PSRs 2017 reg.91(2), but note that reg.91 only applies where a payment order is initiated directly by the payer (reg.91(1)): for non-execution or defective execution of a payment order initiated by the payer through a payment initiation service, see PSRs 2017 reg.93, which includes, in reg.93(2), (4), a requirement that a payment initiation service provider, on request, must immediately compensate an account servicing payment service provider for losses incurred or sums paid as a result of the refund to the payer). The general rule is that the payer's bank must ensure that the amount of the payment transaction is credited to the account of the payee's bank by the end of the business day following receipt of the payment order: reg.70(1) (see also PSRs 2017 reg.86(1)); but subject to exceptions in the case of payment instructions initiated by way of a paper payment order, and certain payment transactions (e.g. not in euro or sterling) executed wholly within the EEA: reg.70(3), (4) (see also PSRs 2017 reg.86(2), (3)). See also Tidal Energy Ltd v Bank of Scotland Plc [2013] EWHC 2780 (QB), [2013] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 605 at [22] (affirmed [2014] EWCA Civ 1107 without reference to this point), where H.H.J. Havelock-Allan Q.C. said (obiter) that if reg.75 had applied to the transfer (it did not because the PSRs had been expressly excluded by the bank's terms and conditions), the unique identifier given by the payer would have been incorrect because there was a mismatch between the payee's name, on the one hand, and the account number and sort code, on the other, in which case reg.74(2) would have applied. Regulation 74(2) provides: “Where the unique identifier provided by the payment service user is incorrect, the payment service provider is not liable under regulation 75 or 76 for non-execution or defective execution of the payment transaction, but the payment service provider—(a) must make reasonable efforts to recover the funds involved in the payment transaction; and (b) may, if agreed in the framework contract, charge the payment service user for any such recovery”. For equivalent provision to reg.74(2), see PSRs 2017 reg.90(2).

1283.

⚠ reg.75(4) (see also PSRs 2017 reg.91(3)). Liability under reg.75 does not apply if reg.79 (force majeure) applies (see also PSRs 2017 reg.96). The “corporate opt-out” (see above, para.34-404) applies to reg.75 (reg.51(3)) (and also to reg.91 of the PSRs 2017: PSRs 2017 reg.63(5)(a)).

1284.

⚠ reg.76(5) (see also PSRs 2017 reg.92(6)). Liability under reg.76 does not apply if reg.79 (force majeure) applies (see also PSRs 2017 reg.96). The “corporate opt-out” (see above, para.34-404) applies to reg.76 (see reg.51(3)) (and also to reg.92 of the PSRs 2017: PSRs 2017 reg.63(5)(a)).

1285.

⚠ reg.77. (for “corporate opt-out”, see reg.51(3)). See also PSRs 2017 reg.94 (for “corporate opt-out”, see PSRs 2017 reg.63(5)(a)).

1286.

⚠ reg.59(1), which makes the payment service user’s reporting obligation a condition for redress under regs 61, 75, 76 or 77 (see also PSRs 2017 reg.74(1), which relates to redress under regs 76, 91, 92, 93 or 94). Regulation 59(2) relieves the payment service user of this obligation if his bank has failed to comply with various information requirements in Pt 5 of the PSRs (see also PSRs 2017 reg.74(2)).

1287.

⚠ reg.78 (see also PSRs 2017 reg.95). Arguably, this allows the payer’s bank to short-circuit the contractual chain of banks and claim against a remote correspondent bank to whom the liability in question is attributable: see E.P. Ellinger, E. Lomnicka and C.V.M. Hare, Ellinger’s Modern Banking Law, 5th edn (2011), pp.607 and 618.

1288.

⚠ reg.55(1) (see also PSRs 2017 reg.67(1)).

1289.

⚠ reg.55(2) (see also PSRs 2017 reg.67(2), which, in (c), extends to consent given via the payee or a payment initiation service provider). For withdrawal of consent, see reg.55(3)–(4) (and above, para.34-328) (see also PSRs 2017 reg.67(3)–(4)). A framework contract may give the payment service provider the right to stop the use of the payment instrument on reasonable grounds relating to (a) security of the payment instrument; (b) the suspected unauthorised or fraudulent use of the payment instrument or (c) in the case of a payment instrument with a credit line, a significantly increased risk that the payer may be unable to fulfil its liability to pay (reg.56(2)) (see also PSRs 2017 reg.71(2)).

1290.

⚠ reg.61(a) (see also PSRs 2017 reg.76(1)).

1291.

⚠ reg.61(b) (see also PSRs 2017 reg.76(1)).

1292.

⚠ reg.59(1), which makes the payment service user’s reporting obligation a condition for redress under regs 61, 75, 76 or 77 (see also PSRs 2017 reg.74(1), which relates to redress under regs. 76, 91, 92, 93 or 94). Regulation 59(2) relieves the payment service user of this obligation if his bank has failed to comply with various information requirements in Pt 5 of the PSRs (see also PSRs 2017 reg.74(2)).

1293.

⚠ reg.60(1). For PSRs 2017, see reg.75(1), and also reg.75(2) which deals with the burden of proof where a transaction is initiated through a payment initiation service provider (failure to do so may result in a payment initiation service provider having to compensate an account servicing payment service provider that has had to refund the payer, or restore his account, following an unauthorised payment: reg.76(5)).

1294.

!reg.60(2). “Authentication” is defined in reg.2 of the PSRs 2017 as “a procedure which allows a payment service provider to verify the identity of a payment service user or the validity of the use of a specific payment instrument, including the use of the user’s personalised security credentials”. “Personalised security credentials” are defined in reg.2 to mean “personalised features provided by a payment service provider to a payment service user for the purposes of authentication”.

1295.

!reg.60(3). For PSRs 2017, see reg.75(3). The payment service user’s obligations in relation to payment instruments and personalised security credentials are set out in PSRs 2017 reg.72: the user must only use the instrument in accordance with its terms and conditions (so long as those terms and conditions are “objective, nondiscriminatory and proportionate”), he must notify the payment service provider in the agreed manner and without undue delay on becoming aware of the loss, theft, misappropriation or unauthorised use of the payment instrument, and he must take all reasonable steps to keep safe personalised security credentials relating to the payment instrument or an account information service. If a payment service provider, including a payment initiation service provider, claims that a payer acted fraudulently or failed with intent or gross negligence to comply with reg.72, the payment service provider must provide supporting evidence to the payer (PSRs 2017 reg.75(4)).

1296.

!reg.58 places the payment service provider that issues a payment instrument under certain obligations in relation to the security of the instrument. PSRs 2017 reg.73, sets out obligations of the payment service provider in relation to payment instruments.

1297.

!See also PSRs 2017 reg.77(3) (note that reg.72 sets out the obligations of the payment service user in relation to payment instruments and personalised security credentials). For recent consideration of the meaning of “gross negligence” in a different context, see Camerata Property Inc v Credit Suisse Securities (Europe) Ltd [2011] EWHC 479 (Comm) at [161]; Winnetka Trading Corp v Julius Baer International Ltd [2011] EWHC 2030 (Ch), [2012] 1 B.C.L.C. 588 at [16].

1298.

!reg.62(1). Under reg.77(1) of the PSRs 2017, the payer’s liability is restricted to £35 at most. However, under PSRs 2017 reg.77(2), the payer will not be liable for any losses if (a) the loss theft or misappropriation of the payment instrument was not detectable by the payer prior to the payment, unless the payer acted fraudulently, or (b) the loss was caused by acts or omissions of an employee, agent or branch of a payment service provider or of an entity which carried out activities on behalf of the payment service provider.

1299.

!reg.62(3)(a). See also PSRs 2017 reg.77(4)(a).

1300.

!reg.62(3)(b). See also PSRs 2017 reg.77(4)(b).

1301.

!reg.62(3)(c). See also PSRs 2017 reg.77(4)(d). The non-fraudulent payer will also not be liable for any losses where reg.100 requires the application of “strong customer authentication” (see para.34-223, n.676 above), but the payer’s payment service provider does not require strong customer authentication (PSRs 2017 reg.77(4)(c)). Where the payer’s payment service provider had to make a refund to the payer/restore the debited payment account as the result of an unauthorised payment transaction (reg.76(1)), the payer’s payment service provider would be entitled to compensation from the payee or the payee’s payment service provider (or both) where reg.100 required the application of strong customer authentication, but the payee or the payee’s payment service provider did not accept strong customer authentication (reg.77(6)).

1302.

!reg.63(1).

1303.

!reg.63(2) (see also PSRs 2017 reg.79(1), (2), but note restrictions in paras (5), (6). Regulation 79(3), sets out the payer’s entitlement to an unconditional refund of the full amount of any direct debit transactions denominated in euro which comply with art.1 of Regulation (EU) 260/2012. The payer must make the request for a refund to his bank within eight weeks from the date on which the funds were debited (reg.54(1)) (see also PSRs 2017 reg.80(1)). The bank then has 10 business days in which to make the refund or justify its refusal to do so (reg.54(5)) (see also PSRs 2017 reg.80(4)).

1304. But see Dovey v Bank of New Zealand [2000] 3 N.Z.L.R. 641, 651–652 (the Court of Appeal of New Zealand held that where the payer's bank had been instructed to make a transfer of funds by tested telex the bank was not in breach of contract by using an even faster method of transfer).

1305.  See Tidal Energy Ltd v Bank of Scotland Plc [2014] EWCA Civ 1107, [2014] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 549, where the Court of Appeal, by a majority, construing a CHAPS transfer order in accordance with banking practice, held that a CHAPS transfer was within mandate when the payment was made to an account matching the sort code and account number—but not the name of the payee/beneficiary customer—provided by the payer. For casenotes, see G. McMeel [2015] L.M.C.L.Q. 1; T.K.C. Ng (2015) 131 L.Q.R. 202. An attempt by the bank to draft its terms and conditions of use of online facilities widely so as to impose liability on a consumer customer for unauthorised debits to his account, regardless of the circumstances, is likely to be held to be “unfair” under the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999 or, for contracts made on or after October 1, 2015, Pt 2 of the Consumer Rights Act 2015 (which revokes and replaces the 1999 Regulations): see Spreadex Ltd v Cochrane [2012] EWHC 1290 (Comm) (consumer opened spread betting account via bookmaker's website).

1306. See below, paras 34-528 et seq.

1307. [1981] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 194, 199.

1308. But the bank must, of course, exercise care and skill in its operation and is under a duty to adhere to its instructions: see, e.g. the American case of Mellon Bank v Securities Settlement Corp, 710 F. Supp. 991 (N. J. 1989). In the normal course of events, the payer's bank will not owe the payee a duty of care in tort: Wells v First National Commercial Bank [1998] P.N.L.R. 552 CA; National Westminster Bank Ltd v Barclays International Ltd [1975] Q.B. 654; cf. TE Potterton Ltd v Northern Bank Ltd [1995] 4 Bank. L.R. 179 Irish HC. See also Grosvenor Casinos Ltd v National Bank of Abu Dhabi [2008] EWHC 511 (Comm), [2008] 2 All E.R. (Comm) 112 (held no privity of contract between drawee bank and payee of a bearer cheque when that bank was employed as collecting bank by payee's own bank—remitting bank—under Uniform Rules for Collections, 1995 revision, No.522); noted by H. Bennett (2008) 124 L.Q.R. 532.

1309. See above, paras 34-326, 34-347. As regards the paying banker's right to reclaim an amount paid to the credit of the wrong account as money paid under a mistake of fact, see Continental Caoutchouc and Gutta Percha Co v Kleinwort Sons & Co (1904) 90 L.T. 474.

1310.  SI 2009/209, as amended. See also above, paras 34-223 et seq. and 34-404. The Revised Payment Services Directive 2015/2366/EU (“PSD2”) repeals and replaces Directive 2007/64/EC. EU Member States have until January 13, 2018 to implement the requirements of PSD2. The Payment Services Regulations 2017 (SI 2017/752) (“PSRs 2017”), implement in part PSD2 in the UK. The PSRs 2017 revoke and replace the Payment Services Regulations 2009. With certain exceptions as set out in reg.1, which include where the implementation period is linked to the coming into force of the secure communication and authentication requirements adopted under art.98 of PSD2, the PSRs 2017 come into force on January 13, 2018 (PSRs 2017 reg.1(6)). See, generally, para.34-223, n.676 below.

1311.  Again a distinction is made between “framework contracts” and “single payment service contracts”. See n.1263 above. See also PSRs 2017 Pt 6.

1312.  For detailed analysis, see E.P. Ellinger, E. Lomnicka and C.V.M. Hare, Ellinger's Modern Banking Law, 5th edn (2011), pp.621 et seq. See also PSRs 2017 Pt 7.

- 1313. !reg.70(6). See also PSRs 2017 reg.86(5).
- 1314. !reg.70(5). See also PSRs 2017 reg.86(4), which is not restricted only to payment orders initiate by or through the payee.
- 1315. !reg.73(2) (see also PSRs 2017 reg.89(2), (3), which is not restricted only to payments received as a result of direct debits); and see also reg.71(2) (see also PSRs 2017 reg.87(2)), which applies where the payee has no account at the bank (reg.71(1)) (see also PSRs 2017 reg.87(1)).
- 1316. !reg.73(1). See also PSRs 2017, reg. 89(1) and, with specific reference to payment orders initiated by the payee, reg. 92(4).
- 1317. !reg.68(1). See also PSRs 2017 reg.84(1).
- 1318. !For controls on the level of charges, see reg.54. See also PSRs 2017 reg.66.
- 1319. !reg.68(2). See also PSRs 2017 reg.84(2).
- 1320. !reg.68(3)(b) (see also PSRs reg.84(3)(b)). The payer's bank is responsible for reimbursing the payee for unauthorised deductions where the payer initiates the payment transaction (reg.68(3)(a)) (see also PSRs reg.84(3)(a)).
- 1321. !reg.75(2). For relevant time-limits, see reg.70(1), (3), (4), and above, n.1266. See also PSRs 2017 reg.91(2) (for relevant time limits, see reg.86). Regulation 91 only applies where a payment order is initiated directly by the payer (reg.91(1)). For non-execution of defective execution of a payment order initiated by the payer through a payment initiation service, see reg.93.
- 1322. !reg.75(5). See also PSRs 2017 reg.91(5), (6) and, for late execution, (7). Regulation 91 only applies where a payment order is initiated directly by the payer (reg.91(1)). For non-execution or defective execution of a payment order initiated by the payer through a payment initiation service, see PSRs 2017 reg.93.
- 1323. !reg.76(2) (see also PSRs 2017 reg.92(2)). The payee's bank must transmit the relevant payment order within the time-limits agreed between the payee and his bank: reg.70(6) (see also PSRs 2017 reg.86(5)).
- 1324. !reg.76(3). See also PSRs 2017 reg.92(3).
- 1325. !reg.76(4). See also PSRs 2017 reg.92(5); note that the payee's payment service provider must act free of charge.
- 1326. !reg.76(5). See also PSRs 2017 reg.92(6), (7), but if the payer's payment service provider proves that the payee's service provider has received the amount of the payment transaction, para.(6) does not apply and the payee's payment service provider must value date the amount on the payee's payment account no later than the date the amount would have been value dated if the transaction had been executed correctly (reg.92(8)).
- 1327. !reg.77. See also PSRs 2017 reg.94 (which includes charges and interest incurred as a result of late execution of the payment transaction).

- 1328. reg.59(1), which makes the payment service user's reporting obligation a condition for redress under regs 61, 75, 76 or 77 (see also PSRs 2017 reg.74(1), which relates to redress under regs 76, 91, 92, 93 or 94). Regulation 59(2) relieves the payment service user of this obligation if his bank has failed to comply with various information requirements in Pt 5 of the PSRs (see also PSRs 2017 reg.74(2)).
- 1329.  reg.74(2) (see also PSRs 2017 reg.90(2)). See above, n.1266.
- 1330.  reg.79. See also PSRs 2017 reg.96.
- 1331.  reg.78 (see also PSRs 2017 reg.95). See also n.1271 above.
- 1332. See Dovey v Bank of New Zealand [2000] 3 N.Z.L.R. 641, 650 (the Court of Appeal of New Zealand held that by nominating the bank to which funds were to be transferred, the claimant gave that bank authority to accept funds on his behalf, even though the bank had yet to open an account for him). But a transfer of funds to a bank account of the creditor (or a release of funds to such an account), which is not the account stipulated in the underlying contract, is not payment, nor is it even a valid tender of payment (PT Berlian Laju Tanker TBK v Nuse Shipping Ltd [2008] EWHC 1330 (Comm), [2008] 1 C.L.C. 967 at [67]).
- 1333. But see Customs and Excise Commissioners v National Westminster Bank Plc [2002] EWHC 2204 (Ch), [2003] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 327 (held bank was not authorised to receive payment on its customer's behalf simply because he had a current account with it).
- 1334. That there is no privity of contract between the payee and an agent of his own bank: see Calico Printers' Association Ltd v Barclays Bank Ltd (1931) 36 Com. Cas. 71 (affirmed (1931) 36 Com. Cas. 197). That such a single transaction does not constitute the payer a "customer", see Great Western Ry Co v London and County Banking Co [1901] A.C. 414.
- 1335. Abou-Rahman v Abacha [2005] EWHC 2662 (QB), [2006] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 247, where Treacy J. refused to follow Royal Bank of Canada v Stangl, 32 A.C.W.S. (3d) 17 (1992), a Canadian decision to the opposite effect. The Court of Appeal affirmed Treacy J.'s decision but there was no appeal on this issue: [2006] EWCA Civ 1492, [2007] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 115.
- 1336.  SI 2009/209, as amended. See above, paras 34-223 et seq. and 34-404. The Revised Payment Services Directive 2015/2366/EU ("PSD2") repeals and replaces Directive 2007/64/EC. EU Member States have until January 13, 2018 to implement the requirements of PSD2. The Payment Services Regulations 2017 (SI 2017/752) ("PSRs 2017"), implement in part PSD2 in the UK. The PSRs 2017 revoke and replace the Payment Services Regulations 2009. With certain exceptions as set out in reg.1, which include where the implementation period is linked to the coming into force of the secure communication and authentication requirements adopted under art.98 of PSD2, the PSRs 2017 come into force on January 13, 2018 (PSRs 2017 reg.1(6)). See, generally, para.34-223, n.676 above.
- 1337.  reg.78. See also PSRs 2017 reg.95, and note that this also extends to non-execution or defective or late execution of payment transactions initiated through a payment initiation service.
- 1338.  reg.74. See also PSRs 2017 reg.90.
- 1339.  reg.79. See also PSRs 2017 reg.96.
- 1340. Ellinger's Modern Banking Law, 5th edn (2011), pp.618–619, which also raises the question whether reg.78 is intended to be the only claim available to the payer's bank or whether it still allows the payer's bank to recoup its losses from the bank that it has instructed directly.
- 1341. Subject to issues of causation.

- 1342. Where an intermediary bank incurs liability as a result of carrying out the instructions of the payer's bank, it will usually be entitled to an indemnity or contribution from the payer's bank: Hon Soc of the Middle Temple v Lloyds Bank Plc [1999] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 193. In English law there is, of course, no privity of contract between such a "correspondent bank" and the paying bank's customer. This principle, which is based on cases establishing that there is no privity of contract between the principal and his agent's sub-agents,
- 1343. Calico Printers' Association Ltd v Barclays Bank Ltd, above. Note that the converse is true in other legal systems, such as in the United States: Evra Corp v Swiss Bank Corp, 522 F. Supp. 820 (1981) (reversed on another point 673 F. 2d 1982 (1982)): see also Uniform Commercial Code s.4A–305. A problem of conflict of laws arises therefore in certain cases involving international money transfers. And see Vroegop [1990] L.M.C.L.Q. 540, especially 550 et seq. Where a collecting bank collects an instrument for a remitting bank, there is no privity of contract between the collecting bank and the customer of the remitting bank either at common law or under the Uniform Rules for Collections, 1995 revision (URC 522): Grosvenor Casinos Ltd v National Bank of Abu Dhabi [2008] EWHC 511 (Comm), [2008] 2 All E.R. (Comm) 112 at [157], Flaux J., distinguishing Bastone & Firminger Ltd v Nasima Enterprises (Nigeria) Ltd [1996] C.L.C. 1902 at 1908, Rix J., who thought the URC point arguable. See further, H. Bennett (2008) 124 L.Q.R. 532.
- 1344. [1981] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 194, 198.
- 1345. This view derives support from the House of Lord's decision in Equitable Trust Co of New York Ltd v Dawson Partners (1927) 27 Ll.L. Rep. 49.
- 1346.  SI 2009/209, as amended. For application of the PSRs in general, see above, paras 34-223 et seq., and also para.34-404. See also E.P. Ellinger, E. Lomnicka and C.V.M. Hare, Ellinger's Modern Banking Law, 5th edn (2011), pp.607 et seq. The Revised Payment Services Directive 2015/2366/EU ("PSD2") repeals and replaces Directive 2007/64/EC. EU Member States have until January 13, 2018 to implement the requirements of PSD2. The Payment Services Regulations 2017 (SI 2017/752) ("PSRs 2017"), implement in part PSD2 in the UK. The PSRs 2017 revoke and replace the Payment Services Regulations 2009. With certain exceptions as set out in reg.1, which include where the implementation period is linked to the coming into force of the secure communication and authentication requirements adopted under art.98 of PSD2, the PSRs 2017 come into force on January 13, 2018 (PSRs 2017 reg.1(6)). See, generally, para.34-223, n.676 above.
- 1347.  See also reg.55(4) for withdrawal of consent to the execution of a series of payment transactions. See also PSRs 2017 reg.67(4).
- 1348.  For time of receipt of a payment order, see PSRs reg.65. See also PSRs 2017 reg.81.
- 1349.  For further provisions relating to revocation, see PSRs reg.67(4)–(6). See also PSRs 2017 reg.83(4)–(6).
- 1350. On revocation of an agent's authority, see generally, above, paras 31-166 et seq.
- 1351. [1933] 1 K.B. 47.
- 1352. [1977] Q.B. 790, sub. nom. Delbrueck & Co v Barclays Bank International Ltd [1976] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 341.
- 1353. [1977] Q.B. 790 at 799–800. cf. Libyan Arab Foreign Bank v Bankers Trust Co [1988] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 259, 273–274, where Staughton J. inclined to the view that an in-house payment was complete when the bank set the transferring procedure into motion. The point was, though, obiter.
- 1354. [1981] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 194.

- 1355. [1989] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 608, 631–632.
- 1356. [2004] EWHC 1529 (Comm), [2004] 4 All E.R. 1024 (noted by Ellinger (2005) 121 L.Q.R. 48).
- 1357. At [60] and [85]. However, that judge stated (at [60]) that there was an appropriate analogy with the practice in relation to documentary credits where, at the time of presentation of documents, a bank with cogent evidence of fraud can decline to make payment (United Trading Corp v Allied Arab Bank Ltd [1985] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 554). He added (at [61]) that the same exception was likely in respect of illegal transactions (see Mahonia Ltd v JP Morgan Chase Bank [2003] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 911). See also Tidal Energy Ltd v Bank of Scotland Plc [2013] EWHC 2780 (QB), [2013] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 605 at [49] (affirmed [2014] EWCA Civ 1107, [2014] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 549), where held CHAPS payment complete where payee's bank, that is able to match account number and sort code to one of its accounts, credits that account with the money and sends an acknowledgement back to the payer's bank to indicate acceptance of the payment.
- 1358. 609 F.2d 1047 (1979) (affirming 464 F.Supp. 989 (1979)). cf. Mellon Bank v Securities Settlement Corp, 710 F.Supp. 991 (1989), suggesting that where the clearing rules do not preclude countermand, payment is complete upon the crediting of the payee's account.
- 1359. [1977] A.C. 850 (reversing [1976] Q.B. 835; questioning on this point Astro Amo Compania Naviera SA v Elf Union SA (The Zographia M) [1976] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 382; and overruling Empresa Cubana de Fletes v Lagonisi Shipping Co Ltd (The Georgios C) [1971] 1 Q.B. 488). See also Tenax Steamship Co Ltd v The Brimnes (Owners) (The Brimnes) [1975] Q.B. 929.
- 1360. [1977] A.C., per Lord Wilberforce at 871–872. And see Lord Fraser of Tullybelton at 884.
- 1361. But delay may not be fatal to the payee's right to reject where he was unaware of the payment being made to his account: HMV Fields Properties Ltd v Bracken Self Selection Fabrics Ltd, 1991 S.L.T. 31. Contrast TSB Bank of Scotland Plc v Welwyn Hatfield DC and Council of the London Borough of Brent [1993] 2 Bank. L.R. 267, where the payee was fully aware that funds had been transferred into the account.
- 1362. A/S Awilco of Oslo v Fulvia Spa di Navigazione of Cagliari (The Chikuma) [1981] 1 W.L.R. 314. And see Royal Products Ltd v Midland Bank Ltd [1981] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 194, 209–210. See also Tayeb v HSBC Bank Plc [2004] EWHC 1529 (Comm), [2004] 4 All E.R. 1024 at [88].
- 1363. F.A. Mann (1981) 97 L.Q.R. 379.
- 1364. See generally on the distinction between statutory and equitable assignment, Vol.I, Ch.19.
- 1365. Williams v Atlantic Assurance Co [1933] 1 K.B. 81, 100; Walter and Sullivan Ltd v Murphy & Sons Ltd [1955] 2 Q.B. 584.
- 1366. Durham Bros v Robertson [1898] 1 Q.B. 765; cf. Walker v Bradford Old Bank Ltd (1884) 12 Q.B.D. 511 (where, however, the assignment was by deed). See generally Vol.I, paras 19-007 et seq. That a direct debit does not constitute an assignment to the payee of funds standing to the credit of the payor's account with the remitting bank is supported by Lord Penrose's decision in the Court of Session (OH) in Mercedes-Benz Finance Ltd v Clydesdale Bank Plc, 1997 S.L.T. 905.
- 1367. See generally, Vol.I, paras 19-021 et seq.
- 1368. Morrell v Wootten (1852) 16 Beav. 197, especially 204, shows the difficulty in deciding whether a specific instruction to a bank amounts to an assignment or is a mere order directed to the agent. cf. Williams v Everett (1811) 14 East 582.
- 1369. In Royal Products Ltd v Midland Bank Ltd [1981] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 194, 198. And see Staughton J. in Libyan Arab Foreign Bank v Bankers Trust Co [1988] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 259, 273.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 34 - Bills of Exchange and Banking
Section 2. - Aspects of Banking Law
(f) - The Deposit Account

Its nature

34-435

⚠ Sums paid by a customer into a deposit account may be payable on demand, but in most cases are payable either after notice or at a fixed date, e.g. three months after the date of deposit. ¹³⁷⁰ ⚠ The customer is not, as a rule, entitled to draw cheques on such an account. ¹³⁷¹ The advantage that the customer gains by opening a deposit account is that the banker pays interest—at a rate determined by him ¹³⁷²—on sums paid into such an account. If the customer is entitled to demand payment by giving notice, the rate of interest is usually rather low. If the amount is repayable at a fixed date, i.e. is a “fixed deposit”, interest at a higher rate may be granted. In practice payment of amounts standing to the credit of deposit accounts will be granted on demand; but if the customer requests payment before the agreed date he stands to lose the interest.

Deposit receipts

34-436

Banks do not now issue deposit receipts or deposit books. It used to be the case that a deposit receipt or deposit book was given to the customer at the time of the deposit. These documents were not negotiable instruments. ¹³⁷³ If the banker paid the amount standing to the credit of the deposit account to a third party, against the deposit receipt, he did so at his peril ¹³⁷⁴ and was liable to pay again to the depositor. A delivery of the deposit receipt by the customer, with the intention of giving the transferee a right to the proceeds, amounted, however, to an equitable assignment. ¹³⁷⁵ The transfer of a deposit receipt could also constitute a donatio mortis causa. ¹³⁷⁶

Third party debt orders

34-437

Section 40 of the Senior Courts Act 1981, as amended by SI 2001/3649, ¹³⁷⁷ makes the usual deposit account subject to attachment by way of third party debt order (formerly called “garnishee”) proceedings: the sum in the deposit account is now to be deemed “due or accruing” notwithstanding that the withdrawal of money from the account is ordinarily subject to certain conditions.

^{1370.}

⚠ The Banking Conduct of Business Sourcebook (BCOBS) and/or the Payment Services Regulations 2009 (SI 2009/209), as amended, place banks under various statutory requirements when opening certain types of savings accounts: see E.P. Ellinger, E. Lomnicka and C.V.M. Hare, Ellinger's Modern Banking Law, 5th edn (2011), Ch.9, s.1; and also n.959 above. The Revised Payment Services Directive 2015/2366/EU ("PSD2") repeals and replaces Directive 2007/64/EC. EU Member States have until January 13, 2018 to implement the requirements of PSD2. The Payment Services Regulations 2017 (SI 2017/752) ("PSRs 2017"), implement in part PSD2 in the UK. The PSRs 2017 revoke and replace the Payment Services Regulations 2009. With certain exceptions as set out in reg.1, which include where the implementation period is linked to the coming into force of the secure communication and authentication requirements adopted under art.98 of PSD2, the PSRs 2017 come into force on January 13, 2018 (PSRs 2017 reg.1(6)). See, generally, para.34-223, n.676 above.

- 1371. In Hopkins v Abbott (1875) L.R. 19 Eq. 222 Malins V.C. thought that cheques may be drawn on a deposit account stipulating for payment on demand. This view does not reflect modern practice: see E.P. Ellinger, E. Lomnicka and C.V.M. Hare, Ellinger's Modern Banking Law, 5th edn (2011), p.361.
- 1372. The bank's right to fix its interest rate remains intact even if the bank is being wound up: Bank of Credit and Commerce International v Malik [1996] B.C.C. 15, reversed in part on another point: [1996] C.L. 677 CA.
- 1373. Pearce v Creswick (1843) 2 Hare 286, 298; Re Dillon, Duffin v Duffin (1890) 44 Ch. D. 76.
- 1374. Evans v National Provincial Bank (1897) 13 T.L.R. 429. The depositor's signature at the back of the note does not preclude him from pleading wrongful payment.
- 1375. Re Griffin [1899] 1 Ch. 408.
- 1376. Re Dillon, Duffin v Duffin (1890) 44 Ch. D. 76.
- 1377. See, formerly, the Administration of Justice Act 1956 s.38.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 34 - Bills of Exchange and Banking
Section 2. - Aspects of Banking Law
(g) - Giving Information on Financial Transactions

Scope

34-438

! Bankers give information concerning business transactions mainly in two types of cases: (a) where a customer asks the banker's advice as regards an investment ¹³⁷⁸ !

Advising on investments

34-439

! In general a bank is not under a legal obligation to provide advice but if it gives advice then it must do so using reasonable care and skill. ¹³⁷⁹ ! In Woods v Martins Bank ¹³⁸⁰ it was held that giving advice on financial matters to customers or potential customers is a banking business and that the banker owes his customer a duty to act with reasonable care and skill in giving such advice. The duty will be contractual where the claimant can prove a contract under which the defendant bank has agreed to provide a service including the provision of advice, ¹³⁸¹ ! otherwise the claimant must establish a tortious duty to advise, and such a duty will arise only in exceptional circumstances. ¹³⁸² ! Its breach would, for example, give rise to an action in damages where, in a transaction between the bank and the customer, the customer has pursued to his detriment a course of action in reliance on a negligent statement made by the bank. ¹³⁸³ In view of the decision of the House of Lords in Hedley Byrne & Co v Heller & Partners ¹³⁸⁴ and the later decision of the Privy Council in Royal Bank Trust Co (Trinidad) Ltd v Pampellone ¹³⁸⁵ it is clear that a bank owes a similar duty of care where it agrees to advise a person who is neither an actual nor a potential customer. The latter authority, though, shows that the scope of the duty owed depends largely on the circumstances of the enquiry and, further, on the information the bank agrees to provide. In Pampellone's case the majority of the Judicial Committee held that, where the advice furnished by the bank to the enquirer was confined to his being supplied with a consultant's report on the subject of the enquiry, the bank could not be regarded as warranting or endorsing this advice and was not under a duty to suggest to the customer that reports of the type furnished could not be regarded as conclusive. ¹³⁸⁶ An issue may arise as to whether advice was given or information merely provided. The Hedley Byrne duty to take care not to misstate is much narrower than the advisory duty where it was to be expected that relevant professional standards (e.g. FCA conduct of business rules) would form part of the assessment as to whether it had been broken. ¹³⁸⁷ ! In some circumstances there may be what has been described as a "mezzanine" duty, occupying middle ground between a full duty to advise on the one hand, and a limited duty not to mislead on the other, whereby the bank that chooses to explain the nature and effect of a proposed transaction owes a duty to do so fully, accurately and properly. ¹³⁸⁸ !

High risk transaction

34-440

In modern trade banks advise their customers on high risk transactions, such as the trading in foreign exchange options. It is accepted that, in transactions of this type, the bank's duty of care is marginal because the risky nature of the markets involved is common knowledge.¹³⁸⁹ However, the bank owes a higher duty of care if it advises an unsophisticated customer to trade in a foreign currency in the course of a non-speculative transaction, for instance, encourages him to borrow in a foreign currency because the rate of interest charged on it is lower than applied to loans in the home currency.¹³⁹⁰ Whether or not a given customer is the type of investor capable of appreciating the risks involved in a market, to which he has access through the bank, is a question of fact. Thus, in *ANZ Banking Group Ltd v Cattan*¹³⁹¹ the customer was given access to the Emerging Market Debt because the bank had assumed that his background and experience gave him the experience required for trading on this sector. Morison J. concluded that the bank's assessment of the customer's calibre was based on reasonable grounds. In the circumstances, the bank incurred no liability either by granting the customer access to the market or for failing to give him advice. In JP Morgan Chase Bank v Springwell Navigation Corp,¹³⁹² Gloster J. held that a trader employed by an investment bank, who made recommendations and gave advice to a financially sophisticated investor as to the purchase of emerging market debt securities, did not assume responsibility to the investor so as to bring into play the full range of obligations of an investment advisor or asset manager.

Banking references

34-441

⚠ The decision of the House of Lords in *Hedley Byrne & Co v Heller & Partners*¹³⁹³ indicates that if a banker agrees to give a reference concerning the financial position of one of his customers, he is likely to owe a duty of care not only to the banker who requests the information but also to the person for whom the information is, in fact, obtained. The latter can, thus, sue the reference-giving banker in negligence, if he sustains financial loss due to a carelessly given false reference.¹³⁹⁴ ⚠ However, the prevailing view is that the reference-giving banker successfully excludes liability, by giving the information "without responsibility".¹³⁹⁵ In such cases, the reference-giving banker owes only a duty to act honestly.¹³⁹⁶ It has also been held that a bank that provides a reference by telephone on a given customer does not warrant to the enquirer that the person who made reference to the bank is the real customer rather than an imposter. The bank, in other words, does not assume a duty of care to the enquirer as to the true identity of the customer.¹³⁹⁷

¹³⁷⁸.

⚠ The position at common law is considered in the paragraphs below. However, there is also a regulatory regime that controls the way a bank provides investment advice and sells investment products contained in the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 and the Financial Conduct Authority's (FCA) Conduct of Business Sourcebook (COBS) (prior to April 1, 2013, the Financial Services Authority was the relevant regulatory body). Specific obligations on a bank turn on the type of customer with which it is dealing, and banks are required to categorise their clients as retail clients, professional clients and eligible counterparties. Breach of FCA conduct of business rules is actionable, as if it were an actionable breach of statutory duty, by a "private person" suffering loss (FSMA 2000 s.138D: prior to April 1, 2013, this was found in s.150 of the 2000 Act). For definition of a "private person", see n.672 above. In Sivagnanam v Barclays Bank Plc [2015] EWHC 3985 (Comm), it was held (at [8]–[15]) that the claimant, the sole director/shareholder of a company that entered into an interest rate hedging product with the defendant bank, could not bring a claim for loss said to have been suffered as a private person as a result of breach of the conduct of business rules under FSMA 2000 s.138D(2), as he did not fall within the category of person intended to be protected by the FSMA 2000 or the relevant conduct of business rules. It was also held (at [16]–[21]) that his loss, as a shareholder, was irrecoverable due to the rule against reflective loss. For recent decisions on categorisation of clients, see Maple Leaf Macro Volatility Master Fund v Rouvroy [2009] EWHC 257 (Comm), [2009] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 475; Wilson v MV Global UK Ltd [2011] EWHC 138 (QB); Bank Leumi

(UK) Plc v Wachner [2011] EWHC 656 (Comm); and see also J. Ahern [2011] J.I.B.F.L. 556. For recent decisions on what constitutes investment advice, see Walker v Inter-Alliance Group Plc [2007] EWHC 1858 (Ch); Wilson v MV Global UK Ltd, above; Bank Leumi (UK) Plc v Wachner, above; Rubenstein v HSBC Bank Plc [2011] EWHC 2304 (QB), [2011] 2 C.L.C. 459, reversed in part [2012] EWCA Civ 1184, [2013] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 915; Zaki v Credit Suisse (UK) Ltd [2011] EWHC 2422 (Comm), [2011] 2 C.L.C. 523, affirmed [2013] EWCA Civ 14, [2013] 1 B.C.L.C. 640; City Index Ltd v Balducci [2011] EWHC 2562 (Ch), [2012] 1 B.C.L.C. 317. No claim for breach of statutory duty is available for breaches of FSMA 2000 which are not specifically defined in the Act as giving rise to a claim for breach of statutory duty (Hall v Cable and Wireless Plc [2009] EWHC 1793 (Comm), [2011] B.C.C. 543 at 548–549); there is no common law duty of care to comply with the FSMA 2000 regulatory regime (Brown v InnovatorOne Plc [2012] EWHC 1321 (Comm) at [1276]). See also Green & Rowley v Royal Bank of Scotland Plc [2013] EWCA Civ 1197, [2013] 2 C.L.C. 634 where the Court of Appeal held that the existence of a statutory means of enforcement of the (then current) conduct of business rules under FSMA 2000 s.150 (now under s.138D), meant that no separate co-extensive common law duty of care arose and there could be no claim for breach of those rules other than under s.150. The case was highly fact sensitive. The bank had not undertaken an advisory duty. As Tomlinson L.J. said (at [23]): “Absent that feature, there is neither justification nor need for the imposition of a common law duty independent of but co-extensive with the remedy provided by statute” (emphasis added). Green & Rowley was distinguished in Crestsign Ltd v National Westminster Bank Plc [2014] EWHC 3043 (Ch) at [146]–[147], where the Deputy High Court Judge resisted “the fallacious reasoning that because common law duties and COBS duties are not co-terminous, and because [the claimant] is excluded from the class of persons able to sue for breach of COBS duties, the banks can owe no common law duty which happens to overlap with a COBS duty”. See also Anderson v Openwork Ltd [2015] EW Misc B14 (Slough County Court) at [11]–[12], [17]–[18]. In Suremimo Ltd v Barclays Bank Plc [2015] EWHC 2277 (QB) the judge, when granting the claimant permission to amend its particulars of claim, held (at [31]–[37]) that it was sufficiently arguable that the claimant had a claim in the tort of negligence against the defendant bank for its conduct of a review of swaps it had agreed with the FCA. However, the judge in Suremimo have Green & Rowley cited to him. This omission was noted by the Court of Appeal in CGL Group Ltd v Royal Bank of Scotland [2017] EWCA Civ 1073, which held (at [103]) that banks do not owe a duty of care in tort to customers when carrying out a regulatory review of potential swaps mis-selling cases which was required as a result of agreement between the FCA and various banks. In Flex-E-Vouchers Ltd v Royal Bank of Scotland [2016] EWHC 2604 (QB) at [53] and [67], it was held that there was no implied term in a swap sale contract that the bank would comply with the requirements of the FSA/FCA’s Handbook, including when it conducted a regulatory review.

1379.

! Finch v Lloyds TSB Bank Plc [2016] EWHC 1236 (QB) at [52].

1380.

[1959] 1 Q.B. 55, especially at 70–72, distinguishing Banbury v Bank of Montreal [1918] A.C. 626. See also Bank of Montreal v Young, 60 D.L.R. (2d) 220 (1966). cf. Mutual Life and Citizens’ Assurance Co v Evatt [1971] A.C. 793 (concerning advice on investments by insurance company; held not to be liable as giving of financial advice was not company’s business).

1381.

! Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 s.13; Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.49.

1382.

! See Finch v Lloyds TSB Bank Plc [2016] EWHC 1236 (QB) at [47]–[59] (borrower’s claim that lender owed a contractual or tortious duty to advise it about a potentially onerous clause in a loan agreement failed because there was no contract whereby the lender was to provide advice and there was nothing exceptional about the relationship to justify the imposition of a tortious duty to advise, especially where borrower represented by professional advisers and giving of advice might have been contrary to lender’s best interests). See also Worthing v Lloyds Bank Plc [2015] EWHC 2836 (QB) (investors’ claim that bank was in breach of a strict obligation to correct an error in its original investment advice failed because the original advice had not been given in error and, even if it had been, there was no strict contractual obligation to correct that advice). As regards the weight given to a bank’s promotional materials, see James v Barclays Bank Plc (1995) 4 Bank. L.R. 131. In Finch v Lloyds TSB Bank Plc [2016] EWHC 1236 (QB), above, at [58], the judge saw no significance in the fact that the defendant lender had used the phrase “trusted advisor” in its marketing and training material, finding that the phrase was merely part of a marketing strategy to differentiate the lender from its competitors.

1383. Esso Petroleum Co Ltd v Mardon [1976] Q.B. 801; Box v Midland Bank Ltd [1979] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 391, which shows also that a bank is liable for a branch manager's negligent statement; note that judgment was reversed on the question of costs: [1981] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 434. See also Verity and Spindler v Lloyds Bank Plc [1995] C.L.C. 1557.

1384. [1964] A.C. 465. For a fuller account, see Vol.I, paras 7-089 et seq.

1385. [1987] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 287. See also Federal Savings Credit Union Ltd v Hessian, 98 D.L.R. (3d) 488 (1979).

1386. When a person passes on information supplied by another, the question whether he is adopting that information as his own or making some representation about it is a question of interpretation depending on the facts (Webster v Liddington [2014] EWCA Civ 560, [2014] P.N.L.R. 26 at [36], and setting out a non-exhaustive list of possible scenarios at [46]). The test for determining which scenario applies is an objective one (IFE Fund SA v Goldman Sachs International [2006] EWHC 2887 (Comm), [2007] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 264 at [50], per Toulson J., affirmed [2007] EWCA Civ 811, [2007] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 449). See above, Vol.1, para.7-011.

1387.  Green & Rowley v Royal Bank of Scotland Plc [2012] EWHC 3661 (QB) at [82], affirmed [2013] EWCA Civ 1197, [2013] 2 C.L.C. 634, and see, especially, [18] and [23], per Tomlinson L.J.; Rubenstein v HSBC Bank Plc [2011] EWHC 2304 (QB), [2011] 2 C.L.C. 459 at [87], reversed in part [2012] EWCA Civ 1184, [2013] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 915; Shore v Sedgwick Financial Services Ltd [2007] EWHC 2509 (Admin), [2008] P.N.L.R. 10 at [161]; Seymour v Ockwell [2005] P.N.L.R. 758 at 784; Loosemore v Financial Concepts [2001] Lloyd's Rep. P.N. 235 at 241; Anderson v Openwork Ltd [2015] EW Misc B14 (Slough County Court) at [13], [22]–[25]; O'Hare v Coutts & Co [2016] EWHC 2224 (QB) at [206]–[208], where Kerr J. adopted the test in Montgomery v Lanarkshire Health Board [2015] A.C. 1430, a medical negligence case, to define the standard of care to be applied in the explanation of risk as part of the provision of investment advice, and considered that compliance with COBS rules “is ordinarily enough to comply with a common law duty to inform, forming part of the duty to exercise reasonable skill and care; while breach of them will ordinarily also amount to a breach of that common law duty” (see also Thomas v Triodos Bank NV [2017] EWHC 314 (QB) at [89] for application of the test of materiality in the Montgomery case). See also Grant Estates Ltd (In Liquidation) v Royal Bank of Scotland Plc [2012] CSOH 133 at [79]. Green & Rowley was distinguished in Crestsign Ltd v National Westminster Bank Plc [2014] EWHC 3043 (Ch) at [147] on the ground that in Green & Rowley the court was concerned with whether a duty was owed at common law co-terminous with the (then current) COBS rules. See also Anderson v Openwork Ltd [2015] EW Misc B14 (Slough County Court) at [11]–[12], [17]–[18].

1388.  Crestsign Ltd v National Westminster Bank Plc [2014] EWHC 3043 (Ch) at [142]–[146], relying on Bankers Trust International Plc v PT Dharmala Sakti Sejahtera [1996] C.L.C. 518, 533D–E. See also Wani LLP v Royal Bank of Scotland Plc [2015] EWHC 1181 (Ch) at [34]–[36], [48], where Henderson J. said that the intermediate duty of explanation identified in Crestsign “was not a jurisprudential novelty”. But contrast the doubts as to the existence of such an intermediate duty expressed by the judge in Thornbridge Ltd v Barclays Bank Plc [2015] EWHC 3430 (QB) at [118]–[131]; and see also the restrictive interpretation of Crestsign adopted by Asplin J. in Property Alliance Group Ltd v Royal Bank of Scotland Plc [2016] EWHC 3342 (Ch) at [195]–[196]. In Thomas v Triodos Bank NV [2017] EWHC 314 (QB), where there was no advisory relationship and no advice was given, the defendant bank, which advertised that it subscribed to the voluntary Business Banking Code (which includes a fairness commitment), was held (at [81]) to owe an “intermediate” duty of care to the claimant customers when providing information in response to their inquiries about the financial consequences of switching from variable to fixed rate loans (there were no disclaimers, “basis” clauses or contractual exclusions to contradict the imposition of the duty).

1389. Stafford v Conti Commodity Services [1981] 1 All E.R. 691 (concerning stockbrokers); Lloyd v

City Corp Australia (1986) 1 N.S.W.L.R. 286 (forex trading); McEvoy v ANZ Banking Group Ltd [1988] Aust. Tort Rep. 80–151 (ditto).

1390. Foti v BNP (1989) 54 S.A.S.R. 354 Sup Ct Sth Aust.

1391. [2001] WL 852289.

1392. [2008] EWHC 1186 (Comm) at [450]–[457], Gloster J. also held (at [475]–[491]) that disclaimers in the contractual documentation precluded the existence of a general advisory duty; affirmed [2010] EWCA Civ 1221, [2010] 2 C.L.C. 705 (no appeal on general advisory duty issue). See also see Wilson v MF Global UK Ltd [2011] EWHC 138 (QB); Bank Leumi (UK) Plc v Wachner [2011] EWHC 656 (Comm); Standard Chartered Bank v Ceylon Petroleum Corp [2011] EWHC 1785 (Comm), affirmed on different ground [2012] EWCA Civ 1049; City Index Ltd v Balducci [2011] EWHC 2562 (Ch), [2012] 1 B.C.L.C. 317; cf. Rubenstein v HSBC Bank Plc [2011] EWHC 2304 (QB) at [70], [2011] 2 C.L.C. 459, reversed in part (on causation) [2012] EWCA Civ 1184, [2013] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 915; Crestsign Ltd v National Westminster Bank Plc [2014] EWHC 3043 (Ch) at [110]–[111] (but held that banks had successfully disclaimed responsibility). See further, nn.778 and 1361, above.

1393. Above. On the question of proximity, see also McInerny v Lloyds Bank Ltd [1973] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 389, affirmed [1974] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 246.

1394.  For a summary of the three broad approaches to whether a duty of care exists, see Customs & Excise Commissioners v Barclays Bank Plc [2006] UKHL 28, [2007] 1 A.C. 181 at [82]–[83], Lord Mance. In the context of bankers' references, see Playboy Club London Ltd v Banca Nazionale Del Lavoro SpA [2016] EWCA Civ 457, [2016] 1 W.L.R. 3169 (defendant bank did not owe a duty of care to casino for negligent misstatement as to gambler's creditworthiness when request for reference came from associated company of casino: there was no assumption of responsibility or proximity, because neither the true purpose of the reference nor the existence of the casino was revealed and the reference was "given in strict confidence", and it was not fair, just and reasonable to impose liability on the bank). See also Turner v Royal Bank of Scotland Plc [2001] EWCA Civ 64, [2001] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 1057 (on causation and loss).

1395. This is, indeed, the ratio in Hedley Byrne. And see WB Anderson & Sons Ltd v Rhodes (Liverpool) Ltd [1967] 2 All E.R. 850, 857. cf. dicta in L Shaddock & Associates Pty Ltd v Paramatta City Council (1981) 36 A.L.R. 385, 398 (Stephen J.). See also Barclays Bank Plc v Grant Thornton UK LLP [2015] EWHC 320 (Comm) (effectiveness of auditor's disclaimer of responsibility to third party bank).

1396. That this duty is not excluded: see Commercial Banking Co of Sydney Ltd v RH Brown & Co [1972] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 360 High Ct of Aust. Note further that the exclusion of liability for negligence may perhaps be defeated under s.2(2) and/or s.3 of the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977, and perhaps even by the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999 (ST 1999/2083), where the enquirer can be classified as a "consumer" (see E.P. Ellinger, E. Lomnicka and C.V.M. Hare, Ellinger's Modern Banking Law, 5th edn (2011), pp.734–736). With the coming into force of the Consumer Rights Act 2015 for contracts made on or after October 1, 2015 (as to which, see below, para.38-011), ss.2 and 3 of the 1977 Act will not apply to "consumer contracts" and "consumer notices", but see the provision made about such contracts and notices in ss.62 and 65 of the 2015 Act. The Unfair Terms in Consumer Contract Regulations 1999 will be revoked and replaced by Pt 2 of the Consumer Rights Act 2015 but will apply to contracts made before October 1, 2015.

1397. Gold Coin Jolliers SA v United Bank of Kuwait [1997] 6 Bank. L.R. 60.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 34 - Bills of Exchange and Banking
Section 2. - Aspects of Banking Law
(h) - The Banker as Bailee

Degree of care

34-442

One of the ancillary advantages of a banking account is that facilities are afforded for the safe custody of the customer's securities and other valuables. In some instances they are deposited loose, as in the case of marketable securities; in other cases they may be lodged in a locked box or sealed parcel. ¹³⁹⁸ When the banker accepts documents for safe custody, he does not, usually, receive payment for this service. It is, however, doubtful whether the banker is in these cases to be regarded as a gratuitous bailee or a bailee for reward. In Giblin v McMullen ¹³⁹⁹ the Privy Council held that, if a banker accepts without a reward the safe custody of documents, he is a gratuitous bailee. However, there is a relationship of contract between the banker and his customer and it may, therefore, be argued that although the banker does not receive a specific consideration for his services as bailee, he should be treated as a bailee for reward because of the consideration received by him under the general contract which he has with the customer. In any event, in Houghland v RR Low (Luxury Coaches) Ltd ¹⁴⁰⁰ the view was expressed that it is unnecessary to put different types of bailment into watertight compartments, such as gratuitous bailments on the one hand and bailments for reward on the other. A bailee is under a duty to exercise, in each case, a degree of care warranted by the circumstances. As bankers, in order to attract customers, usually advertise that they offer facilities of safe custody, it is reasonable to presume that a high degree of care is required. ¹⁴⁰¹

34-443

There is no English authority relating to the deposit of moneys by a customer in a night safe. It is thought that although the banker has no knowledge at the time of the actual deposit he is, nevertheless, a bailee for reward until the moneys are duly credited to the customer's account, ¹⁴⁰² whereupon the conventional debtor-creditor relationship is created.

Strict liability

34-444

There are some forms of loss for which the banker as bailee is liable even in the absence of negligence. Where he agrees for a reward to store items at a specified place and yet stores them elsewhere he is liable for any loss or damage at the later place, unless he can show that the loss or damage would have been inevitably occasioned had the terms of the contract been strictly observed. ¹⁴⁰³ Similarly, and because misdelivery is tantamount to conversion, ¹⁴⁰⁴ strict liability is imposed on a banker who surrenders the valuables to an unauthorised person. A banker is entitled to retain the valuables for a reasonable time in order to inquire into a suspected forgery or impersonation, but no amount of diligence will mitigate ultimate misdelivery whether the bailment is gratuitous or for reward. The satisfaction of a judgment for damages for conversion, however, transfers to the banker such title to the valuables as was vested in the bailor. ¹⁴⁰⁵

- 1398. As regards the nature of the contract relating to the hire of a safe from a bank, see the decision of the High Court of Australia in Commissioner of Taxation v Australia and New Zealand Banking Group Ltd (1979) 53 A.L.J.R. 336, 339, which suggests that the retention by the bank of a spare key, enabling it to open the safe, gives it the “control” over the items there deposited.
- 1399. (1869) L.R. 2 P.C. 317. See also Kahler v Midland Bank [1948] 1 All E.R. 811, 819–820 (affirmed [1950] A.C. 24).
- 1400. [1962] 1 Q.B. 694, 698. See above, paras 33-008, 33-035, 33-056.
- 1401. The causes of action against the bank may include breach of contract, tort, breach of duty as bailee and liability for conversion (as to which, see Schwarzschild v Harrods Ltd [2008] EWHC 521 (QB)).
- 1402. So held in Bernstein v Northwestern National Bank (1945) 41 A. 2d 440. See also E.P. Ellinger, E. Lomnicka and C.V.M. Hare, Ellinger’s Modern Banking Law, 5th edn (2011), pp.742–743.
- 1403. cf. Lilley v Doubleday (1881) 7 Q.B.D. 510. See above, para.33-051.
- 1404. Stephenson v Hart (1828) 4 Bing. 476, 482–483; Hiort v London and North Western Ry (1879) 4 Ex. D. 188, 194; Glyn, Mills, Currie & Co v East and West India Dock Co (1880) 6 Q.B.D. 475, 493 (affirmed (1882) 7 App. Cas. 591).
- 1405. USA v Dollfus Mieg et Cie SA [1952] A.C. 582.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 34 - Bills of Exchange and Banking
Section 2. - Aspects of Banking Law
(i) - Bankers' Commercial Credits ¹⁴⁰⁶
(i) - The UCP

Purpose of credit

34-445

The expansion of international trade in the last 150 years has necessitated the development of the bankers' commercial credit. Its purpose is to finance contracts of sale of goods where the delay between delivery on board and at destination is likely to be substantial. ¹⁴⁰⁷ The inherent difficulties of overseas transactions are aggravated by the reluctance of both seller and buyer to tie up capital during shipment. Merchants have accordingly availed themselves of the accommodation facilities offered by bankers and in some cases by commercial houses which in return for an agreed commission furnish the credit that the merchants themselves are usually unable or unwilling to afford. ¹⁴⁰⁸

Modern practice

34-446

⚠ Modern practice shows letters of credit being supplanted by open account as the means of settling trade transactions. Nevertheless, letters of credit remain extremely popular in regions such as Asia, where more than 60 per cent of all letters of credit are handled. ¹⁴⁰⁹ The decline in use of letters of credit is likely to continue with the development of the Bank Payment Obligation (BPO), which is an irrevocable undertaking given by an obligor bank (usually the buyer's bank) to a recipient bank (which must be the seller's bank) to pay a specified sum under the condition of a successful electronic matching of data or acceptance of mismatches. In April 2013, the International Chamber of Commerce adopted the Uniform Rules for Bank Payment Obligations. ¹⁴¹⁰ ⚠ The ICC suggests that the BPO is an alternative "electronic letter of credit". However, whilst the BPO has similarities with letters of credit, it is in many ways a very different type of payment process, e.g., unlike a letter of credit, there is no checking and transmission of physical documents by banks, with everything done electronically and automatically in the SWIFT Trade Services Utility; and, unlike the beneficiary of a letter of credit, the seller does not receive a payment undertaking directly from the obligor bank (the seller's claim is against the recipient bank, i.e. the seller's bank, according to the terms of any separate contractual agreement that the seller will usually have entered into with that bank, but this bilateral agreement is not part of the BPO itself). ¹⁴¹¹ ⚠ It remains to be seen whether the BPO will be widely adopted and eventually replace the letter of credit as a method of payment settlement in international trade transactions.

The parties to a commercial credit transaction

34-447

There are at least three parties in a commercial credit transaction. The buyer, having agreed in the contract of sale to furnish a commercial credit, approaches his own banker (the "issuing banker") and requests him to open a commercial credit in favour of the seller. The details of the credit to be opened are set out in an "application form", which is a form prepared by the banker, but filled up by the buyer and signed by him. The banker usually informs the buyer in writing of his willingness to open the commercial credit applied for. The application form will then constitute the basis of the contract between the buyer and his banker. In due course, the issuing banker sends to the seller the commercial credit, which specifies the conditions that the seller must perform in order to obtain payment under it. After receiving this credit, the seller ships the goods to the buyer and tenders the required documents (usually a bill of lading, an insurance policy and an invoice) to the issuing banker or his agent and obtains payment. As the issuing banker's business is, in most cases, carried on at the place of the buyer, the issuing banker frequently engages another banker, operating at the seller's place of business, and instructs him to notify the seller of the opening of the credit, and to make payment against the documents. This second banker is known as "intermediary" or "correspondent banker". It should be added that a commercial credit does not always promise payment of cash against the required documents. In most credits opened in the United Kingdom the issuing banker promises to accept a draft drawn under, and accompanied by the documents required in, the commercial credit. In most credits opened in South East Asia the issuing banker promises to negotiate (usually "without recourse") ¹⁴¹² a draft, accompanied by the required documents, drawn by the seller on the buyer. ¹⁴¹³ On the Continent the issuing banker usually promises to pay cash against the documents. For most purposes these different modes of payment do not, however, lead to differences regarding the rights of the parties.

The Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits: their development

34-448

The wide use of commercial credits in international sales has led to a need for uniformity. The first attempt to provide a uniform system was undertaken by the International Chamber of Commerce (ICC) in 1933, when the first revision of the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits, prepared by this institute was adopted by the bankers of several European countries. A second revision of the Code was promulgated by the ICC in 1951. Although this revision was adopted widely, it was rejected by the bankers in the United Kingdom and in most Commonwealth countries. However, the bankers in these countries adopted the next revision, promulgated in 1962. This third revision settled many of the practical problems that plagued issuers of documentary credits. For this reason, it is not surprising that the third revision attained world wide recognition. Nevertheless, the need for a further revision was felt by about the end of the decade. It was eventually undertaken by the ICC in collaboration with the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL). This revision, known as the 1974 Revision, was more comprehensive than the earlier versions. The 1974 Revision attained universal acceptance and was generally considered a satisfactory Code. But certain technological developments in communications and problems arising in respect of specific provisions of that Revision, especially as regards shipping documents, prompted a further review. ¹⁴¹⁴ The fourth Revision of the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits which remained in effect for 10 years came into force on October 1, 1984. The 10 years following the promulgation of the 1983 Revision were marked by a rise in the volume of letters of credit issued all over the world and also by a substantial increase in disputes ensuing in litigation. Many of the inadequacies of the 1983 Revision surfaced in this process. Others became the subject of specific points of controversy referred to the ICC's banking commission. The 1993 Revision which came into effect on January 1, 1994, ¹⁴¹⁵ purported to cure these defects. There was also an attempt to improve the draftsmanship. All the same, the 1993 Revision was, basically, an updated and improved version of the 1983 Revision.

The 2007 Revision

34-449

The latest revision of the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits ("UCP 600") was approved unanimously at an International Chamber of Commerce Banking Commission meeting in October 2006. UCP 600 came into effect on July 1, 2007.¹⁴¹⁶ A supplement to the UCP dealing with the electronic presentation of documents ("eUCP") has been reissued with UCP 600.¹⁴¹⁷ To accompany this latest revision of the UCP, the ICC published a new version of International Standard Banking Practice for Examination of Documentary Credits ("ISBP"), which is a checklist of items that document examiners need to check for in their review of documents presented under the credit.¹⁴¹⁸ A new version of ISBP was approved by the ICC Banking Commission in April 2013.¹⁴¹⁹

Main changes in the 2007 revision

34-450

⚠ This is not the place for a detailed review of the changes introduced by UCP 600.¹⁴²⁰ Nevertheless, the main changes are summarised in this paragraph and those that follow. First, whereas the 1993 Revision of the UCP ("UCP 500") covered both revocable and irrevocable credits, UCP 600 only applies to irrevocable credits.¹⁴²¹ Secondly, art.1 of UCP 600 states that UCP 600 is to apply "when the text of the credit expressly indicates that it is subject to these rules". The wording constitutes a change from UCP 500, art.1, which says that the UCP applies "where they are incorporated into the text of the credit". Nevertheless, despite the wording of UCP 600 art.1, a court may well allow incorporation of the UCP based upon a previous course of dealing between the parties.¹⁴²² Even in the absence of a previous course of dealing, it has also been suggested that English law would probably allow the incorporation of the UCP into the credit as a matter of business practice because it is so widely used by banks all over the world.¹⁴²³ ⚠ Thirdly, UCP 600 contains a new definitions section (art.2) and interpretations section (art.3). Three definitions are particularly important. A "complying presentation" is defined to mean a presentation that is in accordance with the terms and conditions of the credit, the applicable provisions of the UCP rules and international standard banking practice. The concept of "honour" is also new to UCP 600 and is defined to mean (a) to pay at sight if the credit is available by sight payment; (b) to incur a deferred payment undertaking and pay at maturity if the credit is available by deferred payment¹⁴²⁴; and (c) to accept a bill of exchange ("draft") drawn by the beneficiary and pay at maturity if the credit is available by acceptance. The concept of "negotiation" has caused problems in the past. Under UCP 500 art.10(b)(ii), "negotiation" was defined in terms of "the giving of value" for drafts and/or documents by the bank authorised to negotiate. There were issues as to what this meant and ICC Banking Commission Paper No.2 (September 1994) tried to deal with these issues. The new definition in UCP 600 refers to the "purchase" of drafts and/or documents "by advancing or agreeing to advance funds to the beneficiary on or before the banking day on which reimbursement is due to the nominated bank".

34-451

Some things have not changed. Most importantly, UCP 600 art.4, enshrines the autonomy principle into the UCP. UCP 600 art.5, states that "banks" deal with documents and not goods, services or performance to which the documents relate. The wording is slightly different from UCP 500 which in art.4 states that "all parties" concerned in documentary credit operations deal with documents and not with goods etc. The change in wording should be welcomed. Where the underlying contract is one of sale, the seller and the buyer clearly deal in goods even where the sale is on c.i.f. terms.¹⁴²⁵ Similarly, UCP 600 art.34, makes clear that in credit operations banks have no responsibility for anything other than conformity of the documents to the credit.

Construction of the UCP

34-452

⚠ English courts regard the provisions of the UCP as standard contractual terms which must be incorporated into the credit and construed according to normal principles governing the construction of commercial contracts.¹⁴²⁶ Nevertheless, when construing provisions of the UCP, the courts "seek to give effect to the international consequences underlying the UCP".¹⁴²⁷ In Fortis Bank SA/NV v Indian Overseas Bank, Thomas L.J. said that the UCP was to be construed:

“in accordance with its underlying aims and purposes reflecting international practice and the expectations of international bankers and international traders so that it underpins the operation of letters of credit in international trade. A literal and national approach must be avoided.” ¹⁴²⁸

The English courts have been willing to imply a term into the UCP, ¹⁴²⁹  although Thomas L.J., without reaching a concluded view on the subject, has cautioned that, given its international status, “there would be real difficulties in using a rule of national law as to the implication of terms (if distinct from a method of construction) to write an obligation into the UCP”. ¹⁴³⁰

Standard of examination of documents

34-453

UCP 600 art.14 is the key provision dealing with the standard of examination of the tendered documents. It draws together in one article, and makes some changes to, various provisions that were previously scattered across UCP 500. First, UCP 600 art.14(a), states that a bank must examine tendered documents to determine whether they appear on their face to constitute a complying presentation. Unlike UCP 500 art.13(a), UCP 600 does not expressly state that the bank must conduct its examination “with reasonable care”. ¹⁴³¹ It was felt that the general reference to reasonable care was unnecessary as UCP 600, supplemented by ISBP, adopted a significantly more detailed approach to compliance. ¹⁴³² A presentation either complies or it does not: if it does not, a bank that honours or negotiates is not entitled to reimbursement and cannot claim such entitlement on the basis that it exercised reasonable care in examining the presentation. ¹⁴³³

Secondly, under UCP 600 art.14(b), each bank has a maximum of five banking days following the day of presentation to determine if the presentation is complying. UCP 500 art.13(b), gave the bank a reasonable time, not to exceed seven banking days, to examine the documents and make the determination. UCP 600 brings greater certainty with the removal of the reference to a reasonable time and its replacement by a fixed period of five banking days following the date of presentation.

34-454

Other changes with regard to the standard of examination of documents can be listed as follows. First, UCP 500 art.43, provides that transport documents must be presented to banks not later than 21 days after the date of shipment (but in any event not later than the expiry date of the credit). UCP 600 art.14(c) restricts this rule by stating that a presentation including one or more original transport documents must be made by or on behalf of the beneficiary not later than 21 days after the date of shipment (but in any event not later than the expiry date of the credit). The rule does not apply to copies. Secondly, there are two key parts of UCP 600 art.14 that deal with data content. Article 14(d) provides that data in a document, when read in context with the credit, the document itself and international standard banking practice, need not be identical to, but must not conflict with, data in that document, any other stipulated document or the credit. The intention behind art.14(d) is clearly to move away from the mirror image approach to documentary compliance. Article 14(f) provides that if a credit requires presentation of a document other than a transport document, insurance document or commercial invoice, without stipulating by whom the document is to be issued or its data content, banks will accept the document as presented if its content appears to fulfil the function of the required document and otherwise complies with art.14(d). Article 14(f) seems to take data content out of the equation when there is no stipulation as to what it should be. Thirdly, UCP 600 art.14(g) states that a document presented but not required by the credit is to be disregarded and may be returned to the presenter. Fourthly, UCP 600 art.14(h) provides that non-documentary conditions are to be ignored. A non-documentary condition would be where the credit contains a reference to goods being of “US origin”. This condition will be ignored unless the credit also calls for one of the tendered documents—most likely the certificate of origin—to indicate compliance with that condition. Fifthly, UCP 600 art.14(j), clarifies the position where the addresses and contact details (phone, fax, email, etc.) of the beneficiary and the applicant do not correspond.

Complying presentation

34-455

Under UCP 500 there was no precise statement as to when an issuing or nominated bank had to start the settlement process. By contrast, UCP 600 provides that the issuing bank must honour the credit when it determines that a presentation is complying. ¹⁴³⁴ When a confirming bank determines that a presentation is complying, it must honour or negotiate and forward the documents to the issuing bank. ¹⁴³⁵ When a nominated bank determines that a presentation is complying and honours or negotiates, it must forward the documents to the confirming bank or issuing bank. ¹⁴³⁶

Discrepant documents, waiver and notice

34-456

UCP 500 art.14(d)(ii) makes it clear that a rejection notice has to state “all” discrepancies in respect of which the bank refused the documents. UCP 600 art.16(c)(ii) retains the requirement, although it does so in slightly different language: the bank must give a “single notice” of rejection to the presenter and that notice must state “each discrepancy in respect of which the bank refuses to honour or negotiate”. If the bank fails to comply with this requirement, or any other requirement of art.16, it is precluded from claiming that the documents do not constitute a complying presentation. ¹⁴³⁷ This seems to mean that the bank may be precluded from raising a new objection when documents are retendered by the seller having cured the defect identified in the original notice of rejection. By contrast, in the normal course of events, the mere failure to raise a discrepancy when refusing an initial presentation does not estop a bank at common law from claiming that a subsequent presentation is noncompliant on the basis of that discrepancy. ¹⁴³⁸

34-457

Under UCP 500 art.14(d)(i) a bank which refuses documents must also state in its rejection notice whether it is holding the documents at the disposal of, or is returning them to, the presenter. The purpose of this provision is that, as soon as the documents have been rejected, they should be put back in circulation. However, problems have arisen where a bank serves a rejection notice and at the same time approaches the applicant for a waiver of the discrepancies, and if such waiver is received releases the documents without further notice. For example, in Crédit Industriel et Commercial v China Merchants Bank, ¹⁴³⁹ the issuing bank’s notice of rejection was held to be bad where it ended with the words:

“Should the disc[repancy] being accepted by the applicant, we shall release the documents to them without further notice to you unless yr instructions to the contrary received prior to our payment. Documents held at yr risk for yr disposal”.

Steel J. considered that the conditional nature of the rejection was not saved by the potential for acceptance of contrary instructions prior to payment, particularly where no notice was to be given. The message constituted a continuing threat of conversion of the claimant’s documents. UCP 600 art.16(c)(iii) contains additional options designed to avoid banks sitting on discrepant documents. The rejection notice must state that the bank (a) holds the documents pending further instructions from the presenter; (b) holds the documents until it receives a waiver from the applicant and agrees to accept it, and receives further instructions from the presenter prior to agreeing to accept a waiver; (c) is returning the documents; or (d) is acting in accordance with instructions previously received from the presenter. The bank must act in accordance with the statement contained in the notice with reasonable promptness. ¹⁴⁴⁰

34-458

UCP 600 art.16(d) provides that the rejection notice must be given by telecommunication or, if that is not possible, by other expeditious means no later than the close of the fifth banking day following the day of presentation. This provision is more tightly worded than the equivalent provision in UCP 500. UCP 500 art.14(d)(i) requires notice to be given “without delay but no later than the close of the seventh banking day following the day of receipt of the documents”. The net effect of UCP 600 arts 14(b) and 16(d) seems to be that a bank has a maximum of five banking days following presentation of the documents to determine if the presentation is compliant, but the longer it takes to make its determination, the less time it has available to it to give a notice of rejection to the applicant.

Original documents and copies34-459

The basic rule is that original documents must be tendered to the bank, unless the credit calls for copy documents. However, there has been uncertainty as to what constitutes an original document. ¹⁴⁴¹ Article 17 of UCP clears up that uncertainty. It states that at least one original of each stipulated document must be tendered, ¹⁴⁴² and provides that a bank must treat as original any document bearing an apparently original signature, mark, stamp or label of the issuer of the document, unless the document itself indicates that it is not original. ¹⁴⁴³ Unless a document indicates otherwise, a bank is also to accept a document as original (i) if it appears to be written, typed, perforated or stamped by the document issuer's hand; or (ii) appears to be on the document issuer's original stationery; or (iii) states that it is an original, unless the statement appears not to apply to the document presented. ¹⁴⁴⁴

Commercial invoice34-460

UCP 600 art.18 deals with the commercial invoice. Some parts of the art.18 are the same as the equivalent provision (art.37) in UCP 500, e.g. the requirements in art.18(c) that the description of the goods in the commercial invoice should correspond with that in the credit (in all other documents, the goods may be described in general terms not inconsistent with the description of the goods in the credit). But some parts of art.18 are different. Article 18(a) states that in addition to the requirement that the invoice must be made out to the applicant and made by the beneficiary, it must be made out in the same currency as the credit. This is a useful clarification as it avoids any dispute as to whether the price is merely subject to conversion into the appropriate currency or whether a different stipulated currency makes the document noncompliant. Article 18(b) states that a bank may accept a commercial invoice in excess of the amount permitted in the credit provided the bank in question has not honoured or negotiated for an amount in excess of that permitted by the credit. The bank's decision to do so will be binding on all parties.

The eUCP34-461

To facilitate the electronic transmission of documents tendered under letters of credit, the ICC has promulgated a new set of guidelines entitled the eUCP, which makes provision for the dematerialisation of documents for the purpose of their being transmitted and tendered electronically. ¹⁴⁴⁵ According to art.e1(a), they accommodate the presentation of electronic records alone or in combination with paper documents.

A supplement34-462

The eUCP do not replace the UCP but constitute a supplement. To avoid confusion, the letter “e” precedes the number of each article thereof. When the eUCP are incorporated in a letter of credit, it is not necessary also to incorporate the UCP because, under arts e1(b) and e2(a), the supplement incorporates the UCP in any facility subject to it. However, under art.e2(b), where the eUCP applies, its provisions prevail “to the extent that they would produce a result different from the application of the UCP”. At the same time, the eUCP remains subordinate to the UCP if the letter of credit confers on the beneficiary the option of choosing between the presentation of paper documents and electronic records. If, in such a case, he:

“... chooses to present only paper documents, the U.C.P. alone shall apply to that presentation. If only paper documents are permitted under an eUCP Credit, the U.C.P. alone shall apply.”

Seldom used

34-463

To date, the eUCP are not in common use. In the case of letters of credit which call for the drawing of a bill of exchange, such letters of credit available by acceptance or by negotiation, banks and businessmen continue to opt for the presentation of paper documents because under the negotiable instruments laws prevailing in most countries a bill of exchange is issued, accepted and transferred by means of a “signature” in the traditional sense. The eUCP can be more readily used in the case of cash and deferred payment credits but even in these instances they are not popular. All the same, a brief discussion is required.

Important definitions

34-464

To blend the eUCP with the UCP where both apply to a letter of credit, art.e3(a) redefines certain terms for the purpose of applying the UCP to an electronic record presented under the eUCP. “Appears on their face”—used in art.14(a) of UCP 600—is applied to the examination of data content of an electronic record. The generic term “document” includes an “electronic record” and “place of presentation” of electronic records means an “electronic address”. Of particular importance is that “‘sign’ and the like shall include an electronic signature”. Where a letter of credit is subject to the eUCP, this definition would, accordingly, apply to “signature” of a document, for instance a marine bill of lading.¹⁴⁴⁶ It would not, however, apply outside the ambit of the UCP, so that, under the provisions of the applicable local law¹⁴⁴⁷ a negotiable instrument, such as a bill of exchange, will still require a manual or facsimile signature.

Definitions of terms in eUCP

34-465

Further definitions, respecting the eUCP itself, are spelt out in art.e3(b). An “electronic record” means data created, generated, sent, communicated or stored by electronic means, provided its sender and data source can be authenticated and provided further that it is capable of being examined for compliance with the terms and conditions of the eUCP credit. An “electronic signature” means a data process attached to or logically associated with an electronic record and executed to identify the person executing it and to signify his authentication of the electronic record. “Received” means the time when an electronic record enters the information system of the applicable recipient in a form capable of being accepted by that system. An acknowledgement of receipt does not imply an acceptance or refusal of the electronic record under an eUCP credit. A document in the traditional form is called a “paper document”.

Format

34-466

Under art.e4, a credit must specify the formats in which electronic records are to be presented. If no format is specified, any format would do. In art.e3(b)(iii), “format” is defined as the data organisation in which the electronic record is expressed. A word processing system, for instance, constitutes a “format”.

Presentation

34-467

Article e5(a) requires that a place be stated for the presentation of the electronic record and of paper documents. Under art.e5(b) electronic records may be presented separately and need not be presented at the same time. If the eUCP credit allows for the presentation of one or more electronic records, the beneficiary must give notice to signify that the presentation is complete. Such notice may be given as an electronic record or as a paper document and has to identify the credit to which it relates. Presentation is deemed not to have been made if the beneficiary's notice is not received. Article e5(d) restates this last provision as a general rule in respect of all presentations made under an eUCP credit. In effect, this means that the beneficiary has to ensure that his communications have been received by the bank. In addition, art.e5(f) provides that an electronic record that “cannot be authenticated” is deemed not to have been presented.

Bank's inability to receive

34-468

Article e5(e) deals with cases in which a bank is open but its system is unable to receive a transmitted electronic record on the stipulated expiry date or on the designated last day of a designated period. In such a case, the bank is deemed to be closed on the relevant date, which is then postponed (or extended) to “the first following banking day on which such Bank is able to receive an electronic record”. However, if the only electronic record remaining to be presented is the notice of completeness, it may be given by telecommunication or by a paper document and is deemed timely as long as it is sent before the bank is able to receive an electronic record.

Examination

34-469

Article e6 augments the provisions of art.14(a) of UCP 600. Under cl.e6(a), an electronic record at an external system or hyperlink to which reference is made constitutes the electronic record to be examined. The failure of a stipulated system to provide the required access to the applicable electronic record constitutes a discrepancy. Under sub-cl.(b), the forwarding of electronic records by the nominated bank ¹⁴⁴⁸ signifies that the bank has checked the apparent authenticity of the electronic record. Under sub-cl.(c), the inability of the issuing bank or of the confirming bank to examine an electronic record in a format required by the eUCP or, if no format is required, to examine it in the format presented is not a basis for the refusal of the documents.

Time for examination of documents

34-470

Under art.e7(a)(i), the time for the examination of the documents commences on the banking day following the banking day on which the beneficiary's notice of completeness was received. The maximum period of five banking days, prescribed in art.14(b) of UCP 600 is not—in itself—varied. Under art.e7(a)(ii), if the time for the presentation of documents or of the notice of completeness is extended, the time for the examination of the documents commences on the banking day following the day on which the bank to which presentation is to be made is able to receive the notice of completeness.

Notice of refusal

34-471

Article e7(b) does not modify the contents of the notice of refusal—spelt out in art.16(c) of UCP 600—which are to be served by a bank that decides to reject documents tendered to it. However, the clause provides that, if the rejected presentation includes electronic records and the bank that rejects the tender does not receive, within 30 days, instructions from the “presenter” [tenderor] as regards the disposition of the electronic records, “the Bank shall return any paper documents not previously returned to the presenter but may dispose of the electronic records in any manner deemed appropriate without any responsibility”. Obviously, the electronic record may be shredded. Its return to the presenter would not serve any commercial purpose.

Originals and copies

34-472

Under art.e8, any requirement of the UCP or an eUCP for the presentation of one or more originals or copies of an electronic record is satisfied by the presentation of one electronic record. In respect of paper documents, the position remains governed by art.17 of UCP 600. 1449

Issuance

34-473

According to art.e9, unless an electronic record contains a specific date of issuance, it is deemed to have been issued on the day on which it appears to have been sent by the issuer. The date of receipt is deemed to be the date on which it was sent if no other date is apparent.

Transport

34-474

If an electronic record evidencing transport does not specify a date of shipment or of dispatch, art.e10 provides that the date of the issuance of the record is to be treated as the relevant date. This presumption does not apply, however, if the record includes a notation setting out the date of shipment or of transport. Such a notation need not be separately signed or authenticated.

Corruption of record

34-475

Under art.e11(a), if upon its receipt an electronic record “appears to have been corrupted”, the recipient—be it the issuing bank, the confirming or another nominated bank—may request the presenter that the record be represented. Under sub-cl.(b)(ii) if the nominated bank, to which notice is given, is not the confirming bank, it must communicate the request to the issuing bank and any confirming bank. Under sub-cl.(b)(i), the time for examination is thereupon suspended and resumes when the electronic record is re-presented. Under sub-cl.(b)(iii)–(iv), if the electronic record is not presented again within thirty calendar days, the bank may treat the electronic record as not presented and “any deadlines are not extended”.

Additional disclaimer

34-476

The general disclaimer available to banks under the articles of the UCP are discussed elsewhere in this chapter. ¹⁴⁵⁰ Article 12 includes additional disclaimers available where documents are tendered electronically. It provides that by checking the apparent authenticity of an electronic record, banks assume no liability for the identity of the sender, the source of information or its complete and unaltered character other than that which is apparent in the electronic record received by the use of a commercially acceptable data process for the receipt, authentication and identification of electronic records. A bank is, accordingly, not entitled to ignore a red flag which is staring in its face in consequence of a patent irregularity in the electronic record received.

Assessment

34-477

The eUCP were originally adopted by a majority vote of the Banking Commission. ¹⁴⁵¹ It remains to be seen whether the guidelines would eventually gain popularity. Two practical problems, that are not easily overcome, may continue to quench any enthusiasm for their use. One is that the electronic transmission of documents is bound to facilitate the recirculation of documents transmitted in this manner. Where a fraudster and his negotiating bank are in league, the eUCP is bound to play into their hands. The other problem, referred to earlier, arises where the documentary credit transaction involves the use of negotiable instruments drawn at a usance other than at sight. As negotiation and transfer require the indorsement of the instrument (by means of a physically executed signature) completed by its delivery, dematerialisation thereof is ruled out. As the remaining documents are, invariably, tendered together with the bill of exchange, their electronic transmission without the bill is of no practical benefit.

^{1406.} See, in particular, Benjamin's Sale of Goods, 9th edn (2014), Ch.23; R. King, Gutteridge and Megrah's Law of Banker's Commercial Credits, 8th edn (2001); R. Jack, A. Malek and D. Quest, Documentary Credits, 4th edn (2009); P. Ellinger and D. Neo, The Law and Practice of Documentary Letters of Credit (2010); D. Horowitz, Letters of Credit and Demand Guarantees: Defences to Payment (2010).

^{1407.} The last 40 years have seen a substantial increase in the use of standby credits, which serve the same function as performance bonds. For a detailed discussion of standby credits and demand guarantees, see Benjamin's Sale of Goods, 9th edn (2014), Ch.24; R.K. Chhina, Standby Letters of Credit in International Trade (2013); R.F. Bertrams, Bank Guarantees in International Trade, 4th edn (2013). Note that the ICC has published revised Uniform Rules for Demand Guarantees (URDG 758) which came into effect on July 1, 2010; and see A. Affaki and R. Goode, Guide to ICC Uniform Rules for Demand Guarantees URDG 758 (2011).

^{1408.} The object of the transaction is fully explained in Guaranty Trust Co of New York v Hannay & Co [1918] 2 K.B. 623, 652; Pavia & Co SpA v Thurmann-Nielsen [1952] 2 Q.B. 84, 88; Trans Trust SPRL v Danubian Trading Co Ltd [1952] 2 Q.B. 297, 304. For the use of irrevocable credits in transactions other than overseas sales, see Barclays Bank DCO v Mercantile National Bank [1973] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 541 US Cir Ct of App; McInerny v Lloyds Bank Ltd [1973] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 389, affirmed [1974] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 246 (acceptance credits).

^{1409.} A. Casterman (2014) 20(1) DCInsight 18.

- 1410. ! ICC Publication No.750E. See also The ICC Guide to the Uniform Rules for Bank Payment Obligations (ICC Publication No.751E).
- 1411. ! For analysis of the differences between the BPO and a letter of credit, see G. Wynne and H. Fearn [2014] B.J.I.B.F.L. 102. See also K. Vorpeil, "Bank payment obligations: alternative means of settlement in international trade" [2014] I.B.L.J. 41.
- 1412. See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits, 2007 Revision (UCP 600) art.7(a) (no reference to negotiation by issuing bank "without recourse") and art.8(a)(ii) (express reference to negotiation by confirming bank "without recourse").
- 1413. UCP 600 art.6(c), states that a credit must not be issued available by a draft drawn on the applicant.
- 1414. See, generally, problems considered by the ICC's Commission on Banking Techniques and Practice, ICC Brochures No.371, 399 and 434.
- 1415. As ICC Brochure No.500.
- 1416. ICC Publication No.600.
- 1417. Discussed below in paras 34-461 et seq.
- 1418. ICC Publication No.681.
- 1419. ICC Publication No.745.
- 1420. See E.P. Ellinger, "The Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (UCP): their development and the current revisions" [2007] L.M.C.L.Q. 152; C. Debattista, "The New UCP 600—Changes to the Tender of the Seller's Shipping Documents under Letters of Credit" [2007] J.B.L. 329; J. Ulph, "The UCP 600: Documentary Credits in the Twenty-first Century" [2007] J.B.L. 355.
- 1421. UCP 600 art.2 (see definition of "credit").
- 1422. Benjamin's Sale of Goods, 9th edn (2014), para.23–008.
- 1423. ! E. McKendrick, Goode on Commercial Law, 4th edn (2009), p.1077, citing, by analogy, Harlow and Jones Ltd v American Express Bank Ltd [1990] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 343, 349, a case on the Uniform Rules for Collections. See also, R.K. Chhina, "The Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credit (the USP): Are they merely a set of contractual terms?" (2016) 30 B.F.L.R. 245.
- 1424. UCP 600 arts 7(c) and 8(c), establish a definite undertaking by issuing and confirming banks to reimburse on maturity whether or not the nominated bank prepaid or purchased its own acceptance or deferred payment undertaking before maturity. Article 12(b) provides that, by nominating a bank to accept or incur a deferred payment undertaking, an issuing bank gives the nominated bank authority to prepay or purchase a draft accepted or a deferred payment undertaking incurred by that bank. As to the effect of art.12(b) on the assignment of the beneficiary's rights under the credit to the nominated bank before maturity, see below, para.34-487.
- 1425. Arnold Karberg & Co v Blythe, Green, Jourdain & Co [1916] 1 K.B. 495, per Bankes L.J.
- 1426. Bankers Trust Co v State Bank of India [1991] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 443, 456.
- 1427. Glencore International AG v Bank of China [1996] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 135, 148, per Sir Thomas Bingham M.R. On the other hand, in Taurus Petroleum Ltd v State Oil Company of the Ministry of Oil, Republic of Iraq [2015] EWCA Civ 835 at [5], Moore-Bick L.J. recently warned that a court “should be very cautious ... before construing letters of credit by reference to extraneous circumstances”, which, in this case, meant the international background to trading in Iraqi oil (and to similar effect, see Briggs L.J. at [60]).

1428.

⚠ [2011] EWCA Civ 58, [2011] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 33 at [29]. Opinions of the ICC Commission on Banking Technique and Practice and DOCDEX decisions provide evidence as to international banking practice: see Benjamin's Sale of Goods, 9th edn (2014), para.23–009.

1429.

⚠ Seaconsar (Far East) Ltd v Bank Markazi Jomhouri Islami Iran [1999] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 36, 39. See also Bankers Trust Co v State Bank of India [1991] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 587, 599, reversed on grounds of interpretation: [1991] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 443. The locus classicus for the modern approach to the relationship between interpretation and implication is Marks & Spencer Plc v BNP Paribas Securities Services Trust Co (Jersey) Ltd [2015] UKSC 72, [2016] A.C. 742, commenting upon the judgment of Lord Hoffmann in Attorney-General of Belize v Belize Telecom Ltd [2009] UKPC 10, [2009] 1 W.L.R. 1988: see generally, Vol.1, paras 14-006 et seq. In the context of performance bonds, the courts have consistently emphasised that it will be rare for a term to be implied into such a contract, see below, para.34-548, n.1611.

1430.

⚠ Fortis Bank SA/NV v Indian Overseas Bank [2011] EWCA Civ 58, [2011] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 33 at [55]; cited with evident approval by Blair J. in Deutsche Bank AG, London v CIMB Bank Berhad [2017] EWHC 1264 (Comm) at [37].

1431.

In Gian Singh & Co Ltd v Banque de l'Indochine [1974] 2 All E.R. 754, 757–758, Lord Diplock said that the UCP's express reference to reasonable care “does no more than restate the duty of the bank at common law”.

1432.

G. Collyer, Commentary on UCP 600 (2007, ICC Publication No.680), p.62.

1433.

Benjamin's Sale of Goods, 9th edn (2014), para.23–094, citing Equitable Trust Co of New York v Dawson Partners Ltd (1927) 27 Ll. L.R. 49, 52 (Lord Sumner); E.P. Ellinger [2007] L.M.C.L.Q. 166.

1434.

UCP 600 art.15(a).

1435.

UCP 600 art.15(b).

1436.

UCP 600 art.15(c).

1437.

UCP 600 art.16(f) (but note that the preclusion does not apply to a non-confirming nominated bank). See Fortis Bank SA/NV v Indian Overseas Bank [2010] EWHC 84 (Comm), [2010] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 641, affirmed [2011] EWCA Civ 58, [2011] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 33.

1438.

Kydon Compania Naviera v National Westminster Bank Ltd [1981] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 68, 79. See also Benjamin's Sale of Goods, 9th edn (2014), para.23–202; Paget's Law of Banking, 14th edn (2014), para.36.19.

1439.

[2002] EWHC 973 (Comm), [2002] 2 All E.R. (Comm) 427.

1440.

Fortis Bank SA/NV v Indian Overseas Bank [2010] EWHC 84 (Comm), [2010] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 641, affirmed [2011] EWCA Civ 58, [2011] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 33 (where the issuing bank's failure to act in accordance with the disposal statements contained in its UCP 600 art.16(c)(iii) notices, was held, applying UCP 600 art.16(f), to precluded the bank from claiming that the documents did not constitute a complying presentation). In Fortis Bank SA/NV v India Overseas Bank [2011] EWHC 538 (Comm), [2011] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 190, J. Hirst Q.C., sitting as a Deputy Judge of the High Court, held (at [35]) that “in the absence of special extenuating circumstances, a bank which failed to despatch the documents within three banking days would have failed to act within reasonable promptness”.

- 1441. Glencore International AC v Bank of China [1996] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 135; Kredietbank Antwerp v Midland Bank Plc [1999] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 801; Crédit Industriel et Commercial v China Merchants Bank [2002] EWHC 973 (Comm), [2002] 2 All E.R. (Comm) 427.
- 1442. UCP 600 art.17(a).
- 1443. UCP 600 art.17(b).
- 1444. UCP 600 art.17(c).
- 1445. ICC Brochure No.500/3; in force since April 1, 2002; and now see new revision eUCP (Version 1.1), in force since July 1, 2007.
- 1446. UCP 600 art.20(a)(i). As regards “superimposed”, “notation” and stamped, see art.e3(a)(v).
- 1447. As to which see above, para.34-041.
- 1448. For the definition of “nominated bank” see below, para.34-479.
- 1449. See above, para.34-459.
- 1450. See below, para.34-503.
- 1451. By 63 to 3 votes: on November 7, 2001; see Documentary Credit World, Vol.6, issue 2, p.28—February 2002.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 34 - Bills of Exchange and Banking
Section 2. - Aspects of Banking Law
(i) - Bankers' Commercial Credits 1406
(ii) - Types of Documentary Credits

Irrevocable credits

34-478

Article 2 of UCP 600 defines a documentary credit ("credit") as:

"... any arrangement, however named or described, that is irrevocable and thereby constitutes a definite undertaking of the issuing bank to honour a complying presentation."

This marks an important change from UCP 500 which covered both revocable and irrevocable credits. But revocable credits are rare in practice and so the change is not unexpected. Article 2 also contains a definition of "honour", which means:

"to pay at sight if the credit is available by sight payment; to incur a deferred payment undertaking and pay at maturity if the credit is available by deferred payment; to accept a bill of exchange ('draft') drawn by the beneficiary and pay at maturity if the credit is available by acceptance".

Article 2 defines a "complying presentation" of documents as one "that is in accordance with the terms and conditions of the credit, the applicable provisions of [the UCP] and international standard banking practice".

34-479

UCP 600 art.7(a) sets out the issuing bank's payment undertaking in the following terms:

"Provided that the stipulated documents are presented to the nominated bank or to the issuing bank and that they constitute a complying presentation, the issuing bank must honour if the credit is available by:

i.

sight payment, deferred payment or acceptance with the issuing bank;

- ii.
sight payment with the nominated bank and that nominated bank does not pay;
- iii.
deferred payment with a nominated bank and that nominated bank does not incur its deferred payment undertaking or, having incurred its deferred payment undertaking, does not pay at maturity;
- iv.
acceptance with a nominated bank and that nominated bank does not accept a draft drawn on it or, having accepted a draft drawn on it, does not pay at maturity;
- v.
negotiation with a nominated bank and that nominated bank does not negotiate.”

A “nominated bank” is defined in UCP 600 art.2 as “the bank with which the credit is available or any bank in the case of a credit available with any bank”.

34-480

The opening of an irrevocable credit leads to a contract between the issuing bank and the seller. ¹⁴⁵² A documentary credit becomes irrevocable upon issue; that is, upon its release from the control of the issuing bank or confirming bank, irrespective of the time that it is delivered to or received by the beneficiary. ¹⁴⁵³ However, for the purpose of determining whether the buyer has complied with its obligations under the contract of sale, the credit may be considered to be “opened” only when it is communicated to the beneficiary. ¹⁴⁵⁴ In each case, it will be a question of construction of the contract concerned. ¹⁴⁵⁵

Revocable credits

34-481

Where the credit is revocable, the issuing bank is free to amend or cancel it at any time without notice to the beneficiary. ¹⁴⁵⁶ Thus, the opening of a revocable credit does not lead to the creation of a contract between the issuing bank and the seller. ¹⁴⁵⁷ All the issuing bank is required to do is reimburse any other bank for any payment, acceptance or negotiation made by such bank before receiving notice of amendments or cancellation. ¹⁴⁵⁸ Revocable credits are rare and tend only to be found where the parties are not interested in security, e.g. they are members of the same group of companies, but where they are concerned to save costs. UCP 600 only applies to irrevocable credits; it does not apply to revocable credits. ¹⁴⁵⁹ If the parties to the underlying contract want to use a revocable credit, they should make the credit subject to UCP 500, the 1993 revision of the UCP, which does extend to such credits. A credit that does not indicate whether it is revocable or irrevocable will be deemed to be irrevocable. ¹⁴⁶⁰

Confirmed and unconfirmed credits

34-482

Whether a commercial credit is confirmed or unconfirmed depends on the role assumed by the correspondent banker. If the correspondent banker is merely instructed by the issuing banker to notify the seller about the opening of the commercial credit by the issuing banker and to accept, on behalf of the issuing banker, a tender of documents complying with the terms of the credit, the correspondent banker acts as an agent of the issuing banker. The correspondent banker assumes, in such cases, the role of an “advising banker”, and the commercial credit is unconfirmed on the part of the correspondent banker, although it may contain an undertaking of the issuing banker and thus be irrevocable. ¹⁴⁶¹ If at the instruction of the issuing banker the correspondent banker confirms the credit, i.e. adds to the promise of the issuing banker an undertaking of his own to accept or negotiate a draft or to pay the amount of the credit to the seller against conforming documents, the correspondent banker becomes a confirming banker and the commercial credit is a confirmed credit. ¹⁴⁶² In practice the correspondent banker is asked to confirm a credit only if it is irrevocable. ¹⁴⁶³ In an “irrevocable and confirmed credit” the seller obtains an undertaking of both the issuing and the correspondent banker.

Credits “available by negotiation” and negotiation credits

34-483

⚠ The credit may be available by negotiation with a bank nominated in the credit (or with any bank if the credit so provides). UCP 600 art.2 defines “negotiation” to mean the purchase by the nominated bank of bills of exchange (“drafts”) drawn on a bank other than the nominated bank (e.g. the issuing bank), and/or documents under a complying presentation, by advancing or agreeing to advance funds to the beneficiary on or before the banking day on which reimbursement is due to the nominated bank. This enables the beneficiary to obtain funds without delay by selling the documents to the nominated bank (and so it is only of practical use to the beneficiary where payment under the credit is not immediate). A nominated bank that has honoured or negotiated a complying presentation and forwarded the documents to the issuing bank is entitled to reimbursement from the issuing bank under UCP 600 art.7(c). ¹⁴⁶⁴ ⚠ In Société Générale SA v Saad Trading, ¹⁴⁶⁵ ⚠ Teare J. held that (i) if the documents forwarded to the issuing bank are not compliant, the issuing bank is not obliged to reimburse the confirming bank under art.7(c) (and that the issuing bank is not bound by the view of the confirming bank that the documents are compliant) ¹⁴⁶⁶ ⚠; and (ii) under art.7(c) the documents to be forwarded to the issuing bank must be the documents presented to the confirming bank under the credit (discretion on the part of the confirming bank as to which documents to forward would be contrary to the principle of strict compliance). ¹⁴⁶⁷ ⚠ In this case the confirming bank did not forward bills of exchange required to be presented under the letter of credit to the issuing bank, but as there was no dispute that the documents presented by the beneficiary to the confirming bank were compliant, the judge held that the issuing bank was not entitled to refuse to reimburse the confirming bank. ¹⁴⁶⁸ ⚠

34-483A

⚠ The term “negotiation” is sometimes used in a different sense, namely where the undertaking contained in the credit is extended to third parties (including a negotiating bank) as well as the beneficiary, so that the third party may purchase the documents and present them to the issuing bank in its own right. Credits of this type are called “negotiation credits” and should be contrasted with credits “available by negotiation” in the sense described above (and also contrasted with “straight credits” where the issuing bank’s payment undertaking is directed solely to the seller). UCP 600 has made the practice of using “negotiation credits” virtually redundant for if, under a credit incorporating UCP 600, it is intended that the beneficiary should be able to obtain payment by selling the documents to any bank, then the credit should be made freely available by negotiation. ¹⁴⁶⁹ ⚠

Branch as bank

34-484

One important provision of UCP 600 which is relevant as regards both the confirmation of, and the negotiation of documents tendered under, a documentary credit, is to be found in art.2. It is provided that, for the purposes of the UCP, "branches of a bank in different countries are considered to be separate banks". It follows that there can be no doubt as regards the effect of the confirmation by the Standard Chartered Bank's office in Singapore of, for instance, a documentary credit issued by the same bank's office in London. Notably, the Singapore branch could also negotiate documents tendered by the beneficiary under a documentary credit opened by the London office.

Anticipatory credits34-485

In exceptional circumstances it may be stipulated both in the contract of sale and between the buyer and the issuing banker that credit facilities should in part be extended so as to assist the seller prior to shipment. The anticipatory (or packing) credit ¹⁴⁷⁰ serves this purpose and in its so-called "red clause" authorises an early advance. Usually the advance is conditional upon the tender by the seller of such documents as the receipts of a warehouse or of a forwarding agent which may relate, as may be agreed, either to the goods themselves or even to the raw materials from which the goods are ultimately to be manufactured.

Standby credits34-486

A substantial increase in the volume of standby credits has taken place during the last few years. Whilst earlier on this facility was used predominantly in domestic transactions in the United States, it has now developed into an instrument of international trade. The standby credit serves the same function as a performance bond and a first demand guarantee. It is opened in order to protect the beneficiary against losses sustained from the non-performance or from the faulty performance of a contract made between himself and the applicant for the standby credit. Payment is usually due against the tender of a bill of exchange for the specified amount accompanied by a certificate in which the beneficiary attests the other party's default. Under art.1, UCP 600 is applicable to standby credits. The problems of this type of facility are discussed in detail elsewhere. ¹⁴⁷¹

Transfer and assignment of credits ¹⁴⁷²34-487

It is important to distinguish between the assignment of a credit and its transfer. There is, it is submitted, nothing to prevent a seller from assigning to a third party his rights under any commercial credit. The seller has a contingent right to claim a liquidated amount and such a demand or claim can be assigned in equity and by way of a statutory assignment. ¹⁴⁷³ That the UCP do not have the intention of precluding the assignment of this right is demonstrated by UCP 600 art.39, which reads:

"The fact that a credit is not stated to be transferable shall not affect the right of the beneficiary to assign any proceeds to which it may be or may become entitled under the credit, in accordance with the provisions of the applicable law."

This article relates only to the assignment of proceeds and not to the right to perform under the credit itself. Where such an assignment takes place, the seller continues to be the party who will tender the documents and the only effect of the assignment is that, when the seller tenders the required documents, payment will be made to the assignee. ¹⁴⁷⁴ When a credit is transferred, a third party—known as second beneficiary—is substituted both to the rights and obligations of the seller or part thereof.¹⁴⁷⁵

Article 38 of UCP 600

34-488

The transferability of documentary credits is governed by art.38 of the UCP 600 which reads:

“a

A bank is under no obligation to transfer a credit except to the extent and in the manner expressly consented to by that bank.

b.

For the purpose of this article:

Transferable credit means a credit that specifically states it is ‘transferable’. A transferable credit may be made available in whole or in part to another beneficiary (‘second beneficiary’) at the request of the beneficiary (‘first beneficiary’).

Transferring bank means a nominated bank that transfers the credit or, in a credit available with any bank, a bank that is specifically authorized by the issuing bank to transfer and that transfers the credit. An issuing bank may be a transferring bank.

Transferred credit means a credit that has been made available by the transferring bank to a second beneficiary.

c.

Unless otherwise agreed at the time of transfer, all charges (such as commissions, fees, costs or expenses) incurred in respect of a transfer must be paid by the first beneficiary.

d.

A credit may be transferred in part to more than one second beneficiary provided partial drawings or shipments are allowed. A transferred credit cannot be transferred at the request of a second beneficiary to any subsequent beneficiary. The first beneficiary is not considered to be a subsequent beneficiary.

e.

Any request for transfer must indicate if and under what conditions amendments may be advised to the second beneficiary. The transferred credit must clearly indicate those conditions.

f.

If a credit is transferred to more than one second beneficiary, rejection of an amendment by one or more second beneficiary does not invalidate the acceptance by any other second beneficiary, with respect to which the transferred credit will be amended accordingly. For any second beneficiary that rejected the amendment, the transferred credit will remain unamended.

g.

The transferred credit must accurately reflect the terms and conditions of the credit, including confirmation, if any, with the exception of:

—

the amount of the credit,

—

any unit price stated therein,

—

the expiry date,

—

the period for presentation, or the latest shipment date or given period for shipment, any or all of which may be reduced or curtailed.

—

The percentage for which insurance cover must be effected may be increased to provide the amount of cover stipulated in the credit or these articles.

The name of the first beneficiary may be substituted for that of the applicant in the credit.

If the name of the applicant is specifically required by the credit to appear in any document other than the invoice, such requirement must be reflected in the transferred credit.

h.

The first beneficiary has the right to substitute its own invoice and draft, if any, for those of a second beneficiary for an amount not in excess of that stipulated in the credit, and upon such substitution the first beneficiary can draw under the credit for the difference, if any, between its invoice and the invoice of a second beneficiary.

i.

If the first beneficiary is to present its own invoice and draft, if any, but fails to do so on first demand, or if the invoices presented by the first beneficiary create discrepancies that did not exist in the presentation made by the second beneficiary and the first beneficiary fails to correct them on first demand, the transferring bank has the right to present the documents as received from the second beneficiary to the issuing bank, without further responsibility to the first beneficiary.

j.

The first beneficiary may, in its request for transfer, indicate that honour or negotiation is to be effected to a second beneficiary at the place to which the credit has been transferred, up to and including the expiry date of the credit. This is without prejudice to the right of the first beneficiary in accordance with sub-article 38(h).

k.

Presentation of documents by or on behalf of a second beneficiary must be made to the transferring bank."

Bank's duty to transfer

34-489

Article 38 of UCP 600 sets out the conditions to be fulfilled for a credit to be transferable. The main requirements are that (a) the transferring bank must expressly consent to the extent and manner of the transfer; and (b) the credit must be specifically state that it is transferable. In Bank Negara Indonesia 1946 v Lariza (Singapore) Pte Ltd, ¹⁴⁷⁶ the Privy Council held that, for the purposes of what is now art.38(a), the transferring bank's consent:

"... has to be an express consent made after the request [for transfer] and it has to cover both the extent and manner of the transfer request." ¹⁴⁷⁷

This means that a bank may issue a transferable credit and, if it is a credit where no other bank is involved, later refuse to allow the transfer at will. The decision has been rightly criticised for reducing the usefulness of the transferable credit for financing supply transactions. ¹⁴⁷⁸

Documentary and open credits

34-490

Commercial credits are invariably documentary, i.e. payment in cash or acceptance or negotiation of a draft is promised against the tender of specified documents. Open credits, in which a banker makes an unconditional promise to honour drafts drawn on him by the beneficiary and negotiated by discounters, are a different type of commodity. Such credits, which are also known as travellers' letters of credit, are made available by bankers to customers, who wish to raise funds when travelling abroad. An open letter of credit may be special, i.e. addressed by the issuing banker to a designated correspondent overseas who is asked to discount drafts drawn by the beneficiary up to a certain amount, or general, i.e. containing a promise to reimburse any person who negotiates drafts of the beneficiary up to the specified amount. The amount of drafts negotiated under an open credit must be indorsed on the back of the letter of credit. To avoid fraud, the beneficiary is usually provided also with a letter of introduction, which bears his own signature authenticated by the bank. The letter of introduction and open credit should be kept apart by the beneficiary, but be presented together to a discounting banker when a draft is drawn under the credit. ¹⁴⁷⁹

-
- ^{1406.} See, in particular, Benjamin's Sale of Goods, 9th edn (2014), Ch.23; R. King, Gutteridge and Megrah's Law of Banker's Commercial Credits, 8th edn (2001); R. Jack, A. Malek and D. Quest, Documentary Credits, 4th edn (2009); P. Ellinger and D. Neo, The Law and Practice of Documentary Letters of Credit (2010); D. Horowitz, Letters of Credit and Demand Guarantees: Defences to Payment (2010).
- ^{1452.} Urquhart Lindsay & Co Ltd v Eastern Bank Ltd [1922] 1 K.B. 318, 321-322; Donald H Scott & Co Ltd v Barclays Bank Ltd [1923] 2 K.B. 1, 13; Trans Trust SPRL v Danubian Trading Co Ltd [1952] 2 Q.B. 297, 304-305; Midland Bank Ltd v Seymour [1955] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 147, 166; Hamzeh Malas & Sons v British Imex Industries Ltd [1958] 2 Q.B. 127, 129; McInerny v Lloyds Bank Ltd [1973] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 389 (affirmed [1974] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 246). For the theoretical difficulties and their solution, see below, paras 34-505 et seq.
- ^{1453.} UCP 600 arts 7(b) and 8(b). cf. Urquhart Lindsay & Co Ltd v Eastern Bank Ltd [1922] 1 K.B. 318, 321-322 (credit irrevocable once seller has acted on it); Dexters Ltd v Schenker & Co (1923) 14 Ll.L. Rep. 586, 588 (credit irrevocable from time it reaches hands of seller).
- ^{1454.} Bunge Corp v Vegetable Vitamin Foods (Private) Ltd [1985] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 613 at 617, Neill J.
- ^{1455.} R. King, Gutteridge and Megrah's Law of Bankers' Commercial Credits, 8th edn (2001), para.4-48, n.132.
- ^{1456.} UCP 500 art.8(a).
- ^{1457.} This was also the position in England before the adoption of the UCP: Cape Asbestos Co Ltd v Lloyds Bank Ltd [1921] W.N. 274.
- ^{1458.} UCP 500 art.8(b).
- ^{1459.} See above, para.34-478.
- ^{1460.} UCP 600 art.3.
- ^{1461.} A bank asked to advise a credit by the issuing bank or the confirming bank must make sure it does not use language in its communications with the beneficiary that would lead a court to find that the bank had accepted direct liability for payment of the credit: see Den Danske Bank A/S v Surinam Shipping Ltd [2014] UKPC 10.
- ^{1462.} UCP 600 art.8(a). It was held in Fortis Bank SA/NV v Indian Overseas Bank [2009] EWHC 2303 (Comm), [2010] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 227, that an issuing bank that permitted the advising bank to confirm a letter of credit at the beneficiary's request and expense thereby authorised the bank to add its confirmation to the credit for the purposes of UCP 600 art.2, which provides that a "confirming bank" means "the bank that adds its confirmation to a credit upon the issuing bank's authorisation or request".
- ^{1463.} If the correspondent banker reserves to himself a right of recourse against the seller, his undertaking does not constitute a confirmation: Wahbe Tamari & Sons Ltd v Colprogeca Sociedade Geral de Fibras, Cafes e Produtos Coloniais Lda [1969] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 18.
- ^{1464.}  In the case of reimbursement of a nominated bank for having "honoured" a complying presentation, the issuing bank's obligation to reimburse arises only where the nominated bank has actually made the payment (Deutsche Bank AG, London v CIMB Bank Berhad [2017] EWHC 1264 (Comm) at [38]–[39]). UCP 600 art.7(c), adds that "[r]eimbursement for the amount of a complying presentation under a credit available by acceptance or deferred payment is due at maturity, whether or not the nominated bank prepaid or purchased before maturity". See

UCP 600 art.8(c) for a similar undertaking of a confirming bank to reimburse another nominated bank that has honoured or negotiated a complying presentation and forwarded the documents to the confirming bank.

- 1465.  [2011] EWHC 2424 (Comm), [2011] 2 C.L.C. 629.
- 1466.  At [44].
- 1467.  At [45]–[46].
- 1468.  At [47].
- 1469.  A. Malek and D. Quest, Jack: Documentary Credits, 4th edn (2009), para.2.19.
- 1470. e.g. South African Reserve Bank v Samuel & Co (1931) 40 Ll.L. Rep. 291. Anticipatory credits originated in the South African trade in hides.
- 1471. Benjamin's Sale of Goods, 9th edn (2014), Ch.24, and see the ICC's International Standby Practices, ISP 98. For the use of such letters of credit instead of cash deposits, see Ludgate Insurance Co Ltd v Citibank [1996] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 247.
- 1472. For a fuller account, see Benjamin's Sale of Goods, 9th edn (2014), paras 23-286 et seq. (discussing also the back-to-back credit).
- 1473. See generally Vol.I, paras 19-043 et seq. (note that an undertaking to pay money is not a personal contract).
- 1474. Note that in Singer & Friedlander v Creditanstalt-Bankverein [1981] Com. L.R. 69 the Commercial Court of Vienna held, accordingly, that the assignee was not entitled to tender in his own name a set of documents procured by the assignor. Whilst the assignee had the right to claim the proceeds from the bank, the documents had to be tendered by him on behalf of the assignor. As regards the priorities as between the rights of the assignee and the bank's claim of a set-off, see Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corp v Kloeckner & Co AG [1990] 2 Q.B. 514; see also Marathon Electrical Manufacturing Corp v Mashrebank [1997] 2 B.C.L.C. 460 QB. And note that where a bank takes up documents tendered under a deferred payment credit by way of assignments, equities available against the beneficiary are also available against the bank: Banco Santander SA v Banque Paribas [1999] 2 All E.R. (Comm) 18; affirmed [2000] Lloyd's Rep. Bank. 165. But see now UCP 600 arts 7(c), 8(c) and 12(b) (see above, para.34-450 n.1405). Article 12(b) was intended to shift the risk of fraud back to the issuing bank and reverse the outcome in Santander. But art.12(b) only refers to the nominated bank being authorised to "prepay or purchase" a deferred payment undertaking. This may have reversed the outcome in Santander so far as the authorisation issue was concerned, but it is far from certain that it would have reversed the position of the nominated bank as assignee taking subject to equities (as to which see D. Horowitz [2008] J.B.L. 508).
- 1475. The first beneficiary will usually want to keep information about his transaction with the second beneficiary away from the applicant for fear that the applicant will cut him out of the picture and deal directly with the second beneficiary. In Jackson v Royal Bank of Scotland [2005] UKHL 3, [2005] 1 W.L.R. 377 at [20]–[24], the House of Lords confirmed that an issuing bank owes the first beneficiary of a transferable letter of credit a duty of confidentiality with regard to this information (breach of duty of confidentiality when issuing bank reveals to applicant the extent of first beneficiary's "mark-up" on price charged).
- 1476. [1988] A.C. 583.
- 1477. At 599, per Lord Brandon.
- 1478. C.M. Schmitthoff [1988] J.B.L. 49, 53.

1479. Anticipatory credits, discussed in para.34-485, above, combine some characteristics of documentary credits with some of open credits. Open credits have been largely superseded by travellers' cheques, credit cards and cheque cards.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 34 - Bills of Exchange and Banking
Section 2. - Aspects of Banking Law
(i) - Bankers' Commercial Credits ¹⁴⁰⁶
(iii) - The Contract between Seller and Buyer

The documentary credit clause

34-491

The documentary credit transaction commences when a buyer and a seller agree in their contract of sale that payment should be made through a commercial credit. The buyer is then under an obligation to furnish the seller with a commercial credit. This obligation of the buyer is a condition precedent to the seller's duty to ship the goods. ¹⁴⁸⁰ The buyer must furnish the seller with the type of credit that has been agreed upon in the contract of sale. Thus, if the contract of sale provides for the opening of a confirmed credit, the furnishing of a revocable credit, ¹⁴⁸¹ or of an irrevocable but unconfirmed credit, ¹⁴⁸² is insufficient. Similarly, if the contract of sale calls for an irrevocable credit to be opened in London, the buyer does not perform his duty by furnishing an irrevocable credit available in another place. ¹⁴⁸³ Difficulties arise if the contract of sale does not specify what type of commercial credit should be opened. As a revocable credit does not constitute good security, it may be presumed that the seller and buyer agree that an irrevocable credit should be furnished. In Giddens v Anglo-African Produce Co Ltd ¹⁴⁸⁴ the contract of sale provided that a credit was to be "established" with a certain bank. The buyers furnished the sellers with a revocable credit of that bank, whereupon the sellers declined to ship the goods. An action by the buyers against the sellers was dismissed. Bailhache J. read the word "established" as describing the word "credit", and explained that the revocable credit furnished by the buyers could not be considered an "established credit". His Lordship thus appears to have treated the term "established credit" as synonymous with "irrevocable credit". The case indicates that if the contract of sale does not specify what type of credit should be opened, the courts tend to construe the contract as stipulating for an irrevocable credit. However, one authority indicates that if the parties fail to reach an agreement as to the nature of the credit to be furnished, or the documents against which payment is to be made, the contract of sale is incomplete. ¹⁴⁸⁵

Time when credit is to be made available

34-492

If the contract of sale provides a date for the opening of the credit, the buyer must furnish it by that date. ¹⁴⁸⁶ If the contract of sale requires that a credit be opened immediately, the buyer must have such time as is needed by a person of reasonable diligence to get such a credit established. ¹⁴⁸⁷ A provision that a credit should be furnished within a few weeks, means within a reasonable time, and what constitutes reasonable time depends on the facts of each case. ¹⁴⁸⁸ In most cases a contract of sale does not stipulate a time for the furnishing of the credit, but specifies a date or period for the shipment of the goods. When the contract of sale provides a period during which the goods are to be shipped, the buyer must furnish the commercial credit at the very beginning of this period, so that the seller may, if necessary, be able to ship the goods at its very first date. This rule applies both in the case of contracts c.i.f. and f.o.b. ¹⁴⁸⁹ If the contract of sale specifies an actual date and not a period of shipment, the buyer must furnish the commercial credit within a reasonable time before that date. ¹⁴⁹⁰ The reason for this is that the seller is entitled to have the credit before he actually prepares the goods for shipment. If the obligation of the buyer to open a credit is dependent upon the prior receipt of explicit instructions from the seller, the buyer is not obliged to obtain in the meantime from the banker a letter indicating that the credit will be established as soon as these instructions are received.¹⁴⁹¹

Defects in opening of credit

34-493

It is the duty of the buyer to ensure that the credit when opened satisfies the agreed specifications. In order to escape the danger of repudiation he must cure the credit of any initial defects before it is required; and if he does this the seller cannot afterwards complain.¹⁴⁹² If the seller ships the goods despite the buyer's failure to open the credit either on the due date or in its appropriate form, the seller may be taken by his conduct to have waived his objections to the breach of contract. In *Panoutsos v Raymond Hadley Corp*¹⁴⁹³ payment had been agreed to be by a confirmed credit but the credit that was opened was in fact revocable. The seller, with notice of this defect, made certain shipments and applied to the buyer for an extension of time for the remaining shipments. Before that time had elapsed, the seller suddenly sought to cancel the contract on the ground that the credit was not in accordance with the original specifications. The Court of Appeal concluded that as the buyer had been led to suppose that the breach of the condition precedent had been waived, he was entitled to reasonable notice to enable him to comply with the condition and that the purported cancellation was unjustified.

Waiver or variation

34-494

A similar attitude was taken by the Court of Appeal in *Plasticmoda Societa Per Azioni v Davidsons (Manchester) Ltd*¹⁴⁹⁴ but a difference of opinion occurred in *WJ Alan & Co Ltd v El Nasr Export and Import Co.*¹⁴⁹⁵ The buyers undertook to furnish a confirmed credit covering the sale on f.o.b. terms of two shipments of coffee at a price of Kenyan shs. 262 per ton. The sellers did not raise any objection when the buyers furnished a confirmed credit expressed in sterling and, in point of fact, began to operate the credit and asked for an extension of the shipping time. After the second shipment but before the presentment of the documents, the pound sterling was devalued; the value of the Kenyan currency remained unaltered. The sellers obtained payment under the confirmed credit and then sued the buyers for the difference between the amount paid and the amount in Kenyan currency for which the credit ought to have been opened. The Court of Appeal held that the sellers were not entitled to recover. Lord Denning M.R. said:

“... the sellers, by their conduct, waived the right to have payment by means of a letter of credit in Kenyan currency and accepted instead a letter of credit in sterling.”¹⁴⁹⁶

He emphasised that a person is entitled to rely on the waiver although no consideration has moved from him and although he has not sustained any detriment by acting on it. Megaw L.J. based his concurring judgment on a different ground. In his view the consequence of the acceptance of the sterling credit by the sellers was “that the original term of the contract of sale as to the money of account was varied from Kenyan currency to sterling”.¹⁴⁹⁷ He conceded that if there were no variation of the contract, the buyers would still be entitled to succeed on the ground of waiver. But he thought that this principle would have a more suitable scope of application in cases involving a number of shipments. A similar view was expressed by Stephenson L.J., who doubted whether the waiver doctrine would apply in cases where the buyer had not altered his position to his detriment.

Default by banker

34-495

As it is agreed in the contract of sale that payment should be made by the furnishing of a commercial credit, the seller has to claim payment from the bank in the first instance and only on the bank's default from the buyer. ¹⁴⁹⁸ The buyer's obligation to pay the price of the goods is not absolutely discharged by the opening of the credit, and that upon the banker's default the seller can claim payment from the buyer. ¹⁴⁹⁹ In Saffron v Société Minière Cafrika ¹⁵⁰⁰ the High Court of Australia suggested that while this principle applies in the case of revocable and irrevocable but unconfirmed credits, the opposite is true in the case of a confirmed credit. It is, however, difficult to see why the furnishing of a confirmed credit should discharge the buyer. The only difference between a "confirmed" and an "irrevocable but unconfirmed" credit is that in the former the seller obtains a promise of both the issuing and the correspondent banker whilst in the latter he obtains only one promise, i.e. that of the issuing banker. It is submitted that the correct view is that the opening of a commercial credit (whether confirmed or unconfirmed) does not, in itself, discharge the buyer. ¹⁵⁰¹

Default after acceptance of draft

34-496

Authorities indicate, further, that even if the banker accepts a draft drawn under the commercial credit, the buyer is not discharged; if the banker subsequently dishonours the draft by non-payment, the seller is entitled to claim payment from the buyer. ¹⁵⁰² However, in order to save the buyer from having to pay twice, the courts will release him from any obligation assumed by him towards the defaulting issuing banker. In Sale Continuation Ltd v Austin Taylor & Co Ltd ¹⁵⁰³ the defendants, as selling agents, contracted in London for the sale of timber by Malaysian principals to a Belgian buyer. The defendants, who for all practical purposes assumed the position of a buyer vis-à-vis the Malaysian sellers, instructed the plaintiffs, a firm of merchant bankers, to furnish the sellers with an irrevocable credit to be confirmed by a correspondent banker in Malaysia. In the application form the defendants promised to provide funds as soon as the plaintiffs should receive advice about the negotiation of the sellers' draft by the correspondent banker in Malaysia. A draft drawn by the sellers under the credit and accompanied by the required documents was, in due course, negotiated in Malaysia and accepted by the plaintiffs in London. Subsequently, but before payment of the draft, the documents were released by the plaintiffs to the defendants under a trust receipt, in which the defendants agreed to hold the documents and proceeds as trustees of the plaintiffs. Shortly afterwards the plaintiffs stopped payment and it was clear that they would dishonour the draft of the Malaysian sellers. The defendants thereupon refused to remit the price of the goods, paid to them by the Belgian buyer, to the plaintiffs, paying the amount due directly to the Malaysian sellers. An action brought by the receiver of the plaintiffs was dismissed. Paull J. held that the plaintiffs were under an obligation to honour the draft drawn by the Malaysian sellers under the commercial credit. By entering into a voluntary liquidation, the plaintiffs had evinced an intention not to fulfil this obligation and the defendants were, thereupon, discharged from their obligation to provide funds for meeting the plaintiffs' acceptance of the draft of the Malaysian sellers. When this draft was dishonoured by the plaintiffs, the defendants became entitled to be released from their obligations under the trust receipt and to pay the price directly to the Malaysian sellers.

Default after remittance of funds

34-497

It remains to be considered who should sustain the loss if the buyer has paid the amount of the credit to the issuing banker, but the latter fails before making payment to the seller, e.g. after the acceptance of a draft drawn under the credit but before it is honoured. It has been held that in such a case the buyer is not entitled to claim that he has performed his entire bargain by furnishing the required letter of credit and by remitting to the banker the funds necessary for making payment. He is not discharged from his duty to pay the price to the seller, because the buyer promises "to pay by letter of credit not to provide by a letter of credit a source of payment which [does] not pay". ¹⁵⁰⁴ Any damages that may be recoverable against the buyer in the event of the defalcation of the banker will be for non-payment of money. If, which has been doubted, ¹⁵⁰⁵ the law rigidly limits those damages to the amount of the money due, together with such interest as may be due ¹⁵⁰⁶ or as the court may award, ¹⁵⁰⁷ the limitation will apply, provided that the credit has been opened. Damages for the failure of the buyer to open the credit are wider in extent, and embrace any loss to the seller that was at the time of the contract reasonably foreseeable by both parties as the probable consequence of the breach.¹⁵⁰⁸

Seller's rights where documents are faulty

34-498

What is the seller's position if the bank has lawfully rejected documents tendered under the documentary credit as it found them to contain discrepancies? It seems obvious that, if despite the bank's rejection of the documents, the buyer accepts the goods, he is bound to pay the price. The buyer cannot possibly retain the goods but claim that the bank's right to reject the documents discharges him from his duty to settle the price. The position is more difficult if the buyer uses the bank's rejection of the documents as a ground for the rejection of the goods. In *Shamsher Jute Mills v Sethia (London)*¹⁵⁰⁹ Bingham J. held that as the seller's inability to obtain the amount of the documentary credit was occasioned by his failure to tender a proper set of documents, he was unable to enforce the contract of sale. His Lordship, thus, treated the seller's failure to bring himself within the terms of the documentary credit as a breach of his duties under the contract of sale. But as the contract of sale and the documentary are deemed to be autonomous of, and unqualified by, each other, it is perhaps arguable that the seller's inability to recover under the documentary credit, due to a formality concerning the regularity of the documents, need not necessarily bar him from seeking a remedy under the contract of sale. The buyer's breach could, for instance, be seen in his refusal to instruct the bank to accept the documents despite the discrepancies. This argument, which would appear not to have been raised in the instant case, derives support from the fact that the opening of the documentary credit does not, in itself, constitute an unconditional discharge of the buyer's duty to pay the price.¹⁵¹⁰ That the mutual rights of the seller and buyer are not abrogated by the opening of the credit is demonstrated by Famouri v Dialcord Ltd,¹⁵¹¹ in which it was held that the buyer would be entitled to sue the seller in deceit or in breach of contract where it turned out that documents were false or forged.

^{1406.} See, in particular, Benjamin's Sale of Goods, 9th edn (2014), Ch.23; R. King, Gutteridge and Megrah's Law of Banker's Commercial Credits, 8th edn (2001); R. Jack, A. Malek and D. Quest, Documentary Credits, 4th edn (2009); P. Ellinger and D. Neo, The Law and Practice of Documentary Letters of Credit (2010); D. Horowitz, Letters of Credit and Demand Guarantees: Defences to Payment (2010).

^{1480.} Dix v Grainger (1922) 10 Ll.L. Rep. 496, 497; Garcia v Page & Co Ltd (1936) 55 Ll.L. Rep. 391, 392; Trans Trust SPRL v Danubian Trading Co Ltd [1952] 2 Q.B. 297, 304; Lindsay & Co Ltd v Cook [1953] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 328, 335; Soproma SpA v Marine and Animal By-Products Corp [1966] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 367. Provision of a letter of credit is a condition precedent to any obligation on the part of the seller to perform any aspect of the loading operation which is the seller's responsibility: Kronos Worldwide Ltd v Sempra Oil Trading SARL [2004] EWCA Civ 3, [2004] C.L.C. 136 at [19], per Mance L.J. In some cases the contract of sale may impose on the seller an obligation precedent to the buyer's duty to furnish a credit: Knotz v Fairclough, Dodd & Jones Ltd [1952] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 226. And see Transpetrol Ltd v Transol Olieprodukten Nederland BV [1989] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 309, especially at 310-311 where Phillips J. treated a nonsensical condition precedent as irrelevant. A buyer who fails to open a credit may be able to defend the seller's claim for damages on the ground that it would have been illegal to have opened the credit: see Soeximex SAS v Agrocop International Pte Ltd [2011] EWHC 2743 (Comm).

^{1481.} Panoutsos v Raymond Hadley Corp [1917] 2 K.B. 473.

^{1482.} Soproma SpA v Marine and Animal By-Products Corp [1966] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 367, 386. The credit must conform not only in form but also in substance to the type specified in the contract of sale. Thus, where a confirmed credit is required, the buyer does not discharge his duty by furnishing a credit in which the correspondent banker purports to give a confirmation but at the same time reserves a right of recourse: Wahbe Tamari & Sons Ltd v Colprogeca Sociedade Geral de Fibras, Cafes e Produtos Coloniais Lda. [1969] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 18, 21.

- 1483. Furst & Co v WE Fischer Ltd [1960] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 340 and see H & JM Bennett Europe Ltd v Angrexco Co Ltd Unreported April 6, 1990, suggesting that the buyer is in breach of the contract of sale if he seeks to include onerous terms in the credit.
- 1484. (1923) 14 Ll.L. Rep. 230.
- 1485. Schijveschuurder v Canon (Export) Ltd [1952] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 196.
- 1486. As regards the construction of an ambiguous clause, see Schio Supply Co v Gatoil (USA) Inc [1989] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 588, 591 CA.
- 1487. Garcia v Page & Co Ltd (1936) 55 Ll.L. Rep. 391, 392.
- 1488. Etablissements Chainbaux SARL v Harbormaster Ltd [1955] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 303.
- 1489. As regards contracts c.i.f., see Pavia & Co SpA v Thurmann-Nielsen [1952] 2 Q.B. 84, 88-89; but cf. Sinason-Teicher Inter-American Grain Corp v Oilcakes and Oilseeds Trading Co Ltd [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1394, 1400 which suggests that the credit should be opened at a reasonable time before the commencement of the shipping period. As regards contracts f.o.b., see Ian Stach Ltd v Baker Bosley Ltd [1958] 2 Q.B. 130; Glencore Grain Rotterdam BV v Lebanese Organisation for International Commerce [1997] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 386; Kolmar Group AG v Traxpo Enterprises Pvt Ltd [2010] EWHC 113 (Comm), [2010] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 653.
- 1490. Plasticmoda Societa per Azioni v Davidsons (Manchester) Ltd [1952] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 527, 538.
- 1491. Nicolene Ltd v Simmonds [1952] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 419; affirmed [1953] 1 Q.B. 543.
- 1492. Kronman & Co v Steinberger (1922) 10 Ll.L. Rep. 39.
- 1493. [1917] 2 K.B. 473. See also Ian Stach Ltd v Baker Bosley Ltd [1958] 2 Q.B. 130; Furst & Co v WE Fischer Ltd [1960] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 340; Soproma SpA v Marine and Animal By-Products Corp [1966] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 367.
- 1494. [1952] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 527.
- 1495. [1972] 2 Q.B. 189.
- 1496. [1972] 2 Q.B. 189 at 214. A similar view was taken by Lord Denning in the Plasticmoda case, above, at 538. The principle had already a distinguished lineage. Denning L.J. traced it back through Charles Rickards Ltd v Oppenheim [1950] 1 K.B. 616 to the decision of the House of Lords in Hughes v Metropolitan Railway Company (1877) 2 App. Cas. 439.
- 1497. [1972] 2 Q.B. at 217. See also Maran Road Saw Mill v Austin Taylor & Co Ltd [1975] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 156.
- 1498. Soproma SpA v Marine and Animal By-Products Corp [1966] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 367, 385-386.
- 1499. WJ Alan & Co v El Nasr Export and Import Co [1972] 2 Q.B. 189 at 212. See also Newman Industries Ltd v Indo-British Industries Ltd [1956] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 219, 236, reversed on a different point: [1957] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 211; Soproma SpA v Marine and Animal By-Products Corp, above.
- 1500. (1958) 100 C.L.R. 231, especially at 243-244.
- 1501. So held by Lord Denning M.R. in WJ Alan & Co Ltd v El Nasr Export and Import Co [1972] 2 Q.B. 189, 212. Megaw and Stephenson L.J.J. did not express a view on this point: [1972] 2 Q.B. 189 at 218, 220.

- 1502. Hindley v Tothill, Watson & Co (1894) 13 N.Z.L.R. 13, 23, and the US cases of Greenough v Munroe, 53 F. 2d 362 (1931) at 364–365; Bank of United States v Seltzer, 251 N.Y.S. 637, 644 (1931); Re Canal Bank and Trust Co's Liquidation (1933) 152 So. 297, 300; and see Uniform Commercial Code s.5–117.
- 1503. [1968] 2 Q.B. 849 following Bank of United States v Seltzer, above. As regards trust receipts, see below, paras 34–547 et seq.
- 1504. Maran Road Saw Mill v Austin Taylor Co & Ltd [1975] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 156, 159 noted (1977) 40 M.L.R. 91. See also ED & F Man Ltd v Nigerian Sweets and Confectionary Co Ltd [1972] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 50, in which the seller was allowed to recover payment from the buyer although the issuing bank was nominated in the contract of sale. See Benjamin's Sale of Goods, 9th edn (2014), para.23–275.
- 1505. Trans Trust SPRL v Danubian Trading Co Ltd [1952] 2 Q.B. 297, 306, 307.
- 1506. Late Payment of Commercial Debts (Interest) Act 1998; see above, Vol.I, paras 26–175 et seq., 26–232 et seq., 26–236 et seq. See also Sempra Metals Ltd v Inland Revenue Commissioners [2007] UKHL 34, [2007] 3 W.L.R. 354, on the right to recover compound interest generally.
- 1507. In pursuance of Senior Courts Act 1981 s.35A.
- 1508. On the basis of Hadley v Baxendale (1854) 9 Exch. 341; see Trans Trust SPRL v Danubian Trading Co Ltd [1952] 2 Q.B. 297; and Ian Stach Ltd v Baker Bosley Ltd [1958] 2 Q.B. 130.
- 1509. [1987] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 388.
- 1510. Above, para.34–495.
- 1511. (1983) 13 New L.J. 153.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 34 - Bills of Exchange and Banking
Section 2. - Aspects of Banking Law
(i) - Bankers' Commercial Credits ¹⁴⁰⁶
(iv) - The Relationship of Issuing Banker and Buyer

The application form

34-499

Pursuant to the contract of sale the buyer, in order to procure the issue of the credit, applies to a local banker setting out his requirements. This is usually made upon a standard "application form" provided by the banker and if accepted the details there recorded represent the limits of his authority. The buyer should specify how the credit is to be advised, e.g. by teletransmission, airmail or courier, the duration, extent and revocability or irrevocability of the credit; details of the manner in which shipment and insurance is to be effected; an exact description of the goods; a list of the documents against which the banker is to make payment and the name of the person to whom or to whose order the bill of lading should be addressed. If the seller has nominated a correspondent banker, the issuing banker should be so instructed, for the credit may otherwise be issued directly to the seller or facilities be arranged through channels that may prove unacceptable. The standard form upon which application is made will ordinarily contain a clause entitling the issuing banker to retain the shipping documents as security pending reimbursement by the buyer, and sometimes an acknowledgment that if before reimbursement delivery is made to the buyer of either documents or goods in connection with which the credit is to be issued, the buyer will thereupon execute a trust receipt. Once the extent of the commission and the manner of reimbursement have been agreed the issuing banker will open the credit and thereby enter into separate relations with the seller.

34-500

The relations between the buyer and the issuing banker depend solely on the terms of the contract between them and are not affected by rights or obligations which either of them has against or owes to other parties. ¹⁵¹² Thus, if the banker, at the instruction of the buyer, issues an irrevocable credit, then despite any dispute that the buyer may thereafter have with the seller under the contract of sale, the buyer cannot of his own will compel the banker to cancel the credit. ¹⁵¹³ The application form, having been accepted by the banker, is not only final but must be rigidly observed. Whether the terms on which the banker is instructed to make payment may seem reasonable or unreasonable, and whether or not they stem from the contract of sale, the banker's right to reimbursement depends upon a strict and not a liberal interpretation. ¹⁵¹⁴ However, if the buyer's instructions are ambiguous, the issuing bank is entitled to reimbursement as long as he gives the instructions a reasonable interpretation and acts accordingly. ¹⁵¹⁵ This principle applies notwithstanding that the relationship between the buyer—the applicant for the credit—and the issuing bank is not purely one of principal and agent. ¹⁵¹⁶ Naturally, the bank cannot invoke this principle if the ambiguity resulted from a shortcoming in the drafting of a clause in the bank's standard form. Moreover, even where the bank—as agent—is entitled to invoke the principle under discussion, it must show that it has given the ambiguous instruction a reasonable construction. ¹⁵¹⁷

Strict adherence to mandate

34-501

If the buyer has stipulated the form of any document against which payment is to be made, the banker must at his peril insist upon complete compliance.

“There is no room for documents which are almost the same, or which will do just as well. Business could not proceed securely on any other lines.” ¹⁵¹⁸

Applying this principle to the circumstances before the Court of Appeal in Rayner & Co Ltd v Hambro's Bank Ltd, Goddard L.J. remarked ¹⁵¹⁹:

“... if the bank wants to be reimbursed by the customer, it must show that it has performed its mandate. If I employ someone at a remuneration to pay money for me on getting a receipt in a particular form, and he pays the money without getting the receipt in that form, he has not carried out the duty which I imposed upon him. It would be no answer for him to say: ‘But I got a receipt which in fact gives you all reasonable protection.’ My answer to that would be: ‘You are not concerned with the protection which you have given me. You are concerned to carry out the orders which I have given you.’”

However, if the buyer, after having come to know of the breach of authority of the issuing banker, adopts his act, he is considered to have ratified the act of the issuing banker and is obliged to reimburse him despite the breach. ¹⁵²⁰

Deposit of security

34-502

⚠ The issuing banker may require funds or securities to be deposited by the buyer before any bills drawn under the credit should fall due. Provided there is sufficient evidence of appropriation, ¹⁵²¹ funds ¹⁵²² or securities ¹⁵²³ so deposited will not go in satisfaction of general creditors of the banker in the event of failure prior to payment but are recoverable in full by the buyer. ¹⁵²⁴ ⚠ The issuing bank may be well advised to obtain security from the buyer (applicant) because the orthodox view is that, as the issuing bank's undertaking under a letter of credit involves a primary obligation and not a secondary one, it does not acquire a right of subrogation to the underlying commercial relationship between buyer and seller (beneficiary). ¹⁵²⁵

Exemption clauses

34-503

Most application forms include clauses exempting the banker from responsibility for matters which are not in his control. In fact, even in the absence of an express exemption clause, an issuing banker is not responsible if it turns out that an apparently regular document, accepted by him from the seller, has been forged or obtained by fraud. ¹⁵²⁶ At present, most exemption clauses are set out in UCP 600, which, as mentioned above, are incorporated in the contract between the buyer and the issuing banker. Article 14(a) specifies that bankers must examine documents tendered under a documentary credit to ascertain that they appear on their face to be in accordance with the terms of the credit; documents which appear on their face to be inconsistent with one another will be considered as non-complying. ¹⁵²⁷ It is clear that the banker is not responsible if he fails to notice a defect that a prudent inspection would not disclose. Article 5 specifies that the banker is concerned solely with the documents and not with the goods. The issuing banker is, thus, not responsible if, despite the conformity of the documents, the goods are faulty. Article 34 provides that the banker does not assume any responsibility for the genuineness, sufficiency, accuracy and legal effect of any document. Article 35 provides that the banker assumes no responsibility for the consequences arising out of the delay or loss in transit of a message as well as for loss arising out of errors in the translation or decoding of messages. Under art.36 the banker is not responsible for any loss occurring due to the interruption of his business by strikes, riots, wars, acts of God and other causes beyond his control. Article 37 provides that if the issuing banker utilises the services of a correspondent banker, he does so at the risk of the buyer and assumes no liability, should the instructions transmitted to the correspondent banker not be carried out.¹⁵²⁸ Under art.37(d), the applicant for the credit—the buyer—is bound and liable to indemnify the banks against all obligations and responsibilities imposed by foreign laws and usages. It is to be doubted that the application of these articles is affected by the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 as the articles appear to satisfy the reasonableness tests laid down in s.11 of the Act.¹⁵²⁹

¹⁴⁰⁶. See, in particular, Benjamin's Sale of Goods, 9th edn (2014), Ch.23; R. King, Gutteridge and Megrah's Law of Banker's Commercial Credits, 8th edn (2001); R. Jack, A. Malek and D. Quest, Documentary Credits, 4th edn (2009); P. Ellinger and D. Neo, The Law and Practice of Documentary Letters of Credit (2010); D. Horowitz, Letters of Credit and Demand Guarantees: Defences to Payment (2010).

¹⁵¹². See Societe Generale SA v Saad Trading [2011] EWHC 2424 (Comm), [2011] 2 C.L.C. 629 at [33], where Teare J. confirmed that the relationship between the applicant and the issuing bank was to be found in the facility agreement between them, and in the particular instructions, or mandate, which the former gave the latter to issue the credit, and held that the issuing bank was entitled to an indemnity from the applicant under the terms of the facility agreement. See also Petrologic Capital SA v Banque Cantonale de Geneve [2012] EWHC 453 (Comm) at [52]–[56], where S. Males Q.C., sitting as a deputy judge of the High Court, held that the applicant for a letter of credit could not rely on the Contracts (Right of Third Parties) Act 1999 so as to enforce an English law and exclusive jurisdiction clause contained in the letter of credit itself in an action to prevent the issuing bank from performing its obligations under the credit.

¹⁵¹³. Sovereign Bank of Canada v Belhouse, Dillon & Co (1911) 23 Q.R. (K.B.) 413. See also Kingdom of Sweden v New York Trust Co, 96 N.Y.S. 2d 779, 791 (1949).

¹⁵¹⁴. Midland Bank Ltd v Seymour [1955] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 147.

¹⁵¹⁵. Midland Bank Ltd v Seymour, above, at 153, 168. cf. European Asian Bank AG v Punjab and Sind Bank (No.2) [1983] 1 W.L.R. 642, 656, where Goff L.J. suggested that where the ambiguity is patent, the bank ought to ask for a clarification; Cooper v National Westminster Bank Plc [2009] EWHC 3035 (QB), [2010] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 490 at [63].

¹⁵¹⁶. Credit Agricole Indosuez v Muslim Commercial Bank Ltd [2000] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 275.

¹⁵¹⁷. Patel v Standard Chartered Bank [2001] Lloyd's Rep. Bank. 229.

¹⁵¹⁸. Equitable Trust Co of New York v Dawson Partners Ltd (1927) 27 Ll.L. Rep. 49, 52; South African Reserve Bank v Samuel & Co (1931) 40 Ll.L. Rep. 291.

¹⁵¹⁹. [1943] K.B. 37, 43. See also UCP 600 art.14.

¹⁵²⁰. Midland Bank Ltd v Seymour [1955] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 147. See also Swotbooks.com Ltd v Royal Bank of Scotland Plc [2011] EWHC 2025 (QB), [40]–[48] (held no ratification).

¹⁵²¹. The burden of proof is not easily discharged: see Re Barned's Banking Co Ltd, Massey's Case (1870) 39 L.J.Ch. 635.

¹⁵²². Farley v Turner (1857) 26 L.J.Ch. 710.

¹⁵²³. Jombart v Woollett (1837) 2 My. & C. 390.

- 1524.  See also S. Connelly, “Bank recovery and resolution: the case of contingent letters of credit under bail-in” (2016) 2 J.I.B.F.L. 78.
- 1525. See A. Ward and G. McCormack, “Subrogation and Bankers’ Autonomous Undertakings” (2000) 116 L.Q.R. 121. The issue is touched upon, but without decision, by Vos J. in Ibrahim v Barclays Bank Plc [2011] EWHC 1897 (Ch), [2011] 2 C.L.C. 589 at [136]–[137]: there were no issues about subrogation on appeal, although Lewison L.J. stated (following citation of McCormack and Ward at 136) that it was “received wisdom that when an issuing bank honours a letter of credit its payment will discharge the obligation that gave rise to the need for the letter of credit” ([2012] EWCA Civ 640, [2012] 2 B.C.L.C. 1 at [59]).
- 1526. Woods v Thiedemann (1862) 1 H. & C. 478; Ulster Bank v Synnott (1871) 5 Ir. R. Eq. 595; Basse and Selve v Bank of Australasia (1904) 90 L.T. 618; Guaranty Trust Co of New York v Hannay & Co [1918] 2 K.B. 623.
- 1527. UCP 600 art.14(d). And see National Bank of Egypt v Hannevig’s Bank Ltd (1919) 1 Ll.L. Rep. 69; Legal Decisions Affecting Bankers, Vol.III, pp.211, 213. See also British Imex Industries Ltd v Midland Bank Ltd [1958] 1 Q.B. 542, 552; Singh & Co v Banque de L’Indochine [1974] 1 Lloyd’s Rep. 56, 60–61; affirmed [1974] 2 Lloyd’s Rep. 1.
- 1528. As regards the position where the UCP do not apply, see Equitable Trust Co of New York v Dawson Partners Ltd (1926) 27 Ll. L. Rep. 49. But art.37 does not preclude the buyer from disputing the regularity of documents taken up by the issuer’s correspondent: Credit Agricole Indosuez v Generale Bank (No.2) [2000] 1 Lloyd’s Rep. 123 (distinguished in Societe Generale SA v Saad Trading [2011] EWHC 2424 (Comm), [2011] 2 C.L.C. 629 at [49]–[53], on basis that documents when presented were compliant and not discrepant, so issuing bank could rely on reimbursement clause against applicant on basis that it had mistakenly indemnified confirming bank “in good faith”).
- 1529. See generally Vol.I, paras 15-062 et seq., especially para.15-096.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 34 - Bills of Exchange and Banking

Section 2. - Aspects of Banking Law

(i) - Bankers' Commercial Credits ¹⁴⁰⁶

(v) - The Relationship of Banker and Seller

Nature and form

34-504

In the case of a revocable credit the seller does not obtain a binding promise of the issuing banker, and the credit may be revoked at any time prior to the acceptance of documents by the issuing banker. An irrevocable credit, on the other hand, creates a legally binding contract between the banker and the seller. If the credit is irrevocable but unconfirmed the contract is between the seller and the issuing banker. If the credit is both irrevocable and confirmed, the correspondent banker is jointly bound with the issuing banker towards the seller. ¹⁵³⁰ A commercial credit, whether revocable or irrevocable, need not be in any specified form, but, in fact, most current forms follow a uniform pattern. It is at the outset both dated and numbered, and clearly sets out its duration and the amount of cover provided. It is addressed to the seller and states that, on the instructions of the buyer, the banker authorises the seller to draw bills of exchange up to the stated amount. There then follows the list of the documents which are to accompany the bill upon presentation and to be surrendered upon acceptance or payment. The letter of credit specifies the manner in which the documents are to be made out and the shipments to which they are to relate. The letter concludes with the undertaking to honour all bills of exchange drawn within the terms of the credit, provided that they bear on their face the number and date of the credit to enable identification.

Theoretical analysis

34-505

UCP 600 provides that the issuing bank becomes irrevocably bound to honour the credit as of the time it issues the credit, ¹⁵³¹ and that the confirming bank becomes irrevocably bound to honour or negotiate the credit as of the time it adds its confirmation to the credit. ¹⁵³² Each bank becomes contractually bound to the seller at these respective times. But it is far from clear as to what, if any, consideration is provided by the seller for these contractual promises. There have been a number of theories advanced to find the necessary consideration. It has been argued, for example, that consideration for the credit is the seller's agreement to present shipping documents to the bank or, alternatively, that the credit becomes binding as a result of the seller's reliance on it. However, none of these theories stand up to close scrutiny. ¹⁵³³ There are flaws in the two theories highlighted above. ¹⁵³⁴ First, the seller makes no promise to the bank to produce the shipping documents. Secondly, the idea that reliance by the seller makes the bank's promise binding is irreconcilable with the commercial understanding of the credit as irrevocable from the moment that it is issued. The enactment of the Contracts (Rights of Third Parties) Act 1999, which allows third parties (the beneficiary under the credit) to enforce rights conferred on them in other peoples' contracts (the contract between the applicant and the issuing bank), does not take the matter any further. ¹⁵³⁵ Article 4(a) of UCP 600 provides that the beneficiary cannot avail himself of the contract between the banks, or between the applicant and the issuing bank, and this would effectively exclude the operation of the Act. ¹⁵³⁶

Mercantile usage

34-506

The best explanation of the legal nature of an irrevocable credit is based on regarding it as established by a mercantile usage recognised all over the world. This explanation derives support from an observation of Jenkins L.J. in Hamzeh Malas & Sons v British Imex Industries Ltd ¹⁵³⁷.

“[T]he opening of a confirmed letter of credit constitutes a bargain between the banker and the vendor of the goods, which imposes upon the banker an absolute obligation to pay. ... An elaborate commercial system has been built up on the footing that bankers' confirmed credits are of that character, and, in my judgment, it would be wrong for this court in the present case to interfere with that established practice.” ¹⁵³⁸

This decision further intimates that arguments assailing the validity of irrevocable credits will meet with little sympathy from the courts.

The autonomy of an irrevocable credit

34-507

⚠ An irrevocable credit constitutes an independent contract between the issuing banker and the seller, and is not qualified by or subject to the terms of the contract of sale, made between the buyer and the seller, ¹⁵³⁹ or the contract between the issuing banker and the buyer. ¹⁵⁴⁰ It can be enforced by the seller even if the issuer is a foreign central bank. A plea of sovereignty on such an issuer's part is untenable. ¹⁵⁴¹ The autonomy of the issuing bank's undertaking is most clearly declared in art.4(a) of the UCP, but it has been well established in England for several decades. ¹⁵⁴² Thus, the buyer cannot enjoin the issuing bank from honouring a draft presented by the seller and accompanied by the required documents merely because the seller has failed to perform his contract with the buyer, e.g. by supplying goods of an inferior quality. ¹⁵⁴³ The autonomy of the bank's undertaking is considered to be of such importance that an English court will be prepared to uphold it, provided the credit is available in England, even if a foreign court has granted the buyer an injunction. ¹⁵⁴⁴ ⚠ There are only two exceptions to the autonomy doctrine. ¹⁵⁴⁵ ⚠

Illegality

34-508

The first arises in cases in which the transaction is tainted with illegality. Thus, if a letter of credit infringes the exchange control provisions of a country which is a member of the International Monetary Fund Treaty, an English court would refuse to enforce the credit in view of the Bretton-Woods Agreement Order in Council 1946. ¹⁵⁴⁶ But the respective contravention does not necessarily vitiate the letter of credit in toto. The court will enforce payment of any part of the amount of the credit which is unaffected by and hence lawfully due notwithstanding the exchange control contravention. ¹⁵⁴⁷ The illegality exception to the autonomy doctrine is not confined to cases where payment of the credit infringes exchange control provisions. ¹⁵⁴⁸ In Group Josi Re v Walbrook Insurance Co Ltd, ¹⁵⁴⁹ Staughton L.J. expressed the view that a court would restrain a bank from paying under a letter of credit that was being used as a means of payment of an illegal arms sale, at least where the illegality was clearly established and known to the bank. More recently, in Mahonia Ltd v JP Morgan Chase Bank, ¹⁵⁵⁰ Colman J. refused to strike out an illegality defence to enforcement of a letter of credit where the underlying contract was alleged to have been made for an illegal purpose, namely the contravention of US Securities law.

The fraud rule

34-509

⚠ The most important exception to the autonomy doctrine is where there is fraud on the part of the seller (the beneficiary of the credit), or his agent, in relation to the presentation of the documents. ¹⁵⁵¹ In United City Merchants (Investments) Ltd v Royal Bank of Canada, (The American Accord), Lord Diplock said that the fraud exception arose ¹⁵⁵² ⚠:

“where the seller, for the purposes of drawing on the credit, fraudulently presents to the confirming bank documents that contain, expressly or by implication, material representations of fact that to his knowledge are untrue.”

However, if the fraud is that of an independent third party, as it was in the United City Merchants case, where the fraudulent ante-dating of a bill of lading was carried out by the loading brokers—who were the carrier’s, and not the seller’s, agents—then the seller can still enforce the credit, so long as he is unaware of the fraud at the time of presentation. Moreover, there is no separate exception to the autonomy doctrine that applies simply because the tendered document is a “nullity” in the sense that it is a forgery or executed without the authority of the person by whom it purports to be issued. ¹⁵⁵³

Obtaining an injunction against a bank

34-510

⚠ Even where the alleged fraud can be brought home to the seller, an injunction will be granted only if there is clear proof to support that it has taken place. ¹⁵⁵⁴ ⚠ A court will not readily intervene to stop payment under an irrevocable letter of credit because, as Kerr J. famously stated in RD Harbottle (Mercantile) Ltd v National Westminster Bank Ltd, irrevocable obligations assumed by banks are the life-blood of international commerce. ¹⁵⁵⁵ An injunction should only be granted to restrain a bank from paying under a letter of credit where the fraud exception applies and the bank is aware of the fraud. Evidence must be clear, both as to the fact of fraud and as to the bank’s knowledge. ¹⁵⁵⁶ In United Trading Corp v Allied Arab Bank Ltd, Ackner L.J. stated that, in order to obtain an interlocutory injunction, the claimant had to establish that it is seriously arguable that, on the material available, “the only realistic inference is that the [beneficiary] could not honestly have believed in the validity of its demands on the performance bonds”. ¹⁵⁵⁷ This test sets a lower standard of proof at the pre-trial hearing than at the full trial, but it was later stressed by Rix J., in Czarnikow-Rionda Sugar Trading Inc v Standard Bank London Ltd, that this places on the court “an additional requirement to be careful in its discretion not to upset what is in effect a strong presumption in favour of the fulfilment of the independent banking commitments”. ¹⁵⁵⁸ The approach taken by Rix J. was later endorsed Mance L.J. in Solo Industries UK Ltd v Canara Bank. ¹⁵⁵⁹ In Alternative Power Solution Ltd v Central Electricity Board, Lord Clarke, delivering the judgment of the Board of the Privy Council, agreed with the reasoning of Rix J. and Mance L.J., and continued ¹⁵⁶⁰ ⚠:

“It recognises that the test cannot be quite the same as at a trial and that the test as the interlocutory stage can properly be described as Ackner L.J. described it, namely whether it is seriously arguable that, on the material available, ‘the only realistic inference is that [the beneficiary] could not honestly have believed in the validity of its demands on the performance bonds’ and that the bank was aware of the fact. In the view of the Board the expression ‘seriously arguable’ is intended to be a significantly more stringent test than good arguable case, let alone serious issue to be tried. As Mance L.J. put it, a case of established fraud known to the bank, is, by its nature, one which, if it is good at all, must be capable of being established with clarity at the interlocutory stage. In summary, the Board concludes that it must be clearly established at the interlocutory stage that the only realistic inference is (a) that the beneficiary could not honestly have believed in the validity of its demands under the letter of credit and (b) that the bank was aware of the fraud.”

The Board also accepted that ¹⁵⁶¹:

“the reasons why reported cases of injunctions being granted (or continued) under the fraud exception are so rare are (a) because it is almost never possible to establish the test for fraud as opposed to a mere possibility of fraud, but also (b) because the balance of convenience will almost always militate against the grant of an injunction.”

The Board stated ¹⁵⁶² that it agreed with Kerr J. in RD Harbottle (Mercantile) Ltd v National Westminster Bank, who said that the balance of convenience issue faced the applicant with an “insuperable difficulty”, ¹⁵⁶³ and also with Rix J. in the Czarnikov-Rionda case, who did not regard Kerr J. as necessarily saying that it could never be done, but added “that it would of necessity take extraordinary facts to surmount this difficulty”. ¹⁵⁶⁴

Tender by third party

34-511

A direct result of the multi-national character of the documentary credit transaction is that usually the forged documents are tendered to the issuing bank not by the seller, who is the beneficiary of the credit, but by an innocent third party such as a negotiating or discounting bank. In Discount Records Ltd v Barclays Bank Ltd ¹⁵⁶⁵ Megarry J. held that the fraud principle could not be invoked against such a third party, as a holder in due course of the bill of exchange ought not to be enjoined from enforcing the credit by reason of the seller’s fraud. The difficulty with this view is that a bill of exchange drawn under a documentary credit does not bear the issuing bank’s acceptance at the time of its tender. For this reason it cannot confer any rights against the bank on the holder thereof. His being a holder in due course would therefore appear to be immaterial. It is true that, in the case of a negotiation credit, ¹⁵⁶⁶ the holder of the bill may claim to be the promisee of the bank’s undertaking in the letter of credit. He may therefore seek to enforce this promise rather than the bill of exchange. ¹⁵⁶⁷ But, even so, it is to be doubted that the bank’s undertaking involves a promise to accept documents which are forged or fraudulent and hence ineffective. In the case of a straight credit, in which the bank’s promise is addressed to the beneficiary alone, it is even more strongly arguable that the third party should not be regarded as being in a better position than the beneficiary. Undoubtedly, both the beneficiary and a third party such as a negotiating bank are protected against a misuse of the fraud rule by its main limitation which is that, to invoke it, it is necessary to establish the occurrence of forgery or of fraud. ¹⁵⁶⁸ It seems that this principle applies even if the injunction is sought only as against the beneficiary. In Deutsche Rückversicherung AG v Walbrook Insurance Co Ltd ¹⁵⁶⁹ Phillips J. held that an injunction restraining the beneficiary from making a call under the credit would be granted only to the extent that it was also to be available as an order precluding the bank from making payment.

Banco Santander

34-512

The points just made are echoed in Banco Santander SA v Bank Paribas, ¹⁵⁷⁰ which involved a deferred payment credit. A fraud respecting the documents came to light after the acceptance of the tender but before the date on which payment was due. The issuing bank refused to pay whereupon the negotiating bank instituted an action for the amount of the credit relying on its position as the beneficiary’s assignee. The Court of Appeal held that the negotiating bank’s right was subject to the equities available against the “assignor” and that, accordingly, that bank was not entitled to payment against the fraudulent documents. ¹⁵⁷¹ But their Lordship indicated that, if the negotiating bank had brought the action in its own rights-that is, as a negotiation bank-the fraud in the documents could not be asserted against it. Naturally, the bank would be entitled to sue in its own name only if the letter of credit sanctioned negotiation or-in other words-constituted a negotiation credit and provided that the "negotiation" ¹⁵⁷² of the documents could be established.

Restrictions on beneficiary's right to call for payment

34-513

In Sirius International Insurance Corp (Publ) v FAI General Insurance Co Ltd, ¹⁵⁷³ the Court of Appeal held that the principle of autonomy did not mean that a beneficiary could draw on a letter of credit when he had expressly agreed not to do so unless certain conditions were satisfied and those conditions had not been met. In this case, the restrictions were contained in a separate agreement made between the beneficiary (Sirius) and the applicant (FAI). May L.J. stated that:

"although those restrictions were not terms of the letter of credit, and although the bank would have been obliged and entitled to honour a request to pay which fulfilled its terms, that does not mean that, as between themselves and FAI, Sirius were entitled to draw on the letter of credit if the express conditions of this underlying agreement were not fulfilled. They were not so entitled." ¹⁵⁷⁴

The Court of Appeal was also of the opinion that if draw-down was attempted in these circumstances, a court would be likely to grant an injunction restraining the beneficiary from drawing on the letter of credit in breach of express conditions contained in the underlying agreement. It should be noted that fraud was not alleged against Sirius and so the case did not fall within the fraud exception to the autonomy principle. The Court of Appeal held that an express condition of the separate agreement between the parties had not been met and that Sirius were not entitled to the proceeds of the credit. The House of Lords ¹⁵⁷⁵ reversed that decision on the ground that the condition had been satisfied. Their Lordships found it unnecessary to examine arguments about the autonomy principle.

34-514

⚠ The Sirius case raises important questions about the extent of the autonomy principle. There must be some concern as to how far it undermines the principle and its consequential benefits of commercial certainty. However, the English courts have not shown themselves willing to embrace the wider principle of "unconscionable demand" which has gained judicial support in Singapore. ¹⁵⁷⁶ ⚠ It is not entirely clear what constitutes unconscionability, although it seems to be something more than unfairness and less than fraud, nor as to the standard of proof required to obtain injunctive relief on this ground. ¹⁵⁷⁷ The uncertainty that this creates is obvious. Nevertheless, there have been dicta in recent English cases which suggests that the previous reluctance to apply a concept of "unconscionability" may not last forever. ¹⁵⁷⁸ The concept might find acceptance in the area of independent guarantees, which merely perform a security function as opposed to being a mode of payment. ¹⁵⁷⁹ In Simon Carves Ltd v Ensus UK Ltd, ¹⁵⁸⁰ Akenhead J. granted an injunction restraining a beneficiary from seeking payment under an on-demand performance bond on the ground that the issuing bank had a strong case that, as between it and the beneficiary, the bond was null and void pursuant to the terms of the underlying contract. Akenhead J. said that:

"[i]n principle, if the underlying contract, in relation to which the bond has been provided by way of security, clearly and expressly prevents the beneficiary party to the contract from making a demand under the bond, it can be restrained by the Court from making a demand under the bond." ¹⁵⁸¹

Akenhead J. was tentatively of the view, although not deciding the issue, that this constituted a second type of exception (the other being fraud) to the general principle that the court will not act to prevent a beneficiary calling on an on-demand bond. ¹⁵⁸²

Dealings in documents

34-515

The principle that the commercial credit is not qualified by the underlying contract of sale is linked with one further important rule. Article 5 of the UCP provides that in commercial credit transactions the parties deal in documents and not in goods. Thus, insofar as the seller tenders all the required documents, the banker is not entitled to reject them on the ground that the goods are not up to contract. ¹⁵⁸³

Examination of the documents

34-516

Banks must examine all tendered documents to determine, on the basis of the documents alone, whether or not the documents appear on their face to constitute a complying presentation, i.e. whether they constitute a presentation in accordance with the terms and conditions of the credit, the applicable provisions of the UCP and international standard banking practice. ¹⁵⁸⁴ Under UCP 600 art.14(b), the issuing bank, the confirming bank and any other nominated bank acting on its nomination (including an advising bank) each has a maximum of five banking days following the day of presentation to determine if the presentation is complying. UCP 500 was differently worded. UCP 500 art.13(b), gave the bank a reasonable time, not to exceed seven banking days, to examine the documents and make the determination. What was a reasonable time could be a matter of some uncertainty, but it could certainly arise in less than seven banking days. ¹⁵⁸⁵ Where issuing bank, the confirming bank, or a nominated bank acting on its nomination, decides to refuse to honour or negotiate a credit, it must give a single notice to that effect to the presenter, i.e. the beneficiary, bank or other party that makes a presentation of documents under a credit. ¹⁵⁸⁶ UCP 600 art.16(d), provides that the rejection notice must be given by telecommunication or, if that is not possible, by other expeditious means no later than the close of the fifth banking day following the day of presentation. ¹⁵⁸⁷ The net effect of UCP 600 arts 14(b) and 16(d), seems to be that a bank has a maximum of five banking days following presentation of the documents to determine if the presentation is compliant, but that the longer it takes to make its determination, the less time it has available to it to give a notice of rejection to the applicant. ¹⁵⁸⁸ If the bank fails to comply with the five (banking) day maximum period, it will not have served a proper notice which satisfies art.16(d) and, because of the effect of UCP 600 art.16(f), ¹⁵⁸⁹ will be precluded from claiming that the documents do not comply with the credit. ¹⁵⁹⁰ To avoid the problems resulting from the need of making a conclusive decision of whether to accept or reject the documents, banks often take them up subject to an indemnity or a reserve. ¹⁵⁹¹

Rejection notice

34-517

The notice of rejection must state the discrepancies in respect of which the document is being rejected. There has been some doubt as to whether a bank would be estopped from later raising further discrepancies not identified in the original rejection notice. The position at common law is that, absent special circumstances raising a true estoppel, the bank will not be prevented from relying upon discrepancies which were not listed in the original rejection notice. ¹⁵⁹² But the position was thought to be different under the UCP. ¹⁵⁹³ The 1993 revision of the UCP clarified the issue by stating, for the first time, that the notice must specify all discrepancies in respect of which the bank refused the documents. ¹⁵⁹⁴ UCP 600 art.16(c)(ii), retains the requirement, although it does so in slightly different language: the bank must give a "single notice" of rejection to the presenter and that notice must state "each discrepancy in respect of which the bank refuses to honour or negotiate". ¹⁵⁹⁵ If the bank fails to comply with this requirement, or any other requirement of art.16, it is precluded from claiming that the documents do not constitute a complying presentation. ¹⁵⁹⁶ This seems to mean the bank may be precluded from raising a new objection when documents are retendered by the seller having cured the defects identified in the original notice of rejection. ¹⁵⁹⁷

34-518

Under UCP 500 art.14(d)(i), a bank which refused documents had also to state in its rejection notice whether it was holding the documents at the disposal of, or was returning them to, the presenter. The purpose of this provision was that, as soon as the documents had been rejected, they should be put back in circulation. However, problems arose where a bank served a rejection notice and at the same time approached the applicant for a waiver of the discrepancies, and if such waiver was received released the documents without further notice. ¹⁵⁹⁸ In Crédit Industriel et Commercial v China Merchants Bank, ¹⁵⁹⁹ the issuing bank's notice of rejection was held to be bad where it ended with the words:

“Should the disc[repancy] being accepted by the applicant, we shall release the documents to them without further notice to you unless yr instructions to the contrary received prior to our payment. Documents held at yr risk for yr disposal.”

Steel J. considered that the conditional nature of the rejection was not saved by the potential for acceptance of contrary instructions prior to payment, particularly where no notice was to be given. ¹⁶⁰⁰ The message constituted a continuing threat of conversion of the claimant's documents. However, UCP 600 art.16, contains additional options designed to avoid banks sitting on discrepant documents. Under art.16(c)(iii) the rejection notice must state that the bank ¹⁶⁰¹:

- “(a)
holds the documents pending further instructions from the presenter; or
- (b)
holds the documents until it receives a waiver from the applicant and agrees to accept it, and receives further instructions from the presenter prior to agreeing to accept a waiver; or
- (c)
is returning the documents; or
- (d)
is acting in accordance with instructions previously received from the presenter.”

The bank must act in accordance with the statement contained in the notice with reasonable promptness. ¹⁶⁰²

34-519

According to UCP 600 art.16(f), if the issuing bank or confirming bank fails to act in accordance with the provisions of art.16, it is precluded from claiming that the documents do not constitute a complying presentation. But the article makes no reference to the position of a nominated bank. However, if a nominated bank is employed by the issuing bank or confirming bank to take up and examine the documents on its behalf, the nominated bank's failure to comply with art.16 will bar the issuing bank or confirming bank from claiming that the documents are not conforming. ¹⁶⁰³

The banker's recourse against the seller

34-520

It is doubtful whether a banker, who accepts a faulty tender, has a right of recourse against the seller if the buyer rejects the documents tendered. The question must be considered both from the point of view of the law of negotiable instruments and the general principles of the law of contract. As regards the law of negotiable instruments, it should be borne in mind that the undertaking of the banker may assume one of three forms. First, he may promise to pay cash either when the documents are tendered or at a stipulated deferred date. Secondly, he may promise to accept and pay a bill of exchange drawn on himself by the beneficiary or, if the bill is to be drawn on a third party such as the confirming bank, promise that it would be duly honoured. Thirdly, the issuing banker may promise to negotiate a draft drawn by the seller on the buyer and accompanied by the documents. In the first case the law of negotiable instruments will, obviously, not apply. In the second case, where the banker is the acceptor of the draft and the seller the drawer, the law of negotiable instruments does not confer on the former a right of recourse against the latter. The third case, however, gives rise to problems. The seller here is the drawer and the banker an indorser or holder. Thus, if the draft is dishonoured by the drawee (the buyer), the issuing banker may claim to have a right of recourse against the seller under ss.43(2) or 47(2) of the Bills of Exchange Act 1882. Moreover, the case of M.A. Sassoon & Sons Ltd v International Banking Corp ¹⁶⁰⁴ lays down that the fact that a draft is stated to be drawn under a commercial credit does not necessarily exclude a right of recourse. However, this case did not concern the relationship of issuing banker and seller; it was a case in which a discounting banker sought to claim recourse against the seller, after the dishonour of a draft by the buyer. ¹⁶⁰⁵ The issue is no longer a live one under UCP 600 as art.6(c) provides that a credit must not be issued available by a draft drawn on the applicant (the buyer). ¹⁶⁰⁶

Position at common law

34-521

In considering whether, in certain circumstances, the general principles of the common law may confer on the banker a right of recourse against the seller, a distinction must be drawn between three types of case. First, the banker may wish to recover an amount paid to the seller, if the tender was affected with fraud. In this type of case the banker should be entitled to claim against the seller in deceit. ¹⁶⁰⁷ Secondly, the banker may wish to reclaim payment from the seller if the buyer fails. It is, however, difficult to see on what principle he may establish such a claim, especially as a commercial credit constitutes a security given by the banker to the seller. Thirdly, the banker may wish to seek recourse to the seller if he has accepted, by mistake, a faulty set of documents tendered by the seller. It is, however, to be doubted whether the banker should be allowed to claim the amount back as money paid under a mistake of fact. In most cases the seller would change his position by parting with the documents against the banker's acceptance or payment and the banker should accordingly be precluded from claiming that the money was paid under a mistake of fact. ¹⁶⁰⁸ UCP 600 art.16(f), supports this contention:

“... if an issuing bank or a confirming bank fails to act in accordance with the provisions of this article, it shall be precluded from claimant that the documents do not constitute a complying presentation.”

Moreover, the issuing banker is under a duty to examine the documents tendered to him. ¹⁶⁰⁹ The seller is, thus, entitled to presume that, if the banker accepts the documents tendered, the set is regular. In this situation the seller may perhaps be entitled to claim that the banker has waived inquiry and that he should, therefore, be precluded from claiming that he paid the amount of the credit under a mistake of fact. ¹⁶¹⁰

The measure of damages

34-522

❗ The modern cases support the proposition that if the issuing or confirming bank fails to pay against presentation of conforming documents under a letter of credit payable at sight, the beneficiary may sue in debt to recover the value of the credit, provided he is willing and able to transfer the documents to the bank against payment. ¹⁶¹¹ ❗ If the beneficiary is willing and able to transfer the documents to the bank, he is entitled to recover the face value of the credit as a debt (subject to the right to recover any consequential losses as damages). ¹⁶¹² If he is not willing or able to hand over the documents, the position is different; his claim is in damages for wrongful failure to honour the credit. ¹⁶¹³ In Urquhart Lindsay & Co Ltd v Eastern Bank Ltd ¹⁶¹⁴ the issuing banker opened an irrevocable credit covering several shipments of machinery. He wrongfully dishonoured one draft of the seller on the ground that, although the draft and documents complied with the terms of the commercial credit, the amount exceeded the sum agreed upon in the contract of sale. The seller treated the dishonour of the draft as a repudiation by the banker of the entire commercial credit. The seller was allowed to recover the difference between on the one hand the value of the materials left on his hands plus the cost of such as he would have further provided, and on the other hand what the seller would have been entitled to receive for the manufactured goods from the buyers. However, Rowlatt J. stressed that the damages could not exceed the amount of the credit.

Damages for delay in payment

34-523

It has been held that a bank is liable for loss directly resulting from a delay in the performance of its undertaking in the letter of credit. In Ozalid Group Export Ltd v African Continental Bank Ltd ¹⁶¹⁵ a letter of credit in favour of a British exporter was for an amount of US $125,939.22. Although the exporter tendered the required documents before the expiry of the credit, the bank made payment only after the lapse of two months. During this period the US dollar lost in parity vis-à-vis the pound sterling and, as a result, the exporter obtained £2987.17 less for the amount eventually paid in US dollars than he would have got if payment had been made promptly. Giving judgment for the exporter for this amount plus interest and disbursements, Donaldson J. observed that the bank ought to have realised that the British exporter would have promptly converted any amount paid in US dollars into pounds sterling. His Lordship held that the exporter, the beneficiary of the credit, had the option of claiming payment in US dollars, or in pounds sterling. ¹⁶¹⁶

“Notwithstanding that in the present case the price of the goods was agreed to be paid in US dollars, it is clear that the [exporter's] loss was incurred in sterling and that this was foreseeable by the [issuing bank].” ¹⁶¹⁷

¹⁴⁰⁶. See, in particular, Benjamin's Sale of Goods, 9th edn (2014), Ch.23; R. King, Gutteridge and Megrah's Law of Banker's Commercial Credits, 8th edn (2001); R. Jack, A. Malek and D. Quest, Documentary Credits, 4th edn (2009); P. Ellinger and D. Neo, The Law and Practice of Documentary Letters of Credit (2010); D. Horowitz, Letters of Credit and Demand Guarantees: Defences to Payment (2010).

¹⁵³⁰. See above, para.34-482.

¹⁵³¹. UCP 600 art.7(b).

¹⁵³². UCP 600 art.8(b).

¹⁵³³. See R.M. Goode, Essays for Patrick Atiyah (1991), p.218.

- 1534. Goode, as above, p.218.
- 1535. L.S. Sealy and R.J.A. Hooley, Commercial Law: Text, Cases and Materials, 4th edn (2008), p.851.
- 1536. Sealy and Hooley, p.851; relying on the Contracts (Rights of Third Parties) Act 1999 s.1(2). See also Petrologic Capital SA v Banque Cantonale de Geneve [2012] EWHC 453 (Comm) at [52]–[56] (applicant for letter of credit held unable to rely on the Contracts (Right of Third Parties) Act 1999 to enforce English law and exclusive jurisdiction clause contained in the credit in an action to prevent the issuing bank from performing its obligations under the credit).
- 1537. [1958] 2 Q.B. 127, 129. See also International Banking Corp v Barclays Bank Ltd (1925) 5 Legal Decisions Affecting Bankers 1, 4.
- 1538. See also Kerr J. in RD Harbottle Mercantile Ltd v National Westminster Bank Ltd [1987] 1 Q.B. 146, 155–156; Centi Force Engineering v Bank of Scotland, The Times, December 23, 1992.
- 1539. Urquhart Lindsay & Co Ltd v Eastern Bank Ltd [1922] 1 K.B. 318, 322–323.
- 1540. The autonomy principle is not offended where the issuing bank exercises a right of set-off against the sum due to the beneficiary under the letter of credit: see, e.g. Hong Kong and Shanghai Banking Corp v Kloeckner & Co AG [1990] 2 Q.B. 514; Safa v Banque du Caire [2000] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 600; Lehman Brothers Commodity Services Inc v Credit Agricole Corporate and Investment Bank [2011] EWHC 1390 (Comm), [2012] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 254 (issuing bank entitled to set-off sums owed to it under a separate, pre-existing ISDA Master Agreement, against sums owed by it to beneficiary under letter of credit).
- 1541. Trendtex Trading Corp v Central Bank of Nigeria [1978] Q.B. 529; Hispano Americana Mercantil SA v Central Bank of Nigeria [1979] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 277, which also interprets the State Immunity Act 1978 s.3(3)(b). See also Banca Carige SpA Casa di Risparmio di Genova e Imperio v Banco Nacional de Cuba [2001] 1 W.L.R. 2039.
- 1542. Urquhart Lindsay & Co Ltd v Eastern Bank Ltd [1922] 1 K.B. 318; Hamzeh Malas & Sons v British Imex Industries Ltd [1958] 2 Q.B. 127; United City Merchants (Investments) Ltd v Royal Bank of Canada [1983] A.C. 168; Power Curber International Ltd v National Bank of Kuwait [1981] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 394, 397. See also RD Harbottle (Mercantile) Ltd v National Westminster Bank Ltd [1978] 1 Q.B. 146; Edward Owen Engineering Ltd v Barclays Bank International Ltd [1978] Q.B. 159; Howe Richardson Scale Co Ltd v Polimex-Cekop [1978] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 161; Bolivinter Oil SA v Chase Manhattan Bank NA [1984] 1 W.L.R. 392; Türkiye İs Bankası AS v Bank of China [1998] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 250; Petrologic Capital SA v Banque Cantonale de Geneve [2012] EWHC 453 (Comm) at [56]; Taurus Petroleum Ltd v State Oil Marketing Company of the Ministry of Oil, Republic of Iraq [2013] EWHC 3494 (Comm), [2014] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 432 at [43] (affirmed on different grounds [2015] EWCA Civ 835); Mauri Garments Trading & Marketing Ltd v Mauritius Commercial Bank Ltd [2015] UKPC 14 at [16] (decided under law of Mauritius). But the autonomy principle does not preclude looking at the terms of the credit to see what it is that the bank is paying: Ibrahim v Barclays Bank Plc [2012] EWCA Civ 640, [2012] 2 B.C.L.C. 1 at [61]. In the case of performance guarantees, the application of the autonomy doctrine depends on whether the document is a traditional or a first demand guarantee: see Gold Coast Ltd v Caja de Ahorros del Mediterraneo [2001] EWCA Civ 1806, [2002] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 617; Marubeni Hong Kong & South China Ltd v The Government of Mongolia [2005] EWCA Civ 395, [2005] 2 All E.R. (Comm) 289; Uzinterimpex JSC v Standard Bank Plc [2008] EWCA Civ 819, [2008] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 456; Wuhan Guoyu Logistics Group Co v Emporiki Bank of Greece SA [2012] EWCA Civ 1629, [2013] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 1191.
- 1543. Hamzeh Malas & Sons v British Imex Industries Ltd, above. However, Andrew Smith J. has held in Oliver v Dubai Bank Kenya Ltd [2007] EWHC 2165 (Comm) that the autonomy principle was not infringed where a standby credit required presentation of a telex issued by the same bank that had issued the credit confirming that the beneficiary had fulfilled its commitments set out in the underlying contract, thereby giving that bank sole power to prevent the credit from becoming payable. He held (at [13]) that the requirement of the confirming telex did not offend the autonomy principle as the bank did not seek to rely upon any claims or defences which the applicant might have had.

1544.

❗ Power Curber International Ltd v National Bank of Kuwait [1981] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 394; see also National Infrastructure Development Co Ltd v Banco Santander SA [2017] EWCA Civ 27 at [45], and National Infrastructure Development Co Ltd v BNP Paribas [2016] EWHC 2508 (Comm) at [17]. For detailed discussion of the governing law of letters of credits, including the impact of the Rome I Regulation (Regulation 593/2008), which is applicable to contracts concluded from December 17, 2009 onwards, see M. Brindle and R. Cox (eds), Law of Bank Payments, 4th edn (2010), paras 8–130 et seq. See also Taurus Petroleum Ltd v State Oil Marketing Company of the Ministry of Oil, Republic of Iraq [2015] EWCA Civ 835 at [14]–[24] and [55], where the Court of Appeal, being bound by the decision in Power Curber (above), held that a debt due under a letter of credit is situated at the place where payment is to be made.

1545.

❗ For a possible further exception, see below, para.34-514. For the tendency to construe a bank's irrevocable undertaking, such a clumsily phrased performance bond, as autonomous, see Siporex Trade SA v Banque Indosuez [1986] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 146. In Wuhan Guoyu Logistics Group Co v Emporiki Bank of Greece SA [2012] EWCA Civ 1629, [2013] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 1191, Longmore L.J. (with the agreement of Rimer and Tomlinson L.J.J.) tried to find some consistency of approach when deciding whether a document was a suretyship guarantee or an autonomous "on demand" guarantee. He said (at [25]) that "while everything must in the end depend on the words actually used by the parties, there is nevertheless a presumption that, if certain elements are present in the document, the document will be construed in one way or the other". He cited and approved (at [26]) of the analysis in Paget's Law of Banking, 11th edn (1996), and now contained in almost identical words in the 14th edition (2014), para.34.8, which provides that: "where an instrument (i) relates to an underlying transaction between the parties in different jurisdictions, (ii) is issued by a bank, (iii) contains an undertaking to pay 'on demand' (with or without the words 'first' and/or 'written'); and (iv) does not contain clauses excluding or limiting the defences available to a guarantor, it will almost always be construed as a demand guarantee." It should be noted, however, that the Court of Appeal held that the instrument in this case was an "on demand" guarantee despite the fact that the fourth element of the presumption was absent. The same result followed in Splithoff's Bevrachtungskantoor BV v Bank of China Ltd [2015] EWHC 999 (Comm) at [71] and [81], and in Caterpillar Motoren GmbH and Co KG v Mutual Benefits Assurance Co [2015] EWHC 2304 (Comm) at [21] and [27], and in South Lanarkshire Council v Aviva Insurance Ltd [2016] CSOH 83 at [26] (Outer House of Court of Session) and Bitumen Invest AS v Richmond Mercantile Ltd FZC [2016] EWHC 2957 (Comm) at [31]. The presumption that an instrument gives rise to independent, primary liability seems to apply "[w]here ... the granter is a bank or other financial institution whose business includes the granting of financial instruments for a fee", e.g. an insurance company: South Lanarkshire Council v Aviva Insurance Ltd, above, at [25], per Lord Doherty, citing Meritz Fire & Marine Insurance Co Ltd v Jan de Nul NV [2010] EWHC 3362 (Comm), [2011] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 1049 at [65]–[66], per Beatson J.; Caterpillar Motoren GmbH & Co KG v Mutual Benefits Assurance Co, above, at [20], per Teare J.; Splithoff's Bevrachtungskantoor BV v Bank of China Ltd, above, at [83], per Carr J. See also Wuhan Guoyu Logistics Group Co Ltd v Emporiki Bank of Greece SA [2013] EWCA Civ 1679, [2014] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 273, where it was held that money paid by bank to beneficiary under the "on demand" guarantee was not held in trust for bank when, between beneficiary making demand in good faith and payment being made to beneficiary, it had been conclusively determined by a final arbitration award that the event which triggered demand had not in fact fallen due. In Marubeni Hong Kong & South China Ltd v The Government of Mongolia [2005] EWCA Civ 395, [2005] 2 All E.R. (Comm) 289 at [28], Carnwath L.J. said that cases where documents are issued by banks which are "described as, or assumed to be, performance bonds ... provide no useful analogy for interpreting a document which was not issued by a bank and which contains no overt indication of an intention to create a performance bond or anything analogous to it". But the presumption that an instrument issued by a non-bank party does not give rise to independent primary liability may be rebutted by the clear language of the instrument itself, as in IIG Capital LLC v Van Der Merwe [2008] EWCA Civ 542, [2008] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 187; Meritz Fire & Marine Insurance Co Ltd v Jan de Nul NV [2010] EWHC 3362 (Comm), [2011] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 1049, affirmed [2011] EWCA Civ 827, [2011] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 379; ABM Amro Commercial Finance Plc v McGinn [2014] EWHC 1674 (Comm); Caterpillar Motoren GmbH and Co KG v Mutual Benefits Assurance Co [2015] EWHC 2304 (Comm); Bitumen Invest AS v Richmond Mercantile Ltd FZC [2016] EWHC 2957 (Comm). For cases where the presumption was not rebutted, see Vossloh Aktiengesellschaft v Alpha Trains (UK) Ltd [2010] EWHC 2443 (Ch), [2011] 2 All E.R. (Comm) 307; Carey Value Added SL v Grupo Urvasco SA [2010] EWHC 1905 (Comm), [2011] 2 All E.R. (Comm) 140; North Shore Ventures Ltd v Anstead Holdings Inc [2011] EWCA Civ 230, [2011] 3 W.L.R. 628.

1546. Pt I art.8.

1547. United City Merchants (Investments) Ltd v Royal Bank of Canada [1983] A.C. 168, affirming on this point [1981] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 604, in which the Court of Appeal varied the conclusion of Mocatta J. ([1979] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 498), who thought the illegality in the underlying transaction vitiated the letter of credit in toto. As to effect of orders invalidating facilities in the place of issue, see Shanning International Ltd v Lloyds TSB Bank Plc [2001] UKHL 31, [2001] 1 W.L.R. 1462.

1548. See N. Enonchong, "The autonomy principle of letters of credit: an illegality exception?" [2006] L.M.C.L.Q. 404. See generally, N. Enonchong, The Independence Principle of Letters of Credit and Demand Guarantees (2011), Ch.8.

1549. [1996] 1 W.L.R. 1152.

1550. [2003] EWHC 1927 (Comm), [2003] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 911. It was later held at the trial of the action that there was no illegality which affected the transaction: Mahonia Ltd v JP Morgan Chase Bank [2004] EWHC 1938 (Comm).

1551. See Benjamin's Sale of Goods, 9th edn (2014), paras 24–022 et seq.

1552. [1983] 1 A.C. 168, 183. It has been held by Phillips J. in Sinocore International Co Ltd v RBRG Ltd [2017] EWHC 251 (Comm) at [46] that the authorities do not support a much wider proposition that a party who presents forged documents cannot obtain relief from the court in the transaction more generally, e.g. a claim for damages for a prior breach of the underlying contract.

1553. Montrod Ltd v Grundkötter Fleischvertriebs GmbH [2001] All E.R. (Comm) 368; affirmed [2001] EWCA Civ 1954, [2002] 1 W.L.R. 1975. For a critique, see Hooley [2002] C.L.J. 279. The Singapore Court of Appeal has since recognised a separate "nullity" defence: Beam Technology (Mfg) Pte Ltd v Standard Chartered Bank [2003] 1 S.L.R. 597, noted by Chin and Wong [2004] L.M.C.L.Q. 14. See also K. Donnelly [2008] J.B.L. 316; P. Todd [2008] L.M.C.L.Q. 547; J. Ren [2015] J.B.L. 1.

1554. [Note that fraud in this context refers to common law fraud, namely deceit: GKN Contractors Ltd v Lloyds Bank Plc (1985) 30 Build. L.R. 48. See further on the meaning of fraud, as explained in the context of performance bonds, Edward Owen Engineering Ltd v Barclays Bank International Ltd [1978] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 166, 171, 172–173; Bolivinter Oil SA v Chase Manhattan Bank NA [1984] 1 W.L.R. 392; Esal (Commodities) Ltd v Oriental Credit Ltd [1985] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 546, 549; Balfour Beatty Civil Engineering v Technical & General Guarantee Co Ltd (1999) 68 Con. L.R. 180 at 190–191; TTI Team Telecom International Ltd v Hutchison 3G UK Ltd [2003] EWHC 762 (TCC), [2003] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 914; cf. Banque Saud Fransi v Lear Siegler Services Inc [2006] EWCA Civ 1130, [2007] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 67 (different test when fraud raised in defence to summary judgment application by bank against principal on counter-indemnity than if claim brought against bank on demand guarantee itself); but see also Enka Insaat Ve Sanayi AS v Banca Popolare dell'Alto Adige SpA [2009] EWHC 2410 (Comm), [2009] C.I.L.L. 2777 (the test applied by a court when deciding whether to give summary judgment against a bank on a demand guarantee was whether there was a real prospect that the bank would establish at trial that the only realistic inference was that the beneficiary did not honestly believe in the validity of its demand), and National Infrastructure Development Co Ltd v Banco Santander SA [2017] EWCA Civ 27 at [20]–[24], where Enka was said to provide the "correct approach" where the beneficiary of a letter of credit seeks summary judgment against the bank, and that the position was different from those cases where the bank's own customer was seeking an interlocutory injunction against the bank (as in Solo Industries UK Ltd v Canara Bank [2001] 1 W.L.R. 1800 and Alternative Power Solution Ltd v Central Electricity Board [2014] UKPC 31, [2015] 1 W.L.R. 697: see this paragraph in the Main Work). See also N. Enonchong, “The problem of abusive calls on demand guarantees” [2007] L.M.C.L.Q. 83. Mere suspicions of a fraud do not justify the rejection of a regular set of documents: Society of Lloyd’s v Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce [1993] 2 Lloyd’s Rep. 579. In Petrosaudi Oil Services (Venezuela) Ltd v Novo Banco SA [2017] EWCA Civ 9, the Court of Appeal, reversing the first instance judge at [2016] EWHC 2456 (Comm), held that the general counsel of the beneficiary had not been fraudulent and had been entitled to sign a demand made on a standby letter of credit certifying that the applicant was “obligated to pay” the beneficiary. Christopher Clarke L.J., delivering a judgment with which Lewison L.J. agreed, construed the meaning of the words used and held (at [80]–[81]) that the statement that there was an obligation to pay was true. Obiter, he expressed some disquiet (at [88]) that the judge had held the general counsel to be fraudulent when the statement in the certificate was, in essence, a representation of law, which turned on a question of construction upon which different people might take different views.

1555. [1978] Q.B. 146, 155; approved by Lord Denning M.R. in Edward Owen Engineering Ltd v Barclays Bank international Ltd [1978] Q.B. 159, 169.

1556. Bolivinter Oil SA v Chase Manhattan Bank NA [1984] 1 W.L.R. 392, 393 (Sir John Donaldson M.R. was considering the position at the interlocutory stage).

1557. [1985] 2 Lloyd’s Rep. 554, 561.

1558. [1999] 2 Lloyd’s Rep. 187, 202.

1559. [2001] 1 W.L.R. 1800 at [32].

1560.  [2014] UKPC 31, [2015] 1 W.L.R. 697 at [59] (Lord Mance was a member of the Board). The same standard of proof of fraud is required whether the injunction is sought against the bank or the beneficiary: see Dong Jin Metal Co Ltd v Raymet Ltd Unreported July 13, 1993 CA; Deutsche Ruckversicherung AG v Walbrook Insurance Co Ltd [1995] 1 W.L.R. 1017, 1030–1031; Group Josi Re v Walbrook Insurance Co Ltd [1996] 1 W.L.R. 1152, 1161–1162; Czarnikow-Rionda Sugar Trading Inc v Standard Bank London Ltd [1999] 2 Lloyd’s Rep. 187, 190; Solo Industries UK Ltd v Canara Bank [2001] EWCA Civ 1059, [2001] 1 W.L.R. 1800 at [31]; Simon Carves Ltd v Ensus UK Ltd [2011] EWHC 657 (TCC), [2011] B.L.R. 340 at [29], [33(b)]; cf. Themehelp Ltd v West [1996] Q.B. 84. See generally, Benjamin’s Sale of Goods, 9th edn (2014), para.24-033. See also below, paras 34-513 et seq.

1561. At [79].

1562. At [81].

1563. [1978] Q.B. 146, 155.

1564. [1999] 2 Lloyd’s Rep. 187, 202–204 (and, in particular, his conclusion at point (11)). An injunction was granted in Kvaerner John Brown Ltd v Midland Bank Plc [1998] C.L.C. 446 without consideration of the balance of convenience, thereby rendering the decision of doubtful authority.

1565. [1975] 1 W.L.R. 315. See also Hamzeh Malas & Sons v British Imex Industries Ltd [1958] 2 Q.B. 127, at 130; and European Asian Bank AG v Punjab and Sind Bank (No.2) [1983] 1 W.L.R. 642, 645, suggesting that whether a third party is to be regarded an agent for collection or a holder depends on his position at the time of the tender. Contrast the position when it is alleged that a third party can enforce the credit as an undisclosed principal: see Taurus Petroleum Ltd v State Oil Marketing Company of the Ministry of Oil, Republic of Iraq [2013] EWHC 3494 (Comm), [2014] 1 Lloyd’s Rep. 432 at [21], Field J. (obiter): the issue was not addressed by the Court of Appeal [2015] EWCA Civ 835.

1566. As regards such credits, see above, para.34-483.

- 1567. In DCD Factors Plc v Ramada Trading Ltd [2007] EWHC 2820 (QB), [2008] Bus. L.R. 654, Lloyd Jones J. held (at [32]) that it was artificial to inquire whether payment was sought under the bill of exchange or letter of credit when they formed different elements of one substantial transaction amounting to the negotiation of a negotiation credit.
- 1568. Discount Records Ltd v Barclays Bank Ltd [1975] 1 W.L.R. 315.
- 1569. [1996] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 345; but contrast as regards performance bonds Themhelp Ltd v West [1996] Q.B. 84. In Armlea Plc v Gov & Co of the Bank of Scotland, unreported June 4, 2004, where Lord Mackay (at [39]-[43]), sitting in the Outer House of the Court of Session, rejected a submission by a principal that it did not have to plead fraud when seeking an injunction against the bank to restrain payment under a demand guarantee (as opposed to where the bank wanted to avoid making payment, when fraud had to be pleaded). Lord Mackay (at [44]-[46]) also rejected a submission that the fraud exception only applied to demand guarantees involved in international commerce and not to those involved in domestic commerce.
- 1570. [2000] Lloyd's Rep. Bank. 165; affirming [1999] 2 All E.R. (Comm) 18.
- 1571. But see now UCP 600 arts 7(c), 8(c) and 12(b): and for discussion of whether art.12(b) would have had an effect on the assignment point in the Santander decision, see above, para.34-487 n.1454.
- 1572. As to which see above, para.34-483.
- 1573. [2003] EWCA Civ 470, [2003] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 865, noted by Hare [2004] C.L.J. 288. For examples of Australian cases to similar effect, see Selvas Pty Ltd v Hansen Yuncken (SA) Pty Ltd (1987) 6 Australian Construction Law Rep. 36; Boral Formwork v Action Motors [2002] NSWSC 713.
- 1574. At [27]. The right to drawdown must be clearly precluded by the express (as in Sirius) or implied terms of the underlying contract: MW High Tech Projects UK Ltd v Biffa Waste Services Ltd [2015] EWHC 949 (TCC) at [34] (where Stuart-Smith J. refused to imply term that prior call on parent company guarantee, which was a condition of a call on the on-demand retention bond, had to be "valid").
- 1575. [2004] UKHL 54, [2004] 1 W.L.R. 3251.
- 1576.  See, e.g. Samwoh Asphalt Premix Pte Ltd v Sum Cheong Piling Pte Ltd [2002] B.L.R. 459; McConnell Dowell Construction (Aust) Pty Ltd v Semcorp Engineering and Constructions Pte Ltd [2002] B.L.R. 450; BS Mount Sophia Pte Ltd v Join-Aim Pte Ltd [2012] SGCA 28, [2012] 3 S.L.R. 352. See further, P. Ellinger and D. Neo, The Law and Practice of Documentary Letters of Credit (2010), pp.319 et seq. (the principle has emerged in Singapore with reference to independent guarantees as distinct from commercial letters of credit). See also Chhina [2016] L.M.C.L.Q. 412. In National Infrastructure Development Co Ltd v Banco Santander SA [2016] EWHC 2990 (Comm) (affirmed [2017] EWCA Civ 27), Knowles J. (at [26]-[27]) refused an invitation to develop the law to recognise a different approach to standby letters of credit used to settle performance obligations, as opposed to letters of credit used to settle primary payment obligations, and noted that the position under Singaporean law appeared to be different.
- 1577. See Ganotaki [2004] L.M.C.L.Q. 148 at 152.
- 1578. See, especially, the dicta of Potter L.J. in Montrod Ltd v Grundkotter Fleischvertriebs [2001] EWCA Civ 1954, [2002] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 257 at [59], and that of Judge Thornton Q.C., sitting as a deputy High Court judge, in TTI Team Telecom International Ltd v Hutchison 3G UK Ltd [2003] EWHC 762 (TCC), [2003] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 914 at [37].
- 1579. See P. Ellinger and D. Neo, The Law and Practice of Documentary Letters of Credit, above, at p.319.
- 1580. [2011] EWHC 657 (TCC), [2011] B.L.R. 340.

- 1581. At [33]. Applied by Edwards-Stuart J. in Doosan Babcock Ltd v Comercializadora de Equipos y Materiales Mabe Limitada [2013] EWHC 3201 (TCC), [2014] B.L.R. 33, who said at [36] that Akenhead J.'s judgment "has extended the law, but in my view it has done so adopting a principled and incremental approach that does not undermine the general principles applicable to making a call on a bond". It has recently been stressed that in order to obtain injunctive relief "it must be positively established that the beneficiary was not entitled to draw down under the underlying contract": MW High Tech Projects UK Ltd v Biffa Waste Services Ltd [2015] EWHC 949 (TCC) at [34], per Stuart-Smith J., citing Permasteelisa Japan KK v Bouyguesstroi and Bank Intesa SpA [2007] EWHC 3508 (QB), Ramsey J.).
- 1582. At [34].
- 1583. Urquhart Lindsay & Co Ltd v Eastern Bank Ltd [1922] 1 K.B. 318; Hamzeh Malas & Sons v British Imex Industries Ltd [1958] 2 Q.B. 127. But see also Ibrahim v Barclays Bank Plc [2011] EWHC 1897 (Ch), [2011] 2 C.L.C. 589 at [116] (UCP 600 art.5 did not prevent conditions attached to payment of letter credit providing indication of parties' intentions as to whether payment discharged a third party's debt in complex financial transaction), affirmed [2012] EWCA Civ 640, [2012] 2 B.C.L.C. 1 (Lewison L.J. at [61]: "the autonomy principle does not preclude looking at the terms of the letter of credit to see what it is that the bank is paying").
- 1584. UCP 600 art.14(a).
- 1585. As to the meaning of "reasonable time", see Benjamin's Sale of Goods, 7th edn, para.23–156 and Co-operative Centrale Reiffeisen-Borenenbank BA v Sumitomo Bank Ltd [1987] F.L.R. 275 varied [1988] F.L.R. 207; Bankers Trust Co v State Bank of India [1991] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 443; affirming [1991] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 587. Seaconsar Far East Ltd v Bank Markazi Jomhouri Islami Iran [1997] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 89; affirmed [1999] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 36 CA.
- 1586. UCP 600 art.16(c).
- 1587. On what is meant by the word "given" in UCP 600 art.16(d), and whether or not it requires receipt of the notice by the presenter, see Bulgrains & Co Ltd v Shinhan Bank [2013] EWHC 2498 (QB) at [29]–[31]. UCP 600 art.16(d) is more tightly worded than the equivalent provision in UCP 500. UCP 500 art.14(d)(i) required notice to be given "without delay but no later than the close of the seventh banking day following the day of receipt of the documents". An issue could arise as to whether notice had been given "without delay": see, e.g. Bayerische Vereinsbank Aktiengesellschaft v National Bank of Pakistan [1997] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 59.
- 1588. L.S. Sealy and R.J.A. Hooley, Commercial Law: Text, Cases and Materials, 4th edn (2008), p.903.
- 1589. See below, para.34-456.
- 1590. J. Ulph, "The UCP 600: Documentary Credits in the Twenty-first Century" [2007] J.B.L. 355, 364.
- 1591. As regards the position of the parties in such a case, see Banque de l'Indochine et de Suez SA v JH Rayner (Mincing Lane) Ltd [1983] Q.B. 711.
- 1592. Kydon Compania Naviera SA v National Westminster Bank Ltd (The Lena) [1981] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 68, 79. See also Benjamin's Sale of Goods, 9th edn (2014), para.23–202; Paget's Law of Banking, 14th edn (2014), para.36.19.
- 1593. See Hing Yip Hing Fat Co Ltd v Daiwa Bank Ltd [1991] 2 H.K.L.R. 35, 45–51.
- 1594. UCP 500 art.14(d)(ii).
- 1595. Where the bank specifies discrepancies in the tendered documents, but fails to state that the bank is refusing to honour or negotiate as required by UCP 600 art.16(c)(i), and later serves another notice correcting the defect, it may be able to rely on the second notice as long as it serves that notice in time and adopts the same substantive reasons: Bulgrains & Co Ltd v Shinhan Bank [2013] EWHC 2498 (QB) at [32]-[33], distinguishing United Bank Ltd v Banque Nationale de Paris [1992] 2 S.L.R. 64, 76, as relied on by Benjamin's Sale of Goods, 9th edn (2014), para.23-191 (now also citing Swiss Singapore Overseas Enterprises Pts Ltd v China CITIC Bank Corp Ltd (No.2) [2014] 1 HKC 96 at [57]), arguing to the contrary. The bank's refusal statement may be explicit but it may also be implicit, either from use of a particular type of message format, as where a SWIFT standard-form MT734 message is transmitted from one bank to another, which will be universally understood by bankers as a refusal, or where there is a statement in a free form SWIFT message sent by one bank to another that it should be regarded as a MT734 message: Bulgrains & Co Ltd v Shinhan Bank, above, at [39] and [42].

1596. UCP 600 art.16(f) (but note that the preclusion does not apply to a non-confirming nominated bank). See Fortis Bank SA/NV v Indian Overseas Bank [2010] EWHC 84 (Comm), [2010] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 641, affirmed [2011] EWCA Civ 58, [2011] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 33.

1597. L.S. Sealy and R.J.A. Hooley, Commercial Law: Text, Cases and Materials, 4th edn (2008), p.903. See also above, para.34-456, and below, para.34-531.

1598. UCP 600 art.16(b) allows the issuing bank "in its sole judgement" to approach the applicant for a waiver of discrepancies. The article expressly provides that this does not extend the maximum period of five banking days, allowed under art.14(b), for determination by the bank whether the presentation is complying.

1599. [2002] EWHC 973 (Comm), [2002] 2 All E.R. (Comm) 427.

1600. At [68].

1601. But see Bulgrains & Co Ltd v Shinhan Bank [2013] EWHC 2498 (QB) at [50]-[51], where it was held that, in a communication between banks, it is enough that the rejection notice merely identifies the applicable provision, in that case "notify, as per UCP 600 article 16(c)(iii)(b)", without expressly stating what the issuing, confirming or nominated bank is proposing to do with the documents.

1602. Fortis Bank SA/NV v Indian Overseas Bank [2010] EWHC 84 (Comm), [2010] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 641, affirmed [2011] EWCA Civ 58, [2011] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 33 (where the issuing bank's failure to act in accordance with the disposal statements contained in its UCP 600 art.16(c)(iii) notices, was held, applying UCP 600 art.16(f), to precluded the bank from claiming that the documents did not constitute a complying presentation). In Fortis Bank SA/NV v India Overseas Bank [2011] EWHC 538 (Comm), [2011] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 190, J. Hirst Q.C., sitting as a Deputy Judge of the High Court, held (at [35]) that "in the absence of special extenuating circumstances, a bank which failed to despatch the documents within three banking days would have failed to act within reasonable promptness". A bank which takes possession of a bill of lading for examination but then rejects it and holds it to the order of the person presenting it, refuses to accept delivery and thereby prevents the completion of the indorsement in its favour for the purposes of the Carriage of Goods by Sea Act 1992 s.5(2)(b), i.e. it does not become a holder of the bill of lading: see Standard Chartered Bank v Dorchester LNG (2) Ltd, The Erin Schulte [2014] EWCA Civ 1382, where held that s.5(2)(b) requires both an intention on the part of the indorser to transfer the document and an intention on the part of the indorsee to accept it (but note that the bank in this case was held to have become the holder of the bill of lading with the rights of suit under the contract of carriage for different reasons).

1603. See E.P. Ellinger [1997] 3 (No.2) D.C.I. 9.

1604. [1927] A.C. 711, 731.

1605. cf. D. Sheehan, "Rights of Recourse in Documentary (and Other) Credit Transactions" [2005] J.B.L. 326.

1606. Also UCP 600 art.8(a)(ii) provides that a confirming bank negotiates without recourse (provided there has been a complying presentation). See, further, Benjamin's Sale of Goods, 9th edn (2014), para.23-278 (distinction drawn between positions of issuing and confirming bank on the one hand, and non-confirming nominated banks on the other).

1607. KBC Bank v Industrial Steels (UK) Ltd [2001] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 409; Komercni Banka AS v Stone and Rolls Ltd [2002] EWHC 2263 (Comm), [2003] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 383.

1608. See on this point, Vol.I, paras 29-186 et seq. and above, paras 34-128 et seq.

1609. Above, para.34-516.

1610. Both in view of the seller's change of a position, as to which see above, para.34-133, and the principle considered in Beevor v Marler (1898) 14 T.L.R. 289.

1611.  Standard Chartered Bank v Dorchester LNG (2) Ltd [2014] EWCA Civ 1382 at [51], per Moore-Bick L.J., citing Power Curber International Ltd v National Bank of Kuwait Ltd [1981] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 394; United City Merchants (Investments) Ltd v Royal Bank of Canada [1983] A.C. 168; Floating Dock v The Hong Kong and Shanghai Banking Corp [1986] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 65; Seaconsar Far East Ltd v Bank Markazi Jomhouri Islami Iran [1999] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 36. But for an unusual case where the beneficiary expressly contracted out of any right to direct payment to itself or to its order, and was left with a non-proprietary right to damages for any failure by the issuing bank to pay a specified third party, the third party being the sole creditor of the issuing bank under the letter of credit, see Taurus Petroleum Ltd v State Oil Company of the Ministry of Oil, Republic of Iraq [2015] EWCA Civ 835 at [54] and [55]-[64] (discussed further above, para.34-334). For earlier authorities where the claim was held to sound in damages measured by reference to the face value of the credit, see Belgian Grain and Produce Co Ltd v Cox & Co (France) Ltd (1919) 1 Lloyd's Rep. 256; Stein v Hambro's Bank of Northern Commerce (1921) 9 Lloyd's Rep. 433, 507; reversed on a different point (1922) 10 Lloyd's Rep. 529; Dexters Ltd v Schenker & Co (1923) 14 Lloyd's Rep. 586. For position on insolvency of issuing bank or confirming bank, see S. Connelly, "Bank recovery and resolution: the case of contingent letters of credit under bailin" (2016) 2 J.I.B.F.L. 78

1612. Standard Chartered Bank v Dorchester LNG (2) Ltd [2014] EWCA Civ 1382 at [51]-[52].

1613. Standard Chartered Bank v Dorchester LNG (2) Ltd [2014] EWCA Civ 1382 at [51]; Seaconsar Far East Ltd v Bank Markazi Jomhouri Islami Iran [1999] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 36, 38 (col.1).

1614. [1922] 1 K.B. 318, especially at 324. But establishing a causal link between breach of contract and loss remains essential, see Fortis Bank SA/NV v India Overseas Bank [2011] EWHC 538 (Comm), [2011] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 190 (where restitutionary claim also failed).

1615. [1979] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 231.

1616. His Lordship analysed in this context the principle of Miliangos v George Frank (Textiles) Ltd [1976] A.C. 443.

1617. [1979] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 231 at 234.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 34 - Bills of Exchange and Banking

Section 2. - Aspects of Banking Law

(i) - Bankers' Commercial Credits ¹⁴⁰⁶

(vi) - The Relationship of Issuing and Correspondent Bankers

Relationship of principals

34-524

The status of the correspondent banker will vary with the role adopted. If the correspondent banker, situated in the country of the seller, has been designated in the contract of sale as the banker with whom the credit should be opened, the buyer need not be deterred from making arrangements through his own local banker. The local banker will instruct the correspondent banker to open a credit in favour of the seller. The correspondent is in those circumstances the real issuing banker ¹⁶¹⁸ for he has not merely passed on or added his support to the credit of the issuing banker, but has instead issued a credit under which he has taken upon himself sole liability to the seller. In that case it is difficult to resist the implication that between the two bankers the relationship is not that of principal and agent but rather that of two independent principals.

Principal and agent

34-525

Where the correspondent does not assume sole liability but forwards to the seller with or without confirmation a letter of credit issued by the issuing banker, an agency relationship is more easily imputed. In such a case the correspondent banker acts as the agent of the issuing banker for the purpose of transmitting the credit of the issuing banker to the seller. At the same time, when the correspondent banker confirms the credit, he acts as principal, as he undertakes an obligation in his own name. The nature of the relationship between an issuing and confirming banker was of some significance in Bank Melli Iran v Barclays Bank DCO ¹⁶¹⁹ where inaction or silence of the issuing banker was held in the circumstances to provide sufficient evidence of ratification of those acts of the correspondent which were otherwise outside the scope of authority. ¹⁶²⁰ The submission that the relationship between the issuing and the correspondent banker was not that of principal and agent but of customer and banker, ¹⁶²¹ where the principle of ratification would be inapplicable, was there rejected as contrary to the understanding of the House of Lords in Equitable Trust Co of New York v Dawson Partners Ltd. ¹⁶²² It is to be emphasised, as the House of Lords indicated, that the principal is the issuing banker and that the buyer is not a party to the relationship, and that there is no privity of contract between the buyer and the correspondent banker. UCP 600 art.2, provides that a "confirming bank" means "the bank that adds its confirmation to a credit upon the issuing bank's authorisation or request". It was held by Hamblen J., in Fortis Bank SA/NV v Indian Overseas Bank, ¹⁶²³ that it amounts to a relevant authorisation for the purposes of UCP 600 where an issuing bank permits the advising bank to confirm a letter of credit at the beneficiary's request and expense.

Compliance with instructions

34-526

Just as the issuing banker must strictly comply with the instructions of the buyer so must the correspondent comply with those of the issuing banker. Any departure from the conditions laid down endangers his right to reimbursement and exposes him to an action for damages for breach of contract. ¹⁶²⁴ The instructions to the correspondent may be merely to forward the credit, ¹⁶²⁵ or more probably to pay or accept bills of exchange drawn on himself, ¹⁶²⁶ or to pay, accept or negotiate ¹⁶²⁷ bills drawn either on the issuing banker or on the buyer.

Effect of red signal

34-527

In some extraordinary cases a “red signal”, or a clear indication of fraud, ought to put the negotiating bank on enquiry. In Standard Bank London Ltd v Bank of Tokyo Ltd ¹⁶²⁸ one X asked the S Bank in London to finance certain transactions on the security of standby credits to be issued by the Kuala Lumpur office of BOT, a Japanese bank. Over a period of some 18 months, X delivered to the S Bank three letters of credit which, on their face, appeared to have been issued by BOT. In reality, all three documents were skilfully perpetrated forgeries. Any suspicions which the S Bank may have had were, however, allayed when it received in respect of each letter of credit a tested telex in which BOT confirmed the authenticity of the facility. But these tested telexes were also issued by the fraudsters, who got access to BOT’s terminal and code. When called upon to pay, BOT denied liability. Its main argument was that the circumstances of each transaction were such as to put the S Bank on enquiry. The S Bank’s failure to investigate, constituted a breach of a duty of care owed by it to BOT and, in consequence, the S Bank was not entitled to enforce the letters of credit. Waller J. gave judgment for the S Bank. Having cited the evidence of an expert witness, who described a “tested telex” as “the electronic signature of the bank sending the message”, his Lordship emphasised that it was unchallenged that banks all over the world relied with complete confidence on tested telexes. “The tested telex system” he added “is meant to avoid arguments in relation to authority”. Rejecting an argument to the effect that, in the instant case, the S Bank was put on enquiry, his Lordship said that:

“... the duty to inquire will depend on the circumstances of each and every case, and what should, or may, put someone on enquiry, will also depend on the circumstances of any individual case. Thus, the more usual the circumstances and the clearer a representation appears to be, the less the duty to inquire should be, and the less likely there will be circumstances which will put anyone on enquiry”.

^{1406.} See, in particular, Benjamin’s Sale of Goods, 9th edn (2014), Ch.23; R. King, Gutteridge and Megrah’s Law of Banker’s Commercial Credits, 8th edn (2001); R. Jack, A. Malek and D. Quest, Documentary Credits, 4th edn (2009); P. Ellinger and D. Neo, The Law and Practice of Documentary Letters of Credit (2010); D. Horowitz, Letters of Credit and Demand Guarantees: Defences to Payment (2010).

^{1618.} Skandinaviska Kreditaktiebolaget v Barclays Bank (1925) 22 Ll.L. Rep. 523; National Bank of Egypt v Hannevig’s Bank Ltd (1919) 1 Ll.L. Rep. 69.

^{1619.} [1951] 2 Lloyd’s Rep. 367, [1951] 2 T.L.R. 1057. But see also Credit Agricole Indosuez v Muslim Commercial Bank Ltd [2000] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 172, 180 CA.

^{1620.} Following Prince v Clark (1823) 1 B. & C. 186.

^{1621.} For which some support may have been gathered from the analogy drawn in Rayner & Co Ltd v Hambro’s Bank Ltd [1943] K.B. 37, 43.

^{1622.} (1926) 27 Ll.L. Rep. 49, 52, 53, 57.

1623. [2009] EWHC 2303 (Comm), [2010] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 227 at [59]-[60].

1624. But note that the issuer is liable where his instructions are ambiguous: Midland Bank Ltd v Seymour [1955] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 147. UCP 600 art.35, also provides a disclaimer on transmission and translation, but UCP 600 does not contain a provision equivalent to UCP 500 art.12 (incomplete or unclear instructions). See also Habib Bank Ltd v Central Bank of Sudan [2006] EWHC 1767 (Comm), [2006] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 412, on waiver of discrepancies by the issuing bank.

1625. Cape Asbestos Co Ltd v Lloyds Bank [1921] W.N. 274.

1626. Donald H Scott & Co Ltd v Barclays Bank Ltd [1923] 2 K.B. 1.

1627. As to the position of a negotiating banker generally, see UCP 600 arts 7(c), 8(c) and 12. See also Societe Generale SA v Saad Trading [2011] EWHC 2424 (Comm), [2011] 2 C.L.C. 629 (see above, n.1447). "Negotiation" is defined in UCP 600 art.2.

1628. [1995] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 169.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 34 - Bills of Exchange and Banking
Section 2. - Aspects of Banking Law
(i) - Bankers' Commercial Credits ¹⁴⁰⁶
(vii) - The Tender of Documents

Construction of terms of credit

34-528

⚠ The insistence upon strict compliance is continually reiterated. In English, Scottish and Australian Bank v Bank of South Africa, Bailhache J. remarked ¹⁶²⁹ ⚠:

“It is elementary to say that a person who ships in reliance on a letter of credit must do so in exact compliance with its terms. It is also elementary to say that a bank is not bound or indeed entitled to honour drafts presented to it under a letter of credit unless those drafts with the accompanying documents are in strict accord with the credit as opened.” ¹⁶³⁰

This duty prevails in all the contracts which occur in a documentary credit transaction, i.e. the contract between the buyer and the banker, the contract of banker and seller and in the relationship of issuing and correspondent banker. ¹⁶³¹ The UCP lays down detailed rules concerning the requirements of the compliance of the documents, and there are also many authorities concerning this problem. The courts will imply additional terms into a banker's irrevocable credit only in rare and exceptional circumstances. ¹⁶³² ⚠

Modern review

34-529

The doctrine of strict compliance has been fine tuned in Kredietbank Antwerp v Midland Bank Plc. ¹⁶³³ One of the documents called for in a letter of credit was a “draft survey report issued by Griffith Inspectorate”. The survey report tendered was executed on the letterhead of a firm describing itself as “Daniel C Griffith (Holland) BV” and signed for that company. However, a logo at the foot of the document stated “Inspectorate” and underneath it appeared the words: “Member of the Worldwide Inspectorate—dedicated to the elimination of risk”. Holding that the document was regular, Evans L.J., in the Court of Appeal, noted that banks were concerned with the form of documents presented to them and not with the underlying facts. Accepting that mere trivialities or misprints had to be ignored, ¹⁶³⁴ his Lordship observed:

“... the requirement of strict compliance is not equivalent to a test of exact literal compliance in all circumstances and as regards all documents. To some extent, therefore, the banker must exercise his own judgment whether the requirement is satisfied by the documents presented to him”. ¹⁶³⁵

In respect of the certificate under consideration, his Lordship concluded ¹⁶³⁶:

“the requirement of a Report ... issued by ‘Griffith Inspectorate’ is amply met by the documents issued by the Dutch company named which declares itself a member of the Inspectorate Group. If there is a literal requirement that the name ‘Griffith Inspectorate’ shall appear in the documents, then it does so, assuming only that there is a world-wide Inspectorate group and that the company bearing the name Daniel Griffith (Holland) is a member of it. That is an assumption which, as the [trial] judge held, an experienced banker can be expected to assume”.

Summary

34-530

Kredietbank Antwerp ¹⁶³⁷ defeats any attempt to rely on a discrepancy based on asserting a “mirror image” test as the yardstick of strict compliance. At the same time, the Court of Appeal did not seek to modify the strict compliance doctrine. This fundamental doctrine remains intact but is given a reasonable and not a literal, robotic, construction.

Technical defences

34-531

If a tender of documents does not strictly comply with the requirements of the commercial credit, the banker is entitled to reject it. It does not matter whether the discrepancy is significant or minute. This is the position even after the Court of Appeal’s decision in Kredietbank Antwerp, just discussed. The rule is that de minimis non curat lex does not apply in commercial credit transactions. ¹⁶³⁸ Moreover, the person to whom the documents are tendered is entitled to raise any lawful objections against the documents, even if in fact his objection is purely technical and the true motive for his rejection of the documents is to be found in a falling market. ¹⁶³⁹ English courts have held, consistently, that the fact that he does not, at the time of the rejection of the documents, raise all the defences available to him does not preclude him from setting up all of them at the trial. ¹⁶⁴⁰ However, the law in point must now take account of UCP 600 arts 16(c)(ii) and 16(f), which appear to establish a preclusion. ¹⁶⁴¹

UCP and technical defences

34-532

The latest revision of the UCP contains a number of provisions which are designed to ensure that tendered documents are not rejected for overly technical reasons. Three of these provisions merit special mention. First, UCP 600 art.14(d) provides that data in a document, when read in context with the credit, the document itself and international standard banking practice, need not be identical to, but must not conflict with, data in that document, any other stipulated document or the credit. Documents need not be mirror images of each other, but they must not be inconsistent. ¹⁶⁴² Secondly, UCP 600 art.14(f) provides that if a credit requires presentation of a document other than a transport document, insurance document or commercial invoice, without stipulating by whom the document is to be issued or its data content, banks will accept the document as presented if its content appears to fulfil the function of the required document and otherwise complies with sub-art.14(d). Sub-article 14(f) seems to take data content out of the equation when there is no stipulation as to what it should be. ¹⁶⁴³ For example, if the credit calls for an inspection certificate without more, the condition will be satisfied if an inspection certificate is presented even if it does not “pass” the goods. If the buyer wants tender of an inspection certificate which states that the goods have passed inspection, then he must specify this in his application to the issuing bank to open the credit and the credit must be issued in those terms. ¹⁶⁴⁴ Thirdly, UCP 600 art.14(h), provides that non-documentary conditions are to be ignored. A nondocumentary condition would be where the credit contains a reference to goods being of “US origin”. Under the UCP this condition would be ignored unless the credit also called for one of the tendered documents—most likely the certificate of origin—to indicate compliance with that condition.¹⁶⁴⁵

Regularity of documents

34-533

In order to constitute a valid tender a document must, in the first place, be effective and, secondly, must be of the type current in the trade in question, i.e. a document on which questions cannot be raised.¹⁶⁴⁶ The set must also be regular as a whole. If the documents are inconsistent with each other the set is defective.¹⁶⁴⁷ Article 14(c) of UCP 600 settles the vexed problem of stale documents, i.e. documents presented before the expiry of the credit but after an unduly long time from the day of issue. UCP 600 art.14(c) provides that a presentation including one or more original transport documents must be made by or on behalf of the beneficiary not later than 21 days after the date of shipment (but in any event not later than the expiry date of the credit).

The ISBP

34-534

! A novel source for the determination of the regularity of documents tendered under letters of credit is the International Standard Banking Practice for the Examination of Documents under UCP 600 (the ISBP), originally issued by the ICC in 2002.¹⁶⁴⁸ The current version of the ISBP was published in 2013.¹⁶⁴⁹ The detailed provisions of the ISBP spell out the requirements of the document usually called for in documentary credit transactions and fill in many voids and uncertainties left unanswered by the UCP. It remains to be seen how far these provisions will guide the courts in the determination of the regularity of documents tendered under letters of credit. David Steele J.’s decision in *Credit Industriel et Commercial v China Merchant Bank*¹⁶⁵⁰ indicates that, in general, the construction of banking practice by the ICC is given weight in legal disputes respecting the law of letters of credit. Once the ISBP become a regular tool of the banking world in general, the courts would, undoubtedly, be guided by them. Nevertheless, the ISBP merely represents one source of international standard banking practice: it is not the exclusive source. Expert evidence can still be relied upon by the parties to a dispute to establish a local or regional banking practice which may be at odds with that found in the ISBP.¹⁶⁵¹

Originals and copies

34-535

An important innovation resulting from the use of electronically produced documents was reflected in art.20(b) of the UCP 500, under which a document constitutes an original although it has been produced either by a reprographic, automated or computerised system or as a carbon copy provided it is marked as an original and, where necessary, appears to be signed. In Glencore International AG v Bank of China,¹⁶⁵² the Court of Appeal held that the two requisites were cumulative. Accordingly, where it was sought to give the status of an original to a document produced, or appearing to have been produced, by one of the methods specified in art.20(b), it had to be marked as an original. Its being signed by hand did not, in itself, convert it into an original. A very different conclusion was reached by the Court of Appeal in Kreditbank Antwerp v Midland Bank Plc,¹⁶⁵³ which suggests that, where the appearance of a document establishes that it is an original, a marking is superfluous. Both decisions were reviewed by Steel J. in Crédit Industriel et Commercial v China Merchants Bank,¹⁶⁵⁴ who held that it was appropriate to turn to the ICC’s Policy Statement, published on July 12, 1999, for guidance. In essence, the Policy Statement embodied the general principle upheld in the Kreditbank case, namely that art.20(b) did not apply to a document which appeared on its face to be an original. This is now the position under UCP 600 art.17, which addresses the issue as follows:

“a.

At least one original of each document stipulated in the credit must be presented.

b.

A bank shall treat as an original any document bearing an apparently original signature, mark, stamp or label of the issuer of the document, unless the document itself indicates that it is not an original.

c.

Unless a document indicates otherwise, a bank will also accept a document as an original if it:

i.

appears to be written, typed, perforated or stamped by the document issuer's hand; or

ii.

appears to be on the document issuer's original stationery; or

iii.

states that it is original, unless the statement appears not to apply to the document presented.”

Article 17 goes on to permit the presentation of either originals or copies if a credit requires presentation of copies of documents. ¹⁶⁵⁵ In addition, if a credit requires presentation of multiple documents by using terms such as “in duplicate”, “in two fold” or “in two copies”, this can be satisfied by the presentation of at least one original and the remaining number in copies, except when the document itself indicates otherwise. ¹⁶⁵⁶

Compliance with time

34-536

UCP 600 art.6(d)(i), provides that a credit must state an expiry date for presentation and that an expiry date stated for honour or negotiation will be deemed to be an expiry date for presentation. A presentation by or on behalf of the beneficiary must be made on or before the expiry date. ¹⁶⁵⁷ Article 6(d)(ii) provides that the place of the bank with which the credit is available is the place for presentation (and that the place for presentation under a credit available with any bank is that of any bank). A place for presentation other than that of the issuing bank is in addition to the place of the issuing bank. The expiry date of the credit or the last day for presentation of documents may be extended by the operation of UCP 600 art.29, which applies where a time limit would otherwise expire on a day on which the bank to which presentation is to be made is closed.

Compliance with amount

34-537

A draft in excess of the amount of the credit must be rejected by the banker as it does not comply with the terms of the credit. ¹⁶⁵⁸ But where the sum demanded does not in itself exceed the amount of the credit, the bank has the discretion to make payment notwithstanding that the attached invoice is for an excessive figure. ¹⁶⁵⁹

Quantity and weight

34-538

Article 30(b) of the UCP 600 permits, in the absence of stipulation to the contrary, a discrepancy of up to 5 per cent of the weight or quantity of the goods. The quantity must be stated in the documents either in the words of the commercial credit, or in such manner as to make it possible to calculate it. ¹⁶⁶⁰

The description of the goods

34-539

At one time it was thought that each document should contain a full and accurate description of the goods in the words of the commercial credit. ¹⁶⁶¹ More recent authorities show that it is, in fact, sufficient if all the documents, when read together, give a full description of the goods. ¹⁶⁶² A similar solution is adopted by art.18(c) of the UCP 600 according to which the description of the goods in the commercial invoice must correspond with the description in the credit. ¹⁶⁶³ In the remaining documents the goods may be described in general terms. ¹⁶⁶⁴

The bill of lading

34-540

The tender of a full set of bills of lading is required in most commercial credits opened for the finance of c.i.f. and f.o.b. contracts. ¹⁶⁶⁵ The bill of lading is, in fact, the banker's security for his advances to the seller. ¹⁶⁶⁶ In most respects a bill of lading tendered under a commercial credit must fulfil all the requirements of a bill of lading tendered under a c.i.f. contract. ¹⁶⁶⁷ The bill of lading must, of course, be of the type required in the commercial credit. A bill of lading dated after the last day specified for shipment is irregular. ¹⁶⁶⁸

UCP provisions

34-541

Several rules concerning the type of bill of lading to be tendered in the absence of stipulation to the contrary are provided for by the UCP. Article 27 of UCP 600 defines a clean transport document as one which bears no superimposed clause or notation ¹⁶⁶⁹ which expressly declares a defective condition of the goods or packing. The word "clean" need not appear on the transport document, even if the credit has a requirement for that transport document to be "clean on board". ¹⁶⁷⁰ Articles 14(l) and 20 of UCP 600 entitle the banker to reject bills of lading issued by a forwarding agent who does not claim to be the carrier's agent, bills issued under and subject to the condition of a charterparty and bills of lading covering shipment by sailing vessels. ¹⁶⁷¹ Article 20 of UCP 600 provides that bills of lading must show that the goods have been shipped on board a named vessel. ¹⁶⁷² Compliance with this requirement may be evidenced either by a bill of lading bearing words indicating loading or shipment on board a named vessel or by a notation on the bill to that effect. ¹⁶⁷³ Article 20(c) of UCP

600 permits the tender of a bill of lading which includes a clause authorising transshipment. ¹⁶⁷⁴ Under art.26(a) of UCP 600 a bill of lading which shows stowage on deck constitutes a bad tender. But a bill of lading that does not show that stowage on deck has taken place, may not be rejected merely because it includes a clause permitting such stowage.

Other transport documents involving carriage of goods by sea

34-542

Article 21 of UCP 600 makes specific provisions respecting non-negotiable sea waybills. In most regards, the provisions applicable to such documents are similar to those governing marine bills of lading, except that the waybill need not be a negotiable document of title. Article 22 of UCP 600 governs charterparty bills of lading. Such a document may, of course, include a reference to its being subject to a charterparty. However, under art.22(b), "a bank will not examine such charter party contracts, even if they are required to be presented by the terms of the credit".

Multimodal or combined transport documents

34-543

Multimodal or combined transport documents are covered in art.19 of UCP 600. Such a document must indicate the name of the carrier and has to be signed by the carrier, or his agent or by the master or an agent acting on his behalf. Another requirement is that the document indicate that the goods have been "dispatched, taken in charge or shipped on board at the place stated in the credit" (UCP 600 art.19(a)(ii)). The document must, further, indicate "the place of dispatch, taking in charge or shipment, and the place of final destination stated in the credit" (UCP 600 art.19(a)(iii)).

Other transport documents

34-544

UCP 600 includes detailed provisions concerning transport documents used where carriage is by air or over land. Article 23 covers air transport documents, applying to them, basically, the main provisions applicable to bills of lading. Thus, the document has to indicate the name of the air carrier and be signed by the carrier or his agent and must show that the goods have been accepted for carriage (art.23(a)(i)(ii)). It must, further, indicate the airports of departure and of destination (art.23(a)(iv)). The principles respecting documents covering carriage by road, rail or inland waterways are regulated on similar lines in art.24. The provisions respecting courier and postal receipts are set out in art.25.

Insurance documents

34-545

UCP 500 art.34 deals with "insurance documents" without further elaboration as to what the term covers. It certainly includes an insurance policy, ¹⁶⁷⁵ and art.34(d) goes on to make it clear that certificates of insurance will be accepted by banks unless the credit expressly stipulates otherwise. Cover notes issued by brokers will only be accepted if specifically authorised in the credit. ¹⁶⁷⁶ UCP 600 art.28, makes it clear that that an insurance document includes an insurance policy, an insurance certificate or a declaration under an open cover, so long as these documents appear to be issued and signed by an insurance company, an underwriter or their agents or their proxies. But art.28(c) provides that cover notes will not be accepted. An insurance document may contain reference to any exclusion clause. ¹⁶⁷⁷

Invoices and certificates

34-546

UCP 600 art.18(a) states that a commercial invoice (i) must appear to have been issued by the beneficiary,¹⁶⁷⁸ (ii) must be made out in the name of the applicant,¹⁶⁷⁹ (iii) must be made out in the same currency as the credit, but (iv) need not be signed. Where the amount in which the invoice is made out exceeds the amount of the credit, the bank to which the invoice has been presented can accept it provided that the amount due for settlement does not exceed the value of the credit.¹⁶⁸⁰ UCP 600 art.18(c) provides that the description of the goods in the commercial invoice should correspond with that in the credit. Otherwise the data in the invoice need not be identical to, but must not conflict with, data in that or other documents, including the credit.¹⁶⁸¹ In addition to the usual shipping documents, letters of credit not infrequently insist upon the tender of consular certificates or certificates of origin or of weight.¹⁶⁸² Unless the credit stipulates by whom the certificate must be issued or the required data content, banks will accept the certificate as presented provided only that it appears to fulfil the function of the required certificate and that there is no conflict of data as prohibited by art.14(d).¹⁶⁸³

^{1406.} See, in particular, Benjamin's Sale of Goods, 9th edn (2014), Ch.23; R. King, Gutteridge and Megrah's Law of Banker's Commercial Credits, 8th edn (2001); R. Jack, A. Malek and D. Quest, Documentary Credits, 4th edn (2009); P. Ellinger and D. Neo, The Law and Practice of Documentary Letters of Credit (2010); D. Horowitz, Letters of Credit and Demand Guarantees: Defences to Payment (2010).

^{1629.}  (1922) 13 L.L. Rep. 21, 24. But note that when the terms of the credit are construed, it is important to read it as a whole: Elder Dempster Lines Ltd v Ionic Shipping Agency Inc [1968] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 529, 535-536; see also Kreditbank Antwerp v Midland Bank Plc [1998] Lloyd's Rep. Bank. 173; affirmed [1999] Lloyd's Rep. Bank 219, where the trial judge said that where a credit was ambiguous any doubts should be resolved so as to give the transaction efficacy; but his words are not supported by the Court of Appeal. Whether the strict compliance rule applies to performance bonds and demand guarantees has been the subject of some uncertainty: but see IE Contractors Ltd v Lloyds Bank Plc [1990] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 496 at 500-501, per Staughton L.J. ("[i]t is a question of construction of the bond"), applied in Sea-Cargo Skips AS v State Bank of India [2013] EWHC 177 (Comm), [2013] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 477 at [30], Lukoil Mid-East Ltd v Barclays Bank Plc [2016] EWHC 166 (TCC) at [17]; South Lanarkshire Council v Coface SA [2016] CSIH 15 at [12]; MUR Joint Ventures BV v Compagnie Monegasque de Banque [2016] EWHC 3107 (Comm) at [26]-[28].

^{1630.} For a specific application of this maxim, see Kydon Compania Naviera SA v National Westminster Bank Ltd (The Lena) [1981] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 68, 74-75, where it was held that a tender of documents was bad because, inter alia, the bill of exchange was drawn on the issuing bank instead of on the applicant of the credit, who was designated as its drawee in the letter of credit. And see Seaconsar Far East Ltd v Bank Mardazi Jamhuri Islami Iran [1994] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 1 HL.

^{1631.} Contrast Dolan (1988) 105 Banking L.J. (U.S.) 380, who suggests that a less stringent standard is applicable in the relationship of issuing banker and buyer. See also Dolan, "A Principled Exception to the Strict Compliance Rule in Trilateral Letter of Credit Transactions" (2003) 18 B.F.L.R. 245.

^{1632.}  Cauxell Ltd v Lloyd's Bank Unreported, The Times, December 26, 1995; Uzinterimpex JSC v Standard Bank Plc [2007] EWHC 1151 (Comm), [2007] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 187 at [157]-[158]; South Lanarkshire Council v Aviva Insurance Ltd [2016] CSOH 83 at [29], which cases, although dealing with performance bonds, ought to apply also to letters of credit. See also above, para.34-452.

^{1633.} [1998] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 173; affirmed [1999] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 801.

- 1634. The courts are willing to overlook a trivial defect in a tendered document where there is an obvious typographical error: see, e.g. Bankers Trust Co v State Bank of India [1991] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 443, where one of the tendered documents gave the buyer's telex number as 931310 instead of 981310. But where it is not obvious that the error is merely typographical, the bank is entitled to reject the tendered document as discrepant: see, e.g. Bulgrains & Co Ltd v Shinhan Bank [2013] EWHC 2498 (QB), where the claimant beneficiary was identified in the credit as "Bulgrains Co Ltd" but in the tendered commercial invoice as "Bulgrains & Co Ltd", and it was held (at [24]) "that there was a discrepancy as to name that was not clearly and demonstrably simply a typographical error and was material" (approving United Bank Ltd v Banque Nationale de Paris [1992] 2 S.L.R. 64, 73-74, Tin J.: "the name of the beneficiary is a very significant matter"): the judge added that even if there was no facility to insert an ampersand when (as here) using the SWIFT messaging system to transmit a credit to the beneficiary, the word "and" could and should have been used because it was properly part of the beneficiary's name (and see Benjamin's Sale of Goods, 9th edn (2014), para.23-107, questioning whether the issuing bank should have been prevented from raising the discrepancy because it was caused by an error in the terms of the credit attributable to the bank itself). See also Beyene v Irving Trust Co Ltd (1985) 762 Fed. Rep. 2d 4 (US Second Circuit CA); cf. Hing Yip Hing Fat Co Ltd v Daiwa Bank Ltd [1991] 2 H.K.L.R. 35 (Hong Kong SC). It must also be remembered that the wording of the credit remains of paramount importance. Even an apparently trivial discrepancy will justify rejection of the documents if the credit is specific as to that requirement: see, e.g. Seaconsar Far East Ltd v Bank Markazi Jomhouri Islami Iran [1993] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 236 CA (reversed on other grounds: [1994] 1 A.C. 438), where tendered documents did not bear the letter of credit number or buyer's name as required under the express terms of the credit.
- 1635. [1999] 1 All E.R. (Comm) at 806.
- 1636. [1999] 1 All E.R. (Comm) at 816.
- 1637. [1998] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 173; affirmed [1999] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 801.
- 1638. Moralice (London) Ltd v ED & F Man [1954] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 526; Soproma SpA v Marine and Animal By-Products Corp [1966] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 367, 390; Astro Exito Navegacion SA v Chase Manhattan Bank NA (The Messiniaki Tolmi) [1986] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 455. But see Bunge Corp v Vegetable Vitamin Foods (Pte) Ltd [1985] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 613 (held de minimis rule did apply to underlying contract between applicant and beneficiary).
- 1639. Guaranty Trust Co of New York v Van Den Berghs (1925) 22 Ll.L. Rep. 58, 112; affirmed 287, 477, 455. But see Mannesman Handel AG v Kaunlaran Shipping Corp [1993] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 89, in which Saville J., in a case governed by Swiss law, invoked a doctrine of good faith in the performance of contractual duties, to defeat an unconscionable reliance on a meaningless discrepancy.
- 1640. Skandinaviska Kreditaktiebolaget v Barclays Bank (1925) 22 Ll.L. Rep. 523, 525; Westminster Bank v Banca Nazionale Di Credito (1928) 33 Ll.L. Rep. 306, 311; Kydon Compania Naviera SA v National Westminster Bank Ltd (The Lena) [1981] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 68, 78-80, which suggested that the position had not been changed by art.8 of the 1974 Revision of the UCP But it is probably too late to raise a new defence at the stage of an appeal: Gian Singh & Co Ltd v Banque de L'Indochine [1974] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 1, 12.
- 1641. See above, paras 34-456 and 34-517. But see also Benjamin's Sale of Goods, 9th edn (2014), para.23-202 (as to the position of non-confirming nominated banks).
- 1642. L.S. Sealy and R.J.A. Hooley, Commercial Law: Text, Cases and Materials, 4th edn (2008), p.862.
- 1643. L.S. Sealy and R.J.A. Hooley, Commercial Law: Text, Cases and Materials, 4th edn (2008), p.862.
- 1644. P. Downes, "UCP 600: not so strict compliance" [2007] B.J.I.F.L. 196, 197-198.

- 1645. English courts have in the past construed non-documentary conditions in letters of credit as calling for production of a reasonable document evidencing its satisfaction: Banque de l'Indochine et de Suez SA v JH Rayner (Mincing Lane) Ltd [1983] Q.B. 711; Floating Dock Ltd v Hong Kong and Shanghai Banking Corp [1986] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 65; Astro Exito Navegacion SA v Chase Manhattan Bank NA (The Messiniaki Tolmi) [1986] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 455. Where the credit incorporates UCP 600, it is unclear whether an English court will continue to follow this approach on the ground that the terms of the credit should prevail as they reflect the intention of the parties. There is no direct authority on the point but Credit Agricole Indosuez v Generale Bank (No.2) [2000] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 123 suggests that the old approach will continue to be followed. See also Kumagai-Zenecon Construction Co Ltd v Arab Bank Ltd [1997] 3 S.L.R. 770; Korea Exchange Bank v Standard Chartered Bank [2006] 1 S.L.R. 565. See generally, E. Adodo, "Non-documentary Requirements in Letters of Credit Transactions: What is the Bank's Obligation Today?" [2008] J.B.L. 103.
- 1646. Skandinaviska Kreditaktiebolaget v Barclays Bank, above, at 525. See also Karberg & Co v Blythe, Green, Jourdain & Co [1916] 1 K.B. 495.
- 1647. Banque de l'Indochine et de Suez SA v J H Rayner (Mincing Lane) Ltd [1983] Q.B. 711.
- 1648. ICC Publication No.645.
- 1649. ICC Publication No.745. An earlier version was published in 2007 to accompany the issue of UCP 600 (ICC Publication No.681).
- 1650. [2002] EWHC 973 (Comm), [2002] 2 All E.R. (Comm) 427.
- 1651. See Ellinger [2007] L.M.C.L.Q. 152, 159.
- 1652. [1996] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 135.
- 1653. [1998] Lloyd's Rep. Bank. 173; affirmed [1999] Lloyd's Rep. Bank. 219.
- 1654. [2002] EWHC 973 (Comm), [2002] 2 All E.R. (Comm) 427.
- 1655. UCP 600 art.17(d).
- 1656. UCP 600 art.17(e).
- 1657. UCP 600 art.6(e).
- 1658. But note that a tolerance of 5 per cent less in the amount of the drawing is often permissible: art.30(c) of UCP 600. See also art.30(a) of UCP 600 construing "about" and "approximately". The tolerance provided for in subart.30(c) does not apply when the credit specifies a specific tolerance or uses the expressions referred to in subart.30(a).
- 1659. UCP 600 art.18(b). UCP 600 art.18(a)(iii) states that the invoice must be made out in the same currency as the credit.
- 1660. London and Foreign Trading Corp v British and North European Bank (1921) 9 Ll.L. Rep. 116. As regards the meaning of "about" or "approximately" see art.30(a) of UCP 600. And see Kydon Compania Naviera SA v National Westminster Bank Ltd (The Lena) [1981] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 68, 76, showing that this provision applies only to weight and quantity strictu sensu.
- 1661. See, e.g. London and Foreign Trading Corp v British and North European Bank, above; cf. Rayner & Co Ltd v Hambro's Bank Ltd [1943] K.B. 37.
- 1662. Midland Bank Ltd v Seymour [1955] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 147; Soproma SpA v Marine and Animal By-Products Corp [1966] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 367; cf. Bank Melli Iran v Barclays Bank DCO [1951] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 367.

- 1663. A discrepancy as to description of the goods in the invoice cannot be cured by the fact that a compliant description is given in another tendered document: Bulgrains & Co Ltd v Shinhan Bank [2013] EWHC 2498 (QB) at [25]. But even in the invoice the correspondence need not be literally identical: Glencore International AG v Bank of China [1996] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 135. And see Kreditbank Antwerp v Midland Bank Plc, above.
- 1664. And see Kydon Compania Naviera SA v National Westminster Bank Ltd (The "Lena") [1981] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 68, 75-77; and note that in Glencore International AG v Bank of China, above, it was held that a packing list need not include a detailed description of the goods.
- 1665. In such cases two bills out of a set of three are a bad tender: Donald H Scott & Co Ltd v Barclays Bank Ltd [1923] 2 K.B. 1. See now art.19(a)(iv) and ISBP para.70.
- 1666. As regards the title conferred by the possession of the bill of lading on the consignee where there was no intention that title should pass to him, see "The Future Express" [1994] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 542 CA.
- 1667. As to delivery of a mate's receipt and a mercantile usage establishing its negotiability in the trade between Sarawak and Singapore, see Kum v Wah Tat Bank Ltd [1971] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 439. And note that the transport documents must be dated, a requirement which remains intact notwithstanding the words "to be accepted as presented": Credit Agricole Indosuez v Credit Suisse First Boston [2001] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 1088.
- 1668. Credit Agricole Indosuez v Generale Bank [2000] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 123.
- 1669. A notation on a received for shipment bill of lading, certifying shipment on board is not a notation rendering the instrument unclean: Westpac Banking Corp v South Carolina National Bank [1986] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 311.
- 1670. UCP 600 art.27. Note that under art.26(b) of UCP 600 a bill of lading is not rendered unclean by reason of clauses such as "shipper's load and count" or "said by shipper to contain".
- 1671. The tender of a combined transport bill of lading is, however, good.
- 1672. But a received for shipment bill of lading is a good tender if the letter of credit does not provide for a bill of lading but a multimodal or combined transport document: art.19(a)(ii) of UCP 600.
- 1673. UCP 600 art.20(a)(ii). cf. Diamond Alkali Export Corp v Bourgeois [1921] 3 K.B. 443, concerning the position at common law.
- 1674. UCP 600 art.20(d), states that clauses in a bill of lading stating that the carrier reserves the right to tranship will be disregarded.
- 1675. Diamond Alkali Export Corp v Bourgeois [1921] 3 K.B. 443; Donald H Scott & Co Ltd v Barclays Bank Ltd [1923] 2 K.B. 1.
- 1676. UCP 500 art.34(c).
- 1677. UCP 600 art.28(i).
- 1678. Except as provided for in UCP 600 art.38 (transferable credits).
- 1679. Except as provided in subart.38(g).
- 1680. UCP 600 art.18(b).
- 1681. UCP, 600 art.14(d).
- 1682. UCP 600 art.14(h), provides that non-documentary conditions are to be ignored. As regards the nature of a certificate of inspection, see Commercial Banking Co of Sydney v Jalsard Pty Ltd

[1973] A.C. 279; note that the bank is not liable for the genuineness of a certificate: Gian Singh & Co Ltd v Bank de L'Indochine [1974] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 56; affirmed [1974] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 1. As regards the conformity of a certificate, see Astro Exito Navegacion SA v Chase Manhattan Bank NA [1986] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 455. As regards false certificates presented without the tenderor's knowledge of fraud, see Montrod Ltd v Grundkotter Fleischvertriebs GmbH [2001] All E.R. (Comm) 368; affirmed [2001] EWCA Civ 1954, [2002] 1 W.L.R. 1975.

1683. UCP 600 art.14(f). On certificates generally, see Benjamin's Sale of Goods, 8th edn (2010), paras 23–163 et seq.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 34 - Bills of Exchange and Banking

Section 2. - Aspects of Banking Law

(i) - Bankers' Commercial Credits ¹⁴⁰⁶

(viii) - The Nature and Effect of the Trust Receipt

Nature of trust receipt

34-547

If the buyer is able to reimburse the issuing banker on the arrival of the goods at their destination then the shipping documents are surrendered absolutely by the issuing banker to the buyer who is thus enabled to collect the goods from the ship and deal with them thereafter in the ordinary course of business. Frequently, however, the buyer looks to his dealings with the goods to provide him with the means of reimbursement and is anxious therefore to obtain the shipping documents before discharging his debt. A banker, willing to extend the credit facilities beyond the period of shipment, obtains such protection as he can by requiring the buyer, in return for the shipping documents, to execute a trust receipt, variously described as a letter of trust or of lien. This is sometimes little more than an acknowledgment that the shipping documents and thence the goods and ultimately their proceeds will be held by the buyer on behalf of the banker; it usually, however, sets out various conditions as to insurance and storage of the goods pending disposal and in particular is likely to contain an undertaking to isolate the transaction in order to assist the earmarking of the proceeds of sub-sale. The buyer does not upon executing the receipt become a strict trustee, but he does thereby entitle the banker in the event of the buyer's insolvency to recover the goods or their proceeds in preference to ordinary creditors. ¹⁶⁸⁴

Registration

34-548

The trust receipt steers a delicate course among the dangers of non-registration as either a bill of sale or a mortgage or charge under s.8 of the Bills of Sale Act 1882 or ss.859A–Q of the Companies Act 2006. ¹⁶⁸⁵ Particular phraseology that has found favour with the courts was that before Astbury J. in Re David Allester Ltd ¹⁶⁸⁶ where the trust receipt there considered had not been registered but was held to be nonetheless effective. It was emphasised that the rights of the banker over the goods had arisen originally under the pledge effected by the initial transfer to the banker of the bill of lading and the trust receipt was construed as but an authority stating the terms on which the pledgor was to realise the goods on the banker's behalf. The decision does much to safeguard a banker parting with a bill of lading initially received by way of security. Exceptionally, where some other document such as a delivery order is, instead of a bill of lading, initially received by the banker there is no pledge of the goods in the absence of attornment ¹⁶⁸⁷ and the reasoning of Astbury J. is not then applicable. In those limited circumstances a trust receipt, contrary to the general rule, may perhaps wither without registration, but a banker is unlikely to extend credit facilities in the first place unless offered either the bill of lading, and accordingly the status of pledgee of the goods, or sufficient collateral security.

Effect of the trust receipt

34-549

Whilst the trust receipt gives the banker priority over the ordinary creditors of the insolvent buyer, it does constitute the buyer a mercantile agent and thus enables him to pass a valid title under s.2(1) of the Factors Act 1889. In *Lloyds Bank v Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association*¹⁶⁸⁸ the plaintiffs had received from Strauss & Co Ltd bills of lading as securities for advances. Subsequently, upon Strauss & Co Ltd undertaking to sell the goods and hold the proceeds on trust, the bills of lading were released, but Strauss & Co Ltd then fraudulently pledged them with the defendants who took them in good faith and without notice of the plaintiffs' rights. Both Porter J. and the Court of Appeal rejected the plaintiffs' claim to recover the documents. Greene M.R. expressed the view of the court that Strauss & Co Ltd, for the purpose of the Factors Act, had been not only mercantile agents but, together with the plaintiffs, the owners of the goods, and that there was no invalidity in their disposition to the defendants merely because of their dual capacity. The rights of the banker accordingly do not prevail in such circumstances against those of the bona fide third party purchaser for value.

^{1406.} See, in particular, Benjamin's Sale of Goods, 9th edn (2014), Ch.23; R. King, Gutteridge and Megrah's Law of Banker's Commercial Credits, 8th edn (2001); R. Jack, A. Malek and D. Quest, Documentary Credits, 4th edn (2009); P. Ellinger and D. Neo, The Law and Practice of Documentary Letters of Credit (2010); D. Horowitz, Letters of Credit and Demand Guarantees: Defences to Payment (2010).

^{1684.} North Western Bank v Poynter [1895] A.C. 56. See generally, E.P. Ellinger, "Trust Receipt Financing" [2003] J.I.B.L.R. 305.

^{1685.} As from April 6, 2013, see Companies Act 2006 Pt 25 Ch.A1, inserted by the Companies Act 2006 (Amendment of Pt 25) Regulations 2013 (SI 2013/600).

^{1686.} [1922] 2 Ch. 211.

^{1687.} Dublin City Distillery Ltd v Doherty [1914] A.C. 823. See also Lord Wright's analysis of the common law of pledge in Madras Official Assignee v Mercantile Bank of India Ltd [1935] A.C. 53. In that case, railway receipts had been surrendered but the decision itself is not of wide application for their efficacy depended upon a local statute.

^{1688.} [1938] 2 K.B. 147.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 34 - Bills of Exchange and Banking
Section 2. - Aspects of Banking Law
(j) - The Banker's Lien

Extent of lien

34-550

By mercantile custom the banker has a general lien over all forms of commercial paper deposited by or on behalf of a customer in the ordinary course of banking business. The custom does not extend to valuables lodged for the purpose of safe custody and may in any event be displaced by either an express contract or circumstances which show an implied agreement inconsistent with the lien. ¹⁶⁸⁹ Thus in Re Bowes, ¹⁶⁹⁰ where a policy of life assurance was deposited with a memorandum which expressed the deposit as security for all sums due up to a limit of £4,000, North J. held that a lien would not be implied so as to extend the effect. The lien is applicable of the security beyond the agreed overdraft. The most frequent example of circumstances inconsistent with the general lien is in the case of a deposit expressed to cover an advance for a specified purpose. ¹⁶⁹¹ However, once the original purpose has been fulfilled by repayment of the specified advance, if a customer knowingly permits the banker to retain the security, a general lien may ultimately be implied and its protection then claimed in respect of other advances. ¹⁶⁹²

34-551

The lien is applicable to negotiable instruments which are remitted to the banker from the customer for the purpose of collection. When collection has been made the proceeds may be used by the banker in reduction of the customer's debit balance unless otherwise earmarked. ¹⁶⁹³ It seems that where bonds are deposited and it is understood that the banker should cut off the coupons and collect the interest, then both bonds and coupons are subject to the lien. ¹⁶⁹⁴ Prima facie neither would be so subject if the customer were to cut the coupons, for the arrangement would imply that the deposit related merely to safe custody. A similar implication would perhaps also exist with regard to share certificates where they are kept at a bank and the dividends are forwarded by the company to the banker on the instruction of the customer and are not dependent upon coupon cutting.

Third party interests

34-552

A banker may not claim the protection of the lien in respect of advances made after notice that the security belongs to or is subject to some interest of a stranger. ¹⁶⁹⁵ Cozens-Hardy M.R. had made the wider suggestion that the lien prevails over the property of the customer only, ¹⁶⁹⁶ but, at least with regard to negotiable instruments, this may be doubted. ¹⁶⁹⁷

Power of sale

34-553

Unlike other common law liens, that of the banker is not merely possessory in nature but is thought to carry with it a power of sale. Such a power over negotiable instruments is fortified by statute, for the banker is deemed to be a holder for value to the extent of the sum for which the lien exists. 1698

1689. Brandao v Barnett (1846) 12 Cl. & F. 787.

1690. (1886) 33 Ch. D. 586.

1691. Wilkinson v London and County Banking Co (1884) 1 T.L.R. 63.

1692. Re London and Globe Finance Corp [1902] 2 Ch. 416.

1693. Re Keever [1967] Ch. 182. Note that the banker's right to combine the customer's accounts—discussed above, para.34-320—is distinguishable from the banker's lien. As the banker "owns" the money standing to the credit of the customer's account, he can have no lien over it: National Westminster Bank Ltd v Halesowen Presswork and Assemblies Ltd [1972] A.C. 785; Re Charge Card Services Ltd [1989] Ch. 497. Nevertheless, the credit balance on an account can be charged to the bank: Re BCCI SA (No.8) [1998] A.C. 214.

1694. Paget's Law of Banking, 14th edn (2014), para.14.10 et seq.

1695. Jeffryes v Agra and Masterman's Bank (1866) L.R. 2 Eq. 674; Siebe Gorman & Co Ltd v Barclays Bank Ltd [1979] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 142.

1696. Cuthbert v Robarts, Lubbock & Co [1909] 2 Ch. 226, 233.

1697. Brandao v Barnett (1846) 12 Cl. & F. 787, 805–806.

1698. Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s.27(3). See also Cheques Act 1957 s.2. But the banker cannot be the holder of a crossed cheque marked "account payee" or "account payee only" which is paid in for collection: see above, para.34-377.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 35 - Carriage by Air

Section 1. - Introduction ¹

Provisions governing carriage by air

35-001

The rules of the common law have minimal importance in the law of carriage by air, virtually all of which is governed by international conventions, or their provisions as applied to other instances of carriage. The common law rules apply only to carriage which is gratuitous and which is performed neither by an air transport undertaking nor by the Crown. In the rare cases in which the carrier's liability is to be determined by the common law rules as to negligence, the maxim of res ipsa loquitur is available to assist the claimant. ² There are now four major conventions which have effect in English law: (a) the original Warsaw Convention 1929 (and that convention as amended by Montreal Additional Protocol No.1 of 1975 which substituted Special Drawing Rights (SDRs) for gold francs in the provisions dealing with liability limits); (b) the Warsaw Convention 1929 as amended by the Hague Protocol 1955, commonly known as "Warsaw-Hague" (and that convention as amended by Montreal Additional Protocol No.2 of 1975 which similarly substituted SDRs for gold francs); (c) Warsaw-Hague as further amended by Montreal Protocol No.4 of 1975, "the MP4 Convention"; and (d) the Montreal Convention 1999. European Union legislation has also been enacted which in some respects seeks to override the international legal regime in its application to Union air carriers. ³

¹ See Shawcross and Beaumont, Air Law, Vol.1, Div.VII; Drion, Limitation of Liabilities in International Air Law (1954); Miller, Liability in International Air Transport (1977); Mankiewicz, The Liability Régime of the International Air Carrier (1981); Magdalénat, Air Cargo (1983).

² George v Eagle Air Services Ltd [2009] UKPC 21, [2009] 1 W.L.R. 2133.

³ See below, paras 35-018 et seq. For the relationship between EU law and international conventions, see Air Transport Association of America v Secretary of State for Energy and Climate Change (C-366/10) (ECJ, December 21, 2011) and a series of cases concerning European Parliament and Council Regulation 261/2004 (as to which see para.35-071): R. (on the application of International Air Transport Association and European Low Fares Airline Association) v Department for Transport (C-344/04) [2006] E.C.R. I-403; Nelson v Deutsche Lufthansa GmbH (Joined Cases C-581/10 and C-629/10) and R. (on the application of TUI Travel) v Civil Aviation Authority [2013] 1 C.M.L.R. 1191; and Moré v Koninklijke Luchtv tschappij NV (C-139/11) [2013] 1 C.M.L.R. 4.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 35 - Carriage by Air
Section 2. - The International Conventions

The Warsaw Convention 1929

35-002

The Warsaw Convention of 1929 was drafted in order to remove inconsistencies between the national laws of the different countries⁴ and to strike a fairer balance than might otherwise have been the case between carriers and passengers and owners of cargo in respect of their mutual rights and liabilities. The Convention sought to provide a set of uniform rules as to the carrier's liability and to settle jurisdictional questions and ensure a uniform limitation period. Under the Convention, the carrier was enabled to limit his liability. In return the passenger or owner of cargo did not have to prove negligence on the part of the carrier. Fault on the part of the carrier was presumed on proof of damage.⁵ The Warsaw Convention was first given effect in the United Kingdom by the Carriage by Air Act 1932. The unamended Warsaw Convention continues to have effect as Sch.2 to the Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004.⁶ Schedule 3 to the same Order gives effect to Montreal Additional Protocol No.1 of 1975. The two Schedules differ only in respect of the currency units by reference to which liability limits are prescribed. The Warsaw Convention 1929 does not form part of the European Union legal order; but the Montreal Convention does.⁷

The Hague Protocol 1955

35-003

The Warsaw Convention 1929 was amended by the Hague Protocol 1955, which attracted the support of most but not all of the parties to the original convention. The principal amendments effected by the Hague Protocol to the Warsaw Convention were as follows. First, the mandatory contents of the passenger ticket, baggage check and air waybill were much reduced, and the effect of failure to comply with them was rendered much less severe for the carrier.⁸ Secondly, the maximum financial limit of liability for the death of or bodily injury to a passenger was doubled.⁹ Thirdly, the troublesome phrase "wilful misconduct" which appeared in the English text of the Warsaw Convention was redefined as "intentional or reckless misconduct".¹⁰ Fourthly, the carrier's employees and agents, as well as the carrier himself, could avail themselves of the limits of liability imposed by the Convention, provided that they were acting within the scope of their employment.¹¹ The Warsaw Convention as amended by The Hague Protocol of 1955 was given effect in the United Kingdom by the Carriage by Air Act 1961. The text of the Convention as set out in Sch.1 to the 1961 Act was amended by the Carriage by Air and Road Act 1979 so as to incorporate the amendments made by Montreal Additional Protocol No.2 of 1975.¹²

The Guadalajara Convention 1961

35-004

A Convention supplementary to the Warsaw Convention was signed at Guadalajara in 1961: it deals with the situation where the "contracting carrier" sub-contracts all or part of the contract of carriage to an "actual carrier".¹³ This Convention was given statutory force by the Carriage by Air (Supplementary Provisions) Act 1962, which came into force on May 1, 1964.¹⁴ The provisions of the amended Warsaw Convention are set out in the First Schedule to the Carriage by Air Act 1961, and the provisions of the Guadalajara Convention are set out in the Schedule to the Carriage by Air (Supplementary Provisions) Act 1962. ¹⁵ Both these Schedules are in two Parts, comprising an English and a French text; and under the Acts, the French text prevails if there is any inconsistency between them. ¹⁶

The “MP4 Convention”

35-005

The Guatemala City Conference 1971 modernised those provisions of the Warsaw Convention as amended at The Hague which governed the carriage of passengers and baggage, producing a Protocol which has never come into effect. The Montreal Conference 1975 carried out a similar task in respect of cargo, and the resulting Montreal Protocol No.4 contains the results of both exercises. The Protocol adopts the principle of the absolute liability of the carrier, subject only to contributory negligence. The defence available under art.20(1) of the Convention, that the carrier, his servants and agents have taken all necessary measures to avoid the damage, is removed in cases concerning cargo, except where liability is based on delay. The possibility existing under the earlier instruments of recovery beyond the prescribed maxima where the documentation was defective or on proof of intentional or reckless misconduct is removed in cases concerning cargo. There are changes in the rules governing cargo documentation, notably the possibility of using, instead of an air waybill, other means which would preserve a record of the carriage to be performed. The Protocol was given effect in English law by the Carriage by Air Acts (Implementation of Protocol No.4 of Montreal, 1975) Order 1999, ¹⁷ which added a new Sch.1A to the Carriage by Air Act 1961.

The Montreal Convention 1999

35-006

The Montreal Convention overhauls the whole “Warsaw system” covering the full range of issues dealt with in the earlier instruments, including liability for passengers, baggage, cargo and delay, and incorporates the effect of the Guadalajara Convention. ¹⁸ It clarifies the exclusivity of the Convention rules and provides that punitive, exemplary or other noncompensatory damages are not to be recoverable. ¹⁹ By April 2015 it had 111 States Parties and so is the Convention most often applicable to international carriage by air. In its provisions as to jurisdiction, the Convention adds a “fifth jurisdiction” for passenger claims. It makes new and more modern provision as to passenger documentation. For damages not exceeding a prescribed amount for each passenger, the carrier is not able to exclude or limit its liability. The carrier is not liable for such damages to the extent that they exceed the prescribed amount if the carrier proves that (a) such damage was not due to the negligence or other wrongful act or omission of the carrier or its servants or agents; or (b) such damage was solely due to the negligence or other wrongful act or omission of a third party. The prescribed amount was 100,000 SDRs in the original text of the Convention; it was raised with effect from December 30, 2009 to 113,100 SDRs. ²⁰ As to baggage, the Convention provides that the carrier must deliver to the passenger a baggage identification tag for each piece of checked baggage; the “baggage check” of the earlier instruments in the Warsaw system disappears. The cargo provisions are based, with minor improvements, upon those in Montreal Protocol No.4. Effect is given to the Convention in English law by the Carriage by Air Acts (Implementation of the Montreal Convention 1999) Order 2002. ²¹

Parties to the Conventions

35-007

For the purposes of English law, the states which are parties to the various versions of the Warsaw Convention and the Montreal Convention 1999 are conclusively identified in the Order in Council made under the Carriage by Air Act 1961. ²²

-
4. Grein v Imperial Airways Ltd [1937] 1 K.B. 50, 74–77.
 5. See, generally, Lowenfeld and Mendelsohn (1967) 80 Harv.L.Rev. 497.
 6. SI 2004/1899.
 7. Bogiatzi v Deutscher Luftpool (C-301/08) [2009] E.C.R. I-10185; Wallentin-Hermann v Alitalia-Linee Aeree Italiane SpA (C-549/07) [2008] E.C.R. I-11061.
 8. See below, paras 35-023, 35-025, 35-050, 35-054, 35-056.
 9. See below, para.35-033.
 10. See below, para.35-035.
 11. See below, para.35-040. See, generally, Forrest (1961) 10 I.C.L.Q. 726.
 12. Carriage by Air and Road Act 1979 s.4(1).
 13. See below, paras 35-045—35-047.
 14. SI 1964/486.
 15. The full text of the Hague Protocol is also published as Cmnd. 3356 and that of the Guadalajara Convention as Cmnd. 2354.
 16. 1961 Act s.1(2); 1962 Act s.1(2). In Corocraft Ltd v Pan American Airways Inc [1969] 1 Q.B. 616, a decision on the unamended Convention, the Court of Appeal preferred the French to the English text of that Convention, although there was no provision in the Act of 1932 corresponding to s.1(2) of the Acts of 1961 and 1962 (noted [1969] C.L.J. 40). Similarly, the United States courts give primacy to the French text of the unamended Convention: Eastern Airlines Inc v Floyd, 111 S.Ct. 1489 (1991).
 17. SI 1999/1312.
 18. For a pessimistic assessment of its treatment in national courts, see Tompkins (2014) 39 A.S.L. 203.
 19. See O'Carroll v Ryanair, 2009 S.C.L.R. 125.
 20. The decision to raise the amount was in the form of a decision of the ICAO Council under art.24 of the Convention, given effect in England by the Carriage by Air (Revision of Limits of Liability under the Montreal Convention) Order 2009 (SI 2009/3018).
 21. SI 2002/263, which came into force on June 28, 2004.
 22. s.2(1) as amended by SI 1999/1312 and SI 2002/263 (and see the Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) arts 5(2) and 6(2)). The power has been exercised in the Carriage by Air (Parties to Convention) Order 1999 (SI 1999/1313) and the Carriage by Air (Parties to Protocol No.4 of Montreal 1975) Order 2000 (SI 2000/3061), but not yet in relation to the Montreal Convention 1999.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 35 - Carriage by Air
Section 3. - Scope and Application of the Conventions

Scope of the Conventions

35-008

! Every version of the Warsaw Convention, and the Montreal Convention 1999, declares that it applies to all international carriage of persons, baggage or cargo performed by aircraft for reward. ²³ The Conventions also apply to gratuitous carriage by aircraft performed by an air transport undertaking. ²⁴ ! Carriage performed directly by the Crown, whether gratuitously or for reward, is also within the Conventions. ²⁵ The Conventions themselves do not apply to the carriage of mail or postal packages: under English law such carriage is subject to Sch.1 to the Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004, under art.2(2) of which the carrier is liable only to the relevant postal administration and in accordance with the rules applicable to the relationship between carriers and postal administrations. ²⁶

Carriage or other service

35-009

The Conventions apply to “carriage”, and issues may present themselves as to whether the contract is one of carriage or for the provision of some other type of service. It has sometimes been argued that the notion of carriage implies that a flight is undertaken for the primary purpose of moving an individual or goods from Point A to Point B. This argument was not accepted by the House of Lords where it was held that in the absence of any relationship between the carrier and a person carried other than that of carrier and carried (for example, a relationship of employer and employee, or of instructor and student) the person carried was a passenger for the purposes of the Conventions. ²⁷

Applicable only to actions between carrier and passenger or goods owner

35-010

It must also be remembered that the Conventions only regulate the legal relations between the air carrier ²⁸ and his passengers and owners of baggage and cargo. They do not embrace the legal relations between the carrier's customers and other persons or entities concerned with the carriage for whom the carrier is not in law responsible. Thus such liabilities in law as those of the manufacturers of the aircraft used for the carriage and those of the agencies (governmental or non-governmental) responsible for the airworthiness of the aircraft fall outside the Conventions. The liabilities of such entities are unlimited and are regulated by the normal principles of the law of tort.

Interpretation of the Convention

35-011

The Warsaw Convention 1929 is in a single text in the French language. The Hague Protocol of 1955 was drawn up in three authentic texts, in English, French and Spanish; it was, however, agreed that in case of any inconsistency the French text was to prevail.²⁹ In the case of the “MP4 Convention”, there was a fourth authentic text in Russian, but the French text again prevails in case of inconsistency.³⁰ Both the English and the French texts of the Convention as amended by the Hague Protocol and of the MP4 Convention are given effect in England.³¹ The Montreal Convention of 1999 is in six languages, English, Arabic, Chinese, French, Russian and Spanish, all texts being equally authentic. However, the Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004³² gives effect in the United Kingdom only to the English versions of the unamended Warsaw Convention (despite that Convention having a single authentic text in French) and of that Convention as amended by Montreal Additional Protocol No.1; similarly, the Carriage by Air Acts (Implementation of the Montreal Convention 1999) Order 2002³³ gives effect only to the English text of the Montreal Convention. There have been relatively few reported cases in England on the interpretation of the Convention texts. The similarities between the various versions of the Warsaw Convention and of the Montreal Convention mean that a decision on one may well be applicable to some or all of the other texts. The paucity of decisions means that it is necessary to seek guidance from the decisions of courts in other Convention jurisdictions as to the operation of the detailed provisions of the Conventions.³⁴ The courts in the United States in particular have been prolific in their decisions, especially on the original Convention which was until 2003 the only version ratified by the United States. Many of these decisions display a great ingenuity in interpreting the Convention as far as possible in the passenger's favour in the event of claims for personal injuries.³⁵ The House of Lords has approved a liberal approach to the interpretation of English statutes giving effect to international Conventions generally³⁶ and has specifically held that ambiguities in, or doubts as to, the text of the Warsaw Convention may be resolved by cautious and infrequent reference to the travaux préparatoires of the international conferences which led up to the adoption of the Conventions. Their Lordships however stipulated that such reference should only be made when the material consulted is public and accessible and where it clearly and indisputably points to a definite legislative intention. The purpose of the Conventions is uniformity and the English courts should have recourse to the same aids to interpretation as would be used in other Convention jurisdictions.³⁷ However, while giving due weight to the need for uniformity of interpretation, an English court should approach the applicable Convention in an objective spirit in order to try to discover what its true intent is.³⁸ The starting-point for interpretation must always be the text of the Convention and not the language used, even by a court of the highest authority, in formulating a statement of its effect.³⁹ The terms of the carrier's conditions of contract or of carriage or of the documents of carriage (the passenger ticket or air waybill) cannot be relevant where the issue is one of interpretation of the Carriage by Air Act 1961 and the Convention to which it gives effect.⁴⁰

Definition of international carriage

35-012

Each of the conventions contains a definition of “international carriage”; the differences between the various definitions are matters of drafting only. The definition as it appears in the Montreal Convention 1999⁴¹ is:

“... any carriage in which, according to the agreement between the parties, the place of departure and the place of destination, whether or not there be a break in the carriage or a transshipment, are situated either within the territories of two States Parties, or within the territory of a single State Party if there is an agreed stopping place within the territory of another State, even if that State is not a State Party.”⁴²

Which of the various conventions, if any, applies to a particular case of carriage turns on the reference to the places of departure and destination in the definition of “international carriage” in each convention. It is crucial to identify the places of departure and destination, and to determine to which, if any, conventions the state in which each of those places is situated is a party. The most recent convention to which both states are parties will apply. In every case, what must be examined is the carriage of the particular passenger or cargo, not that of the aircraft effecting the carriage. Taking the example of a single passenger flight from London to New York: (a) in November 1996, the United Kingdom was a party to the unamended Warsaw Convention and to the Warsaw-Hague text; the United States was a party only to the unamended Warsaw Convention, and the flight would constitute international carriage for the purposes of, and so would be governed by, the unamended Warsaw Convention; (b) in November 1998, the United Kingdom was a party to the unamended Warsaw Convention, to the Warsaw-Hague text, and to the MP4 Convention; the United States was still a party only to the unamended Warsaw Convention, and the flight would constitute international carriage for the purposes of, and so would be governed by, the unamended Warsaw Convention; (c) in November 2000, the United Kingdom was a party to the unamended Warsaw Convention, to the Warsaw-Hague text, and to the MP4 Convention; the United States was now a party to the unamended Warsaw Convention and to the MP4 Convention, and the flight would constitute international carriage for the purposes of, and so would be governed by, the MP4 Convention; (d) in November 2004, the United Kingdom and the United States had additionally become parties to the Montreal Convention 1999, and that Convention would govern. In the case of a return flight London–New York– London, the places of departure and destination would both be in the United Kingdom, and the applicable convention would be that most recently given effect in English law. Carriage between two points within the territory of a single high contracting party without an agreed stopping place within the territory of another state (for example between London and Belfast, or London and Gibraltar) is not international carriage.⁴³ For the purpose of determining whether or not the carriage is international, carriage to be performed by several successive air carriers will in some circumstances be deemed to be one undivided carriage: it must have been regarded by the parties as a single operation, whether it had been agreed upon under the form of a single contract or of a series of contracts.⁴⁴

Conventions provide exclusive cause of action

35-013

The Conventions provide a statutory cause of action which is not subject to the choice of law rules applying to claims in contract or tort.⁴⁵ Any action for damages, however founded, can only be brought subject to the conditions and limits of liability set out in the relevant convention.⁴⁶ The Convention does not purport to deal with all matters relating to contracts of international carriage by air; but in those areas with which it deals, such as the liability of the carrier, the code was intended to be uniform and to be exclusive also of any resort to the rules of domestic law. The words used in art.24 of the MP4 Convention and art.29 of the Montreal Convention 1999, “in the carriage of passengers, baggage and cargo ...” make very clear the exclusivity of the Convention rules across the whole field. That this is true of the earlier conventions has been established by judicial decisions of the highest courts in England, Ireland, South Africa and the United States.⁴⁷ The exclusivity principle was applied in the context of the Montreal Convention 1999 by the Supreme Court in Hook v British Airways Plc; Stott v Thomas Cook Tour Operators.⁴⁸ The Convention was intended to deal comprehensively with the carrier's liability for whatever might physically happen to passengers between embarkation and disembarkation. A claim for breach of duty under equality laws or alleging ill-treatment of a disabled passenger was precluded as within the substantive scope of the Convention.

No contracting out

35-014

Article 23 of each version of the Warsaw Convention (and art.26 of the Montreal Convention 1999) provides that, with one exception,⁴⁹ any provision tending to relieve the carrier of liability or to fix a lower limit than that laid down in the applicable Convention is null and void, although without prejudice to the validity of the contract as a whole under the Convention.⁵⁰ Moreover art.32 of the various Warsaw texts provides that any clause contained in the contract by which the parties purport to infringe the rules laid down by the Convention, whether by deciding the law to be applied or by altering the rules as to jurisdiction, is also null and void (though arbitration clauses are allowed for the carriage of cargo, provided that the arbitration takes place in a Convention jurisdiction). However, art.33 (and art.27 of the Montreal Convention 1999) expressly permits the carrier to make regulations which do not conflict with the provisions of the Convention; and most carriers by air issue General Conditions of Carriage, one set for passengers and baggage and another set for cargo. These conditions are commonly based on those recommended from time-to-time by the International Air Transport Association ("IATA"). Thus, contracts of carriage by air possess, as it were, a two-tier structure. The bottom tier of the contract is formed by the statute, and is mandatory. The upper tier of the contract is formed by the carrier's regulations which may fill gaps in the statutory provisions (or merely repeat such provisions), and may increase his statutory liabilities, but cannot reduce them. There is, therefore, practically no scope for the rules of the common law in carriage by air,⁵¹ and in particular no scope for its distinction between common and private carriers.⁵²

Jurisdiction

35-015

The English courts can assume jurisdiction in a claim for damages under the conventions only in accordance with the jurisdictional rules they contain. In all versions of the Warsaw Convention, art.28 provides that an action for damages must be brought, at the option of the plaintiff, in the territory of one of the High Contracting Parties before one of the following⁵³: (a) the court having jurisdiction where the carrier is ordinarily resident; or (b) the court having jurisdiction where the carrier has its principal place of business; or (c) the court having jurisdiction where the carrier has an establishment by which the contract has been made; or (d) the court having jurisdiction at the place of destination. The Montreal Convention 1999 retains these four grounds of jurisdiction (with changes of wording) and a fifth ground is added. Article 33 of that Convention provides that an action for damages must be brought, at the option of the plaintiff, in the territory of one of the states parties, before one of the following: (a) the court of the domicile of the carrier; or (b) the court of the carrier's principal place of business; or (c) the court where the carrier has a place of business through which the contract had been made; or (d) the court at the place of destination; or (e) in respect of damage resulting from the death or injury of a passenger, before a court in the territory of a state party in which at the time of the accident the passenger had his or her principal and permanent residence and to or from which the carrier operates services for the carriage of passengers by air, either on its own aircraft, or on another carrier's aircraft pursuant to a commercial agreement, and in which that carrier conducts its business of carriage of passengers by air from premises leased or owned by the carrier itself or by another carrier with which it has a commercial agreement.⁵⁴

35-016

The English court has held the four options in art.28(1) to be exhaustive⁵⁵: it provides "a self-contained code".⁵⁶ If an action is begun in the English courts, which have jurisdiction under art.28(1), it is not open to the defendant to raise the plea of *forum non conveniens*⁵⁷; if an action is commenced in a foreign court which appears not to have jurisdiction under art.28(1), an anti-suit injunction may be granted by the English court.⁵⁸ Article 28(1) is strictly applied, and its constraints cannot be avoided by the use of procedural rules for service of claim forms out of the jurisdiction.⁵⁹ Although there is little English judicial authority on art.28(1), it seems from cases in other jurisdictions that a corporate carrier is "ordinarily resident" in the jurisdiction where the central administration of the company is located: a branch office in England of a foreign carrier would not suffice for this purpose.⁶⁰ The place of central administration will, of course, also be the principal place of business of the carrier.⁶¹ The "establishment by which the contract has been made" seemingly does not have to be owned by the carrier: it may be that of a general sales agent who carries on the carrier's business in the country in question.⁶² A contract may be made by an establishment where the establishment has played a part in the meeting of minds of the parties.⁶³ Finally, the "place of destination" will be that identified in the particular passenger ticket or air waybill⁶⁴: in the case of a round trip or return ticket, then, the place of destination will be the place of departure provided that the carriage was envisaged as a single operation.⁶⁵

Limitation of actions

35-017

The right to damages in respect of the carrier's liability under arts 17 to 19 of the Convention is extinguished if an action is not brought within two years reckoned from the date of arrival at the destination, or from the date on which the aircraft ought to have arrived, or from the date on which the carriage stopped.⁶⁶ The “actions” referred to seemingly cover not only actions brought under the Carriage by Air Act 1961 but also those brought under the Fatal Accidents Act 1976 and the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1934. The right of action is seemingly completely destroyed and cannot be relied upon as a defence to an action brought by the carrier.⁶⁷ The two-year period cannot be suspended, interrupted or extended by reference to domestic law.⁶⁸ The expiry of the period of limitation extinguishes any cause of action under the Convention even when the carrier could not have limited his liability because of art.25.⁶⁹ The two-year period of limitation applies in lieu of any period specified under the Limitation Act 1980⁷⁰ or any other statute. It applies to actions against the carrier’s employees or agents acting within the scope of their employment,⁷¹ to actions against “actual carriers” under the Carriage by Air (Supplementary Provisions) Act 1962,⁷² and also to arbitration proceedings,⁷³ but actions by the carrier to recover his fare, or for freight, however, are not subject to the two-year limitation period at all. The Convention makes no express provision concerning changes of party once the action has been commenced, but a change of party under CPR r.17.4 or 19.5 after the expiry of the two-year period cannot be allowed as this would conflict with the Convention.⁷⁴

-
- ^{23.} Warsaw Convention 1929 art.1(1); Warsaw-Hague text art.1(1); MP4 Convention art.1(1); Montreal Convention 1999 art.1(1). “Aircraft” has been held to include a hot air balloon: Laroche v Spirit of Adventure (UK) Ltd [2009] EWCA Civ 12, [2009] Q.B. 778. “Reward” includes any form of consideration: see Civil Aviation Act 1982 s.105(1); Corner v Clayton [1976] 1 W.L.R. 800, 804–805 (no profit element required); Herd v Clyde Helicopters Ltd, 1996 S.L.T. 976 IH (lump sum payment for series of flights sufficed).
- ^{24.}  Warsaw Convention 1929 art.1(1); Warsaw-Hague text art.1(1); MP4 Convention art.1(1); Montreal Convention 1999 art.1(1). “Air transport undertaking” is not defined in the Conventions or in the United Kingdom implementing legislation; however, it is defined in s.95(5) of the Transport Act 2000, for the purposes of that Act, as meaning “an undertaking ... which includes the provision of services for the carriage by air of passengers or cargo for hire or reward”.
- ^{25.} Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) art.8 (excluding, in art.8(2), cases where members of the Armed Forces are carried during a time of actual or imminent hostilities, severe international tension, or great national emergency).
- ^{26.} Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) art.4.
- ^{27.} Herd v Clyde Helicopters Ltd [1997] A.C. 534 (carriage of police personnel and equipment for operational purposes); Laroche v Spirit of Adventure (UK) Ltd [2009] EWCA Civ 12, [2009] Q.B. 778 (recreational flight in hot air balloon).
- ^{28.} This expression can in certain circumstances embrace carriers other than the contracting carrier such as “successive carriers” and “actual carriers”: see below, paras 35-045—35-047.
- ^{29.} Hague Protocol, final clause; Carriage by Air Act 1961 s.1(8) as substituted by the Carriage by Acts (Implementation of the Montreal Convention 1999) Order 2002 (SI 2002/263) art.2(2).
- ^{30.} Montreal Protocol No.4, final clause; Carriage by Air Act 1961 s.1(8) as substituted by the Carriage by Acts (Implementation of the Montreal Convention 1999) Order 2002 (SI 2002/263) art.2(2). For this convention, see above, para.35-005.
- ^{31.} For the Warsaw-Hague text, see the Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1. For the MP4 Convention text, see the Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1A as substituted by the Carriage by Air Acts (Implementation of Protocol No.4 of Montreal, 1975) Order 1999 (SI 1999/1312), a corrected French text being substituted by the Carriage by Acts (Implementation of the Montreal Convention 1999) Order 2002 (SI 2002/263) art.2(26).
- ^{32.} Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) arts 5(1) and 6(1).

33. Carriage by Acts (Implementation of the Montreal Convention 1999) Order 2002 (SI 2002/263).
34. For the weight to be given to decisions of foreign courts, see Lord Hope of Craighead in Abnett v British Airways Plc [1997] A.C. 430.
35. See, e.g. Lisi v Alitalia-Linee Aeree Italiane SpA [1967] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 140; [1968] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 505 (but cf. the stricter approach commended in Chan v Korean Air Lines Ltd, 109 S.Ct. 1676 (1989)). For a comparative study of the approaches of United States and French courts to the interpretation of the Convention, see Miller, Liability in Air Transport (above, para.35-001 n.1).
36. James Buchanan and Co Ltd v Babco Forwarding and Shipping (UK) Ltd [1978] A.C. 141, 152.
37. Fothergill v Monarch Airlines Ltd [1981] A.C. 251, 278, 283, 287 and 294. cf. Corocraft Ltd v Pan American Airways Inc [1969] 1 Q.B. 616, 655; Rustenburg Platinum Mines Ltd v South African Airways [1977] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 564, 576–577; Adatia v Air Canada (1992) 2 S. & B. Av.R. VII/63 CA; Tondriau (or Sauvage) v Air India, 13 E.T.L. 126 (1978) Cour de Cassation, Brussels.
38. King v Bristow Helicopters Ltd [2002] UKHL 7, [2002] 2 A.C. 628, especially, per Lord Hobhouse of Woodborough at [147]–[150]; Swiss Bank Corp v Brink's-MAT Ltd [1986] Q.B. 853; Antwerp United Diamonds BVBA v Air Europe [1996] Q.B. 317 CA.
39. Re Deep Vein Thrombosis and Air Travel Group Litigation [2005] UKHL 72, [2006] 1 A.C. 495, commenting on over-reliance on the formulation in Air France v Saks, 470 U.S. 392 (1985).
40. Antwerp United Diamond BVBA v Air Europe [1996] Q.B. 317 CA.
41. Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1B art.1(2).
42. See Grein v Imperial Airways Ltd [1937] 1 K.B. 50; Rotterdamsche Bank NV v BOAC [1953] 1 W.L.R. 493.
43. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.1(2); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.1(2), Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.1(2); Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.1(2).
44. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.1(3); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.1(3), Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.1(3); Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.1(3).
45. Corocraft Ltd v Pan American Airways Inc [1969] 1 Q.B. 616 (reversed on other grounds [1969] 1 Q.B. 616 CA); Rothmans of Pall Mall (Overseas) Ltd v Saudi Arabian Airlines Corp [1981] Q.B. 368 CA; Holmes v Bangladesh Biman Corp [1982] A.C. 1112 HL; American Express Co v British Airways Board [1983] 1 W.L.R. 701.
46. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.24(1)(2); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.24(1)(2); Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.24(1)(2) (using different language); Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.29.
47. Sidhu v British Airways Plc; Abnett v British Airways Plc [1997] A.C. 430 HL; Herd v Clyde Helicopters Ltd [1997] A.C. 534 HL; Deaville v Aeroflot Russian International Airlines [1997] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 67; R. v Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions Ex p. IATA [2000] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 242; Morris v KLM Royal Dutch Airlines [2001] EWCA Civ 790, [2001] 3 All E.R. 126; King v Bristow Helicopters Ltd [2002] UKHL 7, [2002] 2 A.C. 628; Western Digital Corp v British Airways Plc [2001] Q.B. 733 CA; The Deep Vein Thrombosis and Air Travel Group Litigation [2002] EWHC 2825; (affirmed [2003] EWCA Civ 1005, [2003] 3 W.L.R. 956) and [2005] UKHL 72, [2006] 1 A.C. 495; Smyth & Co Ltd v Aer Turas Teoranta (Sup Ct, February 3, 1997) (followed in Nolan v Aer Lingus Group Ltd (Cir Ct, November 9, 2009), McAuley v Aer Lingus Ltd [2011] IEHC 89, and Hennessey v Aer Lingus Ltd [2012] IEHC

- 124); Potgieter v British Airways Plc (2005) 2 S.A. 133 (C); El Al Israel Airlines Ltd v Tseng, 119 S.Ct. 662 (1999).
48. [2014] UKSC 15, [2014] A.C. 1347. See para.35-048. For a Canadian decision on the exclusivity of the Montreal Convention 1999, see Thibodeau v Air Canada 2014 SCC 67.
49. As to this, see 1961 Act Sch.1 art.23(2) (inherent defect, quality or vice & cargo); see, e.g. Corocraft Ltd v Pan American Airways Inc [1969] 1 Q.B. 616 (reversed on other grounds [1969] 1 Q.B. 616 CA).
50. For the rationale of this provision (to protect the passenger or other person dealing with the carrier against provisions of the kind which it describes), see Abnett v British Airways Plc [1997] A.C. 430.
51. The common law rules may still be of importance in connection with gratuitous carriage not performed by an air transport undertaking, which as we have seen (see above, para.35-001) is not within the scope of the Convention. See Fosbroke-Hobbes v Airwork Ltd [1937] 1 All E.R. 108; Ludditt v Ginger Coote Airways [1947] A.C. 233.
52. As to whether a carrier by air can be a common carrier, see Aslan v Imperial Airways Ltd (1933) 45 L.L. Rep. 316, 322 (decided before the original Warsaw Convention came into operation); McNair pp.138–141; Shawcross and Beaumont, at Vol.1, para.VII[5]; Kahn-Freund pp.696–697. In Aslan v Imperial Airways Ltd, the flight documents expressly repudiated common carrier status. The matter appears to be of only academic interest now.
53. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.28(1); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.28(1); Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.28(1). See generally, Shawcross and Beaumont, at paras VII[416] et seq.; Dicey, Morris and Collins on the Conflict of Laws, 15th edn (2012), Vol.1, paras 15–008—15–019.
54. Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.33.
55. Questions of procedure are governed by the lex fori, the law of the court seised of the case: Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.28(2); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.28(2); Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.28(2); Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.33(4). The English court would, therefore, determine whether a particular case falls under its jurisdiction, as opposed to that of a court in Scotland or Northern Ireland. See the Scottish decision to this effect: Abnett v British Airways Plc, 1995 S.C.L.R. 654.
56. Rothmans of Pall Mall (Overseas) Ltd v Saudi Arabian Airlines Corp [1981] Q.B. 368, per Roskill L.J. at 385; Milor SRL v British Airways Plc [1996] Q.B. 702 CA.
57. Milor SRL v British Airways Plc [1996] Q.B. 702 CA. United States courts are divided: in agreement with Milor is Hosaka v United Airlines Inc, 305 F. 3d 989 (2002) 9th Cir, cert. den. 537 US 1227 (2003); to the contrary is Re Air Crash Disaster near New Orleans, Louisiana on July 9, 1982, Trivelloni-Lorenzi v Pan American World Airways Inc, 821 F. 2d 1147 (1987) 5th Cir; both are cases on versions of the Warsaw Convention. A US Court of Appeals has held that forum non conveniens is available under the Montreal Convention 1999: Re West Caribbean Airways SA 305 F. 3d 989 (2002), 9th Cir, followed in Pierre-Louis v Newvac Corp 584 F. 3d 1052 (2009), 11th Cir. and Galbert v West Caribbean Airways 715 F. 3d 1290 (2013), 11th Cir.
58. Deaville v Aeroflot Russian International Airlines [1997] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 67 (injunction refused on facts).
59. Rotterdamsche Bank NV v British Overseas Airways Corp [1953] 1 W.L.R. 493.
60. Rothmans of Pall Mall (Overseas) Ltd v Saudi Arabian Airlines Corp [1981] Q.B. 368, per Roskill L.J. at 386; Shawcross and Beaumont, at Vol.1, para.VII[443]ff.
61. Eck v United Arab Airlines Inc, 360 F. 2d 804 (1966) US Court of Appeals, 2nd Cir.

- 62. Berner v United Airlines Inc, 157 N.Y.S. 884 (1956); 170 N.Y.S. 2d 340 (1957); Bundesgerichtshof, March 23, 1976 (11 E.T.L. 873 (1976)).
- 63. Orchestre Symphonique de Vienne v Trans World Airlines (1971) I.A.T.A. A.C.L.R. No.418.
- 64. The place of destination will be the ultimate destination. This helps to determine whether or not carriage is “international carriage” within the meaning of the Convention: 1961 Act Sch.1 art.1(2); see above, para.35-012.
- 65. Qureshi v KLM Royal Dutch Airlines, 102 D.L.R. (3d) 205 (1979) Nova Scotia Supreme Court.
- 66. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.29(1); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.29(1); Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.29(1); Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.35(1). English law will, as the lex fori, determine the method of calculating the period of limitation: Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.29(2); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.29(2); Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.29(2); Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.35(2).
- 67. cf. Aries Tanker Corp v Total Transport Ltd (The Aries) [1977] 1 W.L.R. 185 HL, per Lord Wilberforce at 188; Timeny v British Airways Plc (1991) 102 A.L.R. 565 S. Australian SC.; Mediterranean Freight Services Ltd v BP Oil International Ltd (The Fiona) [1994] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 506 CA (obiter); Agtrack (NT) Pty Ltd v Hatfield [2005] HCA 38; Air Link Pty Ltd v Paterson [2005] HCA 39 and see Bogiatzi v Deutscher Luftpool (C-301/08) [2010] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 555.
- 68. Laroche v Spirit of Adventure (UK) Ltd [2009] EWCA Civ 12, [2009] Q.B. 778.
- 69. Re Air Disaster at Lockerbie, Scotland on December 21, 1988, 928 F. 2d 1267, 1286 (1991) US Court of Appeals, 2nd Cir.
- 70. Limitation Act 1980 s.33(2).
- 71. Carriage by Air Act 1961 s.5(1).
- 72. Carriage by Air Act 1961 s.3(2).
- 73. Carriage by Air Act 1961 s.5(3).
- 74. Hall v Heart of England Balloons Ltd [2010] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 373 (Birmingham Cty Ct), followed in Jeffery v Thomas Cook Airlines Ltd (Macclesfield Cty Ct, June 2, 2010) and Foster v Thomas Cook Group Plc (Newcastle-upon-Tyne Cty Ct, March 31, 2011).

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 35 - Carriage by Air

Section 4. - European Legislation

European Parliament and Council Regulation 889/2002

35-018

! The European Union first legislated on carriage by air in Council Regulation 2027/97 of October 9, 1997 on air carrier liability in the event of accidents.⁷⁵ This was limited to passenger liability but anticipated a number of features of the Montreal Convention 1999. It removed the financial limit on liability⁷⁶; prevented the carrier in respect of damages up to 100,000 SDRs from relying on the defence that he and his agents had taken all necessary measures to avoid the damage or that it was impossible for him or them to take such measures⁷⁷; required the carrier to have a certain level of liability insurance⁷⁸; and provided for the immediate making of advance or interim payments following an accident.⁷⁹ The Regulation was implemented in the law of the United Kingdom by the Air Carrier Liability Order 1998.⁸⁰ Regulation 2027/97 was radically amended, and in effect replaced, by European Parliament and Council Regulation 889/2002 of May 13, 2002⁸¹ to align it fully with the

Montreal Convention 1999 and to extend it to cover baggage liability.⁸² ! The amending Regulation applied from June 28, 2004, the date on which the Montreal Convention entered into force for the European Union. The necessary changes to the law of the United Kingdom were made by the Air Carrier Liability Regulations 2004⁸³ and the Air Carrier Liability (No.2) Regulations 2004.⁸⁴ The Convention provisions which would otherwise be applicable do not apply to Union air carriers to the extent that the amended Regulation has the force of law.⁸⁵ It implements the relevant provisions of the Montreal Convention in respect of the carriage of passengers and their baggage and lays down certain supplementary provisions, and also extends the application of these provisions to carriage by air within a single Member State. The liability of a Union air carrier in respect of passengers and their baggage is declared to be governed by all provisions of the Montreal Convention relevant to such liability,⁸⁶ including its limitation provisions.⁸⁷ The Regulation obliges Member States to apply the Montreal Convention in cases where they are under a treaty obligation to apply some other instrument in the Warsaw system, and it may prove to be open to challenge in this respect. The Regulation also deals with the supplementary sum which, in accordance with art.22(2) of the Montreal Convention, may be demanded by a Union air carrier when a passenger makes a special declaration of interest in delivery of their baggage at destination. This sum is to be based on a tariff, to be made available to passengers on request, which is related to the additional costs involved in transporting and insuring the baggage concerned over and above those for baggage valued at or below the liability limit.⁸⁸

! An EU carrier, still referred to in the legislation as a "Community air carrier", is one holding an air operating certificate issued by the authorities of a Member State. Pre-requisites for the issue of a licence include the carrier having a principal place of business in the Member State and that nationals of a Member State own or effectively control the carrier. On the UK withdrawing from the EU, and subject to any contrary provision in the withdrawal agreement, Regulation 889/2002 will cease to apply to carriers based in and owned by nationals of the UK. The Montreal Convention will continue to apply on the basis of the UK's earlier ratification. For the effect of the Regulation on non-international carriage, see below, para.35-074).

Advance payments

35-019

Regulation 889/2002 makes provision in respect of advance or interim payments. The minimum advance in the event of death is the equivalent of 16,000 SDRs per passenger, and an advance payment is declared not to be returnable, except in the cases prescribed in art.20 of the Montreal Convention or where the person who received the advance payment was not the person entitled to compensation. ⁸⁹

Conditions of carriage

35-020

Regulation 889/2002 also deals with the provision of information to passengers. ⁹⁰ All air carriers must, when selling carriage by air in the Union, ensure that a summary of the main provisions governing liability for passengers and their baggage, including deadlines for filing an action for compensation and the possibility of making a special declaration for baggage, is made available to passengers at all points of sale including sale by telephone and via the internet. In order to comply with this requirement, Union air carriers (but not other air carriers) must use a notice set out in the Annex to the Regulation. In addition, all air carriers must in respect of carriage by air provided or purchased in the EU, provide each passenger with a written indication of the applicable limit for that flight on the carrier's liability in respect of death or injury, if such a limit exists; the applicable limit for that flight on the carrier's liability in respect of destruction, loss of or damage to baggage, and a warning that baggage greater in value than this figure should be brought to the airline's attention at check-in or fully insured by the passenger prior to travel; and the applicable limit for that flight on the carrier's liability for damage occasioned by delay. Failure to comply with the requirements of art.3a or art.6 of the amended Regulation is made an offence by the Air Carrier Liability Regulations 2004. ⁹¹

Insurance requirements

35-021

 Regulation 889/2002 requires a Union air carrier to be insured up to a level that is adequate to ensure that all persons entitled to compensation receive the full amount to which they are entitled in accordance with the Regulation. ⁹² European Parliament and Council Regulation 785/2004 of April 21, 2004 on insurance requirements for air carriers and air operators, ⁹³ which came into force on May 1, 2005, requires all air carriers and aircraft operators flying within, into, out of, or over the territory of a Member State to have specified levels of insurance cover in respect of their aviation-specific liability in respect of passengers (death and personal injury caused by accidents), for loss or destruction of or damage to baggage and cargo, and to third parties (death, personal injury and damage to property caused by accidents). ⁹⁴ The insured risks must cover acts of war, terrorism, hijacking, acts of sabotage, unlawful seizure of aircraft and civil commotion. Insurance in respect of the carriage of mails is excluded. ⁹⁵ In the United Kingdom, an air carrier or aircraft operator (other than a carrier or operator regulated by another Member State) who fails to comply with these requirements commits an offence. ⁹⁶ The United Kingdom regulations require passenger liability insurance in the case of noncommercial operations by aircraft with a maximum take-off mass of 2,700 kg or less of at least 100,000 SDRs per passenger, ⁹⁷ and designate the Civil Aviation Authority as the competent authority for the purposes of Regulation 785/2004. ⁹⁸

^{75.} For text see [1997] O.J. L285/1.

^{76.} Regulation 889/2002 art.3.

^{77.} Regulation 889/2002 art.3(2).

- 78. Regulation 889/2002 art.7.
- 79. Regulation 889/2002 art.5.
- 80. SI 1998/1751, effective from October 17, 1998. For a challenge to the validity of this instrument, and by implication of Council Regulation 2027/97 see R. v Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions Ex p. IATA [2000] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 242; the decision upheld the validity of the Order but left a number of issues unresolved.
- 81. For text see [2002] O.J. L140. See also the application of the amended Regulation by the Agreement on the European Economic Area 1992 as adjusted by the Brussels Protocol 1993 and the amendments made by Decisions of the EEA Joint Committee.
- 82.  The effect is that the Montreal Convention becomes part of the EU legal order: Wallentin-Hermann v Alitalia-Linee Aeree Italiane SpA (C-549/07) [2008] E.C.R. I-11061; Stott v Thomas Cook Tour Operators Ltd [2012] EWCA Civ 66 at [28]; Air Baltic Corp AS v Lietuvos Respublikos specialioji tyrimu tarnyba (C-429/14) [2016] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 407 at [23].
- 83. SI 2004/1418.
- 84. SI 2004/1974.
- 85. Carriage by Air Act 1961 s.1(2) as substituted by the Carriage by Acts (Implementation of the Montreal Convention 1999) Order 2002 (SI 2002/263) art.2(2); Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) art.3(2).
- 86. Regulation 2027/97 art.3(1) as substituted by Regulation 889/2002 art.1(4).
- 87. Bogiatzi v Deutscher Luftpool (C-301/08) [2010] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 555 (a case under Regulation 2027/97 and the Warsaw Convention, but of wider application).
- 88. Regulation 2027/97 art.3a as inserted by Regulation 889/2002 art.1(5).
- 89. Regulation 2027/97 art.5 as substituted by Regulation 889/2002 art.1(7).
- 90. Regulation 2027/97 art.6 as substituted by Regulation 889/2002 art.1(8).
- 91. SI 2004/1418.
- 92. Regulation 2027/97 art.3(2) as substituted by Regulation 889/2002 art.1(4).
- 93. For text see [2004] O.J. L188.
- 94. Regulation 785/2004 art.4(1). The levels of cover were raised by Commission Regulation 285/2010 [2010] O.J. L87.
- 95. Regulation 785/2004 art.1(2). There are insurance requirements in this context: Council Regulation 2407/92 art.7.
- 96. Civil Aviation (Insurance) Regulations 2005 (SI 2005/1089) reg.5.
- 97. Civil Aviation (Insurance) Regulations 2005 reg.4; for penalties see reg.12.
- 98.  Civil Aviation (Insurance) Regulations 2005 reg.3. The Secretary of State is exceptionally the competent authority in cases where a permit is required under arts 250 or 252 of the Air Navigation Order 2016 (SI 2016/765) in respect of certain aircraft registered outside the United Kingdom.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 35 - Carriage by Air

Section 5. - Liability of the Carrier

(a) - Passengers

Who is a passenger?

35-022

In order to be a "passenger" a person need not personally have made a contract with the carrier. ⁹⁹ It is sufficient if he is on board the aircraft with the carrier's consent, i.e. is not a stowaway. IATA Conditions thus define a passenger as "any person, except members of the crew, carried or to be carried in an aircraft pursuant to a ticket". ¹⁰⁰ So a person whose ticket was bought by a parent, spouse, employer or friend would certainly be included, and so would the holder of a free pass. ¹⁰¹ The definition would make it appear that the carriage by the carrier of employees who are not members of the crew is carriage under the Conventions. ¹⁰² The mere fact that a flight is for recreational purposes and not for transport from point A to point B does not prevent the person being carried from being a passenger for the purposes of the Conventions. ¹⁰³

Passenger ticket

35-023

The requirements as to passenger documentation vary depending on which convention is applicable. Where the Warsaw Convention 1929 applies, the carrier must deliver a passenger ticket which must contain the following particulars: (a) the place and date of issue; (b) the place of departure and of destination; (c) the agreed stopping places, provided that the carrier may reserve the right to alter the stopping places in case of necessity, and that if that right is exercised, the alteration shall not have the effect of depriving the carriage of its international character; (d) the name and address of the carrier or carriers; and (e) a statement that the carriage is subject to the rules relating to liability established by the Warsaw Convention. ¹⁰⁴ Where the carriage is governed by the Warsaw-Hague text or the MP4 Convention, a ticket must be delivered (not necessarily by the carrier) containing: (a) an indication of the places of departure and destination; (b) if the places of departure and destination are within the territory of a single high contracting party, one or more agreed stopping places being within the territory of another state, an indication of at least one such stopping place; (c) a notice, generally referred to in practice as "The Hague notice", to the effect that, if the passenger's journey involves an ultimate destination or stop in a country other than the country of departure, the Warsaw Convention may be applicable and that the Convention governs and in most cases limits the liability of carriers for death or personal injury and in respect of loss of or damage to baggage. ¹⁰⁵ The Montreal Convention 1999 provides that in respect of carriage of passengers an individual or collective document of carriage must be delivered. The document must: (a) give an indication of the places of departure and destination; (b) if the places of departure and destination are within the territory of a single state party, one or more agreed stopping places being within the territory of another state, an indication of at least one such stopping place. ¹⁰⁶ A ticket as such is not prescribed; any other (for example, electronic) means which preserve this information may be substituted. ¹⁰⁷ The passenger must also be given written notice to the effect that where the Montreal Convention is applicable it governs and may limit the liability of carriers in respect of death or injury, and for destruction or loss of, or damage to baggage, and delay. ¹⁰⁸

Time of delivery of ticket

35-024

Where a ticket is required by the terms of the applicable convention, it must be delivered before the start of the flight ¹⁰⁹ if the passenger is to be bound by its terms. It was argued in a number of American cases that delivery had to be early enough to give the passenger a reasonable opportunity to take measures (such as buying insurance) to protect himself, ¹¹⁰ and that this consideration, taken with the need to give proper notice of the liability limitations, required the ticket to meet certain minimum requirements as to the size and legibility of its printed text. ¹¹¹ Later United States decisions rejected these arguments, while recognising that a document could be so defectively printed as not to qualify as a “ticket” at all. ¹¹²

Absence, irregularity or loss of passenger ticket

35-025

The absence, irregularity, or loss of the ticket does not affect the existence or the validity of the contract of carriage which is, nonetheless, subject to the rules of the relevant convention. However, if in a case governed by the Warsaw Convention 1929, the carrier accepts a passenger without a passenger ticket having been delivered, the carrier is not entitled to avail himself of those provisions which exclude or limit liability. ¹¹³ The corresponding rule in cases under the Warsaw-Hague text or the MP4 Convention is that if, with the consent of the carrier, the passenger embarks without a passenger ticket having been delivered, or if the ticket does not include the prescribed notice as to the possible applicability of the Warsaw Convention, ¹¹⁴ the carrier is not entitled to avail himself of the provisions of art.22 limiting his liability. ¹¹⁵ Non-compliance with the provisions of the Montreal Convention 1999 as to passenger documentation does not affect the existence or the validity of the contract of carriage, which is, nonetheless, subject to the rules of the Convention including those relating to limitation of liability. ¹¹⁶ In cases under any of the Conventions, the provisions as to passenger documentation are excluded if the carriage is “in extraordinary circumstances outside the normal scope of an air carrier’s business” (for example, a rescue flight to recover persons stranded by a natural disaster). ¹¹⁷

Information for passengers

35-026

 An air carriage contractor (a carrier concluding a contract of carriage, a tour operator or ticket seller) must inform the passenger at the time of reservation of the identity of the operating air carrier or carriers, and notify the passenger if there is any change in the operating carrier. ¹¹⁸ There are further requirements as to the publication of air fares which must show separately any taxes, airport charges, and other charges, surcharges or fees, such as those related to security or fuel that have been added to the basic fare. Optional price supplements must be communicated in a clear, transparent and unambiguous way at the start of any booking process and their acceptance by the customer must be on an “opt-in” basis. ¹¹⁹

Right of refusal

35-027

Each convention makes it clear that its provisions do not prevent the carrier from refusing to enter into a contract of carriage. ¹²⁰ The Passenger Conditions of Carriage recommended by IATA allow the carrier, in the reasonable exercise of its discretion to refuse to carry a passenger or his baggage on any flight after the date of a notice in writing to that effect; the passenger is entitled to a refund of any fare already paid. In addition, the Conditions reserve the right to refuse carriage if certain circumstances exist or in the carrier's reasonable belief may occur. These are (a) the need to comply with applicable laws; (b) the proposed carriage might endanger the safety, health or materially affect the comfort of other passengers or crew; (c) the passenger's mental or physical state presents a hazard or risk to the passenger concerned, other passengers, crew or property; (d) misconduct on a previous flight which may be repeated; (e) refusal to submit to a security check; (f) failure to pay the applicable fare, taxes, fees or charges; (g) lack of necessary travel documents; (h) presentation of an unlawfully obtained or counterfeit ticket; (i) misuse of the ticket, as where coupons are used out of sequence to obtain a prohibited fare advantage; and (j) failure to observe the carrier's instructions with respect to safety or security. ¹²¹

Liability for death and bodily injury

35-028

Article 17 of the Warsaw Convention 1929, which was not changed either by the Hague Protocol 1955 or by Montreal Protocol No.4 1975, provides that the carrier is liable for damage sustained in the event of death or wounding of a passenger or any other bodily injury suffered by a passenger if the accident which caused the damage so sustained took place on board the aircraft or in the course of any of the operations of embarking or disembarking. ¹²² The corresponding article in the Montreal Convention 1999 provides that the carrier is liable for damage sustained in case of death or bodily injury of a passenger upon condition only that the accident which caused the death or injury took place on board the aircraft or in the course of any of the operations of embarking or disembarking. ¹²³ "Damage" in this context was held by the United States Supreme Court to mean "legally cognizable harm", art.17 leaving it to adjudicating courts to specify what harm is cognizable. ¹²⁴ The European Court of Justice has held that the term "damage" must be given a uniform and autonomous interpretation, one identical throughout Ch.III of the Montreal Convention, notwithstanding the different meanings given to that concept in the domestic laws of the States Parties to the convention. As there was nothing in the Montreal Convention to indicate that the contracting States intended to attribute a special meaning to the concept of damage and to derogate from its ordinary meaning, the term "damage" was to be construed as including both material and non-material damage. ¹²⁵

In interpreting the phrase "in the course of any of the operations of embarking or disembarking" the court will enquire whether the passenger's movement through the airport procedures indicates that at the relevant time he was engaged upon the operation of embarking upon (or disembarking from) the particular flight in question. ¹²⁶ This will involve looking at the location of the passenger at the relevant time, but also at other factors, which might include the activity in which the passenger was engaged, the degree of control exercised over the passenger by the carrier, ¹²⁷ and the question whether the passenger was in the "zone of aviation-related risk". ¹²⁸

"Accident"

35-029

The term "accident" is not defined for the purposes of the conventions. A statutory definition, for the purposes of accident investigation, defines "accident" as including "any fortuitous or unexpected event by which the safety of an aircraft or any person is threatened". ¹²⁹ The United States Supreme Court has held that an "accident" must be an unexpected or unusual event or happening that is external to the passenger: it is not sufficient that the plaintiff suffers injury as a result of his or her own internal reaction to the usual, normal and expected operation of the aircraft. ¹³⁰ It is clear that an aircraft crash, or a hijack, will constitute an accident, but so may less dramatic incidents such as extreme cases of turbulence, and incidents during flight such as the spillage of scalding hot drinks or the service of infected food. A United States decision held that sexual molestation by a fellow passenger was an "accident" ¹³¹; the characteristics of air travel made the plaintiff vulnerable. The Court of Appeal followed that decision but questioned the need to establish that an accident had to be a characteristic of air travel ¹³²; that the assault was an accident was confirmed in the House of Lords. ¹³³ It is not an accident when a passenger becomes ill during a normal flight; it has been held that the occurrence of deep vein thrombosis, and a failure to warn of the risk of its occurrence, cannot be an accident, ¹³⁴ but where a passenger who later died had been refused a change of seat to avoid the cigarette smoke to which he was allergic, this was held to be an unusual event external to the passenger and so an “accident”.¹³⁵ There is a range of judicial views on the question whether an omission may amount to an accident (and whether a distinction can properly be drawn between act and omission in this context).¹³⁶ Some United States courts have taken into account normal industry practice, seeing a departure from such practice as necessarily constituting an “unusual and unexpected event”. The better view is that a court must always ask whether there was an “unexpected or unusual event”; some departures from an industry standard might be “accidents” in that sense but others not.¹³⁷ Discussion of a departure from industry practice is appropriate for liability based on negligence, which is not relevant under the Montreal Convention.

“Bodily injury”

35-030

The term “bodily injury” is to be construed narrowly; mere mental anxiety, unaccompanied by physical injury, will give rise to no liability under art.17. This conclusion was reached by the United States Supreme Court after many years in which American courts were divided as to the scope of “lésion corporelle” in the French text of the Convention,¹³⁸ and was later adopted by the House of Lords, resolving a difference of view between the English Court of Appeal and the Inner House of the Court of Session.¹³⁹ “Bodily injury” was held to mean a change in some part or parts of the body of the passenger which was sufficiently serious to be described as an injury; it does not include mere emotional upset such as fear, distress, grief or mental anguish. Post Traumatic Stress Disorder will not constitute “bodily injury” unless it has caused actual physical brain damage; there is no liability for mental injuries which are accompanied by, but not caused by physical injuries.¹⁴⁰

Defences available to the carrier: “all necessary measures”

35-031

Under art.20 of the Warsaw Convention 1929, the Warsaw-Hague text, and the MP4 Convention, the carrier is not liable if he proves that he and his employees or agents have taken all necessary measures to avoid the damage or that it was impossible for him or them to take such measures.¹⁴¹ In the Montreal Convention 1999 the defence is available only in cases of liability for delay.¹⁴² In that Convention, however, it is provided that in passenger cases to the extent that the damages exceed a prescribed amount,¹⁴³ the carrier is not liable if the carrier proves that (a) such damage was not due to the negligence or other wrongful act or omission of the carrier or its servants or agents; or (b) such damage was solely due to the negligence or other wrongful act or omission of a third party.¹⁴⁴ The English courts have rarely had to consider art.20 of the Convention. In *Chisholm v British European Airways*¹⁴⁵ a passenger was injured after she had left her seat when, because of turbulence, the passengers had been warned to fasten their seat belts and remain seated. The plaintiff disregarded the warnings given by illuminated signs, by the aircraft’s public address system, and also by the cabin crew to each passenger. It was held that the carrier was not liable because his employees had taken all necessary measures to avoid the damage. The court considered that “all necessary measures” meant all reasonable measures or, as it was put more recently, “all measures necessary in the eyes of a reasonable man”.¹⁴⁶ Thus, what looks like a strict liability under the Convention seems to have been relaxed, although the carrier must still prove more than that he was not negligent.¹⁴⁷ If the court had reached the opposite conclusion under art.20, the plaintiff’s damages might perhaps have been reduced under art.21 by reason of her contributory negligence.¹⁴⁸ However, on somewhat similar facts to the Chisholm case but where the passengers had not been instructed to fasten their seat belts prior to the aircraft encountering forecast turbulence, the court held that the failure of the carrier’s employees to warn the passengers was a breach of art.20. The fact that the plaintiff passenger had unfastened his seat belt at some time during a long flight did not constitute contributory negligence under art.21.¹⁴⁹

Contributory negligence

35-032

Under art.21 of the Warsaw Convention 1929,¹⁵⁰ which was unchanged by the Hague Protocol 1955,¹⁵¹ if the carrier proves that the damage was caused by or contributed to by the negligence of the injured person, the court may, in accordance with the provisions of its own law, exonerate the carrier wholly or partly from its liability. This is retained, with a drafting change, in the MP4 Convention.¹⁵² Under the Montreal Convention 1999, if the carrier proves that the damage was caused by or contributed to by the negligence or other wrongful act or omission of the person claiming compensation, or the person from whom his or her rights are derived, the carrier is wholly or partly exonerated from its liability to the claimant to the extent that such negligence or wrongful act or omission caused or contributed to the damage.¹⁵³

Upper financial limit of liability

35-033

In cases governed by the Warsaw Convention 1929, in the absence of a special contract, and unless the carrier loses the protection of art.22(1) of the Convention (by failing to deliver a passenger ticket, or on proof of wilful misconduct by the carrier, its servants or agents), its liability in the carriage of persons is limited to the sum of 125,000 francs for each passenger.¹⁵⁴ The figure of 8,300 SDRs was substituted for the amount in francs by Montreal Additional Protocol No.1 of 1975.¹⁵⁵ Under the Warsaw-Hague text and the MP4 Convention, and in the absence of a special contract, and unless the carrier loses the protection of art.22(1) of the Convention (by failing to deliver a passenger ticket, or on it being shown that the damage resulted from the intentional or reckless misconduct of the carrier, its servants or agents), its liability in the carriage of persons is limited to the sum of 250,000 francs for each passenger.¹⁵⁶ In cases under the Montreal Convention 1999, there is no limit to the damages which may be payable once the liability of the carrier for the death of or injury to a passenger has been established. However, for damages not exceeding a prescribed amount¹⁵⁷ for each passenger, the carrier is not able to exclude or limit its liability. The carrier is not liable for such damages to the extent that they exceed the prescribed amount if the carrier proves that (a) such damage was not due to the negligence or other wrongful act or omission of the carrier or its servants or agents; or (b) such damage was solely due to the negligence or other wrongful act or omission of a third party.¹⁵⁸ The references to “special contract” mean in practice terms in the carrier’s Conditions of Carriage.

A large number of airlines are now parties to agreements which have an effect similar to and supplement the provisions of the Montreal Convention 1999: the IATA Inter-carrier Agreement on Passenger Liability of 1995 and its Inter-carrier Implementation Agreement of 1996, and the ATA Implementing Agreement of 2005.¹⁵⁹

Unfair terms

35-034

As the terms stated in the preceding paragraph meet with the approval of the Civil Aviation Authority, they cannot be challenged under the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977. Section 2 of that Act prohibits the exclusion or restriction of liability for death or personal injury resulting from negligence by reference to any contract term or to a notice given generally or to particular persons. Section 29(1) of the 1977 Act, however, preserves any contractual provision which (a) is authorised or required by the express terms or necessary implication of an enactment; or (b) being made with a view to compliance with an international agreement to which the United Kingdom is a party, does not operate more restrictively than is contemplated by the agreement. By s.29(2) a contract term is deemed to satisfy the requirement of reasonableness under the Act if it is incorporated or approved by, or incorporated pursuant to a decision or ruling of, a competent authority acting in the exercise of any statutory jurisdiction or function and is not a term in a contract to which the competent authority is itself a party. The effect of these cumbersome provisions is to preserve the principle of limitation of the carrier’s liability under the applicable Convention in that this principle is a contractual provision authorised or required by an enactment in the shape of the Carriage by Air Act 1961. Special contracts (such as those made pursuant to the Montreal Agreement) which make the carriage subject to a higher limit of liability for death or personal injury are also arguably preserved by s.29(1)(a) insofar as the Convention text is a Schedule to the Act. Under the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999, ¹⁶⁰ which implement Council Directive 93/13, the Competition and Markets Authority had powers to consider complaints ¹⁶¹ and if necessary take action in the High Court to prevent the continued use of an unfair term. ¹⁶² In 1999, a number of terms in the standard conditions of carriage recommended by IATA were the subject of a complaint, upheld by the Office of Fair Trading (the predecessor body of the CMA). The terms were redrafted, no application to the Court being needed.

Misconduct

35-035

In cases governed by the Warsaw Convention 1929, the carrier is not entitled to avail itself of the provisions which limit or exclude its liability, ¹⁶³ if the damage is caused by its wilful misconduct or by such default on its part as, in accordance with the law of the court seised of the case, is considered to be equivalent to wilful misconduct; or by the wilful misconduct or equivalent fault of any servant or agent of the carrier acting within the scope of his or her employment. ¹⁶⁴ The test of “wilful misconduct” having proved unsatisfactory, a new formulation was adopted in the Hague Protocol of 1955. Under the Warsaw-Hague text and the MP4 Convention, the limits of the liability specified in art.22 do not apply if it is proved that the damage ¹⁶⁵ resulted from an act or omission of the carrier, its servants or agents, done with intent to cause damage or recklessly and with knowledge that damage would probably result; provided that, in the case of such act or omission of a servant or agent, it is also proved that he or she was acting within the scope of his or her employment. ¹⁶⁶ In the Montreal Convention 1999, intentional or reckless misconduct is relevant in passenger cases only in respect of liability for delay. ¹⁶⁷

35-036

This loss of the carrier’s protection by virtue of misconduct has been much debated as far as the construction of the expressions “with intent to cause damage” and “recklessly and with knowledge that damage would probably result” is concerned. It seems clear that the probability of the result qualifies the nature of the act or omission of the carrier, i.e. if the nature of the act or omission necessarily makes damage—any damage—probable and not just possible, the requirements of the Convention provision will be met. ¹⁶⁸ The probability does not have to be high or predominant ¹⁶⁹; one just anticipates damage from the act or omission. “Probably” just means that something is likely to happen. ¹⁷⁰

A subjective test

35-037

In construing the term “recklessly and with knowledge that damage would probably result” the courts have applied a subjective approach. It must be shown that the relevant actor himself had knowledge that damage would probably result. It is not enough to show that some other person had that knowledge, or that he would have had it if only he had applied his mind to the matter. ¹⁷¹ So in a case involving a failure by the commander of a passenger aircraft to give warnings of turbulence, ¹⁷² the Court of Appeal held that if the pilot did not know that damage would probably result from his omission, the court was not entitled to attribute to him knowledge which another pilot might have possessed or which he himself should have possessed. Similarly, it has been held that there can be no reliance on “background knowledge”, facts within a pilot’s knowledge but not present in his mind at the time of the relevant acts or omissions, even if, had he thought about them, they would have led to him appreciating the probability of damage, in this context. ¹⁷³

35-038

Taken to its logical conclusion, the subjective test would make it impossible for a plaintiff to establish misconduct by the carrier other than in the exceptional case. It is submitted that a fairer balance has to be struck between the parties. That such a balance can be achieved was demonstrated by a Canadian decision in which it was held that where, on the evidence, goods must have been stolen by some employee of the carrier having access to them, and where it could be concluded that they had been stolen in the course of that employee's employment, it was not necessary specifically to identify the thief before concluding that in stealing them he had acted with intent to cause damage or recklessly and with knowledge that damage would probably result. A thief must be deemed to have knowledge that theft is damaging to the owner. ¹⁷⁴

35-039

Misconduct of course not only covers the acts or omissions of the carrier's employees or agents but also embraces the acts or omissions of the carrier itself at corporate level. If therefore the carrier has a reckless system—say, with regard to the operation of procedures to ensure the safety of passengers—or if he has failed to modify his system in light of painful experience—this may lead to a finding of misconduct.

Liability of carrier's employees or agents

35-040

If the action is brought, not against the carrier, but against his employees or agents, they are entitled to avail themselves of the limit of liability which the carrier himself could have invoked, provided they prove that they were acting within the scope of their employment. This is expressly provided in the Warsaw-Hague text, ¹⁷⁵ the MP4 Convention, ¹⁷⁶ and the Montreal Convention 1999, ¹⁷⁷ and is generally taken to have been the case under the Warsaw Convention 1929. ¹⁷⁸ It is further provided that, in that case, the aggregate amount recoverable from the carrier and his employees and agents is not to exceed that limit. If the damage resulted from an act or omission of the employee or agent done with intent to cause damage or recklessly and with knowledge that damage would probably result, that fact has the same effect on the liability of the carrier, his employees and agents as similar conduct by the carrier himself.

Fatal accidents

35-041

Section 3 of the Carriage by Air Act 1961 provides that references in s.1 of the Fatal Accidents Act 1976 to a wrongful act, neglect or default shall include references to any occurrence which gives rise to liability under the applicable convention. ¹⁷⁹ Hence, in the event of the death of a passenger, the Fatal Accidents Act 1976 will determine which dependants can recover damages for the loss of their breadwinner. ¹⁸⁰ The damages are not limited to financial loss. ¹⁸¹

Several actions by one passenger

35-042

The limitations on liability in art.22 of the Warsaw-Hague text, in the MP4 Convention, and in arts 21 and 22 of the Montreal Convention 1999 apply whatever the nature of the proceedings by which liability may be enforced. They apply to the aggregate liability of the carrier in all proceedings which may be brought against it under the law of any part of the United Kingdom, together with any proceedings brought against it outside the United Kingdom. ¹⁸² These provisions are also applied by the Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 ¹⁸³ to proceedings under the unamended Warsaw Convention and under that Convention as amended by Montreal Additional Protocol No.1; and by the Civil Liability (Contribution) Act 1978 to proceedings under that Act to recover contribution from any other person liable in respect of the same damage. ¹⁸⁴ A court may, at any stage of the proceedings, make any such order as appears to the court to be just and equitable in view of the limits set in the Conventions and of any proceedings which have been, or are likely to be, commenced in the United Kingdom or elsewhere to enforce the liability in whole or in part. ¹⁸⁵ The court is expressly given jurisdiction to award an amount less than it would have awarded if the limitation in the applicable Convention applied solely to the proceedings before the court, and can make any part of its award conditional on the result of any other proceedings.¹⁸⁶ Where there are claims under both the Fatal Accidents Act 1976 and the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1934 and the combined total damages would exceed the applicable Convention limit, the amounts recoverable under art.22(1) will be apportioned by the court in accordance with s.4(2) of the Carriage by Air Act 1961,¹⁸⁷ the court making such order as is just and equitable.

Overbooking

35-043

Whilst it is not unreasonable for a carrier to exclude liability for damage occasioned by delay in the event inter alia of facts beyond his control or facts not reasonably to be anticipated there seems no good reason for a carrier to escape liability when the likelihood of delay is in practical terms reasonably foreseeable. This could happen, for example, when a carrier overbooks the capacity of an aircraft on a particular flight as a matter of commercial policy, thus deliberately creating a risk that he will not be able to accommodate all the passengers who hold tickets and who turn up for the flight. The policy of overbooking was examined by the House of Lords in British Airways Board v Taylor,¹⁸⁸ a case on the applicability of s.14 of the Trade Descriptions Act 1968 to air carriers' reservations. Although at one stage, airlines sought to avoid liability through terms in their Conditions of Carriage, most have now adopted a "denied boarding compensation policy". It seems likely that liability for "overbooking" would arise outside art.19 which in all versions of the Warsaw Convention and in the Montreal Convention 1999 governs liability for delay. Decisions in other jurisdictions show a tendency to treat such cases as amounting to nonperformance of the contract rather than as creating delay in the carriage by air.¹⁸⁹ Denied boarding compensation under European Parliament and Council Regulation 261/2004¹⁹⁰ applies, inter alia, to denied boarding as a result of overbooking.

Successive carriers

35-044

A carriage to be performed by several successive carriers is deemed to be one undivided carriage for the purposes of the Convention if it is regarded by the parties as a single operation, whether there is a single contract or a series of contracts, and it does not lose its international character merely because one contract or a series of contracts is to be performed entirely within the territory of the same state.¹⁹¹ Each carrier who accepts passengers, baggage or cargo under such a carriage is subjected to the rules of the Convention, and is deemed to be one of the contracting parties to the contract of carriage insofar as the contract deals with that part of the carriage which is performed under his supervision.¹⁹² In the case of carriage of this nature, however, the passenger or his representative can only sue the carrier who performed the carriage during which the accident or the delay occurred, except when by express agreement the first carrier assumed liability for the whole journey.¹⁹³ IATA Conditions negative any such agreement.¹⁹⁴ Hence, if part of the carriage not only is, but to the knowledge of the passenger is to be, performed by a carrier other than the one who made the contract, the liability of each carrier is limited to what happens during his part of the journey.

Contracting carriers and "actual" carriers

35-045

The situation is different, however, if one carrier makes the contract with the passenger, and another carrier by virtue of authority from the first performs the whole or part of the carriage without becoming a "successive carrier" as above defined. This would happen if, for instance, the passenger was not told at the time when he made his contract that another carrier would perform the whole or part of the carriage. This situation is dealt with by the Guadalajara Convention 1961, which is supplementary to the Warsaw Convention and has the force of law in the United Kingdom by virtue of the Carriage by Air (Supplementary Provisions) Act 1962.¹⁹⁵ With minor drafting changes, the text of the Guadalajara

Convention is incorporated as Ch.V (arts 39 to 48) of the Montreal Convention 1999. The general effect is that in relation to the carriage performed by the actual carrier, an action for damages may be brought, at the option of the plaintiff, against that carrier or the contracting carrier, or against both together or separately. If the action is brought against only one of those carriers, that carrier will have the right to require the other carrier to be joined in the proceedings, the procedure and effects being governed by the law of the court seised of the case. ¹⁹⁶ The rules of the applicable convention will govern all claims, ¹⁹⁷ but the aggregate of the amounts recoverable from the actual carrier and the contracting carrier (and from their respective employees and agents acting within the scope of their employment) may not exceed the highest amount which could be awarded against either the contracting carrier under that Convention, or against the actual carrier under that Convention, as applied by the Guadalajara Convention. ¹⁹⁸ Each carrier is, in general, benefitted by, and liable for, the other's acts and omissions and those of the other's employees or agents acting within the scope of their employment; but those of the actual carrier and of his employees or agents are of course only imputed to the contracting carrier in relation to that part of the carriage which the actual carrier performs, and vice versa. ¹⁹⁹ Thus, if the actual carrier and his employees and agents took all necessary measures to avoid the damage, the contracting carrier can rely on this fact as a defence. On the other hand, no act or omission of the contracting carrier or his employees or agents will subject the actual carrier to liability exceeding the limits specified in art.22 of the Warsaw Convention ²⁰⁰; nor can the actual carrier be adversely affected by any special contract between the passenger and the contracting carrier which has the effect of enlarging his liability, unless the actual carrier agreed to it. ²⁰¹

European legislation ²⁰² requires the "air carriage contractor" to inform the passenger of the identity of the operating air carrier or carriers at the time of reservation, or on the identity of the relevant carrier becoming known, or at the latest at check-in (or on boarding if no check-in is required). It is an offence not to comply with this requirement. ²⁰³

Sub-contracted carriage

35-046

The Guadalajara Convention appears to assume that, as between the passenger and the contracting carrier, the contracting carrier is entitled to sub-contract the contract of carriage to another carrier. Airlines' conditions of contract always reserve the right to substitute other carriers for the whole or part of the journey in question. ²⁰⁴ In the absence of such a term, where for example a passenger negotiated a contract with the owner of a light aircraft for a flight to a family function on a basis akin to that of an air-taxi flight, it is not clear whether the pilot could sub-contract the carriage to another. There is very little English authority as to when a contract of carriage can be subcontracted. Even if an unauthorised sub-contracting amounted, on the facts of a particular case, to a breach of contract, it is very doubtful whether this would disqualify the contracting carrier from relying on the defences and limitations of liability contained in the Warsaw Convention.

35-047

It has been held sufficient to create a "successive carrier" situation where a contractual carrier's timetable forms part of the contract of carriage and makes it clear that part of the carriage is to be performed by another carrier. ²⁰⁵ This was in a pre-Guadalajara Convention case. The provisions of the Guadalajara Convention make it unnecessary, however, to contrive "successive carrier" relationships.

Disabled persons and persons with reduced mobility

35-048

 European Parliament and Council Regulation 1107/2006 concerning the rights of disabled persons and persons with reduced mobility when travelling by air applies in respect of both disabled persons and persons with reduced mobility, defined as: "any person whose mobility when using transport is reduced due to any physical disability (sensory or locomotor, permanent or temporary, intellectual disability or impairment, or any other cause of disability, or age, and whose situation needs appropriate attention and the adaptation to his or her particular needs of the service made available to all passengers)", ²⁰⁶ thus including the blind, the old and also those with a temporary injury. ²⁰⁷ In the United Kingdom enforcement of Regulation 1107/2006 is by means of a civil procedure which replaced the earlier criminal offences. ²⁰⁸  create offences for breach of Regulation 1107/2006. Regulation 1107/2006 applies to persons using or intending to use commercial passenger air services departing from, transiting through or arriving at an airport in an EU Member State; and departing from an airport in a third country to an airport in an EU Member State, if the operating carrier is a Union air carrier (but only with regard to the provisions on prevention of refusal of carriage and assistance by air carriers). ²⁰⁹

Air carriers, their agents and tour operators must not refuse, on grounds of disability or reduced mobility, to accept a flight reservation or embark a person (provided the person has a valid ticket and reservation), and must not require that the person can only travel if accompanied by another person who can give assistance. ²¹⁰ If applicable safety requirements, the size of the aircraft or its doors, makes embarkation physically impossible, the air carrier (or its agent or tour operator) must make reasonable efforts to propose an acceptable alternative, and the person must be offered the right of reimbursement or re-routing, and must be given reasons. ²¹¹ Amongst other obligations, airlines, their agents and tour operators must provide specified types of assistance without charge to disabled persons. ²¹² This includes carriage of recognised assistance dogs in the cabin (subject to national regulations), transport of mobility equipment, making all reasonable efforts to arrange seating to meet the person's needs, assistance in moving to toilet facilities and all reasonable efforts to give an accompanying person a seat next to the disabled person.

In Hook v British Airways Plc; Stott v Thomas Cook Tour Operators ²¹³ the claimant alleged a breach by the carrier of the obligation in art.10 to make reasonable efforts to meet his seating needs. It was held that although reg.9 of the Civil Aviation (Air Travel for Disabled Persons and Persons with Reduced Mobility) Regulations 2007 ²¹⁴ provides that a claim by a disabled person or a person with reduced mobility for an infringement of any of his rights under Regulation 1107/2006 may be made the subject of civil proceedings in the same way as any other claim in tort, this had to be interpreted so as to avoid conflict with the exclusivity provisions in art.29 of the Montreal Convention ²¹⁵ which were binding on EU institutions. It followed that a claim for damages could not be made in respect of anything occurring during the time (when the passenger is on board the aircraft or in the course of any of the operations of embarking or disembarking) ²¹⁶ in which the Convention is applicable.

^{99.} Ross v Pan American Airways Inc, 299 N.Y. 88 (1949); Block v Compagnie Nationale Air France, 386 F. 2d 323 (1967) US Court of Appeals, 5th Cir.

^{100.} Passenger Conditions (PSC(24) 1724) art.1.

^{101.} Western Digital Corp v British Airways Plc [2001] Q.B. 733 CA.

^{102.} Drion, pp.58–62. cf. Herd v Clyde Helicopters Ltd [1997] A.C. 534; Re Mexico City Aircrash of 31 October, 1979, 708 F. 2d 400 (1983) US Court of Appeals, 9th Cir.

^{103.} Laroche v Spirit of Adventure (UK) Ltd [2009] EWCA Civ 12, [2009] Q.B. 778.

^{104.} Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.3(1).

^{105.} Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.3(1); Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.3(1). See Abnett v British Airways Plc [1997] A.C. 430 HL; and the cargo case of Fujitsu Computer Products Corp v Bax Global Inc [2005] EWHC 2289 (Comm), [2006] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 231.

^{106.} Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.3(1).

^{107.} Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.3(2).

- 108. Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.3(4).
- 109. Fosbrooke-Hobbes v Airwork Ltd [1937] 1 All E.R. 108.
- 110. Mertens v Flying Tiger Line Inc, 341 F.2d. 851 (1965) US Court of Appeals, 2nd Circuit; Warren v Flying Tiger Line Inc, 352 F.2d. 494 (1965) US Court of Appeals, 9th Circuit.
- 111. Lisi v Alitalia-Linee Aeree Italiane SpA [1967] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 140 US Court of Appeals, 2nd Circuit; affirmed [1968] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 505 US Supreme Court. This decision also rested on an interpretation of the unamended Convention (as to the effect of omitting the required statement) which was later rejected by the US Supreme Court: Chan v Korean Air Lines Ltd, 109 S.Ct. 1676 (1989). In Canada, the legibility test in Lisi v Alitalia-Linee Aeree Italiane SpA was applied in respect of the "notice" required by the Warsaw-Hague text (Montreal Trust Co v Canadian Pacific Airlines Ltd [1977] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 80 Supreme Court of Canada), but not followed in the context in which it was decided, that of the "statement" in the unamended Convention, in Ludecke v Canadian Pacific Airlines Ltd [1979] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 260 Supreme Court of Canada.
- 112. Chan v Korean Air Lines Ltd, above.
- 113. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.3(2). See Preston v Hunting Air Transport Ltd [1956] 1 Q.B. 454. The provisions excluding or limiting liability include art.20 (which enables the carrier to escape liability if he proves that he, his servants and agents have taken all necessary measures), art.21 (contributory negligence) and art.22 (limit to damages payable by the carrier).
- 114. See above, para.35-023.
- 115. Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.3(2); Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.3(2).
- 116. Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.3(5).
- 117. Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.34; Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.34; Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.51; Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.34.
- 118. European Parliament and Council Regulation 211/2005 art.11. Failure to comply is made an offence by the Civil Aviation (Provision of Information to Passengers) Regulations 2006 (SI 2006/3303).
- 119.  European Parliament and Council Regulation 1008/2008 of 24 September 2008 on common rules for the operation of air services in the Community art.23(1); Air Berlin Plc & Co Luftverkehrs KG v Bundesverband der Verbraucherzentralen und Verbraucherverbände—Verbraucherzentrale Bundesverband eV (C-290/16). For enforcement in the UK, see Pt 2 of the Operation of Air Services in the Community (Pricing etc.) Regulations 2013 (SI 2013/486).
- 120. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.33; Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.33; Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.33; Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.27. Note the possible relevance of Equality Act 2010 s.29 (discrimination in the provision of services). However in Hook v British Airways Plc; Stott v Thomas Cook Tour Operators [2014] UKSC 15, [2014] A.C. 1347 where the Act was not in issue, it was held that the Montreal Convention was intended to deal comprehensively with the carrier's liability so that a claim for breach of duty under equality laws or alleging ill-treatment of a disabled passenger was precluded.
- 121. PSC(24)1724, art.7.1. For overbooked flights, see below, para.35-043.
- 122. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.17.
- 123. Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.17(1).

- 124. Zicherman v Korean Air Lines Ltd, 116 S.Ct. 629 (1996).
- 125. Walz v Clickair SA (C-63/09) [2010] E.C.R. I-4239.
- 126. Adatia v Air Canada (1992) 2 S. & B. Av. R. VII/63 CA; Galvin v Aer Rianta Unreported October 13, 1993 Irish High Ct; Phillips v Air New Zealand [2002] EWHC 800 (Comm), [2002] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 801; Barraclough v Thomas Cook Airlines Ltd Unreported April 23, 2010 (Manchester Cty Ct) (wheelchair incident 300 metres from departure gate; not “embarking”).
- 127. See the tripartite test developed in the American cases of Day v Trans World Airlines Inc, 528 F. 2d. 31 (1975) US Court of Appeals, 2nd Cir (cert. denied 429 US 890 (1976)); and Evangelinos v Trans World Airlines Inc, 550 F.2d. 152 (1976) US Court of Appeals, 3rd Cir; and a test based on location in MacDonald v Air Canada, 439 F.2d. 1402 (1971) US Court of Appeals, 1st Cir.
- 128. This approach is to be found in a number of cases in civil law jurisdictions: e.g. Maché v Air France, 20 R.F.D.A. 228 (1966) Cour de Cassation. See also Hernandez v Air France, 545 F. 2d. 279 (1976) 1st Cir (cert. denied 97 S.Ct. 1592 (1977)), speaking of the need for a logical nexus between air travel per se and the accident. See Shawcross and Beaumont, at Vol.1, paras VII[721]–[723].
- 129. Civil Aviation Act 1982 s.75(4).
- 130. Air France v Saks, 105 S.Ct. 1338 (1985) cf. Chaudhari v British Airways Plc, The Times, May 7, 1997 CA (passenger with paralysis of the left side of his body could not claim that a fall on board the aircraft occurring as he tried to stand was an “accident”); Barclay v British Airways Plc [2008] EWCA Civ 1419, [2009] 1 All E.R. 871 (passenger’s slip on standard feature of passenger cabin, a plastic strip covering the seat fix tracking, not an “accident”); Buckley v Monarch Airlines Ltd Unreported September 19, 2012, (Manchester Cty Ct) (spillage of hot drink held not an “accident”: the spillage was unexplained, creating doubt as to the element of “externality”); Ford v Malaysian Airline Systems Berhad [2013] EWCA Civ 1163, [2014] 1 Lloyd’s Rep. 301 (passenger unable to urinate during flight due to a medical condition, so “internal” to the passenger; diuretic administered by a doctor also on board; later tests suggested that treatment inappropriate; held not an “unusual” event for the purposes of art.17).
- 131. Wallace v Korean Air, 214 F. 3d 293 (2000) 2nd Cir.
- 132. Morris v KLM Royal Dutch Airlines [2001] EWCA Civ 790, [2001] 3 All E.R. 126.
- 133. See Morris v KLM Royal Dutch Airlines, above; King v Bristow Helicopters Ltd [2002] UKHL 7, [2002] 2 A.C. 628.
- 134. Re Deep Vein Thrombosis and Air Travel Group Litigation [2005] UKHL 72, [2006] 1 A.C. 495. For a full discussion, see Shawcross and Beaumont, at Vol.1, paras VII[691] et seq.
- 135. Olympic Airways v Husain, 124 S.Ct. 1221 (2004).
- 136. Olympic Airways v Husain, 124 S.Ct. 1221 (2004); Povey v Qantas Airways Ltd [2005] HCA 33, (2005) 216 A.L.R. 427; Deep Vein Thrombosis and Air Travel Group Litigation [2003] EWCA Civ 1005, [2004] Q.B. 234, per Lord Phillips of Worth Matravers M.R. and the same case on appeal, [2005] UKHL 72, [2006] 1 A.C. 495, per Lord Mance.
- 137. The view taken in Blansett v Continental Airlines Inc 379 F 3d 177 (2004) 5th Cir.
- 138. Eastern Airlines Inc v Floyd, 111 S.Ct. 1489 (1991); Kotsambasis v Singapore Airlines Ltd (1997) 148 A.L.R. 498 N.S.W. CA. The position stated in the text was accepted by counsel for both parties in Sidhu v British Airways Plc [1995] P.I.Q.R. P427 CA, but some doubt was expressed by Lord Hope on appeal in the same case: Abnett v British Airways Plc [1997] A.C. 430.

- 139. Morris v KLM Royal Dutch Airlines, above; King v Bristow Helicopters Ltd [2002] UKHL 7, [2002] 2 A.C. 628.
- 140. Ehrlich v American Airlines Inc, 360 F. 3d 366 (2004) 2nd Cir.
- 141. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.20(1); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.20; Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.20.
- 142. Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.19. For the application of the Montreal Convention 1999 to govern the liability of European Union air carriers, see above, para.35-018.
- 143. 100,000 SDRs in the original text of the Convention, raised to 113,100 SDRs by a decision of the ICAO Council under art.24 of the Convention, given effect in England by the Carriage by Air (Revision of Limits of Liability under the Montreal Convention) Order 2009 (SI 2009/3018).
- 144. Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.21(2).
- 145. [1963] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 626.
- 146. Goldman v Thai Airways International Ltd (1981) 125 S.J. 413 (reversed on other grounds [1983] 1 W.L.R. 1186 CA). A similar interpretation was arrived at in United International Stables Ltd v Pacific Western Airlines Ltd (1969) 5 D.L.R. 3d 67 Supreme Court of British Columbia; and Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co v Alitalia, 429 F.Supp. 964 (1977) US District Court. The approach in this last decision was expressly approved in Swiss Bank Corp v Brink's-MAT Ltd [1986] Q.B. 853 at 96–97.
- 147. Swiss Bank Corporation v Brink's-MAT Ltd, above, at 97.
- 148. Kahn-Freund, p.727.
- 149. Goldman v Thai Airways International Ltd (1981) 125 S.J. 413; reversed on another ground [1983] 1 W.L.R. 1186 CA: see below, para.35-037.
- 150. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.21.
- 151. Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.21.
- 152. Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.21(1).
- 153. Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.20. For the application of the Montreal Convention 1999 to govern the liability of European Union air carriers, see above, para.35-018.
- 154. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.22.
- 155. Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.22.
- 156. Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.22.
- 157. 100,000 SDRs in the original text of the Convention, raised to 113,100 SDRs by a decision of the ICAO Council under art.24 of the Convention, given effect in England by the Carriage by Air (Revision of Limits of Liability under the Montreal Convention) Order 2009 (SI 2009/3018).
- 158. Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.21. For the application of the Montreal Convention 1999 to govern the liability of European Union air carriers, see above, para.35-018.
- 159. See generally, Shawcross and Beaumont, at Vol.1, paras VII[183] et seq.

- 160. SI 1999/2083. The Regulations were revoked and replaced by the Consumer Rights Act 2015 with effect from October 1, 2015. See generally Ch.38, and on the enforcement powers in particular, paras 38-387 et seq.
- 161. reg.10 as substituted by SI 2013/783 and as amended by SI 2014/549.
- 162. reg.12, as amended by SI 2014/549.
- 163. See above, para.35-025.
- 164. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.25. See Horabin v British Overseas Airways Corp [1952] 2 All E.R. 1016; Rustenburg Platinum Mines Ltd v South African Airways [1977] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 564; Thomas Cook Group Ltd v Air Malta Co Ltd [1997] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 399; Rolls Royce Plc v Heavylift-Volga DNEPR Ltd [2000] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 796.
- 165. See Goldman v Thai Airways International Ltd [1983] 1 W.L.R. 1186 CA, for the view that the damage anticipated must be of the same kind of damage as that suffered.
- 166. Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.25; Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.25.
- 167. Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.22(5). For the application of the Montreal Convention 1999 to govern the liability of European Union air carriers, see above, para.35-018.
- 168. Goldman v Thai Airways International Ltd (1981) 125 S.J. 413. See, generally, Bin Cheng (1977) 2 Annals of Air and Space Law 55.
- 169. Goldman v Thai Airways International Ltd, above.
- 170. Goldman v Thai Airways International Ltd [1983] 1 W.L.R. 1186 CA, per Eveleigh L.J. at 1196; Qantas Airways Ltd v SS Pharmaceutical Co Ltd [1991] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 288 NSWCA.
- 171. SS Pharmaceutical Co Ltd v Qantas Airways Ltd [1989] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 319 NSW Supreme Court.
- 172. Goldman v Thai Airways International Ltd [1983] 1 W.L.R. 1186 CA. See also Gurtner v Beaton [1993] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 369 CA; Connaught Laboratories Ltd v British Airways (2002) 217 D.L.R. (4th) 717 Ont.
- 173. Nugent v Michael Goss Aviation Ltd [2000] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 222 CA (but note the observations of Pill L.J. as to the possible relevance of the pilot's "fund of knowledge", the general knowledge his experience of flying brings him).
- 174. Swiss Bank Corp v Air Canada (1981) 129 D.L.R. (3d) 85 at 95, 104 Federal Court, Canada (affirmed (1987) 44 D.L.R. (4th) 680 Federal Court of Appeal).
- 175. Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.25A.
- 176. Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.25A.
- 177. Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.30.
- 178. Reed v Wiser, 555 F. 2d 1079 (1977) 2nd Cir.
- 179. Carriage by Air Act 1961 s.3 as amended by SI 1999/1312 and SI 2002/263.
- 180. Kandalla v British European Airways [1981] Q.B. 158.
- 181. Preston v Hunting Air Transport Ltd [1956] 1 Q.B. 454.

- 182. Carriage by Air Act 1961 s.4, as amended by SI 1999/1312 and SI 2002/263.
- 183. SI 2004/1899 art.7.
- 184. Civil Liability (Contribution) Act 1978 s.2(3).
- 185. Carriage by Air Act 1961 s.4(2), as amended by SI 1999/1312 and SI 2002/263.
- 186. Carriage by Air Act 1961 s.4(3), as amended by SI 1999/1312 and SI 2002/263.
- 187. As amended by SI 2002/263.
- 188. [1976] 1 W.L.R. 13.
- 189. Wolgel v Mexicana Airlines, 821 F. 2d 442 (1987) US Court of Appeals, 7th Circuit; Bundesgerichtshof, September 20, 1978, 1979 Z.L.W. 134.
- 190. See para.35-071.
- 191. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.1(3); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.1(3); Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.1(3); Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.1(3). See Rotterdamsche Bank NV v BOAC [1953] 1 W.L.R. 493, see below, para.35-047. Both parties to the contract of carriage must regard the carriage as a single, individual operation: Karfunkel v Compagnie Nationale Air France, 427 F.Supp. 971 (1977) New York District Court; Bafana v Commercial Airways (Pty) Ltd [1990] (1) S.A. 368 Witwatersrand Ct.
- 192. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.30(1); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.30(1); Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.30(1); Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.36(1). A carrier may be a successive carrier under art.30 even where the contract of carriage was incomplete to the extent that return flights were not agreed upon, provided that the completion of the contract and consequent amendment of the ticket were within the contemplation of the parties when the contract was made. The completion and amendment will relate back to the time of making of the contract, thus making the carrier in question a successive carrier: Briscoe v Compagnie Nationale Air France, 290 F.Supp. 863 (1968) New York District Court.
- 193. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.30(2); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.30(2); Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.30(2); Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.36(2).
- 194. PSC(24)1724 art.15.1.2(b).
- 195. The 1962 Act was drafted so as to be supplementary to both the Warsaw Convention 1929 and the Warsaw-Hague text; it has been amended to perform the same function in respect of the MP4 Convention: Carriage by Air (Supplementary Provisions) Act 1962 s.2(1)(b), as amended by SI 1999/1312.
- 196. Carriage by Air (Supplementary Provisions) Act 1962 Sch. art.VII; Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.45.
- 197. Carriage by Air (Supplementary Provisions) Act 1962 Sch. art.II; Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.40.
- 198. Carriage by Air (Supplementary Provisions) Act 1962 Sch. art.VI; Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.44.
- 199. Carriage by Air (Supplementary Provisions) Act 1962 Sch. art.III; Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.41.

- 200. Carriage by Air (Supplementary Provisions) Act 1962 Sch. art.III(2); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.41(2).
- 201. Carriage by Air (Supplementary Provisions) Act 1962 Sch. art.III(2); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.41(2).
- 202. European Parliament and Council Regulation 2111/2005 of December 14, 2005 on the establishment of a Community list of air carriers subject to an operating ban within the Community and on informing air transport passengers of the identity of the operating air carrier and repealing Article 9 of Directive 2004/36 arts 10–13.
- 203. Civil Aviation (Provision of Information to Passengers) Regulations 2006 (SI 2006/3303).
- 204. For code-shares, see IATA recommended conditions (PSC(24)1724) art.2.3.
- 205. Rotterdamsche Bank NV v British Overseas Airways Corp [1953] 1 W.L.R. 493. The use of joint designator codes, identifying two carriers in respect of the same journey, will have the same effect.
- 206. Regulation 1107/2006 art.2(a).
- 207. It applies with effect from July 26, 2007 with regard to the provisions on refusal of carriage, and with effect from July 26, 2008 with regard to the other provisions: Regulation 1107/2006 art.18.
- 208.  Civil Aviation (Access to Air Travel for Disabled Persons and Persons with Reduced Mobility) Regulations 2014 (SI 2014/2833), as amended by SI 2016/729 (which designates dispute resolution bodies).
- 209. Regulation 1107/2006 art.1(2) and (3). See Viegas, (2013) 38 A.S.L. 47.
- 210. Regulation 1107/2006 art.3.
- 211. Regulation 1107/2006 art.4.
- 212. Regulation 1107/2006 art.10 and Annex 2.
- 213. [2014] UKSC 15, [2014] A.C. 1347. See Prassl, (2014) 130 LQR 538.
- 214. SI 2007/1895.
- 215. See para.35-013.
- 216. See para.35-028.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 35 - Carriage by Air

Section 5. - Liability of the Carrier

(b) - Baggage

Forms of baggage

35-049

In the law of carriage by air, baggage is of two kinds. There is hand baggage, i.e. "objects of which the passenger takes charge himself" ²¹⁷ and keeps with him in the aircraft; and registered baggage, sometimes termed checked baggage, of which the carrier takes charge. This is carried in the hold of the aircraft in which the passenger travels, or of another aircraft. The IATA Conditions define baggage in general as "your personal property accompanying you in connection with your trip". ²¹⁸ The terms "registered" or "registration" used in the Convention in relation to baggage are not defined, and the English court has been prepared to interpret the Convention's provisions in relation to the carrier's liability for baggage as if the terms "registered" or "registration" were not there. ²¹⁹

Baggage check

35-050

In cases falling under the Warsaw Convention 1929, for the carriage of registered baggage, the carrier must deliver a baggage check in practice combined with the passenger ticket. The baggage check must contain the following particulars: (a) the place and date of issue; (b) the place of departure and of destination; (c) the name and address of the carrier or carriers; (d) the number of the passenger ticket; (e) a statement that delivery of the baggage will be made to the bearer of the baggage check; (f) the number and weight of the packages; (g) the amount of any value at destination declared by the passenger; and (h) a statement that the carriage is subject to the rules relating to liability established by the Warsaw Convention. ²²⁰ The absence, irregularity or loss of the baggage check does not affect the existence or the validity of the contract of carriage, which is nonetheless subject to the rules in the Convention. Nevertheless, if the carrier accepts baggage without a baggage check having been delivered, or if the baggage check does not contain particulars (d), (f) and (h), then the carrier is not entitled to avail itself of those provisions ²²¹ of the Convention which exclude or limit its liability. ²²² In cases under the Warsaw-Hague text and the MP4 Convention, in respect of the carriage of registered baggage, a baggage check must be delivered which, unless combined with or incorporated in a passenger ticket which complies with the provisions of the Convention, must contain: (a) an indication of the places of departure and destination; (b) if the places of departure and destination are within the territory of a single high contracting party, one or more agreed stopping places being within the territory of another state, an indication of at least one such stopping place; and (c) a notice to the effect that, if the carriage involves an ultimate destination or stop in a country other than the country of departure, the Warsaw Convention may be applicable and that the Convention governs and in most cases limits the liability of carriers in respect of loss of or damage to baggage. ²²³ The baggage check constitutes prima facie evidence of the registration of the baggage and of the conditions of the contract of carriage. ²²⁴ The absence, irregularity, or loss of the baggage check does not affect the existence or the validity of the contract of carriage, which is nonetheless subject to the rules of the Warsaw-Hague text. Nevertheless, if the carrier takes charge of the baggage without a baggage check having been delivered, or if the baggage check does not contain, and is not combined with or incorporated in a passenger ticket which contains, the prescribed notice as to the possible applicability of the Warsaw Convention, the carrier is not entitled to avail itself of the provisions of art.22(2) limiting its liability.²²⁵ In cases under the Montreal Convention 1999, no baggage check is required but the carrier must deliver to the passenger a baggage identification tag for each piece of checked baggage.²²⁶

Liability for damage, destruction or loss

35-051

In all cases other than those under the 1999 Convention, unless the carrier can establish one of the defences allowed by the applicable Convention (that is, either that it and its servants or agents had taken all necessary measures to avoid the damage or that it was impossible for it or for them to have taken such measures; or the defence of contributory negligence; or in cases under the 1929 Convention proof that the damage was occasioned by negligent pilotage or negligence in the handling of the aircraft or in navigation and that, in all other respects, the carrier and his servants and agents had taken all necessary measures to avoid the damage), it is liable for damage sustained in the event of the destruction, or loss of, or of damage to, any registered baggage, if the occurrence which caused the damage so sustained took place during the carriage by air.²²⁷ For this purpose, "carriage by air" comprises the period during which the baggage is in the charge of the carrier, whether in an aerodrome or on board an aircraft or, in the case of a landing outside an aerodrome, in any place whatsoever.²²⁸ Under the Montreal Convention 1999, the carrier is liable for damage sustained in case of destruction or loss of, or of damage to, checked baggage upon condition only that the event which caused the destruction, loss, or damage took place on board the aircraft or during any period within which the baggage was in the charge of the carrier. In the case of unchecked baggage, the carrier is liable if the damage resulted from its fault or that of its servants or agents. However, the carrier is not liable if and to the extent that the damage resulted from the inherent defect, quality, or vice of the baggage, checked or unchecked.²²⁹ European Parliament and Council Regulation 889/2002 applies the Montreal Convention regime to govern the baggage liability of Union air carriers.²³⁰

35-052

In cases governed by the Warsaw Convention 1929, the liability of the carrier in respect of registered baggage is limited to a sum of 250 francs per kilogramme²³¹ of the lost or damaged package,²³² and liability in respect of objects of which the passenger takes charge himself is limited to 5,000 francs per passenger.²³³ In cases governed by the Warsaw-Hague text, the limits remain as in the 1929 Convention.²³⁴ Under the Warsaw-Hague text, however, when the loss, damage or delay of a part of the registered baggage, or of an object contained therein, affects the value of other packages covered by the same baggage check, the total weight of such package or packages must also be taken into consideration in determining the limit of liability.²³⁵ The limits in the 1929 Convention and the Warsaw-Hague text as amended by Montreal Additional Protocols 1975 No.1 and No.2 respectively, and in cases under the MP4 Convention, are 17 SDRs per kilogramme for registered baggage, and 332 SDRs per passenger for unregistered baggage.²³⁶ Under the Montreal Convention 1999 (and the rules of that Convention as applied to Union air carriers under EU law) the liability of the carrier in the case of destruction, loss, damage, or delay to checked or unchecked baggage was limited in the original text of the Convention to 1,000 SDRs for each passenger.²³⁷ This limit was raised with effect from December 30, 2009 to 1,131 SDRs for each passenger.²³⁸ The Convention limits apply per passenger; this means that it is not correct to apply the limit separately to claims in respect of material and non-material damage,²³⁹ but that if a single piece of baggage contains property belonging to two or more passengers, each may recover the actual loss up to the convention maximum, and it is immaterial that there is only one baggage check.²⁴⁰ In all cases, the carrier's liability in respect of registered or checked baggage may be increased if the passenger makes, at the time when the package was handed over to the carrier, a special declaration of the value at delivery and pays a supplementary sum if the case so requires. In that case, the carrier will be liable to pay a sum not exceeding the declared sum, unless it proves that the sum is greater than the actual value to the passenger at delivery.²⁴¹

Time for making claims

35-053

Where baggage is damaged, the person entitled to delivery must complain to the carrier forthwith after the discovery of the damage, and, at the latest, within (a) under the Warsaw Convention 1929, three days from the date of receipt; and (b) under all the other conventions, seven days from the date of receipt. Where baggage is delayed, the complaint must be made at the latest within (a) under Warsaw Convention 1929, 14 days from the date on which the baggage has been placed at his or her disposal; and (b) under all the other conventions, 21 days from the date on which the baggage has been placed at his or her disposal. ²⁴² “Days” means current days, not working days. ²⁴³ If no complaint is made within the prescribed time limits, no action lies against the carrier, save in the case of fraud on its part. ²⁴⁴ Notice of complaint is not required in the case of total loss or destruction.

-
- ^{217.} Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.22(3); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.22(3); Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.1(3). The term “unchecked baggage” is used in the Montreal Convention 1999: Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.17(4) where, however, it is provided that references to “baggage” include both “checked” and “unchecked” baggage. English courts have not examined the question of the proper categorisation of baggage originally taken on board by the passenger but subsequently handed to the aircraft crew for stowage in the hold.
 - ^{218.} PSC(24)1724 art.1.
 - ^{219.} Collins v British Airways Board [1982] Q.B. 734 CA, Kerr L.J. dissenting (at 182) considered that “registration” of baggage must require the completion of a document constituting a baggage check to the effect that the carrier had taken charge of registered baggage.
 - ^{220.} Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.4.
 - ^{221.} See above, para.35-025.
 - ^{222.} Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.4(4).
 - ^{223.} Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.4(1); Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.4(1). See Collins v British Airways Board [1982] Q.B. 734 CA.
 - ^{224.} Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.4(2); Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.4(2).
 - ^{225.} Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.4(2); Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.4(2).
 - ^{226.} Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.3(3).
 - ^{227.} Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.18(1); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.18(1); Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.18(1). For the meaning of “damage”, see Walz v Clickair SA [2011] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 1037, and para.35-028, above.
 - ^{228.} Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.18(2); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.18(2); Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.18(2).
 - ^{229.} Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.17(2)(4).
 - ^{230.} See above, para.35-018.
 - ^{231.} Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.22(2).
 - ^{232.} cf. the cargo case of Data Card Corp v Air Express International Corp [1984] 1 W.L.R. 198.

- 233. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.22(3).
- 234. Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.22(2)(3) (which, as amended by the Carriage by Air and Road Act 1979 s.4, actually contains the limits as amended by Montreal Additional Protocol No.2 of 1975); Bland v British Airways Board [1981] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 289 CA; Collins v British Airways Board [1982] Q.B. 734 CA.
- 235. Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.22(2)(b). cf. the cargo case of Allied Implants Technology Ltd v Lufthansa Cargo AG [2000] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 46.
- 236. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.3 art.22(2)(3); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.22(2)(3) (as amended by the Carriage by Air and Road Act 1979 s.4); Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.22(2)(a), (3).
- 237. Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.22(2) (applied to European Union air carriers by Council Regulation 2027/97 art.3.1 as substituted by Parliament and Council Regulation 889/2002).
- 238. By a decision of the ICAO Council under art.24 of the Convention, given effect in England by the Carriage by Air (Revision of Limits of Liability under the Montreal Convention) Order 2009 (SI 2009/3018).
- 239. Walz v Clickair SA [2011] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 1037.
- 240. Bundesgerichtshof, March 15, 2011, XZR 99/10.
- 241. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.22(2); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.22(2)(a); Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.22(2)(a); Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.22(2).
- 242. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.26(2); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.26(2); Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.26(2); Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.31(2).
- 243. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.35; Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.35; Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.35; Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.52.
- 244. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.26(4); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.26(4); Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.26(4); Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.31(4).

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 35 - Carriage by Air

Section 5. - Liability of the Carrier

(c) - Cargo

Air waybill

35-054

In cases governed by the Warsaw Convention 1929 or the Warsaw-Hague text, every carrier of cargo has the right to require the consignor to make out and hand over to him a document called an air waybill. ²⁴⁵ Though the legal responsibility for making out the waybill and for ensuring the correctness of its contents is that of the consignor, ²⁴⁶ in practice the carrier can make out the waybill ²⁴⁷ and, if he does, is deemed to have done so on the consignor's behalf. When more than one package is consigned, the carrier has the right to require a separate waybill for each package. ²⁴⁸ Each air waybill is made out in a set of three: the consignor and carrier retain one each, while the third copy is for the consignee and travels with the cargo. ²⁴⁹ In practice, sets of air waybills may include as many as 15 copies, with three "top copies". In practice, air waybills are not negotiable, though a provision introduced in the Hague Protocol 1955 makes it clear that negotiable air waybills are a possibility. ²⁵⁰

Statements in waybill

35-055

The statements in the waybill relating to the weight, dimensions and packing of the cargo, and to the number of packages, are prima facie evidence of the facts stated; but those relating to the quantity, volume and condition of the cargo do not constitute evidence against the carrier unless they both have been, and are stated in the waybill to have been, checked by him in the presence of the consignor, or relate to the apparent condition of the cargo. ²⁵¹

Absence of waybill, etc

35-056

The absence, irregularity or loss of the document does not affect the existence or validity of the contract of carriage, which continues to be governed by the rules of the applicable convention. In a case governed by the Warsaw Convention 1929, the air waybill must contain many prescribed particulars, and if the carrier accepts cargo without an air waybill having been made out, or if the air waybill does not contain the prescribed particulars, the carrier is not entitled to avail itself of the provisions ²⁵² which exclude or limit its liability. ²⁵³ In a case governed by the Warsaw-Hague text, the air waybill must contain the same notice as to the applicability of the Convention as is required for passenger tickets and baggage checks. ²⁵⁴ If, with the consent of the carrier, cargo is loaded on board the aircraft without an air waybill having been made out, or if the air waybill does not contain a notice to the effect that the Convention governs, the carrier cannot avail himself of the limitations on his liability contained in art.22. ²⁵⁵ This is subject to the same exception as in the case of passenger tickets and baggage checks. ²⁵⁶

Cargo documentation under recent conventions

35-057

The MP4 Convention and the Montreal Convention 1999 also provide that in respect of the carriage of cargo an air waybill must be delivered. ²⁵⁷ However, in cases governed by these conventions any other means that would preserve a record of the carriage to be performed may, with the consent of the consignor, be substituted for the delivery of an air waybill. If such other means are used, the carrier must, if so requested by the consignor, deliver to the consignor a receipt for the cargo permitting identification of the consignment and access to the information contained in the record preserved by such other means. ²⁵⁸ Under the MP4 Convention, the impossibility of using, at points of transit and destination, the other means that would preserve the record of the carriage does not entitle the carrier to refuse to accept the cargo for carriage. ²⁵⁹

Acceptability of goods for carriage

35-058

The IATA recommended Conditions of Carriage for Cargo entitle the carrier to examine the packaging and contents of all shipments, ²⁶⁰ to the extent permitted by law, to refuse carriage of cargo when circumstances so require. ²⁶¹ The cargo must be packed in an appropriate way for air carriage so as to ensure that it can be carried safely with ordinary care in handling and so as not to injure or damage any persons, goods or property. ²⁶² Where dangerous goods are to be carried, the consignor must furnish a dangerous goods transport document, describing and certifying the goods in accordance with the current Technical Instructions for the Safe Transport of Dangerous Goods by Air prepared by ICAO. ²⁶³

Liability for damage, destruction or loss

35-059

In cases governed by the Warsaw Convention 1929 or the Warsaw-Hague text, unless the carrier can establish one of the defences allowed by the applicable Convention (that is, either that it and its servants or agents had taken all necessary measures to avoid the damage or that it was impossible for them to have taken such measures; or in the case of the unamended Convention that the damage was occasioned by negligent pilotage or negligence in the handling of the aircraft and that in all other respects, the carrier and its servants and agents have taken all necessary measures to avoid the damage; or the defence of contributory negligence), it is liable for damage ²⁶⁴ sustained in the event of the destruction or loss of, or of damage to, any cargo if the occurrence ²⁶⁵ which caused the damage so sustained took place during the carriage by air. ²⁶⁶ For this purpose, "carriage by air" comprises the period during which the cargo is in the charge of the carrier, whether in an aerodrome or on board an aircraft, or in the case of a landing outside an aerodrome in any place whatsoever. ²⁶⁷ In cases governed by the MP4 Convention, the carrier is liable, subject to the question of contributory negligence for damage sustained in the event of the destruction or loss of, or damage to, cargo upon condition only that the occurrence which caused the damage so sustained took place during the carriage by air. However, the carrier is not liable if it proves that the destruction or loss of, or damage to, the cargo resulted solely from: (a) the inherent defect, quality or vice of the cargo; (b) defective packing of that cargo performed by a person other than the carrier or its servants or agents; (c) an act of war or an armed conflict; or (d) an act of public authority carried out in connection with the entry, exit or transit of the cargo. ²⁶⁸ Similar rules as to liability are to be found in the Montreal Convention 1999, ²⁶⁹ where there is a simplified definition of the period of carriage by air. ²⁷⁰

Upper financial limit of liability

35-060

In cases governed by the Warsaw Convention 1929, the liability of the carrier in respect of cargo is limited to a sum of 250 francs per kilogramme of the lost or damaged package.²⁷¹ In cases governed by the Warsaw-Hague text, the limits remain as in the 1929 Convention.²⁷² Under the Warsaw-Hague text, however, when the loss, damage or delay of a part of the cargo, or of an object contained therein, affects the value of other packages covered by the same air waybill, the total weight of such package or packages must also be taken into consideration in determining the limit of liability.²⁷³ The limits in the 1929 Convention and the Warsaw-Hague text as amended by Montreal Additional Protocol 1975 No.1 and No.2 respectively, and in cases under the MP4 Convention are 17 SDRs per kilogramme.²⁷⁴ The same limit was set in the original text of the Montreal Convention 1999 but the limit was raised with effect from December 30, 2009 to 19 SDRs per kilogramme.²⁷⁵ In all cases, the carrier's liability may be increased if the consignor makes, at the time when the package was handed over to the carrier, a special declaration of the value at delivery and pays a supplementary sum if the case so requires. In that case, the carrier will be liable to pay a sum not exceeding the declared sum, unless it proves that the sum is greater than the actual value to the consignor at delivery.²⁷⁶

Stoppage in transit

35-061

Under the Sale of Goods Act 1979, the consignor, if he is an unpaid seller who has learnt of the insolvency of the buyer, has a right to instruct the carrier to stop the goods while they are in transit.²⁷⁷ The Convention gives the consignor, as between himself and the carrier,²⁷⁸ a much more extensive power of withdrawing, stopping or deflecting cargo, which is not dependent on the insolvency of the buyer or even on the existence of a contract of sale between the consignor and consignee. Subject to his liability to carry out all his obligations under the contract of carriage, and provided that the cargo has not arrived at the place of destination²⁷⁹ the consignor may withdraw the cargo at the aerodrome of departure or destination, stop it in the course of the journey on any landing, direct that it shall be delivered to a person other than the consignee named in the air waybill, or require it to be returned to the aerodrome of departure. He must not exercise this right of disposition in such a manner as to prejudice the carrier or other consignors and he must repay any expenses occasioned by the exercise of the right.²⁸⁰ The carrier may refuse to obey the consignor only if to obey is impossible.²⁸¹ The rights which the consignee may have against the consignor as a result of the latter's action remain unaffected by the Convention. The consignor's right of disposal ceases when that of the consignee begins, i.e. when the cargo arrives at the place of destination.²⁸²

Delivery to the consignee

35-062

On arrival of the cargo, the carrier must give notice of the fact to the named consignee, unless the contract provides to the contrary.²⁸³ The consignee is then entitled to require delivery of the air waybill and of the cargo on payment of outstanding charges and compliance with any relevant conditions of carriage set out in the waybill.²⁸⁴ Under the IATA recommended Conditions of Carriage, the consignee must accept delivery of and collect the shipment at the airport of destination or a facility designated by the carrier, unless delivery service has been specified.²⁸⁵ Delivery to the consignee is deemed to have been effected when the carrier has delivered to the consignee or its agent any authorisation required to obtain release of the shipment and the shipment has been delivered to customs or any other government authorities as required by applicable law or customs regulations.²⁸⁶

Failure to take delivery

35-063

If the consignee refuses or fails to take delivery of the cargo, the carrier's rights and powers are closely defined in the IATA recommended Conditions of Carriage. In the absence of previous instructions from the consignor given on the face of the air waybill in anticipation of this kind of emergency, or if such instructions cannot reasonably be complied with, the carrier will send notice of the failure to take delivery to the consignor, and may return the cargo to the airport of departure to await the instructions of the consignor, or may even, after 30 days, sell it. ²⁸⁷ In the case of perishable goods, delivery of which is refused, or which are unclaimed or for other reasons threatened with deterioration, the carrier may immediately take such steps as he sees fit for the protection of himself and other parties in interest, including storage, sale, abandonment and even destruction of the goods. ²⁸⁸ Expenses incurred in meeting the contingency of refusal to take delivery are charged to the consignor. ²⁸⁹

Time for making claims: damage or delay

35-064

Where cargo is damaged, the person entitled to delivery must complain to the carrier forthwith after the discovery of the damage, and, at the latest, within (a) under the Warsaw Convention 1929, seven days from the date of receipt; and (b) under all the other conventions, 14 days from the date of receipt. Where cargo is delayed, the complaint must be made at the latest within (a) under Warsaw Convention 1929, 14 days from the date on which the baggage has been placed at his or her disposal; and (b) under all the other conventions, 21 days from the date on which the baggage has been placed at his or her disposal. ²⁹⁰ "Days" means current days, not working days. ²⁹¹ If no complaint is made within the prescribed time limits, no action lies against the carrier, save in the case of fraud on his part. ²⁹² Notice of complaint is not required in the case of total loss or destruction.

Loss of cargo

35-065

In cases of loss, that is where there is no delivery, the conventions do not impose a time limit for complaint, but the IATA recommended Conditions of Carriage provide that complaint must be made in the case of non-delivery within 120 days of the date on which the goods ought to have arrived at the destination. In some jurisdictions such a contractual term has been approved on the ground that it does not conflict with anything in the Warsaw Convention rules, but the better view appears to be that such a notice requirement is void as tending to relieve the carrier of liability. ²⁹³ If the carrier admits the loss of the cargo, or if the cargo has not arrived at the expiration of seven days after the date on which it ought to have arrived, the consignee is entitled to put into force against the carrier the rights which flow from the contract of carriage. ²⁹⁴

Who can sue the carrier?

35-066

If goods are lost or damaged during transit, the general rule of common law in the case of carriage by land is that the owner of the goods is the person entitled to sue the carrier. ²⁹⁵ If goods are being carried because they have been sold, the owner will usually be the consignee; and the consignor is deemed to contract with the carrier as agent for the consignee. These principles of the common law are in general, unaffected by the Convention, which, as we have just seen, ²⁹⁶ gives the right of action in the case of loss to the consignee, ²⁹⁷ and in the case of damage or delay requires the person entitled to delivery to complain in writing to the carrier before bringing his action. ²⁹⁸ The "person entitled to delivery" is normally the consignee, but may exceptionally be the consignor if he has exercised his extensive rights of stoppage in transitu. ²⁹⁹ A literal interpretation of the Convention text suggests that the consignor never has a right of action in the event of loss of goods. This appears to follow from the restriction of the right of action to the consignee in cases of loss and from the fact that all rights of action must be brought subject to the conditions set out in the applicable Convention. ³⁰⁰ In practice actions are often brought in the name of consignors. ³⁰¹

35-067

At common law, in the case of carriage by land, a stranger to the contract of carriage, one who is neither the consignor nor the consignee, may be able to sue the carrier in tort or in bailment if he can show that the carrier owed him a duty of care, or if he can show the necessary proprietary interest on which to base an action for conversion. The question arises whether such a stranger can sue the carrier by air. It has been argued that he cannot, because the Convention text gives no rights of action to anyone except the consignor and consignee, and provides that any action for damages, however founded, can only be brought subject to the conditions and limitations set out in the applicable Convention ³⁰²; with the significant exception that this is without prejudice to the question who can sue for the death of a passenger. ³⁰³ This is the conclusion which foreign courts have come to on this question, though by no means unanimously. ³⁰⁴ The English court has, however, followed a forceful Commonwealth decision ³⁰⁵ and held that there is nothing in the Convention to prevent the owner of goods from bringing an action in his own name against an air carrier if goods are lost or damaged: the Convention was silent when it could easily have excluded the rights of the real party in interest had that been the draftsman's intention. In the circumstances, the lex fori can fill the gaps and allow a right of action to those who, like the owner of the goods, could sue the carrier at common law. ³⁰⁶ It seems, then, that the Convention in granting rights of action to consignors and consignees which they would not have had at common law is not to be construed as having abrogated rights of action possessed by owners of goods at common law. ³⁰⁷

Who pays freight?

35-068

The Convention does not deal with the question of who is liable to the carrier for the payment of freight and other charges. This is dealt with by the IATA recommended Conditions of Carriage, of which three features are noteworthy here. First, the carrier is entitled to payment in full, whether or not the cargo is lost or damaged or fails to arrive. ³⁰⁸ Secondly, the consignor guarantees payment of all the carrier's unpaid charges, advances, disbursements and any costs which the carrier may incur by reason of the carriage of cargo prohibited by law or incorrectly described. By taking delivery or exercising any other right under the contract of carriage, the consignee agrees to pay the charges, but not so as to discharge the consignor's guarantee. ³⁰⁹ Thirdly, the carrier has a lien on the cargo for all such charges; the lien is enforceable by sale after notice to the consignor or consignee. ³¹⁰

^{245.} Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.5(1); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.5(1).

^{246.} Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) art.10(1); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.10(1).

^{247.} Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.6(5); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.6(5).

^{248.} Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.7; Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.7.

^{249.} Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.6(1)(2); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.6(1)(2).

^{250.} Carriage by Air 1961 Sch.1 art.15(3). See generally Gatewhite Ltd v Iberia Lineas Aereas de España Soc [1989] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 160.

^{251.} Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.11(2); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.11(2).

^{252.} See above, para.35-025.

^{253.} Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.9;

Corocraft Ltd v Pan American Airways Inc [1969] 1 Q.B. 616 CA.

- 254. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.8; see above, para.35-023. There must be an identifiable notice; it is not sufficient that there are conditions from which the applicability of the Convention may be discovered: Fujitsu Computer Products Corp v Bax Global Inc [2005] EWHC 2289 (Comm), [2006] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 231.
- 255. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.9; see below, para.35-060. An air waybill does not have to be signed under art.6(2) to be "made out" within the meaning of art.9 and the carrier can still limit his liability: United International Stables Ltd v Pacific Western Airlines Ltd (1969) 5 D.L.R. (3d) 67 Supreme Court of British Columbia.
- 256. SI 2004/1899 art.34; see above, para.35-025.
- 257. Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.5(1); Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.4(1).
- 258. Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.26(4); Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.4(2).
- 259. Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.5(3).
- 260. CSC1601 art.3.6.
- 261. CSC1601 art.3.1.1.2.
- 262. CSC1601 art.3.3.1.
- 263. Air Navigation (Dangerous Goods) Regulations 2002 (SI 2002/2786). These regulations are regularly amended, most recently by SI 2011/1454, to refer to the most recent edition of the Technical Instructions.
- 264. For the meaning of "damage", see Walz v Clickair SA [2011] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 1037, and para.35-028, above.
- 265. Winchester Fruit Ltd v American Airlines Inc [2002] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 265.
- 266. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.18(1); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.18(1). For the relationship between the Warsaw Convention and the CMR Convention see Quantum Corp Inc v Plane Trucking Ltd [2002] EWCA Civ 350, [2002] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 25; and Schenker International (Australia) Pty Ltd v Siemens Ltd, NSWCA, Appeal 40760 of 2001, 2002.
- 267. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.18(2); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.18(2); Swiss Bank Corp v Brink's-MAT Ltd Unreported November 14, 1985 QBD; Rolls Royce Plc v Heavylift-Volga DNEPR Ltd [2000] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 653. cf. Victoria Sales Corp v Emery Air Freight Inc, 917 F. 2d 705 (1990) 2nd Cir; United International Stables Ltd v Pacific Western Airlines Ltd (1969) 5 D.L.R. (3d) 67 Brit Columbia Sup Ct.
- 268. Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.18(3).
- 269. Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.18(1)(2).
- 270. Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.18(3)(4).
- 271. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.22(2); Data Card Corp v Air Express International Corp [1984] 1 W.L.R. 198.
- 272. Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.22(2) (which, as amended by the Carriage by Air and Road

- Act 1979 s.4, actually contains the limits as amended by Montreal Additional Protocol No.2 of 1975).
- 273. Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.22(2)(b); Allied Implants Technology Ltd v Lufthansa Cargo AG [2000] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 46.
- 274. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.3 art.22(2); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.22(2)(3) (as amended by the Carriage by Air and Road Act 1979 s.4); Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.22(2)(a); Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.22(2).
- 275. By a decision of the ICAO Council under art.24 of the Convention, given effect in England by the Carriage by Air (Revision of Limits of Liability under the Montreal Convention) Order 2009 (SI 2009/3018).
- 276. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.22(2); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.22(2)(a); Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.22(2)(a); Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.22(2).
- 277. ss.44-46.
- 278. The Guadalajara Convention requires the orders of the consignor under art.12 of the Warsaw Convention to be addressed to the contracting carrier rather than to an actual carrier: 1962 Act Sch. art.IV.
- 279. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 arts 12(4), 13(1); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 arts 12(4), 13(1); Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 arts 12(4), 13(1); Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 arts 12(4), 13(1).
- 280. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.12(1); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.12(1); Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.12(1); Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.12(1). See generally Morton-Norwich Products Inc v Intercen Ltd [1978] R.P.C. 501.
- 281. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.12(2); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.12(2); Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.12(2); Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.12(2). The IATA recommended Conditions of Carriage (CSC1601) use the phrase "not reasonably practicable" where the convention texts have "impossible" (art.7.2.2); this makes practical sense but the convention text awaits judicial interpretation on this point.
- 282. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 arts 12(4), 13(1); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 arts 12(4), 13(1); Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 arts 12(4), 13(1); Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 arts 12(4), 13(1).
- 283. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.13(2); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.13(2); Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.13(2); Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.13(2). See the IATA recommended Conditions of Carriage (CSC1601) art.8.1.
- 284. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.13(1); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.13(1); Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.13(1); Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.13(1).
- 285. CSC1601 art.8.3.
- 286. CSC1601 art.8.2.
- 287. CSC1601 art.8.4. There will, of course, usually be in these circumstances a bailment giving the bailee ultimate powers of sale under the Torts (Interference with Goods) Act 1977 s.12.

- 288. CSC1601 art.8.5.
- 289. CSC1601 art.8.5.2.
- 290. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.26(2); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.26(2); Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.26(2); Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.31(2). “Damage” includes the loss of part of the contents: Fothergill v Monarch Airlines Ltd [1981] A.C. 251; Carriage by Air Act 1961 s.4A as inserted by the Carriage by Air and Road Act 1979 s.4 and as amended by SI 2002/263. The test for the adequacy of the notice of complaint is an objective one: Western Digital Corp v British Airways Plc [2001] Q.B. 733 CA.
- 291. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.35; Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.35; Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.35; Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.52.
- 292. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.26(4); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.26(4); Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.26(4); Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.31(4).
- 293. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.23; Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.23; Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.23; Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.26. See Shawcross and Beaumont at Vol.1, para.VII[944]. Loss of part of the contents is treated as “damage”: Fothergill v Monarch Airlines Ltd [1981] A.C. 251; Carriage by Air Act 1961 s.4A as inserted by the Carriage by Air and Road Act 1979 s.4 and as amended by SI 1999/1312 and SI 2000/263.
- 294. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.13(3); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.13(3); Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.13(3); Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.13(3). See Gatewhite Ltd v Iberia Lineas Aereas de España [1989] 1 Lloyd’s Rep. 160; and Shawcross and Beaumont at Vol.1, para.VII[933].
- 295. cf. below, paras 36-043—36-044.
- 296. See above, para.35-065.
- 297. Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.13(3).
- 298. Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.26(2).
- 299. See above, para.35-061.
- 300. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 1967 (SI 1967/480) Sch.2 arts 13(3) and 24(1); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 arts 13(3) and 24(1); Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 arts 13(3) and 24(1); Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 arts 13(3) and 29. cf. Gatewhite Ltd v Iberia Lineas Aereas de Espana [1989] 1 Lloyd’s Rep. 160; Western Digital Corp v British Airways Plc [2001] Q.B. 733 CA.
- 301. See, e.g. Samuel Montagu and Co Ltd v Swiss Air Transport Co Ltd [1966] 2 Q.B. 306.
- 302. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.24(1); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.24(1); Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.24(1); Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.29.
- 303. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.24(2); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.24(2); Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.24(2); Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.29.
- 304. See Shawcross and Beaumont at Vol.1, paras VII[967] et seq.

- 305. Tasman Pulp and Paper Co Ltd v Brambles JB O'Loughlen Ltd [1981] 2 N.Z.L.R. 225.
- 306. Gatewhite Ltd v Iberia Lineas Aereas de España Sociedad [1990] 1 Q.B. 326; Thomas Cook Group Ltd v Air Malta Co Ltd [1997] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 399; Western Digital Corp v British Airways Plc [2001] Q.B. 733 CA. cf. dicta of Lord Hope of Craighead in Abnett v British Airways Plc [1997] A.C. 430; Lord Hope thought it more consistent with the purpose of the Convention to regard it as providing a uniform rule about who can sue for goods which are lost or damaged during carriage by air, with the result that the owner who is not a party to the contract has no right to sue in his own name; but the point was not fully argued.
- 307. Tasman Pulp and Paper Co Ltd v Brambles JB O'Loughlen Ltd, above, at 235.
- 308. Conditions of Carriage art.5.4.2.
- 309. Conditions of Carriage art.5.4.3.
- 310. Conditions of Carriage art.5.4.3.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 35 - Carriage by Air
Section 5. - Liability of the Carrier
(d) - Delay to Passengers, Baggage or Cargo

Liability for delay

35-069

! The carrier is liable for damage occasioned by delay in the carriage by air of passengers, baggage or cargo. ³¹¹ The carrier may, however, rely on a number of defences: (a) proof that he and his servants or agents have taken all necessary measures to avoid the damage or that it was impossible to take them ³¹²; (b) in the case of the unamended Warsaw Convention 1929 that the damage was occasioned by negligent pilotage or negligence in the handling of the aircraft and that in all other respects, the carrier and its servants and agents have taken all necessary measures to avoid the damage ³¹³; and (c) contributory negligence. ³¹⁴ In the carriage of baggage and cargo, the provisions as to timely notice of complaint apply. ³¹⁵ Delay means failure to complete the carriage in a reasonable time. ³¹⁶ The effect of the provisions in Conditions of Carriage that the carrier “does not guarantee flight times shown in timetables and they do not form part of your contract with us” ³¹⁷ is merely to prevent the carrier being under a stricter liability than is imposed by the applicable Convention. Although “punitive, exemplary or non-compensatory” may not be awarded under the Montreal Convention 1999, damages may be awarded to compensate passengers for the stress, inconvenience, frustration and disruption to their holiday caused by the delay in the arrival of their baggage at their destination. ³¹⁸

! There can be liability to persons other than the delayed passenger. The CJEU held (Air Baltic Corp AS v Lietuvos Respublikos specialioji tyrimu tarnyba (C-429/14) [2016] 1 Lloyd’s Rep. 407) that art.19 of the Montreal Convention applies not only to the damage suffered by a passenger but also to the damage suffered by a person in its capacity as an employer who had concluded a contract of international carriage with an air carrier for the purpose of carriage of passengers who were its employees.

! Delay is to be distinguished from “non-performance”, the latter falling outside the scope of the Montreal Convention (see Shawcross and Beaumont on Air Law, para.VII1003.1 and the very full judgment in Chaing v Air Canada Unreported, January 22, 2016 (Cty Ct at Kingston-upon-Thames)).

Upper limit of liability

35-070

In cases governed by the Warsaw Convention 1929, the liability of the carrier for delay is limited to a sum of 125,000 francs per passenger; 250 francs per kilogramme in the case of registered baggage or cargo; and 5,000 francs per passenger in respect of objects of which the passenger takes charge. ³¹⁹ In cases governed by the Warsaw-Hague text, the passenger limit is raised to 250,000 francs, ³²⁰ but the other limits are unchanged. The Warsaw-Hague figures are restated in Montreal Protocol No.2 of 1975 as 16,600 SDRs, 17 SDRs per kilogramme, and 332 SDRs per passenger, ³²¹ and these limits were retained in the MP4 Convention. ³²² The limit of the carrier’s liability under the original text of the Montreal Convention 1999 was set in the carriage of passengers at 4,150 SDRs per passenger, in the carriage of baggage at 1,000 SDRs per passenger, and 17 SDRs per kilogramme of cargo ³²³; the limits were raised 4,694 SDRs, 1,131 SDRs and 19 SDRs with effect from December 30, 2009. ³²⁴

European Parliament and Council Regulation 261/2004

35-071

! Passengers denied boarding or subjected to cancellation of or long delay to their journey are entitled to compensation and other assistance under European Parliament and Council Regulation 261/2004. ³²⁵ The Regulation applies to passengers departing from an airport in the EU, and to passengers departing from an airport in a non-EU State on a flight operated by an EU carrier to an airport in an EU State. ³²⁶ For this purpose, each leg of the passenger's intended journey is to be considered separately. ³²⁷ Cancelled flights and delayed flights are two quite distinct categories of flights. A flight is "delayed" for the purposes of Regulation 261/2004 if it is operated in accordance with the original planning and its actual departure time is later than the scheduled departure time ³²⁸; a flight is "cancelled" only if the passengers are carried on another flight whose original planning is different from that of the flight for which the booking was made. ³²⁹ The provisions of the Regulation do not operate to limit the liability of the carrier for delay under the Warsaw or Montreal Conventions. It has been argued persuasively ³³⁰ that payments under Regulation 261/2004 are non-compensatory and therefore conflict with art.29 where both the Convention and the Regulation apply; this argument was rejected by the European Court. ³³¹ In March 2013, the Commission published a proposal for the revision of Regulation 261/2004. ³³²

! For commentary on many aspects of the Regulation, see Bobek and Prassl, Air Passenger Rights: Ten Years On (2016).

! Regulation 261/2004 only applies (Regulation 261/2004 art.3) to passengers who have a confirmed reservation on the flight concerned (Kupeli v Sirketti [2016] EWHC 930 (QB)) and, except in the case of cancellation, present themselves for check-in by a time specified by the air carrier, the tour operator or an authorised travel agent, or, if no time is indicated, not later than 45 minutes before the published departure (see Caldwell v easyJet Airline Co Ltd, 2015 GWD 34-546 (Sheriff Court (Lothian and Borders) (Edinburgh)) (arrival two hours before scheduled departure but unable to check-in before 45 minute deadline owing to slow-moving queues; held within the Regulation).

! Difficult issues have arisen in cases involving connecting flights. The European Commission has proposed a new provision that where a passenger misses a connecting flight as a result of a delay to a preceding connecting flight, the passenger is to have a right to compensation by the Community air carrier operating that preceding flight; for this purpose, the delay would be calculated by reference to the scheduled time of arrival at the final destination (COM/2013/0130 final).

Remedies

35-072

! The Regulation obliges airlines to make available to passengers one or more of the following three remedies: compensation; reimbursement or re-routing; and care. The level of compensation payable depends upon the length of the flight: (a) €250 for flights of 1,500 km or less; (b) €400 for intra-EU flights of more than 1,500 km and other flights between 1,500 and 3,500 km; (c) €600 for all other flights. ³³³ The remedy of reimbursement or re-routing obliges the airline to offer the passenger the choice between: (a) reimbursement of the full ticket cost for the part or parts of the journey not made, and for the part or parts already made if the flight is no longer serving any purpose in relation to the passenger's original travel plan, together with, when relevant, a return flight to the first point of departure at the earliest opportunity; (b) re-routing under comparable transport conditions to final destination at the earliest opportunity or, at the passenger's choice, at a later date. ³³⁴  The obligation on the airline to provide care entails the provision of: (a) meals and refreshments in a reasonable relation to the waiting time; (b) hotel and accommodation where necessary, and related transport; and (c) two telephone calls, telex or fax messages or emails. ³³⁵ In the case of cancellation of a flight, each of the three remedies applies, except that an airline will not be obliged to pay compensation if: (a) it can prove that the cancellation was caused by extraordinary circumstances which could not have been avoided even if all reasonable measures had been taken ³³⁶ ; or (b) the airline informs passengers of the cancellation within certain time-limits and subject to certain further conditions. ³³⁷ The defence of extraordinary circumstances does not apply to the other remedies. ³³⁸ In the case of delay, the airline is obliged to provide reimbursement or re-routing and the prescribed types of care where a flight is expected to be delayed: (a) for two hours or more in the case of flights of 1,500 km or less; (b) for three hours or more in the case of intra-EU flights of more than 1,500 km and other flights between 1,500 and 3,500 km; or (c) for four hours or more in the case of other flights; provided that, where the delay is at least five hours, the airline must also provide the passenger with reimbursement and, when relevant, a return flight to the first point of departure. ³³⁹ Nothing is said in art.6 about compensation for delayed passengers. However, the court in Sturgeon v Condor Flugdienst GmbH ³⁴⁰ held that the object of the Regulation was to redress damage consisting, for the passengers concerned, in a loss of time which damage is suffered both by passengers whose flights are cancelled and by passengers whose flights are delayed. In particular, the situation of passengers whose flights are delayed was scarcely distinguishable from that of passengers whose flights were cancelled and then re-routed in accordance with art.5(1)-(c)(iii). The court held, therefore, that passengers whose flights are delayed may rely on the right to compensation laid down in art.7 of Regulation 261/2004 where they suffer, on account of such flights, a loss of time equal to or in excess of three hours, that is to say when they reach their final destination three hours or more after the arrival time originally scheduled by the air carrier. ³⁴¹

Limitation

35-073

The limitation period applying to claims under the Regulation is determined by national law ³⁴² and so in English law is the six-year period prescribed by the Limitation Act 1980 (and not the two-year period in the Montreal Convention 1999). ³⁴³

^{311.} Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.19; Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.19; Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.19 (using different language); Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.19.

^{312.} Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.20(1); Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.20; Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.20; Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.19.

^{313.} Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.20(2).

^{314.} Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.21; Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.21; Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.21; Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.20.

^{315.} See above, paras 35-053 and 35-064—35-065.

^{316.} Panalpina International Transport Ltd v Densil Underwear Ltd [1981] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 187. See also Bart v British West Indian Airways Ltd [1967] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 239 Guyana CA.

^{317.} See IATA Recommended Conditions (PSC(24)1724), art.9.1.1.

- 318. O'Carroll v Ryanair 2009 S.C.L.R. 125.
- 319. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) Sch.2 art.22.
- 320. Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.22 as originally enacted.
- 321. Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1 art.22 as amended by the Carriage by Air and Road Act 1979 s.4(1).
- 322. Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1A as inserted by SI 1999/1312 art.22.
- 323. Carriage by Air Act 1961 Sch.1B as inserted by SI 2002/263 art.22.
- 324. By a decision of the ICAO Council under art.24 of the Convention, given effect in England by the Carriage by Air (Revision of Limits of Liability under the Montreal Convention) Order 2009 (SI 2009/3018).
- 325. European Parliament and Council Regulation 261/2004 of February 11, 2004 establishing common rules on compensation and assistance to passengers in the event of denied boarding and of cancellation or of long delay in flights. The applicable jurisdictional rules are those in Council Regulation 44/2001 of December 22, 2000 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters; a claimant can bring his action in the courts for either the place of departure and the place of destination: Rehder v Air Baltic Corp (C-204/08) [2009] E.C.R. I-6073.
- 326. Regulation 261/2004 art.3.
- 327. Emirates Airlines Direktion für Deutschland v Schenkel (C-173/07) [2008] E.C.R. I-5237; Sanghvi v Cathay Pacific Airways [2011] EWHC 1684 (Ch), [2012] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 46.
- 328. Regulation 261/2004 applies where the delay is caused by overbooking or for other reasons (Finnair Oyj v Lassooy (C-22/11) [2013] 1 C.M.L.R. 18; Rodriguez Cachafeiro v Iberia, Lineas Aereas de España SA (C-321/11) [2013] 1 C.M.L.R. 19).
- 329. Sturgeon v Condor Flugdienst GmbH (C-402/07) [2010] All E.R. (EC) 660, heard with Böck v Air France SA (C-432/07); and see Sousa Rodriguez et al v Air France SA (C-83/10) [2012] C.M.L.R. 40.
- 330. S Hobe, W Müller-Rostin and A Recker, "Fragwürdiges aus Luxemburg zur Verordnung 261/2004", (2010) 61 ZLW 149.
- 331. Nelson v Deutsche Lufthansa AG [2013] 1 C.M.L.R. 42, followed in Cuadrench Moré v Koninklijke Luchtv tschappij NV (C-139/11) [2013] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 341.
- 332. COM/2013/0130 final.
- 333. Regulation 261/2004 art.7. The amount of mandatory compensation is halved when the airline offers re-routing to final destination on a flight which arrives not later than two, three or four hours respectively later than the original scheduled arrival time: Regulation 261/2004 art.7(2). Compensation is payable to delayed passengers (despite the Regulation's silence on this point) when they reach their final destination three hours or more after the arrival time originally scheduled: Sturgeon v Condor Flugdienst GmbH (C-402/07) [2010] All E.R. (EC) 660. It is not essential that there should also have been a delayed departure (Air France SA v Folkerts (C-11/11) [2013] 2 C.M.L.R. 44). Compensation under art.7 does not preclude further compensation, under the Montreal Convention 1999 or national law (Sousa Rodriguez v Air France SA (C-83/10) [2012] 1 C.M.L.R. 40; McDonagh v Ryanair Ltd (C-12/11) [2013] 2 C.M.L.R. 32; Graham v Thomas Cook Group UK Ltd [2012] EWCA Civ 1355).
- 334.  Regulation 261/2004 art.8. Breach of art.8 does not give rise to a civil action for damages: Graham v Thomas Cook Group UK Ltd [2012] EWCA Civ 1355. The Civil Aviation Authority is responsible for enforcement in the UK: Civil Aviation (Denied Boarding, Compensation and Assistance) Regulations 2005 (SI 2005/975) reg.5(1). Dispute resolution bodies are specified in reg.5(2) as substituted by SI 2016/729.

- 335. Regulation 261/2004 art.9. The duty to provide care has been held to be on-going and to last until (a) the passenger's arrival to its final destination or (b) its election to make its own way to its final destination: Hendy v Iberian Lineas de Espana SA (Oxford Cty Ct, March 21, 2011); Rozen v EasyJet Airline Co Ltd (Croydon Cty Ct, December 15, 2011).
- 336.  Wallentin-Hermann v Alitalia Linee Aeree Italiane SpA (C-549/07) [2008] E.C.R. I-11061, applied in Sturgeon v Condor Flugdienst GmbH (C-402/97) [2009] E.C.R. I-10923. See Harbord v Thomas Cook Airlines UK Ltd (Oxford Cty Ct, 2006), noted (2006) 156 N.L.J. 1124; Eglitis v Latvijas Republikas Ekonomiskās ministrija; Jet2.com Ltd v Huzar (C-294/10) [2014] EWCA Civ 791 (technical problem in carrier's aircraft cannot amount to "extraordinary circumstances"); Van der Lans v Koninklijke Luchtvaartmaatschappij NV (C-257/14); Pešková v Travel Service a.s. (C-315/15) (bird strike held to be an extraordinary circumstance; reasonable measures include control measures preventing the presence of birds provided that those measures do not require the carrier to make intolerable sacrifices in the light of the capacities of its undertaking).
- 337. Regulation 261/2004 art.5.
- 338. Hence, the obligation of airlines to provide hotel accommodation, sometimes for many days, during the dislocation in air travel caused by the spread of volcanic ash from an eruption of the Icelandic volcano Eyjafjallajökull in April 2010. See Marshall v Iberia Lineas Aereas De Espana SA (Mayor's and City of London Ct, December 13, 2010) (after cancellation due to volcanic ash, passenger had the choice of either being re-routed or accepting reimbursement and making his own transport arrangements; if the latter course was chosen the Regulation did not require the carrier to fund those arrangements); Rozen v EasyJet Airline Co Ltd (Croydon Cty Ct, December 15, 2011). On the meaning of "extraordinary circumstances", see the Opinion of Adv Gen Bot in McDonagh v Ryanair Ltd (C-12/11) (delivered March 22, 2012).
- 339. Regulation 261/2004 art.6.
- 340. C-402/07 [2009] E.C.R. I-10923.
- 341.  The Sturgeon decision was the subject of strong criticism (e.g. Balfour (2010) 35 A.S.L. 71) but was reaffirmed in Nelson v Deutsche Lufthansa AG (C-581/10) [2013] 1 C.M.L.R. 42; see Radošević (2013) 38 A.S.L. 95 and, for a defence of the decision by Judge Malinovský, Bobek and Prassl, Air Passenger Rights: Ten Years On (2016), p.25. "Arrival time" is the time at which at least one of the aircraft doors is opened to allow passengers to disembark: Germanwings GmbH v Henning (C-452/13) [2015] C.E.C. 661.
- 342. Cuadrench Moré v Koninklijke Luchtvaartmaatschappij NV (C-139/11) [2013] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 341.
- 343. Dawson v Thomson Airways Ltd [2014] EWCA Civ 845.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 35 - Carriage by Air

Section 6. - Non-international Carriage

Applicable rules

35-074

! The Conventions treated above regulate only international carriage. Carriage which is not international carriage as defined in any of the Conventions falls outside the Convention system. The applicable law is to be found in two sources. Union air carriers engaged in the carriage of persons or baggage are subject to European Parliament and Council Regulation 889/2002, ³⁴⁴ which applies to national as well as international carriage. The liability of other air carriers, and Union air carriers engaged in the carriage of cargo, is governed by Sch.1 to the Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004, ³⁴⁵ which applies a modified version of the Montreal Convention 1999. Subject to the Regulation, the 2004 Order applies to all carriage by air other than carriage to which the Warsaw-Hague text, the MP4 Convention or the Montreal Convention 1999 applies, and Sch.1 applies to carriage which is not international carriage as defined in Schs 2 or 3 (applying the original Warsaw Convention and that Convention as amended by Montreal Additional Protocol No.1 of 1975). ³⁴⁶ To avoid giving too extensive a scope to the predecessor provisions, for it was arguable that the provisions of the United Kingdom Order applied to internal carriage in other countries, the House of Lords held that their application is limited to (a) carriage in which the places of departure and destination and any agreed stopping places are all within the United Kingdom or other British territory; and (b) non-convention carriage involving a place of departure or destination or an agreed stopping place in a foreign state and a place of departure or destination or an agreed stopping place in the United Kingdom or other British territory.

! Regulation 889/2002 applies only to “air carriers” defined by art.2(1)(a) to mean air transport undertakings with valid operating licences, and to “Community air carriers” defined by art.2(1)(b) to mean air carriers with valid operating licences granted by a Member State; carriage within a single Member State to view a property from the air by a carrier not required to have a valid operating licence was held not to be within the Regulation or (as it was not international carriage; see Vol.II, para.35-012) the Montreal Convention (see Pruller-Frey v Brodnig (C-240/14)).

The modified convention regime under Sch.1 to the 2004 Order

35-075

Only parts of the Montreal Convention 1999 are applied by the 2004 Order. ³⁴⁷ Chapter II (arts 3 to 16) dealing with documentation is omitted except for parts of art.3 requiring the carrier to deliver a baggage identification tag for each piece of checked baggage. Liability for death or injury is unlimited but if the carrier proves an absence of fault there is no liability beyond 100,000 SDRs. ³⁴⁸ There are no provisions regulating the carriage of mail and postal packages save for a provision that in these cases the carrier is liable only to the relevant postal administration and in accordance with the rules applicable to the relationship between carriers and postal administrations. ³⁴⁹

- 344. See above, paras 35-018 et seq.
- 345. SI 2004/1899. Note that art.2 is amended by SI 2004/1974.
- 346. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899) arts 3(1) and 4.
- 347. Carriage by Air Acts (Application of Provisions) Order 2004 (SI 2004/1899).
- 348. Holmes v Bangladesh Biman Corp [1989] A.C. 1112.
- 349. 2004 Order Sch.1 art.2(2). See the Postal Services Act 2000 s.90; American Express Co v British Airways Board [1983] 1 W.L.R. 701; Post Office v British World Airlines Ltd [2000] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 532.

© 2018 Sweet & Maxwell

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 36 - Carriage by Land
Section 1. - Introduction
(a) - General

The law of carriage

36-001

The law of carriage of goods ¹ is a branch of the law of bailment. ² Like the law of bailment, it transcends the distinction between contract and tort. The law of carriage of passengers ³ and their luggage ⁴ similarly transcends this distinction. As the present work deals with the law of contract and not the law of tort, those aspects of the law of carriage which are part of the law of tort are discussed only briefly. The alternative remedies in tort open to a passenger or an owner of goods cannot, however, be ignored, as it is sometimes possible to bypass an exemption clause by bringing an action in tort against someone other than the contracting carrier. ⁵

Internal carriage

36-002

The law of carriage by land is of very ancient origin. ⁶ For centuries the common carrier occupied a special position in the law. Today, however, the common carrier is practically extinct. ⁷ The modern law of carriage is not so much enshrined in reported cases as exemplified by the contractual terms by which carriers define the conditions on which they are prepared to carry goods, passengers and luggage. ⁸ Any account of the modern law must necessarily take account of these contractual terms, many of which have become standard forms of contract. Some of these terms have, of course, themselves been the subject of judicial interpretation. As the rights and duties of carriers towards their customers differ from those of other intermediaries in the freight trade, it is important on occasion to distinguish between carriers by land and others concerned with the transport of goods, such as forwarding agents. ⁹

International carriage

36-003

In recent years, and particularly since 1952, ¹⁰ the international law of carriage by land has been developed by the adoption by the international community, especially in Europe, of multilateral treaties in this field. These treaties are designed to govern contracts of carriage by land between countries which have accepted the particular treaties. In particular they are intended to regulate the mutual rights and duties of carriers and their customers. The United Kingdom has accepted some of these treaties. In 1954, for example, the United Kingdom became a contracting party to two international conventions on carriage by rail. ¹¹ In 1967, the United Kingdom became a party to an international convention on carriage of goods by road. ¹² As a result of the United Kingdom government's acceptance of treaties such as these and their successors, the particular treaty régimes have become binding on the United Kingdom and as such can be said to form part of the English law of carriage by land insofar as their terms have been incorporated in Acts of Parliament either directly or by reference. ¹³

The identification of a carrier

36-004

The common law has recognised a variety of carriers—those who accept custody of or responsibility for persons or goods for the purpose of transporting them to a destination agreed between the carrier and the customer. The classification of a carrier depends on how his business of carriage is conducted. There are common carriers, private carriers and other “special” carriers. The status of the last category is dependent on Parliament’s intervention (by virtue of domestic legislation or the incorporation of international conventions) or unusual exceptions etched by the common law. Whilst these distinctions potentially have relevance in the realm of international carriage, more often they arise for consideration in connection with the internal carriage of goods and persons, and even then the distinctions have less importance than of old. For this reason, the categorisation of carriers will be discussed as part of the section on internal carriage. It should not, however, be forgotten that the distinction unexpectedly may be resuscitated when an international carriage falls for judicial consideration.

-
- ¹ See below, paras 36-007 et seq.
 - ² See above, Ch.2, and Palmer, Bailment, 3rd edn (2009). See also Holdsworth, A History of English Law, 2nd edn (1937), Vol.VIII, 259.
 - ³ See below, paras 36-054 et seq.
 - ⁴ See below, paras 36-068 et seq.
 - ⁵ See below, paras 36-044—36-046, 36-057, 36-078.
 - ⁶ See Southcote’s Case (1601) 4 Co. Rep. 83, 84.
 - ⁷ See below, paras 36-009—36-010.
 - ⁸ See Leslie, Law of Transport by Railways, 2nd edn (1928); Kahn-Freund, The Law of Inland Transport, 4th edn (1965), especially Pts 2 and 3; Halsbury’s Laws of England, 5th edn (2008), Vol.7; Clarke, International Carriage of Goods by Road: CMR, 6th edn (2014); Clarke and Yates, Contracts of Carriage by Land and Air, 2nd edn (2008).
 - ⁹ Marston Excelsior Ltd v Arbuckle, Smith and Co Ltd [1971] 2 Lloyd’s Rep. 306; Gillespie Bros and Co Ltd v Roy Bowles Transport Ltd [1973] Q.B. 400; Hair and Skin Trading Co Ltd v Norman Airfreight Carriers Ltd [1974] 1 Lloyd’s Rep. 443; Chas Davis (Metal Brokers) Ltd v Gilyott and Scott Ltd [1975] 2 Lloyd’s Rep. 422. See, generally, Hill, Freight Forwarders (1972), pp.16–25; Hill [1975] L.M.C.L.Q. 139; see below, para.36-006.
 - ¹⁰ This was when the first comprehensive Berne Rail Conventions CIM and CIV were signed. There had been earlier limited Berne Conventions on carriage by rail, the earliest being concluded in 1890. See, as to the history of the international conventions on carriage by rail, Kahn-Freund at pp.408–409. The United Kingdom ratified the Berne Conventions CIM and CIV of October 25, 1952, in 1954 and became a party to the revised CIM and CIV of February 25, 1961, on January 1, 1965 and to the further revised CIM and CIV of February 7, 1970, on January 1, 1975. Currently the United Kingdom is a party to COTIF, the revised and amalgamated convention concerning international carriage by rail of May 9, 1980. COTIF entered into force generally and for the United Kingdom on May 1, 1985, and was modified by the Protocol of June 3, 1999, which entered into force in the United Kingdom on July 1, 2006; see below, paras 36-079—36-081.
 - ¹¹ i.e. the Berne Conventions CIM and CIV of October 25, 1952.

- 12. i.e. CMR, signed at Geneva on May 19, 1956: see below, para.36-082.
- 13. See below, paras 36-079—36-081. As to the general rule regarding the municipal effect and interpretation of such treaty provisions, see James Buchanan and Co Ltd v Babco Forwarding and Shipping (UK) Ltd [1978] A.C. 141; and Fothergill v Monarch Airlines Ltd [1981] A.C. 251. The relationship between international law and national law is now clearly explained in art.8 of COTIF, as modified by the Protocol of June 3, 1999. For a survey of international carriage conventions and a search for a common substratum for all modes of carriage, see Clarke, "The transport of goods in Europe: patterns and problems of uniform law" [1999] L.M.C.L.Q. 36; Clarke and Yates, Contracts of Carriage by Land and Air, 2nd edn (2008).

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 36 - Carriage by Land

Section 1. - Introduction

(b) - Definition of Carrier

Carrier

36-005

Before the law relating to carriers and carriage by land is considered in depth below, a moment's thought should be dedicated to the issue whether in a given case a person should be described as a "carrier" at all. A "carrier" is a person who transports goods or passengers or both from any place to any place in the manner agreed with the passenger or the owner of the goods to be carried. The carrier need not be paid in any sense for this service. The test is whether the person said to be the carrier is in fact accepting the responsibility of the carriage.¹⁴ Although a person's business involves, whether necessarily or by choice, the conveyance of goods, that does not necessarily mean that that person is a carrier. If a person undertakes to carry a passenger or goods only for reasons associated with his own personal or commercial expedience, then that person is not a carrier. The carriage is not the raison d'être of that person. If the carriage is wholly incidental to that person's business, then he will not be a carrier. For example, a warehouseman,¹⁵ a stevedore¹⁶ and a wharfinger¹⁷ have all been held not to be carriers. The "carrier's" business should be examined to determine the purpose of the carriage.¹⁸ Such questions generally are more difficult to answer in the case of goods, as opposed to passengers. In the case of passengers, whether a person is acting as an agent or a carrier generally is clear.

Freight forwarder

36-006

A forwarding agent, or freight forwarder, is a person who contracts with the owner of goods to arrange for the transportation of those goods, rather than to carry the goods himself.¹⁹ A freight forwarder, therefore, usually is not classified as a carrier,²⁰ so long as he remains true to his calling. Unlike the warehouseman, the stevedore, and the wharfinger, the freight forwarder often never acquires possession (that is, custody) of the goods to be carried.²¹ As the functions of a carrier and a freight forwarder are necessarily linked, uncertainty may arise as to whether a person describing himself as a freight forwarder is in fact a carrier.²² A freight forwarder, or any goods-handler, may also contract or act as a carrier as an adjunct to their principal business.²³ It is a question of fact in every case whether a person is a carrier.²⁴

^{14.} Aqualon (UK) Ltd v Vallana Shipping Corp [1994] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 669, 676. cf. M Bardiger Ltd v Halberg Spedition APS Unreported October 26, 1990.

^{15.} Consolidated Tea and Lands Co v Oliver's Wharf [1910] 2 K.B. 395; contra Maving v Todd (1815) 1 Stark 72; Armour & Co Ltd v Tarbard Ltd (1920) 37 T.L.R. 208.

^{16.} Scruttons Ltd v Midland Silicones Ltd [1962] A.C. 446.

17. Chattock & Co v Bellamy & Co (1895) 64 L.J.Q.B. 250.
18. Lacey's Footwear (Wholesale) Ltd v Bowler International Freight Ltd [1997] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 369 where the court examined the circumstances of the making of the contract of carriage.
19. As to the distinction between a forwarder (that is, a person who contracts with the carrier as a principal, so that the owner of the goods is not a party to the contract) and a forwarding agent (who contracts on behalf of the owner of the goods with the carrier), see M Bardiger Ltd v Halberg Spedition APS Unreported October 26, 1990; Aqualon (UK) Ltd v Vallana Shipping Corp [1994] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 669, 673. See also Clarke, International Carriage of Goods by Road: CMR 6th edn (2014), para.10a.
20. Moto Vespa SA v MAT (Britannia Express) Ltd [1979] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 175, 179; Elektronska Industrija Oour TVA v Transped Oour Kintinentalna Spedicna [1986] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 49, 52; cf. Swiss Bank Corp v Brink's-MAT Ltd [1986] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 79.
21. In Kala Ltd v International Freight Services (UK) Ltd Unreported June 7, 1988, the freight forwarder was held to have exercised legitimately a contractual lien and right of detention over goods, the right to the control of which the owners had given to the freight forwarder. The court distinguished the freight forwarder's right to possession of the goods from mere custody, which was held by the actual carrier.
22. The fact that a freight forwarder describes himself as such is not a decisive answer to the question, although assistance is gained from any written contract: Lacey's Footwear (Wholesale) Ltd v Bowler International Freight Ltd [1997] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 369; see also Kala Ltd v International Freight Services (UK) Ltd Unreported June 7, 1988; M Bardiger Ltd v Halberg Spedition APS Unreported October 26, 1990; and Aqualon (UK) Ltd v Vallana Shipping Corp [1994] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 669, 676. cf. Texas Instruments Ltd v Nason (Europe) Ltd [1991] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 146.
23. Hellaby v Weaver (1851) 17 L.T.O.S. 271; Langley Beldon & Gaunt Ltd v Morley [1965] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 297, 306; Lee Cooper Ltd v CH Jeakins & Sons Ltd [1967] 2 Q.B. 1; Elektronska Industrija Oour TVA v Transped Oour Kintinentalna Spedicna [1986] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 49, 52; M Bardiger Ltd v Halberg Spedition Aps Unreported October 26, 1990.
24. Taking into account matters such as how the carrier or forwarder describes himself, how he charges, how he arranges the carriage, and what documents he issues: M Bardiger Ltd v Halberg Spedition Aps Unreported October 26, 1990.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 36 - Carriage by Land

Section 2. - Internal Carriage

(a) - Goods

(i) - Common and Private Carriers

The common carrier

36-007

At common law, the rights and obligations of a carrier are defined by contract and the status of the carrier. As regards status, the classification of the carrier as a common or private carrier ²⁵ will identify certain of the carrier's duties and liabilities. A common carrier is a person who publicly professes, orally or by conduct, to undertake for reward ²⁶ to all such persons, indiscriminately, ²⁷ who desire to employ him, the transportation of goods provided that he has room. ²⁸ It is a question of fact in each case whether a person is a common carrier. ²⁹ A common carrier does not lose his legal character because he limits the class of goods he is prepared to carry ³⁰ or the routes or areas over which he is ready to operate. ³¹ He is entitled to fix these limitations, for to compel him to do otherwise would be an intolerable and prohibitive imposition. Nor, again, does he relinquish his status because one terminus is outside the jurisdiction, ³² or because he fails altogether to fix his termini ³³ or to specify the goods he is prepared to carry. ³⁴

Abdication of status

36-008

The common carrier may voluntarily abdicate this status by giving notice that he will not accept custom from the public. Alternatively, the common carrier may shed this status as regards particular types of goods only. ³⁵ A carrier therefore may choose to be a common carrier for such times, places, and goods as he considers it appropriate, provided that he offers carriage in accordance with the calling of the common carrier and is thereby prepared to accept the burden of that calling.

The identification of a common carrier

36-009

How a carrier sees fit to describe himself is indecisive for the establishment of his status. The courts have regard solely to the substance of the matter. ³⁶ But "express and detailed professions as a common carrier are rare. In most cases, the fact that a profession has been made, and its extent, have to be collected from the conduct of the carrier". ³⁷ He is not a common carrier if he carries for particular persons only, ³⁸ or if his practice is to pick and choose among offers which consignors make him, ³⁹ or if, as a furniture-remover, his rule is not to accept whatever furniture is offered, but to inspect it to decide first whether he will take it, and at what rate. ⁴⁰ A carrier will not be a common carrier if he reserves to himself the right of refusal of the goods which a customer asks him to carry. ⁴¹ The question is always one of fact to be determined objectively, not dependent entirely upon the subjective intention of the carrier, ⁴² nor his appearance to a particular customer. In answering this question, regard may be had to the carrier's stated or published conditions of carriage ⁴³ and advertisements,⁴⁴ policies adopted by the carrier to his customers, the nature of the goods carried and the routes taken by the carrier. All aspects of the carrier's business may be considered in identifying the carrier's status.⁴⁵ The test whether a person is a common carrier generally will not turn upon whether passengers or goods are carried.⁴⁶ A common carrier may by special contract restrict his insurer's liability at common law⁴⁷ without losing his status as a common carrier.⁴⁸ To the extent that the provisions of the contract do not modify them, he is still subject to the liabilities and entitled to the rights of a common carrier at common law.

The near extinction of the common carrier

36-010

Before 1963 the railway companies, and their successor the British Transport Commission, were undoubtedly common carriers of most kinds of goods.⁴⁹ But now no person (including the franchised and privatised railway undertakings) shall be regarded as common carriers by railway.⁵⁰ Similarly, Transport for London⁵¹ and the operators of the Channel Tunnel⁵² have been declared by Parliament not to be common carriers by rail. Given the diversification in the railways industry,⁵³ it is perhaps not surprising that the common carrier by rail is now extinct. Moreover, during the last 100 years the courts have shown a tendency not to attach a common carrier's liability to carriers by road⁵⁴; and today it seems that most carriers of goods by road are private carriers, except as regards passengers' luggage in public service vehicles.⁵⁵ Under the Road Haulage Association's Conditions of Carriage of 2009, the carrier stipulates that he is not a common carrier.⁵⁶ The point is of little practical importance, in view of the almost universal practice of all carriers, whether public or private, to contract out of their common law liability.⁵⁷ It should be noted that the provider of a "postal services" within the meaning of the Postal Services Act 2000 shall not be regarded as a common carrier.⁵⁸

The private carrier

36-011

Where for any of the reasons above stated, a carrier of goods is not a common carrier, he will in virtually all cases⁵⁹ be a private carrier.⁶⁰ There is one additional reason why he might be a private carrier, namely, where he is merely a casual contractor for the transport of goods; for the common carrier is required to engage in his business habitually.⁶¹ The precise limits of "habitually" have not been judicially clarified.

The consequences of the distinction between common and private carriers

36-012

The importance of the classification of a carrier as a common or private carrier lies in the liabilities and remedies available to the carrier. Their importance is subject to the terms of the contract of carriage.⁶² Subject to that contract, the key differences in the position of the two types of carrier are as follows. It is the duty of the common carrier to carry the goods entrusted to him by a customer, provided he can accommodate those goods on his conveyance.⁶³ A common carrier effectively undertakes, save in circumstances recognised by the common law as providing an exception, to indemnify the owner of the goods he carries for any loss or damage sustained by the goods⁶⁴; whereas a private carrier is liable, as a consequence of the bailment of the goods to him, only if his conduct amounts to negligence.⁶⁵ The common carrier has the right to demand advance payment of freight⁶⁶ and has a common law right to exercise a particular lien over the goods in his charge for freight which is due.⁶⁷ The rights of limitation of the liability of the carrier differ depending upon status.⁶⁸ These rights and liabilities, and others, will be discussed below.

^{25.} It has been mooted that there is another class of carrier, namely a carrier, whilst not a common carrier, who has assumed the responsibilities of a common carrier, by virtue of their public employment. Such was the decision concerning lightermen in Liver Alkali Co v Johnson (1872) L.R. 7 Exch. 267; (1874) L.R. 9 Exch. 338. However, this view has been rejected, at least so far as carriage by road is concerned: Nugent v Smith (1876) 1 C.P.D. 423, 433; Watkins v Cottell [1916] 1 K.B. 10; Belfast Ropework Co Ltd v Bushell [1918] 1 K.B. 210; cf. Aslan v Imperial Airways Ltd (1933) 149 L.T. 276, 278.

26. That is, at a reasonable price: Belfast Ropework Co Ltd v Bushell [1918] 1 K.B. 210. If the carrier gives an estimate and seeks to negotiate the price with his customer, thus reserving a discretion to himself to refuse to carry the goods, he is not a common carrier: Electric Supply Stores v Gaywood (1909) 100 L.T. 855. A gratuitous carrier is not a common carrier: Tyly v Morrice (1699) Carth. 485.
27. In the provision of carriage services, discrimination against a person on the grounds of race, sex, religion, belief or sexual orientation is prohibited under the Equality Act 2010 ss.4–13, 28–29. Discrimination on the grounds of disability is also prohibited, but the prohibition does not apply in certain circumstances: Equality Act 2010 s.31 and Sch.3 Pt 9.
28. Bennett v Peninsular & Oriental Steam-Boat Co (1848) 6 C.B. 775, 787; Watkins v Cottell [1916] 1 K.B. 10, 14; Belfast Ropework Co Ltd v Bushell [1918] 1 K.B. 210, 212; GN Ry v LEP Transport [1922] 2 K.B. 742, 765.
29. Tamvaco v Timothy (1882) 1 Cab. El. 1; Belfast Ropework Co Ltd v Bushell [1918] 1 K.B. 210, 212; Eastman Chemical International AG v NMT Trading Ltd [1972] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 25; A Siohn & Co Ltd v R H Hagland & Son (Transport) Ltd [1976] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 428.
30. Johnson v Midland Ry (1849) 4 Exch. 367, 373; Date v Sheldon (1921) 7 Ll.L. Rep. 53, 54. Brind v Dale (1837) 8 C. & P. 207 suggests that, if carriage is from place to place within the same town, the carrier is not a common carrier. But the decision is an isolated one, without reasoning on this point, and seems unsound in principle: see, Kahn-Freund at p.205; Eastman Chemical International AG v NMT Trading Ltd [1972] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 25.
31. cf. Johnson v Midland Ry, above, at 373.
32. Crouch v LNW Ry (1854) 14 C.B. 255, 289; Piancini v LSW Ry (1856) 18 C.B. 226. cf. Bennett v P & O SS Co (1848) 6 C.B. 775 at 787.
33. Date v Sheldon (1921) 7 Ll.L. Rep. 53; also, Belfast Ropework Co v Bushell [1918] 1 K.B. 210 at 214. Leslie at p.25, suggests that the courts would read reasonable termini into the common law contract of carriage.
34. Here, too, Leslie at pp.8, 25, suggests that the courts would read in reasonable classes of goods, on an analogy with the exclusion of dangerous goods and goods of an exceptional character from the normal profession of common carrier.
35. Johnson v Midland Railway Co (1849) 4 Exch. 367; Sutcliffe v Great Western Railway Co [1910] 1 K.B. 478.
36. Belfast Ropework Co v Bushell [1918] 1 K.B. 210 at 212; Date v Sheldon (1921) 7 Ll.L. Rep. 53 at 54; Eastman Chemical International AG v NMT Trading Ltd [1972] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 25; A Siohn and Co Ltd v RH Hagland and Son (Transport) Ltd [1976] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 428.
37. Leslie at p.13.
38. e.g. Re Oxlade and NE Ry (1864) 15 C.B.(N.S.) 680; Consolidated Tea & Lands Co v Oliver's Wharf [1910] 2 K.B. 395.
39. e.g. Belfast Ropework Co v Bushell [1918] 1 K.B. 210.
40. e.g. Watkins v Cottell [1916] 1 K.B. 10; Scaife v Farrant (1875) L.R. 10 Ex. 358, 364–365. See also Electric Supply Stores v Gaywood (1909) 100 L.T. 855.

- 41. Ingate v Christie (1850) 3 Car. & Kir. 61; Belfast Ropework Co Ltd v Bushell [1918] 1 K.B. 210, 215; A Siohn & Co Ltd v RH Hagland & Son (Transport) Ltd [1976] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 428, 429–430, although in the last case, the court held that the carrier's decision not to carry goods for a particular customer who was unsatisfactory did not affect that carrier's status as a common carrier.
- 42. A Siohn & Co Ltd v RH Hagland & Son (Transport) Ltd [1976] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 428.
- 43. cf. Lacey's Footwear (Wholesale) Ltd v Bowler International Freight Ltd Unreported March 17, 1995; affirmed [1997] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 369.
- 44. A Siohn & Co Ltd v RH Hagland & Son (Transport) Ltd [1976] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 428, 430.
- 45. Upston v Stark (1827) 2 C. & P. 598; Chattock & Co v Bellamy & Co (1895) 64 L.J.Q.B. 250.
- 46. Clarke v West Ham Corp [1909] 2 K.B. 858, 879; A Siohn & Co Ltd v RH Hagland & Son (Transport) Ltd [1976] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 428.
- 47. See below, para.36-018.
- 48. Baxendale v GE Ry (1869) L.R. 4 Q.B. 244; GN Ry v LEP Transport Co [1922] 2 K.B. 742. cf. Crouch v LNW Ry (1854) 14 C.B. 255, 293; Peek v N. Staffs Ry (1863) 10 H.L.C. 473, 494 et seq.
- 49. GN Ry v LEP Transport Co, above, at 769.
- 50. Railways Act 1993 s.123; the Railways Regulations 1998 (SI 1998/1340) reg.23. The Transport Act 1962 s.43(6) provides that the British Waterways Board shall not be regarded as common carriers by inland waterway.
- 51. Greater London Authority Act 1999 s.156(8), Sch.11 para.31. See also London Regional Transport Act 1984 Sch.2 para.7(3); s.2(6).
- 52. Channel Tunnel Act 1987 s.19(2).
- 53. This diversification has been propelled by the EC Council Directive of July 29, 1991 (91/440) and the EU Council Directives of June 19, 1995 (95/18 and 95/19), which require the separation and allocation of the management of railway infrastructure and railway services. These Directives have been implemented by the Railways Regulations 1998 (SI 1998/1340). The United Kingdom has sought to achieve this by privatising the railway undertakings by a system of franchising pursuant to the Railways Act 1993 and the Railways Act 2005.
- 54. Kahn-Freund at pp.205–207, citing Electric Supply Stores v Gaywood (1909) 100 L.T. 855; Watkins v Cottell [1916] 1 K.B. 10; and Belfast Ropework Co v Bushell [1918] 1 K.B. 210.
- 55. See below, para.36-068.
- 56. For these Conditions, see below, para.36-032.
- 57. See McBain, "Time to abolish the common carrier" [2005] J.B.L. 545.
- 58. Postal Services Act 2000 s.99 (as amended by the Postal Services Act 2011 s.91 and Sch.12 para.30). Lane v Cotton (1701) 12 Mod. 472; Whitfield v Le Despencer (1778) 2 Cowp. 754, 764; Triefus & Co Ltd v Above Office [1957] 2 Q.B. 352.
- 59. See n.22, above.
- 60. The same carrier may, of course, operate some vehicles as a common carrier and some as a private carrier: Date v Sheldon (1921) 7 Ll.L. Rep. 53, 54.

- 61. See Watkins v Cottell [1916] 1 K.B. 10, 14; cf., too, Brind v Dale (1837) 8 C. & P. 207; and Belfast Ropework Co v Bushell [1918] 1 K.B. 210.
- 62. Clarke, International Carriage of Goods by Road: CMR, 6th edn (2014), para.222.
- 63. Jackson v Rogers (1683) 2 Show. 327; Boson v Sandford (1690) 1 Show. 101, 104; Lane v Cotton (1701) 12 Mod. Rep. 472, 484; Macklin v Waterhouse (1828) 5 Bing 212; Johnson v Midland Railway Co (1849) 4 Exch. 367; Carr v Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Co (1852) 7 Exch. 707; Oxlade v North Eastern Railway Co (1864) 15 C.B.N.S. 680; Clarke v West Ham Corp [1909] 2 K.B. 858, 877.
- 64. Coggs v Bernard (1703) 2 Ld. Raym. 909; Dale v Hall (1750) 1 Wils. 281; Forward v Pittard (1785) 1 Term Rp. 27; Trent and Mersey Navigation v Wood (1785) 3 Esp. 127; Covington v Willan (1819) Gow. 115; Brooke v Pickwick (1827) 4 Bing. 218; Riley v Horne (1828) 5 Bing. 217; Brind v Dale (1837) 8 C. & P. 207. See below, para.36-018.
- 65. Coggs v Bernard (1703) 2 Ld. Raym. 909; Hayman v Hewitt (1798) Peake Add. Cas. 170; Richardson v North Eastern Railway Co (1872) L.R. 7 C.P. 75; John Carter (Fine Worsteds) Ltd v Hanson Haulage (Leeds) Ltd [1965] 2 Q.B. 495; Morris v CW Martin & Sons Ltd [1966] 1 Q.B. 716. See below, para.36-017.
- 66. Batson v Donovan (1820) 4 B. & Ald. 21; Wyld v Pickford (1841) 8 M. & W. 443. See below, para.36-050.
- 67. Skinner v Upshaw (1702) 2 Ld. Raym. 752, see below, para.36-052.
- 68. See below, paras 36-033—36-034.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 36 - Carriage by Land
Section 2. - Internal Carriage
(a) - Goods
(ii) - Introduction to Carrier's Duties and Liabilities

Introduction

36-013

The carrier's duties and liabilities are dependent on his designation as a common or private carrier. Once his status is determined, the liability of a common carrier is decided by reference to the obligations imposed on him by law. However, these responsibilities may be modified by the contract which he has concluded with the consignor, owner or forwarder of the goods. Additionally, there may be a liability in tort. The private carrier, on the other hand, will be liable simply under the contract he has concluded or in tort. The common or private carrier's liability may also rest in bailment, insofar as it is separate from liability in contract or tort. ⁶⁹ The liability of the carrier in contract and tort may be concurrent. ⁷⁰ We shall consider below the nature of the carrier's liability in respect of the carriage of goods, from the perspective of both common and private carriers, as it may arise in each of the respects described above, for loss or damage, delay and misdelivery.

⁶⁹. See above, para.36-001.

⁷⁰. Henderson v Merrett Syndicates Ltd [1995] 2 A.C. 145; cf. Tai Hing Cotton Mills Ltd v Liu Chong Hing Bank Ltd [1986] A.C. 80.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 36 - Carriage by Land

Section 2. - Internal Carriage

(a) - Goods

(iii) - Carrier's Liability imposed by Law

Common carrier

36-014

By reason of his public calling, the common carrier is subject, at common law, to three peculiar obligations: he must accept for transport goods tendered with the appropriate freight, provided he has space in his vehicles ⁷¹; he must charge only a reasonable rate for their carriage ⁷²; and he is strictly responsible for all loss or damage which occurs in the course of transit.

Wrongful refusal

36-015

If a common carrier refuses goods for which he has space, or demands an unreasonable rate, he commits, prima facie, the common carrier's tort of wrongful refusal of goods. ⁷³ But the following grounds of justification for refusing to carry goods will be open to him, namely:

(i)

that the goods are not of the class that he carries, either because they fall outside his specified categories, or because, none being specified, it is unreasonable to expect him to carry such goods ⁷⁴;

(ii)

that the goods are dangerous, ⁷⁵ or exceptional in character, ⁷⁶ e.g. of exceptional size, or would, in the circumstances, expose the carrier to undue risk, ⁷⁷ or have a value disproportionate to the security measures at his disposal ⁷⁸;

(iii)

that the goods were tendered an unreasonable time before the carrier was ready for his journey ⁷⁹;

(iv)

that the goods consigned were inadequately packed. ⁸⁰

The common carrier will not be liable if, in fact, there was no room for the particular consignment in the carrier's vehicle or vehicles, ⁸¹ or if the consignor refused to pay the freight in advance when so requested. ⁸²

Unreasonable charge

36-016

A common carrier must charge only a reasonable rate. If he demands and recovers an unreasonable charge, an action for money had and received will lie for the difference between the charge made and the charge that was reasonable. ⁸³ But, though he cannot pick and choose among his customers, there is no rule at common law that he must treat all customers equally in the matter of charges.

“There was nothing in the common law to hinder a carrier from carrying for favoured individuals at an unreasonably low rate, or even gratis. All that the law required was, that he should not charge more than was reasonable.” ⁸⁴

Private carrier

36-017

The private carrier is under no obligation to accept any goods for carriage, ⁸⁵ but once he has done so, usually for reward, his obligations are regulated by the contract which governs the carriage, or by the bailment to which his acceptance of the goods has subjected him. ⁸⁶ The contract may stipulate expressly the time, route and charges of the carriage and set out the carrier's responsibilities as to the safety of the goods, which will be construed and enforced subject to the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 and Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999 or the Consumer Rights Act 2015 (which has replaced the 1999 Regulations for contracts made on or after October 1, 2015 ⁸⁷). Where the contract is silent, the private carrier will bear the obligation of a bailee to exercise reasonable care of the goods and there will be implied into the contract, by virtue of the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982, obligations to carry the goods to destination with reasonable care and skill, ⁸⁸ within a reasonable time, ⁸⁹ and at a reasonable price. ⁹⁰ Similar rights are “treated as included” in respect of consumer service contracts under the Consumer Rights Act 2015. ⁹¹

Common carrier's liability for loss and damage

36-018

Liability for loss or damage merits fuller discussion. The private carrier's liability extends only to loss or damage caused by his own or his employees' negligence or want of reasonable care, ⁹² the burden of disproving which is on him ⁹³ even if the carriage is gratuitous. ⁹⁴ But the common carrier is, prima facie, strictly responsible for all loss or damage which occurs in the course of transit, ⁹⁵ subject, at common law, to the plea of any of four “excepted perils”, coupled with the disproof of negligence on the part of the carrier or his employees. Furthermore, a claim for loss of or damage to the goods carried cannot be enforced by a set-off against or a deduction from the freight which is due to the carrier. ⁹⁶ Thus, the common carrier is, prima facie, liable where goods in his charge are lost or damaged through the wrongful acts of third parties, ⁹⁷ including robbery ⁹⁸ or riot, ⁹⁹ or through an accidental fire ¹⁰⁰ or other inevitable accident. ¹⁰¹ This liability is often described vividly, though strictly speaking inaccurately, as an “insurer's liability”. ¹⁰² To escape his insurer's liability the common carrier must prove both (i) that the loss or damage was caused by an act of God, an act of the Queen's enemies, inherent vice in the goods or the consignor's own fault; and (ii) that no negligence or want of reasonable care on the part of the carrier or his employees contributed to the loss or damage.

Act of God

36-019

The archaic legal phrase “act of God” means an operation of natural forces (as opposed to an act of man ¹⁰³) which it was not reasonably possible to foresee and guard against, like lightning, ¹⁰⁴ extraordinary weather conditions, ¹⁰⁵ “some extraordinary natural event”, ¹⁰⁶ or a totally unexpected heart attack. ¹⁰⁷

Act of the Queen’s enemies

36-020

Acts of the Queen’s enemies probably do not include acts of rebels, and certainly not acts of rioters. This defence refers rather to the acts of the armed forces of a foreign power with which the country is at war. ¹⁰⁸ It is open to question whether this exception would be construed to apply to all acts and incidents of war and hostilities. ¹⁰⁹ However, as the liability of a common carrier is likely to continue to exist, if it exists at all, in respect of inland carriage only, the scope of the exception of acts of the Queen’s enemies may be justified.

Inherent vice

36-021

“Inherent vice” in the goods consigned for carriage refers to the development of some latent characteristic or natural behaviour of the goods themselves (including their packaging and containers) which tends to their injury, deterioration or destruction, without the operation of any fortuitous, external cause. ¹¹⁰ In the context of the carriage of goods, “inherent vice” refers to the risk of deterioration of the goods as a result of their natural behaviour during the carriage or the inability of the goods to withstand the ordinary incidents of carriage without the involvement of an external fortuitous event. ¹¹¹ For example, if an animal, for some reason like fright, injures or destroys itself in the course of transit in a way that it was not reasonable to foresee or guard against, its common carrier will normally escape liability. ¹¹² Similarly, an inherent vice has been held to exist in the case of inadequate gin casks, ¹¹³ the explosion of fermented wine, ¹¹⁴ and defective vehicles that collapse while being transported. ¹¹⁵ For this purpose, any defect in the goods’ packaging will be treated as an inherent vice. ¹¹⁶

Consignor’s fault

36-022

If the loss, damage or destruction is due solely to the fault of the consignor (or his agent), the common carrier is free from liability. This defence may overlap with that of “inherent vice”, as where fragile or perishable goods are consigned inadequately packed and without any indication to the carrier of the particular precautions which they demand. Examples of the defence in question are consignor’s fraud, ¹¹⁷ defective packing, ¹¹⁸ misleading packing, ¹¹⁹ or insufficient or misleading addressing ¹²⁰ by the consignor. It should be added that the carrier will probably be exonerated where, without negligence on his part, the loss or damage is due to the act of the consignee (or his agent). ¹²¹

Carrier’s negligence

36-023

As already mentioned, the common carrier does not escape liability merely by proving that the loss or damage was due to an excepted peril. He must also show that no negligence on his part contributed thereto. ¹²² It may also be noted that though damage has been caused by an excepted peril, a common carrier will be liable in respect of subsequent aggravation of such damage by his negligence. ¹²³

Private carrier's liability for loss and damage

36-024

The private carrier's responsibility is to carry the goods entrusted to him with reasonable care, the degree of care depending on the nature and value of the goods, the nature of the agreed or anticipated conveyance and the standard of conduct reasonably expected of a competent carrier. ¹²⁴ Unlike the common carrier, the private carrier's liability is not strict, although if the goods are lost or damaged, the burden will lie on the carrier to prove that he exercised the requisite degree of care or that the loss or damage was not caused by any failure to exercise such care. ¹²⁵

-
- ^{71.} e.g. Jackson v Rogers (1683) 2 Show. 327; Lane v Cotton (1701) 12 Mod. 472, 484; Riley v Horne (1828) 5 Bing. 217, 224.
 - ^{72.} e.g. Pickford v Grand Junction Ry (1841) 8 M. & W. 372, 377; GW Ry v Sutton (1869) L.R. 4 H.L. 226, 237. A rate is not unreasonable merely because it consists of a higher charge made for the greater risk attending the carriage of valuable goods: Harris v Packwood (1810) 3 Taunt. 264. cf. Baxendale v Eastern Counties Ry (1858) 4 C.B.(N.S.) 63.
 - ^{73.} Jackson v Rogers (1683) 2 Show. 327; Crouch v LNWR Ry (1854) 14 C.B. 255.
 - ^{74.} See Leslie at p.8.
 - ^{75.} Bamfield v Goole and Sheffield Transport Co Ltd [1910] 2 K.B. 94, 115; Leslie at p.30.
 - ^{76.} Date v Sheldon (1921) 7 Ll.L. Rep. 53, 54.
 - ^{77.} Edwards v Sherratt (1801) 1 East 604.
 - ^{78.} Batson v Donovan (1820) 4 B. & Ald. 21, 32; Leslie at p.30.
 - ^{79.} Lane v Cotton (1701) 12 Mod. 472, 481.
 - ^{80.} Munster v SE Ry (1858) 4 C.B.(N.S.) 676, 701; Sutcliffe v GW Ry [1910] 1 K.B. 478, 503; LNWR Ry v Hudson [1920] A.C. 324, especially at 340.
 - ^{81.} Jackson v Rogers (1683) 2 Show. 327; Riley v Horne (1828) 5 Bing. 217, 221.
 - ^{82.} Wyld v Pickford (1841) 8 M. & W. 443.
 - ^{83.} Baxendale v LSW Ry (1866) L.R. 1 Ex. 137; GW Ry v Sutton (1869) L.R. 4 H.L. 226.
 - ^{84.} GW Ry v Sutton, above, at 237: advice of Blackburn J. to the House of Lords.
 - ^{85.} Subject to the Equality Act 2010 ss.4–13, 28–29, 31 and Sch.3 Pt 9.
 - ^{86.} Hunt & Winterbotham (West of England) Ltd v BRS (Parcels) Ltd [1962] 1 Q.B. 617; cf. Clarke, International Carriage of Goods by Road: CMR, 6th edn (2014), para.222.
 - ^{87.} See below, paras 38-358—38-394 et seq.
 - ^{88.} Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 s.13.

- 89. 1982 Act s.14.
- 90. 1982 Act s.15.
- 91. Consumer Rights Act 2015 ss.49, 51, 52, 57. See below, Vol.II, paras 38-527—38-547.
- 92. Coggs v Bernard (1703) 2 Ld. Raym. 909; Hayman v Hewitt (1798) Peake Add. Cas. 170.
- 93. Travers (Joseph) & Sons Ltd v Cooper [1915] 1 K.B. 73.
- 94. Houghland v RR Low (Luxury Coaches) Ltd [1962] 1 Q.B. 694.
- 95. As to when transit begins and ends, see below, para.36-041.
- 96. United Carriers Ltd v Heritage Food Group (UK) Ltd [1995] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 269. Indeed, a judgment obtained by a carrier for freight should not be stayed pending the obtaining and execution of a judgment against the carrier for loss or damage (at 273). See below, para.36-050.
- 97. Gosling v Higgins (1808) 1 Camp. 451; Evans v Hutton (1842) 4 Man. & G. 954. This includes goods entrusted to a fraudulent sub-contractor with whom the carrier has contracted (as opposed to a person falsely holding himself out to the customer as the carrier): John Rigby (Haulage) Ltd v Reliance Marine Insurance Co Ltd [1956] 2 Q.B. 468; Harrisons and Crossfield Ltd v London and North Western Railway Co [1917] 2 K.B. 755. cf. the definition of "bogus sub-contractor" in a carriers' transit insurance policy in London Tobacco Co (Overseas) Ltd v DFDS Transport Ltd [1994] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 394.
- 98. Morse v Slue (1673) 1 Vent. 190, 239 (ship); Barclay v Cuculla (1784) 3 Dougl. 389 (ship); Gibbon v Paynton (1769) 4 Burr. 2298.
- 99. Forward v Pittard (1785) 1 T.R. 27.
- 100. Forward v Pittard, above; Thorogood v Marsh (1819) Gow. 105; Hyde v Trent & Mersey Navigation Co (1793) 5 T.R. 389.
- 101. Forward v Pittard, above.
- 102. HIH Casualty and General Insurance Ltd v Chase Manhattan Bank [2003] UKHL 6, [2003] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 61 at [66].
- 103. Forward v Pittard (1785) 1 T.R. 27; and cf. Oakley v Portsmouth and Ryde Steam Packet Co (1856) 11 Exch. 618 (ship).
- 104. Forward v Pittard, above.
- 105. e.g. Blyth v Birmingham Waterworks Co (1856) 11 Exch. 781 (frost); Briddon v GN Ry (1858) 28 L.J. Ex. 51 (snow); Nugent v Smith (1876) 1 C.P.D. 423 (storm); Makin v LNE Ry [1943] K.B. 467 (flood).
- 106. Environment Agency v Empress Car Co (Abertillery) Ltd [1999] 2 A.C. 22, 35.
- 107. Ryan v Youngs [1938] 1 All E.R. 522.
- 108. The restriction of the excepted peril to acts done by states with which the sovereign is at war is sound on historical grounds: see Holmes, Common Law, p.177. Curtis v Mathews [1918] 2 K.B. 825; and HM Secretary of State for War v Midland & GW Ry [1923] 2 Ir.R. 102, seem not to be true exceptions: the one case involved an act Week, 1916, and in the other, the judgment was influenced of the "Provisional Government" in Dublin during Easter by the fact that the Irish Bench, at the time of the "Troubles", considered a state of war to exist.

- 109. See Spinney's (1948) Ltd v Royal Insurance Co [1980] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 406. Note the treatment in Clarke, International Carriage of Goods by Road: CMR, 6th edn (2014), para.236b–236f.
- 110. Soya GmbH v White [1983] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 122; Global Process Systems Inc v Syarikat Takaful Malaysia Berhad [2011] UKSC 5, [2011] 1 All E.R. 869. cf. Blower v GW Ry (1872) L.R. 7 C.P. 655, 662–663. The concept of “inherent vice” has been explored at length in the context of carriage of goods by sea and is included as a defence in the CMR Convention (art.17.2) and the CIM Convention (art.23.2). See below, paras 36-093, 36-127. See Rodière (1971) 6 E.T.L. 2, 16.
- 111. Soya GmbH v White [1983] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 122, 126; Noten BV v Harding [1990] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 283; Global Process Systems Inc v Syarikat Takaful Malaysia Berhad [2011] UKSC 5, [2011] Lloyd's Rep. I.R. 302.
- 112. Blower v GW Ry, above; Kendall v LSW Ry (1872) L.R. 7 Ex. 373. See also Gill v Manchester Ry (1873) L.R. 8 Q.B. 186; Prior v LSW Ry (1885) 2 T.L.R. 89. The carrier is required to comply with the regulations for the protection of animals laid down in the Welfare of Animals (Transport) (England) Order 2006 (SI 2006/3260) (Wales Order: SI 2007/1047), made pursuant to Animal Health Act 1981. Accordingly, the carrier may seek to require the consignor to warrant that the animals to be carried are in a fit state to be carried and properly packed and secured.
- 113. Hudson v Baxendale (1857) 2 H. & N. 575.
- 114. Farrar v Adams (1711) Buller N.P. 69 (c).
- 115. Johnson v NE Ry (1888) 5 T.L.R. 68; Lister v L & Y Ry [1903] 1 K.B. 878.
- 116. Wilson, Holgate & Co Ltd v The Lancashire and Cheshire Insurance Corp Ltd (1922) 13 Ll.L. Rep. 486, 487; Mayban General Insurance BHD v Alstom Power Plants Ltd [2004] EWHC 1038 (Comm), [2004] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 609 at [19]–[22] (overruled on other grounds in [2011] UKSC 5).
- 117. Tyly v Morrice (1699) Carth. 485; Gibbon v Paynton (1769) 4 Burr. 2298.
- 118. Barbour v SE Ry (1876) 34 L.T. 67; Gould v SE & C Ry [1920] 2 K.B. 186 (which shows that the defence is applicable even if the carrier is aware of the defective packing when he accepts the goods). cf. Baldwin v LC & D Ry (1882) 9 Q.B.D. 582; LNW Ry v Hudson [1920] A.C. 324; and see Kahn-Freund at pp.370–372.
- 119. Bradley v Waterhouse (1828) 3 C. & P. 318.
- 120. cf. Bradley v Dunipace (1861) 7 H. & N. 200 (ship); Wise v GW Ry (1856) 1 H. & N. 63.
- 121. Nurrell v Larkin (1831) 1 L.J.C.P.(N.S.) 2; Butterworth v Brownlow (1865) 19 C.B.(N.S.) 409. In these cases, the common carrier escaped being liable qua warehouseman, transit having been completed.
- 122. Act of God: Blower v GW Ry (1872) L.R. 7 C.P. 655, 663; Talley v GW Ry (1870) L.R. 6 C.P. 44, 51–52. Queen's enemies: Blower v GW Ry, above; Talley v GW Ry, above; cf. Phillips v Clark (1857) 2 C.B.(N.S.) 156, 164 (ship). Inherent vice: cf. Blower v GW Ry, above; cf. too, Gill v Manchester Ry (1873) L.R. 8 Q.B. 186. Consignor's fault: Stuart v Crawley (1818) 2 Stark. 323; contrast Richardson v NE Ry (1872) L.R. 7 C.P. 75.
- 123. Notara v Henderson (1872) L.R. 7 Q.B. 225 (ship). See, too, Cox v LNW Ry (1862) 3 F. & F. 77.
- 124. A F Colverd & Co Ltd v Anglo-Overseas Transport Co Ltd [1961] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 352; James Buchanan & Co Ltd v Hay's Transport Services Ltd [1972] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 535; Johnson Matthey & Co Ltd v Constantine Terminals Ltd [1976] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 215; A Siohn & Co Ltd v RH Hagland & Son (Transport) Ltd [1976] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 428; Swiss Bank Corp v Brink's MAT Ltd [1986] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 79; Metaalhandel J A Magnus BV v Ardfields Transport Ltd [1988] 1

Lloyd's Rep. 197.

- 125. John Carter (Fine Worsted) Ltd v Hanson Haulage (Leeds) Ltd [1965] 2 Q.B. 495; Morris v CW Martin & Sons Ltd [1966] 1 Q.B. 716; British Road Services Ltd v Arthur V Crutchley Co Ltd [1968] 1 All E.R. 811. Any damages awarded against the private carrier may be reduced by reason of the claimant's contributory negligence pursuant to the Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act 1945, because the private carrier bears a duty of care both in contract and tort, as will be discussed below. See Vol.I, para.26-077.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 36 - Carriage by Land

Section 2. - Internal Carriage

(a) - Goods

(iv) - Contractual Liability

Liability by the terms of the contract

36-025

The common carrier may modify the obligations which rest on him by virtue of his public status by means of the contract with the consignor or owner of the goods, in which case his liability will be determined by his "special contract". The private carrier will often ¹²⁶ conduct the carriage of goods pursuant to a contract, which will regulate his liability. Indeed, the carrier may be subject to obligations implied by law. ¹²⁷ The terms of the contract may be liable to be upset by the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977, ¹²⁸ insofar as they are exemption clauses, and the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999, which renders as non-binding on a consumer any term which has not been "individually" negotiated and may be deemed "unfair". ¹²⁹ Such terms will be controlled in respect of consumer contracts under the Consumer Rights Act 2015, which replaces and revokes the 1999 Regulations for contracts made on or after October 1, 2015. ¹³⁰

Special contracts

36-026

In the modern law of carriage of goods by land the strict liability of the common carrier has almost completely disappeared, because carriers have for very many years entered into "special contracts" with their customers relieving them of the common carrier's heavy liability. ¹³¹ The common carrier's liability at common law as described in the preceding paragraphs is thus no longer part of the living law. Nonetheless, it has had a profound effect upon the contract practice of carriers by rail and road.

Incorporation of terms

36-027

The question whether exemption clauses form part of a contract of carriage of goods by land now depends almost entirely upon the common law. The rules of the common law on the incorporation of terms are fully discussed elsewhere. ¹³² Briefly, the consignor will be bound if he signed a consignment note which contains or refers to the exemption clauses ¹³³; and this, of course, is the most usual way in which such clauses are in practice incorporated in a contract for the carriage of goods. He will also be bound if he received without signing it a document such as a receipt or ticket ¹³⁴ which contains or refers to exemption clauses, provided he knew that there was writing on the document and that this contained conditions, or provided the carrier did what was reasonably sufficient to give him notice of the conditions. ¹³⁵ The more burdensome or unusual the clause restricting or excluding liability, the more closely notice of it must be made. ¹³⁶ He may perhaps also be bound if the previous course of dealing between him and the carrier justifies the inference that he must have known not only that goods are always accepted for carriage upon conditions, but also what those conditions are. ¹³⁷ He may well be bound by any such course of dealing or notice even if he never read the conditions and did not know what they were. ¹³⁸ In any event, the carrier's capacity to impose terms purporting to exclude or restrict his liability for negligence in the case of loss or damage is now fettered in that any contractual term or notice to that effect has to satisfy the requirement of reasonableness under the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 and, where applicable, the requirement of fairness under the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999. ¹³⁹ Such provisions insofar as they affect consumers will be subject to the Consumer Rights Act 2015, which replaces and revokes the 1999 Regulations for contracts made on or after October 1, 2015. ¹⁴⁰

Construction of contracts

36-028

A common carrier no less than a private carrier can contract out of his liability for loss of or damage to the goods. ¹⁴¹ But he must do so in plain language: otherwise his common law liability remains and cannot be removed by "subtle implications or ambiguous words". ¹⁴² Such clauses of exemption or limitation will be construed strictly and narrowly ¹⁴³ and, therefore, will operate to exclude liability for the negligence of the carrier if the clause expressly (or necessarily by implication) so provides. ¹⁴⁴ Whilst the task at hand is to construe the exemption clause in order to understand the intention of the parties, ¹⁴⁵ broadly if the clause makes no specific reference to negligence, liability for negligence will be excepted where the carrier's only realistic liability would lie in negligence ¹⁴⁶; but this is not necessarily so, as the question is one of construction and so it must be clear that the parties intended to exclude liability for negligence. ¹⁴⁷ There may be an important difference between the positions of common and private carriers in respect of exemption clauses which do not specifically refer to negligence. The potential liability of a common carrier includes and extends beyond negligence. Such a clause therefore would not protect the common carrier from his own negligence. ¹⁴⁸ On the other hand, the private carrier may be liable in tort or contract if he fails to take reasonable care. It is probable that such a clause would protect the private carrier from liability for negligence, ¹⁴⁹ but it is arguable that the clause would operate to except liability in contract, but not in tort. ¹⁵⁰ Nevertheless, at common law a common carrier can contract out of liability for negligence, ¹⁵¹ or even for theft by his employees, ¹⁵² provided he uses clear enough words. Naturally the capacity of a carrier to contract out of his liability for negligence in the case of loss of or damage to goods has now been limited by the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 and any attempt so to do now has to satisfy the requirement of reasonableness under that Act. ¹⁵³ As with exemption clauses, the reasonableness of provisions purporting to limit liability may fall to be assessed under the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977, especially where the parties' bargaining strength is unequal, whether by reference to economic strength or to convenience or opportunity. ¹⁵⁴ Similarly, where applicable, the relevant terms will have to satisfy the requirement of fairness under the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999 or, for contracts made on or after October 1, 2015, the Consumer Rights Act 2015 (which replaces and revokes the 1999 Regulations). ¹⁵⁵

Fundamental breach

36-029

The construction of exemption clauses is discussed elsewhere in this work, and various judicial techniques for confining them within narrow limits are there considered. ¹⁵⁶ One of these techniques was formerly so important in the law of carriage of goods that it must be briefly mentioned. This was the so-called "doctrine" of fundamental breach (or breach of a fundamental term). If the carrier committed a fundamental breach of the contract of carriage, so that the other party had the right to terminate the contract, the carrier might be unable to rely on the exemption clauses in the contract at all, unless the other party, with full knowledge of the facts, elected to affirm and not to terminate the contract. The carrier might be unable to do so if, for instance, he unjustifiably deviated from the agreed or customary route, ¹⁵⁷ or sent perishable goods by goods train after contracting to send them by passenger train, ¹⁵⁸ or left the goods even for a short time to their fate, ¹⁵⁹ or unjustifiably delivered them to the wrong person, ¹⁶⁰ or unjustifiably sub-contracted the contract of carriage to another carrier of whom he must have known his customer would not approve. ¹⁶¹ The cases illustrating this doctrine in the law of carriage by land produced some fine distinctions and some anomalous results. ¹⁶² For instance, it is curious that if a lorry driver negligently left a loaded lorry unattended whilst he had a meal and the contents were stolen, his employer might have been guilty of fundamental breach ¹⁶³; but if he deliberately stole the contents himself, his employer was not so guilty. ¹⁶⁴ Again, it is curious that if a thief tricked a carrier into employing him as a lorry driver by means of forged references, and then stole the goods, the carrier's negligence in not checking the references properly did not amount to fundamental breach ¹⁶⁵; but if a thief tricked a carrier into sub-contracting the contract by posing as the representative of a non-existent haulage firm, the carrier's negligence in not checking his credentials properly might do so. ¹⁶⁶ As regards the burden of proof, the Court of Appeal held that if the plaintiff pleads breach of contract or duty and nothing more, the burden of proving the absence of a fundamental breach by the carrier rests on the defendant. ¹⁶⁷

Rule of construction only

36-030

The House of Lords has, of course, emphasised that the "doctrine" of fundamental breach is not a rule of substantive law but a rule of construction to the effect that normally an exemption clause will be construed as not applying to a situation created by fundamental breach. ¹⁶⁸ As a result of this decision the scope of the "doctrine" is now somewhat uncertain. ¹⁶⁹ The scope of an exemption clause in a particular contract of carriage will be a question of construction depending on the intention of the parties, and it will require very clear words for an exemption clause to be interpreted as wide enough to cover a fundamental breach of contract. ¹⁷⁰ Obviously many of the decisions cited in this and the last paragraphs must now be read in light of the more recent expressions of view by the House of Lords, although it is fair to say that their Lordships did not expressly disapprove of any of these cases. ¹⁷¹ It has been assumed that the doctrine of fundamental breach as previously enunciated should continue to apply to deviations from the contractual carriage and the line of cases concerning deviation (generally involving carriage by sea) should continue to avoid the application of exemption clauses. ¹⁷² It is submitted that such cases, at least as they apply to carriage by land, should be tailored to the main line of authorities and the now evolved rule of construction, as an exemption clause may be so drafted to take account of deviations. ¹⁷³

Exceptions to liability commonly found in special contracts

36-031

Standard form contracts often distinguish between goods carried at the carrier's risk and goods carried at the owner's risk, the former attracting a higher freight. ¹⁷⁴ Where the parties agree that the goods are carried at the carrier's risk, the carrier will be liable for loss, damage or delay but subject to a list of exceptions. The exceptions often relied on by carriers include the four common law excepted perils, namely, act of God, act of foreign enemy, inherent vice and consignor's fault, ¹⁷⁵ and some others, e.g. any consequence of war, invasion, hostilities, civil war, insurrection, ¹⁷⁶ requisition, destruction of or damage to property by or under any order of any government or public or local authority, ¹⁷⁷ and seizure under legal process. ¹⁷⁸ Additionally, the contract may provide that the carrier is liable for loss or damage caused by insufficient or improper packing, labelling or addressing ¹⁷⁹ by riots, civil commotions, ¹⁸⁰ strikes, lockouts, stoppage or restraint of labour ¹⁸¹ from whatever cause; or by the consignee not taking or accepting delivery within a reasonable time. Where goods are carried at the owner's risk, the carrier will generally only be liable for loss, damage or delay resulting from the carrier's "wilful misconduct". The contract will often provide that the onus of proving "wilful misconduct" lies on the owner of the goods. The meaning of "wilful misconduct" ¹⁸² means something a great deal more than negligence, even gross or culpable negligence, and the onus of proving it may be prove to be a heavy one, ¹⁸³ because the House of Lords has held that the carrier is entitled to refuse to give any explanation as to how the loss or damage occurred. ¹⁸⁴

The Road Haulage Association's Conditions of Carriage

36-032

There are no standard conditions of carriage applicable to the road haulage industry as a whole. ¹⁸⁵

Consequently, some carriers seek to apply highly individual conditions, constrained only by the requirements of the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977¹⁸⁶ and the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999 (or the Consumer Rights Act 2015, which replaces and revokes the 1999 Regulations for contracts made on or after October 1, 2015).¹⁸⁷ There are, however, conditions of carriage issued by the Road Haulage Association Limited (RHA) which are used by most carriers by road. The most recent version of these conditions is that which became operative as from September 1, 2009.¹⁸⁸ It is common for individual variations of these conditions to be applied. However, even where a contract of carriage has not been expressly made subject to the Association's Conditions, a course of previous dealing may be held sufficient to bring the contract in question under the Conditions.¹⁸⁹ Under the RHA's Conditions, the carrier's liability incorporates a number of the exceptions referred to above¹⁹⁰ and there is a specific provision that the carrier is still liable, even in the case of an excepted peril, if he fails to use reasonable care to minimise the effect of that peril. The RHA's Conditions provide that the liability of the carrier in respect of physical loss, misdelivery of or damage to the consignment shall be limited to the lesser of the value of the goods, the cost of repair or £1,300 per tonne on the gross weight of the goods lost, misdelivered or damaged, and shall not be less than £10.¹⁹¹ In relation to all other claims, the 1998 conditions limit the carrier's liability to the lesser of the carriage charges or the amount of the proved loss.¹⁹² In either case, the customer may declare an increase in this limit, provided that additional carriage charges are agreed.¹⁹³

Upper financial limit of liability: the Carriers Act 1830

36-033

While imposing its very strict liability upon common carriers, the common law drew no distinction between different kinds of goods, nor did it give the carrier any general right to open and inspect the packages brought to him for transport, or to be informed of their contents.¹⁹⁴ Hence the stagecoach proprietors had a real grievance: they were required to carry articles potentially of great value without any means of knowing what they were carrying, and were strictly liable if the articles were stolen during transit. The Carriers Act 1830 was passed in order to remove this grievance.¹⁹⁵ It relieved the common carrier by land (and mail contractors and stagecoach proprietors) of liability for certain goods of a specially valuable or breakable nature and worth more than £10, unless a special declaration of value was made. The Act provides¹⁹⁶ that no common carrier by land for hire shall be liable for the "loss¹⁹⁷ of or injury to" a "parcel or package"¹⁹⁸ containing certain articles of a valuable or breakable nature enumerated in s.1 of the Act, ¹⁹⁹ the total value of which exceeds £10, unless their value is declared on delivery to the carrier, and an increased charge paid (if demanded)²⁰⁰ as compensation for the greater risk and care to be taken. The carrier must give notice that such an increased charge will be made by a notice fixed in legible characters in some public and conspicuous part of his premises²⁰¹ and must on request give a signed receipt for the parcel or package.²⁰² If no declaration of value is made by the consignor, or if he does not pay or promise to pay the increased charge, the carrier is under no liability for the loss of or injury to the goods, unless it arose from any theft or forgery on the part of his employees.²⁰³ If the carrier fails to post up the statutory notice, or to give the signed receipt on request, he is subject to the common carrier's liability for loss or damage.²⁰⁴ If all the mandatory requirements of the Act are duly fulfilled, the owner may recover the value of the goods if they are lost or injured, and in addition the increased charge.²⁰⁵ The carrier may still rely on the defence of the Carriers Act even though he has deviated from the route and so committed a fundamental breach of contract,²⁰⁶ or has been guilty of "gross negligence".²⁰⁷ One provision of the Act looks strange to modern eyes, namely that if no declaration of value is made, the carrier's liability is not merely limited to the now paltry sum of £10 but is excluded altogether.

Scope of application of the Carriers Act

36-034

The Carriers Act is still in force but its practical importance today is very small. It applies to "mail contractors, stage coach proprietors, and other common carriers by land for hire". It does not apply to private carriers and therefore not to any carrier by rail²⁰⁸ nor to the great majority of modern carriers by road, except in regard to passengers' luggage carried in public service vehicles (buses and coaches²⁰⁹). Though such luggage is carried "free of extra charge" and the Act only applies to "carriers for hire", the Act nevertheless applies to passengers' luggage when carried in such vehicles because the fare paid by the passenger is deemed to include freight for his luggage. ²¹⁰ Indeed, this is probably the most important sphere of application of the Act today. The Act applies to “common carriers by land” and therefore not to carriers by sea, even though the ship belongs to a common carrier by land. Hence, in the case of a through journey by land and sea, the carrier is not protected by the Act ²¹¹ unless he can prove that the loss or injury occurred during the land part of the journey. ²¹²

Dangerous and unusual goods

36-035

At common law even a common carrier was never obliged to carry dangerous goods. ²¹³ The customer impliedly warrants that the goods to be carried are not dangerous, unless the carrier knew or had the means of knowing that the goods are dangerous. ²¹⁴ The customer will be liable at law for all loss or damage caused by any breach of this warranty, whether he was aware of the dangerous nature of the goods or not. ²¹⁵ The carriage of dangerous and radioactive goods in the United Kingdom is governed by regulations ²¹⁶ made to implement European Parliament and Council Directive 2008/68/EC of September 24, 2008 on the approximation of the laws of the Member States concerning the inland transport of dangerous goods. These regulations implement the Annexes to the European Agreement concerning the International Carriage of Dangerous Goods by Road signed at Geneva on September 30, 1957, as amended (“ADR”) and the Annex to the Regulation concerning the International Carriage of Dangerous Goods by Rail (“RID”) which forms Appendix C to the Convention concerning International Carriage by Rail (“COTIF”). ²¹⁷

Deviation

36-036

At common law a carrier, whether common or private, must carry the goods entrusted to him by the agreed route or by his own usual route (though it may not be the shortest) ²¹⁸ and he must not deviate unnecessarily from his usual or the agreed route. ²¹⁹ What amounts to a justifiable deviation in carriage by land has not been settled with precision. Deviation is certainly necessary and justifiable to secure the safety of the goods, ²²⁰ and probably justifiable if, e.g. it is to avoid a peril to the goods that lies ahead on the route, or, possibly, to bypass a blockage of the route in order to obviate unreasonable delay. The effect of deviation as constituting a fundamental breach of contract and so disentitling the carrier from relying on his exemption clauses has already been considered. ²²¹

Delay

36-037

At common law a carrier, whether common or private, must deliver the goods at the agreed time, or if no time has been agreed, within a reasonable time. ²²² Unless the carrier's obligation to deliver the goods at destination at an agreed time is construed strictly, he will be liable for delay only insofar as he has failed to exercise reasonable care to deliver the goods at the required time. ²²³ He is not liable for delay where it was due to any cause outside the range of reasonable foresight and his own control, like an act of God, ²²⁴ or the act of a third party, ²²⁵ imperfect addressing of the goods by the consignor, ²²⁶ a strike of the carrier's employees, ²²⁷ the need (which could not reasonably have been foreseen) to give priority to passenger traffic, ²²⁸ or an exceptional and not reasonably foreseeable press of traffic. ²²⁹ In the latter case, it is the carrier's duty to forward goods in the order in which he received them; failure to do this may amount to negligence. ²³⁰ If the carrier has failed to exercise the requisite degree of care so as to be liable for delay, the Carriers Act will afford him no protection. ²³¹

Detention

36-038

Detention is only another form of delay; it means negligent failure to dispatch the goods in proper time from the station of dispatch or retention of the goods at the station of destination for more than a reasonable time. ²³²

Measure of damages for delay

36-039

At common law the carrier is liable for such damages resulting from delay as arise naturally, i.e. according to the usual course of things, from the breach of contract ²³³; or, to put it differently, for such damages as were at the time of the contract reasonably foreseeable as likely to result from such breach. ²³⁴ He is not liable for loss of exceptional profit which the owner would have made ²³⁵ unless it is shown that he knew of the facts which would lead to such special loss if he was guilty of delay. ²³⁶ Several standard form contracts provide that in general the carrier will not be liable for indirect or consequential damages or for loss of a particular market, whether held daily or at intervals. ²³⁷

Misdelivery

36-040

If the carrier delivers the goods to the wrong person, he is liable for breach of contract and for conversion. ²³⁸ But the strict liability in the tort of conversion is modified in favour of carriers. Thus, provided the carrier delivers to the consignee named in the contract, in accordance with its terms, he is not guilty of breach of contract or conversion if the consignee is not otherwise entitled to the goods, e.g. because he is receiving stolen goods. ²³⁹ This privilege has been regarded as a just corollary to the common carrier's general duty to accept the goods of all ²⁴⁰; but today it probably applies to all carriers, whether common or private. Again, if the carrier, in delivering, as he thinks, to the agreed consignee, is in fact tricked into delivering to the wrong person in circumstances which ought reasonably to have aroused suspicion in his mind that the person holding himself out as consignee was not lawfully entitled to the goods, the carrier will be liable for breach of contract, because of his fault, and for conversion. ²⁴¹ But if he delivers the goods to the address to which they were consigned, and there are no suspicious circumstances to warn him that the person claiming delivery there is not in fact entitled to it, he will escape liability. ²⁴² It is not necessarily misdelivery to deliver goods to a swindler who has induced the consignor to send him the goods. In some circumstances, delivery to the wrong person may amount to a fundamental breach of contract and so may prevent the carrier from relying on his exemption clauses, ²⁴³ but this will turn on the construction of the clause and the intentions of the parties. ²⁴⁴

Beginning and end of transit

36-041

It is important to determine when transit begins and ends, because the carrier's liability as a carrier only exists between these times: after the end of transit he is only subject to the (usually lesser) liability of a warehouseman. ²⁴⁵ Transit begins not when the vehicle begins to move ²⁴⁶ but when the goods are delivered to and accepted by the carrier or by one of his actually or ostensibly authorised employees or agents. ²⁴⁷ At common law transit ends when the goods are tendered to the consignee, whether he has accepted them or not. Where the goods are not to be delivered at the consignee's premises, transit ends a reasonable time after their arrival at the station or place of destination. ²⁴⁸

Stoppage in transit

36-042

Under the Sale of Goods Act 1979, ²⁴⁹ the consignor, if he is an unpaid seller who has learnt of the insolvency of the buyer, has a right to stop the goods while they are in transit, even though he is not the owner and even though he may not be a party to the contract of carriage. The meaning of “in transit” for the purposes of this rule is defined in the Act ²⁵⁰ and does not exactly coincide with its meaning for the purposes of holding the carrier liable as a carrier. ²⁵¹ For instance, if the carrier wrongfully refuses to deliver the goods to the buyer, transit is at an end for the purposes of stoppage in transit ²⁵² but not for the purposes of the carrier’s liability. Conversely, if the goods are rejected by the buyer and the carrier continues in possession of them, transit continues for the purposes of stoppage in transit ²⁵³ but ends for the purposes of the carrier’s liability. Failure to comply with a notice to stop the goods when the consignor is properly exercising his right exposes the carrier to an action in tort for conversion. Compliance with an invalid notice may make him similarly liable to the owner. Subject to the foregoing, the carrier is always bound (unless otherwise agreed) to follow the instructions of the owner of the goods, provided it is reasonably practicable to do so ²⁵⁴; and he is entitled to assume that, in the absence of notice to the contrary, the owner is the consignee. ²⁵⁵

Title to sue in contract

36-043

Where the owner has suffered loss or damage to his goods, and has contracted with the carrier, the owner may sue the carrier in an action on that contract. At common law, it is necessary that both the owner and the offending carrier are parties to that contract. ²⁵⁶ Difficulties of identifying the contracting parties arise, where the owner of the goods has sold or bought the goods during the transit, and where the contracting carrier has entrusted the carriage to a sub-carrier or has delivered the goods to a successive carrier. ²⁵⁷ In the case of a sale of the goods carried, an initial presumption is made that he who is the owner of the goods at the time of the breach has contracted with the carrier ²⁵⁸ and that that person is the consignee. ²⁵⁹ In that case, either the carrier has contracted directly with the consignee or the consignor of the goods has contracted with the carrier as the consignee’s agent. ²⁶⁰ Insofar as the consignor is the consignee’s agent, any representation made or variation agreed by the consignor, will bind the consignee, ²⁶¹ provided it is made or agreed with the consignee’s authority. Where the presumption is rebutted and it is established that the consignor, and not the consignee, is a party to the contract of carriage, the consignor will have title to sue the carrier. This may be to the detriment of the consignee, who may have no contractual rights, as the consignor might have no wish to sue the carrier for the benefit of the consignee, especially if the consignor has discharged his obligations to the consignee by delivering the goods to the carrier and has been paid by the consignee. However, there is a possibility of an implied contract coming into being when the consignee takes delivery of the goods from the carrier ²⁶²; such implied contracts, however, raise numerous objections and are limited in their scope. ²⁶³ In cases where the consignor or consignee are not contracting parties, they may now be able to enforce a contractual term which was intended for their benefit pursuant to the Contracts (Rights of Third Parties) Act 1999. ²⁶⁴ Whether or not the owner of the goods is a party to the carriage contract, he may well have his rights in bailment and remedy in tort in respect of any loss of or damage to the goods. ²⁶⁵

^{126.} This need not always be the case. For example, the private carrier may be a gratuitous or involuntary bailee.

^{127.} For example, under the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982.

^{128.} Frans Maas (UK) Ltd v Samsung Electronics (UK) Ltd [2004] EWHC 1502 (Comm), [2004] 2 Lloyd’s Rep. 251 at [154]–[161]; Scheps v Fine Art Logistic Ltd [2007] EWHC 541 (QB) at [30]–[32]. See below, Ch.38.

^{129.} regs 4(1), 5(1), 8(1). See below, Ch.38. See also Lacey’s Footwear (Wholesale) Ltd v Bowler International Freight Ltd [1997] 2 Lloyd’s Rep. 369, 385. In English Welsh & Scottish Railway Ltd v E On UK Plc [2007] EWHC 599 (Comm), a contract for carriage of coal by rail was held to be void and unenforceable where it contained terms which the rail regulator determined to be an abuse of a dominant market position.

^{130.} See below, paras 38-358—38-394 et seq.

- ^{131.} For an account of the evolution of “special contracts” in relation to the carriage of goods by land, see the 24th edn of this work, Vol.II, paras 2817-2818; Kahn-Freund at Ch.9. Note the sage suggestion of Lord Coke in Southcote’s Case (1601) 4 Co. Rep. 83, 84.
- ^{132.} Vol.I, paras 13-008—13-018.
- ^{133.} L’Estrange v F Graucob Ltd [1934] 2 K.B. 394.
- ^{134.} See below, para.36-061.
- ^{135.} See, e.g. Parker v SE Ry (1877) 2 C.P.D. 416; Watkins v Rymill (1883) 10 Q.B.D. 178; Thompson v LMS Ry [1930] 1 K.B. 41; Lacey’s Footwear (Wholesale) Ltd v Bowler International Freight Ltd [1997] 2 Lloyd’s Rep. 369; Cory Bros Shipping Ltd v Baldan Ltd [1997] 2 Lloyd’s Rep. 58, 61–62. cf. T Comedy (UK) Ltd v Easy Managed Transport Ltd [2007] EWHC 611 (Comm), [2007] 2 Lloyd’s Rep. 397 at [28]–[31], where the Court held that such references would not override an already existing agreement between the parties.
- ^{136.} Parker v South Eastern Railway (1877) 2 C.P.D. 416, 428; Thornton v Shoe Lane Parking Ltd [1971] 2 Q.B. 163; Interfoto Picture Library Ltd v Stiletto Visual Programmes Ltd [1989] 1 Q.B. 433; see Vol.I, para.13-015.
- ^{137.} cf. J Spurling Ltd v Bradshaw [1956] 1 W.L.R. 461, 467; Circle Freight International Ltd v Medeast Gulf Exports Ltd [1988] 2 Lloyd’s Rep. 427 CA; Lacey’s Footwear (Wholesale) Ltd v Bowler International Freight Ltd, above, where it was held that a carrier’s mailshots to a customer before their first contract did not amount to a prior course of dealing. In that case, the majority of the Court of Appeal concluded that a party’s standard terms were incorporated because the other party was aware that carriers and forwarding agents tended to contract on the basis of limitation provisions, even though he had not turned his mind to the content of those provisions; whether the party who relied on such provisions had taken adequate steps to draw these provisions to the attention of the other was irrelevant. In such cases, it is legitimate to take into account the nature of the transaction and the position and character of the parties: see also Poseidon Freight Forwarding Co Ltd v Davies Turner Southern Ltd [1996] 2 Lloyd’s Rep. 388.
- ^{138.} Hardwick Game Farm v Suffolk Agricultural Poultry Producers’ Association [1966] 1 W.L.R. 287, 308–309, 316–317, 339; affirmed [1969] 2 A.C. 31; Lacey’s Footwear (Wholesale) Ltd v Bowler International Freight Ltd [1997] 2 Lloyd’s Rep. 369, 378; cf. McCutcheon v David MacBrayne Ltd [1964] 1 W.L.R. 125 HL.
- ^{139.} Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 ss.2(2) and 11. In Granville Oil and Chemicals Ltd v Davies Turner and Co Ltd [2003] EWCA Civ 570, [2003] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 819 at [31], the Court of Appeal upheld a 9-month time-bar in the British International Freight Association Standard Trading Conditions, having found that the road transport leg was sufficient to make the Act applicable to the contract (carriage by sea ordinarily being excluded from the operation of the Act), because the contract was between commercial parties and not consumers. In Frans Maas (UK) Ltd v Samsung Electronics (UK) Ltd [2004] EWHC 1502 (Comm), [2004] 2 Lloyd’s Rep. 251, the court held that the limitation provision under the BIFA Conditions was reasonable. In Rohlig (UK) Ltd v Rock Unique Ltd [2011] EWCA Civ 18, [2011] 2 All E.R. (Comm) 1161 at [23], the Court of Appeal said, in upholding the time bar provision in the BIFA Conditions, that when considering the reasonableness of a standard condition the Court should not be astute to draw fine distinctions between cases which are broadly similar. In this case, at [24]–[25], the Court of Appeal compared the requirements of the 1977 Act and the 1999 Regulations. The party who relies on standard form conditions has to plead and bear the onus of proof that such terms are reasonable: Sheffield v Pickfords Ltd [1997] C.L.C. 648. The difficulties associated with the issue of incorporation of terms were highlighted in Matrix Europe Ltd v Uniserve Northern Ltd [2008] EWHC 11 (Comm), [2008] 1 Lloyd’s Rep. Plus 27. See also below, Ch.38 as to the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999 and the Consumer Rights Act 2015 which replaces and revokes the 1999 Regulations for contracts made on or after October 1, 2015.
- ^{140.} See below, paras 38-358—38-394.

- 141. See above, para.36-008.
- 142. LNW Ry v Neilson [1922] 2 A.C. 263, 266 (Lord Buckmaster).
- 143. Alexander v Railway Executive [1951] 2 K.B. 882, 893.
- 144. Page v London Midland & Scottish Railway [1943] 1 All E.R. 455; Buckmaster v Great Eastern Railway Co (1870) 23 L.T. 471.
- 145. Lamport & Holt Lines Ltd v Coubro Scrutton Ltd [1982] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 42, 50.
- 146. Rutter v Palmer [1922] 2 K.B. 87, 92; Alderslade v Hendon Laundry Ltd [1945] K.B. 189; Shell Chemicals UK Ltd v P & O Roadtanks Ltd [1995] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 297, 301.
- 147. Hollier v Rambler Motors (AMC) Ltd [1972] 2 Q.B. 71; Gillespie Bros & Co Ltd v Roy Bowles Transport Ltd [1973] Q.B. 400, 415; HIH Casualty and General Insurance Ltd v Chase Manhattan Bank [2003] UKHL 6, [2003] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 61 at [11], [59]–[66], [95]. See above, Vol.I, paras 15-013—15-016.
- 148. Price & Co v Union Lighterage Co [1903] 1 K.B. 750; affirmed [1904] 1 K.B. 412. See Kahn-Freund at pp.231–234. A similar analysis was considered by Lord Hoffmann in HIH Casualty and General Insurance Ltd v Chase Manhattan Bank [2003] UKHL 6, [2003] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 61 at [66]–[67] in the analogous case of the impact of an exemption clause on an assured's duty of disclosure, the negligent or non-negligent breach of which results in the voidability of the insurance contract.
- 149. Rutter v Palmer [1922] 2 K.B. 87; Turner v Civil Service Supply Association Ltd [1926] 1 K.B. 50; Fagan v Green and Edwards Ltd [1926] 1 K.B. 102; Bontex Knitting Works Ltd v St John's Garage [1943] 2 All E.R. 690; affirmed [1944] 1 All E.R. 381n; Harris Ltd v Continental Express Ltd [1961] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 251; cf. Alderslade v Hendon Laundry Ltd [1945] K.B. 189.
- 150. White v John Warwick & Co Ltd [1953] 2 All E.R. 1021.
- 151. Austin v MS & L Ry (1852) 10 C.B. 454; Carr v L & Y Ry (1852) 7 Exch. 707; Manchester, Sheffield & Lincs Ry v Brown (1883) 8 App. Cas. 703.
- 152. Shaw v GW Ry [1894] 1 Q.B. 373.
- 153. Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.2(2).
- 154. Overseas Medical Supplies v Orient Transport Services Ltd [1999] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 981.
- 155. See below, paras 38-354—38-394.
- 156. See Vol.1, Ch.15.
- 157. Mallet v GE Ry [1899] 1 Q.B. 309; LNW Ry v Neilson [1922] 2 A.C. 263.
- 158. Gunyon v SE & C Ry [1915] 2 K.B. 370; cf. Sleat v Fagg (1822) 5 B. & Ald. 342.
- 159. Bontex Knitting Works Ltd v St John's Garage [1943] 2 All E.R. 690; affirmed [1944] 1 All E.R. 381n. In Suisse Atlantique Société d'Armement Maritime SA v NV Rotterdamsche Kolen Centrale [1967] 1 A.C. 361, 435, Lord Wilberforce had doubts about the correctness of this decision, but was prepared to accept it as a case of deviation.
- 160. Alexander v Railway Executive [1951] 2 K.B. 882; contrast Hollins v J Davy Ltd [1963] 1 Q.B. 844.
- 161. Garnham, Harris & Elton Ltd v Alfred W Ellis (Transport) Ltd [1967] 1 W.L.R. 940, where the load (copper wire) was known to be particularly susceptible to theft.

- 162. For further anomalous results when goods are carried by rail at owner's risk, see below, para.36-031.
- 163. Bontex Knitting Works Ltd v St John's Garage [1943] 2 All E.R. 690. It should not be inferred from this case (where the circumstances were rather special) that every time a lorry driver left a loaded lorry unattended, this amounted to fundamental breach. The contrary has often been decided: see, e.g. Harris Ltd v Continental Express Ltd [1961] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 251, 260; Colverd & Co Ltd v Anglo-Overseas Transport Co Ltd [1961] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 352; Mayfair Photographic Supplies (London) Ltd v Baxter, Hoare and Co Ltd [1972] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 410.
- 164. Carter (Fine Worsteds) Ltd v Hanson Haulage Ltd [1965] 2 Q.B. 495. The decision of the majority of the Court of Appeal on this part of the case may need reconsideration—that it is clear that an employee who steals goods which have been bailed to his employer may be acting within the scope of his employment: Morris v CW Martin Ltd [1966] 1 Q.B. 716. In particular, the statement in [1965] 2 Q.B. at 524–525 that fundamental breach must always be personal and not vicarious is questionable.
- 165. Carter (Fine Worsteds) Ltd v Hanson Haulage Ltd, above.
- 166. Garnham, Harris & Elton Ltd v Alfred W Ellis (Transport) Ltd [1967] 1 W.L.R. 940.
- 167. Woolmer v Delmer Price Ltd [1955] 1 Q.B. 291; Levison v Patent Steam Carpet Cleaning Co Ltd [1978] Q.B. 69. The latter decision of the Court of Appeal is at odds with the Court of Appeal's decision in Hunt and Winterbotham (West of England) Ltd v BRS (Parcels) Ltd [1962] 1 Q.B. 617; cf. HC Smith Ltd v GW Ry [1922] 1 A.C. 178. See Euro Cellular (Distribution) Plc v Danzas Ltd [2003] EWHC 3163 (Comm), [2004] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 521 at [60]–[64].
- 168. Suisse Atlantique Société d'Armement Maritime SA v NV Rotterdamsche Kolen Centrale [1967] 1 A.C. 361; Photo Production Ltd v Securicor Transport Ltd [1980] A.C. 827.
- 169. See Vol.I, paras 15-023—15-027, where the question is fully discussed. See, generally, Kenyon, Son and Craven Ltd v Baxter, Hoare and Co Ltd [1971] 1 W.L.R. 519 (bailment); followed in Gallaher Ltd v British Road Services Ltd [1974] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 440 (carriage by road).
- 170. Photo Production Ltd v Securicor Transport Ltd, above.
- 171. With the possible exception of Bontex Knitting Works Ltd v St John's Garage: see above, n.163.
- 172. Photo Production Ltd v Securicor Transport Ltd [1980] A.C. 827 at 845.
- 173. Kenya Railways v Antares Pte Ltd (The Antares) (Nos 1 and 2) [1987] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 424, 430; State Trading Corp of India Ltd v M Golodetz Ltd [1989] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 277, 288–289. Such clauses when included in standard forms or used against consumers must always be reasonable: Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.3(2)(b). See also Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999 Sch.2 para.1(b) and the Consumer Rights Act 2015, ss.62–65 and Sch.2 Pt 1 para.2. For contracts made on or after October 1, 2015 the 1999 Regulations are replaced and revoked by the 2015 Act (see below, paras 38-358—38-394).
- 174. The distinction between exemption clauses and clauses allocating risk may be a fine one and may be controversial: see HIH Casualty and General Insurance Ltd v Chase Manhattan Bank [2001] EWCA Civ 1250, [2001] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 483 at [118]–[119]; reversed in part [2003] UKHL 6, [2003] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 61.
- 175. See above, paras 36-018—36-022.
- 176. There are numerous authorities concerning carriage and insurance contracts interpreting such “war risks” exceptions: see e.g. Green v British India Steam Navigation Co Ltd (1920) 4 Ll.L. Rep. 245; Pesqueras y Secaderos e Bacalao de España SA v Beer (1949) 82 Ll.L. Rep. 501; Spinney's (1948) Ltd v Royal Insurance Co [1980] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 406. As to “insurrection”, see

- National Oil Co of Zimbabwe (Private) Ltd v Sturge* [1991] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 281.
- 177. Sommer v Mathews (1934) 49 Ll.L. Rep. 154.
- 178. cf. Handelsbanken Norwegian Branch of Svenska Handelsbanken AB v Dandridge (The Aliza Glacial) [2002] EWCA Civ 577, [2002] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 421.
- 179. Gould v South Eastern and Chatham Railway Co [1920] K.B. 186.
- 180. Boggan v Motor Union Insurance Co Ltd (1923) 16 Ll.L. Rep. 64.
- 181. The meaning of "stoppage or restraint of labour" was considered in Young and Son Ltd v British Transport Commission [1955] 2 Q.B. 177.
- 182. "Wilful misconduct" is a term which is used in the CMR Convention (see below, para.36-131) and in the Marine Insurance Act 1906 (see below, para.42-022). As a contractual term, the words may attract a different meaning through the process of contractual construction.
- 183. See, e.g. Lewis v GW Ry (1877) 3 Q.B.D. 195; Graham v Belfast and Northern Counties Ry [1901] 2 I.R. 13; Forder v GW Ry [1905] 2 K.B. 532; Bastable v NB Ry, 1912 S.C. 555; Hartstoke Fruiterers Ltd v LMS Ry [1942] 2 All E.R. 488; affirming on other grounds [1943] K.B. 362; Horabin v BOAC [1952] 2 All E.R. 1016; Young & Son Ltd v BTC [1955] 2 Q.B. 177; Kahn-Freund at pp.257–261.
- 184. HC Smith Ltd v Great Western Railway [1922] 1 A.C. 178.
- 185. See generally, Hill [1969] J.B.L. 100.
- 186. Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 ss.2(2) and 11.
- 187. See below, paras 38-358—38-394.
- 188. The extent to which the conditions are applicable to contracts for the hire of vehicles by one carrier from another was discussed in Gillespie Bros and Co Ltd v Roy Bowles Transport Ltd [1973] Q.B. 400.
- 189. Eastman Chemical International AG v NMT Trading Ltd [1972] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 25. cf. T Comedy (UK) Ltd v Easy Managed Transport Ltd [2007] EWHC 611 (Comm), [2007] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 397, [28]–[31].
- 190. See above, para.36-031.
- 191. RHA Conditions cl.11(1). This provision in the 1998 conditions was new and was inserted together with a new cl.8, as a result of the court's decision in Spectra International Plc v Hayesoak Ltd [1997] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 153, [1998] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 162. As to the meaning of consignment, see Gillespie Bros and Co Ltd v Roy Bowles Transport Ltd [1973] Q.B. 400; and Acme Transport Ltd v Betts [1981] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 131.
- 192. RHA Conditions cl.11(2).
- 193. RHA Conditions cl.11(1) and 11(2).
- 194. Walker v Jackson (1842) 10 M. & W. 161; Crouch v LNW Ry (1854) 14 C.B. 255.
- 195. The public had a grievance too: see 24th edition of this work, Vol.II, para.2817.
- 196. s.1. See Kahn-Freund at pp.335–337, 345–354; Leslie at pp.182–216.
- 197. For the meaning of "loss", see Hearn v LSW Ry (1855) 10 Exch. 793; Piancini v LSW Ry (1856) 18 C.B. 226; Wallace v Dublin & Belfast Ry (1874) I.R. 8 C.L. 341; Millen v Brasch (1882) 10

- Q.B.D. 142*. The Act provides no protection if the goods are lost or damaged by delay: Hearn v London and South Western Ry Co (1855) 10 Exch. 793; Millen v Brasch (1882) 10 Q.B.D. 142.
- 198. See, e.g. Whaite v L & Y Ry (1874) L.R. 9 Ex. 67. cf. Treadwin v GE Ry (1868) L.R. 3 C.P. 308.
- 199. See Leslie at pp.193–198; Kahn-Freund at pp.348–350. The list includes gold, silver, bank notes or coin, jewellery, precious stones, watches, clocks, stamps, maps, “writings”, title deeds, paintings, glass, china, silk, furs, and lace. The Carriers Act Amendment Act 1865 excepted from this list “machine-made lace”. The Statute Law (Repeals) Act 2004 repealed the 1865 Act (Sch.1 Pt 17, Group 11(4)), but re-introduced the exception into s.1 of the 1830 Act (Sch.2 para.1).
- 200. Behrens v GN Ry (1861) 6 H. & N. 366; affirmed (1862) 7 H. & N. 950.
- 201. Carriers Act 1830 s.2.
- 202. s.3.
- 203. ss.1, 8. Section 8 originally referred to “the felonious acts” of servants. The words in the text were substituted by s.10 of and Sch.2 para.4, to the Criminal Law Act 1967 (as amended by the Theft Act 1968 s.33(3) and Sch.3 Pt III). As to who is a servant, see Stephens v LSW Ry (1886) 18 Q.B.D. 121. For the degree of proof necessary, see Boyce v Chapman (1835) 2 Bing. N.C. 222; GW Ry v Rimell (1856) 18 C.B. 575; Metcalf v LB & SC Ry (1858) 4 C.B.(N.S.) 307; Vaughton v LNW Ry (1874) L.R. 9 Ex. 93; Kirkstall Brewery Co v Furness Ry (1874) L.R. 9 Q.B. 468; M’Queen v GW Ry (1875) L.R. 10 Q.B. 569. Some of these cases are difficult to reconcile.
- 204. s.3.
- 205. s.7. The carrier may, however, prove that the actual value is less than the declared value, in which case his liability is limited to the former: s.9. The value is the invoice price to the buyer, not the price paid by the seller: Blankensee v LNW Ry (1881) 45 L.T. 761.
- 206. Morritt v NE Ry (1876) 1 Q.B.D. 302; Millen v Brasch (1882) 10 Q.B.D. 142. For fundamental breach, see above, paras 36-029—36-030.
- 207. Boys v Pink (1838) 8 C. & P. 361; Hinton v Dibbin (1842) 2 Q.B. 646.
- 208. Today, no person may be a common carrier by rail: Railways Act 1993 s.123; the Railways Regulations 1998 (SI 1998/1340) reg.23. See above, para.36-010.
- 209. No conclusion to the contrary should, it is submitted, be drawn from Houghland v RR Low (Luxury Coaches) Ltd [1962] 1 Q.B. 694, where not only was it not argued that the defendant was a common carrier, but also the carriage was what is technically known as “contract carriage”, i.e. where the coach is hired for a lump sum, and not “stage carriage” or “express carriage”, where each passenger pays a separate fare.
- 210. Le Conteur v LSW Ry (1865) L.R. 1 Q.B. 54; Casswell v Cheshire Lines Committee [1907] 2 K.B. 499.
- 211. LNW Ry v Ashton [1920] A.C. 84.
- 212. Le Conteur v LSW Ry, above.
- 213. See above, para.36-015. See, generally, Hill [1978] L.M.C.L.Q. 74; Effort Shipping Co Ltd v Linden Management SA; The Giannis NK [1998] 1 All E.R. 495. The RHA Conditions by cl.1 define “dangerous goods” as meaning “goods named individually in the Approved Carriage List issued from time to time by the Health and Safety Commission, explosives, radioactive substances and any other substances presenting a similar hazard”.

- 214. Brass v Maitland (1856) 6 El. & Bl. 470, 482; Bamfield v Goole and Sheffield Transport Co Ltd [1910] 2 K.B. 94.
- 215. Farrant v Barnes (1862) 1 C.B.N.S. 553; Great Northern Railway Co v LEP Transport and Depository Ltd [1922] 2 K.B. 742; Bamfield v Goole and Sheffield Transport Co Ltd, above; Girvin [1996] L.M.C.L.Q. 487.
- 216. See, for example, Carriage of Dangerous Goods by Rail Regulations 1996 (SI 1996/2089), Carriage of Explosives by Road Regulations 1996 (SI 1996/2093), Carriage of Dangerous Goods by Road Regulations 1996 (SI 1996/2095), Packaging Labelling and Carriage of Radioactive Material by Rail Regulations 2002 (SI 2002/2099), and Carriage of Dangerous Goods and Use of Transportable Pressure Equipment Regulations 2009 (SI 2009/1348, as amended by SI 2011/1885). See also European Commission Directives 96/86 and 96/87, implemented by Carriage of Dangerous Goods (Amendment) Regulations 1999 (SI 1999/303).
- 217. See below, paras 36-079—36-082.
- 218. Hales v LNW Ry (1863) 4 B. & S. 66, 71; Myers v LSW Ry (1869) L.R. 5 C.P. 1.
- 219. Davis v Garrett (1830) 6 Bing. 716 (barge); Taylor v GN Ry (1866) L.R. 1 C.P. 385, 388.
- 220. Taylor v GN Ry, above.
- 221. See above, paras 36-029—36-030.
- 222. See also Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 s.14.
- 223. Raphael v Pickford (1843) 5 Man. G. 551; Taylor v Great Northern Railway Co (1866) L.R. 1 C.P. 385; Panalpina International Transport Ltd v Densil Underwear Ltd [1981] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 187.
- 224. e.g. Briddon v GN Ry (1858) 28 L.J. Ex. 51.
- 225. Taylor v GN Ry (1866) L.R. 1 C.P. 385.
- 226. Caledonian Ry v William Hunter and Co (1858) 20 D.(Ct. of Sess.) 1097.
- 227. Sims v Midland Ry [1913] 1 K.B. 103.
- 228. Briddon v GN Ry (1858) 28 L.J. Ex. 51; Goddard v Midland Ry (1899) 80 L.T. 624.
- 229. Wallace v G & SW Ry (1869) 17 W.R. 464.
- 230. Page v GN Ry (1868) L.R. 2 C.L. 228.
- 231. Hearn v London and South Western Ry Co (1855) 10 Exch. 793; Millen v Brasch (1882) 10 Q.B.D. 142. See above, paras 36-033—36-034.
- 232. See Gordon v GW Ry (1881) 8 Q.B.D. 44.
- 233. Hadley v Baxendale (1854) 9 Exch. 341, 354–355.
- 234. Victoria Laundry (Windsor) Ltd v Newman Industries Ltd [1949] 2 K.B. 528, 539–540; Czarnikow Ltd v Koufos [1969] 1 A.C. 350. See Vol.I, paras 26-052—26-064.
- 235. Horne v Midland Ry (1873) L.R. 8 C.P. 131.
- 236. Simpson v LNW Ry (1876) 1 Q.B.D. 274.
- 237. Such clauses essentially only purport to exclude damages which might be recoverable pursuant

- to the second limb of the rule in Hadley v Baxendale (1854) 9 Exch. 341, although each clause will have to be construed in its own context: Croudace Construction Ltd v Cawoods Concrete Products Ltd [1978] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 55; British Sugar Plc v NEI Power Projects Ltd (1998) 87 B.L.R. 42; Deepak Fertilisers & Petrochemical Corp v ICI Chemicals & Polymers Ltd [1999] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 69.
- 238. Youl v Harbottle (1791) Peake N.P.C. 68; M'Kean v M'Ivor (1870) L.R. 6 Ex. 36, 41.
- 239. M'Kean v M'Ivor, above, at 41; Fowler v Hollins (1872) L.R. 7 Q.B. 616, 632; British Traders Ltd v Ubique Transport Ltd [1952] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 236. cf. Clarke at para.231.
- 240. Sheridan v New Quay Co (1858) 4 C.B.(N.S.) 618; Fowler v Hollins, above, at 649–650.
- 241. Duff v Budd (1822) 3 Brod. & Bing. 177; Stephenson v Hart (1828) 4 Bing. 476. Quaere: whether Duff v Budd and Stephenson v Hart are not in fact cases of involuntary bailment? Stephenson v Hart was so regarded in Heugh v LNW Ry (1870) L.R. 5 Ex. 51, 56–57, 58, but not in M'Kean v M'Ivor (1870) L.R. 6 Ex. 36 at 39. cf. the similar rule of reasonably careful delivery in the law of sale of goods: Galbraith & Grant Ltd v Block [1922] 2 K.B. 155; see below, para.44-243.
- 242. M'Kean v M'Ivor, above; Heugh v LNW Ry, above; British Traders Ltd v Ubique Transport Ltd [1952] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 236. See also Birkett v Willan (1819) 2 B. & Ad. 356; Leslie at pp.92–96; Kahn-Freund at pp.298–301; Hughes (1931) 47 L.Q.R. 244 et seq.
- 243. Alexander v Railway Executive [1951] 2 K.B. 882; contrast Hollins v J Davy Ltd [1963] 1 Q.B. 844; Sze Hai Tong Bank Ltd v Rambler Cycle Co Ltd [1959] A.C. 576; see above, paras 36-029—36-030.
- 244. Photo Production Ltd v Securicor Transport Ltd [1980] A.C. 827.
- 245. As to the liability of a warehouseman, see above, para.33-058. As to the distinction between the liability of carriers and that of other intermediaries in the freight trade see, generally, Hill, Freight Forwarders (1972), Chs 2 and 11. See above, para.36-006.
- 246. Sadler Brothers Co v Meredith [1963] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 293, 307.
- 247. Soanes v LSW Ry (1919) 88 L.J.K.B. 524; Rigby (Haulage) Ltd v Reliance Marine Insurance Co Ltd [1956] 2 Q.B. 468. Contrast Slim v GN Ry (1854) 14 C.B. 647; Harrisons & Crossfield Ltd v LNW Ry [1917] 2 K.B. 755; Crows Transport Ltd v Phoenix Assurance Co Ltd [1965] 1 W.L.R. 383. See also Leslie at pp.65–68; Kahn-Freund at pp.312–321.
- 248. Chapman v GW Ry (1880) 5 Q.B.D. 278.
- 249. ss.44–46; see below, paras 44-326—44-338. See Leslie at pp.74–84; Kahn-Freund at pp.304–306. As to priority between the right of stoppage in transit and the carrier's lien, see below, para.36-052.
- 250. s.45.
- 251. See above, para.36-041.
- 252. s.45(6).
- 253. s.45(4).
- 254. Scothorn v S Staffs Ry (1853) 8 Exch. 341.
- 255. Cork Distilleries Co v GS & W Ry (1874) L.R. 7 H.L. 269.
- 256. See Leslie at pp.51–63; Kahn-Freund at pp.209–212.

- 257. See below, paras 36-046—36-047.
- 258. Dawes v Peck (1799) 8 T.R. 330; Fragano v Long (1825) 4 B. & C. 219; Dunlop v Lambert (1839) 6 Cl. & F. 600, 627; Coats v Chaplin (1842) 3 Q.B. 483; Coombs v Bristol and Exeter Ry (1858) 3 H. & N. 1, 510; Murphy v Midland Great Western Ry [1903] 2 I.R. 5.
- 259. Stephenson v Hart (1828) 4 Bing. 476, 487; Heugh v London and North Western Ry (1870) L.R. 5 Ex. 51, 57–58; Albacruz (Cargo Owners) v Albazero (Owners); The Albazero [1977] A.C. 774.
- 260. Cork Distilleries Co v GS & W Ry (1874) L.R. 7 H.L. 269, 277, 281; Murphy v Midland Great Western Ry [1903] 2 I.R. 5, 23, 30; Albacruz (Cargo Owners) v Albazero (Owners) (The Albazero) [1977] A.C. 774, 785–786, 842–848; Texas Instruments Ltd v Nasan (Europe) Ltd [1991] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 146, 148–149; Kahn-Freund at p.210.
- 261. Clarke, International Carriage of Goods by Road: CMR, 6th edn (2014), para.216c. cf. Leduc v Ward (1888) 20 Q.B.D. 475.
- 262. Brandt v Liverpool Brazil & River Plate [1924] 1 K.B. 575.
- 263. The Aramis [1989] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 213. The difficulties led to the passing of the Carriage of Goods by Sea Act 1992 in relation to sea carriage. Other devices which have been developed to circumvent the doctrine of privity include the so-called principle in Dunlop v Lambert (1839) 6 Cl. & F. 600; Albacruz (Cargo Owners) v Albazero (Owners) (The Albazero) [1977] A.C. 774, 847; Alfred McAlpine Construction Ltd v Panatown Ltd [2001] 1 A.C. 518) to the effect that the original contracting party has entered into the contract for the benefit for all his successors in title to the goods, and assignments (Britain & Overseas Trading (Bristles) v Brooks Wharf & Bull Wharf [1967] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 51, 60).
- 264. The 1999 Act does not apply to contracts for the carriage of goods by rail or road which are the subject of an international convention, save that provisions which provide for the exemption of a third party's liability may be enforced by that third party under s.1: s.6(5).
- 265. If the consignee engaged the carrier, they will have established a relationship of bailment at will: Transcontainer Express Ltd v Custodian Security Ltd [1988] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 128, 135. If the consignor contracted with the carrier and assigns the benefit of that contract to the consignee, the latter will succeed to the consignor's rights as bailor: Sonicare International Ltd v East Anglia Freight Terminal Ltd [1997] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 48, 53. cf. Clarke, International Carriage of Goods by Road: CMR, 6th edn (2014), para.216c. See above, paras 36-001, 36-013.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 36 - Carriage by Land

Section 2. - Internal Carriage

(a) - Goods

(v) - Liability in Tort

Liability in tort

36-044

A person whose goods are lost or damaged during transit has alternative remedies against the carrier either for breach of contract or for tort. ²⁶⁶ This has long been settled law.

“The declaration in an action against a carrier may be framed either upon the contract, charging the injury as a breach of contract; or upon the duty imposed by law, charging the injury as breach of duty or wrong.” ²⁶⁷

This does not mean that, if the contract contains exemption clauses, the claimant can disregard the contract and allege a wider liability in tort. ²⁶⁸ Exemption clauses may, indeed, be construed as being wide enough to indemnify a carrier against liability in tort, not only his own but also that of his employees, ²⁶⁹ although naturally such clauses as purport, in the case of loss or damage to goods, to exclude or limit liability for negligence must now satisfy the statutory test of reasonableness. ²⁷⁰ But the existence of the alternative remedy does mean that the claimant may be able to sue in tort if there is no privity of contract between him and the defendant, for example, where the consignor makes the carriage contract, but the consignee suffers loss at the carrier's hands. The remedy in tort will be of service to claimants where there is lack of privity in various situations. ²⁷¹ First, for example, the claimant may be a stranger to the contract of carriage, as when his goods have been borrowed or stolen from him, or hired to a hirer under a hire-purchase contract, and are then handed to a carrier by the borrower, thief or hirer, for carriage to a consignee. Secondly, the defendant may be a stranger to the contract of carriage, as when the owner of goods contracts with a carrier, and then sues someone else whose act or omission caused the loss or damage, e.g. the carrier's employee, or another carrier to whom the contract of carriage was subcontracted either in whole or in part.

Title to sue in tort

36-045

A claimant claiming damages in tort for the loss of or damage to his goods will rely either on the tort of negligence or on the tort of conversion. If he relies on negligence, he will have to prove that the defendant owed him a duty of care and broke it, ²⁷² and that he was the owner of the goods or entitled to possession of them at the time when the loss or damage occurred by reason of the negligent act. ²⁷³ If he relies on conversion, he will have to prove that he had an immediate right to possession, ²⁷⁴ unless he can show a permanent injury to his reversionary interest, ²⁷⁵ e.g. by reason of the destruction or loss of the goods. ²⁷⁶ However, if the relation between the claimant and defendant is that of head bailor and sub-bailee, as it may be when the contract of carriage has been sub-contracted with the actual or ostensible authority of the owner, then the claimant may be in a more favourable position. ²⁷⁷ If he sues for negligence, he will not have to prove that the defendant owed him a duty of care, because this arises automatically from the relationship between the parties; and the onus of disproving negligence will be on the defendant. ²⁷⁸ If he sues for conversion, he will not have to prove that he has a better right to possession, because the defendant will probably be estopped from denying his head bailor's title. ²⁷⁹ A carrier who voluntarily takes into his possession the goods of some other person can only invoke the terms of the sub-bailment under which he received the goods from an intermediate bailee against the owner of the goods when the owner has actually, expressly or impliedly, or even ostensibly authorised the sub-bailment and thus consented to the terms of the sub-bailment. ²⁸⁰

Scope of exemption clauses: sub-contracting

36-046

An exemption clause contained in a contract can only operate contractually; and it is a fundamental principle of the common law that no one except a party to a contract can take any advantage from it. ²⁸¹ Hence, even if an exemption clause purports to exonerate not only the carrier but also his employees or agents, they will not be entitled to the benefit of the clause if the claimant sues them in tort, because they are not parties to the contract of carriage. ²⁸² Similarly, if the carrier sub-contracts the whole or part of the contract of carriage as principal, and not as agent, and the owner sues the sub-carrier in tort, the owner will not be bound by exemption clauses contained in the sub-contract, because he is not a party thereto. ²⁸³ However, it is different if the carrier contracted with the owner as agent for the sub-carrier, because in that case the sub-carrier is a party to the original contract ²⁸⁴; or if he contracted with the sub-carrier as agent for the owner, because in that case the owner is a party to the sub-carrier's contract ²⁸⁵; or if the owner consented to the sub-bailment on the terms of the exemption clause. ²⁸⁶ These common law principles are now subject to the Contracts (Rights of Third Parties) Act 1999, which might permit an employee, agent or sub-bailee to enforce the benefit of an exemption clause. ²⁸⁷

Successive carriers

36-047

If a carrier engages the services of another carrier to perform part of the contract of carriage, it is important to know whether he contracted to carry the goods to their ultimate destination, or only to the point where he hands them over to the second carrier. ²⁸⁸ In the former case the first carrier will be liable to the owner (subject, of course, to the conditions of carriage) for loss of or damage to the goods which happens at any stage of the journey. In the latter case the first carrier will only be liable for loss or damage which happens while the goods are in his hands. In both cases, of course, the second carrier may be liable to the owner in tort in accordance with the principles already discussed, ²⁸⁹ or for breach of contract, if the second carrier contracted directly with the owner or through the agency of the first carrier.

^{266.} Although set-off against freight cannot be relied upon: United Carriers Ltd v Heritage Food Group (UK) Ltd [1995] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 269.

^{267.} Bullen and Leake, Precedents of Pleadings, 3rd edn (1868), p.120; cf. 13th edn (1990), p.142. For modern cases, see Harris Ltd v Continental Express Ltd [1961] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 251; Learoyd Bros Ltd and Huddersfield Fine Worsteds Ltd v Pope & Sons (Dock Carriers) Ltd [1966] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 142; Lee Cooper Ltd v CH Jeakins & Sons Ltd [1967] 2 Q.B. 1; cf. Morris v CW Martin Ltd [1966] 1 Q.B. 716 (bailment); Moukataff v BOAC [1967] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 396 (carriage by air at common law); Transmotors Ltd v Robertson, Buckley & Co Ltd [1970] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 224 (bailment to subcontractor in carriage of goods); James Buchanan v Hay's Transport Services [1972] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 535 (gratuitous sub-bailment in carriage of goods); Gillespie Bros & Co Ltd v Roy Bowles Transport Ltd [1973] Q.B. 400. As to the scope of liability in tort where there is a contract between the tortfeasor and the claimant, see Henderson v Merrett

- Syndicates Ltd* [1995] 2 A.C. 145; cf. Tai Hing Cotton Mills Ltd v Liu Chong Hing Bank Ltd [1986] A.C. 80. cf. Clarke, International Carriage of Goods by Road: CMR, 6th edn (2014), para.229a.
- 268. Hall v Brooklands Auto Racing Club [1933] 1 K.B. 205, 213; contrast White v John Warwick Ltd [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1285.
- 269. Gillespie Bros & Co Ltd v Roy Bowles Transport Ltd [1973] Q.B. 400; reversing [1971] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 521: this concerned the construction of cl.3(4) in the 1967 Conditions of the Road Haulage Association. The RHA amended and amplified this clause in light of the decision at first instance so as to cover a carrier in the event of his own negligence. The amendment proved unnecessary in light of the Court of Appeal's decision. See also Hair and Skin Trading Co Ltd v Norman Airfreight Carriers Ltd [1974] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 443 on the construction of the similar cl.20 under the RHA's 1961 Conditions. Clause 3(4) in the RHA Conditions 1967 was held only to regulate rights and duties arising strictly out of the carriage of goods and not, e.g. indemnities in respect of claims against a carrier by employees for breach of common law and statutory duties: Boughen v Frederick Attwood Ltd [1978] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 413. See Cert Plc v George Hammond Plc [1999] 2 All E.R. (Comm) 976 as to the scope of RHA Conditions 1991 cl.11. As to the employer's vicarious liability for the acts of his employees, see Frans Maas (UK) Ltd v Samsung Electronics (UK) Ltd [2004] EWHC 1502 (Comm), [2004] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 251.
- 270. Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 ss.2(2) and 11.
- 271. The disabling effect of a lack of privity is now qualified by the Contracts (Rights of Third Parties) Act 1999.
- 272. Lee Cooper Ltd v CH Jeakins & Sons Ltd [1967] 2 Q.B. 1.
- 273. Margarine GmbH v Cambay Prince Steamship Co Ltd [1969] 1 Q.B. 219; Leigh and Silavan Ltd v Aliakmon Shipping Co Ltd [1986] A.C. 785.
- 274. Kahler v Midland Bank Ltd [1950] A.C. 24.
- 275. Mears v LSW Ry (1862) 11 C.B.(N.S.) 850; HSBC Rail (UK) Ltd v Network Rail Infrastructure Ltd [2005] EWCA Civ 1437, [2006] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 358.
- 276. Moukattaf v BOAC [1967] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 396, 415.
- 277. KH Enterprise (Cargo Owners) v Pioneer Container (Owners) (The Pioneer Container) [1994] 2 A.C. 324. A successor in title to the bailor's goods will be owed a duty in bailment by the bailee or sub-bailee if the original bailor assigns the benefit of the contract of carriage to the successor or if the bailee attorns to the successor: Sonicare International Ltd v East Anglia Freight Terminal Ltd [1997] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 48, 53; East West Corp v DKBS 1912 [2003] EWCA Civ 83, [2003] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 239 at [39]–[42]. See also Spectra International Plc v Hayesoak Ltd [1997] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 153, [1998] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 162.
- 278. Victoria Fur Traders Ltd v Roadline (UK) Ltd [1981] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 570, 578.
- 279. However, even if the claimant proves a sub-bailment, he may be caught by exceptions included in the terms on which the goods were received by the sub-bailee from the head bailee: Johnson, Matthey & Co Ltd v Constantine Terminals Ltd [1976] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 215; Singer Co (UK) Ltd v Tees and Hartlepool Port Authority [1988] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 164, 168. The claimant will, however, only be subject to the terms of the sub-bailment when he expressly or impliedly consented to them: KH Enterprise (Cargo Owners) v Pioneer Container (Owners) (The Pioneer Container), above. See, generally, Palmer and McKendrick, Interests in Goods, 2nd edn (1998), Ch.19 (Bell).
- 280. KH Enterprise (Cargo Owners) v Pioneer Container (Owners) (The Pioneer Container) [1994] 2 A.C. 324 PC. See Sandeman Coprimar SA v Transitos y Transportes Integrales SA [2003] EWCA Civ 113, [2003] 2 W.L.R. 1496, [61]–[66], where it was held that the terms of the sub-bailment, which were based on the CMR Convention, applied as between the bailor and sub-bailee. See also Cami Automotive Insurance v Westwood Shipping Lines Inc 2009 FC 664, 2012 FCA 16 (Fed CA Canada).

281. Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co Ltd v Selfridge & Co Ltd [1915] A.C. 847; Vol.I, Ch.18.

282. Scruttons Ltd v Midlands Silicones Ltd [1962] A.C. 446.

283. See the cases cited above, paras 36-044—36-045.

284. Hall v NE Ry (1875) L.R. 10 Q.B. 437, 443; Barratt v GN Ry (1904) 20 T.L.R. 175; cf. Gill v MS & L Ry (1873) L.R. 8 Q.B. 186; United States Steel Products Co v GW Ry [1916] 1 A.C. 189, 205, 210, 213; The Mahkutai [1996] A.C. 650.

285. Hall v NE Ry, above, at 442. For the difficulties involved in this agency device, see Vol.I, paras 15-050—15-052. cf. Victoria Fur Traders Ltd v Roadline (UK) Ltd [1981] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 570.

286. See above, para.36-045.

287. Homburg Houtimport BV v Agrosin Ltd [2003] UKHL 12, [2003] 2 W.L.R. 711 at [57]. Even though the 1999 Act does not apply to contracts for carriage by rail or road, which is subject to the rules of an international convention, the Act is expressed to apply even in such cases where the third party seeks to rely on an exemption clause: s.6(5).

288. See Kahn-Freund at pp.325–334.

289. See above, paras 36-044—36-045.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 36 - Carriage by Land

Section 2. - Internal Carriage

(a) - Goods

(vi) - Claims against the Carrier

Time for making claims

36-048

It may be important for a carrier to receive early warning of a claim for loss of or damage to goods which he has carried, so that he may investigate the claim, inform his insurers and decide whether the claim should be admitted or resisted. ²⁹⁰ The general law will allow the claimant to institute proceedings in respect of his claim at any time during the period sanctioned by the Limitation Act 1980. In order to shorten the time in which claims are notified to the carrier, several standard form contracts provide that claims for loss, damage, misdelivery or delay must be presented to the carrier within specified short time periods. The capacity of the carrier to prescribe time limits for the making of claims and the institution of legal proceedings is constrained by the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977, which provides that where the Act prevents a contract term excluding or restricting liability, as unreasonable, it also prevents any term which purports to make that liability or its enforcement subject to restrictive or onerous conditions. ²⁹¹ A term in a contract of carriage requiring notice of a claim for, say, loss of or damage to goods to be given within an exceptionally short period of time might conceivably be rendered ineffective by this section. ²⁹² Where the carrier has contracted with a consumer, such terms imposing short time limits on the consumer's presentation of a claim may not be binding on the consumer if it has not been individually negotiated and it is unfair within the meaning of the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999. ²⁹³ Such provisions will be subject to the Consumer Rights Act 2015, which replaces and revokes the 1999 Regulations for contracts made on or after October 1, 2015. ²⁹⁴

^{290.} See, generally, Clarke [1982] L.M.C.L.Q. 533.

^{291.} ss.2(2), 3, 11 and 13.

^{292.} Granville Oil and Chemicals Ltd v Davies Turner and Co Ltd [2003] EWCA Civ 570, [2003] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 819 at [31]. See Rohlig (UK) Ltd v Rock Unique Ltd [2011] EWCA Civ 18, [2011] 2 All E.R. (Comm) 1161.

^{293.} 1999 Regulations regs 4(1), 5(1), 8(1) Sch.2 para.1(q).

^{294.} See below, paras 38-358—38-394.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 36 - Carriage by Land

Section 2. - Internal Carriage

(a) - Goods

(vii) - Carrier's Rights

Consignor's warranty of fitness

36-049

At common law the consignor impliedly warrants that the goods are fit and proper for carriage and are not dangerous. ²⁹⁵ This principle was originally developed as a corollary to the common carrier's duty to accept all consignments offered to him even if he was unable to inspect their contents; but now it probably extends to all carriers, whether or not they are under a duty to carry the goods, and whether or not the consignor knows of the danger. ²⁹⁶ The carrier may recover damages for breach of this warranty, whether in respect of personal injuries sustained by himself or his employees ²⁹⁷ or in respect of damage sustained by the carrier's own property or by the goods of other consignors ²⁹⁸, and it is immaterial whether or not the carrier is himself liable to the other consignors. ²⁹⁹

Carrier's right to freight

36-050

As a compensation for the heavy burden of his profession the carrier is entitled to demand payment of his reasonable charges in advance. ³⁰⁰ But if the freight is not paid before the goods are consigned, the carrier may not sue for it until the goods are finally delivered, ³⁰¹ unless the consignor exercises his right of stoppage in transit. ³⁰² Several standard form contracts therefore provide that a claim or counterclaim shall not be made a reason for deferring or withholding payment of the carrier's charges. Even without such protection in the carriage contract, the carrier (whether common or private) is entitled to the payment of freight on the due date without any deduction or set-off being made to allow for any claim which the consignor may have under the contract of carriage. ³⁰³ This right to freight without set-off exists notwithstanding that the contract is for a series of carriages as opposed to one carriage and that the carrier may have obligations under the contract ancillary to that of carriage, although his claim must be for freight and not a charge unrelated to the carriage. ³⁰⁴

Who pays freight?

36-051

The person liable to pay the freight is the person with whom the carrier contracts. Thus, if the consignor contracted as agent for the consignee, the consignee is obliged to pay ³⁰⁵, but if the consignor contracted as principal, the carrier must recover from the consignor. ³⁰⁶ The consignor may, by express contract, exclude his liability for freight and leave the carrier with a remedy against the consignee alone: but the courts are very ready to imply an undertaking by the consignor to pay the freight if the consignee does not do so, even if the consignment note says in so many words that freight will be paid by the consignee. ³⁰⁷ Acceptance of the goods by the consignee is, in the absence of notice to the contrary, evidence of an implied contract to pay the carrier's charges: the consideration for this contract is the fact that the carrier parted with his lien.³⁰⁸ The incidence of liability for freight must be distinguished from the right to sue the carrier for loss of or damage to the goods. This has already been considered.³⁰⁹

Carrier's lien

36-052

At common law the common, but not the private,³¹⁰ carrier has a particular lien upon the goods for the payment of his freight.³¹¹ But, in the absence of a contract or of binding usage,³¹² he has no general lien on the goods for debts owing by his customer in respect of previous transactions³¹³; nor can he sell the goods in order to defray his expenses. Under several standard form contracts, however, the carrier has not only a particular lien but also a general lien against the owner of the goods.³¹⁴ The unpaid seller's right of stoppage in transit has priority over the carrier's general, but not particular, lien.³¹⁵ The carrier's contractual right to exercise a general lien under a standard form of contract may come into existence at the time at which the contract was made notwithstanding that it is not exercisable except upon the happening of a particular event, i.e. the carrying of the goods. The lien is conveniently described as a "possessory lien" because it is only if the carrier has possession that it can be exercised. This does not imply, however, that the lien does not come into existence until possession is assumed.³¹⁶ In practice, the lien cannot be exercised until the goods reach their destination or the unpaid seller stops them in transit. The carrier cannot, for instance, detain the goods at the beginning of the transit in purported exercise of a general lien.³¹⁷ On the other hand it may continue after the end of transit and while the carrier remains in possession of the goods as warehouseman. The common carrier's lien is exercisable against the true owner, though the consignor may have been a thief or other person having no right to deal with the goods.³¹⁸ Similarly, a private carrier's contractual lien is exercisable against the true owner.³¹⁹

Carrier's right to sell the goods

36-053

At common law, the carrier as agent of necessity³²⁰ has a very restricted right to sell perishable goods (and perhaps livestock, which have to be tended, fed and watered³²¹) and goods which are left on his hands or which he cannot deliver to their destination, e.g. because of a strike of his employees. But there must be a real business necessity for the sale; and he must first communicate with the owner, unless it is commercially impossible to do so; otherwise he will be liable in damages.³²² In a number of standard form contracts, the carrier reserves to himself the right to sell the goods in defined circumstances. The contractual right of sale is often exercised on the basis of the carrier's general or particular lien, if the lien is not satisfied within a reasonable time from the date when the carrier first gave notice of the exercise of the lien to the owner of the goods.³²³

^{295.} Bamfield v Goole and Sheffield Transport Co [1910] 2 K.B. 94; GN Ry v LEP Transport Co Ltd [1922] 2 K.B. 742.

^{296.} Burley v Stepney Corp [1947] 1 All E.R. 507, 510.

^{297.} Farrant v Barnes (1862) 11 C.B.(N.S.) 553; Bamfield v Goole and Sheffield Transport Co, above.

^{298.} GN Ry v LEP Transport Co Ltd [1922] 2 K.B. 742.

^{299.} GN Ry v LEP Transport Co Ltd, above, at 765; cf. The Winkfield [1902] P. 42.

^{300.} Batson v Donovan (1820) 4 B. & Ald. 21, 28; Wyld v Pickford (1841) 8 M. & W. 443. In an action for refusal to carry, actual tender of freight need not be shown, only that the consignor was ready and willing to pay: Pickford v Grand Junction Ry (1841) 8 M. & W. 372.

- 301. Barnes v Marshall (1852) 18 Q.B. 785, 789.
- 302. Booth SS Co Ltd v Cargo Fleet Iron Co Ltd [1916] 2 K.B. 570.
- 303. United Carriers Ltd v Heritage Food Group (UK) Ltd [1995] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 269, 273; A S Jones Ltd v Burton Gold Medal Biscuits Unreported April 11, 1984. See also Britannia Distribution Co Ltd v Factor Pace Ltd [1998] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 420 (set off available against freight between freight forwarder and principal); cf. Schenkers Ltd v Overland Shoes Ltd [1998] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 498 (concerning the validity, under the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977, of a "no set-off" clause in a freight forwarding contract, as opposed to a carriage contract). This "freight rule" is a rule of law originating in international commercial custom and so is not liable to be upset by the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 (cf. Stewart Gill Ltd v Horatio Myer & Co Ltd [1992] Q.B. 600).
- 304. United Carriers Ltd v Heritage Food Group (UK) Ltd, above.
- 305. cf. Dickenson v Lano (1860) 2 F. & F. 188. See Kahn-Freund at pp.399–401.
- 306. GW Ry v Bagge (1885) 15 Q.B.D. 625. As to the freight forwarder's liability for freight, see Britannia Distribution Co Ltd v Factor Pace Ltd [1998] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 420 at 423.
- 307. See n.306, above.
- 308. World Transport Co v Tealing [1936] 2 All E.R. 573.
- 309. See above, para.36-043.
- 310. Electric Supply Stores v Gaywood (1909) 100 L.T. 855.
- 311. Skinner v Upshaw (1702) 2 Ld.Ray. 752.
- 312. The courts require particularly strong evidence of such usage. See Leslie at pp.87-88.
- 313. Rushforth v Hadfield (1806) 7 East 224, 228; Aldred v Pearson (1843) 1 L.T.(O.S.) 457.
- 314. The "owner" is the consignee or other person entitled to delivery: US Steel Products Co v GW Ry [1916] 1 A.C. 189, 207–208, 211–212, 214. cf. T Comedy (UK) Ltd v Easy Managed Transport Ltd [2007] EWHC 611 (Comm), [2007] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 397.
- 315. US Steel Products Co v GW Ry, above; Booth SS Co Ltd v Cargo Fleet Iron Co Ltd [1916] 2 K.B. 570.
- 316. George Barker (Transport) Ltd v Eynon [1974] 1 W.L.R. 462.
- 317. Wiltshire Iron Co v GW Ry (1871) L.R. 6 Q.B. 776, 780.
- 318. Exeter Carrier's Case, cited in Yorke v Grenhaugh (1702) 2 Ld.Ray. 866, 867.
- 319. Leslie at pp.88–91; cf. Singer Manufacturing Co Ltd v LSW Ry [1894] 1 Q.B. 833. See also Clarke, International Carriage of Goods by Road: CMR, 6th edn (2014), para.251.
- 320. For agency of necessity, see above, para.31-035.
- 321. Sachs v Miklos [1948] 2 K.B. 23, 35; cf. GN Ry v Swaffield (1874) L.R. 9 Ex. 132. As to the entitlement to reimbursement of gratuitous bailees incurring reasonable expenses in safeguarding and preserving goods for the benefit of the owners thereof, see, generally, China Pacific SA v The Food Corp of India (The Winson) [1982] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 117 HL.
- 322. Compare Sims v Midland Ry [1913] 1 K.B. 103 with Springer v GW Ry [1921] 1 K.B. 257. See also Torts (Interference with Goods) Act 1977 s.12.

- 323. It has been suggested that such power of sale may be unreasonable within the meaning of the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977: Yates, Contracts for the Carriage of Goods (1993), para. 3.2.1.17.1 (Clarke).

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 36 - Carriage by Land

Section 2. - Internal Carriage

(b) - Passengers

Carriage by rail

36-054

By Regulation (EC) 1371/2007 on rail passengers' rights and obligations, which entered into force on December 3, 2009, the European Parliament adopted certain provisions of Appendix A (CIV) to the International Convention on Carriage by Rail (COTIF) as applicable to the carriage of passengers and their luggage by rail by licensed railway undertakings, whether such railway journeys were carried out internationally (in more than one country) or domestically (in one country). The provisions of CIV are discussed in the context of international carriage later in this chapter and should now be read as also applicable to domestic carriage. ³²⁴ Obligations imposed by CIV on the railway undertakings cannot be limited or waived by a derogation or restrictive clause in the transport contract, although the railway undertakings may offer contract conditions more favourable for the passenger. ³²⁵ In addition, the Regulation provides for the provision of pre-journey information and information during the journey set out in Annex II, ³²⁶ and the taking out of adequate insurance by the railway undertaking in respect of its liability to passengers. ³²⁷ In the event of a claim or complaint by a passenger against the railway undertaking, the Regulation legislates for the provision of assistance and remedies (reimbursement and compensation) to the passenger. ³²⁸ Certain provisions of the Regulation are qualified or supplemented by the Rail Passengers' Rights and Obligations Regulations 2010, which entered into force on June 25, 2010. ³²⁹

Common carriers

36-055

The common carrier of passengers is he who holds himself out as willing to carry members of the public generally. This profession draws in its train the general duty to receive all persons as passengers who offer themselves in a fit state to be carried and ready to pay the proper and reasonable fare and prepared to conform to all reasonable requirements as to carriage, unless there is no longer any room in the conveyance for such persons. ³³⁰ As we have seen, ³³¹ the privatised railway companies and Transport for London are not regarded as common carriers; whether common carrier or not, they are not obliged to carry any person who is in an unfit condition. ³³² But the common carrier of passengers is not subject to the strict form of liability applicable to the common carrier of goods. Hence the distinction between common and private carriers has never been as important in the law of carriage of passengers as it has in the law of carriage of goods.

Liability for death or personal injuries

36-056

At common law the carrier's liability for safety of his passengers is not strict but is based on fault. His duty is to see that reasonable care is taken for the safety of his passengers. The House of Lords has put it succinctly:

“A carrier’s obligation to his passengers, whether it be expressed in contract or in tort, is to provide a carriage that is as free from defects as the exercise of all reasonable care can make it.” ³³³

But he is not liable for harm suffered through a latent defect in his conveyance which could not reasonably be detected ³³⁴; there is no implied warranty that the conveyance is fit for its purpose. ³³⁵ Nor is he liable for an accident to a very young child which would not have happened if the child had been properly looked after by the adult in whose care the child was travelling. ³³⁶

Liability in tort

36-057

A passenger who has paid for his ticket and is injured by the negligence of the carrier has the choice between suing for breach of contract or for the tort of negligence. ³³⁷ It follows that claims against a carrier for damages for personal injuries or death do not necessarily depend on the existence of a contract of carriage between the carrier and the injured or dead person. It is sufficient if he was in the train or vehicle with the carrier’s permission, i.e. provided that he was not a trespasser or (perhaps) an unborn person. ³³⁸ He can recover damages for negligence whether he bought his ticket himself or whether it was bought for him by, e.g. a parent, spouse, employer or friend, or whether he was travelling on a free pass. ³³⁹ In the case of a trespasser, the carrier’s only duty is one of a limited duty of care, perhaps being no more than to avoid the intentional or reckless infliction of harm. ³⁴⁰ But, apart from this exceptional case, the standard of care is the same for passengers who have paid for their tickets as it is for those who, for one reason or another, have made no contract with the carrier but are present in his conveyance with his express or implied permission. Another consequence of the passenger’s alternative rights of action in contract or tort is that the injured passenger can sue not only the carrier, who is vicariously liable for the negligence of his employees acting in the scope of their employment, but also the employee who negligently caused the harm. ³⁴¹ It is immaterial that the employee was not a party to the contract of carriage.

Liability for negligence of independent contractors

36-058

At common law a carrier was liable for injury caused to a passenger in a contractual relation with the carrier, even when the injury was caused by the negligence of an independent contractor. ³⁴² So, where a passenger held a ticket issued by the Great Western Railway and was injured in an accident caused by the negligence of the South Wales Railway, on whose lines the journey was partly run, it was held that the Great Western Railway were liable to the passenger. ³⁴³ This liability was based on an implied term in the contract that the Great Western Railway undertook that due care would be used in carrying the passenger throughout the journey. This form of liability is unaffected by the Occupiers’ Liability Act 1957, whether the injury is caused by the defective state of the vehicle in which the passenger is being carried, ³⁴⁴ or by any other form of negligence. ³⁴⁵ There does not appear to be any authority on the liability of a carrier for the negligence of an independent contractor to a passenger who is lawfully in the vehicle but who is not in a contractual relationship with the carrier, e.g. a person travelling on a free pass, or a person travelling on a ticket purchased for him by a third party (but not as his agent) such as a child travelling on a ticket purchased by his parent. As pointed out above, ³⁴⁶ such a person is (so far as the standard of care is concerned) normally in the same position as a passenger who has a contract with the carrier, and can sue in tort for breach of the ordinary duty of care; but it is not clear whether this tortious liability would involve liability for the negligence of an independent contractor. But where the injury is caused by the defective state of the vehicle (as opposed to other forms of negligence) the position may today be governed by the Occupiers’ Liability Act 1957. Although this Act does not affect the obligations imposed on any person:

“by or by virtue of any contract ... for the carriage for reward of persons ... in any vehicle, vessel, aircraft or other means of transport”, ³⁴⁷ it does affect the liability in tort of an occupier of any premises (including vehicles ³⁴⁸). In particular a person is not vicariously liable for the negligence of an independent contractor under the Act ³⁴⁹; and a passenger who has no contract with the carrier and is compelled to sue in tort may therefore be in a less favourable position in this particular respect than a passenger who can sue in contract. ³⁵⁰

Res ipsa loquitur

36-059

The otherwise heavy burden of proof imposed on injured passengers (or their estates or dependants) is alleviated in one important respect. In many cases of accidents to passengers, especially passengers by rail, the longestablished and frequently illustrated doctrine of res ipsa loquitur may apply, with the result that it is very often for the carrier to disprove negligence, and not for the passenger to prove it. ³⁵¹

Breach of statutory duty

36-060

Carriers are under numerous statutory duties relating to, e.g. the construction and equipment of vehicles, the qualifications of drivers, and the safety rules of rail and road. ³⁵² In an action against a carrier for negligence, proof of the breach of a statutory duty of this kind may in certain circumstances amount to prima facie evidence of negligence. ³⁵³ But it is no more than that. Such breach of a statutory duty by a carrier does not found an independent action in tort in which negligence need not be proved. ³⁵⁴

Defences

36-061

The defences open to the carrier (apart from special contract, considered immediately below) are those usual in actions for negligence in tort, including contributory negligence, volenti non fit injuria, and remoteness of damage. A discussion of these matters is outside the scope of this work. ³⁵⁵

Special contract

36-062

At common law there was nothing to prevent a carrier from contracting out of his duty to take reasonable care for the safety of his passengers and out of other duties, e.g. the duty to carry them with reasonable speed. The technical procedure by which exemption clauses may be incorporated in standard form contracts of carriage through the issue of tickets has been established in the well-known line of “ticket cases”, which are considered elsewhere. ³⁵⁶ Briefly, the passenger will be bound by the conditions if he knew that there was writing on the ticket and that this contained conditions, or if the carrier did what was reasonably sufficient to give the passenger notice of the conditions. A statement on the face of the ticket saying “For Conditions See Back” and a reference on the back to the railway timetables, bills and regulations is sufficient notice, even if the passenger cannot read. ³⁵⁷ The degree and specificity of notice will depend on the onerousness or unusual nature of the term said to be incorporated. ³⁵⁸ The terms and conditions alleged to be incorporated may not be binding on the consumer if they are unfair within the meaning of the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999 or the Consumer Rights Act 2015, which replaces and revokes the 1999 Regulations for contracts made on or after October 1, 2015.³⁵⁹ Most of the ticket cases were concerned with carriage by rail or carriage by sea, where the passenger does not normally board the train or the ship until after he has taken his ticket and made his contract. No doubt the principle of the cases is equally applicable to carriage by long-distance coach if the ticket is bought at a coach station or from a travel agency. But what is the position if the passenger enters the vehicle before taking a ticket, e.g. if he boards a bus, or arrives at a railway station too late to buy a ticket at the booking office, but is allowed to board the train and pay during the journey or on arrival at his destination?³⁶⁰ In such cases it may be very important to establish when the contract was made, because an exemption clause will be of no effect unless it is communicated to the passenger at or before that time.³⁶¹ There is some authority for saying that the contract of carriage is made when the passenger puts himself either on the platform of the bus or inside it.³⁶² The principle of the ticket cases still applies to exemption clauses excluding liabilities which the carrier can lawfully exclude, e.g. for delay. But they have ceased to have much significance in cases where personal safety is concerned, for reasons about to be discussed.

Limitations on carriers' contracting out of liability for death and personal injury

36-063

Section 2(1) of the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 renders ineffective the exclusion or restriction of the liability of any person for death or personal injury resulting from negligence by reference to any contractual term or to a notice given to persons generally or to particular persons. The general provision appears to supersede previous statutory prohibitions on the insertion of terms in contracts of carriage of passengers by land excluding or limiting such liability. Section 43(7) of the Transport Act 1962, which prohibited the Boards set up under that Act (including the British Railways Board and the London Transport Executive) from excluding or limiting their liability for death of, or personal injury to, passengers (other than those travelling on free passes) was, indeed, expressly repealed by the 1977 Act.³⁶³ Section 29 of the Public Passenger Vehicles Act 1981 makes void any contract for the conveyance of a passenger in a public service vehicle³⁶⁴ insofar as it purports to negative or restrict the liability of any person for the death of, or personal injury to, a passenger while being carried in, entering or alighting from the vehicle, or purports to impose any conditions with respect to the enforcement of any such liability. Section 149 of the Road Traffic Act 1988 renders of no effect any agreement between the user³⁶⁵ of a vehicle on the road and a passenger whereby the liability of the user for death or personal injury is excluded or limited or whereby conditions are imposed on the enforcement of such liability. The various statutory provisions described above invalidate not only terms purporting to exclude or restrict liability but also terms purporting to impose any conditions with respect to the enforcement of any such liability. Thus the Unfair Contract Terms Act³⁶⁶ prohibits the insertion of terms making the liability or its enforcement subject to restrictive or onerous conditions or excluding any right or remedy in respect of the liability where the Act prevents a contract term excluding or restricting liability, as unreasonable. Whilst the 1977 Act does not treat a contract term which requires disputes to be referred to arbitration as a term excluding or restricting liability,³⁶⁷ the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999 exposes such terms to emasculation as against a consumer if they are unfair within the meaning of those Regulations.³⁶⁸

Exceptions to the general limitations on carriers' contracting out of Liability

36-064

It may happen that a carrier by land also provides within the United Kingdom or between the United Kingdom and the British Islands regular passenger shipping services complementary to his road or rail services. Prima facie such combined land-sea carriers would be prohibited under s.2(1) of the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 from excluding or restricting their contractual liability for the death of, and personal injury to, passengers on their ships. Parliament has, however, intervened and enabled carriers by sea to limit their liability in such cases as those listed in the previous paragraph. By a statutory instrument,³⁶⁹ contracts for the domestic carriage of passengers and their luggage by sea have been, since April 30, 1987, subjected to a modified version of the Athens Convention relating to the Carriage of Passengers and their Luggage by Sea 1974 where, inter alia, under the contract the places of departure and destination are in the area consisting of the United Kingdom, the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man and there is no intermediate port of call outside that area.³⁷⁰ The Athens

Convention ³⁷¹ (which embraces international carriage of passengers and their luggage by sea) makes a carrier liable for damage resulting from the death of, and personal injury to, a passenger during the course of carriage by sea due to the fault or neglect of the carrier. ³⁷² Such fault is usually presumed in the case of death of, or personal injury to, a passenger. ³⁷³ The carrier is permitted to limit his liability for death and personal injury. ³⁷⁴

Standard forms of contract

36-065

The carriage of passengers by rail in respect of domestic scheduled passenger train services on the railway network of Great Britain is subject to the National Rail Conditions of Carriage the most recent version of which applies from May 20, 2012. The train companies are obliged to contract on the basis of these terms or terms no less generous to the customer. There are no generally accepted conditions of carriage of passengers by road; the National Rail Conditions of Carriage do, however, apply to the carriage of passengers in road vehicles owned or operated by the Train Company. ³⁷⁵

Liability for delay

36-066

At common law the carrier owes a duty to take passengers to their agreed destinations within a reasonable time and at a reasonable speed. ³⁷⁶ The customer will be entitled to recover damages for any breach of this duty. ³⁷⁷ But the damage must not be too remote: it does not cover the expense of ordering a special train in order that the traveller might arrive at a seaside resort in time for dinner. ³⁷⁸ At common law the mere fact that times of departure and arrival are published does not amount to a warranty that the times will be strictly adhered to. ³⁷⁹ The National Rail Conditions of Carriage, at cl.42 to 45, provide that the passenger is entitled to compensation for delay, cancellation or poor service within the control of the Train Company in accordance with the Passenger's Charter, published by the Train Company, subject to the minimum levels of compensation set out in the National Rail Conditions of Carriage, provided a claim is lodged within 28 days of the completion of the journey; the Train Company does not accept liability for loss (including consequential loss) caused by the delay or cancellation of any train. Minimum compensation takes the form of vouchers which entitle the passenger to discounts off the price of his next railway journey. The list of circumstances which are not within the Train Company's control include these wide ranging categories: acts or apprehended threats of vandalism or terrorism; suicides or accidents to trespassers; gas leaks or fires in lineside buildings not caused by the Train Companies or their employees or agents; line closures at the request of the police or emergency services; exceptionally severe weather conditions; industrial action, riot or civil commotion; fire or failure due to electrical failure or defects not caused by the Train Company, their employees or agents.

Carrier's right to receive the proper fare

36-067

If a passenger misuses his ticket by breaking the conditions on which it was issued to him, he breaks his contract and may be liable to pay the fare or part of it over again. This principle may be illustrated by reference to the National Rail Conditions of Carriage and decided cases. Thus, a railway ticket is not transferable; it cannot be used by anyone except the person for whom it was bought. ³⁸⁰ Tickets are valid only for a limited period, namely the period of validity printed on the ticket or stated in the Train Company's publications, leaflets and notices relating to the ticket. ³⁸¹ Tickets are only available for use between the stations shown on them and by the specified route. ³⁸² Whilst most ticket types permit the passenger to stop his journey at a station short of that shown on his ticket, the Train Company may in some cases at certain times charge a higher fare for the shorter journey. In those cases, the passenger must pay the appropriate fare for the journey actually made. ³⁸³ At common law a passenger has no right to break his journey at an intermediate station and resume it later. ³⁸⁴ Of course, the contract of carriage may provide otherwise. ³⁸⁵

-
- 324. See below, paras 36-079, 36-100—36-117.
- 325. art.6.
- 326. art.8.
- 327. art.12.
- 328. arts 14, 16, 17 and 18. Ch.V of the Regulation concerns the obligations of railway undertakings with respect to the carriage of disabled persons: see also Ch.3 of the Rail Passengers' Rights and Obligations Regulations 2010 (SI 2010/1504).
- 329. SI 2010/1504.
- 330. Clarke v West Ham Corp [1909] 2 K.B. 858, 876–877, 878, 879.
- 331. Greater London Authority Act 1999 s.156(8), Sch.11 para.31; Railways Act 1993 s.123; the Railways Regulations 1998 (SI 1998/1340) reg.23. The privatised operators provide services for the carriage of passengers by railway pursuant to franchise agreements: Railways Act 1993 s.23. See above, para.36-010.
- 332. Garton v Bristol and Exeter Ry Co (1861) 1 B. & S. 112 at 162. See also the National Rail Conditions of Carriage (published in May 2012) cl.59, which allows a railway company to refuse carriage to any person which it has reasonable grounds to believe is likely to act in a riotous, disorderly or offensive manner.
- 333. Barkway v South Wales Transport Co Ltd [1950] 1 All E.R. 392, 403–404, per Lord Radcliffe. This is an obligation reinforced by the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 s.13.
- 334. Readhead v Midland Ry (1869) L.R. 4 Q.B. 379; cf. Hyman v Nye (1881) 6 Q.B.D. 685, 687–688.
- 335. John Carter (Fine Worsteds) Ltd v Hanson Haulage (Leeds) Ltd [1965] 2 Q.B. 495. The common law liability of the carrier probably is unchanged by the Occupiers' Liability Act 1957, whether the passenger has paid for the carriage or not.
- 336. O'Connor v BTC [1958] 1 W.L.R. 346.
- 337. Foulkes v Metropolitan District Ry (1880) 5 C.P.D. 157; Kelly v Metropolitan Ry [1895] 1 Q.B. 944, 946; Taylor v MS & L Ry [1895] 1 Q.B. 134.
- 338. Walker v GN Ry (1891) 28 L.R.Ir. 69; contrast Montreal Tramways v Leveille (1933) 4 D.L.R. 337. Note, however, Congenital Disabilities (Civil Liability) Act 1976.
- 339. Marshall v York, Newcastle and Berwick Ry (1851) 11 C.B. 655, 662; Collett v LNW Ry (1851) 16 Q.B. 984; GN Ry v Harrison (1854) 10 Exch. 376; Austin v GW Ry (1867) L.R. 2 Q.B. 442, 445–446; Harris v Perry [1903] 2 K.B. 219. In Gray v Thames Trains Ltd [2007] EWHC 1558 (QB) at [18], the carrier admitted negligence.
- 340. Clerk & Lindsell on Torts, 21st edn (2014), paras 12–67—12–72; Videan v BTC [1963] 2 Q.B. 650; Commissioner for Rys v Quinlan [1964] A.C. 1054; Herrington v British Railways Board [1972] A.C. 877. cf. the liability of the carrier to a trespasser concerning the condition of his vehicle provided for by the Occupiers' Liability Act 1984 s.1. A passenger who holds a second-class ticket is not necessarily a trespasser if he travels in a first-class compartment: Vosper v GW Ry [1928] 1 K.B. 340, 349.
- 341. Cosgrove v Horsfall (1945) 62 T.L.R. 140; Adler v Dickson [1955] 1 Q.B. 158; Genys v

- Matthews* [1966] 1 W.L.R. 758; Gore v Van der Lann [1967] 2 Q.B. 31.
- 342. GW Ry v Blake (1862) 7 H. & N. 987; John v Bacon (1870) 39 L.J.C.P. 365; Thomas v Rhymney Ry (1871) L.R. 6 Q.B. 266.
- 343. GW Ry v Blake, above.
- 344. See s.5(3).
- 345. In this event the Act does not apply at all: s.1.
- 346. See above, para.36-044.
- 347. s.5(3).
- 348. s.1(3).
- 349. s.2(4)(b). See Clerk & Lindsell on Torts, 21st edn (2014), paras 12–56—12–58.
- 350. But it is arguable that a passenger travelling on a ticket issued to a third party (e.g. a child) travels “by virtue of” a contract of carriage.
- 351. See, e.g. Skinner v LB & SC Ry (1859) 5 Exch. 787; Dawson v MS & L Ry (1862) 5 L.T. 682; Gee v Metropolitan Ry (1873) L.R. 8 Q.B. 161; Laurie v Raglan BS Ltd [1942] 1 K.B. 152; Radley v LPTB [1942] 1 All E.R. 433; Easson v LNE Ry [1944] K.B. 421; Brookes v LPTB [1947] 1 All E.R. 506; Hale v Hants and Dorset Motor Services Ltd [1947] 2 All E.R. 628.
- 352. See, e.g. the Railways Regulations 1998 (SI 1998/1340); Public Passenger Vehicles Act 1981 Pts II and III; Road Traffic Act 1988; and Orders and Regulations made thereunder.
- 353. Blamires v L & Y Ry (1873) L.R. 8 Ex. 283; Croston v Vaughan [1938] 1 K.B. 540, 551–552.
- 354. Phillips v Britannia Hygienic Laundry Co [1923] 2 K.B. 832; Stennett v Hancock [1939] 2 All E.R. 578; Clarke v Brims [1947] 1 K.B. 497; Barkway v South Wales Transport Co Ltd [1950] 1 All E.R. 392, 400. See Kahn-Freund at pp.473–483. As to the effect of a breach of statutory duty on the level of the carrier’s contribution to liability, see Madden v Quirk [1989] 1 W.L.R. 702.
- 355. See Clerk & Lindsell on Torts, 21st edn (2014), Chs 2–3.
- 356. See Vol.I, paras 13-008—13-018, and see above, para.36-027.
- 357. Thompson v LMS Ry [1930] 1 K.B. 41; Fosbroke-Hobbes v Airwork Ltd [1937] 1 All E.R. 108. cf. Parker v South Eastern Railway (1877) 2 C.P.D. 416. The conditions alleged to be incorporated may not be binding on the consumer if they are unfair within the meaning of the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999.
- 358. Thornton v Shoe Lane Parking Ltd [1971] 2 Q.B. 163; Interfoto Picture Library Ltd v Stiletto Visual Programmes Ltd [1989] 1 Q.B. 433; see above, Vol.I, para.13-015.
- 359. See below, paras 38-358—38-394.
- 360. See Hooper v Furness Ry (1907) 23 T.L.R. 451.
- 361. cf. Olley v Marlborough Court Ltd [1949] 1 K.B. 532. See Vol.I, para.13-010.
- 362. Wilkie v LPTB [1947] 1 All E.R. 258, 259.
- 363. Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.31(4) and Sch.4. See below, Ch.38.

- 364. s.1 defines a “public service vehicle” as a motor vehicle used for carrying passengers for hire or reward. This definition does not require a plaintiff to demonstrate that there was a legally enforceable agreement or right to be carried or that payment had been made: Rout v Swallow Hotels [1993] R.T.R. 80 (where a hotel minibus provided for the benefit of hotel guests was held to be a public service vehicle); DPP v Sikondar [1993] R.T.R. 90 (where a vehicle used for the systematic carrying of girls to and from school, whose driver received the occasional contribution to the cost of petrol, was held to be a public service vehicle).
- 365. That is, one who controls, manages or operates the vehicle: Brown v Roberts [1965] 1 Q.B. 1. See also Stinton v Stinton [1995] R.T.R. 157; Hatton v Hall [1997] R.T.R. 212.
- 366. Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.13(1).
- 367. Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.13(2).
- 368. Such terms are automatically unfair in so far as they relate to a pecuniary claim of up to £5,000: Arbitration Act 1996 ss.89–91; Unfair Arbitration Agreements (Specified Amount) Order 1999 (SI 1999/2167).
- 369. The Carriage of Passengers and their Luggage by Sea (Domestic Carriage) Order 1987 (SI 1987/670) made under the Merchant Shipping Act 1979 s.16. The 1979 Act has been repealed by the Merchant Shipping Act 1995. However, the 1987 Order continues to have force by virtue of the Interpretation Act 1978 s.17(2)(b), as if made under s.184 of the 1995 Act. Under s.184(5), the meaning of “contracts of carriage” exclude contracts which are not for reward. See also The Carriage of Passengers and their Luggage by Sea (United Kingdom Carriers) Order 1998 (SI 1998/2917) as regards United Kingdom carriers. See South West Strategic Health Authority v Bay Island Voyages [2015] EWCA Civ 708 at [2]–[5]. In this case, the Court of Appeal said that although the Convention applied to domestic carriage, its construction should take account of the fact that it is an international convention [28].
- 370. Merchant Shipping Act 1995 art.2.
- 371. The substantive provisions of the Convention are set out in the Merchant Shipping Act 1995 s.183, Sch.6 Pt I.
- 372. Athens Convention art.3. As to the effect of the time limitation in art.16, see Higham v Stena Sealink Ltd [1996] 1 W.L.R. 1107; South West Strategic Health Authority v Bay Island Voyages [2015] EWCA Civ 708.
- 373. Athens Convention art.3(3).
- 374. Athens Convention art.7. See also the Merchant Shipping (Convention Relating to the Carriage of Passengers and their Luggage by Sea) Order 2014 (SI 2014/1361). See R G Mayor v P&O Ferries Ltd (The Lion) [1990] 2 Lloyd’s Rep. 144.
- 375. National Rail Conditions of Carriage cl.60.
- 376. Hurst v GW Ry (1865) 19 C.B.(N.S.) 310. See also Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 s.14.
- 377. Hobbs v LSW Ry (1875) L.R. 10 Q.B. 111. See, as to the damages claimed and awarded in this case, M’Mahon v Field (1881) 7 Q.B.D. 591, 594, 596–597; Bailey v Bullock [1950] 2 All E.R. 1167, 1170–1171.
- 378. Le Blanche v LNW Ry (1876) 1 C.P.D. 286.
- 379. Lord v Midland Ry (1867) L.R. 2 C.P. 339; Lockyer v International Sleeping Car Co (1892) 61 L.J.Q.B. 501. So far as Denton v GN Ry (1856) 5 E. & B. 860 and Cooke v Midland Ry (1892) 57 J.P. 388 held that advertised times do form terms in the contract of carriage, they would probably not be followed today, because the exhibition of a timetable would not be construed as an offer capable of acceptance by the passenger.

380. National Rail Conditions of Carriage cl.6.

381. National Rail Conditions of Carriage cl.11.

382. National Rail Conditions of Carriage cl.13.

383. National Rail Conditions of Carriage cl.16. See GN Ry v Winder [1892] 2 Q.B. 95; GN Ry v Palmer [1895] 1 Q.B. 862.

384. Ashton v L & Y Ry [1904] 2 K.B. 313; Bastable v Metcalfe [1906] 2 K.B. 288.

385. See, for example, National Rail Conditions of Carriage cl.16.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 36 - Carriage by Land

Section 2. - Internal Carriage

(c) - Passengers' Luggage

Common carriers

36-068

At common law, there appears to have been no obligation on a carrier to carry passengers' luggage free of extra charge or at all. ³⁸⁶ For evident commercial reasons, however, carriers habitually accepted their passengers' luggage, generally without extra charge; and, in the absence of special terms to the contrary, they incurred, in relation to the luggage, the liability of common carriers. ³⁸⁷ From the nature of their liability, they came to be regarded as common carriers of luggage by implication. No person, such as Transport for London or the franchised railway companies, shall be regarded as common carriers by rail. ³⁸⁸ It is likely, however, that Transport for London and the operators of public service vehicles (buses and coaches) outside London are common carriers of passengers' luggage by road, except in the case of "contract carriage" (where the vehicle is hired for a lump sum). ³⁸⁹ It should be noted, however, that the National Rail Conditions of Carriage purport to apply the conditions applicable to carriage of passengers' luggage by rail to luggage carried in road vehicles owned or operated by the Train Company or its agents. ³⁹⁰

Permitted luggage

36-069

All passengers by rail and road are entitled to take with them certain quantities of luggage. This right may be either statutory or contractual. As to the former, the traffic commissioners in granting road service licences under Pt III of the Public Passenger Vehicle Act 1981 can impose conditions as to the amount of luggage to be carried free of extra charge and can fix the charges for excess luggage. The National Rail Conditions of Carriage provide that the Train Company will accept small items of luggage (including animals) accompanying a passenger, subject to specified exceptions (such as large luggage), free of charge. ³⁹¹ Although there is no precise limitation upon the size, quantity or weight of the luggage which accompanies the passenger, the Train Company may refuse to carry the luggage if there is no room for it. The Train Company may refuse to accept luggage additionally where the luggage might cause injury, inconvenience or property damage, its loading or unloading might cause delay or it is not carried or packed in a suitable manner, notwithstanding that such luggage has been accepted previously or is accepted normally.

Definition of passengers' luggage at common law

36-070

At an early period it was important to determine whether or not articles which a passenger took with him were "passengers' luggage" because not only did carriers undertake an insurer's liability towards such articles, but they also carried them without extra charge. Moreover, if articles which appear to be passengers' luggage, but in fact are not so, are lost or damaged, the carrier may avoid all liability on the ground that he never contracted to carry such articles. The classic definition of passengers' luggage at common law is that of Cockburn C.J. in Macrow v Great Western Railway.³⁹² According to this, passengers' luggage is ordinary, personal luggage, that is to say, luggage for personal use or convenience according to the habits or wants of the particular class to which the passenger belongs, with reference to either the immediate necessities or the ultimate purpose of his journey. The meaning of this definition will be elucidated in the paragraphs that follow.³⁹³

The requirement of personal use

36-071

From luggage carried for the passenger's personal use or convenience must be distinguished (a) articles taken by a passenger for the use of others, like sheets and blankets for a household³⁹⁴ or a rocking-horse as a present for a child³⁹⁵; and (b) at common law articles taken by a passenger for the purposes of his profession, trade or business.³⁹⁶ Under the National Rail Conditions of Carriage, however, passengers are permitted to take with them small items of luggage free of charge.³⁹⁷ Thus, in carriage by rail, many of the cases on the carriage of luggage at common law might now be decided differently; and it would no longer be necessary to consider whether, e.g. the artist's sketches were done for his own amusement or for sale. It should be stressed that at common law it is not the ownership of the articles but their use that is of crucial importance. Thus, if the luggage is taken by the passenger for the use of someone else, the carrier is not liable³⁹⁸; conversely, if the luggage contains articles lent to the passenger by a friend, the carrier is liable.³⁹⁹ Even an employee may recover for the loss of his employer's luggage, provided the luggage was required for the use of the employee, e.g. a uniform.⁴⁰⁰ The National Rail Conditions of Carriage, on the other hand, are concerned not with personal use but with the condition, size and weight of the luggage.

Use in connection with journey

36-072

At common law the articles must be for the passenger's use on the actual journey, or in connection with the journey. What the latter phrase means is, at present, uncertain. Articles for personal use during the passenger's stay in a hotel whilst away from home would certainly be articles for use in connection with the journey.⁴⁰¹

In the nature of a package

36-073

At common law objects taken by the passenger must correspond with the image normally evoked by the word "luggage", i.e. something of a size and shape that can reasonably be carried as luggage.⁴⁰²

"An article which is taken, as it were, loose ... is subject to rather different considerations There is, in addition to the requirement that they are for some personal use, the requirement that they must be of the kind of goods that are usually denominated as luggage ... it conveys the idea that they are carried about in a box or a bag or something of that kind."⁴⁰³

So bicycles,⁴⁰⁴ invalid chairs⁴⁰⁵ and radio sets⁴⁰⁶ have not in the past been treated as passengers' luggage. Nor does the term include the articles carried by a passenger on his person.⁴⁰⁷ Whether the phrase embraces, e.g. a passenger's coat, hat, umbrella, stick, handbag, book or toy that is placed on the luggage rack or on the seat remains open.⁴⁰⁸ The Train Companies often will allow the carriage of such items under their conditions of carriage.

Carriage of items not permitted by the contract

36-074

“If the carrier permits the passenger, either on payment or without payment of an extra charge, to take more than the regulated quantity of luggage, or knowingly permits him to take as personal luggage articles that would not come under that denomination, he will be liable for their loss, though not arising from his negligence.” ⁴⁰⁹

On the other hand:

“If a passenger, who knows or ought to know that he is only entitled to have his ordinary personal luggage carried free of charge, chooses to carry with him merchandise, for which the company are entitled to make a charge, he cannot claim to be compensated in respect of any loss or injury by the company, to whom he has abstained from giving notice of the contents. In such a case he carries it at his own risk.” ⁴¹⁰

Similarly, if a passenger puts luggage into a train or other vehicle, and the carrier discovers that it consists of merchandise or exceeds the permitted weight, the carrier can make the appropriate charge and retain the luggage until the charge is paid. ⁴¹¹

Common carrier's liability for loss and damage36-075

The common carrier of passengers' luggage is strictly liable for loss or damage, subject to the four excepted perils, ⁴¹² unless he has limited his liability by special contract. The only one of the excepted perils which requires discussion here is the passenger's fault. In the case of luggage put in the luggage compartment of a coach, this defence could only be available where, e.g. the loss or damage occurs because the luggage is wrongly labelled or addressed or badly packed. But where the passenger takes the luggage into the coach with him, the application of the defence widens. The fact that the passenger retains possession of his luggage does not affect the nature of the carrier's liability; it only enhances the possibility of a successful defence. The carrier is still a common carrier, whether the luggage is placed in the luggage compartment or is taken inside by the passenger. ⁴¹³ In the days when the railways were common carriers it was held that a passenger need not keep a watchful eye on his luggage throughout the journey. ⁴¹⁴ But if the passenger is negligent in looking after his luggage, the carrier is not liable. ⁴¹⁵ Thus if luggage disappears from the luggage compartment of a coach during transit, the carrier will very probably be liable. ⁴¹⁶ He would also be liable if the luggage disappeared from inside the coach while it stopped for 10 minutes to allow the passengers to visit a toilet or to buy sandwiches. ⁴¹⁷ But he might not be liable if the coach stopped for an hour in order that the driver and passengers might take a meal. Since the carriage of luggage is not gratuitous, even if it is carried “free of extra charge”, ⁴¹⁸ the defence of s.1 of the Carriers Act 1830 is also available. ⁴¹⁹ A passenger's clothes, jewellery, watch and so on which he carries on his person or in his pockets are not passenger's luggage. For these, the carrier is under the same liability as he is towards the passenger himself: his liability is based on negligence. ⁴²⁰

The carrier's contractual liability for loss and damage36-076

A common carrier, who has modified his status by a special contract, and a private carrier will be liable for loss and damage to the passenger's luggage in accordance with the terms of that contract. ⁴²¹ Alternatively, the passenger may have remedies in tort. ⁴²² Any contract terms which seek to exclude or restrict such liability in contract or for negligence must yield to the requirement of reasonableness under the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977, ⁴²³ and fairness in respect of consumer contracts made on or after October 1, 2015, under the Consumer Rights Act 2015.⁴²⁴ Under the National Rail Conditions of Carriage, the Train Companies are only liable for loss of or from, or for damage or delay to, luggage brought on to premises or taken into trains upon proof that such loss, damage or delay was caused by the fault of the Train Company. The Train Company's liability in respect of any item will not exceed the limit laid down in the EU Rail Passengers Rights and Obligations Regulation (1371/2007) or the item's value, whichever is lower. The Train Company will also take reasonable care of lost property. In any event, the Train Company's liability is limited to the lesser of the value of the item or a specified limit.⁴²⁵ Under the National Rail Conditions of Carriage, the Train Company may remove or dispose of any property which might in their opinion cause damage or injury or inconvenience to persons or may sell or dispose of unclaimed property.⁴²⁶

Beginning and end of transit

36-077

As in the case of the carriage of goods,⁴²⁷ it is important to determine in relation to the carriage of passengers' luggage when transit begins and ends, because it is only during this period that the carrier can be made liable as a carrier. The National Rail Conditions of Carriage no longer indicate when transit begins or ends. The decided cases are still of interest on the question when transit ends at common law, and decisive of the question when it begins; and no doubt the principles contained in the cases can be applied with caution to the somewhat different conditions of carriage by road. At common law, transit begins when the luggage is received for transport by the carrier or one of his actually or ostensibly authorised employees⁴²⁸ a reasonable and proper time before the train is due to start. What is a reasonable and proper time is a question of fact depending on the circumstances of each case.⁴²⁹ If luggage is handed to a railway porter at an earlier time than this, the carrier will not be liable if it is stolen, because it should have been placed in the left luggage office.⁴³⁰

Liability in tort

36-078

If there is no contract with the passenger, the carrier may still be liable in tort. Thus, an employee can recover for the loss of his personal luggage, though his employer paid for his ticket⁴³¹, and the employer can recover for the loss of luggage owned by him but required for the use of the employee, e.g. a uniform, though the employer was not himself a passenger.⁴³²

^{386.} See Leslie at p.295.

^{387.} cf. Lovett v Hobbs (1680) 2 Show. 127 and the cases cited in Leslie at p.301.

^{388.} Greater London Authority Act 1999 s.156(8), Sch.11 para.31; Railways Act 1993 s.123; the Railways Regulations 1998 (SI 1998/1340) reg.23. See above, para.36–010.

^{389.} See Kahn-Freund at pp.598–599, 609; and see above, para.36-034 n.208.

^{390.} National Rail Conditions of Carriage cl.60.

^{391.} National Rail Conditions of Carriage, cl.47–49.

^{392.} (1871) L.R. 6 Q.B. 612, 622.

^{393.} See Kahn-Freund at pp.600–608.

^{394.} Macrow v GW Ry (1871) L.R. 6 Q.B. 612.

- 395. cf. Hudston v Midland Ry (1869) L.R. 4 Q.B. 366. In Buckland v R [1933] 1 K.B. 329, 340, McCardie J., in a useful and important survey of “passengers’ luggage”, said that “a smaller toy might well have been included in the phrase ‘ordinary luggage’”. But the difficulty remains that the child was not a passenger.
- 396. Phelps v LNW Ry (1865) 19 C.B.(N.S.) 321 (solicitor carrying client’s title deeds for use in lawsuit); Gilbey v GN Ry (1920) 36 T.L.R. 562 (actor’s theatrical clothing); GW Ry v Evans (1921) 38 T.L.R. 166 (professional musician’s violoncello); Mytton v Midland Ry (1859) 28 L.J. Ex. 385 (professional artist’s sketches); Belfast & Ballymena Ry v Keys (1861) 9 H.L.C. 556 (merchandise); Hastie v GE Ry (1911) 46 L.J.News. 507 (typewriter carried for business purposes). Distinguish Jenkyns v Southampton Steam Packet Co [1919] 2 K.B. 135 (army officer’s revolver, ear-defenders, binoculars and flash-lamp), which is not strictly reconcilable with the above cases or the rule they illustrate, but is perhaps comprehensible when recalled as a case arising during the First World War.
- 397. National Rail Conditions of Carriage cl.47. Many of the cases on passengers’ luggage at common law arose on the construction of the expression “ordinary luggage” which occurred in the former railway companies’ private Acts; but in no case was a distinction suggested between “ordinary luggage” and “passengers’ luggage”. The National Rail Conditions of Carriage no longer employ the term “ordinary luggage”.
- 398. Becher v GE Ry (1870) L.R. 5 Q.B. 241 (employee taking employer’s luggage).
- 399. Jenkyns v Southampton Steam Packet Co [1919] 2 K.B. 135.
- 400. Meux v GE Ry [1895] 2 Q.B. 387, 394.
- 401. See Britten v GN Ry [1899] 1 Q.B. 243, 248.
- 402. Macrow v GW Ry (1871) L.R. 6 Q.B. 612, 621; Britten v GN Ry, above, at 248–249.
- 403. Britten v GN Ry, above, at 248 (Channell J.).
- 404. Britten v GN Ry, above. See National Rail Conditions of Carriage, cl.48.
- 405. Cusack v LNW Ry (1891) 7 T.L.R. 452.
- 406. Page v LMS Ry [1943] 1 All E.R. 455, 457.
- 407. cf. Smitton v Orient Steam Navigation Co (1907) 96 L.T. 848.
- 408. But see Le Conteur v LSW Ry (1865) L.R. 1 Q.B. 54, 62. See also Kahn-Freund at p.610, n.79.
- 409. Macrow v GW Ry (1871) L.R. 6 Q.B. 612, 619 (Cockburn C.J.). cf. Page v LMS Ry [1943] 1 All E.R. 455.
- 410. Cahill v LNW Ry (1863) 13 C.B.(N.S.) 818, 819 (Cockburn C.J.). cf. GN Ry v Shepherd (1852) 8 Exch. 30.
- 411. Rumsey v NE Ry (1863) 14 C.B.(N.S.) 641.
- 412. See above, paras 36-018—36-022.
- 413. See Le Conteur v LSW Ry (1865) L.R. 1 Q.B. 54, 58–59; GW Ry v Bunch (1888) 13 App. Cas. 31, 42, 48, 53.
- 414. Ehinger v SE & C Ry (1922) 38 T.L.R. 678; Vosper v GW Ry [1928] 1 K.B. 340; Carr v LMS Ry [1931] N.I. 94.
- 415. Talley v GW Ry (1870) L.R. 6 C.P. 44. See also National Rail Conditions of Carriage cl.51.

- 416. cf. Houghland v RR Low (Luxury Coaches) Ltd [1962] 1 Q.B. 694, where (as previously pointed out) the carriage was “contract carriage” and the carrier therefore not a common carrier.
- 417. cf. Carr v LMS Ry [1931] N.I. 94.
- 418. Casswell v Cheshire Lines Committee [1907] 2 K.B. 499.
- 419. See above, paras 36-033—36-034.
- 420. Smitton v Orient Steam Navigation Co Ltd (1907) 96 L.T. 848.
- 421. Although such terms must not be unfair within the meaning of Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999, where applicable.
- 422. Meux v Great Eastern Ry Co [1985] 2 Q.B. 387; Houghland v RR Low (Luxury Coaches) Ltd [1962] 1 Q.B. 694; Sullivan v Ashway Coaches [1981] C.L.Y. 302. See also below, para.36-077.
- 423. 1977 Act ss.2(2), 3, 11.
- 424. 2015 Act ss.62–65. The 2015 Act revokes the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999: see below, paras 38-358—38-394.
- 425. National Rail Conditions of Carriage, cl.50. As at May 6, 2014, the limit is £1,376.25.
- 426. National Rail Conditions of Carriage, cl.52–57. See also Torts (Interference with Goods) Act 1977 s.12.
- 427. See above, para.36-041.
- 428. Soanes v LSW Ry (1919) 88 L.J.K.B. 524.
- 429. GW Ry v Bunch (1888) 13 App. Cas. 31 (40 minutes at Paddington Station on Christmas Eve held reasonable); Steers v Midland Ry (1920) 36 T.L.R. 703 (luggage left, with station inspector’s approval, for one hour in sleeping-car while passenger had a meal outside the station: held reasonable). See also Lovell v LC & D Ry (1876) 34 L.T. 127; Leach v SE Ry (1876) 34 L.T. 134; contrast Welch v LNW Ry (1886) 34 W.R. 166.
- 430. GW Ry v Bunch (1888) 13 App. Cas. 31, 44, 53.
- 431. Marshall v York, Newcastle and Berwick Ry (1851) 11 C.B. 655.
- 432. Meux v GE Ry [1895] 2 Q.B. 387.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 36 - Carriage by Land

Section 3. - International Carriage

(a) - Introduction

International Convention on Carriage by Rail

36-079

The United Kingdom is a party to an important multilateral treaty on international carriage by rail. This is the Convention concerning International Carriage by Rail known as COTIF, signed at Berne on May 9, 1980. ⁴³³ COTIF is both a revision and an amalgamation of three previous carriage by rail Conventions, respectively known as CIM, CIV and CAV, which had been in force in their most recent form since January 1, 1975. ⁴³⁴ The new Convention incorporates all three Conventions with certain amendments as sets of Uniform Rules forming two appendices to COTIF. Appendix A embraces the CIV Uniform Rules regarding the international carriage of passengers and their luggage by rail; Appendix B covers the CIM Uniform Rules regarding the international carriage of goods by rail. Whilst most of the basic provisions of CIM, CIV and CAV remain in force, many of the articles of the earlier Conventions have been re-numbered. The object of having such Uniform Rules as appendices to COTIF is to enable them to be amended much more readily and quickly than under the old Conventions. The new Convention also provides for an intergovernmental organisation, known as OTIF, to monitor the performance of the Convention so far as international through traffic by rail between Member States is concerned, and to facilitate its development. The Central Office for International Carriage by Rail in Berne provides the OTIF Secretariat, and the Organisation's headquarters are in Berne. The CIM Uniform Rules have annexed to them four sets of regulations, concerning the international carriage by rail of dangerous goods ("RID"), ⁴³⁵ containers ("RICO"), ⁴³⁶ express parcels ("RIEx") ⁴³⁷ and the international haulage by rail of private owners' wagons ("RIP"). ⁴³⁸

International Transport Conventions Act 1983

36-080

The United Kingdom government has ratified COTIF. The Convention came into force generally, and for the United Kingdom, on May 1, 1985, the day agreed by Member States under art.24(1) of COTIF, once the necessary 15 states had ratified or acceded to the Convention. The entry into force of the Convention by virtue of art.24(2) of COTIF automatically abrogated the earlier Conventions CIM, CIV and CAV. United Kingdom legislation had previously been enacted to give COTIF the force of law in the United Kingdom in the shape of the International Transport Conventions Act 1983. ⁴³⁹ The provisions thus given the force of law were those set out in Command Paper Cmnd. 8535, which contains the English text of the Convention and the Uniform Rules. ⁴⁴⁰ References in the present text to the English text of COTIF and its Appendix A (CIV) and Appendix B (CIM) are drawn from the Command Paper Cmnd. 8535, which is separate from the Act. The French text of COTIF is, however, the only authoritative text. ⁴⁴¹ The 1983 Act provided for the entry into force of COTIF as far as the United Kingdom is concerned to be certified by an Order in Council under s.11(3) of the Act. The certification of May 1, 1985, as the date of entry into force was thus made. ⁴⁴² Under s.11(3) of the 1983 Act, the Carriage by Railway Act 1972 was repealed in its entirety from that date: this was the Act which had incorporated into English law the Additional Convention (CAV) relating to the liability of railways for death of and personal injury to passengers. The International Transport Conventions Act 1983 empowers Her Majesty by Order in Council from time to time to certify which states are Member States for the purposes of COTIF. ⁴⁴³ A Protocol modifying COTIF was incorporated into English law and came into force on November 1, 1996. ⁴⁴⁴

Modification to COTIF: the Vilnius Protocol

36-081

On June 3, 1999, a Protocol modifying COTIF was signed in Vilnius by a number of states, including the United Kingdom. In anticipation of the Protocol entering into force and the United Kingdom's ratification of the Protocol by Royal Prerogative, Parliament enacted s.103 of the Railways and Transport Safety Act 2003, which empowers the Secretary of State to make regulations for the purpose of giving effect to the modified Convention. By the Railways (Convention on International Carriage by Rail) Regulations 2005, ⁴⁴⁵ the Vilnius Protocol was implemented as part of the law of the United Kingdom. The modifications import a general revision to COTIF, reflecting major changes in railway management and operations particularly following EC Directive 91/440, 95/18 and 95/19 ⁴⁴⁶ including the increasing separation of infrastructure management from the operation of train companies and the increase of competition on any one network. In place of the three existing annexures to COTIF, the Protocol introduces (a) entirely new CIV Uniform Rules (Appendix A), the modifications to which also ensure that minimum levels of compensation exist for certain incidents throughout all signatory states; (b) new CIM Uniform Rules (Appendix B); (c) a free-standing Appendix for the carriage of dangerous goods (RID) (Appendix C ⁴⁴⁷); (d) new Uniform Rules for contracts for use of vehicles in international rail traffic (CUV), contracts for use of infrastructure in international rail traffic (CUI), the validation of technical standards and prescriptions applicable to railway material to be used in international traffic (APTU) and the technical admission of railway material used in international traffic (ATMF) (Appendices D to G). The 2005 Regulations, and therefore the Protocol (now referred to as COTIF 1999), entered into force on July 1, 2006. ⁴⁴⁸ The United Kingdom has declared pursuant to art.42 of the Protocol that it will not apply the CUI, APTU and ATMF (Appendices E, F and G). In addition, pursuant to an agreement between the United Kingdom and France, the CIV Uniform Rules and the CIM Uniform Rules will not apply to carriage by means of rail shuttle services carrying road vehicles and their passengers performed exclusively between the Channel Tunnel terminals at Cheriton in Kent and Coquelles in the Pas-de-Calais.

International Conventions on Carriage by Road

36-082

Two important multilateral treaties must be noted. ⁴⁴⁹ The United Kingdom is a party to the Convention on the Contract for the International Carriage of Goods by Road (CMR), ⁴⁵⁰ signed at Geneva on May 19, 1956. ⁴⁵¹ This Convention entered into force for the United Kingdom on October 19, 1967. The English and French texts of this Convention are of equal authenticity. The Convention was implemented in English law by the Carriage of Goods by Road Act 1965, the English text of the Convention forming a Schedule to the Act. The Act came into force on June 5, 1967. ⁴⁵² The United Kingdom has also ratified a Protocol to CMR. ⁴⁵³ The Protocol was implemented in English law by the Carriage by Air and Road Act 1979 ⁴⁵⁴ and entered into force on December 28, 1980. ⁴⁵⁵

Convention for Carriage of Passengers and Luggage by Road

36-083

The United Kingdom may at some stage become a party to the Convention on the Contract for the International Carriage of Passengers and Luggage by Road (CVR), ⁴⁵⁶ signed at Geneva on March 1, 1973. The Convention entered into force on April 12, 1994. Although represented at the Diplomatic Conference which drew up the Convention, the United Kingdom government has not yet signed, ⁴⁵⁷ still less ratified, the Convention. Although implementing legislation in the shape of the Carriage of Passengers by Road Act 1974 was passed, the possibility of signature and ratification grows remote, given that the 1974 Act was repealed by the Statute Law (Repeals) Act 2004. ⁴⁵⁸

Multi-modal or combined transport

36-084

! With the rise of containerised transport, it is becoming increasingly common for the contract of carriage of goods to contemplate the international transport of those goods by more than one mode of carriage, namely by road, rail, sea and/or air. Each mode of carriage presently is governed by its own international legal regime provided each mode involves international transport, ⁴⁵⁹ ! with few attempts to identify the scope of their application in cases of combined transport. ⁴⁶⁰ Difficulties may arise where there is an overlap between the scope of each of these regimes. It is not proposed to discuss this topic here at length. The International Convention on the Multimodal Transport of Goods 1980 is an attempt to legislate for such combined transport but has not yet entered into operation, having received significantly less ratifications than required. ⁴⁶¹ By art.30(4), the Multimodal Convention will not apply to those states which are bound to apply the CMR or the CIM rules.

^{433.} “COTIF” stands for “Convention Relative aux Transports Internationaux Ferroviaires”. The European Union acceded to COTIF, with effect from July 1, 2011.

^{434.} An account of these Conventions and their effect in English law is given in paras 2877-2879 of the 25th edition of this work.

^{435.} CIM Annex I; CIM arts 4(D) and 5(1)(a). See above, para.36-035.

^{436.} CIM Annex III; CIM art.8(2).

^{437.} CIM Annex IV; CIM art.8(3).

^{438.} CIM Annex II; CIM art.8(1).

^{439.} International Transport Conventions Act 1983 s.1(1).

^{440.} International Transport Conventions Act 1983 s.1(3).

^{441.} COTIF art.28. Under art.45 of the modified COTIF (see below, para.36-081), the Convention shall be expressed in English, German and French, but in the case of divergence, the French text shall prevail.

^{442.} International Transport Conventions Act 1983 (Certification of Commencement of Convention) Order 1985 (SI 1985/612).

^{443.} International Transport Conventions Act 1983 s.2(1).

^{444.} SI 1994/1907. Note also the Supplementary Provisions agreed between Member States in 1993.

^{445.} SI 2005/2092.

^{446.} Implemented by the Railways Regulations 1998 (SI 1998/1340).

^{447.} The Carriage of Dangerous Goods and Use of Transportable Pressure Equipment Regulations 2009 (SI 2009/1348, as amended by SI 2011/1885) implement RID. A new Appendix C (RID) has been formulated to take the place of the 2011 RID, with effect from January 1, 2013, although there does not yet appear to be implementing legislation in the United Kingdom. See above para.36-035.

^{448.} See London Gazette dated July 3, 2006; Railways (Convention on International Carriage by Rail) Regulations 2005 (SI 2005/2092) art.1.

- 449. The United Kingdom has entered into bilateral treaties concerning international carriage of goods by road with several states: see, e.g. the Agreements with Yugoslavia of February 3, 1969 (Cmnd. 4282; TS. No.18 (1970)) and with France of March 28, 1969 (Cmnd. 4324; TS. No.27 (1970)). These treaties are, however, mere facilitation agreements, designed to provide for the terms of entry of vehicles and for permits and the like. They do not affect the contractual relation between carrier and customer in any way.
- 450. Cmnd. 3455; TS. No.90 (1967). See below, paras 36-117 et seq. “CMR” stands for “Convention Relative au Contrat de Transport International des Marchandises par Route”.
- 451. There was also a European Agreement concerning the International Carriage of Dangerous Goods by Road signed at Geneva on September 30, 1957 (“ADR”). The Annexes to that Agreement, as amended, were incorporated into English law by the Carriage of Dangerous Goods and Use of Transportable Pressure Equipment Regulations 2007 (SI 2007/1573). See now SI 2009/1348 and SI 2011/1885. See above, para.36-035.
- 452. Carriage of Goods by Road Act 1965 (Commencement) Order 1967 (SI 1967/819).
- 453. Cmnd. 8138; TS. No.6 (1981).
- 454. See ss.3(3), 4(2) (4), 5 and 6(1)(b).
- 455. Carriage by Air and Road Act 1979 (Commencement No.1) Order 1980 (SI 1980/1966).
- 456. Cmnd. 5622. See below, paras 36-149 et seq. “CVR” stands for “Convention Relative au Contrat de Transport International des Voyageurs et des Bagages par Route”.
- 457. Only Luxembourg and the Federal Republic of Germany signed the Convention. The former states of Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia acceded to it.
- 458. s.1(1) and Sch.1 Pt 14. The 2004 Act also repealed those parts of the Carriage by Air and Road Act 1979 which provided for the implementation of the Protocol to the CVR which was agreed in 1979.
- 459.  CMR (road), CIM (rail), Warsaw Convention 1929, protocols and supplements (air—see above, Ch.35), and Hague Rules 1924 and Hague-Visby Rules 1968 (sea). Also note the Budapest Convention on Contracts for the Carriage of Goods by Inland Waterway (CMNI) signed on June 22, 2001. As to defining the modes of carriage, see Clarke, “The Shape of the Conventions on the Carriage of Goods” (2015) 50 E.T.L. 371, 375–376.
- 460. CMR art.2; COTIF art.2(2) and 3(3); CIM art.48; Warsaw Convention arts 18(5) and 31; Hague-Visby Rules art.1.
- 461. See also the UNCTAD/ICC Rules for Multimodal Transport Documents 1991. See generally de Wit, Multimodal Transport (1995). See Faghfour, “International Regulation of Liability for Multimodal Transport—In Search of Uniformity” (2006) 5 WMU Journal of International Affairs 95. As an example of the difficulties in identifying the terms governing each leg of the combined transport of goods, see Finagra (UK) Ltd v OT Africa Line Ltd [1998] 2 Lloyd’s Rep. 622.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 36 - Carriage by Land
Section 3. - International Carriage
(b) - Goods by Rail

Scope of the Uniform Rules (CIM) under Appendix B to COTIF ⁴⁶²

36-085

CIM regulates the form and conditions of the contract of carriage of goods by rail, the performance of the contract, its modification, the disposal of the goods being carried, liability for loss, damage and delay, compensation and enforcement of claims by action. ⁴⁶³

Application of CIM

36-086

CIM applies to every contract of carriage of goods by rail for reward when the place of taking over of the goods and the place designated for delivery are situated in two different Member States, irrespective of the place of business and the nationality of the parties to the contract of carriage. ⁴⁶⁴ It follows that CIM will apply even though the carriage is performed through the territory of a non-Member State ⁴⁶⁵ and that CIM will not apply if the place of taking over and the place of delivery are in the same state even though the carriage is performed through the territory of another state. CIM will also apply to contracts of carriage of goods by rail where only one of the place of taking over or place of delivery are in a Member State provided the parties to the contract agree that CIM will apply. ⁴⁶⁶ CIM will further apply where the international carriage is the subject of a single contract which contract includes carriage by road or internal inland waterway as a supplement to the trans-frontier carriage by rail or carriage by sea or trans-frontier inland waterway if the latter services are listed in accordance with art.24 of COTIF. ⁴⁶⁷ However, CIM will not apply where the carriage is performed between stations situated on the territory of neighbouring states, when the infrastructure of the stations is managed by one or more infrastructure managers subject only to one of those states. ⁴⁶⁸ Any stipulation in the contract of carriage which, directly or indirectly, derogates from CIM shall be null and void, but such nullity shall not operate to nullify the other provisions of the contract. ⁴⁶⁹

Interpretation of the Convention

36-087

Whilst there have been no English decisions on the interpretation of CIM, some decisions of the courts of the Continental parties to the unmodified Convention have been reported. In view of the similarity of the provisions regarding the carrier's liability and the carrier's exemptions from liability between CIM and the Geneva Convention on the Contract for the International Carriage of Goods by Road (CMR), ⁴⁷⁰ the reported decisions on the interpretation of CMR are often of assistance in the interpretation of CIM.

The carrier's role

36-088

Under the contract of carriage, the carrier undertakes to carry the goods consigned for reward to the place of destination and to deliver them at the destination to the consignee. ⁴⁷¹ For this service, the carrier is entitled to the payment by the consignor of the carriage charge, customs duties and other costs. ⁴⁷²

Consignment note

36-089

CIM requires the contract of carriage to be confirmed by a consignment note which accords with a uniform model. ⁴⁷³ The uniform model is to be established by international associations of carriers in agreement with customers' associations and relevant customs authorities. ⁴⁷⁴ The consignment note is prima facie evidence of the conclusion and conditions of the contract and the taking over of the goods being carried. ⁴⁷⁵ CIM specifies a number of formal requirements for the consignment note, stipulating the particulars which the consignment note must contain (e.g. places of issue, taking over and delivery, names of consignor, carrier and consignee, and details of the goods to be carried), the responsibility for which largely falls on the consignor. ⁴⁷⁶ However, the absence, irregularity or loss of the consignment note shall not affect the existence or validity of the contract which the Convention emphasises shall remain subject to CIM. ⁴⁷⁷ One consignment note shall be issued for each consignment and, unless the contracting parties agree otherwise, must not relate to more than one wagon load. ⁴⁷⁸ CIM contemplates that there will be two copies of the consignment note, the duplicate being given to the consignor. ⁴⁷⁹ CIM provides that the consignment note will not have effect as a bill of lading. ⁴⁸⁰

Loading, carriage and delivery

36-090

CIM contemplates two types of consignments which may be carried by rail, namely packages and full wagon loads. Unless the parties otherwise agree, the carrier is responsible for the loading and unloading of packages and the consignor is responsible for the loading of a wagon load and the consignee is responsible for the unloading of the wagon load. ⁴⁸¹ The consignor is responsible for any defects in the packing of the goods unless the defects were apparent to the carrier on taking them over and the carrier made no reservations concerning the defects. ⁴⁸² On arrival at the destination, the carrier must deliver the goods to the consignee and hand over the consignment note against the provision of a receipt and the payment of sums outstanding under the carriage contract. ⁴⁸³ Delivery also may be effected by the handing over of the goods to customs authorities, or the deposit of the goods for storage with the railway, with a forwarding agent or in a public warehouse, provided that such delivery is permitted by the provisions in force at the destination station. ⁴⁸⁴

Modification of the contract

36-091

The consignor shall be entitled to dispose of the goods and to modify the contract of carriage by giving "subsequent orders". Such orders may require the carrier to delay delivery of the goods or to deliver the goods to a consignee or to a destination other than the one identified in the consignment note. ⁴⁸⁵ The modification of the contract appears to be limited to these matters and must be effected by the consignor producing to the carrier the duplicate consignment note on which the modifications must be entered. ⁴⁸⁶ Such modifications must be "possible, lawful and reasonable", must not interfere with the normal working of the carrier's undertaking nor prejudice the consignors or consignees of other consignments and must not have the effect of splitting the consignment. ⁴⁸⁷ The consignee will acquire the right to modify the contract of carriage once the consignment note is drawn up, unless the consignor reserves the right to himself or herself on the consignment note. ⁴⁸⁸ The consignor will lose the right to modify the contract when the consignee has acquired the right of modification or has accepted from the carrier the consignment note or the goods or has demanded both.⁴⁸⁹ Similarly, the consignee will lose the right of modification when he has requested or accepted the consignment note or the goods. Additionally, the consignee will lose the right when he has instructed the carrier to deliver the goods to another person, who requests the carrier to hand over the consignment note and deliver the goods; that person will not be entitled to modify the contract.⁴⁹⁰ The consignor may have a right of stoppage in transit vis-à-vis the consignee pursuant to the Sale of Goods Act 1979 if English law governs the contract between them.⁴⁹¹

Prevention of carriage or delivery

36-092

If the carriage of the goods has been prevented by circumstances,⁴⁹² the carrier must decide whether it is preferable (presumably in the interests of the person entitled to dispose of the goods) to modify the route or to ask the person entitled for instructions.⁴⁹³ If it is impossible to continue the carriage or to effect delivery, the person entitled shall be asked for his instructions. If the carrier is unable to obtain instructions, he shall take such steps which he considers to be in the best interests of the person entitled.⁴⁹⁴ If circumstances exist which prevent delivery, the carrier must ask the consignor or (if the consignee has modified the contract) the consignee for instructions.⁴⁹⁵ If the consignee refuses delivery, the consignor may give instructions, even if he is unable to produce the duplicate consignment note.⁴⁹⁶ If circumstances alter permitting delivery before the receipt of instructions, the carrier shall deliver the goods to the consignee.⁴⁹⁷ If the goods are of a perishable nature or if the carrier does not receive instructions, the carrier may sell the goods and, after deducting relevant costs, place the proceeds of sale at the disposal of the person entitled.⁴⁹⁸

Loss, damage and delay

36-093

⚠ The carrier is liable for loss (total or partial) of the goods, damage and delay (i.e. for exceeding the transit periods⁴⁹⁹) unless he can prove an applicable exception to that liability.⁵⁰⁰ ⚠ The carrier is liable for his own employees and for any other persons, including the managers of the railway infrastructure on which the carriage is performed, whose services he uses in the performance of the carriage.⁵⁰¹ There are two kinds of exceptions. The first type arises where the relevant loss, damage or delay was caused by (1) the fault of the person entitled; (2) an order given by the person entitled other than as a result of the fault of the carrier; (3) inherent defect in the goods (decay, wastage, etc.)⁵⁰²; or (4) circumstances which the carrier could not avoid and the consequences of which he was not able to prevent.⁵⁰³ The burden of proving any of these is on the carrier.⁵⁰⁴ Thus far, the exceptions are very similar to those applicable to the common carrier at common law. But the second kind of exception comprises circumstances when loss or damage arises from the special risks inherent in one or more of the following circumstances: (a) carriage in open wagons when that has been agreed; (b) absence or inadequacy of packaging; (c) loading by the consignor or unloading by the consignee; (d) the nature of certain kinds of goods which particularly exposes them to loss or damage, especially through breakage, rust, interior and spontaneous decay, desiccation or wastage; (e) irregular, incorrect or incomplete description or numbering of packages; (f) the carriage of live animals; and (g) the carriage of consignments which, with the parties' agreement, must be accompanied by an attendant.⁵⁰⁵ If the carrier establishes that loss or damage could be attributed to one or more of these exceptions, this is rebuttably presumed, unless in (a) above there is an abnormal shortage or a loss of a package.⁵⁰⁶ If the goods are not delivered to the consignee or held at his disposal within 30 days after the expiry of the transit period, they are presumed to be lost.⁵⁰⁷

Ascertainment of loss or damage

36-094

Upon delivery, the person entitled may ask the carrier for an opportunity to examine the goods to determine the existence of any loss or damage. Any failure by the carrier to permit such an examination will entitle the person entitled to the goods to refuse to accept the goods, even when he has accepted the consignment note and/or paid the outstanding charges. ⁵⁰⁸ In the event of the discovery, presumption or allegation of partial loss of or damage to the goods, the carrier must, without delay prepare, if possible in the presence of the person entitled, a report concerning the condition of the goods and the nature, extent, cause and time of the loss or damage. ⁵⁰⁹ If the person entitled does not accept the report's findings, he can insist upon the circumstances surrounding the loss or damage to be investigated by an expert. ⁵¹⁰

Upper financial limits of liability

36-095

The carrier's liability for loss of the goods, whether total or partial, is limited to 17 units of account ⁵¹¹ per kilogramme of gross mass short, ⁵¹² unless the consignor and carrier agree that the consignor shall declare in the consignment note a value for the goods exceeding this limit or a special interest in delivery by entering an amount in figures on the consignment note, in which case compensation can be claimed up to the value or amount declared. ⁵¹³ The compensation is calculated by reference to the commodity exchange quoted price or current market price or the usual value of the goods of the same kind and quality at the time and place at which the goods were taken over for the carriage. ⁵¹⁴ The carrier must also refund the carriage charges, customs duties and other expenses paid in respect of the missing goods. ⁵¹⁵ The carrier's liability for delay (i.e. for exceeding the transit periods) depends on whether actual loss or damage was thus caused. If actual loss or damage resulted from the delay, the compensation may not exceed four times the amount of the carriage charges, although the total compensation for the loss or damage caused by delay and otherwise may not exceed the compensation payable for a total loss. ⁵¹⁶ The carrier's liability for damage is for the amount by which the goods have been diminished in value, but may not exceed the amount payable in respect of loss. ⁵¹⁷ The maximum limits of compensation for loss, damage or delay are removed altogether if it was due to the carrier's wilful misconduct (namely, an act or omission which the carrier has committed either with intent to cause such loss or damage, or recklessly and with knowledge that such loss or damage would probably result). ⁵¹⁸ The claimant may recover interest on the compensation payable at the rate of 5 per cent per annum from the time a claim, together with supporting documents, is submitted in accordance with the CIM Uniform Rules, ⁵¹⁹ or failing such a claim, from the time of the commencement of legal proceedings in respect of the claim. ⁵²⁰

Successive and substitute carriers

36-096

If carriage is governed by a single contract and is performed by several successive carriers, each carrier, by the very act of taking over the goods with the consignment note, shall become a party to the contract of carriage in accordance with the terms of the contract and shall assume the obligations arising therefrom. Each carrier shall be responsible in respect of carriage over the entire route up to delivery. ⁵²¹ Where the carrier has entrusted all or part of the performance of the carriage to a substitute carrier, the carrier shall remain liable in respect of the entire carriage. The CIM provisions governing the liability of the carrier shall also apply to the liability of the substitute carrier for the carriage performed by him. ⁵²² Actions based on the contract of carriage may be brought only against the first carrier, the last carrier or the carrier who performed that part of the carriage on which the event giving rise to the claim occurred. ⁵²³ A successive carrier may be sued if that carrier has been named, with his consent, in the consignment note as the carrier who must deliver the goods, even if that carrier has not received the goods or the consignment note. ⁵²⁴

Claims

36-097

⚠ Claims against the carrier relating to the contract of carriage must be made in writing only by those persons who have the right to claim. ⁵²⁵ The consignor may bring an action against the carrier until such time as the consignee has taken possession of the consignment note or accepted the goods or demanded that the consignment note be handed over and that the goods be delivered or asserted his right to modify the contract. ⁵²⁶ From that time, the consignee may bring an action against the carrier unless and until the person to whom the consignee has ordered the carrier to deliver the goods has accepted the consignment note or the goods or has demanded both. ⁵²⁷ ⚠ Actions based on CIM may be brought in the Member States designated by the parties' agreement or where the defendant is domiciled or resident or where the goods were taken over by the carrier or where the place designated for delivery is situated. ⁵²⁸

Extinction of claims

36-098

Acceptance of the goods by the person entitled extinguishes all rights of action against the carrier arising from the contract of carriage in case of partial loss, damage or delay, ⁵²⁹ subject to four exceptions. First, claims for partial loss or damage can be made if the damage was ascertained by the preparation of a report or if report was not prepared solely by reason of the carrier's fault. ⁵³⁰ Secondly, claims for loss or damage which is not apparent and not discovered until after acceptance can still be made, provided the person entitled to claim asks the carrier for a report within seven days of acceptance and proves that the loss or damage occurred between the time of taking over the goods for carriage and the time of delivery. ⁵³¹ Thirdly, claims for delay in delivery can be made within 60 days of acceptance. ⁵³² Fourthly, the claim is not extinguished if wilful misconduct can be proved. ⁵³³

Limitation of actions

36-099

⚠ All actions arising from the contract of carriage are time-barred after one year, or two years in the case of, inter alia, wilful misconduct. ⁵³⁴ ⚠ The period of limitation runs, in the case of partial loss, damage or delay in delivery, from the date of delivery; in the case of total loss, from the 30th day after the expiry of the transit period. ⁵³⁵ A written claim suspends the running of the period of limitation until such date as the carrier rejects the claim in writing. ⁵³⁶

^{462.} See above, para.36-079. As to the work being undertaken towards the harmonisation of CIM with the framework applied in Eastern Europe and Asia under the Agreement on International Goods Transport by Rail, administered by the Organisation for Cooperation between Railways, see Abel (2012) 12 S.T.L. 8.

^{463.} See Clarke and Yates, Contracts of Carriage by Land and Air, 2nd edn (2008).

^{464.} CIM art.1(1).

^{465.} Azienda Autonoma Ferrovie dello Stato v La Pace (1976) 11 E.T.L. 137 Corte di Cassazione Civile, Italy.

^{466.} CIM art.1(2).

^{467.} CIM art.1(3), (4). See Anon. (2013) 49 E.T.L. 228 (BGH). As to rail-road traffic, see also CMR art.2(1) and para.36-119 below.

- 468. CIM art.1(6).
- 469. CIM art.5.
- 470. Some of these decisions have been reported in such periodicals as European Transport Law (E.T.L.) and Lloyds Maritime and Commercial Law Quarterly (L.M.C.L.Q.).
- 471. CIM art.6(1).
- 472. CIM art.10(1).
- 473. CIM art.6(2).
- 474. CIM art.6(8).
- 475. CIM art.12(1).
- 476. CIM arts 7, 8.
- 477. CIM art.6(2). In NMBS Holding/Belgische Naamloze Vennootschap voor transport door middel van het gecombineerd rail-weg-systeem TRW (2007) 42 E.T.L. 656, the Hof van Cassatie van België held that a claim for damages could be brought against the railway carrier, in absence of a railway bill, provided that the contractual relationship between the claimant and carrier could be established.
- 478. CIM art.6(6).
- 479. CIM art.6(4).
- 480. CIM art.6(5).
- 481. CIM art.13(1).
- 482. CIM art.14.
- 483. CIM art.17(1). In Antwerp, it has been held that the consignee named in the consignment note who acts as agent for the final consignee will become a party to the contract by acceptance of the goods or the consignment note: Sobelgra NV v Nationale Maatschappij der Belgische Spoorwegen (NMBS) (1997) 33 E.T.L. 714.
- 484. CIM art.17(2).
- 485. CIM art.18(1).
- 486. CIM art.19(1). If the carrier accepts the consignor's orders to deliver the goods to some person other than the consignee named in the consignment note without requiring the duplicate consignment note to be produced, he will be liable for any loss or damage arising from that omission: art.19(7); SA Nicolas Corman v SNCF (1976) 11 E.T.L. 120 Court of Appeal, Paris.
- 487. CIM art.19(3), (4).
- 488. CIM art.18(3).
- 489. CIM art.18(2).
- 490. CIM art.18(4), (5).
- 491. See below, paras 44-326—44-338.
- 492. The carrier will not be liable for any loss of or damage to the goods or delay caused by circumstances which are unavoidable by the carrier: art.23(2).

493. CIM art.20(1).

494. CIM art.20(2).

495. CIM art.21(1), (4).

496. CIM art.21(3).

497. CIM art.21(2).

498. CIM art.22(3), (4).

499. The transit period is that which is agreed between the carrier and consignor or, in the absence of agreement, as specified in art.16.

500.  A failure to comply with the instructions of the person entitled to dispose of the goods during carriage may also render the carrier liable for loss or damage caused thereby: art.19(6). There is a facility by which the carrier may seek an exception to liability for losses arising by specified causes in respect of rail-sea traffic, provided that the relevant Member State made such provision in the listed services set out in art.24(1) of COTIF. As to the possibility of liability beyond that provided for under CIM where it is contractually incorporated, see DSM Acrylonitrile BV e.a. v DB Schenker Rail Nederland (2016) 51 E.T.L. 335 (Rechtbank te Rotterdam).

501. CIM art.40.

502. Where there is wastage in transit of goods which, by reason of their nature, is caused by the sole fact of carriage, the carrier will be liable only to the extent that the wastage exceeds specified allowances: art.31.

503. CIM art.23(2).

504. CIM art.25(1).

505. CIM art.23(3). The unmodified Convention included an additional exception in respect of loss caused by a failure to comply with customs formalities. Such matters are now regulated by art.15. The carrier is under a general duty to maintain its rolling stock put at a customer's disposal in good condition: NMBS v NV Fonciere Carner (1976) 11 E.T.L. 780 Hof van Beroep, Brussels. See also art.24 which concerns railway vehicles consigned as goods.

506. CIM art.25(2), (3).

507. CIM art.29(1).

508. CIM art.17(4).

509. CIM art.42(1).

510. CIM art.42(3).

511. However, the carrier is free to assume a greater liability: art.5. The unit of account is the Special Drawing Right ("SDR") defined by the International Monetary Fund ("IMF"): COTIF art.9(1). Its value is expressed in the national currency of a State Member of the IMF in accordance with IMF methods of valuation: art.9(2). States which are not Members of the IMF shall determine their own methods of calculating the value of the SDR: if their legislation does not permit this, the unit of account is deemed to be the equivalent of three gold francs, each gold franc weighing 1031 of a gramme and of millesimal fineness 900: art.9(3), (4). In any event the conversion of the gold franc must express in national currency a value approximating closely to the value calculated by reference to the IMF methods of valuation. In the case of judicial proceedings or arbitration in the United Kingdom, the SDR is converted into its sterling equivalent on the day of the judgment or award: Railways (Convention on International Carriage by Rail) Regulations 2005 (SI 2005/2092) reg.7.

- 512. CIM art.30(2).
- 513. CIM arts 34, 35.
- 514. CIM art.30(1).
- 515. CIM art.30(4). The charges do not include charges which would have been incurred in the event that the carriage was performed in accordance with the contract, would have contributed to the value of the goods at the destination, and which were not incurred as a result of the incident giving rise to the claim (Anon. (2004) 39 E.T.L. 93 Bundesgerichtshof). The claimant cannot recover any additional duty or VAT payable in respect of the goods which do not find themselves at their destination: Anon. Cass. Paris, January 28, 1975; cf. James Buchanan & Co Ltd v Babco Forwarding and Shipping (UK) Ltd [1978] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 119; contra Anon. (1994) 29 E.T.L. 360 Supreme Court of Denmark (CMR). See below, para.36-130 n.727.
- 516. CIM art.33(1), (2), (3).
- 517. CIM art.32(1), (2). Under the unmodified Convention, in the event of damage by deterioration, the carrier's liability is calculated under the provisions concerning damage not delay: Anon. (1976) 11 E.T.L. 787 Bundesgerichtshof. Under art.33(4), in the case of damage to goods, not resulting from the transit period being exceeded, the compensation payable under art.33(1) shall, where appropriate, be payable in addition to that provided for in art.32.
- 518. CIM art.36.
- 519. CIM art.43. If no supporting documents are provided within a reasonable time so that the amount of the claim can be finally settled, no interest shall accrue between the expiry of the time allotted and the actual submission of such documents: art.37(3).
- 520. CIM art.37(2).
- 521. CIM art.26.
- 522. CIM art.27(1), (2).
- 523. CIM art.45(1).
- 524. CIM art.45(2).
- 525. CIM art.43(1), (2). The claim generally has to be supported by the consignment note: see art.43(3)–(6). In NMBS Holding/Belgische Naamloze Vennootschap voor transport door middel van het gecombineerd rail-weg-systeem TRW (2007) 42 E.T.L. 656, the Hof van Cassatie van België held that a claim for damages could be brought against the railway carrier, in absence of a railway bill, provided that the contractual relationship between the claimant and carrier could be established.
- 526. CIM art.44(1)(a).
- 527.  CIM arts 44(1)(b), 44(2). Hammerschmeidová, “Right of the consignee to bring an action” Bulletin of International Carriage by Rail 3/2010, 83. Where there is an inconsistency with EU rules on jurisdiction, see Anon., Cour de Cassation de France, November 29, 2016, (2016) 51 E.T.L. 684.
- 528. CIM art.46(1).

- 529. CIM art.47(1).
- 530. CIM art.47(2)(a).
- 531. CIM art.47(2)(b). See Clarke, "Non-apparent damage to goods in transit" [1982] L.M.C.L.Q. 533.
- 532. CIM art.47(2)(c).
- 533. CIM art.47(2)(d).
- 534.  CIM art.48(1). The limitation provision applies to claims based on the contract of carriage, whether brought by or against the rail carrier: Anon. (2005) 40 E.T.L. 395 Oberster Gerichtshof-Österreich. Where CIM is contractually incorporated without limitation of the scope of its application, art.48 may not apply to all claims governed by the CIM: Anon., Oberster Gerichtshof Österreich, April 6, 2016, (2016) 51 E.T.L. 443.
- 535. CIM art.48(2).
- 536. CIM art.48(3).

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 36 - Carriage by Land
Section 3. - International Carriage
(c) - Passengers, Luggage and Vehicles by Rail
(i) - Application and Scope of the Convention

Scope of the Uniform Rules (CIV) under Appendix A to COTIF

36-100

The CIV Uniform Rules regulate the making and performance of the contract of carriage of passengers, luggage and vehicles by rail, the liability of the rail carrier for death of, and personal injury to, passengers, and for failure to keep to the timetable, the liability of the passenger and the relations between carriers.

Application of CIV

36-101

CIV provides a unified set of rules to be applied to every contract of carriage of passengers by rail for reward or free of charge, when the place of departure and the place of destination are situated in two different Member States, irrespective of the domicile or the place of business and the nationality of the parties to the contract. ⁵³⁷ CIV applies also to international carriage pursuant to a single contract which includes carriage by road or by internal inland waterway or, provided that the services are provided for in art.24(1) of COTIF, by sea or trans-frontier inland waterway. ⁵³⁸ CIV also applies, as far as the liability of the carrier in the case of death or personal injury is concerned, to persons accompanying a consignment whose carriage is effected in accordance with the CIM Uniform Rules. ⁵³⁹ As with CIM, CIV will not apply where the carriage is performed between stations situated on the territory of neighbouring states, when the infrastructure of the stations is managed by one or more infrastructure managers subject only to one of those states. ⁵⁴⁰ By Regulation (EC) 1371/2007 of the European Parliament, since December 3, 2009, the provisions of CIV are now also applicable to domestic carriage (i.e. carriage within one State). ⁵⁴¹ Any stipulation in the contract of carriage which, directly or indirectly, derogates from CIV shall be null and void, but such nullity shall not operate to nullify the other provisions of the contract. ⁵⁴²

Rail-sea carriage

36-102

As mentioned above, CIV applies to a single contract of international carriage by rail and sea provided that the carriage is performed on services listed pursuant to art.24(1) of COTIF. ⁵⁴³ It should be noted, however, that, whilst CIV may in certain circumstances cover aspects of rail-sea carriage, legislation in the United Kingdom has provided that as far as English law is concerned, the terms of the Athens Convention relating to the Carriage of Passengers and their Luggage by Sea 1974 are applied to any contract for international carriage by sea under which a place in the United Kingdom is the place of departure or destination. ⁵⁴⁴ The Athens Convention enables carriers by sea to limit their liability in respect of the death of, or personal injury to, a passenger. The terms of the Athens

Convention have also been applied to carriage by sea by United Kingdom carriers and within the United Kingdom. ⁵⁴⁵

The carrier's role

36-103

Under the contract of carriage, the carrier is obliged to carry the passenger and, where appropriate, the passenger's luggage and vehicle to the place of destination and to deliver the luggage and vehicle at the place of destination. ⁵⁴⁶ Subject to the terms of the contract, the carrier is entitled to advance payment of the carriage charge. ⁵⁴⁷

⁵³⁷. CIV art.1(1).

⁵³⁸. CIV art.1(2), (3).

⁵³⁹. CIM art.1(4).

⁵⁴⁰. CIV art.1(5).

⁵⁴¹. See above, para.36-054. See also the Rail Passengers' Rights and Obligations Regulations 2010 (SI 2010/1504), which entered into force on June 25, 2010; Rail Passengers' Rights and Obligations (Exemption) Regulations 2014 (SI 2014/2793). See also the Merchant Shipping (Convention Relating to the Carriage of Passengers and their Luggage by Sea) Order 2014 (SI 2014/1361).

⁵⁴². CIV art.5.

⁵⁴³. CIV art.1(3).

⁵⁴⁴. Merchant Shipping Act 1995 s.183. The Athens Convention came into force on April 30, 1987. See South West Strategic Health Authority v Bay Island Voyages [2015] EWCA Civ 708, the Court of Appeal held that the Convention did not apply to contribution claims between carriers (at [15]–[21]).

⁵⁴⁵. The Carriage of Passengers and their Luggage by Sea (United Kingdom Carriers) Order 1998 (SI 1998/2917); Carriage of Passengers and their Luggage by Sea (Domestic Carriage) Order 1987 (SI 1987/670), which now takes effect as if made under the Merchant Shipping Act 1995 s.184. Under s.184(5), the term "contract of carriage" in the context of the Athens Convention excludes a contract which is not for reward.

⁵⁴⁶. CIV art.6(1).

⁵⁴⁷. CIV arts 8(1), 19, 25.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 36 - Carriage by Land
Section 3. - International Carriage
(c) - Passengers, Luggage and Vehicles by Rail
(ii) - Passengers and Hand Luggage

The passenger's rights

36-104

The passenger in possession of a valid ticket is entitled to be carried in accordance with the terms of the contract of carriage. The passenger is also entitled to take with him articles which can be handled easily (hand luggage), but it is the passenger's responsibility to supervise such hand luggage. ⁵⁴⁸ If a passenger is unable to produce a valid ticket, the carrier may require the passenger to pay a surcharge. If the passenger fails to pay the carriage charge or the surcharge, the carrier may require the passenger to discontinue the journey. ⁵⁴⁹ The carrier may also exclude a passenger from carriage or require a passenger to discontinue his journey, without refunding the carriage charge, if that passenger presents a danger for the safety and the good functioning of the operations of the rail operations or for the safety of the other passengers or if that passenger inconveniences other passengers in an intolerable manner. ⁵⁵⁰

The ticket

36-105

! The contract of carriage must be confirmed by one or more tickets issued to the passenger. However, the absence, irregularity, or loss of the ticket shall not affect the existence or validity of the contract, which remains subject to the application of the CIV Uniform Rules. ⁵⁵¹ ! The ticket is prima facie evidence of the making and contents of the contract of carriage. ⁵⁵² The terms and conditions of the contract are those which are legally in force in each Member State. Such conditions will determine the form and content of tickets. ⁵⁵³ The ticket may be established in the form of electronic data registration, which can be transformed into legible written symbols. ⁵⁵⁴ However, the ticket must identify the carrier and must state that the carriage is subject to the CIV Uniform Rules. ⁵⁵⁵ It is incumbent on the passenger to ensure that on receipt of the ticket that it has been made out in accordance with his instructions. ⁵⁵⁶ If the ticket is not made out in the passenger's name, the ticket is transferable, provided that the journey has not yet begun. ⁵⁵⁷

Liability for death and personal injury

36-106

In general under CIV the carrier is liable for damage resulting from the death of, or personal injury or any other physical or mental harm to, a passenger, when the damage is caused by an accident arising out of the operation of the railway and happening while the passenger is in, entering or alighting from, railway vehicles. ⁵⁵⁸ In the event of death, the carrier is liable for damages comprising the necessary costs following the death (including transport and funeral expenses) and is liable to the passenger's dependents, whom the passenger was legally obliged to maintain, for the loss of support. ⁵⁵⁹ In the case of personal injury (whether or not it leads to death), or other physical or mental harm, the carrier is liable for damage comprising any necessary costs (including medical treatment and transport expenses) and compensation for financial loss due to incapacity to work or increased needs. ⁵⁶⁰

Fatal accidents

36-107

Regulation 5 of the Railways (Convention on International Carriage by Rail) Regulations 2005 ⁵⁶¹ provides that where under the Convention a person has a right of action in respect of the death of a passenger by virtue of his being a person whom the passenger was under a legally enforceable duty to maintain, no action in respect of the passenger's death may be brought for the benefit of that person under the Fatal Accidents Act 1976, although actions under that Act may be brought for the benefit of any other person. The Regulations further provide that in actions brought under CIV the same benefit shall be excluded in the assessment of damages as would be excluded under s.4 of the Fatal Accidents Act 1976. Where separate proceedings can be brought under CIV and under the Fatal Accidents Act 1976, a court may, in assessing damages under the 1976 Act, take account of any damages awarded in proceedings under the Convention.

Carrier's exemptions from liability for death and personal injury

36-108

The carrier is relieved of liability for death or personal injury (a) if the accident was caused by circumstances not connected with the operation of the railway and which the carrier, despite the exercise of the care required in the circumstances, could not avoid and the consequences of which he could not prevent ⁵⁶²; (b) to the extent that the accident was due to the passenger's fault ⁵⁶³; and (c) if the accident was caused by the behaviour of a third party which the carrier, despite the exercise of the care required in the circumstances, could not avoid and the consequences of which it could not prevent. ⁵⁶⁴ If the accident is due to the behaviour of a third party and if the carrier is in any event not entirely relieved of liability, he shall be liable in full up to the limits imposed by CIV. ⁵⁶⁵

Liability for delay

36-109

The carrier is liable to the passenger for loss or damage resulting from the fact that the journey cannot, or could not reasonably, be continued on the same day because of a cancellation, the late running of a train or a missed connection. The damages for which the carrier is liable comprises the reasonable costs of accommodation and the reasonable costs of notifying persons expecting the passenger. ⁵⁶⁶ The carrier will be exempt from such liability in similar circumstances exempting the carrier from liability for death and personal injury. ⁵⁶⁷

Liability for hand luggage

36-110

In the event that the passenger dies or sustains a personal injury, the carrier shall also be liable for loss or damage resulting from the total or partial loss of, or damage to, hand luggage. ⁵⁶⁸ In other cases, the carrier shall not be liable for hand luggage the supervision of which is the responsibility of the passenger, unless the loss or damage was caused by the fault of the carrier. ⁵⁶⁹

Upper financial limits of liability

36-111

The amount of damages to be awarded in cases of death or personal injury under CIV are to be determined in accordance with national law. The limit of damages per passenger is fixed, for the purposes of the CIV Uniform Rules, at 175,000 units of account, where national law provides for an upper limit of less than that amount. ⁵⁷⁰ There is no specified financial limit of liability for delay. Where the carrier is liable for damage to, or loss of, hand luggage, the limit of compensation is 1,400 units of account per passenger. ⁵⁷¹ The liability of the carrier is, however, not limited at all if the loss or damage results from an act or omission which the carrier has committed either with intent to cause such loss or damage or recklessly with the knowledge that such loss or damage probably will result. ⁵⁷²

^{548.} CIV arts 12(1), 15.

^{549.} CIV art.9(1).

^{550.} CIV art.9(2).

^{551.}  CIV art.6(2). This is subject to the carrier's right, as set out in art.9, to demand a surcharge in the event of the non-production of the ticket and to require the passenger to discontinue the journey if the carriage charge or surcharge is not paid. See Nationale Maatschappij der Belgische Spoorwegen NV v Demey (C-261/15), EU:C:2016:709 September 21, 2016 (preliminary ruling of ECJ as to passenger not in possession of a ticket).

^{552.} CIV art.6(3).

^{553.} CIV arts 3(c), 7(1).

^{554.} CIV art.7(5).

^{555.} CIV art.7(2).

^{556.} CIV art.7(3).

^{557.} CIV art.7(4).

^{558.} CIV art.26(1).

^{559.} CIV arts 27(1), 27(2). National law shall govern the rights of action of those whom the passenger was maintaining without a legal obligation so to do: art.27(2).

^{560.} CIV art.28. National law shall govern the right to claim damages other than those set out in arts 27 and 28: art.29.

^{561.} SI 2005/2092. See also the Rail Passengers' Rights and Obligations Regulations 2010 (SI 1504/2010) reg.7.

^{562.} CIV art.26(2)(a).

^{563.} CIV art.26(2)(b).

^{564.} CIV art.26(2)(c). As to the relationship between Regulation (EC) 1371/2007 and art.32 CIV, see Ö BB-Personenverkehr AG (C-509/11) (2014) 49 E.T.L. 43. See also Pavliha and Hojnik (2014) 49 E.T.L. 5. Another undertaking using the same railway infrastructure shall not be considered as a third party for the purposes of this provision.

- 565. CIV art.26(3).
- 566. CIV art.32(1). National law shall govern the passenger's right to claim other heads of damage: art.32(3).
- 567. CIV art.32(2). See above, para.36-108.
- 568. CIV art.33(1).
- 569. CIV art.33(2).
- 570. CIV art.30(2). As to "units of account", see para.36-095.
- 571. CIV art.34.
- 572. CIV art.48.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 36 - Carriage by Land
Section 3. - International Carriage
(c) - Passengers, Luggage and Vehicles by Rail
(iii) - Registered Luggage and Vehicles

Transport documents

36-112

A passenger may consign articles as registered luggage in accordance with the application of general conditions of carriage. ⁵⁷³ The carrier's obligations concerning the forwarding of registered luggage must be established by a luggage registration voucher issued to the passenger. The absence, irregularity or loss of the voucher shall not affect the existence or validity of the contract of carriage, which remains subject to the application of the CIV Uniform Rules. ⁵⁷⁴ The voucher is prima facie evidence of the registration of the luggage and the contents of the contract of carriage. ⁵⁷⁵ The form and content of the voucher are determined in accordance with the general conditions of carriage. ⁵⁷⁶ The voucher must identify the carrier and must state that the carriage is subject to the CIV Uniform Rules. ⁵⁷⁷ It is incumbent on the passenger to ensure that on receipt of the voucher that it has been made out in accordance with his instructions. ⁵⁷⁸ Similar provisions exist in respect of vehicles, for which a carriage voucher must establish the carrier's contractual obligations. ⁵⁷⁹

Loss, damage and delay

36-113

The carrier is liable for loss or damage resulting from the total or partial loss of, or damage to, registered luggage or the vehicle carried between the time of taking over by the carrier and the time of delivery as well as from delay in delivery. ⁵⁸⁰ The carrier will be relieved from this liability to the extent that the loss, damage or delay was caused by a fault of the passenger, an order given by the passenger other than as a result of the carrier's fault, an inherent defect or circumstances which the carrier could not avoid and the consequences of which he was unable to prevent. ⁵⁸¹ Further, the carrier will be relieved of liability to the extent that the loss or damage arises from the special risks inherent in (a) the absence or inadequacy of packing; (b) the special nature of the luggage or vehicle; and/or (c) the consignment as luggage of articles not acceptable for carriage. ⁵⁸² The person entitled to the luggage or vehicle may consider the luggage or vehicle lost, without adducing further proof, if has not been delivered within 14 days after a valid request for delivery has been made. ⁵⁸³

Upper financial limits of liability

36-114

The amount of the carrier's liability for loss of registered luggage, whether total or partial, depends on whether or not the passenger establishes the amount of loss or damage suffered. If the amount of loss is proved, the loss is limited to 80 units of account per kilogramme of gross mass short or 1200 units of account per item of luggage; if not, the carrier must pay liquidated damages of 20 units of account per kilogramme of gross mass short or 300 units of account per item of luggage. ⁵⁸⁴ The carrier must also refund the carriage charges. ⁵⁸⁵ Liability for damage is for the amount by which the luggage has been diminished in value, but may not exceed the amount payable in respect of loss. ⁵⁸⁶ As regards delay, if the passenger proves that he suffered loss or damage, the maximum amount payable as compensation is 0.80 units of account per kilogramme of gross mass of the luggage or 14 units of account per item of luggage delivered late; but if loss or damage is not proved, the measure of damages is liquidated at 0.14 units of account per kilogramme of gross mass of the luggage or 2.80 units of account per item of luggage delivered late. ⁵⁸⁷ The maximum limits of compensation for loss, damage or delay are removed altogether if it was due to the act or omission of the carrier which was done with the intent to cause loss or damage or recklessly with the knowledge that such loss or damage probably will result. ⁵⁸⁸ As regards vehicles, compensation for loss of or damage to the vehicle shall be calculated on the basis of the usual value of the vehicle subject to a limit of 8,000 units of account ⁵⁸⁹; compensation for proven loss or damage resulting from delay is limited to the amount of the carriage charge. ⁵⁹⁰

⁵⁷³. CIV art.12(2).

⁵⁷⁴. CIV art.16(1), (2). As to the responsibility of successive and substitute carriers, see arts 38, 39.

⁵⁷⁵. CIV art.16(3).

⁵⁷⁶. CIV art.17(1).

⁵⁷⁷. CIV art.17(2).

⁵⁷⁸. CIV art.17(3).

⁵⁷⁹. CIV arts 24, 25.

⁵⁸⁰. CIV arts 36(1), 47. It is rebuttably presumed that when the carrier took over the registered luggage that it was apparently in good condition and that the number and mass of the items of luggage corresponded to the entries on the voucher: art.16(4). Delivery of the luggage or vehicle must be effected on surrender of the voucher: art.22(1). See Anon. (2013) 49 E.T.L. 470 (BGH).

⁵⁸¹. CIV arts 36(2), 47. The carrier bears the relevant burden of proof: art.37(1).

⁵⁸². CIV arts 36(3), 47. The carrier bears the initial burden of proof, which thereafter falls upon the claimant: art.37(2). See Anon. (2013) 49 E.T.L. 470 (BGH).

⁵⁸³. CIV art.40(1).

⁵⁸⁴. CIV art.41(1).

⁵⁸⁵. CIV art.41(2).

⁵⁸⁶. CIV art.42.

⁵⁸⁷. CIV art.43(1).

⁵⁸⁸. CIV art.48.

⁵⁸⁹. CIV art.45.

⁵⁹⁰. CIV art.44.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 36 - Carriage by Land
Section 3. - International Carriage
(c) - Passengers, Luggage and Vehicles by Rail
(iv) - Claims

Claims against carriers

36-115

A claim relating to liability for death or personal injury must be addressed in writing to the carrier against whom an action may be brought. Where successive carriers performed the carriage under a single contract, the claim may also be made against the first or the last carrier as well as the carrier who has his principal place of business or whose agency concluded the contract in the state where the passenger is domiciled or resident. ⁵⁹¹ An action in respect of death or personal injury may be brought only against the carrier (including substitute carriers) who was bound pursuant to the contract of carriage to provide the service of carriage in the course of which the accident happened. ⁵⁹² Other claims based on the contract of carriage may be brought only against the first carrier, the last carrier or the carrier who performed that part of the carriage on which the event giving rise to the claim occurred. ⁵⁹³ A successive carrier may be sued if that carrier has been named, with his consent, in the voucher as the carrier who must deliver the luggage or vehicle, even if that carrier has not received them or the voucher. ⁵⁹⁴ Actions based on CIV may be brought before the courts or tribunals as agreed between the parties or in those Member States in which the defendant is domiciled or resident or has his principal place of business or agency which concluded the contract. ⁵⁹⁵

Extinction of claims

36-116

A claimant loses his right of action based on the carrier's liability for death or personal injury if he does not give notice of the accident to one of the carriers to which a claim may be presented within 12 months of his becoming aware of the loss or damage. ⁵⁹⁶ Nonetheless, the right of action is not lost if (a) notice has been given to one of the carriers against a claim brought within the relevant period; (b) the carrier who is liable has learned of the accident within the relevant period in some other way; (c) notice of the accident has not been given, or has been given late, as a result of circumstances for which the claimant is not responsible; or (d) the claimant proves that the accident was caused by fault of the carrier. ⁵⁹⁷ As regards other claims, acceptance of the luggage by the person entitled extinguishes all rights of action against the carrier arising from the contract of carriage in case of partial loss, damage or delay, ⁵⁹⁸ subject to four exceptions. First, claims for partial loss or damage can be made if the damage was ascertained in accordance with CIV. ⁵⁹⁹ Secondly, claims for loss or damage which is not apparent and not discovered until after acceptance can still be made, provided the person entitled to claim asks the carrier for ascertainment within three days of acceptance and proves that the loss or damage occurred between the time of taking over and the time of delivery. ⁶⁰⁰ Thirdly, claims for delay in delivery can be made within 21 days of acceptance. ⁶⁰¹ Fourthly, the claim is not extinguished if the person entitled proves that the loss or damage was caused by fault on the part of the carrier. ⁶⁰²

Limitation of actions

36-117

Actions for damages brought under CIV based on the carrier's liability for death or personal injury are time-barred in the case of a passenger who has sustained an accident, three years from the day after the accident. In the case of other claimants, actions are barred three years from the day after the death of the passenger or five years from the day after the accident, whichever is the earlier. ⁶⁰³ As regards all other claims, the period of limitation shall be one year (or two years in the case of wilful misconduct) (a) in the case of compensation for loss, from the 14th day after the person entitled calls for delivery; (b) in the case of compensation for partial loss, damage or delay in delivery, from the day when delivery took place; and (c) in all other cases involving the carriage of passengers, from the day of expiry of the validity of the ticket. ⁶⁰⁴ When a claim is made in writing to the carrier, the limitation period is suspended until the carrier against whom the claim has been made rejects it in writing. ⁶⁰⁵

^{591.} CIV art.55(1).

^{592.} CIV arts 26(5), 56(1).

^{593.} CIV arts 55(2), 56(2).

^{594.} CIV art.56(3).

^{595.} CIV art.57(1).

^{596.} CIV art.58(1).

^{597.} CIV art.58(2).

^{598.} CIV art.59(1). It is assumed that this provision applies alike to vehicles.

^{599.} CIV arts 54, 59(2)(a).

^{600.} CIV art.59(2)(b).

^{601.} CIV art.59(2)(c).

^{602.} CIV art.59(2)(d). cf. CIM art.47(2)(d).

^{603.} CIV art.60(1).

^{604.} CIV art.60(2), (3).

^{605.} CIV art.60(4).

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 36 - Carriage by Land

Section 3. - International Carriage

(d) - Goods by Road

Application to the United Kingdom of the CMR Convention

36-118

The Carriage of Goods by Road Act 1965 by s.1, enacts as part of the law of the United Kingdom the Geneva Convention on the Contract for the International Carriage of Goods by Road of 1956, ⁶⁰⁶ familiarly known as CMR, the substantive provisions of CMR being set out in the Schedule to the Act. ⁶⁰⁷ The Act came into force on June 5, 1967, ⁶⁰⁸ and has been extended to Gibraltar, the Isle of Man and Guernsey by Order in Council. ⁶⁰⁹ The 1965 Act was amended in certain respects by the Carriage by Air and Road Act 1979 ⁶¹⁰ in order to give effect as part of English law to a Protocol ⁶¹¹ adopted at Geneva in 1978-1979 which had amended the Convention. ⁶¹² Those parts of the 1979 Act which amended the 1965 Act came into force on December 28, 1980, ⁶¹³ when the Protocol itself entered into force. Those parts of the 1979 Act have been extended to Gibraltar, the Isle of Man and Guernsey. ⁶¹⁴ The 1965 Act, by s.2, gives power to Her Majesty by Order in Council conclusively to certify which states are parties to CMR: this power has been exercised. ⁶¹⁵

The scope of CMR

36-119

CMR applies to every contract for the carriage ⁶¹⁶ of goods ⁶¹⁷ by road in vehicles ⁶¹⁸ for reward, when the place of taking over of the goods and the place designated for delivery are situated in two different countries, at least one of which is a party to the Convention. ⁶¹⁹ CMR applies to any part of the agreed international carriage even where the goods are carried on a vehicle which does not leave its national territory. ⁶²⁰ The place of residence and the nationality of the parties are irrelevant, ⁶²¹ as are their respective registered places of business. ⁶²² The parties may have the same nationality. ⁶²³ Even if CMR does not apply to the carriage contemplated by the contract, it is still open to the parties to agree to the application of CMR, ⁶²⁴ presumably in whole or in part. In that event, the fact that the carriage falls outside the scope of application of CMR set out in art.1 is of no consequence. The Convention does not apply to carriage performed under the terms of any international postal convention, to funeral consignments or to furniture removal, nor does it apply to traffic between the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland. ⁶²⁵ CMR does not cover every possible legal right or obligation arising under a contract of carriage otherwise governed by the Convention; extraneous matters, such as liens, are governed by national law. ⁶²⁶

Combined transport

36-120

CMR applies where the vehicle is carried over part of the journey by sea, rail, inland waterways or air and the goods are not unloaded from the vehicle. ⁶²⁷ If, however, any loss, damage or delay in delivery occurs during the carriage by the other means of transport, and was not caused by an act or omission of the carrier by road, but by some event which could only have occurred in the course and by reason of that other means of transport, then, by art.2(1) of CMR, the road carrier's liability is not determined by the Convention, but by conditions prescribed by law for the carriage of goods by that means of transport. ⁶²⁸ In the absence of such conditions, the liability of the carrier by road is determined by CMR. ⁶²⁹ As CMR is intended to fit in with other Conventions governing carriage by other means of transport, reference may be had to those Conventions in cases covered by art.2(1) to establish the time at which carriage by road began or ended and carriage by the other means of transport was effective. ⁶³⁰

Interpretation of the Convention

36-121

CMR was somewhat loosely drafted. Consequently many provisions require judicial interpretation. The House of Lords has stated that the English text of the Convention, which is of equal authenticity to the French text, should be interpreted in a normal manner, unconstrained by technical rules of English law, or by English legal precedent, but adopting broad principles of general acceptance. ⁶³¹ Assistance from the French text may be sought whether or not the English text is ambiguous. ⁶³² Where the language used is capable of two interpretations, the court must seek to give effect to the intention of those who made the Convention. ⁶³³ There is comparatively little English authority on CMR. ⁶³⁴ Although there have been many reported decisions on the Convention in the courts of the Continental parties to CMR, ⁶³⁵ only limited guidance can be obtained from these as there has been no consistency of approach to matters of interpretation; on some provisions there are as many interpretations of CMR as there are contracting states. ⁶³⁶ Whilst the Court of Appeal has emphasised that English courts must nonetheless endeavour to interpret CMR as far as possible in the same way as in the courts of the Continental parties, ⁶³⁷ the House of Lords has warned of the dangers inherent in trying to assess a balance of foreign judicial opinion, especially where the decisions are not those of the highest courts. ⁶³⁸

Consignment note

36-122

Whilst the contract of carriage does not have to be written, the contract must be confirmed by the making out of a consignment note ⁶³⁹ of which there must be three copies signed by the sender and the carrier, one copy being handed to the sender, one accompanying the goods, and one retained by the carrier. ⁶⁴⁰ The consignment note must contain a number of statements and particulars, including the names and addresses of the sender, the carrier and the consignee, the place and date of taking over the goods and the place of delivery, the description of the goods, the gross weight and the number of packages, and a statement that the carriage is subject to the provisions of the Convention. ⁶⁴¹ The consignment note should also include a generally recognised description of the goods, if they are dangerous. ⁶⁴² Other particulars which are pertinent to the contemplated carriage should be entered in the consignment note, such as carriage charges, ⁶⁴³ sender's charges, "cash on delivery" charges, insurance requirements, declarations of value, ⁶⁴⁴ and any other particulars which the parties deem useful. ⁶⁴⁵ The sender will be responsible for any losses, damages and expenses resulting from any deficiency or inadequacy in the particulars furnished in the consignment note. ⁶⁴⁶ On taking over the goods, the carrier is required to check the accuracy of such statements in the consignment note as to the number of packages, their marks and numbers and the apparent condition of the goods and packaging. ⁶⁴⁷ Where the carrier has no reasonable means of checking, he must enter his reservations, and the grounds for them, in the consignment note. He must also specify the grounds for any reservations with regard to the apparent condition of the goods and their packaging. These reservations do not bind the sender unless he has expressly agreed to be bound by them in the consignment note. ⁶⁴⁸ A carrier who does not make any reservations at the time at which the goods are handed over for carriage is presumed to have received them in good condition and has to prove that the damage established at the destination existed prior to the time at which he took them over. ⁶⁴⁹ When a carrier makes reservations concerning the apparent condition of the goods, they must be written on the consignment note when the goods are received. Reservations written on the sender's copy of the consignment note are inoperative so long as the consignment note remains in the carrier's possession. ⁶⁵⁰ The sender may require the carrier to check the gross weight of the goods, their quality and the contents of the packages. The carrier may claim the cost of checking. The results of the checks must be entered in the consignment note. ⁶⁵¹

The consignment note as evidence of the contract

36-123

The consignment note is prima facie evidence ⁶⁵² of the making of the contract of carriage, ⁶⁵³ the conditions of the contract and the receipt of the goods by the carrier ⁶⁵⁴, and of the identity of the parties to the contract ⁶⁵⁵; but the absence, irregularity or loss of the consignment note does not affect the existence or validity of the contract of carriage which remains subject to the provisions of the Convention. ⁶⁵⁶ However, if the consignment note does not contain the required statement that the carriage is subject to the provisions of the Convention, the carrier is liable for all expenses, loss and damage sustained through such omission by the person entitled to dispose of the goods, ⁶⁵⁷ i.e. he cannot rely on the limitations on his liability mentioned below. ⁶⁵⁸ This is a less drastic penalty than the similar one provided in the Warsaw Convention on Contracts of Carriage by Air, ⁶⁵⁹ because it does not apply automatically, but only if the claimant is prejudiced by the omission.

Sender's right of disposal

36-124

The sender has the right to "dispose" of the goods, in particular by asking the carrier to stop them in transit, to change the place of delivery or to substitute another consignee. ⁶⁶⁰ Article 12(5) of the Convention requires the right of disposal to be exercised by compliance with three conditions: first, the first (the sender's) copy of the consignment note must have the instructions given pursuant to the right of disposal entered upon its face and must be given to the carrier ⁶⁶¹; secondly, the instructions must be possible to carry out and must not interfere with the carrier's undertaking or prejudice the senders and consignees of the other consignments carried by the carrier ⁶⁶²; thirdly, the instructions must not result in a division of the consignment. ⁶⁶³ As in the Uniform Rules (CIM) under Appendix B to COTIF, ⁶⁶⁴ this right of stoppage in transit is much more extensive than in English law, because it does not depend on the consignee being an insolvent buyer or on the sender being an unpaid seller; but, as under CIM, it presumably applies only as between the sender and the carrier, and not as between the sender and the consignee. The sender's right of disposal ends when that of the consignee begins. This happens when the second copy of the consignment note is handed to the consignee ⁶⁶⁵ or when the goods arrive at the place designated for delivery and the consignee requires the carrier to deliver the goods and the second copy of the consignment notes ⁶⁶⁶ or, when the goods having failed to arrive at the contractual destination, the consignee seeks to enforce his rights under the contract of carriage. ⁶⁶⁷ When instructions are given to the carrier in accordance with the Convention, the carrier is obliged to obey them. ⁶⁶⁸ A failure to comply with valid instructions will render the carrier liable for all resulting loss or damage. ⁶⁶⁹ When the right of disposal is exercised, it is exercised without regard to the requirements of contracts other than the contract of carriage. ⁶⁷⁰ This right may be exercised in breach of the contract of sale, ⁶⁷¹ although the right of disposal may be instrumental in passing property in the goods being carried. ⁶⁷²

Delivery

36-125

The consignment note must specify the destination of the goods and the name and address of the consignee. ⁶⁷³ With this information, it should be possible for the carrier to deliver the goods in accordance with the contract of carriage. ⁶⁷⁴ The consignee has the right to call for delivery of the goods. Under art.13(1), the consignee is entitled to take delivery of the goods and the second copy of the consignment note upon production by the consignee of a receipt. ⁶⁷⁵ Nothing more is required from the consignee. ⁶⁷⁶ There is therefore little safeguard for the carrier if faced with a demand for delivery by a plausible, but fraudulent, consignee. ⁶⁷⁷ The carrier must not knowingly or recklessly deliver the goods to the wrong person. ⁶⁷⁸ Further, if the carrier's suspicions about the credentials of the "consignee" are aroused, the carrier must explore whether these suspicions are justified. ⁶⁷⁹ The carrier must exercise a high degree of care that the person to whom he proposes to deliver the goods is the named consignee. ⁶⁸⁰ If the carriage or the delivery of the goods is rendered impossible, the carrier must seek instructions from the person entitled to dispose of the goods. ⁶⁸¹ If the goods are still in transit, the carrier may perform the contract by taking such steps which seem to the carrier to be in the best interests of the person entitled to dispose of the goods. ⁶⁸² If the carriage or delivery remains impossible, the carrier may avail himself of the rights of unloading, storage and sale referred to in art.16. ⁶⁸³

Loss, damage and delay

36-126

⚠ The carrier is liable for loss (total or partial), damage and delay in delivery in substantially the same circumstances as he is under CIM. ⁶⁸⁴ ⚠ The general assertion of a carrier's liability in art.17(1) of CMR thus broadly corresponds to the position of a carrier in English law, quite apart from the Convention. Nonetheless art.17(1) does not exclude the carrier's liability for non-performance or for loss of or damage or delay to something other than the consigned goods, provided, of course, that this has not resulted from loss of or damage or delay to the consigned goods, in which case CMR does limit or exclude liability. ⁶⁸⁵ The loss or damage must occur between the time at which the carrier takes over the goods and the time of delivery. ⁶⁸⁶ The goods appear to be taken over by the carrier for the purposes of this provision when they pass from the control of the sender to that of the carrier, irrespective of when the carriage begins. "Delivery" similarly is marked by the goods leaving the carrier's control and passing into the control of the consignee. ⁶⁸⁷ The passing of control is a question of fact in the individual case. The terms "loss" and "damage" are used in an ordinary sense. Consequently even very serious damage to goods falls to be assessed for compensation purposes as damage under art.25 of the Convention rather than being regarded as "constructive total loss" embraced by art.23. ⁶⁸⁸ Delay occurs when the goods have not been delivered within the agreed time limit ⁶⁸⁹ or, if none has been agreed, within a reasonable time. ⁶⁹⁰ If goods have not been delivered within 30 days of the agreed time limit or, if none, within 60 days of the carrier taking over the goods, this is conclusive evidence of loss. ⁶⁹¹ The effect of these provisions is to make the limitation period in art.32(1)(b) ⁶⁹² (which applies in cases of total loss) apply in cases where goods are damaged but not delivered. ⁶⁹³

The carrier's exemptions from liability: art.17(2)

36-127

The carrier's exemptions from liability are almost identical to those listed in CIM. ⁶⁹⁴ The burden of proof is also substantially the same. ⁶⁹⁵ Thus the carrier is exempted under art.17(2) from liability for loss, damage or delay in the event of (1) a wrongful act or neglect of the claimant ⁶⁹⁶; (2) instructions of the claimant given otherwise than as the result of a wrongful act or neglect of the carrier ⁶⁹⁷; (3) inherent vice of the goods ⁶⁹⁸; and (4) circumstances which the carrier could not avoid and the consequences of which he was unable to prevent. ⁶⁹⁹ The burden of proving any of these exceptions is on the carrier. ⁷⁰⁰ When the court has to decide whether or not a carrier could avoid circumstances and prevent consequences within the meaning of art.17(2), the carrier who raises art.17(2) as a defence must show that he could not have avoided the loss, if he is to escape the primary liability imposed on him by art.17(1). The carrier cannot escape liability by showing that he has complied with common practice if he could, by taking precautions, have prevented the loss. Whether or not he has shown due diligence or behaved reasonably by reference to the standards applied in the tort of negligence is not relevant. ⁷⁰¹ Article 17(2) requires a carrier to attain a standard somewhere between taking every conceivable precaution, however extreme, and on the other hand doing no more than act reasonably in accordance with prudent carrier's practice. The words "could not avoid" are to be construed as having the rider "with the utmost care". ⁷⁰² It is for the claimant to suggest (but not prove) what the carrier ought to have done and for the carrier then to rebut specific complaints thus put forward. ⁷⁰³ The exemptions under art.17(2) are not available to the carrier if the loss or damage arises by reason of the defective condition of his vehicle or the wrongful act or neglect of the person from whom he hired the vehicle. ⁷⁰⁴ Where the relevant loss or damage is caused in part by the carrier's conduct for which he is liable and in part by one or more of the exempted causes, the carrier shall be liable only for that part of the loss or damage for which he is responsible, pursuant to art.17(5).⁷⁰⁵

The carrier's exemptions from liability: art.17(4)

36-128

⚠ The second type of excepted risks, embraced by art.17(4), covers loss or damage arising from the special risks inherent in one or more of the following circumstances: (a) carriage in open, unsheeted vehicles when their use has been expressly agreed and specified in the consignment note; (b) absence or inadequacy of packing of goods liable to wastage or damage if not properly packed⁷⁰⁶ ⚠; (c) handling, loading, stowage or unloading of the goods by the sender, the consignee, or persons acting on their behalf⁷⁰⁷ ⚠; (d) the nature of certain kinds of goods which particularly exposes them to total or partial loss or to damage, especially through breakage, rust, decay,⁷⁰⁸ desiccation, leakage, normal wastage, or the action of moth or vermin; (e) insufficient or inadequate marks or numbers on packages; and (f) the carriage of livestock.⁷⁰⁹ If the carrier establishes that the loss or damage could be attributed to one or more of these excepted risks, this is rebuttably presumed, provided that in (a) above there has not been an abnormal shortage or a loss of any package.⁷¹⁰ If a claimant rebuts, within the meaning of the second sentence of art.18(2), the presumption under the first sentence of that paragraph that loss or damage could be attributed to an excepted risk, the carrier is then liable for loss or damage under art.17(1). To disprove the presumption the standard of proof is that of the balance of probabilities.⁷¹¹ The carrier under CMR art.18(4) is not entitled to the exemption granted by art.17(4)(d) above where he performs the carriage in a specially equipped vehicle, unless he proves that all steps incumbent on him in the circumstances with regard to the choice, maintenance and use of the equipment were taken.⁷¹² Under art.18(5) the carrier, when carrying livestock, must show that he took all steps normally incumbent on him in the circumstances, despite the exemption in art.17(4)(f). There should be a reduction in the carrier's liability to the extent that the loss or damage was contributed to matters falling within one or more of the exemptions.⁷¹³

Sender's liability

36-129

The Convention identifies specified instances of liability which may attach to the sender under the contract of carriage. For example, the sender will be liable for loss, damage and expense caused by any inaccuracies in or inadequacies of the consignment note,⁷¹⁴ defective packing of the goods entrusted to the carrier,⁷¹⁵ the absence, irregularity or inadequacy of documents or information required to be given to the carrier for the purposes of customs or other formalities⁷¹⁶ and arising out of the carriage of dangerous goods, at least where the sender has failed to inform the carrier, and the carrier is not aware, of the dangerous nature of the goods.⁷¹⁷ Any other liability of the sender falls to be determined in accordance with the contract of carriage and national law.⁷¹⁸ The sender is also liable for freight (unless the contract provides otherwise). Such liability is not, however, one which can form the subject matter of a set-off against any liability owed by the carrier to the sender.⁷¹⁹ Unlike the liability of a carrier under the CMR regime,⁷²⁰ compensation for the sender's liability is not subject to limitation.⁷²¹

Upper financial limits of liability and measure of damages

36-130

⚠ Where a carrier is held liable for loss of the goods, the value of the goods is calculated for compensation purposes as being their value at the place and time at which they were accepted for carriage.⁷²² The value is fixed according to the commodity exchange price, or, failing that, the current market price, or, failing both, the normal value of goods of the same kind and quality.⁷²³ The carrier's liability for loss of the goods is limited to 8.33 units of account per kilogramme of gross weight short,

⁷²⁴  unless the sender declared in the consignment note a higher value ⁷²⁵ or a special interest in delivery ⁷²⁶ against an agreed surcharge. The carrier must also refund the carriage charges, customs duties and other charges incurred in respect of the carriage. ⁷²⁷ The expression “the carriage” in this context is restricted to the carriage covered by the contract and does not embrace, for example, the return carriage charges and storage costs of goods damaged during the period of carriage covered by the contract. ⁷²⁸ The carriage charges, customs duties and other charges are refunded in full in the case of damage amounting to total destruction but only in proportion to the damage sustained in the event of damage not amounting to total destruction. ⁷²⁹ The carrier's liability for delay is limited to the carriage charges. ⁷³⁰ His liability for damage is the amount by which the goods have diminished in value, but may not exceed the amount payable in respect of loss. ⁷³¹ The carrier is also liable to the sender for compensation for an amount representing the “cash on delivery” charge, ⁷³² in the event that the carrier fails to collect that charge. ⁷³³ The court has power at any stage of the proceedings to make such order as appears to be just and equitable if the carrier's liability is limited, and may have regard to other proceedings which have been, or are likely to be, commenced in the United Kingdom or elsewhere. ⁷³⁴

Wilful misconduct: an exception to limitation

36-131

 Pursuant to art.29, the carrier may not avail himself of the provisions excluding or limiting ⁷³⁵ his liability or shifting the burden of proof if the damage was caused by his wilful misconduct, or any default regarded by English law as equivalent to wilful misconduct. The burden of proof of wilful misconduct, of course, lies on the claimant. ⁷³⁶ Wilful misconduct appears to mean that the carrier or his agents or servants, ⁷³⁷ including the driver, has deliberately caused the loss or damage or was aware of the risk of loss or damage and ignoring that risk took no steps to avert it. For example, a driver who was well aware of the EEC Regulations governing the length of time for which it was permissible for a driver continuously to drive a vehicle, without rest, and who deliberately chose to ignore them, knowing that he was thus exposing himself, his load and other road users to a greater risk than if he complied with the Regulations, was held to be guilty of wilful misconduct within art.29(1). ⁷³⁸ On the other hand, it has been held by the Court of Appeal that there was no wilful misconduct merely because the driver was aware that he was sleepy and decided to continue to drive; if, however, the driver deliberately flouted the regulatory limits set for time and rest periods or was aware that he could not overcome his sleepiness (e.g. because his vehicle hit the side of the road), there would be wilful misconduct. ⁷³⁹ Where a carrier insisted that an employee should park a trailer carrying goods unattended in a public car park when he knew that there was a high risk of loss, he was held to have been guilty of wilful misconduct. ⁷⁴⁰

Scope of limitation provisions

36-132

The CMR provisions relating to the limitation of compensation apply only in the event the carrier is liable for loss of, damage to or delay in the arrival of the goods placed in the carrier's charge. ⁷⁴¹ The CMR provisions are relevant whether the carrier's liability arises under the contract or outside of the contract, ⁷⁴² for example in tort or restitution. In respect of any other liability of the carrier ⁷⁴³ or any liability of any other party to the contract of carriage or at all, the CMR regime concerning compensation is inapplicable.

Interest

36-133

A claimant is entitled to claim interest on the compensation payable. Article 27(1) ⁷⁴⁴ sets the interest recoverable at 5 per cent per annum and provides that interest shall accrue from the date on which a claim in writing was sent to the carrier, or in the absence of such a claim, from the date of the institution of legal proceedings. The provision appears expressly to disallow interest accruing before the written claim is made or legal proceedings are commenced.⁷⁴⁵ Such a claim does not have to be quantified; a general intimation of intention to hold the carrier liable is sufficient.⁷⁴⁶ The date on which legal proceedings are commenced, so far as English legal procedure is concerned, is the date on which the claim form is issued.⁷⁴⁷

The parties to the contract

36-134

The Carriage of Goods by Road Act 1965 makes not only the sender of the goods and the carrier parties to the contract, but also includes as parties the consignee and any successive carrier and that carrier's employees and agents.⁷⁴⁸ This provision enables sub-contractors to obtain the benefit of exemption clauses in the principal contract of carriage. CMR in any event makes the carrier responsible for the acts and omissions of his employees and agents and of any other persons of whose services he makes use for the performance of the carriage when they are acting within the scope of their employment.⁷⁴⁹ Such persons are entitled to avail themselves of the provisions of the Convention which exclude or limit the liability of the carrier.⁷⁵⁰ The Convention does not itself list exhaustively the parties to the contract. Whilst it does identify as parties the sender, the consignee and the carrier, it defines none of them.⁷⁵¹ Although the term "carrier" is not defined, the whole scheme of CMR supports the conclusion that "carrier" means someone who contracts to carry, irrespective of whether or not he in fact performs any part of the carriage in question. A person who has contracted to carry can perform the whole carriage by means of a sub-contractor whilst himself remaining liable under the Convention as a "carrier".⁷⁵² A freight forwarder is prima facie not a carrier under the Convention,⁷⁵³ although he might be so regarded if he was himself to contract for the international carriage of goods by road, no matter what arrangements he made for sub-contracting. If the freight forwarder on the facts was the "sender" of the goods, as opposed to being merely the agent of the shipper or carrier, he might well be held to be subject to CMR under this head. All turns on what the freight forwarder contracted to perform on the facts of the particular case.⁷⁵⁴

Title to sue

36-135

The Convention is also silent as to those who can invoke the carrier's liability. It seems clear that the person who concludes the contract of carriage with the carrier has a right of action, even if he has not himself suffered material damage. The sender will also have a right of action if he has suffered damage. Actions will normally be brought by the person entitled to dispose of the goods or those claiming under him.⁷⁵⁵ The consignee is given an express right of action against the carrier in the event of loss of the goods and (it seems) delay.⁷⁵⁶

Successive carriers

36-136

❗ If carriage governed by a single contract under CMR is performed by successive road carriers, each of them is responsible for the performance of the whole operation, the second and each succeeding carrier becoming a party to the contract of carriage by his acceptance of the goods and the consignment note.⁷⁵⁷ There is, then, joint and several responsibility.⁷⁵⁸ A carrier can be a successive carrier under CMR even where he only carries out a national sector of the carriage.⁷⁵⁹ The person with whom the sender, the consignee or another person interested in the goods makes a contract of carriage is the first or contracting carrier for the purpose of art.34 (and presumably, art.36) of CMR, whether or not he himself takes possession of the goods.⁷⁶⁰ ❗ All subsequent carriers are likewise successive carriers within the meaning of the Convention, whether or not they in turn take possession of the goods.⁷⁶¹ Main contractors and sub-contractors may be successive carriers under CMR: the creation of this relationship will, however, depend on whether or not the sub-contractor becomes a party to the contract of carriage by accepting the goods and the consignment note.⁷⁶² The Convention appears, then, to create an artificial statutory contract between the person interested in the goods and each successive or actual carrier.⁷⁶³ The effect of art.34 is, therefore, to apply to each successive carrier the rights and obligations of “the carrier”, as the term is used in arts 1 to 33 of CMR, save where the context makes it clear that only the first or contracting carrier is being referred to.

Acceptance of consignment note

36-137

The term “acceptance of the ... consignment note” in art.34 should be given a natural and ordinary meaning.⁷⁶⁴ Thus the consignment note, like the goods, is accepted when it is taken over by the carrier concerned with a view to carrying out the next part of the carriage pursuant to the terms of the consignment note. There can be an acceptance of the goods within the meaning of art.34 without a receipt being first given under art.35(1) by the accepting carrier, acceptance and the giving of a receipt being two distinct matters. Failure of the carrier to enter his name and address on the consignment note does not prevent acceptance of the consignment note under art.34.⁷⁶⁵ It seems that a person cannot be a successive carrier under art.34 unless a consignment note is available for him to accept with the goods, and he accepts it.⁷⁶⁶ Otherwise a carrier performing only a national sector of the carriage might assume that his obligations as a carrier were regulated only by municipal law or by his own trading conditions.⁷⁶⁷ A successive carrier, however, can delegate to an agent or sub-contractor the task of accepting the consignment note for the purpose of art.34.⁷⁶⁸

Which carrier may be sued by those interested in the goods

36-138

CMR envisages primary legal proceedings, seeking compensation under art.23(1) for breach of the contract of carriage, as being brought against a carrier by the sender or consignee of goods or by some person otherwise interested in the goods. Where there are successive carriers, such proceedings may be brought against the first or contracting carrier, the last carrier or the carrier who was performing that portion of the carriage during which the event causing the loss, damage or delay occurred, or any two or more of them.⁷⁶⁹ A carrier can be a “last carrier” under art.36 even where he has not complied with art.35(1) in failing to enter his name and address on the consignment note accompanying the goods from a previous carrier.⁷⁷⁰ A carrier may, furthermore, be a “last carrier” under this article even where he has issued a document covering the last stage of the carriage within the territory of a single contracting state.⁷⁷¹

Proceedings against the carriers

36-139

The effect of arts 31(1) and 34 is to enable a claimant to bring a single action against any or all of the carriers concerned. Such an action may only be instituted either (a) in a court of a contracting state agreed between the parties; or (b) in the court of a country where the defendant⁷⁷² is ordinarily resident, or has his principal place of business or the branch or agency through which the contract of carriage was made; or (c) in the courts of the place where the goods were taken over for carriage or the place where they were to be delivered.⁷⁷³ Whilst art.36 limits the number of carriers against whom such primary proceedings may be instituted, art.34 seems to make a successive carrier potentially liable in such proceedings for damage sustained during a portion of the carriage which he had not contracted to perform. It appears that the burden laid on a carrier by art.18(1) of proving that loss, damage or delay had occurred in such a way as to relieve him of liability under art.17(2) must be directly discharged by each successive carrier.⁷⁷⁴

Carrier's rights of recovery from other carriers

36-140

A carrier who has paid compensation under art.23(1) of CMR may recover such compensation by way of contribution or indemnity, together with interest and costs, from other carriers under art.37. ⁷⁷⁵ This CMR contribution régime replaces that applicable under the Civil Liability (Contribution) Act 1978. ⁷⁷⁶ Provided that a carrier from whom contribution is claimed under art.37 has received due notice of the primary proceedings under CMR and has had an opportunity of entering an appearance therein, he cannot dispute the “validity of the payment made” to a claimant by the carrier seeking contribution from him if the amount of the compensation was determined by judicial authority. ⁷⁷⁷ The determination referred to in this context appears to be the determination of quantum. “Due notice” can, it seems, be given merely by letter. ⁷⁷⁸ Under the procedure of the English courts, a carrier receiving due notice of primary proceedings (assuming, of course, that he had not been made a defendant therein) could become a party to those proceedings if he wished to dispute the question of liability. ⁷⁷⁹ Whilst CMR is silent as to the extent to which a carrier receiving due notice of primary proceedings is bound by the determination therein of liability if he has not entered an appearance, he would seem to be estopped thereafter from denying liability in contribution proceedings.

Contribution proceedings

36-141

⚠ Contribution proceedings are envisaged as being secondary to and consequential upon the main action. The procedure of the English courts, however, enables such proceedings to be brought by way of thirdparty proceedings in the main action, even if the carrier seeking contribution has not already paid the compensation. ⁷⁸⁰ The carrier must, however, pay the sender or consignee before enforcing his right to recover against another carrier. ⁷⁸¹ Article 37 provides that the carrier responsible for loss or damage should be solely liable for the compensation. ⁷⁸² Where two or more carriers are responsible, each pays an amount in contribution proportionate to his share of liability. If no apportionment is possible, each responsible carrier is liable in proportion to his share of the payment for carriage. ⁷⁸³ If, however, it cannot be ascertained to which carrier liability is attributable, the amount of compensation is apportioned between all of them in proportion to their share of the payment for carriage. ⁷⁸⁴ In the absence of agreement to the contrary, separate contribution proceedings between carriers can only be brought before the courts of the country in which one of the carriers from whom recovery is sought is ordinarily resident or has his principal place of business or has the branch through which the contract of carriage was made. ⁷⁸⁵ ⚠ These provisions apply only to recourse proceedings between carriers. ⁷⁸⁶ The jurisdictional provisions of art.31(1) do not apply to secondary contribution proceedings. ⁷⁸⁷

Carrier's right to sell the goods

36-142

The carrier may sell the goods, without awaiting instructions from the person entitled to dispose of them, (a) if the goods are perishable or their condition warrants such a course; (b) if the storage expenses would be out of proportion to the value of the goods; or (c) if after the expiry of a reasonable time he has not received from the person entitled to dispose of the goods instructions to the contrary which he may reasonably be required to carry out. ⁷⁸⁸ The proceeds of sale, after the deduction of the expenses chargeable against the goods, belong to the person entitled to dispose of the goods. ⁷⁸⁹

Reservations at delivery and extinction of claims

36-143

If, upon taking delivery of the goods, the consignee checks with the carrier the condition of the goods, the result of that check will be conclusive evidence of the condition of the goods at the time of delivery, unless any loss or damage sustained by the goods is not apparent and the consignee has sent to the carrier reservations in writing about the goods within seven days of delivery.⁷⁹⁰ Where the consignee takes delivery of the goods without checking their condition with the carrier and without providing reservations to the carrier, the fact that delivery has been accepted shall constitute prima facie evidence that the condition of the goods is that which is represented in the consignment note.⁷⁹¹ Such reservations must be sent to the carrier immediately (in the case of apparent loss or damage⁷⁹²) or in writing within seven days (in the case of loss or damage which is not apparent) and provide a general indication of the loss or damage sustained by the goods.⁷⁹³ Such prima facie evidence may be controverted.⁷⁹⁴ The acceptance of delivery in these circumstances does not mean that the consignee loses any right of action because of any failure to make a reservation.⁷⁹⁵ Further, the taking of delivery will be evidence of the condition of the goods only so far as the interest of the consignee is concerned. No compensation is payable for delay unless a written reservation is sent to the carrier within 21 days from the time at which the goods were placed at the disposal of the consignee.⁷⁹⁶ A failure to send such a reservation in the case of delay will result in the loss of a right of action.⁷⁹⁷

Limitation of actions

36-144

All actions arising from the contract of carriage are time-barred after one year, or three years in the case of wilful misconduct. As far as primary actions between owners of goods and carriers are concerned, art.32 provides that the period of limitation runs (a) in the case of partial loss, damage or delay in delivery, from the date of delivery; (b) in the case of total loss⁷⁹⁸ from the thirtieth day after the expiry of the agreed time limit or, if none, from the sixtieth day from the date on which the goods were taken over by the carrier; and (c) in all other cases, on the expiry of three months after the making of the contract of carriage.⁷⁹⁹ Article 32 is intended to be comprehensive and to cover all claims arising under CMR.⁸⁰⁰ When goods are damaged but not delivered (e.g. where, after receiving damage, they are returned to the sender), the period of limitation applied is that for total loss under art.32(1)(b), having regard to art.20(1).⁸⁰¹ Alternatively, if it is to be regarded as a claim for damage rather than loss, art.32(1)(c) applies in such a case, on the basis that it covers all cases where neither art.32(1)(a) nor art.32(1)(b) provides in the particular case a point from which the one-year CMR limitation period can run.⁸⁰² A written claim suspends the running of the period of limitation until such date as the carrier rejects the claim in writing.⁸⁰³ In order to suspend the running of the limitation period, the claim holding the carrier liable must be notified to the carrier in an unambiguous manner by or on behalf of the person entitled to bring the claim and must be accompanied by such supporting documents so as to enable the carrier to define and pronounce his response to the claim, although it is not necessary that the claim describe precisely the level of compensation claimed.⁸⁰⁴ The owner of goods who wishes, when met by a plea of limitation, to set up suspension of the period of limitation, must show that the particular carrier relying on the time-bar has received a written claim from him or from someone acting on his behalf. A written claim made to the first carrier or to any one carrier does not suspend the running of the period of limitation against all carriers. A carrier obviously cannot reject a claim under art.32(2) unless it is made against him directly.⁸⁰⁵ The rejection must be clear and unambiguous so that the claimant must understand that, time having been suspended since the claim was made, there has now come the time when the claimant must decide whether to start proceedings. The mere non-acceptance or non-admission of the claim is not sufficient. If the rejection is communicated in circumstances attracting privilege (for example, being marked "without prejudice"), the rejection will not restart the running of time within the meaning of art.32(2). In order to constitute a valid rejection for the purposes of art.32(2), the documents which were attached to the claim must be returned to the claimant; this requirement is not limited to such original documents as are provided by the claimant, but includes photocopies.⁸⁰⁶ The period of limitation may also be extended in any of the ways applicable under the Limitation Act 1980.⁸⁰⁷ A counterclaim served within the relevant limitation period stops time running under the Convention.⁸⁰⁸ CMR however provides specifically that a right of action once time-barred cannot be exercised as a counterclaim or set-off.⁸⁰⁹ Until a counterclaim has been served, a right of action by way of counterclaim is not exercised within the meaning of the Convention.⁸¹⁰

Limitation of actions between carriers

36-145

The limitation period applies to claims between carriers. The period begins to run either on the date of the final judicial decision fixing the amount of compensation payable under CMR, or, if there is no such judicial decision, from the actual date of payment. ⁸¹¹ In the context of claims between carriers the term “carrier” means any person who contracts to carry. It is not restricted to claims between successive carriers within the meaning of art.34. ⁸¹² The courts have, however, emphasised that the term “claims” in art.39(4) embraces claims by one successive carrier against another in respect of that other's responsibility for something which has gone wrong in the course of the carriage where breach by that other of his obligations either to the consignor or to his predecessor as carrier has resulted in damage and a claim for compensation at the end of the line. The term “claims” has no application to claims between successive carriers in respect of moneys due not for breach of the contract of carriage (i.e. compensation for something which has gone wrong) but as payment for services duly performed. Articles 34 to 40 of the Convention are solely concerned with resolving the rights inter se of successive carriers where something has gone wrong en route. ⁸¹³

Jurisdiction

36-146

⚠ Article 31(1) prescribes those states in which legal proceedings may be brought in connection with any contract of carriage to which the CMR Convention applies, in addition to the state agreed between the parties, ⁸¹⁴ namely the state of the residence of the defendant, the state where the goods are taken over by the carrier, the place designated for delivery of the goods or the state which has been agreed by the parties. ⁸¹⁵ ⚠ This is intended to provide a self-contained code for the allocation of jurisdiction, ⁸¹⁶ so that Regulation (EU) 1215/2012 is inapplicable insofar as the same rule is provided for in both conventions, ⁸¹⁷ ⚠ provided that the applicable rule in CMR is highly predictable, facilitates the sound administration of justice, enables the risk of concurrent proceedings to be minimised, and is construed harmoniously with the objectives of the Regulation, ensuring the free movement of judgments in the European Union. ⁸¹⁸ ⚠ In the event of more than one set of proceedings being commenced in more than one state, art.31(2) provides that the later action will not be entertained if it concerns the same parties and is brought on the same grounds. ⁸¹⁹ The claimant may bring proceedings against the first carrier, the last carrier or the carrier who was performing that part of the carriage where the relevant loss, damage or delay has occurred. ⁸²⁰ ⚠ When the defendant carrier seeks recourse against other carriers concerned in the carriage, such action is governed by art.39(2), which is more restrictive than art.31(1). Such recourse must (not may, as suggested by the provision itself) be brought in the state of residence of one of those carriers. ⁸²¹ Article 39(2) is concerned only with actions among carriers and not claims by cargo interests (whose claims are governed by art.31). ⁸²² ⚠ It appears not to be open to the carriers to agree an alternative forum for the determination of the carrier's recourse claim, except possibly arbitration. ⁸²³

Arbitration

36-147

The contract of carriage may contain an arbitration clause if the clause provides that the arbitration tribunal shall apply the Convention. ⁸²⁴ There must be an express provision to this effect. ⁸²⁵ If there is a valid arbitration clause, the English courts will stay proceedings and refer the matter to the arbitration tribunal in question. ⁸²⁶

No contracting out

36-148

Any stipulation which would directly or indirectly derogate from the provisions of the Convention is null and void,⁸²⁷ but only to the extent of the derogation.⁸²⁸ Successive carriers can agree among themselves as to their liability to contribution and the effect thereon of the insolvency of one of them.⁸²⁹ Compensation under CMR must be assessed solely in accordance with the terms of the Convention itself, and the principles applicable to the assessment of damages at common law are irrelevant.⁸³⁰

-
- ^{606.} Cmnd. 3455; TS No.90 (1967). For the meaning of the abbreviation “CMR”, see above, para.36-081.
- ^{607.} See, generally, Hill [1968] J.B.L. 155; Fitzpatrick [1968] J.B.L. 311; Hill [1975] L.M.C.L.Q. 303; Donald [1975] L.M.C.L.Q. 420; Giles [1975] 24 I.C.L.Q. 379; Wijffels [1977] L.M.C.L.Q. 30; Hill [1977] L.M.C.L.Q. 212. For comprehensive accounts, see Donald, The CMR (1981); Clarke, International Carriage of Goods by Road: CMR, 6th edn (2014); Hill and Messent, CMR: Contracts for the International Carriage of Goods by Road, 3rd edn (2000); Clarke and Yates, Contracts of Carriage by Land and Air, 2nd edn (2008). For an appraisal of the problems of CMR as seen from particular national standpoints, see Loewe (1976) 11 E.T.L. 166, 311.
- ^{608.} SI 1967/819.
- ^{609.} SI 1967/820; SI 1969/1365; SI 1971/1743. These Orders were made under s.9 of the Act. For the position of Jersey, see Chloride Industrial Batteries Ltd v F & W Freight Ltd [1989] 1 W.L.R. 823 CA.
- ^{610.} 1979 Act ss.3(3), 4(2)(4), 5 and 6(1)(b).
- ^{611.} Cmnd. 8138; TS No.6 (1981).
- ^{612.} See below, para.36-130 (dealing with units of account).
- ^{613.} SI 1980/1966.
- ^{614.} SI 1981/604; SI 1981/1543; SI 1986/1882.
- ^{615.} Carriage of Goods by Road (Parties to Convention) Order 1967 (SI 1967/1683) as amended by SI 1969/385, SI 1973/596 and SI 1980/697.
- ^{616.} In Anon. (2008) 43 E.T.L. 747, the Bundesgerichtshof held that a “contract of carriage” has an autonomous meaning independent of national law. The Convention has been held to apply to an umbrella agreement providing for multiple deliveries over a long period of time; there is no requirement that the Convention will apply only to those contracts where consignment notes may be issued contemporaneously with or soon after the contract is made: Gefco (UK) Ltd v Mason [1998] 2 Lloyd’s Rep. 585. CMR will not apply to an existing relationship between the carrier and the purchaser of goods, where the latter is not interested, directly or indirectly, in the contract of carriage: Atlanta Companies, Judge & Dolph Ltd v Pvba Transport Leopold Laureys & Zonen (1996) 31 E.T.L. 843 Ghent.
- ^{617.} For the purposes of CMR, “goods” may include a trailer hauled by the carrier’s vehicle if that is what he contracted to carry: NV Cobelfret v NV Transport Jaco (1996) 31 E.T.L. 579 Antwerp.
- ^{618.} Defined in the Carriage of Goods by Road Act 1965 Sch. art.1(2). As to the limits of a contract of carriage under CMR, see Kruidenier Hzn CV v Vink CV [1978] L.M.C.L.Q. 649 District Court, Rotterdam. In Anon. (2006) 41 E.T.L. 228 Hof van Cassatie van België, it was held that where the contract was silent on the mode of carriage and the circumstances were such that the parties did not contemplate road transport, CMR was inapplicable. See also NV DPD Belgium v Timmerman (2011) 48 E.T.L. 82, where it was also held that courier services could fall within the scope of the Convention.

- 619. 1965 Act Sch. art.1(1). Jersey is not a “different country” from the United Kingdom for the purposes of CMR: Chloride Industrial Batteries Ltd v F & W Freight Ltd [1989] 1 W.L.R. 823 CA. It is essential, for the Convention to apply, that the road carriage contemplated by the contract is international. If the contract contemplated, for example, one road leg in one country and one sea leg in another country, the Convention will not apply: Princes Buitoni Ltd v Hapag-Lloyd Aktiengesellschaft [1991] 2 Lloyd’s Rep. 383.
- 620. NV Crowe and Co v Alliance Ass Cie Ltd (1969) 4 E.T.L. 948 Hof van Beroep, Brussels.
- 621. 1965 Act Sch. art.1(1).
- 622. Anon. (1975) 10 E.T.L. 410 Oberlandesgericht, Celle.
- 623. Anon. (1966) 1 E.T.L. 691 Landgericht, Bremen.
- 624. Princes Buitoni Ltd v Hapag-Lloyd Aktiengesellschaft [1991] 2 Lloyd’s Rep. 383, 385-386. Where the CMR applies by agreement, rather than by the application of art.1, the parties are entitled to deviate from the terms of CMR (subject to any other restrictions applicable as a matter of national law): Anon. (2013) 48 E.T.L. 619 (BGH).
- 625. 1965 Act Sch. art.1(4), (5) Protocol of Signature. As to the meaning of “furniture removal” in art.1(4), see Parr v Clark & Rose Ltd, 2002 S.C.L.R. 222. In Quantum Corp Inc v Plane Trucking Ltd [2002] EWCA Civ 350, [2002] 1 W.L.R. 2678 at [64], the Court of Appeal was dismissive of an argument that the Protocol excluded the CMR Convention in respect of traffic between the UK and Ireland even where the traffic took place in UK as part of an international carriage extending beyond the UK and Ireland.
- 626. CMR occasionally, not always, specifies which municipal law applies. National legislation, however, should not be discriminatory against carriers from other EU Member States so as to offend art.76 of the EEC Treaty of Rome: Anon. (1993) 28 E.T.L. 592 Gerichtshof der Europäischen Gemeinschaften.
- 627. 1965 Act Sch. art.2(1). In Quantum Corp Inc v Plane Trucking Ltd [2002] EWCA Civ 350, [2002] 1 W.L.R. 2678 at [15]-[18], [21], [62]-[63], the Court of Appeal, interpreting art.1, held that the CMR Convention applied to an international road leg which formed part of a larger contract where (a) the carrier promised unconditionally to carry by road and on a trailer; (b) the carrier reserved either a general or a limited option to elect to carry out some other means of carriage for all or part of the way; (c) the carrier left the means of transport open either entirely or as between a number of possibilities at least one of them being carriage by road; or (d) where the carrier undertook to carry by some other means but reserved either a general or limited option to carry by road. The concept of a contract for carriage by road embraced a contract providing for or permitting carriage of goods by road on one leg, when such carriage actually took place under such contract; the place of taking over and delivery under art.1(1) were to be read as referring to the start and end of the contractually provided or permitted road leg: at [39]. cf. The OOCL Bravery (1999) 35 E.T.L. 398 US District Ct SDNY. Anon. Bundesgerichtshof (2009) 44 E.T.L. 196. See also Anon. (2013) 49 E.T.L. 228 BGH.
- 628. PVBA Transport Maes v NV Centraal Beheer Schadeverzekering (1996) 31 E.T.L. 558 Netherlands. In Anon. (2011) 47 E.T.L. 87, the Oberlandesgerichtshof Düsseldorf held that a trailer in which the goods are carried, even without a tractor, is a vehicle for the purposes of art.2(1), that a fire on board a sea-going vessel is a typical risk for that means of transport under art.2(1), and that the Hague Rules are prescribed conditions within the sense of art.2(1).
- 629. 1965 Act Sch. art.2(1). The Warsaw Convention may thus regulate aspects of a road carrier’s liability in the case of road-air carriage. The Hague Rules have been applied to regulate the carrier’s liability in road-sea carriage: Thermo Engineers Ltd v Ferrymasters Ltd [1981] 1 Lloyd’s Rep. 200, 205. See, generally, Clarke, International Carriage of Goods by Road: CMR, 6th edn (2014), para.15.
- 630. Thermo Engineers Ltd v Ferrymasters Ltd, above, at 204.

- 631. James Buchanan and Co Ltd v Babco Forwarding and Shipping (UK) Ltd [1978] A.C. 141; Hatzl v XL Insurance Co Ltd [2009] EWCA Civ 223, [2010] 1 W.L.R. 470 at [33]-[34]. See, generally, Hardingham [1978] L.M.C.L.Q. 51; Clarke, para.3a. The House of Lords has approved a teleological approach to the interpretation of purely domestic statutes, unfettered by any rule requiring an exclusive reliance upon the occasionally inadequate words used in the statute itself: Pepper (Inspector of Taxes) v Hart [1993] A.C. 593. See Wijffels (2001) 36 E.T.L. 653.
- 632. James Buchanan and Co Ltd v Babco Forwarding and Shipping (UK) Ltd, above, at 152.
- 633. James Buchanan and Co Ltd v Babco Forwarding and Shipping (UK) Ltd, above, at 157; Hatzl v XL Insurance Co Ltd [2009] EWCA Civ 223, [2010] 1 W.L.R. 470 at [33]. cf. Shell Chemicals UK Ltd v P & O Roadtanks Ltd [1993] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 114, 115; affirmed on other grounds: [1995] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 297.
- 634. Most of the reported English decisions on CMR are referred to in the present text with the exception of SCA (Freight) Ltd v Gibson [1974] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 533; Avandero (UK) Ltd v National Transit Insurance Co Ltd [1984] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 613; and London Tobacco Co (Overseas) Ltd v DFDS Transport Ltd [1994] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 394, where the implications of a carrier's insurance cover against liability under CMR were discussed. The Court of Appeal has made significant contributions as far as the construction of the Convention is concerned: see, generally, Ulster-Swift Ltd v Taunton Meat Haulage Ltd [1975] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 502; affirmed [1977] 1 W.L.R. 625 CA; more fully reported at [1977] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 346; James Buchanan and Co Ltd v Babco Forwarding and Shipping (UK) Ltd [1977] Q.B. 208 CA; affirmed on different grounds [1978] A.C. 141; Cummins Engine Co Ltd v Davis Freight Forwarding (Hull) Ltd [1981] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 106; affirmed [1981] 1 W.L.R. 1363 CA.
- 635. Many decisions of the courts of the Continental parties to CMR on the interpretation of the Convention have been reported since 1966 in the periodical European Transport Law. The decisions are usually fully reported in the original language and have a headnote in English. Since 1974 some additional decisions of Continental courts have been reported in Lloyd's Maritime and Commercial Law Quarterly. Some of these Continental decisions are cited in the present text.
- 636. See, generally, Hill [1975] L.M.C.L.Q. 303; Hill (1976) 11 E.T.L. 182; Wijffels (1976) 11 E.T.L. 208; Loewe (1976) 11 E.T.L. 311: this last reference is to an authoritative commentary on CMR.
- 637. James Buchanan and Co Ltd v Babco Forwarding and Shipping (UK) Ltd [1977] Q.B. 208 at 213-214. See also Ulster-Swift Ltd v Taunton Meat Haulage Ltd [1977] 1 W.L.R. 625 at 631-632; Fortis Corporate Insurance NV/Uni-Data Logistics BV/UPS SCS (Nederland) BV (2009) 45 E.T.L. 101 (Hoge Raad der Nederlanden). As to the influence (or lack of it) of Human Rights legislation, see Re Deep Vein Thrombosis and Air Travel Group Litigation [2002] EWHC 2825 (QB), [2003] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 418 at [180]-[182], [191]-[192], [229], [2003] EWCA Civ 1005, [2003] 3 W.L.R. 956.
- 638. Fothergill v Monarch Airlines Ltd [1981] A.C. 251 at 284. In Morris v KLM Royal Dutch Airlines [2002] UKHL 7, [2002] 2 A.C. 628 at [147], Lord Hobhouse said: "Whilst it is important to have regard to the international consensus upon the understanding of the provisions of international conventions and hence to what the courts in other jurisdictions have had to say about the provision in question, the relevant point for decision always remains: what do the actual words used mean?"
- 639. 1965 Act Sch. art.4. The taking over of the goods is not a prerequisite to the formation of a contract of carriage: Anon. (1966) 1 E.T.L. 691 Landgericht, Bremen; or the application of CMR: Gefco UK Ltd v Mason [1998] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 585.
- 640. Sch. art.5(1). Whether or not the consignment note is signed is a matter for national law determined by the rules of private international law: Anon. (2012) 48 E.T.L. 610 (BGH). In the context of art.5(1), the "carrier" must be the original or contracting carrier. As to the difficulties which may arise when another consignment note is issued during the carriage, see Harrison & Sons Ltd v R T Steward Transport Ltd (1993) 28 E.T.L. 747, where the court placed more importance on the original consignment note in the context of art.34 (see below, para.36-135).

- 641. Sch. art.6(1).
- 642. Sch. arts 6(1)(f) and 22(1). See also the European Agreement concerning the Carriage of Dangerous Goods by Road, Cmnd. 3769 (1968) and EU Council Directive 1994/55, November 21, 1994 on the approximation of laws within Member States concerning carriage of dangerous goods by road. As to the meaning of “dangerous”, see Anon. OLG Düsseldorf January 23, 1992 (1992) Transp.R. 218; cf. Effort Shipping Co Ltd v Linden Management SA (The Giannis NK) [1998] 1 All E.R. 495.
- 643. Sch. art.6(1)(i). See T Comedy (UK) Ltd v Easy Managed Transport Ltd [2007] EWHC 611 (Comm), [2007] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 397 at [60].
- 644. Sch. art.6(2).
- 645. Sch. art.6(3). See, for example, Harrison & Sons Ltd v R T Steward Transport Ltd (1993) 28 E.T.L. 747.
- 646. Sch. arts 7(1) and 22(2).
- 647. Sch. art.8(1). The carrier is not obliged to check the manner in which the goods were loaded (assuming that the carrier did not load the goods): Generali Transports Assurances ea v Kuhne & Nagel ea (2002) 37 E.T.L. 511.
- 648. Sch. art.8(2).
- 649. SA De Zeven Provinciën v SPRL Ultra Rapid Wagner Freres (1977) 12 E.T.L. 776 Commercial Court, Charleroi; Anon. (1993) 28 E.T.L. 745 Cass.
- 650. NV Alptripan v NV Ruys and Co (1976) 11 E.T.L. 271 Commercial Court, Antwerp.
- 651. Sch. art.8(3).
- 652. Whilst the signature on the consignment note may be printed or in the form of a stamp (art.5(1)), the absence of a signature will render the consignment note of neutral (or at best prima facie) evidential value: City Vintages Ltd v SCAC Transport International Unreported December 1, 1987. cf. Anon. (1998) 33 E.T.L. 427 BGH.
- 653. The Convention does not state when and where the consignment note must be issued, save that art.5 requires one copy of the consignment note to accompany the goods, which might suggest that the note should be made out prior to the commencement of the carriage (cf. M Bardiger Ltd v Halberg Spedition APS Unreported October 26, 1990). Such matters, however, will affect the probative value of the consignment note as evidence of the contract of carriage: Electroniska Industrija Oour TVA v Transped Oour Kintinentalna [1986] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 49, 51; Texas Instruments Ltd v Nason (Europe) Ltd [1991] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 146.
- 654. Sch. art.9(1). Despite the issue of a CMR consignment note, the presumption of the existence of a contract was displaced in Ulster-Swift Ltd v Taunton Meat Haulage Ltd [1975] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 502; affirmed [1977] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 346, 358 CA.
- 655. Aqualon (UK) Ltd v Vallana Shipping Corp [1994] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 669. See Anon. (2001) 36 E.T.L. 947 BGH.
- 656. Sch. art.4. See Gefco (UK) Ltd v Mason [1998] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 585. Article 4 does not apply to the relations between successive carriers: SGS-Ates Componenti Elettronici SpA v Grappo Ltd [1978] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 281, 284. See below, para.36-135. See, generally, Clarke, International Carriage of Goods by Road: CMR, 6th edn (2014), Ch.2.
- 657. Sch. art.7(3).
- 658. This refers to para.36-130, below, and perhaps also to paras 36-127—36-128, below; but the matter is far from clear.

659. See above, para.35-056.

660. Sch. art.12(1). Dicta in one English case suggest that where goods are damaged in transit and the sender on hearing of the damage requires the goods to be returned to him, he is exercising his rights under art.12(1). When his instructions are carried out there may be a “delivery” for the purpose of calculating the CMR limitation period under art.32(1)(a) (see below, para.36-143): Worldwide Carriers Ltd v Ardtran International Ltd [1983] 1 Lloyd’s Rep. 61, 65.

661. Sch. art.12(5)(a). It seems that this condition is not essential: Anon. (1985) 20 E.T.L. 349 BGH. Indeed, under art.15(1), where the consignee refuses delivery of the goods, the sender may exercise the right of disposal without producing the first copy of the consignment note. Nevertheless, save for situations covered by art.15(1), the carrier will obey the instructions of the sender without the first copy of the consignment note at his risk: art.12(7).

662. Sch. art.12(5)(b). The “interference” must be more than merely incidental: Hill and Messent, CMR: Contracts for the International Carriage of Goods by Road, 3rd edn (2000), para.5.5–5.7; Clarke, International Carriage of Goods by Road: CMR, 6th edn (2014), para.32a(f). If it is not possible to carry out the instructions, the carrier must notify the person entitled to dispose of the goods “immediately”: art.12(6).

663. Sch. art.12(5)(c). Whether “consignment” refers to the goods covered by the consignment note or all the goods carried by the carrier is unclear. The former construction is preferable, because the rights of those interested in the other consignments are protected by art.12(5)(b). Hill and Messent, CMR: Contracts for the International Carriage of Goods by Road, 3rd edn (2000), paras 5.5–5.6.

664. See above, para.36-091.

665. Sch. art.12(2).

666. Sch. art.13(1). The vesting of a right of action in the consignee under art.13(1) does not result in the sender losing his right of action: NV VAPO v SPRL Frigo-Express-Adriaenssens and Zonen (1976) 11 E.T.L. 295 Commercial Court, Antwerp.

667. Sch. arts 12(2) and 13(1). If the consignee exercises the right of disposal by nominating another consignee, that new consignee cannot name yet another consignee (art.12(4)), unless it is the original consignee (Anon. Arrond. Amsterdam 16.2.66 S. & S. No.69). The consignment note may provide that the consignee has the right of disposal from the time the consignment note is drawn up: art.12(3). It is only in this last circumstance that the consignee is obliged to produce a copy of the consignment note in exercising the right of disposal: art.12(5)(a).

668. Sch. art.12(1) and (2). cf. Anon. (2002) 37 E.T.L. 817 BGH.

669. Sch. art.12(7).

670. cf. Kala Ltd v International Freight Services (UK) Ltd Unreported June 7, 1988.

671. Benjamin’s Sale of Goods, 8th edn (2010), paras 21-063—21-065.

672. Aqualon (UK) Ltd v Vallana Shipping Corp [1994] 1 Lloyd’s Rep. 669, 677. The right of disposal provided for in the CMR Convention must be distinguished from the right of disposal referred to in the Sale of Goods Act 1979 s.19.

673. Sch. art.6(1)(d) and (e).

674. If the carrier does not have adequate information in this regard, he is obliged (at least as a matter of English law) to make reasonable enquiries and take reasonable steps to locate the place of delivery and the consignee.

- 675. And payment of or security for charges outstanding and shown on the face of the consignment note: art.13(2). In T Comedy (UK) Ltd v Easy Managed Transport Ltd [2007] EWHC 611 (Comm), [2007] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 397 at [52]–[53], [60], the Court held that art.13(2) effectively created a particular lien, allowing the carrier to withhold delivery pending the payment of or the provision of security for the unpaid carriage charges; insofar as the contract of carriage created a general lien, allowing the carrier to retain the goods pending payment of other debts, or a wider particular lien, the relevant provision would be void pursuant to art.41 (see below, para.36-148).
- 676. Contrast the use of bills of lading and warehouse warrants.
- 677. Given the liability regime imposed by the Convention: see below, para.36-126.
- 678. Sze Hai Tong Bank Co v Rambler [1959] A.C. 576; Anon. (1991) 26 E.T.L. 359 Court of Cassation, France. See also Lacey's Footwear (Wholesale) Ltd v Bowler International Freight Ltd [1997] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 369, where the driver delivered the goods to thieves notwithstanding being instructed otherwise; in this case, the carrier was held to be guilty of wilful misconduct because of the act of the driver by virtue of art.3. cf. Vesta Forsikring A/S v JN Spedition A/S (1998) 33 E.T.L. 70.
- 679. cf. Stephenson v Hart (1828) 4 Bing. 475.
- 680. cf. the common law position: M'Kean v M'Ivor (1870) L.R. 6 Ex. 30; Clarke, International Carriage of Goods by Road: CMR, 6th edn (2014), para.35.
- 681. Sch. arts 14(1), 15(1) and 15(3). In Anon. (2003) 38 E.T.L. 512 Oberster Gerichtshof-Österreich, it was held that delivery was not prevented if the carrier was able to carry the goods to the destination by alternative means. In NV Gebroeders Van Arde/NV SBTC - Sotramari (2007) 43 E.T.L. 99, the Hof van Beroep te Antwerpen held that a driver who noticed a defect in the cooling system of the refrigerated container being carried, which was followed by a slight explosion, but did not notify the principal or ask for instructions in accordance with art.14(1), but instead continued with the transport and delivered container to destination, was in breach of art.14(1).
- 682. Sch. art.14(2).
- 683. See below, para.36-142.
- 684.  Sch. art.17(1); see above, para.36-093. Article 17(1) does not in any event exhaust the carrier's liabilities: see also art.7(3) (above, para.36-123) and art.21 (failure of carrier to collect "cash on delivery" charge from consignee). Other liabilities may arise under national law. See, generally, Clarke at Ch.5. Anon., Rechtbank te Rotterdam, March 30, 2016, (2016) 52 E.T.L. 101.
- 685. Shell Chemicals UK Ltd v P & O Roadtanks Ltd [1993] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 114, 116; affirmed on other grounds: [1995] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 297 (driver mistakenly collected a tank of detergent instead of contractual consignment of particular liquid chemical); NV De Dijkcker/NV Sonatra (2007) 42 E.T.L. 427 Hof van Beroep te Antwerpen. See also Anon. (1993) 28 E.T.L. 917, where it was held that a claim based on inaccurate information provided by the carrier as to the location and expected arrival time of his vehicle was a claim under national law and not under the Convention. The Court of Appeal has confirmed that the CMR regime is inapplicable to personal injury suffered in the course of carriage: Noble v RH Group Ltd Unreported February 5, 1993. In Tiense Suikerraffinaderij ea (2014) 49 E.T.L. 337, the Hof van Cassatie van België held that other types of loss are governed by national law.
- 686. As to the meaning of "taking over the goods", see NV De Dijkcker/NV Sonatra (2007) 42 E.T.L. 427 Hof van Beroep te Antwerpen.
- 687. Sch. art.15(1) provides that where circumstances prevent delivery of the goods after their arrival at the place designated for delivery, the carrier shall ask the sender for instructions. Where art.15(1) applies, there is no delivery within art.32(a) and consequently no limitation period begins to run: Moto Vespa SA v MAT (Britannia Express) Ltd [1979] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 175, 180. cf. Castrol Industries Belgium nv v De Rijke Vloeistoffentransport bv (1999) 35 E.T.L. 544 Antwerp. See Clarke, International Carriage of Goods by Road: CMR, 6th edn (2014), para.37.

688. William Tatton and Co Ltd v Ferrymasters Ltd [1974] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 203, 206; Worldwide Carriers Ltd v Ardtran International Ltd [1983] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 61, 63-64. When a carrier has to return damaged goods for repairs, such return carriage is covered by the original contract which has not been executed by reason of the non-delivery of the goods at their destination: SA Soffritti Milan v Usines Balteau (1977) 12 E.T.L. 881 Court of Appeal, Brussels.
689. This time limit will be binding, provided that it has been agreed, even if it has not been included in the consignment note: Anon. (1994) 29 E.T.L. 97 BGH; cf. art.6(2)(f). This is not surprising, given art.5.
690. Sch. art.19. This article emphasises the need for diligence in the making up of complete loads when partial loads are taken. The provisions in the Convention regarding compensation for delay presuppose performance (albeit late) of the contract by the carrier. They do not apply when the carrier has not performed the contract of carriage at all: Gondrand SA v Agrati [1978] L.M.C.L.Q. 518 Court of Appeal, Milan.
691. Sch. art.20(1). cf. Anon. (2001) 37 E.T.L. 353 BGH. See Clarke at paras 56, 58.
692. See below, para.36-143.
693. Worldwide Carriers Ltd v Ardtran International Ltd [1983] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 61, 65; ICI Plc v MAT Transport Ltd [1987] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 354, 360. cf. Royal Insurance Cie v Transport R Marcel (1978) 13 E.T.L. 742 Tribunal de Commerce, Paris.
694. Sch. art.17(2), (3) and (4): see generally, Ulster-Swift Ltd v Taunton Meat Haulage Ltd [1975] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 502: affirmed [1977] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 346 CA; Clarke at Ch.6. As to the relationship between art.17(2) and art.17(3), see Walek and Co v Chapman and Ball (International) Ltd [1980] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 279, 282-283. See above, para.36-093.
695. Sch. art.18. See Clarke at Ch.6.
696. Whether the word "claimant" in this context refers to the person bringing the claim or those interested in the goods (that is, any person who might bring a claim under the contract) is unclear and subject to debate (Hill & Messent at para.6.16). Notwithstanding the unfortunate language used, the purpose of the Convention is to provide a defence to the carrier in circumstances where those interested in the goods or possessed of the right of disposal are responsible for the losses claimed. It is suggested that the latter construction is preferable (Anon. (1982) B.T. 73 App. Paris). Otherwise, absurd situations may arise, for example, where the carrier is faced with a claim by both the sender and the consignee. If the former construction were correct, the carrier could not avoid liability (if no other defence were available). If the sender or consignee is prejudiced by the latter construction, he might have a right of action against the other under the relevant contract between them. This broad interpretation is not so broad as to defeat claims against the carrier which clearly are not contemplated by the Convention. See, for example, Noble v RH Group Ltd Unreported, February 5, 1993. In Datec Electronic Holdings Ltd v United Parcels Service Ltd [2005] EWHC 221 (Comm), [2005] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 470 at [127]; reversed on other grounds [2005] EWCA Civ 1418, [2006] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 279 at [28]; cf. [2007] UKHL 23, [2007] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 114 at [29], the court held that the consignment of a package worth more than US$50,000, pursuant to a contract which provided that the value of a package may not exceed US$50,000, did not constitute a wrongful act for the purposes of art.17(2).
697. Anon. (1998) 34 E.T.L. 371 BGH.
698. Frozen meat carried on a refrigerated trailer has been held not to have any relevant inherent vice within the meaning of art.17(2): Ulster-Swift Ltd v Taunton Meat Haulage Ltd [1975] 2

Lloyd's Rep. 502, 505-506: affirmed [1977] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 346, 351-352 CA. cf. Centrocoop Export-Import SA v Brit European Transport Ltd [1984] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 618.

699. There is little English authority on this exemption. Where a carrier proved that goods and the trailer on which they were carried were stolen by violent armed robbers, he was held to have established his defence under art.17(2): G L Cicatiello SRL v Anglo-European Shipping Services Ltd [1994] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 678. The Continental courts have construed the carrier's exemptions under this head narrowly. See, generally, Loewe (1976) 11 E.T.L. 311, 312-364. Sudden, violent braking of the vehicle has been held insufficient to absolve the carrier from liability: PVBAKC v PVBA Roeckens (1972) 7 E.T.L. 1058 Court of Conciliation, Antwerp; SA Soffriti Milan v Usines Balteau (1977) 12 E.T.L. 881 Court of Appeal, Brussels. Theft of the goods similarly does not exempt the carrier: Anon. (1969) 4 E.T.L. 888 Bundesgerichtshof; Kuhne and Nagel v Transports Internationaux Van Mieghem (1974) 9 E.T.L. 330 Court of Commerce, Brussels; NV La Préservatrice v Well Transport (1969) 14 E.T.L. 924 Hof van Beroep, Antwerp; Føroya Sjóvatrygging v PK Transport (1998) 33 E.T.L. 52 Supreme Court, Denmark; Anon. (1998) 33 E.T.L. 60 BGH; cf. m/v Nord Cloud (2006) 41 E.T.L. 79 Hof van Beroep te Antwerpen. However, a "wildcat", unlawful strike has been held to relieve the carrier (NV Westvlees v NV Saelens Intertransport Sitra (1997) 32 E.T.L. 606). The carrier must particularise the unavoidable circumstances. If, e.g. the cause of a fire on a vehicle is unknown, the carrier's liability remains: Transport van de Nederlanden v Zeilemaker's Transportbedrijf (1967) 2 E.T.L. 1013 Arrondissementsrechtbank, Alkmaar. The contributory negligence of other road users may not be a circumstance which the carrier could not avoid within the meaning of art.17(2): Gebr H C en C J in't Veen NV v Haluco BV [1978] L.M.C.L.Q. 517 Court of Appeal, The Hague. A carrier has been exempted from liability under art.17(2) where goods were damaged or lost by reason of a traffic accident which the driver of the vehicle on which they were laden could not avoid under the circumstances even with the utmost care: Anon. (1975) 10 E.T.L. 516 Bundesgerichtshof. A tyre puncture has also been held to relieve a carrier of liability when the tyres were in good condition and had been checked both before and during the course of the journey: NV Maatschappij van Assurantie v A J Koeneman (1966) 1 E.T.L. 137 Arrondissementsrechtbank, Rotterdam. cf. Anon. (1993) 28 E.T.L. 293 Hof. Antwerpen. However, in 'S-Hertogenbosch (2014) 49 E.T.L. 701, the Gerechtshof held that a principal carrier was liable for the actions of a fraudster who pretended to be someone else and who was engaged by the principal carrier through a digital freight exchange system and that the carrier could not invoke this exemption, because it had chosen to use the exchange.
700. 1965 Act Sch. art.18(1). This burden was discharged in Centrocoop Export-Import SA v Brit European Transport Ltd [1984] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 618. Under art.17(3) the carrier is not relieved of liability if the condition of the vehicle used by him to perform the carriage was defective. See Walek & Co v Chapman Ball (International) Ltd [1980] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 279. In addition, the carrier will not be able to avoid liability if the vehicle is unsuitable for the carriage of the particular goods in the carrier's charge: Anon. (1994) 29 E.T.L. 669 Cass.
701. Michael Galley Footwear Ltd v Iaboni [1982] 2 All E.R. 200, 206; Thermo Engineers Ltd v Ferrymasters Ltd [1981] 1 W.L.R. 1470, 1478-1479; NV Valkeniersnatie v NV International Services and Freightforwarding (2006) 41 E.T.L. 272 Hof van Beroep te Antwerpen. cf. Sidney G Jones Ltd v Martin Bencher Ltd [1986] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 54.
702. JJ Silber Ltd v Islander Trucking Ltd [1985] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 243, 247. Indeed, in The Netherlands, it has been held that where the carrier parked his lorry at night beside the gates of an illuminated industrial park and failed to drive for a further 50-60 km to a secure parking area, even though so to do would have breached—without any danger to road safety—the rules as to driving time, the carrier had not demonstrated that he acted carefully to avoid the loss: Gebr Oegema BV v Amev Schadeverzekering NV (1998) 34 E.T.L. 82. See also Anon. (1998) 34 E.T.L. 109 BGH; cf. Anon. (1997) 33 E.T.L. 829 BGH; Anon. (2013) 49 E.T.L. 334 (Oberster Gerichtshof Österreich).
703. JJ Silber Ltd v Islander Trucking Ltd [1985] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 243, 247. In GL Cicatiello SRL v Anglo European Shipping Services Ltd [1994] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 678, the court rejected the claimants' suggestions that the carrier should have had installed a variety of security devices, had a second driver and sought a secure lorry park on the motorway from Rome to Naples, because the loss would have occurred in any event. cf. M. Bardiger Ltd v Halberg Spedition

APS Unreported October 26, 1990; National Semiconductors (UK) Ltd v UPS Ltd [1996] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 212.

- 704. Sch. art.17(3). See NW Ewals Cargo Care v Lear Corp Ltd (2009) 45 E.T.L. 426 (Hof van Beroep te Antwerpen). Given its subject matter and its location within the article, this provision does not apply to the defences under art.17(4): Clarke, International Transport, para.75f. See Anon. (2001) 38 E.T.L. 131 Oberster Gerichtshof-Österreich; Anon. (2004) 39 E.T.L. 244 Oberster Gerichtshof-Österreich; NV De Dijkcker/NV Sonatra (2007) 42 E.T.L. 427 Hof van Beroep te Antwerpen.
- 705. Anon. (2007) 42 E.T.L. 766 Bundesgerichtshof.
- 706.  This exemption was construed strictly in Tetroc Ltd v Cross-Con (International) Ltd [1981] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 192. cf. Anon. App. Paris 19.10.93 (1993) B.T. 792. See also Aquascutum Ltd v Europa Freight Corp Unreported November 20, 1985. See also Anon., Oberster Gerichtshof Österreich, April 27, 2016, (2016) 51 E.T.L. 560.
- 707.  Whilst many decisions of Continental courts on the interpretation of art.17(4)(c) have been reported, these courts have differed widely in their approach. There has been a tendency to introduce legal concepts drawn from the particular municipal law. Some decisions suggest that the sender is always responsible for loading and stowage unless the parties agree contractually otherwise (Anon., Oberster Gerichtshof Österreich, July 6, 2016, (2016) 51 E.T.L. 565). Others make the carrier responsible and suggest that he has been guilty of a wrongful act and neglect if he has not checked loading and stowage carried out by the sender. See, e.g. Anon., Bundesgerichtshof, March 19, 2015, (2016) 51 E.T.L. 99. See Wijffels (1976) 11 E.T.L. 208, 211-229, for an analysis of Continental decisions interpreting art.17(4)(c) in 12 different ways. Whilst CMR does not expressly provide that unloading must be performed by the carrier, the carrier has been held responsible for unloading in the absence of stipulations to the contrary or exemptions resulting from the nature of the goods: PVBA Wanman and Zorn v Transport Internationaux L'Essor Maritime Français (1976) 11 E.T.L. 231 Hof van Beroep, Ghent. If the carrier notices during the carriage that the goods have been packed defectively within the meaning of art.17(4)(b) he must take all steps to avoid damage to the goods. Failure to do so will result in liability for any damage being apportioned between the carrier and the sender: Anon. (1976) 11 E.T.L. 261 Oberlandesgericht, Saarbrücken. A carrier who undertakes to unload goods is liable for the whole operation even if that carrier is a successive carrier: Anon. (1993) 28 E.T.L. 286 Hof. Brussel. He should refuse to unload if in his view it is likely to prove dangerous. Alternatively, he should at least enter reservations: SA Polysar France v Booy Clean Belgium (1977) 12 E.T.L. 293 Commercial Court, Antwerp. Article 8 requires the carrier to check the condition of the goods and their packaging. Further, it has been held that art.17(4)(c) does not exonerate a carrier from checking the stowage of the goods performed by the sender. If the carrier performs the carriage, notwithstanding obvious inadequacies or defects in the stowage, the carrier will be liable for the resultant damage: Anon. (1993) 28 E.T.L. 618 Cass.; GIE La Réunion Européenne v SA Warin (1995) 30 E.T.L. 688 Cass. However, it may be that the carrier is under no obligation to check the loading or stowage of the goods, if adequately performed by one who is accustomed to such operations (i.e. a specialist): Anon. (1993) 28 E.T.L. 768 Rechtbank van Koophandel te Antwerpen. See Cigna Insurance Co of Europe v Intercargo NV (1999) 34 E.T.L. 264. On the other hand, in Anon. (2007) 42 E.T.L. 766 Bundesgerichtshof, it was held that the carrier's liability would be reduced pursuant to art.17(5) where the carrier stowed the goods but subject to the sender's supervision.
- 708. The carrier was relieved of liability under this head in Centrocoop Export-Import SA v Brit European Transport Ltd [1984] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 618. As to the breadth of this defence, see W Donald & Son (Wholesale Meat Contractors) Ltd v Continental Freeze Ltd, 1984 S.L.T. 182; Anon. (2013) 49 E.T.L. 213 (Oberster Gerichtshof Österreich).
- 709. See art.18(5) and Hans Johan Kosta v Samson Transport Co A/S (1997) 32 E.T.L. 230 Denmark.
- 710. Sch. art.18(2), (3). Where a sender of dangerous goods has not informed the carrier of the nature of the danger and the necessary precautions and where this information has not been entered in the consignment note, the sender or the consignee has the burden of proving that the carrier knew the nature of the danger: art.22(1). The phrase “could be attributed to” means that the carrier need only prove that one or more of the excluded matters relied upon could plausibly have caused the damage, not that on a balance of probabilities the excluded matter did cause the damage: Exportadora Valle de Colina SA v AP Moller-Maersk A/S [2010] EWHC 3224 (Comm) at [24]–[26]. cf. Hijka BV v Vermeulen [1978] L.M.C.L.Q. 650 DC, Utrecht; GIE Law Réunion Européenne v SA Warin (1995) 30 E.T.L. 688 Cass. See also Hans Johan Kosta v Samson Transport Co A/S (1997) 32 E.T.L. 230 Denmark. The carrier need not have entered reservations in the consignment note: van Asten bvba v Mercator nv (1999) 35 E.T.L. 386 Hof. Cass., Belgium.

711. Ulster-Swift Ltd v Taunton Meat Haulage Ltd [1977] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 346, 352; Exportadora Valle de Colina SA v AP Moller-Maersk A/S [2010] EWHC 3224 (Comm) at [24]–[26].

712. When the court is considering whether or not a carrier has proved that he took all steps incumbent on him in the circumstances pursuant to art.18(4), the court can take into account not only the evidence adduced by the carrier as to the steps taken but also evidence as to the soundness or otherwise of the goods at the time of loading. Where the goods have admittedly deteriorated during the period of transport, the court is entitled to hold that the carrier has failed to discharge the burden of proof on him under art.18(4) if, on all the evidence, it was more likely than not that he had failed to take some unidentified step incumbent on him: Ulster-Swift Ltd v Taunton Meat Haulage Ltd [1977] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 346, 353. The court considered that this interpretation of art.18(4) was consistent with the view that in English law a claimant need not prove what was the precise, specific event by reason of which his goods were lost whilst in the custody of the carrier: cf. Houghland v RR Low (Luxury Coaches) Ltd [1962] 1 Q.B. 694. The court found that the carrier had discharged this burden of proof under art.18(4) in Centrocoop Export-Import SA v Brit European Transport Ltd [1984] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 618.

713. Sch. art.17(5); Anon. (2007) 42 E.T.L. 766 Bundesgerichtshof.

714. Sch. art.7(1).

715. Sch. art.10.

716. Sch. art.11(2).

717. Sch. art.22(2).

718. cf. Shell Chemicals UK Ltd v P & O Roadtanks Ltd [1993] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 114; affirmed on other grounds [1995] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 297.

719. RH & D International Ltd v IAS Animal Air Services Ltd [1984] 1 W.L.R. 573; United Carriers Ltd v Heritage Food Group (UK) Ltd [1995] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 269.

720. Sch. arts 23–26.

721. cf. Shell Chemicals UK Ltd v P & O Roadtanks Ltd [1993] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 114; affirmed on other grounds [1995] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 297. However, the time limitation provisions of the CMR Convention do apply to claims against the sender: art.32(1)(c); for example, see Anon, Arrond. Rotterdam June 5, 1992 (1993) S. & S. No.107; AXA Assurances SA v Jan de Poorter bv (2000) 35 E.T.L. 381 Hoge Raad, Netherlands; cf. Van Vlierden L v Engelen V (2000) 35 E.T.L. 671 Hof. Cass., Belgium.

722. Sch. art.23(1). See, generally, Clarke at Ch.8. CMR only provides compensation for loss of, or damage to, the goods carried. A claim for compensation for damage done, e.g. to the sender's or the consignee's tanks, cannot be brought within CMR: English and American Insurance Co Ltd v Transport Nagels (1977) 12 E.T.L. 420 Commercial Court, Antwerp. In NV Valkeniersnatie v NV International Services and Freightforwarding (2006) 41 E.T.L. 272 Hof van Beroep te Antwerpen, it was held that where a carrier was instructed to take out 100 per cent insurance, but failed so to do, he could not rely on the limits set out in art.23.

- 723. Sch. art.23(2). Such exchange, market or normal value is a reference to the standard rate for the goods and ignores the peculiar situation of the goods in question: Anon. (1993) 28 E.T.L. 740 BGH. The current market price has been held not to include, e.g. any excise duty payable on the product sold in a home market: James Buchanan and Co Ltd v Babco Forwarding and Shipping (UK) Ltd [1977] Q.B. 208 CA; unanimously affirmed on this point: [1978] A.C. 141. Contra, Anon. (1994) 29 E.T.L. 360 Supreme Court of Denmark.
- 724.  Sch. art.23(3) as amended by the Carriage by Air and Road Act 1979 s.4(2). See Topdanmark Forsikring A/S v DSV Road A/S (2016) 51 E.T.L. 93 (SC Denmark). This section gave effect as part of English law, with effect from December 18, 1980, to a Protocol to CMR which entered into force on that date: see above, para.36-118. Prior to that time the unit used in the Convention was the gold franc: this franc had the same meaning as in the rail Conventions CIM, CIV and the Additional Convention CAV, which Conventions were abrogated when the new rail Convention COTIF entered into force on May 1, 1985: see above, paras 36-079—36-081. The Protocol which effected the change over to units of account also added a new paragraph to CMR which became art.23(7) and which provided that the unit of account in the Convention was to be the Special Drawing Right (SDR) as defined by the IMF. The amount specified in art.23(3) is to be converted into the national currency of the State of the court seised of the case on the basis of the value of that currency on the date of the judgment or the date agreed upon by the parties. When, however, the amounts on which compensation under the Convention is based are not expressed in the currency of the country in which payment is claimed, conversion shall be at the rate of exchange applicable on the day and at the place of payment of compensation: 1965 Act Sch. art.27(2).
- 725. Sch. art.24.
- 726. Sch. art.26.
- 727. Sch. art.23(4). The expression “other charges incurred in respect of the carriage” was construed by reference to the French text (“les autres frais encourus a l’occasion du transport”) as meaning “any other expenses which the owner of the goods has to pay as a result of the carriage of the goods”: James Buchanan & Co Ltd v Babco Forwarding and Shipping (UK) Ltd [1977] Q.B. 208 at 224, per Lawton L.J.: affirmed by the House of Lords [1978] A.C. 141. Lord Wilberforce (at 154) agreed that the English and French versions of art.23(4) are equally broad and loosely-drafted. They should, in his Lordship’s opinion, be interpreted broadly so as to cover charges arising in the course of the removal from the failure of the carrier to carry in accordance with the contract of carriage. Viscount Dilhorne (at 158) construed the words “in respect of” as meaning “in consequence of” or “arising out of” in this context. See Clarke, International Carriage of Goods by Road: CMR, 6th edn (2014), para.98; Anon. (2004) 39 E.T.L. 93 Bundesgerichtshof. A survey fee incurred as part of the cost of realising the damaged value of goods falls within art.23(4): ICI Plc v MAT Transport Ltd [1987] 1 Lloyd’s Rep. 354, 362; as do premiums for the insurance of the goods carried: M Bardiger Ltd v Halberg Spedition Aps Unreported, October 26, 1990. As to charges and duties due to the nonreconciliation of documents after the theft of goods during transport see, Philip Morris Holland BV v Transportgroep Van der Graaf BV (2006) 41 E.T.L. 804 Hoge Raad der Nederlanden. However, the cost of cleaning or destruction of the goods does not fall within art.23(4): PB v O en A (1999) 35 E.T.L. 566 Ghent. The plaintiff will be entitled to a refund under art.23(4) where the carrier is guilty of wilful misconduct, although the limitation “no further damages shall be payable” will not, in that event, apply: Lacey’s Footwear (Wholesale) Ltd v Bowler International Freight Ltd [1997] 2 Lloyd’s Rep. 369. See also Transport Van Laer NV v Comexas Benelux NV (2002) 37 E.T.L. 475; Sandeman Coprimar SA v Transitos y Transportes Integrales SA [2003] EWCA Civ 113, [2003] 2 W.L.R. 1496.
- 728. William Tatton Co Ltd v Ferrymasters Ltd [1974] 1 Lloyd’s Rep. 203. However in James Buchanan & Co Ltd v Babco Forwarding and Shipping (UK) Ltd, above, [1977] Q.B. 208 at 215, the Court of Appeal (per Lord Denning M.R.) expressed the opinion that, in light of their broader interpretation of the Convention, return carriage charges and storage costs should be allowed. See also Thermo Engineers Ltd v Ferrymasters Ltd [1981] 1 W.L.R. 1470, 1478.
- 729. William Tatton and Co Ltd v Ferrymasters Ltd [1974] 1 Lloyd’s Rep. 203.

- 730. Sch. art.23(5). The compensation which may be awarded pursuant to this provision need not be the carriage charges themselves; the compensation is limited in quantum to the amount of those charges. The provision refers to “damage” resulting from delay. It is suggested that this is a reference to any financial deprivation suffered by the claimant, rather than to physical damage sustained by the goods: Anon. (1993) 28 E.T.L. 740 BGH. The claimant may recover both damages sustained directly or losses incurred as a result of his liability to another party: Anon. (1994) 29 E.T.L. 97 BGH. If goods are lost as a result of delay, it has been held that the limitation provisions under art.23(1)–(4) on the one hand and under art.23(5) on the other hand may be aggregated (Deniz-Er v NV Soncotra (2007) 42 E.T.L. 275 Hof van Beroep te Gent). This decision is to be doubted; see Clarke, International Carriage of Goods by Road: CMR, 6th edn (2014), para.59.
- 731. Sch. art.25. See generally, William Tatton and Co Ltd v Ferrymasters Ltd [1974] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 203.
- 732. Which should have been entered on the face of the consignment note (art.6(2)(c)). Given art.4, it is unlikely that the failure to enter the COD charge on the consignment note will deprive any contractual requirement that the charge be collected against delivery to the consignee of its force.
- 733. Sch. art.21. In Eastern Kayam Carpets Ltd v Eastern United Freight Ltd Unreported December 6, 1983, the court held that such a charge was not limited to freight and could extend to the price of the goods. The charge to be collected by the carrier could be in cash or in the form of a draft (Anon. (1970) 5 E.T.L. 670 Arrond. Breda). If the carrier is ordered to deliver the goods against receipt of a certified cheque, this order must be obeyed with all reasonable care to ensure that the carrier receives a certified cheque: Anon. (1994) 29 E.T.L. 464 Hof van Cassatie van België; cf. Eastern Kayam Carpets Ltd v Eastern United Freight Ltd, above; Anon. (1996) 31 E.T.L. 404 (BGH). The COD charge would not include any document which did not represent payment of the charge (Eastern Kayam Carpets Ltd v Eastern United Freight Ltd, above). See also Coveretex v Dendertrans Int (1997) 32 E.T.L. 602.
- 734. s.3.
- 735. Sch. art.29(1); Although the carrier may still continue to rely on those provisions which “fix” his liability such as arts 23(1), (2) and 27(1), (2): Lacey's Footwear (Wholesale) Ltd v Bowler International Freight Ltd [1997] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 369; cf. art.28(1). Where art.29 applies to remove any limitation on liability, the plaintiff may recover loss of profits (Lacey's Footwear (Wholesale) Ltd v Bowler International Freight Ltd, above) or interest in excess of the 5 per cent limit provided for in art.27 (B. Paradise Ltd v Islander Trucking Ltd Unreported January 28, 1985). Such losses might be calculated in accordance with the applicable national law or arts 17–28: Anon. (2005) 40 E.T.L. 729 Bundesgerichtshof-Deutschland; Anon. (2010) 45 E.T.L. 625 (Bundesgerichtshof). In Antwerp United Diamonds BVBA v Air Europe [1995] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 224, the Court of Appeal held, in the context of the Carriage By Air Act 1961, that the “misconduct” provision (similar to art.29) would permit compensation to be awarded in excess of the limit imposed by virtue of a special declaration of interest (which may be made under CMR pursuant to arts 24 and 26).
- 736. Sch. art.29(1). See Clarke at para.101; Datec Electronic Holdings Ltd v United Parcels Service Ltd [2005] EWCA Civ 1418, [2006] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 279, [2007] UKHL 23, [2007] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 114.
- 737. Sch. art.29(2).
- 738. Sidney G Jones Ltd v Martin Bencher Ltd [1986] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 54, 58–60. The court applied the classic English authorities (such as Lewis v Great Western Railway (1877) 3 Q.B.D. 195; and Forder v Great Western Railway [1905] 2 K.B. 532) on “wilful misconduct” as a matter imposing liability on a railway where goods were carried at owner's risk. The court also relied on the wellknown direction of Barry J. as to the meaning of the phrase “wilful misconduct” in the context of carriage by air under the original Warsaw Convention in Horabin v British Overseas Airways Corp [1952] 2 All E.R. 1016; see above, paras 35-035—35-039.

- 739. In TNT Global SpA v Denfleet International Ltd [2007] EWCA Civ 405, [2007] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 504. See also Anon. (2007) 43 E.T.L. 86 Bundesgerichtshof, where it was held that if the driver dozed off, that of itself was not wilful misconduct unless it was proved that the driver ignored clearly recognised symptoms of fatigue.
- 740.  Texas Instruments Ltd v Nason (Europe) Ltd [1991] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 146. cf. M Bardiger Ltd v Halberg Spedition APS Unreported October 26, 1990; Anon. (1993) 28 E.T.L. 762 Rechtbank van Koophandel te Brussel. See also National Semiconductors (UK) Ltd v UPS Ltd [1996] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 212, 214–215; Lacey's Footwear (Wholesale) Ltd v Bowler International Freight Ltd [1997] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 369, where the carrier's employee's misconduct was not intentional, but "reckless carelessness"; Alena Ltd v Harlequin Transport Services Ltd (2002) 38 E.T.L. 218 at [29]–[31]. cf. BVBA Transport Nys v NV Cigna Insurance Company of Europe EA (1996) 31 E.T.L. 840 Brussels; Nordland Transportkontor GmbH v Storebrand Skadeforsikring AS (1996) 31 E.T.L. 563 Norway; Anon. (1996) 31 E.T.L. 703 BGH; Micro Anvika Ltd v TNT Express Worldwide (Euro Hub) NV [2006] EWHC 230 (Comm); Anon. (2006) 41 E.T.L. 668 BGH. See Wijffels (2001) 36 E.T.L. 653, where there is a brief survey of the differing interpretations given to "wilful misconduct" in the Contracting States. In Spain, Portugal, Belgium and The Netherlands, the carrier will not usually be deprived of his right of limitation if there has been no intention to deceive. In Anon. (2012) 47 E.T.L. 556, the Hoge Raad der Nederlanden held that in order that the limitation should not apply, the carrier must have at least acted recklessly and with knowledge that damage would probably result. See also Topdanmark Forsikring A/S v DSV Road A/S (2016) 51 E.T.L. 93 (SC Denmark)
- 741. Sch. arts 23–26.
- 742. Sch. art.28(1).
- 743. For example, the failure by the carrier to perform the contract at all: Anon. (1994) B.T. 636 Comm. Carpentras; Anon. (1994) B.T. 736 App. Toulouse; cf. Anon. (1975) 10 E.T.L. 75 BGH. See also Shell Chemicals UK Ltd v P & O Roadtanks Ltd [1993] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 114; affirmed on other grounds [1995] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 297; Anon. (1993) 28 E.T.L. 917 BGH; Noble v RH Group Ltd Unreported February 5, 1993, where the Court of Appeal commented upon a late Respondents' Notice, holding that the Convention was not intended to regulate the carrier's liability for personal injury occurring during the carriage. See Lacey's Footwear (Wholesale) Ltd v Bowler International Freight Ltd [1997] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 369, as to the carrier's failure to comply with his obligation to insure the goods.
- 744. This provision creates an entitlement to interest. The court has no discretion in the matter: Elektronska Industrija Oour TVA v Transped Oour Kintinentalna Spedicna [1986] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 49, 53. See also Frans Maas Groningen BV v Delta Lloyd Schadeverzekering NV (1998) 34 E.T.L. 254 Netherlands; Anon. (2012) 48 E.T.L. 424, Oberster Gerichtshof Österreich. Article 27 also applies to claims under art.37: Anon. (2004) 39 E.T.L. 517 BGH.
- 745. It seems also that interest at 5 per cent will run until payment is made (art.27(2)). Accordingly, it is unlikely that interest at the Judgments Act 1838 rate will be allowed, although it appears that such interest was awarded at first instance in James Buchanan & Co Ltd v Babco Forwarding and Shipping (UK) Ltd [1978] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 119 HL.
- 746. William Tatton and Co Ltd v Ferrymasters Ltd [1974] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 203, 207; Worldwide Carriers Ltd v Ardtran International Ltd [1983] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 61, 66; ICI Plc v MAT Transport Ltd [1987] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 354, 361.
- 747. Sidney G Jones Ltd v Martin Bencher Ltd [1986] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 54. cf. Dresser (UK) Ltd v Falcongate Freight Management Ltd [1991] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 557, where in the context of the Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Act 1982, service of the writ was held to be the operative date. Now see Brussels I Regulation (Council Regulation 44/2001) art.30.
- 748. s.14(2); see also Sch. arts 3, 28(2) and 34. See M Bardiger Ltd v Halberg Spedition Aps Unreported October 26, 1990. CMR, however, will not apply to an existing relationship between the carrier and a purchaser of the goods carried, where the latter is not interested in the contract of carriage: Atlanta Companies, Judge & Dolph Ltd v Pvba Transport Leopold Laureys & Zonen (1996) 31 E.T.L. 843 Ghent. In Royal & Sun Alliance Insurance Plc v MK Digital Fze (Cyprus) Ltd [2006] EWCA Civ 629, [2006] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 110 at [3], the Court of Appeal held that the contract was not one to which the CMR Convention applied, because there was insufficient evidence that the claimant was a carrier, as opposed to a commissionaire de transport.

- 749. Sch. art.3. Thermo Engineers Ltd v Ferrymasters Ltd [1981] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 200, 206; Noble v RH Group Ltd Unreported February 5, 1993; Lacey's Footwear (Wholesale) Ltd v Bowler International Freight Ltd [1997] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 369. See also Anon. (1995) 30 E.T.L. 678 Tribunal Supremo (Civil) de España. In S-Hertogenbosch (2014) 49 E.T.L. 701, the Gerechtshof held that a principal carrier was liable for the actions of a fraudster who pretended to be someone else and who was engaged by the principal carrier through a digital freight exchange system.
- 750. Sch. art.28(2) which affords to such third parties the benefit of the CMR exclusion or limitation of liability provisions in relation to extra-contractual liability. Although the Convention does not so provide, it would be reasonable to assume that this protection of the exclusion and limitation provisions would extend to the third parties for whom the carrier is responsible under art.3.
- 751. See, generally, Hill (1976) 11 E.T.L. 182, 192.
- 752. Ulster-Swift Ltd v Taunton Meat Haulage Ltd [1977] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 346, 358–359 CA. cf. Moto Vespa SA v MAT (Britannia Express) Ltd [1979] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 175, 181; Elektronska Industrija Oour TVA v Transped Oour Kintinentalna Spedicna [1986] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 49.
- 753. See M Bardiger Ltd v Halberg Spedition Aps Unreported October 26, 1990, where it was held that the CMR Convention does not apply to freight forwarders and any contract which they make, other than a contract of carriage.
- 754. Tetroc Ltd v Cross-Con (International) Ltd [1981] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 192, 198 (freight forwarders held to be CMR carriers on the facts); Kala Ltd v International Freight Services (UK) Ltd Unreported June 7, 1988. See, generally, Clarke, International Carriage of Goods by Road: CMR, 6th edn (2014), para.10a. Where a CMR consignment note named a company as a carrier, the English court concluded that this was evidence of the identity of the carrier: Aqualon (UK) Ltd v Vallana Shipping [1994] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 669. There have been many divergent decisions of the courts of the Continental parties to CMR on the status of freight forwarders: see, e.g. NV Koeltransport Rotterdam v Don Augustin Arxè (1970) 5 E.T.L. 587 Gerechtshof, The Hague; Anon. (1971) 6 E.T.L. 273 Arrondissementsrechtbank, Rotterdam; PVBA Mallentjer v NV Ruys & Co (1975) 10 E.T.L. 235 Hof van Beroep, Brussels; Schueremans v General Accident Fire and Life Ass Corp (1972) 7 E.T.L. 865 Hof van Beroep, Brussels; NV Marubeni-Lida v PVBA Kuhne and Nagel (1974) 9 E.T.L. 608 Hof van Beroep, Brussels. A commission agent has been held not to be a carrier under the Convention: Phoenix Assurance Ltd v NV Muller (1969) 4 E.T.L. 1026 Tribunal de Commerce, Antwerp. As to the characteristics of a forwarding agency contract as opposed to a contract of carriage under the Convention, see NV Hollandsche Assurantie v NV Gerlach Co (1969) 4 E.T.L. 151 Gerechtshof, Amsterdam. A person to whom both international carriage of goods and the import and customs formalities are entrusted remains a CMR carrier even when he employs third parties to perform the actual carriage and personally only sees to the import and customs formalities: Graphische Technik Bremen v NV Schenkers & Co (1977) 12 E.T.L. 411 Commercial Court, Antwerp. The fact that a person describes himself as a forwarder and as offering “specialised trading services” and “full load and groupage services” does not imply that he is not prepared to make a contract of carriage as a principal. The method of invoicing may be of evidentiary significance: Elektronska Industrija Oour TVA v Transped Oour Kintinentalna Spedicna, above, at 52–53. Any party effecting carriage who draws up a freight invoice must by virtue of CMR art.1 be held to be a carrier rather than a forwarding agent, even if some other person carries out the actual operation of carriage: SA Chemin de Fer Industriel Groups v Geszait (1978) 13 E.T.L. 285 Commercial Court, Brussels. An organiser of a particular international carriage by road operation who was not instructed to perform the carriage personally but was told only to make arrangements for the carriage is an agent to whom CMR provisions are not applicable: Soc Fratelli Gondrand v Lebole-Euroconf (1978) 13 E.T.L. 407 Court of Appeal, Paris. See above, paras 36-005—36-006.

- 755. Sch. art.12(7). It is likely that the sender who has had the right of disposal would retain a title to sue, notwithstanding that the right of disposal has been acquired by the consignee. That is, both the sender and the consignee (and indeed any subrogated insurers) may claim damages on the basis of art.12: Anon. (1993) 28 E.T.L. 286 Hof. Brussel. See the discussion in Hill and Messent, CMR: Contracts for the International Carriage of Goods by Road, 3rd edn (2000), para.5.8.
- 756. Sch. art.13(1). Texas Instruments Ltd v Nason (Europe) Ltd [1991] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 146, 149. The English text of this article is somewhat ambiguous. The French text, however, confirms the view expressed in the text as to the consignee's right of action in the event of delay. See, generally, Clarke at para.40. After goods have been delivered to the consignee, he has a right of action in respect of damage to the goods without being required to prove that he has himself suffered loss: Transport Internationaux Van Mieghen v Kuhne and Nagel (1976) 11 E.T.L. 238 Court of Appeal, Brussels. The consignee also has a right of action where his identity may be deduced from a document attached to the consignment note: Anon. (1993) 28 E.T.L. 934 Hof. Antwerpen. See also GM De Rooy & Zonen International Transportbedrijf Belgie v Philips Innovative Applications (2007) 42 E.T.L. 390 Hof van Cassatie van Belgie.
- 757. Sch. art.34. Carriers of goods in separate lots under separate consignment notes and governed by separate contracts are not successive carriers under a single contract within the meaning of art.34, even if employed by the same employer. Hence the presence within the jurisdiction of the English court of one carrier will not justify service on another carrier out of the jurisdiction in respect of that employer's claim to be indemnified for damaged goods in contribution proceedings under art.39(2) (see below, paras 36-140—36-141); Arctic Electronics (UK) Ltd v McGregor Sea and Air Services [1985] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 510. In England, it has been held that a sea carrier, who was sub-contracted by the road carrier who accepted the goods, could be a successive carrier under art.34, if the sea carrier became a party to the single contract for the whole of the carriage: Dresser (UK) Ltd v Falcongate Freight Management Ltd (1991) 26 E.T.L. 798; contra NV Agfa Gevaert v NV Rhenus Belgium (1989) 24 E.T.L. 574 App. Anvers. See also Flegg Transport Ltd v Brinor International Shipping and Forwarding Ltd [2009] EWHC 3047 (QB).
- 758. PVBA Transcom v Sasse Europa Auto Transport (1975) 10 E.T.L. 419 Commercial Court, Brussels.
- 759. St Paul Fire and Marine Ins Co v SPRL Kuhne and Nagel (1975) 10 E.T.L. 548 Commercial Court, Antwerp; PVBA Wanman and Zorn v Transports Internationaux L'Eclair Maritime Français (1976) 11 E.T.L. 231 Hof van Beroep, Ghent.
- 760.  See Anon., Hoge Raad der Nederlanden, September 11, 2015, (2016) 51 E.T.L. 109; Laurijssen (2016) 51 E.T.L. 121.
- 761. Sch. arts 1(1) and 34; Ulster-Swift Ltd v Taunton Meat Haulage Ltd [1975] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 502, 508; affirmed [1977] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 346. cf. NV Travaca v Roba Ltd (1996) 31 E.T.L. 545 Belgium; Anon. (2002) 37 E.T.L. 809 Oberster Gerichtshof-Österreich.
- 762. Muller Batavia Ltd v Laurent Transport Co Ltd [1977] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 411, 415. M Bardiger Ltd v Halberg Spedition Aps Unreported October 26, 1990; Union des Assurances de Paris v Planza Transports SA (1995) 30 E.T.L. 675 Tribunal Federal Suisse; Pauwels International nv v Alva Transport Salters nv (1999) 35 E.T.L. 432 Mechelen. A successive carrier will be responsible for the acts of a sub-contractor (art.3). The sender has no right of action against a sub-contractor who is not also a successive carrier, under the contract of carriage between the sender and the carrier, at least under the CMR Convention and English law, although there may be a right of action under another national law (NV Valkeniersnatie v NV International Services and Freightforwarding (2006) 41 E.T.L. 272 Hof van Beroep te Antwerpen). The sender might have an extra-contractual claim against the sub-contractor, for example a claim arising out of the bailment of the goods to the sub-contractor, which bailment may be subject to the terms of the CMR contract of carriage (see, for example, The Pioneer Container [1994] 1 Lloyd's Rep.

593; The Mahkutai [1996] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 1; Spectra International Plc v Hayesoak Ltd [1997] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 153, [1998] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 162; Sandeman Coprimar SA v Transitos y Transportes Integrales SA [2003] EWCA Civ 113, [2003] 2 W.L.R. 1496. In the event of an extra-contractual claim against the sub-contractor, the latter can rely on the Convention's limitation and exclusion provisions (art.28(2)). If the sender has no right of action against the sub-contractor, he can sue the carrier, who is responsible for the sub-contractor's acts and omissions.

- 763. Ulster-Swift Ltd v Taunton Meat Haulage Ltd [1975] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 502, 508; affirmed [1977] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 346, 358. Aqualon (UK) Ltd v Vallana Shipping Corp [1994] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 669, 673. It is possible that s.14(2)(d) of the 1965 Act extends the contract to persons for whom the carrier is responsible under art.3: M Bardiger Ltd v Halberg Spedition Aps Unreported October 26, 1990; contra, Aqualon (UK) Ltd v Vallana Shipping Corp [1994] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 669, 673. In Harrison & Sons Ltd v RT Steward Transport Ltd (1993) 28 E.T.L. 747, the court held, relying on the terms of s.14(2)(c) of the 1965 Act, that a "carrier" for the purposes of art.39 included a carrier who became a party to the contract of carriage whether by virtue of art.34 "or otherwise".
- 764. In Harrison & Sons Ltd v RT Steward Transport Ltd (1993) 28 E.T.L. 747, the Court held that the "consignment note" referred to in art.34 was a reference to the original consignment note issued by the first carrier, and not a consignment note issued during an intermediate leg of the contractual journey. cf. Dresser (UK) Ltd v Falcongate Freight Management Ltd (1991) 26 E.T.L. 798.
- 765. SGS-Ates Componenti Elettronici SpA v Grappo Ltd [1978] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 281, 284. See, generally, Hardingham [1978] L.M.C.L.Q. 499.
- 766. Graphische Technik Bremen v NV Schenkers & Co (1977) 12 E.T.L. 411 Commercial Court, Brussels; contra, St Paul Fire and Marine Ins Co v SPRL Kuhne and Nagel (1975) 10 E.T.L. 419 Commercial Court, Antwerp. Harrison & Sons Ltd v RT Steward Transport Ltd (1993) 28 E.T.L. 747; Dresser (UK) Ltd v Falcongate Freight Management Ltd (1991) 26 E.T.L. 798; Parr v Clark & Rose Ltd, 2002 SCLR 222. CMR art.4 dealing with the absence, irregularity or loss of the consignment note does not, seemingly, apply to the relationship between successive carriers.
- 767. SGS-Ates Componenti Elettronici SpA v Grappo Ltd, above, at 284.
- 768. Coggins T/A PC Transport v LKW Walter International Transportorganisation AG [1999] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 255.
- 769. Sch. art.36. See, generally, Cummins Engine Co Ltd v Davis Freight Forwarding (Hull) Ltd [1981] 1 W.L.R. 1363, 1371 CA; M Bardiger Ltd v Halberg Spedition Aps Unreported October 26, 1990; Sandeman Coprimar SA v Transitos y Transportes Integrales SA [2003] EWCA Civ 113, [2003] 2 W.L.R. 1496; Rosewood Trucking Ltd v Balaam [2005] EWCA Civ 1461, [2006] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 429; Clarke at para.50. The restrictions of art.36 do not apply in the event of a counterclaim or the raising of a set-off in proceedings concerning the contract of carriage. As to the difficulties of raising a set-off against a claim for freight, see United Carriers Ltd v Heritage Food Group (UK) Ltd [1995] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 269.
- 770. SGS-Ates Componenti Elettronici SpA v Grappo Ltd [1978] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 281, 284.
- 771. SA Precam v SPRL Independent Transport and Forwarding Agency (1979) 14 E.T.L. 664 Tribunal de Commerce, Verviers. However, the carrier must accept the original consignment note in order to be treated as a successive carrier within the meaning of Ch.VI of the Convention: Harrison & Sons Ltd v RT Steward Transport Ltd (1993) 28 E.T.L. 747; Dresser (UK) Ltd v Falcongate Freight Management Ltd (1991) 26 E.T.L. 798. In France, it has been held that where a carrier has been instructed to perform the last leg of the carriage and that carrier does not participate in, but subcontracts, the actual performance of this last leg, that carrier will not be a last carrier for the purposes of art.36: Skandia Insurance Company Ltd v Theo Adams Expeditie en Transport (1995) 30 E.T.L. 685 Cass.
- 772. In Hatzl v XL Insurance Co Ltd [2009] EWCA Civ 223, [2010] 1 W.L.R. 470, the Court of Appeal interpreted "defendant" as excluding insurers or assignees.

- 773. Sch. art.31(1). See Clarke at para.50. In this respect, the allocation of jurisdiction pursuant to rules of the Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Act 1982 is inappropriate, given the terms of art.71 of EC Regulation 44/2001: Harrison & Sons Ltd v RT Steward Transport Ltd (1993) 28 E.T.L. 747. cf. Deaville v Aeroflot Russian International Airlines [1997] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 67, 71 (Warsaw Convention). See below, para.36-146. However, it has been held that the Brussels Convention rules on lis alibi pendens (arts 21 and 22) (now arts 27 and 28 of EC Regulation 44/2001) continue to apply, because there are no provisions in CMR providing for parallel proceedings: Frans Maas Logistics (UK) Ltd v CDR Trucking BV [1999] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 179; Royal & Sun Alliance Insurance Plc v MK Digital Fze (Cyprus) Ltd [2005] EWHC 1408 (Comm), [2005] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 679 at [55]–[69]; reversed on other grounds [2006] EWCA Civ 629, [2006] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 110.
- 774. Subject, of course, to that carrier's right of recovery from other carriers concerned: Sch. art.37. See below, paras 36-140—36-141.
- 775. In Rosewood Trucking Ltd v Balaam [2005] EWCA Civ 1461, [2006] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 429, the Court of Appeal refused to allow a carrier who compensated the first carrier but who was not the first, last or responsible carrier within the meaning of art.36 to recover an indemnity from the responsible carrier.
- 776. s.5(1) as amended by Civil Liability (Contribution) Act 1978 s.9(1) and Sch.1; ITT Schaub-Lorenz Vertriebsgesellschaft mbH v Birkart Johann Internationale Spedition GmbH & Co KG [1988] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 487, 494.
- 777. Sch. art.39(1). See Clarke at paras 51-53.
- 778. Cummins Engine Co Ltd v Davis Freight Forwarding (Hull) Ltd [1981] 1 W.L.R. 1363 at 1374 CA.
- 779. e.g. under CPR r.19.2(2); see Cummins Engine Co Ltd v Davis Freight Forwarding (Hull) Ltd, above, at 1372.
- 780. Cummins Engine Co Ltd v Davis Freight Forwarding (Hull) Ltd, above, at 1372; ITT Schaub-Lorenz Vertriebsgesellschaft mbH v Birkart Johann Internationale Spedition GmbH [1988] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 487, 494 CA. See CPR Pt 20.
- 781. ITT Schaub-Lorenz Vertriebsgesellschaft mbH v Birkart Johann Internationale Spedition GmbH, above, at 494; Frans Maas Logistics (UK) Ltd v CDR Trucking BV [1999] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 179.
- 782. "The carrier responsible" under art.37(a) must be a person who has made himself a party to the contract of international carriage: ITT Schaub-Lorenz Vertriebsgesellschaft mbH v Birkart Johann Internationale Spedition GmbH, above, at 493.
- 783. See, generally, Walek and Co v Chapman and Ball (International) Ltd [1980] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 279.
- 784. By Sch. art.38, a similar apportionment is provided in the event of the insolvency of one of the carriers.
- 785.  Sch. art.39(2): Cummins Engine Co Ltd v Davis Freight Forwarding (Hull) Ltd [1981] 1 W.L.R. 1363 at 1373, 1375. See, generally, Glass [1982] L.M.C.L.Q. 173. Article 39(2) of CMR does not provide for a compulsory and exclusive jurisdiction in disputes. See British American Tobacco Switzerland SA v Exel Europe Ltd [2015] UKSC 65, [2016] A.C. 262 at [36]–[37], [68]. It is presently open to question whether the jurisdiction provided for in art.39(2) is compulsory and exclusive: Arctic Electronics (UK) Ltd v McGregor Sea and Air Services [1985] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 510; contra, Harrison & Sons Ltd v RT Steward Transport Ltd (1993) 28 E.T.L. 747. Proceedings brought pursuant to art.39(2) would not require the leave of the court under CPR r.6.20: Harrison & Sons Ltd v RT Steward Transport Ltd, above. Whilst the carrier from whom a contribution is sought must be a party to the one contract of carriage (Arctic Electronics (UK) Ltd v McGregor Sea and Air Services [1985] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 510), it is not necessary that such a carrier is a successive carrier within the meaning of the Convention (Harrison & Sons Ltd v RT Steward Transport Ltd, above).

- 786. Anon. (2007) 43 E.T.L. 94 Bundesgerichtshof.
- 787. Cummins Engine Co Ltd v Davis Freight Forwarding (Hull) Ltd, above, at 1373.
- 788. Sch. art.16(3).
- 789. Sch. art.16(4).
- 790. Sch. art.30(2).
- 791. Sch. art.39(1). The provision is inelegantly drafted by the use of the word “or”, rather than “and”: see Transports Lesage et Compagnie SA v Transports Fromilhague (1997) 34 E.T.L. 248 Cour de Cassation, France. Invisible damage, such as contamination of chemicals, can constitute inherent vice and can be the subject of reservations made within seven days of delivery of the goods. Provided that such reservations are made within that period, the absence of any protest in the consignment note at the time of delivery does not give rise to the presumption in the carrier’s favour under art.30(1): English and American Insurance Co Ltd v Transport Nagels (1977) 12 E.T.L. 420 Commercial Court, Antwerp. See also Clarke [1982] L.M.C.L.Q. 533.
- 792. A verbal reservation is sufficient in the case of apparent damage: Société Coop UTRAC v SPRL Legrand (1970) 5 E.T.L. 716 Court of Appeal, Liège. Reservations are “sent” to the carrier within the meaning of art.30(1) if they are noted on the copy of the consignment note in the possession of and to be kept by the carrier: Anon. [1978] L.M.C.L.Q. 517 Court of Cassation, France.
- 793. Anon. (2004) 39 E.T.L. 400 Oberster Gerichtshof-Österreich.
- 794. Anon. (1993) 28 E.T.L. 286 Hof. Brussels; Anon. (1994) B.T. 623 App. Douai.
- 795. cf. Anon. (1993) 28 E.T.L. 265 BGH.
- 796. Sch. art.30(3).
- 797. Anon. (1993) 28 E.T.L. 265 BGH, where the court also held that the exceptions provided in art.29 were inapplicable to situations covered by art.30(3).
- 798. Total loss includes no more than what is called an actual total loss in s.57(1) of the Marine Insurance Act 1906. The concept of constructive total loss is not applicable to CMR: ICI Plc v MAT Transport Ltd [1987] 1 Lloyd’s Rep. 354, 358.
- 799. Sch. art.32(1). See, generally, Clarke at paras 43-44. The limitation period applies equally to proceedings brought by and against the carrier: Anon. (1975) 10 E.T.L. 523 Bundesgerichtshof; Anon. (1976) 11 E.T.L. 266 Hof van Beroep, Amsterdam. As to claims in delict or tort, see Anon. (2005) 40 E.T.L. 878 Oberster Gerichtshof-Österreich. CMR provides under art.15(1) that where circumstances prevent delivery of the goods after their arrival at the place designated for delivery, the carrier shall ask the sender for his instructions. Where art.15(1) applies, there is no “delivery” within the meaning of art.32(1)(a) and consequently no relevant period of limitation applies under the Convention: Moto Vespa SA v MAT (Britannia Express) Ltd [1979] 1 Lloyd’s Rep. 175, 180 (see above, para.36-126). Combined road-sea transport is subject to CMR if the road transport is international within the meaning of the Convention. For the purposes of prescription, clauses in combined transport bills of lading are of no effect insofar as they conflict with CMR arts 31 and 32: Atlas Assurance Co Ltd v Ocean Transport and Trading Ltd (1976) 11 E.T.L. 279 Commercial Court, Antwerp; cf. Agence Belgo-Danoise NV v Rederij HAPAG-Lloyd AG (The Hamburg Express) (1976) 11 E.T.L. 691 Commercial Court, Antwerp; and Atlas Assurance Co Ltd v Peninsular & Oriental Steam Navigation (The Osaka Bay) (1977) 12 E.T.L. 843 Commercial Court, Antwerp.

- 800. Worldwide Carriers Ltd v Ardtran International Ltd [1983] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 61, 65. See also Frigo Express bvba v Frigo Traffic Company nv (2004) 39 E.T.L. 521 Hof van Cassatie van België (claim by carrier against sub-carrier); Transports Collomb Muret auto SA v Panini France SA (2004) 39 E.T.L. 531 Cour de Cassation de France (claim by carrier against consignee); NV Navex & Van Meerbeeck v BVBA Butti & Zonen (2006) 41 E.T.L. 102 Rechtbank van Koophandel te Antwerpen (claim for customs debt); Extra Logistics NV v Gebroeders Delhaize & Cie (2014) 49 E.T.L. 341 (claim for storage charges after consignee refused to accept delivery). As to extra-contractual claims, see NV Axa Belgium/NV Deceuninck Compound/NV AZO (2008) 43 E.T.L. 379.
- 801. ICI Plc v MAT Transport Ltd [1987] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 354, 360.
- 802. Worldwide Carriers Ltd v Ardtran International Ltd, above, at 65. Shell Chemicals UK Ltd v P & O Roadtanks Ltd [1993] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 114, 116; affirmed [1995] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 297, 301. cf. Royal Insurance Cie v Transport R. Marcel (1978) 13 E.T.L. 742 Tribunal de Commerce, Paris. See, generally, Glass [1984] L.M.C.L.Q. 30.
- 803. Sch. art.32(2). See Clarke at para.45. The term "claim" in art.32(2) refers to a claim for compensation when something has gone wrong in the course of the carriage. It does not refer to a request by one carrier against another, or against the consignor, for payment of the freight: Muller Batavia Ltd v Laurent Transport Co Ltd [1977] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 411, 416. A claim can be made within the meaning of art.32(2) by a damage assessor acting on behalf of parties interested in the goods: SARL Prufer v Michel (1977) 12 E.T.L. 300 Commercial Court, Mons; Anon. (1997) 32 E.T.L. 442 BGH (insurance broker). The burden of proof, inter alia, that a claim has been received rests upon the party relying on such an assertion: art.32(2). That burden was held to have been discharged in Sidney G Jones Ltd v Martin Bencher Ltd [1986] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 54, 64-65. A written claim does not require any particular formality: Worldwide Carriers Ltd v Ardtran International Ltd, above, at 66; ICI Plc v MAT Transport Ltd, above, at 361. For the purpose of art.32(2), a written claim may be sent to an agent of the carrier expressly or impliedly authorised to receive it, such as a carrier's liability insurer who is, on the facts, so authorised: Poclain SA v SCAC SA [1986] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 404, 406-407. A telex message holding the carrier liable is a written claim within the meaning of art.32(2): NV Van Dijck v PVBA Welltransport (1977) 12 E.T.L. 437 Commercial Court, Antwerp. See also NV La Préservatrice v Well Transport (1979) 14 E.T.L. 924 Hof van Beroep, Antwerp; Anon. Cour d'Appel de Paris, December 14, 2011, Bulletin of International Carriage by Rail 1/2011, 6. A claim can be validly rejected in the carrier's name by a third party such as an insurance broker: NV Rombouts Internationale Transporten v Vlatrex Continental BV (1976) 11 E.T.L. 767 Gerechtshof, The Hague. A written claim which is not rejected suspends the limitation period as soon as it begins to run if it has not already begun to do so: ICI Plc v MAT Transport Ltd, above, at 361.
- 804. Anon. (1995) 30 E.T.L. 211 OGH; Chatruco v Jura Belgie (2010) 45 E.T.L. 623 (Hof van Cassatie van België). cf. Sprl Transports Cremer v SA van de Castele et Cie (1996) 31 E.T.L. 833 Brussels. In Delamode Plc v ECS European Containers (2012) 48 E.T.L. 210, the Hof van Cassatie van België held that there was no requirement that the written claim state the amount of damage, provided that it contained sufficient information so as to allow the carrier to form an opinion as to the nature and quantum of damage so that the carrier can respond to the claim.
- 805. Worldwide Carriers Ltd v Ardtran International Ltd [1983] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 61 at 66. Information imparted by one carrier to other carriers that a claim is being made against him by the owner of goods and that he intends to make a claim against those other carriers cannot constitute a "written claim" against those other carriers under art.32(2) in respect of a claim which the owners of goods are not making against those other carriers. See also Sidney G Jones Ltd v Martin Bencher Ltd, above, at 60-61.
- 806. Zerowatt SpA v International Express Company Ltd Unreported October 6, 1989; Microfine Minerals and Chemicals Ltd v Transferry Shipping Co Ltd [1991] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 630. See also NV Optitrade ea v NV Cat Benelux (2004) 39 E.T.L. 407 Hof van Beroep te Antwerpen.
- 807. Sch. art.32(3). See Vol.I, Ch.28.
- 808. Impex Transport Aktieselskabet v AG Thames Holdings Ltd [1981] 1 W.L.R. 1547, 1552.

- 809. Sch. art.32(4). The fact that CMR by arts 32(4) and 36 contemplates the possibility of a set-off or counterclaim does not exclude the operation of the general rule that a claim against a carrier in respect of loss of, or damage to, cargo or in respect of delay, cannot be asserted by way of a deduction from freight. The rule enunciated by the House of Lords in Aries Tanker Corp v Total Transport Ltd [1977] 1 W.L.R. 185 applies to contracts subject to CMR: RH and D International Ltd v IAS Animal Air Services Ltd [1984] 1 W.L.R. 573. See also United Carriers Ltd v Heritage Food Group (UK) Ltd [1995] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 269.
- 810. Impex Transport Aktieselskabet v AG Thames Holdings Ltd, above, at 1557-1558. See CPR Pt 20. See, generally, Rose [1982] L.M.C.L.Q. 33 and [1984] L.M.C.L.Q. 199.
- 811. Sch. art.39(4).
- 812. See above, para.36-135; Ulster-Swift Ltd v Taunton Meat Haulage Ltd [1977] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 346, 358-360; Harrison & Sons Ltd v RT Steward Transport Ltd (1993) 28 E.T.L. 747. cf. NV Travaca v Roba Ltd (1996) 31 E.T.L. 545 Belgium.
- 813. Muller Batavia Ltd v Laurent Transport Co Ltd [1977] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 411 at 415.
- 814. Catlin Insurance Co (UK) v Gasia (2013) 49 E.T.L. 222 (Rechtbank van Koophandel te Antwerpen).
- 815. !A carrier who did not agree to a particular jurisdiction, and had no notice of a particular jurisdiction agreement, would not be bound by that agreement: British American Tobacco Switzerland SA v Exel Europe Ltd [2012] EWHC 694 (Comm), [2012] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 1 at [46]–[51]; [2015] UKSC 65, [2016] A.C. 262 at [26]. Accordingly, a successive carrier cannot be sued in proceedings brought against the primary carrier pursuant to a jurisdiction agreement between the claimant and the primary carrier, if the successive carrier did not agree to that clause and if the jurisdiction agreement is not in the consignment note, subject to the other heads of jurisdiction in CMR: British American Tobacco Switzerland SA v Exel Europe Ltd [2015] UKSC 65, [2016] A.C. 262. In Anon. (2002) 37 E.T.L. 80 BGH, it was held that art.31 extends to extracontractual claims. See also Anon., Oberster Gerichtshof Österreich, February 25, 2015, (2015) 50 E.T.L. 700. Article 31(1) does not lay down any formal requirements for any jurisdiction agreement between the parties (cf. art.23 of EC Regulation 44/2001). Whether the factual requirement of an “agreement” on jurisdiction will be construed in the manner adopted by the European Court of Justice in the context of art.23 of EC Regulation 44/2001 is unclear. In LSG-RA Leutner GmbH v BVBA Ideal Transport (2006) 41 E.T.L. 570, the Hof van Beroep te Gent held that the parties are free to choose a jurisdiction without stating it in the waybill and that the agreement was to be adjudged by reference to national law; see, however, (2007) 42 E.T.L. 401 Hof van Cassatie van België. There is much to be said in favour of a consistent approach, given the difficulties posed by multi-modal transport involving carriage by road (which in isolation would be governed by CMR) and by sea (which in isolation would require jurisdiction agreements to comply with art.23 of the Brussels I Regulation).
- 816. Arctic Electronics (UK) Ltd v McGregor Sea and Air Services [1985] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 510, 514. Article 31 gives the plaintiff the option to choose the forum, so that the forum should not be able to exercise any otherwise available power to decline jurisdiction: cf. Milor Srl v British Airways Plc [1996] 3 All E.R. 537; Deaville v Aeroflot Russian International Airlines [1997] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 67, 72 (Warsaw Convention art.28). In Ideal Transport v LSG-RA Leutner GmbH (2007) 42 E.T.L. 401, the Hof van Cassatie van België held that the choice offered by art.31 was cumulative and a contractual choice of forum did not necessarily prevail.
- 817. !Council Regulation 1215/2012 art.71. This Regulation applies to proceedings instituted on or after January 10, 2015: Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments (Amended) Regulations 2014 (SI 2014/2947) reg.1. See Harrison & Son Ltd v RT Steward Transport Ltd (1993) 28 E.T.L. 747; British American Tobacco Switzerland SA v Exel Europe Ltd [2015] UKSC 65, [2016] A.C. 262; Nickel & Goeldner Spedition GmbH v “Kintra” UAB (C-157/13) [2015] Q.B. 96 (CJEU). However, note the ECJ's decision in Réunion Européenne SA v Spliethoffs Bevrachtungskantoor BV [1999] C.L.C. 282, which concerned multi-modal carriage by sea, then land, and the application of the Brussels Convention. See Anon. Oberster

Gerichtshof-Österreich (2003) 38 E.T.L. 656, 658, 661; DFDS Transport A/S v Dieter Mehrholz Internationale Transporte (2004) 39 E.T.L. 74 Supreme Court of Denmark; Royal & Sun Alliance Insurance Plc v MK Digital Fze (Cyprus) Ltd [2005] EWHC 1408 (Comm), [2005] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 679 at [55]-[69]; reversed on other grounds [2006] EWCA Civ 629, [2006] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 110.

818.

⚠ TNT Express Nederland BV v AXA Versicherung AG (C-533/08) [2011] R.T.R. 11. In the same case, the ECJ held that it did not have jurisdiction to interpret art.31 of CMR. See British American Tobacco Switzerland SA v Exel Europe Ltd [2015] UKSC 65, [2016] A.C. 262, at [48]-[58]. See also Nipponkoa Insurance Co (Europe) Ltd v Inter-Zuid Transport BV (C-452/12) (2013) 49 E.T.L. 165 (ECJ), where it was held that art.31 must be interpreted in a manner which ensures conditions which are no less favourable than the objectives under the Regulation.

819.

Andrea Merzario Ltd v Internationale Spedition Leitner Gesellschaft mbH [2001] EWCA Civ 61, [2001] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 490. cf. the French text of the CMR Convention: "pour la même cause". Articles 21 and 22 of the Brussels Convention have been held to remain applicable, because CMR does not regulate the matters of lis alibi pendens: Frans Maas Logistics (UK) Ltd v CDR Trucking BV [1999] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 179; Royal & Sun Alliance Insurance Plc v MK Digital Fze (Cyprus) Ltd [2005] EWHC 1408 (Comm), [2005] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 679 at [55]-[69]; reversed on other grounds [2006] EWCA Civ 629, [2006] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 110. This question was identified but not resolved in Harrison & Son Ltd v RT Steward Transport Ltd (1993) 28 E.T.L. 747. cf. Deaville v Aeroflot Russian International Airlines [1997] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 67, 71 (Warsaw Convention). See Council Regulation 44/2001 arts 27 and 28. In Anon. (2006) 41 E.T.L. 561, the Oberster Gerichtshof Österreich held that lis pendens must be assumed under art.31 where the respective claims are for negative declaratory relief and affirmative relief (contra Anon. (2004) E.T.L. 255 BGH; Anon. (2004) E.T.L. 264 BGH).

820.

⚠ Sch. art.36. However, art.36 is not a provision stipulating in which jurisdiction proceedings by cargo claimants may be brought; that is a matter for art.31. See British American Tobacco Switzerland SA v Exel Europe Ltd [2015] UKSC 65, [2016] A.C. 262 at [19]-[20], [34]-[47], [67], [69].

821.

See above, paras 36-140—36-141. Harrison & Son Ltd v RT Steward Transport Ltd (1993) 28 E.T.L. 747; Cummins Engine Co Ltd v Davis Freight Forwarding (Hull) Ltd [1981] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 402, 408-409; contra, Arctic Electronics (UK) Ltd v McGregor Sea and Air Services [1985] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 510, adopting the view of Eveleigh L.J. in Cummins Engine Co Ltd v Davis Freight Forwarding (Hull) Ltd [1981] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 402, 409. In Blue Water Shipping A/S v Melship Eesti OÜ (2000) 35 E.T.L. 772, the Supreme Court of Denmark held that art.39 referred to the residence of the defendant successive carrier and not the claimant successive carrier. cf. art.40.

822.

⚠ British American Tobacco Switzerland SA v Exel Europe Ltd [2015] UKSC 65, [2016] A.C. 262 at [36]-[37], [62], [68].

823.

Sch. art.33, which gives force to an arbitration clause in the contract of carriage, will bind the parties to the contract of carriage. Such parties are identified in s.14(2)(c) of the 1965 Act.

824.

Sch. art.33. By s.7(2) of the 1965 Act as amended, the time at which an arbitration is commenced is determined by the Arbitration Act 1996 s.14(3)-(5).

825.

AB Bofors-UVA v AB Skandia Transport [1982] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 410, 413; Inco Europe Ltd v First Choice Distribution [1999] 1 All E.R. 820, 831 (a clause which required the arbitrators to observe "the applicable imperative legal stipulations including the provisions of international transport treaties" was held to be valid). However, see Anon. (2010) 45 E.T.L. 637 (Oberster Gerichtshof Österreich). See, generally, Glass [1984] L.M.C.L.Q. 30.

826.

Arbitration Act 1996 s.9; AB Bofors-UVA v AB Skandia Transport, above, at 413.

827.

Sch. art.41(1). A carrier's general conditions of contract can never relieve him of his liability if such conditions derogate from CMR: SA Chemin de Fer Industriel Groups v Geszait (1978) 13 E.T.L. 285 Commercial Court, Brussels; Datec Electronic Holdings Ltd v United Parcels Service Ltd [2005] EWCA Civ 1418, [2006] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 279 at [24].

828. Datec Electronic Holdings Ltd v United Parcels Service Ltd [2005] EWCA Civ 1418, [2006] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 279 at [24], [2007] UKHL 23, [2007] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 114 at [30]; T Comedy (UK) Ltd v Easy Managed Transport Ltd [2007] EWHC 611 (Comm), [2007] All E.R. (D) 469 at [52]-[53]; Anon. Oberster Gerichtshof (2008) 44 E.T.L. 311. See also Noble v RH Group Ltd Unreported February 5, 1993, where it was held that liability of the carrier for accidents occurring during the unloading of the goods, as opposed to their carriage, and for personal injury was not intended to be regulated by the Convention and therefore any provisions dealing with such liability were not affected by art.41. Quaere whether unloading of goods may be equated with delivery so as to engage art.17; it would depend on whether the carrier is responsible for the unloading of the goods. In Anon. (2009) 45 E.T.L. 110, the Bundesgerichtshof held that a clause in the contract regulating the kind of goods which the carrier was not willing to carry was not in conflict with art.41.
829. Sch. art.40. This permits carriers engaged in secondary contribution proceedings (see above, paras 36-140—36-141) to derogate from arts 37 and 38. Contractual provisions purporting to give exemptions from liability have been held valid as regards the mutual relationship between successive carriers: Anon. (1976) 11 E.T.L. 290 Landgericht, Duisburg.
830. William Tatton and Co Ltd v Ferrymasters Ltd [1974] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 203, 206; James Buchanan and Co Ltd v Babco Forwarding and Shipping (UK) Ltd [1977] Q.B. 208, 219 CA: affirmed [1978] A.C. 141.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 36 - Carriage by Land

Section 3. - International Carriage

(e) - Passengers and Luggage by Road

Application and scope of the CVR Convention

36-149

The Carriage of Passengers by Road Act 1974 by s.1(1) was passed to enact, as part of the law of the United Kingdom, the Geneva Convention on the Contract for the International Carriage of Passengers and Luggage by Road (CVR) of 1973, ⁸³¹ the main provisions of the Convention being set out in the Schedule to the Act. The Convention entered into force on April 12, 1994. The United Kingdom has not yet become a party to the Convention. In 2004, the 1974 Act was repealed by the Statute Law (Repeals) Act 2004. ⁸³² The Convention applies to every contract for the carriage of passengers and their luggage in vehicles by road for reward when the carriage takes place in the territory of more than one state and the place of departure or the place of destination, or both, are situated in the territory a contracting state, irrespective of the place of residence and nationality of the parties to the contract. ⁸³³ The Convention applies where carriage by road is interrupted by another mode of transport, at least so far as the portions of carriage performed by road are concerned, even if such portions are not international. ⁸³⁴ It also applies to loss or damage caused by an incident connected with the carriage by the vehicle where the vehicle itself is carried over part of the journey by another mode of transport, provided that the loss or damage occurred either while the passenger was inside the vehicle or entering or alighting therefrom. ⁸³⁵

Transport documents

36-150

Where passengers are carried, the carrier must issue an individual or collective ticket showing the name and address of the carrier and containing a statement to the effect that the contract is subject to CVR. ⁸³⁶ The ticket is prima facie evidence of the particulars shown on it ⁸³⁷ but the absence, irregularity or loss of the ticket shall not affect the existence or validity of the contract of carriage, which remains subject to the provisions of the Convention. ⁸³⁸ The carrier is liable for any damage caused to the passengers by a breach of his obligations in relation to the ticket. ⁸³⁹ The ticket is, in general, transferable at any time before the journey begins. ⁸⁴⁰ The carrier may, and at the request of the passenger shall, issue a luggage registration voucher giving the number and nature of the pieces of luggage handed to him. ⁸⁴¹ The voucher has to contain an express statement as to the applicability of the Convention. ⁸⁴² Its issue is prima facie evidence that the luggage appeared to be in good order when handed over. ⁸⁴³ A carrier acting in good faith makes a valid delivery of the luggage if he delivers it to the holder of the voucher. ⁸⁴⁴ He may require any person claiming the luggage but not producing the voucher to prove his right to the luggage and to produce adequate security for the luggage if the proof appears insufficient. ⁸⁴⁵

Personal injuries

36-151

The CVR carrier is liable for loss or damage resulting from the death or wounding of, or from any other bodily or mental injury caused to, a passenger as a result of an accident connected with the carriage and occurring while the passenger is inside the vehicle or is entering or alighting from it. ⁸⁴⁶ If the accident was caused by circumstances which the carrier could not have avoided even by using the diligence required by the facts of the case, he will be relieved of liability. ⁸⁴⁷ The carrier will not, however, be relieved of liability if the accident resulted from any physical or mental failing of the driver or from any defect in or malfunctioning of the vehicle or from any wrongful act or neglect of any person from whom the carrier hired the vehicle. ⁸⁴⁸ The national law of the country where the court seised of the case is located determines not only the extent of an injury giving rise to compensation but also the persons who are entitled to compensation for such injury. ⁸⁴⁹

Loss of, or damage to, luggage

36-152

The carrier is liable for loss or damage resulting from the total or partial loss of luggage and for damage thereto. ⁸⁵⁰ This liability for luggage handed to the carrier extends over the whole period from the time when he takes charge of the luggage until he delivers it or deposits it in a safe and convenient place, ⁸⁵¹ if it is not claimed on the arrival of the vehicle. ⁸⁵² The carrier is in general responsible for other luggage (which term includes personal effects carried or worn by the passenger) while it is in the vehicle but is only held responsible for luggage which is stolen or cannot be found if it has been placed in his care. The only exception to this is in the event of an accident. ⁸⁵³ The carrier is relieved of liability if the loss or damage results from an inherent defect in the luggage or from a special risk inherent in its perishable or dangerous nature or from circumstances which the carrier could not have avoided even if he had used the diligence required by the facts of the case. ⁸⁵⁴ As in the case of personal injuries, the carrier is responsible for the failings of the driver, the defects in the vehicle and the wrongful acts of any person from whom he has hired the vehicle. ⁸⁵⁵ Luggage not delivered within 14 days from the date on which the passenger claims it is deemed to have been lost. ⁸⁵⁶

Upper financial limits of liability

36-153

The CVR carrier's liability and that of his employees and agents ⁸⁵⁷ in the event of death of or personal injury to passengers is limited to 83,333 units of account ⁸⁵⁸ for each victim in respect of the same occurrence. ⁸⁵⁹ This amount is exclusive of both legal or other costs incurred by the parties and of interest. ⁸⁶⁰ A higher limit may be agreed between the parties to the contract of carriage. ⁸⁶¹ It is, however, competent for any contracting state to set a higher limit of liability or to set no limit at all. When a carrier has his principal establishment in such a state (or in a non-contracting state which has a higher limit, or no limit at all) the law of that state prevails in relation to the determination of the total amount of damages. ⁸⁶² The carrier's liability and that of his employees and agents in the event of total or partial loss of, or damage to, luggage for which he is responsible cannot exceed 166.67 units of account for each piece of luggage or 666.67 units of account for each passenger. Compensation in respect of personal effects carried or worn by the passenger is limited to 333.33 units of account for each passenger. ⁸⁶³ These amounts, once again, are exclusive of legal or other costs and of interest. ⁸⁶⁴ If, however, loss or damage results from wilful misconduct or gross negligence by the carrier or by a person for whom he is responsible (i.e. his employees and agents and all other persons whose services he uses to perform his obligations under the Convention), ⁸⁶⁵ the carrier cannot rely on those provisions of CVR which exclude his liability in whole or in part or which limit the compensation payable. ⁸⁶⁶

Carrier's exemptions from liability

36-154

The carrier's exemptions under arts 11(2) and 14(2) have already been described. ⁸⁶⁷ The carrier may also be exonerated wholly or in part if any loss or damage resulted from the wrongful act or neglect of the passenger or from conduct by the passenger not conforming to the normal conduct of a passenger.⁸⁶⁸ The carrier is not liable for loss or damage caused by a nuclear incident if by the law of a particular contracting state the operator of a nuclear installation is liable instead for such loss or damage.⁸⁶⁹

Extinction of claims and limitations of actions

36-155

The period of limitation for actions arising out of death or personal injury to passengers is three years from the date on which the person suffering loss or damage in this respect had or should have had knowledge of it. This period of limitation cannot, however, exceed five years from the date of the accident.⁸⁷⁰ The period of limitation for all other actions arising out of carriage under the Convention is one year from the date on which the vehicle arrived at the place of destination of the passenger or (in the case of non-arrival) from the date on which the vehicle ought to have arrived at that place of destination.⁸⁷¹ The receipt of luggage by a passenger without complaint on his part is prima facie evidence that it was delivered complete and in good condition. Any complaint must be made to the carrier orally or in writing within seven days of actual receipt of the luggage by the complainant passenger.⁸⁷² The passenger is, however, relieved of this obligation if the loss or condition of the luggage has been duly checked by the passenger and the carrier.⁸⁷³

Jurisdiction

36-156

A claimant instituting proceedings arising out of carriage under the Convention may bring an action in any court or tribunal of a contracting state designated by agreement between the parties. He may also institute proceedings in the courts or tribunals of the state within whose territory either (a) the loss or damage occurred; or (b) the place of departure or destination of the carriage was located; or (c) the defendant had his principal place of business or was habitually resident or had the place of business through which the contract of carriage was made.⁸⁷⁴

No contracting out

36-157

Any stipulation which would directly or indirectly derogate from the provisions of the Convention is null and void.⁸⁷⁵ In particular any clause assigning to the carrier the benefit of any insurance made in favour of the passenger or any similar clause, or any clause shifting the burden of proof, is null and void.⁸⁷⁶ Any proceedings to enforce a liability imposed on the carrier under CVR are subject to the terms and limits laid down in the Convention.⁸⁷⁷

^{831.} See above, para.36-082. See, generally, Hodgkin [1976] L.M.C.L.Q. 1.

^{832.} s.1(1) and Sch.1 Pt 14. The 2004 Act also repealed those parts of the Carriage by Air and Road Act 1979 which provided for the implementation of the Protocol to the CVR which was agreed in 1979.

^{833.} CVR art.1(1).

^{834.} CVR art.2.

^{835.} CVR art.3.

- 836. CVR art.5(1) and (2).
- 837. CVR art.6.
- 838. CVR art.5(1).
- 839. CVR art.5(3).
- 840. CVR art.7.
- 841. CVR art.8(1).
- 842. CVR art.8(2).
- 843. CVR art.9.
- 844. CVR art.10(1).
- 845. CVR art.10(2).
- 846. CVR art.11(1).
- 847. CVR art.11(2).
- 848. CVR art.11(3).
- 849. CVR art.12.
- 850. CVR art.14(1).
- 851. CVR art.10(3).
- 852. CVR art.14(1).
- 853. CVR art.14(1).
- 854. CVR art.14(2).
- 855. CVR art.14(3).
- 856. CVR art.15.
- 857. CVR arts 4 and 18(1).
- 858. CVR art.19, inserted by the Protocol to the CVR 1979 (Cmnd. 7481). The unit of account is the Special Drawing Right (SDR).
- 859. CVR art.13(1).
- 860. CVR art.13(2).
- 861. CVR art.13(3).
- 862. CVR art.13(1).
- 863. CVR art.16(1).
- 864. CVR art.16(2).

- 865. CVR art.4.
- 866. CVR art.18(2).
- 867. See above, paras 36-150—36-151.
- 868. CVR art.17(1).
- 869. CVR art.17(3).
- 870. CVR art.22(1).
- 871. CVR art.22(2).
- 872. CVR art.20(1).
- 873. CVR art.20(2).
- 874. CVR art.21(1).
- 875. CVR art.23(1).
- 876. CVR art.23(2).
- 877. CVR art.18(1).

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts
Section 1. - The Nature of Construction Contracts
(a) - Definitions

Construction

37-001

The term “construction” comprehends any form of building or assembling, but is usually confined to the creation of, or the carrying out of work to or in connection with, immovable property. Construction embraces the carrying out of both building and engineering works. The same principles, with some adaptation, apply to construction in relation to other property such as ships, aircraft, plant and machinery, as well as computer hardware and software.

Construction contract

37-002

English law, with some exceptions, contains no rules or principles which would regulate the performance of construction work, and hence construction contracts subject to English or other similar legal systems ¹ generally employ relatively elaborate forms of contract setting out the rights and duties of the parties, which have been said to resemble a “legislative code”. ² The term “construction contract” includes both “building contract” and “engineering contract”, which will have particular characteristics depending upon the technical subject matter of the contract under consideration. Building usually indicates a structure intended for occupation whereas engineering will embrace any form of construction, which need not be static. The former tends to employ the JCT ³ Standard Form of Building Contract and the latter the ICC ⁴ form in the case of civil engineering works or other specialist forms. The JCT and ICC forms are referred to in this chapter to illustrate the many legal points which can arise and the way in which the standard forms deal with them. Many construction contracts are now let on individually drafted contract forms, but on analysis their terms will usually be found to be based on one or more of the standard forms dealt with in this chapter.

Work, materials and design

37-003

Construction contracts involve the provision of work (also referred to as labour and, more recently, services) and materials (including goods, plant or equipment). In addition, construction contracts usually involve an element of “design”, a ubiquitous and imprecise term which is often a source of dispute. At its lowest level, design involves the choice of appropriate materials and working methods, where not specified in the contract. At another level, design includes determination of the detailed physical characteristics of the building or works to comply with stated requirements or performance criteria. Such a contract is usually termed “design and build” but there are many intermediate stages. Similarly, “management” is comprehended to some degree in all construction contracts. Where this is the primary contribution of the contractor, who is intended otherwise to sub-let all physical work, the arrangement is usually called a “management contract”. ⁵

Building contract

37-004

A building contract has been judicially described as:

“... an entire contract for the sale of goods and work and labour for a lump sum price payable by instalments as the goods are delivered and the work is done ...”⁶ although the payment for work by instalments is not a necessary feature of all construction contracts⁷, and nor are all building contracts for a lump sum. The subject matter of construction contracts will often require complex and specialist provisions and contractual machinery not often found in other commercial contracts, such as provisions in relation to the grant of an extension of time for completion of the contract works. However, consistent with the above definition, the law relating to construction contracts is the application in a particular context of the general principles of the law of contract, and no more.⁸

Statutory definition

37-005

The above description of construction contracts⁹ now needs to take account of the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 which, in ss.104 and 105, provides an extensive, but by no means comprehensive, statutory definition of “construction contract”. Thus, by s.104(2) of the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996, a construction contract will include an agreement to do architectural, design or surveying work,¹⁰ or an agreement to provide advice on building, engineering, interior or exterior decoration or on the laying-out of landscape,¹¹ in relation to construction operations. However, drilling for oil or gas, tunnelling generally, plant or steel work for nuclear processing, power generation, water or effluent treatment or chemical, oil, gas, steel or food and drink production and the supply (excluding installation) of components, materials, plant and machinery generally are all excluded from the definition and therefore the provisions of the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996.¹² In addition, by statutory instrument¹³ Private Finance Initiative (PFI) contracts and highway and sewerage works for adoption are excluded from the definition of “construction contract”. These exclusions together cover a major portion of what is generally regarded as construction work. Furthermore, the structure of s.105 in terms of “inclusions” and “exclusions” leads to the position that a contract between a contractor and an owner of a crane for the hire of a crane plus a driver was held to be a contract for construction operations which formed an integral part of, or were preparatory to, or were for rendering complete, construction operations within s.105(1)(a).¹⁴

Application of Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996

37-006

The Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 is to apply whether or not the contract is subject to English law, provided the construction operations are within the jurisdiction.¹⁵ Furthermore, the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 provides that:

“where an agreement relates to construction operations and other matters, this part applies to it only so far as relates to construction operations.”¹⁶

The notional division of contracts in relation to payment obligations may be workable but the resolution of disputes by adjudication¹⁷ in relation to part only of a contract, or the operation of a right of suspension ¹⁸ in relation to part of the work, may require further consideration. ¹⁹

-
1. This covers all common law jurisdictions including the United States; and even where Code law exists defining rights and duties in relation to construction activities, there is an increasing tendency to use standard forms similar to the English models.
 2. Amalgamated Building Contractors v Waltham Holy Cross UDC [1952] 2 All E.R. 452, per Lord Denning at 453.
 3. Joint Contracts Tribunal.
 4. Until 2011 this form was sponsored by and bore the name of the Institution of Civil Engineers (ICE). The ICE in 2011 withdrew its sponsorship and the (substantially unamended) form is now issued by its other sponsors, the Civil Engineering Contractors Association (CECA) and the Association of Consulting Engineers (ACE) under the new name of the Infrastructure Conditions of Contract (ICC).
 5. See below, para.37-015.
 6. Lord Diplock in Modern Engineering (Bristol) Ltd v Gilbert-Ash (Northern) Ltd [1974] A.C. 689, at 717B and 722G. This is referred to in Beaufort Developments (NI) Ltd v Gilbert-Ash (NI) Ltd [1999] 1 A.C. 226, 290.
 7. A construction contract falling within the definition provided by ss.104 and 105 of the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 must now contain provision for payment by instalments unless it is specified in the contract that the duration of the work is to be less than 45 days (s.109).
 8. Lord Reid in Modern Engineering (Bristol) Ltd v Gilbert-Ash (Northern) Ltd [1974] A.C. 689, 699H: "... When parties enter into a detailed building contract there are, however, no overriding rules or principles covering their contractual relationship beyond those which generally apply to the construction of contracts ..." See also, Lord Lloyd of Berwick in Beaufort Developments (NI) Ltd v Gilbert-Ash Ltd [1999] 1 A.C. 226, 290: "... Standard forms of building contract have often been criticised by the courts for being unnecessarily obscure and verbose. But in fairness one should add that it is sometimes the courts themselves who have added to the difficulty by treating building contracts as if they were subject to special rules of their own ..."
 9. For a table of the dates on which the relevant provisions of the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 came into force, see Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 (Commencement No.3) Order 1997 (SI 1997/2846).
 10. s.104(2)(a).
 11. s.104(2)(b).
 12. The statutory definition has been further considered in Nottingham Community Housing Association Ltd v Powerminster Ltd [2000] B.L.R. 309; Shepherd Construction Ltd v Mecright Ltd [2000] B.L.R. 489; and ABB Zantingh Ltd v Zedal Building Services Ltd [2001] B.L.R. 66. It is also to be noted that a party can become estopped from contending, at the stage of enforcement of the Adjudicator's Decision, that the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 and the Scheme do not apply; see Maymac Environmental Services Ltd v Faraday Building Services Ltd (2000) 75 Con. L.R. 101.
 13. See s.105(3).
 14. Baldwins Industrial Services Plc v Barr Ltd [2003] B.L.R. 176.
 15. s.104(6), (7).

- 16. s.104(5).
- 17. s.108 and see below, paras 37-262 et seq.
- 18. s.112.
- 19. The Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 has been amended by the Local Democracy, Economic Development and Construction Act 2009 but ss.104 and 105 are unchanged.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts
Section 1. - The Nature of Construction Contracts
(b) - Types of Construction Contract—Payment

Range of subject matter

37-007

From the descriptions of construction contracts above, it follows that there is a very broad range of subject matter which will fall under this heading, ranging from the refurbishment of a domestic dwelling to the construction of a power station or a motorway. In view of this diversity of technical subject matter, and the vastly different requirements and anticipated roles of the parties to the contracts, construction contracts can be usefully considered as falling into one of several broad categories, depending upon how the obligations of the parties are defined and arranged.

Lump sum contract

37-008

In a lump sum contract, the contractor is required to carry out and complete the entirety of the identified contract works for a fixed sum agreed in advance, or, as is more usual, if there are changes in the scope of the named contract works, for "... such other sum as shall become payable under this contract".²⁰ In the case of lump sum contracts, the proposed contract works will be of a known extent (that is, not at the development/design stage) and described in detail in a specification, bill of quantities or in drawings or in a combination of these. Where the specification or bill of quantities forms part of the contract,²¹ provided the work is sufficiently described, the contractor will be taken to have included for that work in his fixed price.²² Where work is not sufficiently described, and its existence is not reasonably to be inferred from the language of the contract,²³ the contractor will be entitled to recover payment in addition to the fixed price.²⁴ A lump sum contract may include responsibility for design and management.

Degree of completion required

37-009

An important question in the context of lump sum contracts is the extent to which completion of the entire contract must be achieved before the lump sum price is payable, assuming the absence of any right of the contractor to payment by instalments. The general position is that where, on a true construction, a contract is an entire contract, then the contractor is entitled to recover nothing on the contract before the work is completed.²⁵ However, this does not mean that the employer will be able to avoid payment of the fixed price by reference to defects or omissions since:

"It is not every breach of that term which absolves the employer from his promise to pay the price, but only a breach which goes to the root of the contract, such as an abandonment of the work when it is only half done. Unless the breach does go to the root of the matter, the employer cannot resist payment of the price. He must pay it and bring a cross-claim for the defects-and omissions, or, alternatively, set them up in diminution of the price ...”²⁶

Remeasurement contract

37-010

Work carried out under a remeasurement contract is measured and valued as the work proceeds, so that there is no pre-agreed lump sum. There is typically a bill of quantities in which the quantities are estimated, the rates inserted being intended to form the basis for the remeasurement of work²⁷ carried out, in the case of the ICC Form of Contract, by the engineer, although the task of preparing interim statements and a final account for submission to the engineer is an obligation upon the contractor.²⁸ Equally, under cl.56(2) of ICC, a mechanism exists whereby the engineer can vary the agreed rates where the quantities differ sufficiently from those described in the bills of quantities as to change the nature of the work undertaken,²⁹ since the contractor is entitled to price on the quantities in the bill.³⁰

Prime cost contracts

37-011

In this type of contract (used most often in connection with works requiring substantial design development during the course of the work) the contractor is paid the actual or prime cost of carrying out the works or (in the case of management contracts) of procuring the contract works, plus a fee or other element for profit (which may or may not depend upon the final value of the works). The JCT Management Contract is a Prime Cost contract, the definition and detailed machinery for the ascertainment of the prime cost being set out in a contract schedule. Any definition of Prime Cost will exclude certain costs which the contractor is required to bear. Thus, there will usually be express exclusions of cost resulting from any negligence by the contractor in performing his obligations under the contract.

A prime cost contract may contain an express term that the contractor will incur cost with reasonable efficiency and care. However, in the absence of an express term the question whether such a term is to be implied will depend on the circumstances surrounding the making of the contract.

Hybrid contracts

37-012

Since construction contracts cover such a wide range of activities, contracts will be found which combine the above methods of payment and which contain or include others. Many contracts contain payment mechanisms related to performance, especially for work which includes maintenance; and in others, the sum payable depends on the contractor's success in meeting an agreed cost-limit or "target".

^{20.} art.2 of the Articles of Agreement, JCT Standard Building Contract (2011 edn).

^{21.} Patman & Fotheringham v Pilditch (1904) 2 H.B.C., 4th edn, 368.

^{22.} A-Jac Demolition (London) Ltd v Urlin Rent-A-Car Inc (1990) 74 O.R. 2nd 474 DC.

- 23. Williams v Fitzmaurice (1858) 3 H. & N. 844.
- 24. C Bryant & Son Ltd v Birmingham Hospital Saturday Fund [1938] 1 All E.R. 503.
- 25. Hoenig v Isaacs [1952] 2 All E.R. 176, 178H, per Somervell L.J.; and see Sumpter v Hedges [1898] 1 Q.B. 673.
- 26. Hoenig v Isaacs [1952] 2 All E.R. 176, 181A, per Denning L.J. The question of what is required for substantial completion is discussed in Keating on Construction Contracts, 9th edn (2012), para.4–009.
- 27. See, for example, cl.56(1) of the ICC (2011), formerly the ICE Form, 7th edn (1999).
- 28. ICC Form cl.60.
- 29. See Keating on Construction Contracts, 9th edn (2012), p.1180 (commentary on cl.56(2) ICC Form); Abrahamson, Engineering Law and the ICE Contracts, 4th edn (1979, reprinted 1996), p.210.
- 30. The question of re-rate under the ICE 5th edn is considered in Construction Award No.6 (1992) in [1995] Con. L. Yb. 57. See also Kelly Pipelines Ltd v British Gas Plc (1989) 48 B.L.R. 126.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts
Section 1. - The Nature of Construction Contracts
(c) - Types of Construction Contract—Procurement

Standard procurement

37-013

The JCT and ICC forms of contract represent a type of procurement which has become traditional during most of the 20th century. Such contracts are based on a full description of the works to be executed being provided by or on behalf of the employer, to be produced respectively by the architect or engineer, who is intended then to become the contract administrator under the construction contract. Prospective contractors are invited to bid in competition for the work described, the contract usually being awarded to the lowest tenderer.³¹ The general principle is that the employer, through his agents, provides the design and the contractor builds to it. But even in this form of contract contractors may, to a greater or lesser extent, accept some form of design responsibility. Other methods of procurement have existed in the past and many alternatives presently exist for the commissioning of construction works, and are considered below. While the JCT and ICC Forms of Contract are no longer dominant in the construction industry, they remain well-known and are frequently used as the basis of ad hoc forms. They are used in this chapter to illustrate many of the issues under consideration.

Design and build contracts

37-014

This type of contract may be regarded as a “package deal” whereby the employer obtains all or substantially all of the design work and construction through the main contractor, although the construction work may be performed by sub-contractors and the design by a subcontracted professional team. The JCT Standard Form of Building Contract with Contractor's Design 1981 Edition (now 2011) and the ICC Design and Construct Version³² are examples of such contracts. These forms each incorporate within the contract documents “Employer's Requirements”, in which the works to be produced are described in terms of performance and any other requirements the employer wishes to lay down. The tenderer is required to produce “Contractor's Proposals”, which set out in detail the way in which the employer's requirements are to be fulfilled, such proposals also being incorporated into the contract. Design and build contracts are usually based on prime cost, but may also contain lump sum elements where the detailed design work precedes the contract. Expressions such as “design and build” (or “turnkey” or “package deal” contracts) can often obscure³³ the precise nature of the rights and obligations of the parties to a particular contract. In *Viking Grain Storage v TH White Installations*³⁴ the court considered whether the contractor (White) had assumed a responsibility for the design of a grain drying and storage installation. After considering the evidence in relation to the formation of the contract, the Official Referee said³⁵:

“Those documents and the conduct of the parties as borne out by the correspondence before me, from 29 January 1980, point unequivocally, in my view, to the assumption by White of responsibility for all aspects of the project, including its design from start to finish ... The lump sum price was to include the services which were to be laid on. The specifications and drawings for the civil works were prepared by White; as were those for drainage and other services, for the buildings and for the functional parts of the installation ...”

Where the contractor takes on design work, and there is reliance on his skill and judgment, ³⁶ then, save where the implication of a term is displaced by the express terms of the contract, there will be an implied term as to the fitness of those works for their intended purpose. ³⁷ This is a valuable implied term to an employer because it will be no defence for the contractor to show that he has taken reasonable skill and care in the preparation of the relevant aspect of design. Most standard forms, however, seek to limit the contractor's responsibility to one of reasonable skill and care. Contractors may engage a professional firm to carry out the design element of a design and build contract as a sub-contractor. In such circumstances the relevant standard of care owed to the contractor will be at least a duty to take reasonable care, although it is possible for a strict obligation (analogous to that ordinarily owed by a contractor to his client in respect of construction issues) to be owed. ³⁸ Similarly, the employer may engage professionals to safeguard his own interests and to inspect the contractor's design and work.

Management contracts

37-015

This expression refers to a variety of different types of contract under which the principal role of the contractor is the management of the construction operation as opposed to the physical performance of the work, which is usually substantially or wholly sub-contracted. Although the physical work is sub-contracted, the management contractor will often undertake primary responsibility for carrying out the work in accordance with the time limits and quality requirements specified in the contract. However, the forms of contract usually limit the liability of the management contractor, often by reference to sums recovered from the sub-contractor who may be in default. ³⁹ Management contracts generally require the whole of the physical work to be sub-let and treated as prime cost, with the main contractor receiving remuneration in the form of a management fee, rather than payment based on value of the work executed. Standard forms of management contract are issued by both the JCT and ICC and these also provide the basis for further ad hoc forms devised by parties, often with specific projects in mind.

Term contracts

37-016

Such arrangements are commonly used for the carrying out of large numbers of small repetitive items such as excavation and backfilling to carry out work to statutory undertakers' equipment in highways (holes in the road). The relevant authority may let a contract to carry out such work as may be instructed within a given period, at rates which are specified or ascertainable. Part of the consideration may be in the form of a periodic “retainer” to cover overheads and there may be provisions covering substantial changes to the anticipated quantity of work. It is a matter of construction in each case, whether the arrangement consists of one continuing contract or a series of contracts created when orders are placed. ⁴⁰

Joint ventures

37-017

Contracts are frequently undertaken by two or more contractors operating as a “joint venture”. This has no effect on the position of the employer other than through the advantage of having two or more contractors who are usually required to accept joint and several liability. The structure of the joint venture may take any legal form. If a partnership is used, each partner will undertake direct liability to the employer; or if a company structure is used, the companies forming the joint venture will be required to enter into direct collateral agreements with the employer. As between the joint venturers inter se there will be a management structure which will define inter alia the sharing of cost and profit, the provision of capital, the management of the project and the settlement of any disputes between the joint venturers. The rights of joint venturers inter se will be determined by the general law of partnership or companies. Joint ventures may be formed to bid for a single project or for a number of projects; or for a continuing business. Provision will need to be made for the costs of tendering for unsuccessful projects, particularly where it is intended to form the joint venture only upon the tender being accepted.

Private Finance Initiative ("PFI")

37-018

This represents the most far-reaching change to the UK (and worldwide) construction industry since the early 1990s. The PFI provides an alternative means of financing major public projects through the use of private equity finance. The PFI "contractor" enters into a contract with the intended user of the project or facilities, under which the user covenants to pay fees or charges over the period of the PFI contract, which is usually 25 years. The necessary land will usually be transferred to the PFI contract for the period so that the arrangement operates in a manner similar to a mortgage of the property, which is usually to be returned to the original owner at the end of the period. While the PFI contract will be governed by particular and special conditions (further dealt with below ⁴¹) the design and construction of the facilities or works will be carried out under a series of contracts and sub-contracts similar to and governed by the same principles as conventional construction contracts.

-
- ^{31.} The dangers of encouraging low bidding have been much discussed. Tendering for public works and services is now subject to European Directives, implemented by the Public Contracts Regulations 2006 or the Public Contracts (Scotland) Regulations 2006 under which (inter alia) a contracting authority may award a contract on the basis of the most economically advantageous tender ("MEAT"), a principle which may also be applied outside the range of the Regulations. See also Bowsher and Moser, "Damages for breach of the EC Public Procurement Rules in the United Kingdom" (2005) 15 P.P.L.R. 195.
- ^{32.} (2011) edition.
- ^{33.} See: I. N. Duncan Wallace, "Contracts for Industrial Plant Projects" (1984) 1 I.C.L.R. 322.
- ^{34.} (1985) 33 B.L.R. 103.
- ^{35.} (1985) 33 B.L.R. 103 at 110–111.
- ^{36.} Young & Marten v McManus Childs [1969] 1 A.C. 454, 472; Norta Wallpapers v John Sisk & Sons (1976) 14 B.L.R. 53 (a decision of the Irish Supreme Court); IBA v EMI and BICC (1980) 14 B.L.R. 1, 44–46; University of Warwick v Sir Robert McAlpine (1988) 42 B.L.R. 1 at 10–16 (in which Garland J. considered all of the decisions referred to above).
- ^{37.} Samuels v Davies [1943] 1 K.B. 526; Greaves & Co (Contractors) Ltd v Baynham Meikle & Partners [1975] 1 W.L.R. 1095; Independent Broadcasting Authority v EMI Electronics Ltd and BICC Construction Ltd (1980) 14 B.L.R. 1; Viking Grain Storage Ltd v TH White Installations Ltd (1985) 33 B.L.R. 103. In John Lelliott (Contracts) Ltd v Byrne Bros (Formwork) Ltd (1992) 31 Con. L.R. 89 at 92 His Honour Judge Newey Q.C. said: "I think that the effect of the cases is that when a party to a contract agrees to supply a structure for a particular purpose knowing that his knowledge and skill will be relied upon by the other party the courts will readily imply a term requiring that it will be fit for that purpose, but that express terms of the contract, particular facts or general background may result in this not being so ...". See also Rotherham MBC v Frank Haslam Milan (1996) 78 B.L.R. 1 CA.

- 38. See Greaves and Co Ltd v Baynham Meikle [1975] 1W.L.R. 1095 CA; and George Hawkins v Chrysler UK Ltd (1986) 38 B.L.R. 36.
- 39. See Copthorne v Arup Associates (1997) 85 B.L.R. 22 (a case on the JCT Form of Management Contract, 1987 edn).
- 40. See Brogden v Metropolitan Railway (1877) 2 App. Cas. 666. For an indication of the way in which the courts approach term (or “maintenance”) contracts, see Bonnells Electrical Contractors v London Underground (1995) C.I.L.L. 1110.
- 41. See paras 37-023, 37-039.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts
Section 1. - The Nature of Construction Contracts
(d) - Standard Forms of Contract

Use of standard forms

37-019

Construction contracts are often characterised by, and have also been criticised for,⁴² the use of lengthy and elaborate standard forms.⁴³ Given the frequent long-term nature of construction contracts, detailed machinery is required which permits adjustment of the relationship between the parties in changed circumstances (for example, by the use of variation and price escalation clauses).⁴⁴ Although standard forms have been thought of as resembling legislative codes of the parties,⁴⁵ their effect is no different to any other written form of contract.⁴⁶ There are now many clauses in the most frequently used standard forms which are the subject of decisions of the courts and the broad approach of the courts to such decided cases is that reasonable businessmen are entitled to assume that the authoritative construction of particular words will be followed.⁴⁷ Where bespoke forms are encountered it is almost invariably found that the bulk of the provisions are nevertheless based on one or more of the standard forms, with amendments as required by the particular client. However, it is also commonplace for standard forms to be substantially amended.⁴⁸ In these circumstances it is important to remember that⁴⁹ “Comparison of one contract with another can seldom be a useful aid to construction and may be ... positively misleading ...”.

The contract administrator

37-020

A common feature of practically all standard forms of contract (as well as most bespoke forms) is the widespread use of a third party, variously given the title engineer, architect, supervising officer, or project manager, who is given an important administrative role involving both action as the employer's agent and decisions taken on the basis of an impartial professional opinion.⁵⁰ Such persons are compendiously referred to in this chapter as the contract administrator.

Institutional standard forms

37-021

Standard forms issued by public and local authorities for both building and civil engineering work were well known in the nineteenth century.⁵¹ Forms officially sanctioned by the construction institutions emerged only during the twentieth century. Best known are the JCT Standard Form of Building Contract (until 1977 known as the RIBA Form) and the ICC Conditions of Contract (until 2011 known as the ICE Conditions). The JCT Form is published in three versions: with quantities, without quantities, and with approximate quantities. The ICE 7th Edition of 1999 and the ICC Form are described as “Measurement Version” but are also available as a “Term Version”. References in this chapter are to the Measurement Version. Both the JCT and ICC Forms are available as versions for design and build and there are also standard sub-contract documents. Many standard forms of sub-contract have been issued by the institutions which have produced main contract standard forms,

⁵² but some are issued by sectional bodies such as contractors' organisations. ⁵³ Particular types of construction activity have generated distinct standard forms, such as that issued by the Institutions of Mechanical Engineers and of Engineering and Technology (formerly the Institution of Electrical Engineers) known as MF/1 (Rev 4, 2000). This form is suitable for the construction of process plant and equipment where the contractor's obligation is to include the attainment of specified performance criteria or output levels at the end of the construction period. Other standard forms are issued by the same Institutions and also by the Institution of Chemical Engineers for process plant contracts. For international engineering and construction work a suite of standard form exists, known as the FIDIC Forms. ⁵⁴

Other standard forms

37-022

Since the 1970s increasing numbers of variants of these forms have been issued including forms for design and build contracts, for management contracts and for minor and intermediate works. ⁵⁵ A standard form used by many government departments was issued by the former Property Services Agency and known as GC/Works/1. A new suite of such forms, known as GC/Works/1 to 10, was produced in 1998 and 1999. There have been various attempts to produce a "common" standard form of construction contract of a kind to be found in some European countries. ⁵⁶ Such a form was recommended by the Banwell Committee (1964), but without result. During the 1980s an initiative was launched by the British Property Federation, again without lasting effect. In 1991, however, the ICE published the New Engineering Contract (now called the Engineering and Construction Contract), which aimed at providing, in a unified format, a complete range of contract documents covering all types of procurement and construction through the use of "core clauses" with optional additions. This form of contract was specifically recommended in the Latham Report ⁵⁷ as being conducive to best practice contracting. Its use of present tense language has been controversial ⁵⁸ but the form is now used in a wide variety of projects. The NEC is now in its 3rd edition (2005) and has been used for a number of high profile contracts, including the London 2012 Olympic projects. There are also sets of standard forms for the engagement of architects and engineers for use in different circumstances, some of which are issued by the relevant professional bodies such as the Royal Institute of British Architects or the Association of Consulting Engineers.

PFI contract forms

37-023

Since the advent of PFI contracting different forms of contract have emerged, initially drafted by private law firms. As projects have grown and expanded into new areas the task of achieving some form of standardisation has been undertaken not by the traditional construction industry institutions, but by HM Treasury which, since July 1999, has published and periodically revised a document entitled Standardisation of PFI Contracts ("SoPC"). An edition, known as Version 4, was issued in March 2007 and may be downloaded free from the Treasury website. ⁵⁹ SoPC provides very detailed guidance, including draft contract provisions, for the preparation of PFI contracts. The contents of such contracts are further reviewed below. As already noted contracts for the performance of the design and construction work involved in the PFI project are based on conventional contracts and governed by the same principles save where PFI-specific legislation applies.

^{42.} Peak Construction v McKinney Foundations (1970) 1 B.L.R. 111, 114.

^{43.} There have been some deliberate attempts to simplify construction and engineering contracts, and perhaps the most important example is the New Engineering and Construction Contract ("NECC").

^{44.} For a discussion of adjustments to long-term contracts, see Ewan McKendrick, Good Faith and Fault in Contract Law (1995).

45. Amalgamated Building Contractors Ltd v Waltham Holy Cross UDC [1952] 2 All E.R. 452.
46. Save that a printed form may constitute “written standard terms” of one party for the purposes of the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.3(1). Despite the terms of the DoE Consultation Paper, “Fair Construction Contracts”, issued in May 1995 following the Latham Report, the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 Pt II draws no distinction between standard and nonstandard or “bespoke” (see May 1995 Consultation Paper) forms contract. Accordingly, the provisions of the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 apply in the same way to both types of construction contract.
47. British Sugar v NEI Power Projects (1997) 87 B.L.R. 42 at 501, per Waller L.J. (a case on the meaning of “consequential loss”).
48. For a discussion on the use of bespoke and amended standard forms in the construction industry see DoE Consultation Paper, “Fair Construction Contracts”, May 1995.
49. Mitsui Construction Company Ltd v The Att-Gen of Hong Kong (1986) 33 B.L.R. 1, 18 PC.
50. Sutcliffe v Thackrah [1974] A.C. 727; Ashville Investments Ltd v Elmes Contractors Ltd [1989] 1 Q.B. 488 at 506; but see Beaufort Developments (NI) Ltd v Gilbert-Ash Ltd [1999] 1 A.C. 226, 290. See also Scheldebouw BV v St James Homes (Grosvenor Dock) Ltd [2006] EWHC 89 (TCC), [2006] B.L.R. 113, where Jackson J. described how, when undertaking a decision-making function, a contract administrator had a duty to act in a manner that was independent, impartial, fair and honest.
51. See I. Duncan Wallace, Construction Contracts: Principles and Policies in Tort and Contract (1986), paras 27–09 to 27–14.
52. Such as the JCT Domestic Sub-Contract 1981 (“DOM/1”) recommended for use where the JCT 80 has been used in the main contract. In practice, the use of DOM/1 is more widespread than this: its popularity seems to be based upon the focus upon interim payment and “cashflow” in its terms.
53. Notably the CECA “Blue Form” of sub-contract which is used where the ICE Conditions are part of the main contract.
54. Federation Internationale des Ingenieurs Conseils. While successive versions up to the 4th edn of 1987 were based closely on the format, including clause numbering of the ICE conditions, in 1998 FIDIC departed from tradition by producing a new suite of forms, covering a wide range of construction activities, in a new format which may be regarded a sui generis, although much of the detailed drafting owes its origin to earlier standard forms.
55. The JCT Intermediate Form of Building Contract 2011 edn and the JCT Agreement for Minor Building Works 2011 are particularly widespread standard forms.
56. Notably Denmark, Holland and Sweden.
57. See para.5.1.9.
58. See Valentine (1996) 12 Const. L.J. 305.
59. <http://www.hm-treasury.gov.uk>.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts
Section 1. - The Nature of Construction Contracts
(e) - Content of Standard Forms

Typical features

37-024

Whilst differing greatly both in their precise provisions and in their attempt to accommodate particular kinds or levels of construction activity, standard forms often have typical features of content and structure. Some of these are considered below by reference to the following popular standard forms of contract: the Joint Contracts Tribunal Standard forms (JCT 98 and JCT SBC 2005), Intermediate JCT form (IFC 98 and IC 2005), JCT Minor Works form (MW 98 and 2005) and the Infrastructure Conditions of Contract, 2011 (formerly the ICE Conditions 7th edn). The JCT in 2005 published a new suite of standard form contracts. The contract forms within the 2005 suite have been significantly reorganised in terms of structure and clause numbering, although the JCT SBC 2005 contains most of the material contained in the JCT 98 form. JCT 98 was itself largely a consolidation of the JCT 1980 form. The form was again re-issued in 2011, substantially to incorporate new payment provisions following amendment of the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996. Despite appearances, JCT 2005 and 2011 forms represent in substance the latest in a policy of continuity. The major changes from that which went before are as follows ⁶⁰:

(1)

the integration in the main body of the JCT SBC 2005 form of certain provisions previously contained in a JCT supplement; some amendments to the wording of important provisions;

(2)

(3)

some omissions from the JCT 98 form (such as nominated sub-contractors provisions); abandonment of the long-used title "Standard Form of Building Contract" in favour of "Standard Building Contract" ("SBC").

(4)

Contractor's general obligations

37-025

The overriding obligations upon the contractor are often set out at the beginning of the standard form. Clause 2.1 of JCT 2011 provides a general description of the contractor's obligations and provides that the work shall be carried out and completed in a proper and workmanlike manner. Clause 2.3 also provides further general obligations in respect of the quality of materials, goods and workmanship. In contracts involving some element of contractor's design, there will also ordinarily be general design obligations. Under the ICC Form, the contractor's general responsibilities are set out in cl.8, ⁶¹ whilst the duties and authority of the engineer are set out in cl.2. ⁶²

Priority of contract documents

37-026

Standard forms will typically identify which of the contract documents will have priority in the case of conflict, and then go on to provide for the adjustment of discrepancies in such documents. Clause 1.3 of the JCT 2011 Form provides that:

“The Agreement and these Conditions are to be read as a whole but nothing contained in the Contract Bills or the CDP Documents shall override or modify the Agreement or these Conditions.”

The Contract Bills will have been specifically agreed by the parties for the purposes of a particular contract, whereas the Contract Conditions will be the printed standard form. The clear words of cl.1.3 and the other similar provisions of other standard form contracts displace the general rule of construction ⁶³ that the written words specifically agreed by the parties will prevail over printed words in this way: if there is a direct conflict, then the conditions will prevail, but otherwise the bills may supplement what is stated in the conditions. ⁶⁴ Clause 5 of the ICC Form adopts a different approach to the priority of contract documents in two principal ways: (i) the clause provides that the several documents forming the contract are to be taken as mutually explanatory of one another; and (ii) ambiguities or discrepancies are to be explained and adjusted by the engineer, who is then to issue an appropriate instruction in writing (under cl.13).

Extras and changes

37-027

Variations will often be required in construction contracts as a result of changes to the employer's requirements or alterations to the design not apparent at tender. Clause 5.1 of JCT 2011 provides a definition of “Variation” for the purposes of those conditions and cl.5.2 to 5.10 deal with valuation. Equivalent provisions appear in other JCT contracts. In the ICC Form, the procedure for ordered variations is set out in cl.51, and the basis for valuation in cl.52. An important point of contrast here is that the ICC Form contains no equivalent of the JCT provisions for separate recovery of loss and expense caused by matters materially affecting regular progress of the works, so that, under the ICC Form, any cost incurred in connection with a variation must be recovered through cl.52. ⁶⁵

Instructions

37-028

Standard forms will provide a machinery for the contract administrator to give instructions to the contractor to secure the construction of the works in conformity with the contract. ⁶⁶ Instructions will be necessary where drawings and specifications produced for pricing and tender purposes are found to be insufficiently comprehensive to build the finished product. Whilst the precise scope of the authority of the contract administrator will depend upon the construction of the contract, ⁶⁷ he will not have power to modify the express terms of the contract, and there will usually be an implied term that instructions are to be given at a time which is reasonable in all the circumstances of the particular contract.⁶⁸ Clauses 3.10 to 3.21 of the JCT 2011 Form deal with the architect's instructions. Clause 3.10 requires the contractor to comply with all instructions issued to him by the architect insofar as the architect is expressly empowered by the contract to issue such instructions and cl.3.14 to 3.21 set out those instructions which the architect is empowered to issue. Clause 3.10.1 of JCT 2011 provides that where an instruction is one requiring a variation the contractor need not comply to the extent that he makes a reasonable objection. Otherwise, if the contractor fails to comply with an instruction within seven days, cl.3.11 permits the employer to employ others to execute the relevant work and pass on all additional costs to the contractor. Clause 2(6) of the ICC Form deals with the method by which instructions can be given by the engineer; cl.7(1) deals with the situation where further drawings, specifications and instructions are "... necessary for the purpose of the proper and adequate construction and completion of the works ..." and cl.7(4) deals with the question of late instructions.

Certificates

37-029

In most construction contracts, the entitlement of the contractor to payment or extensions of time depends on the certificate or decision of the architect, engineer or other professional identified in the contract.⁶⁹ For example, the elaborate provisions of cl.4 of JCT 2011 deal with certificates (interim and final) and payment of the contractor. Clauses 4.9 to 4.13 of JCT 2011 deal with certification of interim payment and cl.4.15 provides for issue of the final certificate. Clause 60 of the ICC Form deals with certificates and payment. It is to be noted that many of the most prevalent standard forms use words such as "opinion", and so call for an assessment by the contract administrator, based upon his skill and judgment.

Time for completion

37-030

The parties will usually make express provision for a completion date or at least a completion period, and many construction contracts have optional additional requirements for sectional or phased handover of parts of the works.⁷⁰ Clause 14 of the ICC Form provides for the submission by the contractor to the engineer for his acceptance of a programme "... showing the order in which he proposes to carry out the Works having regard to the provisions of clause 42(1)" (possession of the site and access). The status and effect of the stipulations as to time in a building contract are matters of construction in the particular case: sectional handover of work may be required; time may be fixed by reference to specified start and finish dates; programmes submitted by the contractor may, but need not, create enforceable obligations; or time may be expressly stated to be of the essence, thereby allowing the innocent party to treat breach as putting the contract at an end.⁷¹ The courts have shown a distinct reluctance to accept the proposition that building contracts are easily undermined by events which impact upon the time for completion.⁷² Where the express term governing time for completion is lost, then time is sometimes described as being rendered "at large" (so that completion will be required in a reasonable time). The courts have not always been content with this solution to the problem of time, as in *Bruno Zornow v Beechcroft Developments*⁷³ where the Court considered that it made commercial sense to imply a date for completion into an agreement which varied works covered by an agreement which did contain a completion date.⁷⁴ In the absence of an enforceable express stipulation as to time, the court will normally imply a term into a contract that completion is to be within a reasonable time.⁷⁵ In the absence of express words governing the rate of progress to be achieved by the contractor within the period for completion⁷⁶ it seems that, depending upon the circumstances of the particular case, there may be room for the implication of a term that the contractor will proceed with reasonable diligence, or it may be that the sole obligation upon the contractor is that of completing within the period for completion.⁷⁷

Extensions of time and liquidated damages

37-031

Standard forms will often contain detailed provisions identifying the circumstances in which, and the precise means by which, the time for completion may be extended (so that such other provisions of the contract as, say, those permitting the levy of liquidated damages for delay, will not apply). Clause 2.32 of JCT 2011 deals with the entitlement to deduct liquidated damages for non-completion and cl.2.26 to 2.29 deal with extensions of time. In the ICC Form, extensions of time are dealt with by cl.44, and liquidated damages by cl.47.⁷⁸

Valuation and payment

37-032

The provisions in any given standard form relating to interim and final valuation and payment will be central to the contractor's cash flow. For any "construction contract" within the meaning of s.104 of Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996, ss.109–113 will have an important impact upon provisions relating to payment. Equally, from the point of view of cash flow, in circumstances where rights of set-off otherwise existing at common law can be restricted or curtailed by the use of clear words,⁷⁹ standard forms of sub-contract may, in particular, contain detailed notice provisions governing the entitlement of the main contractor to set-off sums in respect of defects or delays to the works.⁸⁰ These provisions will need to be adhered to in detail to avoid loss of the right to set-off.⁸¹

Insurance of the works

37-033

Given the expense and risk of damage involved in construction projects, standard forms will typically make extensive provision for the insurance of the works.⁸² Clauses 6.4 to 6.9 of JCT 2011 require the contractor to take out and maintain insurance in respect of claims for injury to persons or property and also deal with the insurance of the works. Clauses 23 and 21 respectively of the ICC Form contains similar requirements.

Correction of defects

37-034

Standard forms will often make specific provision for the correction of defects during the course of the works. Clauses 3.17 to 3.20 of JCT 2011 deal with the power of the architect to issue instructions to ensure that the works meet the standards described in the contract. In the ICC Form, the removal, substitution and re-execution of unsatisfactory work and materials (by instruction in writing from the engineer to the contractor) during the progress of the works is dealt with by cl.39.

Termination

37-035

Construction contracts will typically provide machinery identifying the circumstances in which defaults of either party will entitle the innocent party to terminate the contractor's employment under the contract. These often complex procedures will need to be operated with considerable care since a party purporting to terminate a contract without an entitlement to do so will generally be found to have repudiated the contract. The relevant provision of JCT 2011 (cl. 8) is organised around the occurrence of defined specified defaults. Clause 8.3.1 makes clear that the provisions of the contract do not affect the rights and remedies available at common law. Thus, in the case of repudiatory breach by the contractor, cl.8.4 would not preclude the employer from treating the contract as at an end, as in Sutcliffe v Chippendale & Edmondson.⁸³ The employer has an option either to accept the repudiation and treat the contract as at an end, or to comply with the contractual termination provisions. Under the ICC Form, termination of the contractor's employment is dealt with by cl.65.

Disputes

37-036

Standard forms of building contract will typically contain provisions for the resolution of disputes or differences, whether by litigation, arbitration, expert determination or adjudication.⁸⁴ The JCT suite of contracts provide for the parties to elect between litigation and arbitration as their ultimate form of dispute resolution with litigation being the default position if the parties fail to specify. This is to be contrasted with the position that applied up to and including the 1998 versions of the JCT Form, which provided for arbitration to the default form of dispute resolution. Where there is an arbitration agreement, s.9(4) of the Arbitration Act 1996 entitles either party to a stay of legal proceedings save where the narrow circumstances identified in s.9 of the 1996 Act apply.⁸⁵ All forms of JCT contract also include provision for the temporary resolution of disputes by adjudication. This is required in all domestic construction contracts by virtue of s.108 of the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 but by making express provision for adjudication the parties to the contract will be permitted to adjudicate even if they would otherwise have fallen outside the scope of the Act, for example because one of the parties is a residential occupier with the meaning of s.106 of the Act.

-
- ^{60.} See generally Keating on Construction Contracts, 9th edn at para.20–006 to 20–008.
- ^{61.} This clause is substantially the same as cl.8 in the ICE 5th edn, save that by cl.8(2) of the ICE 7th edn, on which the ICC Conditions are based, the contractor is stated not to be responsible for the design or specification of the Permanent Works except as may be expressly provided in the contract, and the contractor is required to exercise all reasonable skill, care and diligence in designing any part of the Permanent Works for which he is responsible. For a discussion of the interrelationship between cl.8(2) and cl.12 of the ICE 5th edn, see Humber Oil Terminals Trustee Ltd v Harbour and General Works (Stevin) Ltd (1991) 59 B.L.R. 1 CA.
- ^{62.} On the general position of the engineer, see: Sutcliffe v Thackrah [1974] A.C. 727 HL; Pacific Associates v Baxter [1990] 1 Q.B. 993 CA.
- ^{63.} See: Keating on Construction Contracts, 9th edn (2012), para.3–030. Lewison, The Interpretation of Contracts, 5th edn (2011) para.7.04.
- ^{64.} English Industrial Estates v Wimpey [1973] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 118 CA.
- ^{65.} See Keating on Construction Contracts, 9th edn (2012), pp.1169–1174. On cl.52 ICE 5th edn, see the commentary in Abrahamson, Engineering Law and the ICE Contracts, 4th edn (1996), pp.178 et seq. and also the decision in Henry Boot Construction Ltd v Alston Combined Cycles Ltd [1999] B.L.R. 123.
- ^{66.} In AMF International Ltd v Magnet Bowling Ltd [1968] 1 W.L.R. 1028, 1046 Mocatta J. said: "It is the function and right of the builder to carry out his own building operations as he thinks fit. The architect, on the other hand, is engaged as the agent of the owner for whom the building is being erected, and his function is, inter alia, to make sure that in the end, when the work has been completed, the owner will have a building properly constructed in accordance with the contract and any supplementary instructions which the architect may have given ...".
- ^{67.} For example, the power to omit work and give it to another contractor, on which see Commissioner for Main Roads v Reed & Stuart (1974) 12 B.L.R. 55 (a decision of the High Court of Australia).
- ^{68.} Neodox Ltd v Borough of Swinton and Pendlebury (1958) 5 B.L.R. 34 (a decision on the ICE Conditions), where Diplock J. went on to say (at 46–47): "I think that in general clauses 10 and 18 give to the engineer the power to determine the method by which works are to be executed, such as the excavation of trenches where there are alternative methods possible; and I think, too, that clause 6 of the specification, on its true construction, entitles the engineer to decide when and where timbering or other forms of sheeting are to be used. His decision as to whether one method or another is satisfactory to him must, of course, be a honest one, but it does not seem to me that the Corporation warrant his competency or skill, or warrant that his decision will be reasonable ...”.

- 69. Generally, see Ashville Investments Ltd v Elmer Contractors Ltd [1989] Q.B. 488, 507; (1987) 37 B.L.R. 60 at 79.
- 70. Many of the JCT Forms have Sectional Completion Supplements; although under the reformulated JCT 2011 suite these provisions are incorporated into the main body of the standard form.
- 71. The general position is that time is not of the essence in building contracts; see the discussion in Keating on Construction Contracts, 9th edn (2012), paras 8–005 to 8–011.
- 72. McAlpine Humberoak v McDermott International Inc (1992) 58 B.L.R. 1 CA.
- 73. (1989) 51 B.L.R. 16 (a case where the contract incorporated the 1963 edn of the JCT, 1977 revision, with quantities, substantially amended).
- 74. Whilst the decision of the Judge is open to question, the case is illustrative of the way in which the courts will often strive to retain at least some enforceable stipulation as to time, to reflect commercial realities.
- 75. Hick v Raymond & Reid [1893] A.C. 22, 32; Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 s.14.
- 76. See West Faulkner Associates v London Borough of Newnham (1994) 71 B.L.R. 1 CA on cl.25(1)(b) of the JCT Local Authorities Form with Quantities, 1963 edn (1977 revision) and the meaning of “... to proceed regularly and diligently with the Works ...”.
- 77. Greater London Council v Cleveland Bridge and Engineering Company Ltd (1986) 34 B.L.R. 50 (Staughton J. at first instance), cf. 72, 78, per Parker L.J.
- 78. For extension of time and recovery of liquidated damages generally see below, paras 37-115 to 37-123.
- 79. Lord Diplock in Modern Engineering v Gilbert-Ash [1974] A.C. 689, 717. However: (i) a provision restricting a right of set-off contained in written standard terms of business may fall within Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.13(1)(b) so that it will be subject to a requirement of reasonableness; and (ii) there can be no restriction on the right of set-off in insolvency: Stein v Blake [1996] A.C. 243 HL.
- 80. As cl.23 of DOM/1.
- 81. Mellowes Archital v Bell Projects (1997) 87 B.L.R. 26 CA; Rupert Morgan Building Services (Llc) Ltd v Jervis [2003] EWCA Civ 1563.
- 82. See below, para.37-132.
- 83. (1971) 18 B.L.R. 149 at 160–162, a decision on the 1963 edn of the Standard Form of Building Contract or RIBA Form.
- 84. For the statutory right of a party to a “construction contract” to refer a dispute arising under the contract for adjudication, see Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 s.108.
- 85. See Halki Shipping Corp v Sopex Oils Ltd [1997] 1 W.L.R. 1268, decision of Clarke J., affirmed by the Court of Appeal at [1998] 1 W.L.R. 726; Beaufort Developments (NI) Ltd v Gilbert-Ash NI Ltd [1999] 1 A.C. 266, 281; Birse Construction Ltd v St David Ltd [1999] B.L.R. 194; Jitendra Bhailbhai v Dilesh R Patel [2000] Q.B. 551 CA. Furthermore, a party dealing as a “consumer”

within the meaning of the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1994 may be able to avoid a mandatory stay by arguing that the arbitration clause is unfair: Zealander v Laing Homes Ltd (2000) 2 T.C.L.R. 724. In Ahmad Al-Naimi v Islamic Press Agency Inc [2000] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 522, [2000] B.L.R. 150, the Court of Appeal said that, in a case where the issue is whether the underlying dispute is subject to an agreement to arbitrate at all, the court has a choice whether to decide that issue itself, or to stay proceedings whilst that issue is referred to arbitration. Significantly, both parties in Al-Naimi had asked the judge at first instance and the Court of Appeal to resolve the question of jurisdiction on the affidavit evidence. Chadwick L.J. went on (at 156) to say that the correct approach was that set out by Judge Humphrey Lloyd Q.C. in Birse Construction Ltd v St David Ltd [1999] B.L.R. 194.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts
Section 1. - The Nature of Construction Contracts
(f) - PFI Contracts

Private Finance Initiative

37-037

Historically, major construction projects have been financed either publicly, through local authorities and government departments, or privately through the raising of equity and loans.⁸⁶ With increasing pressure on public finances in the last two decades, many different schemes have been evolved for the raising of private project finance. For example, many inner city redevelopment schemes have been financed through sale and lease-back arrangements coupled with planning agreements promoted by local authorities. During the 1980s some local authorities raised finance for their own projects by deferred loan agreements under which the financier became the project employer, thereby giving rise to issues as to the recoverability of loss.⁸⁷ In 1992 the government announced its support for a new policy known as the Private Finance Initiative ("PFI"). This involved relaxation of previous finance policy, encouragement of public-private joint ventures and promotion of opportunities for private sector financing. There is no definition of PFI, which has now extended well beyond construction projects, into the provision of services formerly provided through public finance in many different fields. An early and substantial example of PFI is the cross-channel rail link. PFI is now regarded as falling under the broader description of Private-Public Partnerships ("PPP") in which construction may play a varying role. PPP contracts may involve PFI arrangements coupled with privatisation of former publicly operated facilities. PFI may be based on differing methods of financing. The most usual, which is dealt with here, is referred to as the Project Finance model. The capital value of PFI projects entered into up to 2006 is estimated at around £50bn.⁸⁸ While the value of projects is increasing, a number currently being in excess of £1bn, PFI still represents only a small proportion of the total annual capital value of the UK construction market at around £60bn.

Operation of PFI schemes

37-038

A scheme based on project finance PFI usually involves the creation of a special purpose vehicle ("SPV") company which is intended to undertake the primary contractual obligation (for example, to construct or refurbish a hospital and to operate certain services within it), financed through equity and loans in whatever proportions the promoters may decide. The involvement of government or public authorities is usually limited to the provision of land, with operating agreements under which the project is usually to revert back to public ownership (as in the case of the channel tunnel) but may involve outright sale. PFI is currently utilised for the provision of schools, roads, prisons, hospitals and other capital projects and services. The essence of PFI projects is that they involve long-term operation agreements (which are outside the ambit of this section), coupled with construction contracts in which the terms are modified to fit the wider roles being undertaken by the parties. For example, contractors are likely to have a financial interest in the project, and to undertake substantially enhanced risks under the construction contract. The design will also play an important role in the overall viability of the project, and its provision is likely to be integrated with the arrangements for financing and constructing the capital works.⁸⁹ PFI projects have given rise to a number of legal difficulties, including issues of authority and vires.⁹⁰ There are a number of statutory provisions designed to support PFI in various sectors.⁹¹ Certain construction contracts entered into under the PFI are excluded from the operation of the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 ⁹² and are thus not required to conform to the payment provisions under the Act, nor to include the right to adjudication. ⁹³

Typical provisions of PFI contracts

37-039

PFI contracts contain many provisions similar to those of conventional construction contracts and with the same objective of securing the satisfactory construction of capital works comprising or forming part of the services to be provided to the user (in the contract referred to as “the authority”) over the duration of the contract. The major difference is that there are no provisions for payment by the authority in respect of the capital costs, which is to be paid for out of the “unitary charge” payable once the services become available. The exception is so called “compensation events” which are intended to cater for matters arising before the “service commencement date” which are at the authority’s risk and which result in delay or increased costs to the contractor (equivalent to claims under more conventional construction contracts). Matters giving rise to such compensation include breach by the authority, authority changes ⁹⁴ and discriminatory or specific changes in law as defined. ⁹⁵ For the construction of the facility or works, the PFI contract is intended to operate as a design and build contract with the authority’s requirements being set out in an output specification. The contractor’s proposals for realisation of the authority’s requirements are set out in the initial tender and developed in detail after award of the contract. Compliance with the output specification is intended to be secured through provisions for submission of information to the authority as the design is developed, by quality management systems and provisions for inspection and tests at completion. ⁹⁶ The construction phase (which concludes with “service commencement”) may be subject to delays in the same way as conventional construction projects and in the event that the authority anticipates incurring loss as a result of late service commencement, there may be a provision for liquidated damages to be payable on a conventional basis. The PFI contractor will be expected to transfer all conventional construction risks, including delay, to the contractor carrying out the works, who will usually enter into a conventional design and build contract with the PFI contractor.

Other features of PFI contracts

37-040

There are many other features usually found in PFI contracts which are designed to regulate the relations between the parties over the 25-year (or other) span of the contract. Thus, depending on the nature of the service there will be detailed provision for monitoring performance by the PFI contractor (through sub-contractors) and for payment of the unitary charge and appropriate adjustments thereto. There will be provisions for early termination for authority default or contractor default and for termination on other grounds including voluntary termination, in each case involving complex accounting procedures to accommodate many levels of financial interest in the project including particularly that of the project’s financiers (lenders). As an alternative to termination, PFI contracts usually provide for the authority to have a right of “step-in” on the ground of serious but short-term default by the contractor which the authority is in a position to resolve, the intention being that the authority will subsequently “step-out” and allow the contract to continue. A related device is usually provided under a direct agreement between the authority and the senior lenders under which, in the event of termination or threatened termination for contractor default, the lenders may step-in to protect their investment (which is otherwise inadequately secured) with similar provisions for stepout. Different standard models exist for such provisions and there is no standardised recommendation. While there have been a limited number of PFI “failures” many projects have proved financially successful to the promoters such that SoPC now contains recommendations for “refinancing” provisions aimed at securing a partial return for the authority in the event that a PFI contractor decides to “sell” the project at a profit, reflecting the secured longterm income under the contract. The current recommendation is for a 50% sharing of the refinancing gains. ⁹⁷ Thus, it can be seen that a PFI project involves a large number of complex and interrelated contracts between the authority, the PFI contractor, financiers, principal and sub-contractors, designers and other professionals, usually accompanied by many cross-warranties or collateral contracts between those not in primary contractual relationships. Bidding and negotiating all the necessary contracts is costly and time-consuming, such that there is usually a staged bidding arrangement, with the final stage of negotiation being conducted only with one preferred bidder whose bid is considered the most favourable.

Example of PFI project

37-041

A decision of the Technology and Construction Court ⁹⁸ dealt with a range of complex issues in contract (and tort) which illustrate the practical operation of a PFI project. The claimant (BL) entered into a PFI contract with a local authority (LCC) for the collection, recycling and disposal of domestic waste. The contract required construction of a recycling plant which was the subject of the dispute. An essential feature of the plant was a large drum known as the ball mill in which waste was broken down into its constituent parts for different forms of treatment and disposal. BL entered into a back-to-back contract with an associated company (BW) which undertook to discharge BL's obligations as to construction of the plant. BW engaged MEH under a contract to design and build the plant, MEH entering into a direct performance warranty with BL. MEH sub-contracted the work to HU who in turn entered into a contract for the design and construction of the ball mill with OT. After practical completion of the ball mill further works were required during the commissioning process, including welding and grinding. The additional works were carried out by P. During a tea-break a fire broke out caused by the negligence of HU and P. A substantial delay ensued which was partly mitigated by running the ball mill with a temporary liner at additional cost. BL and BW claimed liquidated damages and the additional cost incurred against MEH under the design and build contract and the direct agreement. Ramsey J. held that MEH were liable to BW for liquidated damages, but such damages were an exhaustive remedy and there was no liability for the additional cost of mitigation measures. MEH had no remaining liability to BL whose action was therefore stayed. The case illustrates the complexity of PFI contractual arrangements and the application of conventional legal analysis to those arrangements. ⁹⁹

Foreign projects

37-042

The means of financing the project has a major influence on the method of procurement. In the developing world much construction work has been financed by the World Bank or the European Bank for Reconstruction and Redevelopment, each of which has favoured standard procurement methods using the FIDIC forms of contract. PFI has also become widely used in a variety of forms depending on the particular project. The procurement methods employed are variously known as Build Operate Transfer ("BOT"), Build Own Operate Transfer ("BOOT") and latterly, Design Build Finance Operate ("DBFO"). Projects vary greatly in their financial and administrative detail, but all involve the provision of capital works financed through external private sources. The promoters are granted leases or licenses to provide and operate the capital works, with the objective of recouping their investment and profit, the works ultimately being transferred to the government or other promoter of the scheme. Such projects have included power stations, hydro-electric schemes and all forms of building and construction throughout the developing world. Contracts usually involve multi-national parties and may be subject to any national law chosen by the parties as the governing or proper law, which may occasionally be English law. Disputes, particularly under the FIDIC form of contract, involve multi-stage processes, usually with the final stage being arbitration under the ICC Rules with an agreed neutral seat.

^{86.} Historically, canals and railways in the UK were privately financed, while roads, harbours and military works were financed by the public purse. See, for example, Hawke and Reed (1969) 2 Economic History Review 269–286 and the discussion of railways in Atiyah, The Rise and Fall of Freedom of Contract (1979).

^{87.} See Darlington BC v Wiltshier Northern [1995] 1 W.L.R. 68; (1994) 69 B.L.R. 1; Linden Gardens

Trust v Lanesta Sludge Disposal [1994] 1 A.C. 85; (1993) 63 B.L.R. 1; Alfred McAlpine Construction v Panatown [2001] 1 A.C. 518.

^{88.} <http://www.amaresearch.co.uk>.

^{89.} See generally Haley (1999) 15 Const. L.J. 220.

^{90.} See Crédit Suisse v Waltham Forest LBC [1997] Q.B. 362; Crédit Suisse v Allerdale BC [1997] Q.B. 306.

^{91.} Residual Liabilities (National Health Service) Act 1996, National Health Service (Private Finance) Act 1997, Local Authorities (Capital Finance) Regulations 1997 (SI 1997/319).

^{92.} The Construction Contracts (England and Wales) Exclusion Order 1998 (SI 1998/648).

^{93.} s.108.

^{94.} SoPC s.13.

^{95.} SoPC s.14.6.

^{96.} SoPC ss.3.4, 3.5 and 3.6.

^{97.} SoPC s.34.

^{98.} Biffa Waste Services v Maschinenfabrik Ernst Hese GmbH [2008] EWHC 6 (TCC), [2008] B.L.R. 155.

^{99.} Although the decision in first instance in Biffa Waste as to the vicarious liability of OT for the negligence of P has now been reversed by the Court of Appeal, see [2008] EWCA Civ 1257, [2009] 3 W.L.R. 324, [2009] B.L.R. 1.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts

Section 2. - Formation of Contract

(a) - General Principles

General principles

37-043

The law relating to the formation of construction contracts is no more than the application of general principles of contract ¹⁰⁰ in a particular context. Given that the process of construction contract procurement is often long, complex and costly, and the pressures at tender stage are often very considerable, disputes linked to contract formation are amongst the most frequent to come before the courts. ¹⁰¹ In construction contracts, as with other kinds of contract, the parties are bound by what they have agreed. However, in order to distinguish between binding promises which the courts will enforce and the whole range of tender documents, offers, negotiations and counter-offers which typically precede the formation of a contract, the law imposes certain essential requirements.

Offer and acceptance

37-044

The link between an offer and acceptance of that offer ¹⁰² is almost invariably essential to the formation of a contract. In most situations it will be clear by the canons of offer and acceptance that the parties must be taken to have reached an agreement and that it covered all the matters which they thought necessary, so that there is a contract in law. ¹⁰³ Occasionally, where it proves impossible to discern a clear offer or a clear acceptance then, when judged objectively, a contract may still be found to have been made since the canons of offer and acceptance are not the last word and may be incapable of precise application. ¹⁰⁴ In particular, in cases where work has commenced in anticipation of agreement being reached, the courts will look for clear words (such as "subject to contract") to establish that the parties did not intend to, and did not enter into, a binding legal relationship. ¹⁰⁵ However, an analysis in terms of offer and acceptance will generally be the only way of ensuring that the parties have given a clear outward expression of agreement, which also promotes certainty. ¹⁰⁶ For construction cases in which an analysis of offer and acceptance was applied in the context of work which had commenced, see Peter Lind v Mersey Docks and Harbour Board ¹⁰⁷ (no coincidence of offer and acceptance) and the decision in Hall & Tawse South Ltd v Ivory Gate Ltd ¹⁰⁸ (coincidence of offer and acceptance).

Consideration ¹⁰⁹

37-045

In order for a promise to be enforceable it must be supported by "something of value in the eye of the law" ¹¹⁰ which is given in exchange, unless the promise was made by deed. Typically, in the context of construction contracts, the consideration provided by the employer is the promise to pay the contract price, and the consideration provided by the contractor is the promise to carry out the works. The separate promise of performance of an existing contractual obligation can also constitute valuable consideration. ¹¹¹

Intention to create legal relations

37-046

The parties must intend that their agreement was to give rise to legal consequences. ¹¹² In commercial or business agreements the intention to create legal relations is presumed and must be clearly rebutted by the party seeking to deny it. ¹¹³ The parties to the contract must have the capacity to make the contract. ¹¹⁴

Certainty

37-047

"The parties are to be regarded as masters of their contractual fate. It is their intentions which matter and to which the Court must strive to give effect". ¹¹⁵ The parties must express themselves such that their meaning can be determined by others with a reasonable degree of certainty. ¹¹⁶ The courts do not recognise a contract to negotiate, or an "agreement to agree", since this would be too uncertain. ¹¹⁷ A "lock out" agreement will be recognised by the courts if it is sufficiently certain. As Lord Ackner said in Walford v Miles ¹¹⁸:

"There is clearly no reason in the English contract law why A, for good consideration, should not achieve an enforceable agreement whereby B agrees, for a specified period of time, not to negotiate with anyone except A in relation to the sale of his property ..."

It is to be noted that in Lambert v HTV Cymru (Wales) Ltd ¹¹⁹ the Court of Appeal (distinguishing Walford v Miles), held that a clause requiring a party to "... use all reasonable endeavours to obtain a right of first negotiation from any assignee of the purchaser for the author to write 'conceptual' children's books in connection with the film to be negotiated in good faith" was sufficiently certain to found an enforceable obligation.

Essential terms

37-048

It is for the parties to decide the terms of the contract between them, ¹²⁰ and these must include all the terms which are essential to allow the contract "to be workable as a matter of commercial common sense". ¹²¹ Typically in construction contracts, matters such as the scope of work, the time for completion and the price will need to be finalised in order to make the contract workable, but there is no prescriptive definition of what will be an essential term in every case. It is for the parties to decide what is essential or important to their reaching agreement, ¹²² where the parties have indeed failed to agree a term which is essential to the working of their agreement, the court cannot fill the gap. ¹²³ This situation is to be distinguished from the position where the court is able to imply a term which gives effect to the plain intention of the parties, as in Trollope & Colls v Atomic Power Constructors ¹²⁴ where, in relation to the implication of a term, Megaw J. said ¹²⁵:

"I do not think that a term such as this can be implied simply for the purpose of upholding the existence of a contract, unless it can clearly be seen that it conforms with what the parties truly intended and with what they both would have accepted as a matter of course had the question been raised in the course of the negotiations or at the moment of making the supposed contract ..." ¹²⁶

In practice, the question will often arise whether price is an essential requirement of a particular construction contract. In each case, it will be necessary to look at what was said and done by the parties and determine what the parties intended would be essential for an agreement, as emphasised by Goff J. in British Steel Corp v Cleveland Bridge.¹²⁷ In this case it was decided that price was indeed an essential term on which (among other essential terms) no final agreement was ever reached, so that there was no contract between the parties.

^{100.} See Vol.I, Ch.1.

^{101.} VHE Construction v Alfred McAlpine Construction Ltd (April, 1997), reported in attenuated form in (1997) C.I.L.L. 1253. See Ove Arup & Partners International Ltd v Mirant Asia-Pacific Construction (Hong Kong) Ltd [2003] EWCA Civ 1729, [2004] B.L.R. 49.

^{102.} See Vol.I, Ch.2.

^{103.} This requires an objective assessment of the effect of what was said and done, and is not concerned with the subjective, undisclosed intentions of the parties. See: Hussey v Horne-Payne (1879) 4 App. Cas. 311, 323; Storer v Manchester City Council [1974] 1 W.L.R. 1403, 1408H; Harmony Shipping v Saudi-Europe Line (The Good Helmsman) [1981] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 377 at 414; Pagnan v Feed Products [1987] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 601, 610. See also, Howarth (1984) 100 L.Q.R. 265.

^{104.} Percy Trentham v Architral Luxfer [1993] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 25, 27; (1992) 63 B.L.R. 44, 52–55.

^{105.} Percy Trentham v Architral Luxfer, above; Sykes (Wessex) Ltd v Fine Fare Ltd [1967] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 53 at 57; and see Birse Construction Ltd v St David Ltd [1999] 4 B.L.R. 194 Adonis Construction v O'Keefe Soil Remediation [2009] EWHC 2047 (TCC).

^{106.} Brogden v Metropolitan Railway (1877) 2 App. Cas. 666, 693; Gibson v Manchester City Council [1979] 1 W.L.R. 294, 297.

^{107.} [1972] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 234.

^{108.} (1998) 62 Con. L.R. 117.

^{109.} See Vol.I, Ch.4. For a discussion of the doctrine of consideration in the context of third party rights, see Law Commission Report No.242 (1996) 68–73.

^{110.} Thomas v Thomas (1842) 2 Q.B. 851, 859.

^{111.} North Ocean Shipping v Hyundai Construction [1979] Q.B. 705; Pao On v Lau Yiu Long [1980] A.C. 614 PC; Comyn Ching v Oriental Tube (1979) 17 B.L.R. 47 CA; Williams v Roffey Bros [1991] 1 Q.B. 1 CA.

^{112.} See Vol.I, Ch.4.

^{113.} Edwards v Skyways [1964] 1 W.L.R. 349, [1964] 1 All E.R. 494.

^{114.} See Vol.I, Ch.9.

^{115.} Pagnan v Feed Products [1987] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 601, 611.

^{116.} Scammel v Ouston [1941] A.C. 251, 255.

^{117.} Courtney & Fairbairn v Tolaini Brothers [1975] 1 W.L.R. 297, 301–302; Mallozzi v Carapelli [1976] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 407; Albio Sugar v Williams Tankers [1977] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 457; Scandinavian Trading Tanker Trees v Cripps (1983) 267 E.G. 596; Walford v Miles [1992] 2 A.C. 128, 136C to 137H.

- 118. [1992] 2 A.C. 128, 139D.
- 119. [1998] EWCA Civ 387.
- 120. Pagnan v Feed Products [1987] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 601, 611.
- 121. Trollope and Colls v Atomic Power Constructors [1963] 1 W.L.R. 333, 337. See also Nicolene v Simmonds [1953] 1 Q.B. 543, 552 (and the reference to "essential terms"); Hillas v Arcos (1932) 38 Com. Cas. 23, 43; Rossiter v Miller (1878) 3 App. Cas. 1124, 1151. Applied in J Murphy & Sons Ltd v Johnston Precast Ltd [2008] EWHC 3024 (TCC), where it was held that a contractor and subcontractor had concluded a binding contract when the contractor had faxed an order for the subcontractor to make and supply a pipe.
- 122. Pagnan v Feed Products [1987] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 601, 619.
- 123. Mmecen v Inter Ro-Ro and Gulf Ro-Ro Services (The Samah and Lina V) [1981] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 40, 43, referred to in the construction case, Mitsui Babcock Energy v John Brown Engineering (1996) 51 Con. L.R. 129, 183.
- 124. [1963] 1 W.L.R. 333.
- 125. at 341.
- 126. See also, Arbiter Investments Ltd v Wiltshier London (1991) 7 Const. L.J. 49; Mitsui Babcock Energy v John Brown Engineering (1996) 51 Con. L.R. 129, 183.
- 127. [1984] 1 All E.R. 504, 511g–j.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts
Section 2. - Formation of Contract
(b) - Contract/No Contract

Concluded agreement

37-049

Construction contracts are often the product of lengthy negotiation over a range of issues such as scope of work, price, time for completion, specification and performance criteria. It will be a question of importance and often one of some complexity to decide at what point (if at all) in the negotiations the parties reached a concluded agreement. Some important guidelines are set out in Trollope & Colls v Atomic Power Constructors ¹²⁸ and Pagnan v Feed Products ¹²⁹ which can be summarised in the following propositions ¹³⁰:

- (i)
in order to determine whether a contract has been concluded in the course of negotiations, one must look to the negotiations as a whole ¹³¹;
- (ii)
there must be an intention by both parties, continuing up to the date of the supposed contract, to make a contract;
- (iii)
at the date of the supposed contract, the parties must have been of one mind on all the terms which they then regarded as being required in order that a contract should come into existence;
- (iv)
the terms on which the parties were of one mind must not omit any term which, even though the parties did not realise it, was in fact essential to be agreed if the contract was to be commercially workable;
- (v)
in relation to the agreement of further terms the parties must intend that agreement would become binding forthwith, even though there were terms still to be agreed;
- (vi)
there must be some manifestation which indicated with sufficient clarity the acceptance by the offeree of the offer as then made to him, such acceptance complying with any stipulation in the offer itself as to the manner of acceptance.

Subject to contract clauses

37-050

Where the negotiations of the parties are expressed to be “subject to contract” (or similar words are used to refer to a more formal document being executed at a future time) then there will generally be no concluded contract. ¹³² Although the factual matrix in which the words are used may be considered, the prima facie effect of the words “subject to contract” will only be taken away by the most compelling of circumstances. The words “subject to contract” have therefore acquired a clear legal meaning and once introduced they only cease to have effect if the parties expressly or by necessary implication so agree. ¹³³ Agreement expressed to be subject to a more formal document being executed in the future creates a rather lower hurdle to be overcome in establishing that the agreement is nevertheless binding. ¹³⁴

Effect of standard forms ¹³⁵

37-051

The existence of standard forms generated by the parties as “standard terms of business” creates additional complexities in issues of contract formation, especially where each party seeks to impose its terms on the other. The expression “battle of forms” ¹³⁶ refers to the situation where there is an offer, followed by a series of counter-offers, all seeking to introduce the respective parties’ written standard terms of business. The conflict between competing written terms may often be resolved in favour of the party who puts forward the latest terms and conditions; and if they are not objected to by the other party, then he may be taken to have agreed to them. ¹³⁷ While it has been said that “In many of these cases our traditional analysis of offer, counteroffer, rejection and acceptance and so forth is out-of-date ...” ¹³⁸ an analysis based upon simple standards (not rigid rules) of offer and acceptance is almost invariably the correct and practical approach for ascertaining the actual or presumed intentions of the parties to see if they were ad idem. ¹³⁹

Decisions on contract/no contract

37-052

Some of the more significant court decisions are here summarised. In British Steel Corp v Cleveland Bridge ¹⁴⁰ the plaintiffs (steel fabricators) were approached by the defendants to supply steel- cast nodes for incorporation into a building. The plaintiff prepared an estimate for the works based on incomplete information. In February 1979 the defendant gave a letter of intent which (i) stated the defendant’s intention to place a contract with the plaintiff based on prices quoted; (ii) proposed that the contract incorporate the defendant’s standard form of sub-contract (which provided for unlimited liability on the part of the plaintiff for consequential loss arising out of late delivery); and (iii) required the plaintiff “to proceed immediately with the works pending the preparation and issuing to you of the official form of sub-contract”. The plaintiff did not reply to the letter of intent; the defendant then indicated that it required delivery of the nodes in a particular sequence; and there followed further discussions after which the specification was substantially changed. The plaintiff proceeded to manufacture and deliver the nodes, although the parties were unable to agree on progress payments and liability for loss for late delivery. By December 1979, all but one of the nodes had been delivered. The defendant refused to make any interim payment for the nodes delivered, and instead sent a claim to the plaintiff for damages for late delivery. The plaintiff issued proceedings, contending that no contract had been made between the parties, and claiming the value of the nodes. Robert Goff J. held that there was no contract, and said ¹⁴¹:

“In the present case, an unresolved dispute broke out between the parties on the question of whether CBE’s or BSC’s standard terms were to apply, the former providing no limit to the seller’s liability for delay and the latter excluding such liability altogether. Accordingly, when, in a case such as the present, the parties are still in a state of negotiation, it is impossible to predicate what liability (if any) will be assumed by the seller for, e.g. defective goods or late delivery, if a formal contract should be entered into. In these circumstances, if the buyer asks the seller to commence work ‘pending’ the parties entering into a formal contract, it is difficult to infer from the buyer acting on that request that he is assuming any responsibility for his performance, except such responsibility as will rest on him under the terms of the contract which both parties confidently anticipate they will shortly enter into.”

37-053

In Drake and Scull v Higgs and Hill (Northern) ¹⁴² the defendants were main contractors for certain works to a Liverpool hospital, and they invited the plaintiffs to tender for the supply and installation of mechanical and electrical installations. There was extensive correspondence between the parties in relation to design obligations, the plaintiffs’ daywork rates, and whether formal contract documentation would be entered into. The Official Referee found that all matters of dispute were resolved by May 1991, save for the fixing of the plaintiffs’ daywork rates, which both parties regarded as essential. No further relevant correspondence passed until May 1993. The plaintiffs commenced work in April 1992 and completed in July 1993. The Official Referee, finding a contract between the parties, said:

“I am satisfied that, by May 11, all the terms save one necessary for a binding subcontract to come into being were ‘agreed’. That is to say, inter alia, price, commencement date of the contract, duration of the contract and obligations under the contract. The fact that D&S had no design obligations save for the extremely limited development of design requirements was only reached on May 11, but it was resolved on that date. The only matter which was not agreed at that time were the daywork rates. It is clear that up to May 12, both parties were regarding agreement on daywork rates as an essential matter. The potential importance of reaching agreement may be gauged from the fact that in the absence of agreement D&S have as yet been unable to recover any payment for the daywork that they have done. But I have reached the conclusion on the basis of the arguments advanced by Mr. Collins Q.C. that if the failure to agree daywork rates was the only matter which might have prevented the coming into being of a contract, that lacuna would be made good by the implication of a term that D&S should be paid a reasonable sum.”

37-054

In Mitsui Babcock Energy v John Brown Engineering, ¹⁴³ the defendants were the main contractors for the construction of a 600 MW combined cycle power station. They engaged the plaintiffs to design, manufacture and install two generators. In May 1992 the defendants issued a letter of intent to the plaintiffs, followed by negotiation over performance tests which were provided for in cl.35 of the standard form MFI. The defendants pressed for strict compliance with the design requirements and for payment of substantial sums as liquidated damages if the generators failed to pass the performance tests. In the result, cl.35 was struck out and a marginal annotation “to be discussed and agreed” was inserted. The contract documents were signed on behalf of both parties in June 1993. In September 1995, the defendants sent a letter to the plaintiffs alleging that there was no contract. The Official Referee holding that there was a contract, said ¹⁴⁴ that “... the parties made a coherent and workable contract ...” which was not invalidated by the failure to arrive at an agreement on cl.35. The Official Referee also observed that the parties operated the contract provisions up to September 1995.

37-055

In ERDC Group Limited v Brunel University,¹⁴⁵ the Court found that, for a period prior to September 1, 2002, the series of letters of intent¹⁴⁶ issued by Brunel, and worked to by ERDC, were sufficient to create a binding contract. However, on the unusual facts of the case, the court concluded that, in the period after September 1, 2002, there was no contract and, furthermore, the move to the non-contractual basis did not justify a departure from contract rates and prices in favour of remuneration based on ERDC's costs.

^{128.} [1963] 1 W.L.R. 333.

^{129.} [1987] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 601, 619, per Lloyd L.J. The principles set out by Lloyd L.J. were expressly referred to in Mitsui Babcock Energy v John Brown Engineering (1996) 51 Con. L.R. 129, 166–167. See also Birse Construction Ltd v St David Ltd [1994] 4 B.L.R. 194.

^{130.} See RTS Flexible Systems Ltd v Molkerei Alois Muller GmbH & Co [2010] UKSC 14, [2010] 1 W.L.R. 753 at [48]–[49] where the Supreme Court held that these same principles applied whether one was considering a contract concluded in correspondence or by oral communications and conduct. See also Iliffe & Iliffe v Feltham Construction Ltd [2014] EWHC 2125 (TCC), per Stuart-Smith J. at [79]–[82] for a summary of the relevant principles in a construction context. In Hamid v Francis Bradshaw Partnership [2013] EWCA Civ 470, [2013] B.L.R. 447, the Court of Appeal found that where an issue arises as to the identity of a party referred to in a written contract extrinsic evidence is admissible to assist in the resolution of that issue and that, if an objective analysis shows that a party has been misdescribed in the document, the court may correct that error as a matter of construction, not rectification; however, in Liberty Mercian Ltd v Cuddy Civil Engineering Ltd [2013] EWHC 2688 (TCC), [2014] B.L.R. 179, it was held that in order to identify the true parties to a written contract the principle of misnomer may only apply to replace the identified contracting party with another entity in circumstances there was a clear mistake on the face of the instrument when it is read by reference to its relevant background or context and where it is clear what correction should be made.

^{131.} See also, Hussey v Horne-Payne (1879) L.R. 4 App. Cas. 311; Port Sudan Cotton v Chettiar [1977] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 5, 10; Bushwall Properties v Vortex [1976] 1 W.L.R. 591, 603; British Steel Corp v Cleveland Bridge [1984] 1 All E.R. 504, 509; Pagnan v Granaria [1986] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 547, 548; VHE Construction v Alfred McAlpine Construction (1997) C.I.L.L. 1253, 1254.

^{132.} Winn v Bull (1877) 7 Ch. D. 29, 31–32; Von Hatzfeldt-Wildenburg v Alexander [1912] 1 Ch. 214, 288–289; CH Rugg & Co Ltd v Street [1962] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 364, 369; Fraser Williams v Prudential Holborn (1993) 64 B.L.R. 1, 9; Lexair Ltd (in administrative receivership) v Edgar W Taylor (1993) 65 B.L.R. 90, 98; Manchester Cabins Ltd v The Metropolitan Borough of Bury Unreported 1997.

^{133.} As in Alpenstow v Regalian [1985] 1 W.L.R. 721. See also Confetti Records v Warner Music [2003] EWHC 1274 (Ch), [2003] All E.R. (D) 61 (Jun) Ch D.

^{134.} Harvey Shopfitters Ltd v ADI Ltd [2003] EWCA Civ 1757, [2004] 2 All E.R. 982.

^{135.} Generally, see Furmston, Norisada and Poole, Contract Formation and Letters of Intent (1997), Ch. 4; Rawlings (1979) 42 M.L.R. 715; Adams [1983] J.B.L. 297; Jacobs (1985) 34 I.C.L.Q. 297.

^{136.} Butler Machine Tool Co Ltd v Ex-Cell-O Corp (England) Ltd [1979] 1 W.L.R. 401, 404, [1979] 1 All E.R. 965, 968f.

- 137. Butler Machine Tool Co Ltd v Ex-Cell-O Corp (England) Ltd, above, at 404.
- 138. Butler Machine Tool Co Ltd v Ex-Cell-O Corp (England) Ltd, above, at 404.
- 139. See Chichester Joinery v John Mowlem (1987) 42 B.L.R. 100 for a case in which an analysis of offer and acceptance is applied to competing standard terms of business.
- 140. [1984] 1 All E.R. 504.
- 141. At 510j to 511a.
- 142. (1995) 11 Const. L.J. 214.
- 143. (1996) 51 Con. L.R. 129.
- 144. At 184.
- 145. [2006] EWHC 687 (TCC), [2006] B.L.R. 255.
- 146. For a review of cases on letters of intent, see Whittaker, "What are your intentions?" New Law Journal (July 28, 2006) p.1200.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts

Section 2. - Formation of Contract

(c) - Tenders

Tendering procedure

37-056

The employer will typically send out an invitation to tender to a list of pre-selected contractors or even to a single contractor, and the contractors will submit offers to carry out the work in the form of a tender. For larger construction projects, the tender procedure will often be complex, protracted and costly for the prospective contractors. The submission of a tender is an offer by the contractor to carry out work, so that a tenderer is always at risk of having his tender rejected. This is generally to be regarded as an occupational hazard of the contractor's business. ¹⁴⁷ Any claim to recover the costs of tendering will fail if it is made clear that no contract will be entered into unless a certain condition is satisfied, and the condition is not satisfied, or if negotiations are conducted on the assumption that either party is free to withdraw from them and the defendant does withdraw before a contract is concluded. ¹⁴⁸

Qualifications to general rule

37-057

The contractor may be able to recover payment of a reasonable sum where the tenderer carries out work which (i) goes beyond or is distinct from the work ordinarily carried out by a tenderer free of charge; and (ii) is carried out at the prospective employer's request ¹⁴⁹ and for the prospective employer's benefit. However, the basis upon which negotiations are carried on between the parties may mean that the tenderer will not be able to bring himself within the requirements of what is a restitutionary remedy. ¹⁵⁰ Alternatively, where the ground for rejection of a tender conflicts with some binding undertaking or representation relating to how the submitted tender will be treated, then the tenderer will be able to recover damages for breach of the contract which will be implied into the tender arrangements. In Blackpool Aero Club v Blackpool BC ¹⁵¹ the Court of Appeal held that, in all the circumstances, the Council's rules for the submission of tenders gave rise to a contractual right (not a mere expectation) on the part of the tenderer that his tender, submitted in accordance with the rules, would be considered. ¹⁵² In MJB Enterprises Ltd v Defence Construction (1951) Ltd, ¹⁵³ the Supreme Court of Canada decided that, although on a true construction of the contract there was no obligation upon the putative employer to award a contract to the lowest tenderer, there was a term to be implied into the contract (to give effect to the presumed intentions of the parties) which obliged the putative employer only to accept a compliant tender. The tender process must also now be considered in the light of relevant EU legislation and relate domestic regulatory provisions. ¹⁵⁴

Good faith and partnering

37-058

⚠ English law does not recognise a more general duty of good faith which might prevent the

❗ Given the general antipathy of English law towards a broader understanding of pre-contractual duties and obligations of good faith, professionals in the construction industry have sought to develop new approaches to the problems of financial risk experienced by tenderers, as well as the risk, cost and uncertainty to which the employer is exposed. The phenomenon of “partnering” in the construction industry (an expression covering a loose amalgam of different strategies for cooperation and collaboration between contracting parties) can be considered in this light. Partnering arrangements may be based on the long-term relationship between contractor and employer or may be project-specific. Partnering charters set out the broad aims of the parties, such as cooperation in a spirit of openness and team work. Partnering agreements may provide for more concrete collaboration between the parties, such as shared use of information and resources. The essence of partnering is that it is intended not to create enforceable contractual rights, and is therefore beyond the scope of this chapter.

Estoppel

37-059

Given the substantial amount of preparation and negotiation which will typically accompany building projects, it is relevant to consider whether such matters as estoppel by representation or proprietary estoppel are capable of giving rise to new rights of the parties, or whether an estoppel operates exclusively as a rule of evidence.¹⁴⁷ The balance of authority,¹⁴⁸ is in favour of estoppel by representation being an evidential matter, rather than something which can create new substantive rights. However, once A is estopped from denying against B certain facts, this is a step on the way¹⁴⁹ to establishing a cause of action, since certain legal consequences will flow from the facts which A is now unable to deny.¹⁵⁰ Estoppel may therefore play an important role in the evidence considered by the court on the issue whether there was a concluded and binding agreement. In Mitsui Babcock Energy Ltd v John Brown Engineering Ltd,¹⁵¹ for example, the Official Referee decided there was a contract, but also indicated that he would, if necessary, be prepared to rely upon evidence of conduct amounting to an estoppel in reaching the same conclusion. That estoppel in contract formation is likely to be confined to an evidential role is further supported by the rejection, in the construction context, of the contention that an estoppel can found a contract.¹⁵²

^{147.} William Lacey (Hounslow) Ltd v Davis [1957] 1 W.L.R. 932, 934; Fairclough Building v Borough Council of Port Talbot (1992) 62 B.L.R. 82, 94.135a.

^{148.} See Rackline Ltd v The National Library of Wales (1997) C.I.L.L. 1268 for consideration of whether, on the construction of a contract for work in stages, the contractor was entitled to work on all stages.

^{149.} William Davis (Hounslow) Ltd v Lacey [1957] 1 W.L.R. 932; Craven-Ellis v Canons Ltd [1936] 2 K.B. 403.

^{150.} Goff and Jones, The Law of Unjust Enrichment, 8th edn (2011), Ch.26. Regalian Properties v London Docklands Development Corp (1995) 11 Const. L.J. 127; Blackpool Aero Club v Blackpool BC [1990] 1 W.L.R. 1195 CA.

^{151.} [1990] 1 W.L.R. 1195 CA.

^{152.} At 1202.

^{153.} (2000) T.C.L.R. 235.

^{154.} In Harmon CFEM Facades (UK) Ltd v The Corporate Officer of the House of Commons (1999) 67 Con. L.R. 1, Judge Humphrey Lloyd Q.C. held that the House of Commons had failed in a number of different ways to conduct a tendering process in accordance with Public Works Regulations, and also in accordance with the principles of fairness and equality which were held to derive from a contract to be implied from the procurement regime required by the European Directives, as interpreted by the European Court (see at 168–169). Note also that the decision in R. v Tower Hamlets LBC Ex p. Gary Luck (trading as G Luck Arbocultural and Horticultural Services) (1999) 15 Const. L.J. 235, where a council refused to include the applicants in their list of tenderers, the applicants' remedy under the Public Services Contract Regulations 1993 was damages and a judicial review was inappropriate.

155.

❗ Walford v Miles [1992] 2 A.C. 128 at 140C. On good faith, see: Nili Cohen, Good Faith and Fault in Contract Law (1995); Furmston, Norisada and Poole, Contract Formation and Letters of Intent (1997) Ch.10; and also the Australian decision in Hughes Aircraft Systems International v Airservices Australia (1997) 146 A.L.R. 1, noted by Furmston in (1998) 114 L.Q.R. 362. By way of comparison, see the Privy Council treatment of fairness and good faith in an appeal from the New Zealand Court of Appeal in Pratt Contractors Ltd v Transit New Zealand [2004] B.L.R. 143. For a case where the court (in this case the Court of Appeal in the SAR of Hong Kong) decided that the terms of a settlement agreement were no more than an agreement to agree, applying Walford v Miles, see Hyundai Engineering & Construction Co Ltd v Vigour Ltd [2005] B.L.R. 416. See also Monde Petroleum SA v WesternZagros Ltd [2016] EWHC 1472 (Comm), [2017] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 1009.

156.

See: Wilken and Villiers, Waiver Variation and Estoppel (2006), paras 9.04 to 9.14; Halliwell, Equity and Good Conscience in a Contemporary Context (1997), Ch.2. For a discussion of good faith in the context of construction contracts and the building industry, see “Good Faith in Construction Contracts—The Hidden Agenda” (1999) 15 Const. L.J. 288.

157.

Bell v Marsh [1903] 1 Ch. 528 at 540; London Joint Stock Bank Ltd v Macmillan [1918] A.C. 777, 818; Evans v Bartlam [1937] A.C. 473 at 484; Hopgood v Brown [1955] 1 W.L.R. 213, 223.

158.

Low v Bouverie [1891] 3 Ch. 82, 105.

159.

Low v Bouverie [1891] 3 Ch. 82, 112. See also Haden Young Ltd v Laing O'Rourke Midlands Ltd [2008] EWHC 1016 (TCC), [2008] All E.R. (D) 49 (Jun), where Ramsey J. held that a party was not estopped from contending that no contract had been concluded. An estoppel could not be used to create a legal relationship where there was no such relationship at the outset. It was prohibited to use an alleged estoppel to assert an obligation equivalent to a cause of action and the Court should not bridge the lacuna in “no contract” cases by reference to estoppel.

160.

(1996) 51 Con. L.R. 129, 186.

161.

J Murphy & Sons Ltd v ABB Daimler-Benz Transportation (Signal) Ltd [1998] All E.R. (D) 718 (Dec).

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts

Section 2. - Formation of Contract

(d) - Letters of Intent

Purpose

37-060

In construction contracts, there will typically be a wide range of contractual and commercial issues to be resolved between the parties to the intended contract, prior to its finalisation. Pressures to commence the intended works will often also be considerable. The use of a letter of intent, or letter of comfort, is intended to give some measure of security to the party commencing work, pending the conclusion of the contract. Although always a matter of construction in all the circumstances of the particular case, ¹⁶² a letter of intent will typically involve the expression of an intention by A to enter into a contract with B at some point in the future, coupled with an indication from A to B that B should commence work. ¹⁶³

Effect of letter of intent

37-061

This will be partly a matter of construction of the particular document ¹⁶⁴ and partly a question of legal analysis. In many cases, the terms of the letter of intent will mean that it cannot have the effect of creating enforceable promises in the form of a contract; indeed, this will often be its main objective. ¹⁶⁵ In British Steel v Cleveland Bridge, ¹⁶⁶ Cleveland Bridge requested BSC to proceed immediately with the work pending the preparation and issuing of the official form of sub-contract. Robert Goff J. said ¹⁶⁷:

“In these circumstances, if the buyer asks the seller to commence work ‘pending’ the parties entering into a formal contract, it is difficult to infer from the buyer acting on that request that he is assuming any responsibility for his performance, except such responsibility as will rest on him under the terms of the contract which both parties confidently anticipate they will shortly enter into ...”

Exceptional situations

37-062

A letter of intent may result in a binding contract. In Turriff Construction v Regalia ¹⁶⁸ the judge found on the facts that, although the letter of intent stated that the proposed contract was “subject to agreement on an acceptable contract”, those words referred only to the full contract and not to the preliminary contract by which the plaintiffs were to be indemnified for the cost of the work properly undertaken by them pending the conclusion of the full contract. ¹⁶⁹ In Wilson Smithett v Bangladesh Sugar ¹⁷⁰ the judge considered that the letter of intent was the acceptance of an offer leading to a binding contract, despite the requirement for the submission of a security deposit/performance bond. Where, as in Turriff v Regalia, there is a preliminary contract between A and B, then B's entitlement to be paid is based upon the implied term of that preliminary contract that A will pay B a reasonable sum for the work done. Where, as in BSC v Cleveland Bridge, there is no contract, then the legal basis for recovery by B of a quantum meruit or reasonable sum is not by the implication of a promise or assurance of payment, but by the application of the law of unjust enrichment¹⁷¹: the law imposes an obligation on the party making the request to pay a reasonable sum for the work done in pursuance of the request.

^{162.} Wilson Smithett v Bangladesh Sugar [1986] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 378, 379. In this case, a letter of intent was construed as constituting acceptance of an offer which was then binding on both parties.

^{163.} British Steel Corp v Cleveland Bridge and Engineering Co Ltd [1984] 1 All E.R. 504; Monk Construction Ltd v Norwich Union Life Assurance Society (1992) 62 B.L.R. 107; Turriff Construction Ltd v Regalia Knitting Mills Ltd (1971) 9 B.L.R. 20; Kleinwort Benson Ltd v Malaysia Mining Corp [1989] 1 W.L.R. 379, [1989] 1 All E.R. 785; Wilson Smithett v Bangladesh Sugar [1986] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 378; Hall & Tawse South Ltd v Ivory Gate Ltd (1998) C.I.L.L. 1376; Jarvis Interiors Ltd v Galliard Homes Ltd [2000] B.L.R. 33; Furmston, Norisada and Poole, Contract Formation and Letters of Intent (1998), Ch.5.

^{164.} Wilson Smithett v Bangladesh Sugar [1986] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 378, 379, per Leggatt L.J.: "The fact that it has the particular label that it has does not brand it at the outset as a contractual document or as a non-contractual document".

^{165.} See, for example, the decision of the Court of Appeal in RTS Flexible Systems Ltd v Molkerei Alois Muller GmbH & Co [2009] EWCA Civ 26, [2009] B.L.R. 181. However, see now the decision of the Supreme Court at [2010] UKSC 14, [2010] 1 W.L.R. 753, where this decision was reversed. The case is discussed in detail in Vol.I, para.2-125.

^{166.} [1984] 1 All E.R. 504.

^{167.} At 510j to 511a.

^{168.} (1971) 9 B.L.R. 20.

^{169.} See also Bryen & Langley Ltd v Boston [2005] B.L.R. 508, where it was held that the fact that one of the parties had stated in a letter that their agreement should be contained in a formal JCT Standard Form of Contract 1998 to be drawn up and signed in due course did not prevent the parties from being taken to have already concluded a contract on the terms of the JCT form prior to its formal execution.

^{170.} [1986] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 378.

^{171.} BSC v Cleveland Bridge [1984] 1 All E.R. 504, 511.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts
Section 3. - Contract Terms

Introduction

37-063

The range of obligations contained in a given construction contract will, in common with other kinds of contract, be derived from a number of different sources, and the general principles relating to express and implied terms, and the principles applicable to their construction, are not considered in detail here. ¹⁷² However, a number of issues of particular relevance in the context of construction contracts are considered briefly below.

¹⁷². See Vol.I, Ch.13 on express terms and Ch.14 on implied terms.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts

Section 3. - Contract Terms

(a) - General Principles Apply

Contract material

37-064

The period of pre-contract preparation and negotiation will often be complicated and lengthy; there may be preliminary investigations (for example, site investigations, viability studies, negotiations with landlords and sub-contractors) which take months or years to complete. There will often be discussions, formal meetings (recorded or unrecorded), correspondence, memoranda and "heads of agreement" before the parties arrive at a contract. The question will often arise whether, and to what extent, prior negotiations and other kinds of extrinsic evidence, can be relied upon to construe the contract. ¹⁷³ The object of the construction of a written agreement is to discover the intentions of the parties to the agreement. ¹⁷⁴

Application of principles

37-065

The use of standard forms may pose particular problems, as do other practices common in the drawing up of construction contracts. Where there are conflicts between contractual documents or provisions, the court must construe the intentions of the parties from the documents taken as a whole, reading the documents together unless there are manifest contradictions. ¹⁷⁵ Standard forms will often identify the priority to be accorded to the different contract documents, for example, by stating that nothing contained in the specification or the bills of quantities shall override or modify the application or interpretation of the Articles and Conditions of the standard form. ¹⁷⁶ While words should be given their natural and ordinary meaning, the court must strive to give meaning to the words chosen by the parties. The court will not easily reach the conclusion that formal contract documents contain mistakes of language. However:

"... if detailed semantic and syntactical analysis of words in a commercial contract is going to lead to a conclusion that flouts business commonsense, it must be made to yield to business common- sense ...". ¹⁷⁷

In Somerfield Stores Ltd v Skanska Rashleigh Weatherfield Ltd, ¹⁷⁸ the Court of Appeal held that while the terms of a commercial contract must be construed in the light of the relevant factual matrix and commercial common sense, that did not permit the court to rewrite the parties' agreement merely because the terms appeared unexpected or unwise. ¹⁷⁹ Although the "matrix of fact" is broad, ¹⁸⁰ evidence of previous negotiations, ¹⁸¹ declarations of subjective intent, ¹⁸² and of conduct occurring after conclusion of a contract will not be admissible. ¹⁸³ Following the broad approach taken by the House of Lords in the ICS v West Bromwich case, it is to be noted that a more restrictive and conventional approach has subsequently been taken by the Court of Appeal ¹⁸⁴ on pragmatic grounds of time and cost, as well as authority. When construing a construction contract, even one entirely contained in writing, it is therefore permissible to have regard to the factual background known to each parties at or before the date of the conclusion of the contract,¹⁸⁵ although a proper balance should be struck between a consideration of the factual background and the words used by the parties, especially if the latter yield a fairly clear conclusion.¹⁸⁶ A more difficult question arises where parties make deletions to a printed document. There is authority both in support of and against the proposition that the court can have regard to the deletions in the interpretation of the concluded contract.¹⁸⁷ From a practical point of view, deletions will only become significant where there is obvious ambiguity in the retained words, and consideration of the deleted words in these circumstances is permissible.¹⁸⁸

-
- ^{173.} In Maggs (t/a BM Builders) v Marsh [2006] EWCA Civ 1058, [2006] B.L.R. 395, the Court of Appeal found that the subsequent conduct of the parties was admissible evidence in connection with the construction of a partly written and partly oral contract.
 - ^{174.} Marquis of Cholmondley v Clinton (1820) 2 Jac. & W. 1, 91.
 - ^{175.} Pagnan v Tradax Ocean Transportation [1987] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 342, 348, 350, [1987] 3 All E.R. 565, 571, 574.
 - ^{176.} IFC 98 Form cl.1.3.
 - ^{177.} Antaios Compania Naviera SA v Salen Rederierna AB [1985] A.C. 191, 201; Investors Compensation Scheme Ltd v West Bromwich Building Society [1998] 1 W.L.R. 896, 913. In the context of a badly drafted building contract, see Mitsui Construction Company Ltd v Att-Gen of Hong-Kong (1986) 33 B.L.R. 1, 14 PC.
 - ^{178.} [2006] EWCA Civ 1732.
 - ^{179.} Although if there are two possible meanings the more commercial construction is likely to be preferred, see Rainy Sky SA v Kookmin Bank [2011] UKSC 50.
 - ^{180.} See the decision in Investors Compensation Scheme Ltd v West Bromwich Building Society [1998] 1 W.L.R. 896 HL.
 - ^{181.} See also Chartbrook Ltd v Persimmon Homes Ltd [2009] UKHL 38, [2009] 1 A.C. 1101 where it was confirmed by the House of Lords that evidence of prior negotiations would normally not be admissible as part of the factual matrix to assist in construing contracts.
 - ^{182.} Investors Compensation Scheme Ltd v West Bromwich Building Society [1998] 1 W.L.R. 896, 913b.
 - ^{183.} Whitworth Street Estates (Manchester) Ltd v James Miller & Partners [1970] A.C. 583, 603; Wates Ltd v Greater London Council (1983) 25 B.L.R. 1, 29.
 - ^{184.} National Bank of Sharjah v Dellborg [1997] EWCA Civ 2070 CA; Scottish Power Plc v Britoil (Exploration) Ltd [1997] EWCA Civ 2752. See also William Hare v Shepherd Construction [2010] EWCA Civ 283, [2010] B.L.R. 358 at [18], where the Court of Appeal held that when construing an exclusion clause, any ambiguity in the meaning or effect of the clause is a matter counted against the party seeking to rely upon the clause.
 - ^{185.} See Volta Developments Ltd v Waltham Forest Friendly Society Ltd [2008] All E.R. (D) 306 (Mar) and Prenn v Simmonds [1971] 1 W.L.R. 1381 at 1384.
 - ^{186.} See Wayne Martin v David Wilson Homes Ltd [2004] E.G.L.R. 77.
 - ^{187.} See Keating on Construction Contracts, 9th edn (2012) para.3-007 for a discussion of the authorities.
 - ^{188.} Louis Dreyfus et Cie v Parnaso Cia Naviera SA [1959] 1 Q.B. 498, 515 CA.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts

Section 3. - Contract Terms

(b) - Contract Documents

Formal contract

37-066

Many different documents will be brought into existence for a construction project. Some of these will be incorporated into the formal contract, often bound together with a form setting out “general” conditions. Whether the form is standard or bespoke, certain formal details will need to be incorporated such as the price, the contract period or completion date and a description of the work. In addition the engineer or architect (and under the JCT Form, the quantity surveyor) will be identified. These, and other specific details may be included in an appendix, or in separate articles of agreement, which are also convenient if the contract is to be under seal. In addition to a set of general conditions there may be “special” or “particular” conditions which may give rise to issues of priority. The fundamental distinction to be drawn is between documents which are incorporated into and become part of the formal contract and those which are not. It is partly a question of fact and one of construction whether particular documents should be considered as contract documents.

Description of work

37-067

Documents setting out details of the work to be undertaken will usually be prepared specifically for the contract. These may include a set of “contract drawings”, specifications and bills of quantities. Other specific documents may be drawn up for incorporation into the contract, such as a method statement ¹⁸⁹ schedules of “daywork” charges and correspondence intended to have contractual effect. Various provisions may be found within the conditions of contract regulating the effect of such incorporated documents. They may, for example, all be given equal status and the contract administrator may be empowered to “explain and adjust” the terms where any discrepancy appears. ¹⁹⁰ Alternatively, there may be a stated order of precedence. There may also be a reference within the contract to other documents not forming part of the substantive obligations but having a secondary effect, such as a standard method of measurement.

Status of bill

37-068

Misunderstanding can arise as to the status of a bill of quantities. The document usually comprises a brief description of each item of work by reference to a standard catalogue of descriptions usually termed a standard method of measurement. To each such item the person compiling the bill adds the appropriate quantity which has been “taken off” the tender drawings, so that the contractor may insert his rate and thereby gross up the contract price. The status and use of bills of quantities (and in particular the abbreviated descriptions of the work and any other provisions that may be included) vary significantly between the Standard Forms. Where the bill of quantities is a full contract document (as under the ICC Form) any other provisions incorporated into the bill will similarly have full contractual effect. Under the JCT 98 Form and JCT SBC 2005 and 2011, however, the bill is limited in its status to defining the quality and quantity of the work and may not override or modify the conditions.¹⁹¹ Consequently, any provision purporting to modify the conditions which is contained within the bill, such as a provision for sectional completion, may be of no effect even though the apparent intention of the parties is to the contrary.¹⁹² The effect of the bill is also dependent upon whether the contract provides for remeasurement of the work and whether the conditions provide for “correcting” the bill in the event of departure from the standard method of measurement.¹⁹³

Incorporated documents

37-069

Most construction contracts will incorporate other material by reference, with either full or qualified contractual effect. Thus, in many public works contracts “standard” specifications are incorporated by reference, the contract documents containing merely lists of amendments and substituted clauses. Quality may be defined by reference to identified British standards or other public documents, although the mere incorporation of “appropriate British standards” may lead to uncertainty. Standard pricing documents such as schedules of daywork charges may similarly be incorporated and then amended by reference only by the parties.

Sub-contract conditions

37-070

These commonly incorporate, by reference, relevant provisions of the main contract, in order to create a “back-to-back” obligation. This may be achieved by deeming the sub-contractor to have notice of the main contract and requiring that the sub-contractor perform the obligations of the main contractor in relation to the sub-contract works and indemnify the contractor against liability incurred by reason of any breach.¹⁹⁴ Such a device will not avail the employer where the sub-contractor’s obligation is more extensive than that of the main contractor, e.g. where a nominated sub-contractor is employed to carry out design work which does not form part of the main contract.

Non-contractual documents

37-071

Depending upon a true construction of the contract as a whole, certain documents may be intended not to bind the parties to their literal terms, but to have more limited effect. Thus, a programme setting out the contractor’s intended sequence of work, even though the contract may require its provision, will generally not constitute a contract document. Were it to bind the parties literally, the inevitable failure of one or both parties to comply in every respect would render one or both parties in breach. Where programmes are to be referred to in the contract documents, the obligation will generally be to produce and review a sequence of working, but not to comply with each detail. Where important stages of the work are to be completed by particular dates, sectional completion may be provided for. There will be other documents which are supplied to the contractor by the employer (or a member of the professional team) which form part of the background information available to the contractor at tender and which may be of critical importance in relation to particular types of claims that may be made by the contractor. For example, in civil engineering contracts the contractor will usually be supplied with site investigation data upon which the initial design of the works will have been based. The content of the site investigation report will become significant in relation to any claim made by the contractor asserting additional cost or delay caused by unforeseen ground conditions.¹⁹⁵

^{189.} See Yorkshire Water Authority v McAlpine (1985) 32 B.L.R. 114.

- 190. See ICC Form of Contract cl.5.
- 191. JCT 98 cl.14.1, 2.2.1; JCT SBC 2005 cl.1.3, 2.3.
- 192. Gleeson v London Borough of Hillingdon (1994) Con. L. Yb. 111; English Industrial Estates v Wimpey [1973] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 118.
- 193. See below, para.37-143.
- 194. CECA Form of Sub-contract cl.3. See the approach of the Court of Appeal in Acqua Design Ltd v Kier Regional Ltd [2002] EWCA Civ 797, [2003] B.L.R. 111 to the question of whether certain provisions of the Standard DOM/1 Form of Sub-Contract were incorporated into a negotiated subcontract.
- 195. See cl.12 of the ICC Form.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts
Section 3. - Contract Terms
(c) - Implied Terms

General principles

37-072

⚠ Where problems or conflicts occur which are not clearly addressed by the express terms of the construction contract, then parties will frequently seek to imply a term into their contract which will enable them to achieve their objective such as, for example, access to the site or to particular working areas of the site, or timely provision of drawings and information. ¹⁹⁶ The general rules governing the implication of terms by the courts apply to construction contracts in the same way as to contracts generally, and they are considered in detail elsewhere. ¹⁹⁷ The basic principles are that ¹⁹⁸ ⚠:

- (i)
the term must be reasonable and equitable ¹⁹⁹;
- (ii)
the term must be necessary to give business efficacy to the contract, so that no term will be implied if the contract is effective without it ²⁰⁰ ⚠;
- (iii)
the term must be so obvious that "it goes without saying" ²⁰¹;
- (iv)
the term must be capable of clear expression ²⁰²;
- (v)
the term must not contradict any express term of the contract. ²⁰³

Necessary terms

37-073

The courts will imply terms into a construction contract where necessary to achieve the intentions of both ²⁰⁴ of the parties to a contract, ²⁰⁵ and where necessary to make the contract work as a matter of business efficacy. ²⁰⁶ It follows from the requirement of necessity that the courts will not imply terms which, in effect, improve the contract made by the parties, ²⁰⁷ or which is but one of many routes by which a problem may be addressed. ²⁰⁸ A term will be implied only where there is an obvious gap in the contract which requires filling. ²⁰⁹ A term may be implied into a contract notwithstanding the existence of an entire agreement clause. ²¹⁰

Non-prevention

37-074

One of the most important implied terms in the context of construction is that the employer ²¹¹ will not hinder or prevent the contractor from carrying out its obligations in accordance with the terms of the contract and from executing the works in a regular and orderly manner. ²¹² Where the express terms of the contract are silent as to obstructions and access, then it will be important to establish an implied term that the contractor is to be given access to the site where work is to be carried out. ²¹³ In Milburn Services Ltd v United Trading Group, ²¹⁴ the court implied a term that the sub-contractor was to have access to the works notwithstanding that the main contract contained an “entire agreement clause”. However, where non-prevention and access are concerned, the courts will only imply obligations which are strictly necessary to the performance of contractual obligations, so that exclusive access to the site, or a complete absence of debris prior to commencement, are unlikely to be the subject of implied terms. ²¹⁵ In Bernhard’s Rugby Landscapes Ltd v Stockley Park Consortium Ltd ²¹⁶ the court was not prepared to imply a term of cooperation to enable a party to carry out its contract works in accordance with its own method statement and/or programme where the manner of execution of these activities was entirely a matter for the party seeking to imply the term. The degree of co-operation to be implied depends in each case on the obligations undertaken, rather than on what is reasonable. ²¹⁷ Claims for damages arising out of delay to the works will often be based on breach of an implied term as to non-prevention. There will generally be an implied term as to the timely delivery of information, instructions and drawings, since although the employer will be entitled to issue information as the works proceed, ²¹⁸ he is not entitled to issue information in such a way as prevents or impedes performance by the contractor. ²¹⁹ Such matters are, however, frequently covered by express terms, which will preclude further implication. Also, it should be noted that in Leander Construction Ltd v Mulalley & Co Ltd ²²⁰ it was held that ordinarily there will be no implied term in a building contract that the contractor should proceed regularly and diligently with the works prior to the contract completion date.

Co-operation

37-075

Construction contracts will often require a high degree of collaboration between the contractor and the employer (or his representative under the contract), and between the main contractor and his specialist subcontractors. The implication of a term as to cooperation between contracting parties is well-established ²²¹ and arises as a matter of law since otherwise A might frustrate the performance of an obligation by B which was dependent on action being taken or not taken by A. The precise scope of A’s implied obligation to cooperate in his contract with B will depend upon the nature of the obligations under the contract, but it is thought that, in most cases, A’s obligation to cooperate is more in the nature of an obligation to maintain the state of affairs between A and B, rather than an obligation upon A positively to facilitate the performance of obligations which B has undertaken to carry out. ²²² Thus, the appointment or re-appointment of a contract administrator and, where the contract administrator is an employee, securing compliance with his terms of employment, will fall within the obligation to co-operate. ²²³ So, too, will the provision of access by a contractor to a sub-contractor where certain dates for completion are contractual obligations. ²²⁴ The implication of an obligation that the employer should positively assist the contractor in the execution of his works will depend upon the circumstances of the particular case, but is likely to be rare, given the basic principles governing the implication of terms generally.

Standard of workmanship

37-076

The contractor must carry out his works using all proper skill and care, and the standard required in the particular case is to be gathered from all the circumstances of the contract. ²²⁵ Where a contractor is required to obtain materials (where specified by the employer), the implied term as to workmanship requires the contractor to make a proper inspection of the materials before using them, and the contractor will be responsible for defects in the materials obtained by him if such defects would have been apparent upon reasonable inspection. ²²⁶ There is authority to suggest that the implied obligation upon the contractor as to workmanship is more onerous than the requirement to identify reasonably apparent defects in materials, and will, in appropriate circumstances, become a duty to warn. ²²⁷ Depending upon all the relevant circumstances, the implied term may require the contractor to inform their employer's architect of defects in the design of which he is aware, ²²⁸ or it may extend to defects which the contractor believes to exist in the works. ²²⁹ In Edward Lindenberg v Joe Canning ²³⁰ the judge, having heard expert evidence, concluded that the fact that such an obviously important structural feature as the chimney breast being indicated on plans as non load-bearing should "by itself" have led the defendant contractor to have had grave doubts about the plan which he ought, in turn, to have raised with the surveyor overseeing the works. ²³¹

Duty to warn

37-077

A duty to warn will arise where there is an obvious danger. In Plant Construction Plc v Clive Adams Associates, ²³² certain temporary works were, to the knowledge of the defendant, obviously dangerous, so that the obligation to carry out the works with the skill and care of an ordinary competent contractor carried with this an obligation to warn of the danger perceived. ²³³

Fitness of materials

37-078

Where the contractor is responsible for the supply of materials for the building works, there will be an implied warranty that the materials (i) will be reasonably fit for their purpose; and (ii) will be of good quality. ²³⁴ In each case, the warranties can be excluded or negated by reference to the express agreement of the parties, or by reference to evidence of the intentions of the parties. ²³⁵ In order for the implication to arise there must be reliance on the skill of the contractor. ²³⁶ The provision of materials must also conform to the requirements of the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982.

Fitness of works

37-079

⚠ There will be a further implied warranty that the work carried out by the contractor will, on completion, be reasonably fit for its particular purpose where: (i) the employer makes known to the contractor the particular purpose for which the building is required; (ii) the work is of a kind which the contractor holds himself out as performing; and (iii) the employer relies on the contractor's skill and judgment. ²³⁷ The scope for the implication of a warranty as to fitness for intended purpose will vary considerably depending upon the nature of the express obligations of the contractor. Where the express obligations of the contractor are broadly in the nature of "design and build" obligations, then there will be far greater room for the implication of the warranty as to fitness for intended purpose. ²³⁸ Where, however, the contractor is required to carry out work in accordance with detailed plans or a specification provided by another, then there is little room for the implication of the warranty. ²³⁹ In MT Hojgaard A/S v E.ON Climate and Renewables UK ²⁴⁰ it was held at first instance that the contractor was in breach of an express fitness for purpose term requiring a certain design life for transition pieces in a windfarm structure, notwithstanding the design's compliance with the other DNV standard design specifications in the contract; but the Court of Appeal reversed this decision, emphasising that the warranty that the foundations would function for 20 years was inconsistent with all of the other references in the requirements and specification and only amounted to a promise that they would probably function for 20 years.²⁴¹ However, the decision of the first instance Court was re-instated by the Supreme Court²⁴²  which stated that where a contract requires an item to be produced in accordance prescribed criteria and in accordance with a prescribed design which will inevitably result in the product falling short of that criteria, the contractor will often be obliged to improve upon the aspects of the prescribed design contained in the contract. Whether this is true in any given case is likely to turn upon the nature of the inconsistency in the contract and the relative expertise of the contractor and the employer, or its designing architect.

Construction and sale of a dwelling

37-080

When a purchaser buys a house from a builder who contracts to build it, there will be implied warranties: (i) that the builder will do the work in a good and workmanlike manner; (ii) supplying good and proper materials for the work; and (iii) that the house will be reasonably fit for human habitation.²⁴³ However, the "threefold implication" will not arise if the contractor simply sells a house which he has previously constructed.²⁴⁴

^{196.} For a discussion of the basic principles, see Peden (2001) 117 L.Q.R. 459. Note also that in the decision in Bloor Construction (UK) Ltd v Bowmer & Kirkland (London) Ltd [2000] B.L.R. 314, it was decided that the power of an adjudicator under the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 to correct an error arising from an accidental error or omission in his decision arose by way of an implied term.

^{197.} See above, Vol.I, Ch.14. In Spencer v The Secretary of State for Defence [2012] EWHC 120 (Ch) it was emphasised that the process of construing the terms of a contract and considering what, if any, terms should be implied into it are sometimes best seen as part of "the same unified process of establishing the objective meaning of the contract" (per Vos J. at [38]-[58]).

^{198.}  For a clear statement of the principles involved, see BP Refinery (Westernport) Pty Ltd v Shire of Hastings (1978) 52 A.L.J.R. 20, 26; Phillips Electronique v British Sky Broadcasting Ltd [1995] E.M.L.R. 472 CA. See the decision of the Court of Appeal in Ultraframe (UK) Ltd v Tailored Roofing Systems Ltd [2004] 2 All E.R. (Comm) 692, [2004] B.L.R. 341. In Marks & Spencer Plc v BNP Paribas Securities Services Trust Co (Jersey) Ltd [2015] UKSC 72, the Supreme Court reaffirmed the applicability of these five principles and provided further guidance as to their usage: see above, para. 14-007.

^{199.} Young and Marten Ltd v McManus Childs Ltd [1969] 1 A.C. 454, 465 HL; Liverpool City Council v Irwin [1977] A.C. 239, 262 HL.

^{200.}  The Moorcock (1889) 14 P.D. 64, 68 CA; Reigate v Union Manufacturing Co [1918] 1 K.B. 592, 605 CA. In Walter Lilly & Co Ltd v Clin [2016] EWHC 357(TCC), [2016] B.L.R. 247 it was held that in order to make a Design Portion JCT Contract work effectively the employer, who had the responsibility for obtaining planning permission, should provide in good time to the local authority the information that its planning officers require and are lawfully entitled to expect in order to grant the necessary consents.

^{201.} Shirlaw v Southern Foundries (1926) Ltd [1939] 2 K.B. 206, 227 CA.

^{202.} Shell UK Ltd v Lostock Garage Ltd [1976] 1 W.L.R. 1187, 1196.

- 203. Tamplin (FA) Steamship Co Ltd v Anglo-Mexican Petroleum Products Co Ltd [1916] 2 A.C. 397, 422; Lynch v Thorne [1956] 1 W.L.R. 303, 311.
- 204. Duke of Westminster v Guild [1985] Q.B. 688, 699; Barratt Southampton v Fairclough Building Ltd (1988) 27 Con. L.R. 62, 70.
- 205. Liverpool City Council v Irwin [1977] A.C. 239, 253 HL.
- 206. Trollope & Colls Ltd v North West Metropolitan Regional Hospital Board [1973] 1 W.L.R. 601, 609 HL.
- 207. The Moorcock (1889) 14 P.D. 64, 68 CA.
- 208. Trollope & Colls Ltd v North West Metropolitan Regional Hospital Board [1973] 1 W.L.R. 601, 610 HL.
- 209. Adams Holden & Pearson v Trent Regional Health Authority (1989) 47 B.L.R. 34, 49; Barratt Southampton Ltd v Fairclough Building Ltd (1988) 27 Con. L.R. 62, 70; GLC v Cleveland Bridge and Engineering Co (1984) 34 B.L.R. 50, 78.
- 210. See Harrison v Shepherd Homes Ltd [2011] EWHC 1811 (TCC), 27 Const. L.J. 709, per Ramsey J. at [54]-[66].
- 211. The employer will be responsible for acts of prevention by the contract administrator: London Borough of Merton v Leach (1985) 32 B.L.R. 51.
- 212. London Borough of Merton v Stanley Hugh Leach Ltd (1985) 32 B.L.R. 51, 79 where Vinelott J. applied dicta of Vaughan Williams L.J. in Barque Quilpue v Bryant [1904] 2 K.B. 261, 274 to the JCT Standard Form, 1963 edn, 1971 Revision. For a decision in which the principle was applied in a construction contract, see Allridge (Builders) Ltd v Grandactual Ltd (1997) C.I.L.L. 1225.
- 213. Roberts v Bury Commissioners (1870) L.R. 5 C.P. 310, 320, 325.
- 214. (1995) 52 Con. L.R. 130.
- 215. Allridge (Builders) Ltd v Grandactual Ltd (1997) C.I.L.L. 1225.
- 216. (1997) 82 B.L.R. 39.
- 217. Mackay v Dick (1881) 6 App. Cas. 251, 263. See also: Nala Engineering Ltd v Roselec Ltd (1999) C.I.L.L. 1534; and Scottish Power Plc v Kvaerner Construction (Regions) Ltd (1999) S.L.T. 721 Outer House.
- 218. Neodox Ltd v Swinton & Pendlebury Borough Council (1958) 5 B.L.R. 78.
- 219. London Borough of Merton v Stanley Hugh Leach (1985) 32 B.L.R. 51; J & J Fee Ltd v The Express Lift Co Ltd (1993) 34 Con. L.R. 147; Royal Brompton Hospital NHS Trust v Hammond (No.4) (1999) 69 Con. L.R. 170.
- 220. [2011] EWHC 3449 (TCC), [2012] B.L.R. 152.
- 221. Mackay v Dick (1881) 6 App. Cas. 251, 263; Luxor (Eastbourne) Ltd v Cooper [1941] A.C. 108, 118; Mona Equipment Ltd v Rhodesia Railways Ltd [1949] 2 All E.R. 1014, 1018.
- 222. Mona Oil Equipment & Supply Co Ltd v Rhodesia Railway Ltd [1949] 2 All E.R. 1014.
- 223. Perini Corp v Commonwealth of Australia [1969] 2 N.S.W.L.R. 530; (1969) 12 B.L.R. 82, 104.
- 224. Jardine Engineering v Shimizu (1992) 63 B.L.R. 96.

- 225. Young & Marten Ltd v McManus Childs Ltd [1969] 1 A.C. 454, 465, per Lord Reid; Greaves & Co (Contractors) Ltd v Baynham Meikle & Partners [1975] 1 W.L.R. 1095, 1098, per Lord Denning M.R.
- 226. Young & Marten Ltd v McManus Childs Ltd [1969] 1 A.C. 454, 466, 470 and 479.
- 227. For a critical consideration of cases on the duty to warn, see: Wilson and Rutherford (1994) 10 Const. L.J. 90.
- 228. Equitable Debenture Assets Corp Ltd v William Moss (1983) 2 Const. L.R. 1.
- 229. Victoria University of Manchester v Hugh Wilson (1984) 2 Const. L.R. 43. And see in the context of an engineer's duty to warn about dangerous temporary works, Hart Investments Ltd v Fidler and Larchpack Ltd [2007] B.L.R. 526.
- 230. (1992) 62 B.L.R. 147.
- 231. See also Harrison v Shepherd Homes Ltd [2011] EWHC 1811 (TCC), 27 Const. L.J. 709, per Ramsey J. at [39]–[52], where it was held, albeit as a matter of construction of the relevant express term, that where a contractor carries out both design and construction of the works, the obligation to carry out the work in a proper and workmanlike manner extends to any design work as well as to the construction work undertaken.
- 232. [2001] B.L.R. 137.
- 233. See also Aurum Investments Ltd v Avonforce Ltd (In Liquidation) [2001] 2 All E.R. 385.
- 234. Young & Marten v McManus Childs Ltd [1969] 1 A.C. 454 HL; Gloucestershire CC v Richardson [1969] 1 A.C. 480 HL; Rotherham MBC v Frank Haslam Milan & Co Ltd and MJ Gleeson (Northern) Ltd (1996) 78 B.L.R. 1 CA. The implied warranties form a parallel to the warranties contained in s.14 of the Sale of Goods Act 1979. In respect of contracts for the supply of computer software, see St Albans City & District Council v ICL [1996] 4 All E.R. 481 CA.
- 235. Young & Marten Ltd v McManus Childs Ltd [1969] 1 A.C. 454, 474, per Lord Upjohn, referring to G H Myers & Co v Brent Cross Service Co [1934] 1 K.B. 46, 55, per du Parc J.
- 236. IBA v EMI & BICC (1980) 14 B.L.R. 1, 47 HL.
- 237. Greaves v Baynham Meikle [1975] 1 W.L.R. 1095, 1098G, per Lord Denning M.R.
- 238. IBA v EMI and BICC (1980) 14 B.L.R. 1, 47 where Lord Scarman said (obiter) that: "... in the absence of a clear, contractual indication to the contrary, I see no reason why one who in the course of business contracts to design, supply and erect a television aerial mast is not under an obligation to ensure that it is reasonably fit for the purpose for which he knows it is intended to be used ...". See also Viking Grain v TH White (1985) 33 B.L.R. 103.
- 239. Lynch v Thorne [1956] 1 W.L.R. 303, 311 CA; Norta Wallpapers (Ireland) Ltd v John Sisk & Sons (Dublin) Ltd (1976) 14 B.L.R. 53, where the Irish Supreme Court held (at 63–64) that there was no room for the implication that the contractor warranted that a factory roof would be reasonably fit for its intended purpose in circumstances where the roof had been chosen by a specialist subcontractor.
- 240. [2014] EWHC 1088 (TCC), [2014] B.L.R. 450.
- 241. [2015] EWCA Civ 407.
- 242.  [2017] UKSC 59.
- 243. Hancock v BW Brazier (Anerley) Ltd [1966] 1 W.L.R. 1317, 1332F; Greaves v Baynham Meikle

[1975] 1 W.L.R. 1095, 1098G. See Harrison v Shepherd Homes Ltd [2011] EWHC 1811 (TCC), 27 Const. L.J. 709 for a consideration of when such obligations will survive a conveyance of the property.

244. Minster Trust Ltd v Traps Tractors Ltd [1954] 1 W.L.R. 963, 975.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts
Section 3. - Contract Terms
(d) - Statutes Relevant to Construction

Introduction

37-081

Statute plays an increasingly important part in determining the obligations which arise in construction contracts independent of the agreement of the parties. Some of the more important legislation is considered here. ²⁴⁵

Statutory implied terms

37-082

The Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 (Pt II) ("SOGSA 1982") is applicable to contracts ²⁴⁶ for the supply of a service, and this includes construction contracts, e.g. through supply of building materials and work. ²⁴⁷ Subject to the possibility of exclusion or restriction in accordance with s.16, a supplier of a service acting in the course of business is obliged to carry out the service with reasonable skill and care ²⁴⁸; there will be an implied term that the supplier will carry out the service within a reasonable time ²⁴⁹; and there will be an implied term that the party contracting with the supplier will pay a reasonable charge. ²⁵⁰ The obligations created by SOGSA 1982 may be negated or varied by express agreement, by the course of dealing between the parties, or by such usage as binds both parties to the contract; but a term implied by SOGSA 1982 is not negated by an express term of the contract between the parties unless it is inconsistent with it. ²⁵¹

Defective Premises Act 1972

37-083

Section 1(1) provides:

“(1)

A person taking on work for or in connection with the provision of a dwelling (whether the dwelling is provided by the erection or by the conversion or enlargement of a building) owes a duty—

(a)

if the dwelling is provided to the order of any person, to that person; and without prejudice to paragraph (a) above, to every person who acquires an interest (whether legal or equitable) in the dwelling; to see that the work which he takes on is done in a workmanlike or, as the case may be, professional manner, with proper materials and so that as regards that work the dwelling will be fit for habitation when completed.”

(b)

The following points in relation to s.1(1) may be noted:

(i)

although the word “dwelling” is nowhere defined in the statute, it “... implies a building used or capable of being used as a residence for one or more families, and provided with all necessary parts and appliances, such as floors, windows, staircases, etc ...” ²⁵²;

(ii)

s.1(1) is directed at the creation of new dwellings, either by construction or by adaptation, and is not concerned with works of rectification to an existing dwelling ²⁵³;

(iii)

fitness for habitation is a measure of the standard required to be achieved in the performance of the obligations imposed by s.1(1), so that it is a necessary ingredient to a cause of action that the plaintiff can show that the dwelling is not fit for habitation ²⁵⁴;

(iv)

the question of whether a dwelling is fit for habitation is one of fact and degree and can extend to defects of quality which render the dwelling unsuitable for its purpose as well as to dangerous defects ²⁵⁵;

(v)

to be fit for habitation, a dwelling must be capable of occupation for a reasonable time without risk to the health or safety of the occupants and without undue inconvenience or discomfort for the occupants ²⁵⁶;

(vi)

if, when a dwelling is complete, it lacks some essential attribute, then, notwithstanding that the defect is latent rather than patent, the dwelling will be unfit for habitation and come within the scope of s.1(1). ²⁵⁷

Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 ²⁵⁸

37-084

⚠ This Act applies for the most part to contract terms that seek to exclude or restrict liability, whether that liability arises in contract or in tort. Where a consumer makes a contract with the seller or supplier of goods, then the contract will also fall within the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999 or the Consumer Rights Act 2015 as applicable. ²⁵⁹ The two regimes, which exist in parallel, play an important part in the regulation of contractual terms in the context of construction. The Act affects contractual terms which arise in the course of business ²⁶⁰ in three different (though frequently overlapping) ways: (i) control over contractual terms which purport to exclude or restrict liability in negligence ²⁶¹; (ii) control over contractual terms which purport to exclude or restrict liability in relation to implied terms in contracts of sale or hire purchase; (iii) a more general power of review of contract clauses, by s.3, exercisable in the particular circumstances described in the section. The section applies between contracting parties where one of them deals as a consumer or on the other's written standard terms of business. ²⁶² ⚠ In these circumstances, contract terms which purport to exclude or restrict liability for breach of contract or which purport to entitle one party to render a contractual performance substantially different from that reasonably expected of him at the time the contract was made, may to that extent be ineffective. ²⁶³

Exclusion depends on reasonableness

37-085

In each situation identified above, the exclusion or restriction of liability will be ineffective except insofar as the contract term satisfies the requirement of "reasonableness", a concept which is explained in s.11 and elaborated in guidelines in Sch.2 which are frequently regarded as being of general application. ²⁶⁴ The burden of proof in relation to reasonableness is on the party seeking to uphold the disputed clause, ²⁶⁵ and it is also for the party who relies on standard form conditions to plead the facts and matters on which it relies if it seeks to contend that its conditions are reasonable. ²⁶⁶

Reasonableness in construction

37-086

The test of "reasonableness" has been of wide application in construction contracts, indicating that the courts will consider a wide range of circumstances in determining whether the test has been met. In Rees Hough v Redland Reinforced Plastics ²⁶⁷ a clause purporting to limit the liability of the designer and supplier of defective pipes to defects notified within three months of supply was held to be unreasonable. In Smith v Eric Bush the disclaimer contained in a building society valuation for a modest dwelling was held to be unreasonable ²⁶⁸ since the valuer assumes a responsibility to both mortgagee and purchaser by agreeing to carry out a valuation for mortgage purposes knowing that the valuation will probably be relied upon by the purchaser in order to decide whether or not to enter into a contract to purchase the house. ²⁶⁹ In The Chester Grosvenor Hotel Company Ltd v Alfred McAlpine Management Ltd, ²⁷⁰ a management contract provided that the client could not recover from the project manager sums for delay in excess of monies received by the project manager from the works contractors. The clause was held to be reasonable in circumstances where the parties were substantial concerns dealing at arm's length; the parties had choice open to them in relation to contracting party and terms. In Stewart Gill Ltd v Horatio Myer Ltd ²⁷¹ a clause in a contract for the supply and installation of an overhead conveyor system which purported to exclude rights of set-off was held to be unreasonable. In Barnard Pipeline Technology Ltd v Marston Construction Company Ltd ²⁷² a clause which provided that the liability of the supplier of pipes for defects was to be limited to the cost of replacement or repair of the goods supplied was held to be reasonable, in circumstances where there was equality of bargaining power and the parties had had previous dealings. In St Albans City & DC v ICL ²⁷³ a clause limiting the liability of the supplier of computer software to the price or £100,000, and excluding liability for specific types of loss, was held to be unreasonable, the trial judge observing, inter alia, that the defendant had called no evidence to show that it was fair and reasonable to limit their liability to £100,000 or to any other sum. In James Moore v Yakeley Associates ²⁷⁴ it was held that a clause limiting the liability of an architect to £250,000 was reasonable.

Unfair Contract Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations

37-087

The regime of the Act exists in parallel with that imposed by The Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999 which replace the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1994, which implemented a European Council Directive ²⁷⁵ on Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts. ²⁷⁶ The Regulations apply to contracts concluded after July 1, 1995 ²⁷⁷ between a “consumer” and a seller or supplier. Schedule 2 to the Regulations contains an indicative, rather than exhaustive, list of the terms which are regarded as causing a significant imbalance which operates to the detriment of the consumer, and may therefore be considered to be unfair under the Regulations. The 1999 Regulations confer upon the Office of Fair Trading a power to go to the court to prevent the continued use of unfair terms brought to his attention. ²⁷⁸ For contracts made on or after October 1, 2015, the Consumer Rights Act 2015 revokes and replaces the 1999 Regulations. ²⁷⁹

The Building Regulations ²⁸⁰

37-088

The power to make building regulations as part of the system of building control in England and Wales is vested in the Secretary of State by operation of s.1 of the Building Act 1984. ²⁸¹ The regulations currently in force are the Building Regulations 2010, ²⁸² as amended by successive Amending Regulations issued from 2011 and continuing. ²⁸³ The Building Regulations themselves are a concise document, with the applicable technical detail being found in a series of approved documents. An important aspect of the scheme for building regulation is that there is a dual system in operation: there is building control carried out by local authorities, and then there is control by way of certificates issued by approved inspectors operating under the Building (Approved Inspectors, etc.) Regulations, the latest version of which is the 2010 Regulations. ²⁸⁴ Up to 2005 the only Approved Inspector was NHBC Building Control Services Ltd, a subsidiary of the NHBC, ²⁸⁵ but a list of individual approved inspectors is now maintained by the Construction Industry Council.

Civil liability in relation to the Building Regulations

37-089

Given the status of s.38 of the Building Act 1984 (not brought into force), the civil liability of the building contractor for breaches of the building regulations will depend upon the terms of the contract between him and the employer. Where the building contract contains no express provision requiring compliance with statutory requirements, ²⁸⁶ liability for breach of the building regulations may arise through breach of express or implied terms as to materials or workmanship and it is also thought that there may generally be an implied term in building contracts that the works will be carried out and completed in accordance with the building regulations. ²⁸⁷ The fact that the works have been inspected and approved by a local authority building inspector as being compliant with the Building Regulations is no defence to a civil claim against the builder if there has, in fact, been a breach of the Building Regulations ²⁸⁸ although where there is a factual dispute as to what was built it may be of evidential relevance.

37-090

Since the decision of the House of Lords in Murphy v Brentwood DC ²⁸⁹ a local authority, exercising its functions in relation to the building regulations (such as the approval of plans, the supervision of work and the issue of relevant notices), is not generally liable either to an original or a subsequent owner for the cost of repairing a building which is, in breach of the building regulations, in a defective state. ²⁹⁰ Equally, an expert instructed by a local authority to advise the authority about the ground conditions and adequacy of foundations for dwellings built on an old mining area, owed no duty of care to a first purchaser or the then owner/occupier to prevent or avoid the occurrence of pure economic loss. ²⁹¹

Approved inspectors

37-091

The duty of the approved inspector is to supervise building works to ensure that they comply with the requirements of the building regulations. The position of the approved inspector has ²⁹² been contrasted with that of the local authority in that whereas the local authority has a discretion whether to inspect, the approved inspector must inspect at the stages set out in the building regulations.

-
- ^{245.} For the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 (as now amended), see below, paras 37-156 et seq.
 - ^{246.} Made on or after July 4, 1983.
 - ^{247.} For a case where SOGSA 1982 is considered in the context of a construction contract, see Charlotte Thirty Ltd and Bison Ltd v Croker Ltd (1990) 24 Con. L.R. 46. Contracts for the supply of materials are normally governed by the Sale of Goods Act 1979 (see below, Ch.44); see Jewsons Ltd v Boykan [2004] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 505, [2004] B.L.R. 31 on fitness for purpose under s.14(3) in the building context.
 - ^{248.} s.13.
 - ^{249.} s.14.
 - ^{250.} s.15. By s.2 what is a reasonable charge is a question of fact.
 - ^{251.} s.16.
 - ^{252.} Halsbury's Laws (Vol.31, 4th re-issue), p.246.
 - ^{253.} Jacobs v Morton & Partners (1994) 72 B.L.R. 97, 105.
 - ^{254.} Thompson v Clive Alexander & Partners (1992) 59 B.L.R. 77, 87; Alexander v Mercouris [1979] 1 W.L.R. 1270, 1274B, per Buckley L.J.: "The duty is one to be performed during the carrying on of the work. The reference to the dwelling being fit for habitation indicates the intended consequence of the proper performance of the duty and provides a measure of the standard of the requisite work and materials ...". These decisions were followed in Murray v Jack Lunn (Construction) Ltd Unreported 1996. See also Harrison v Shepherd Homes Ltd [2011] EWHC 1811 (TCC), 27 Const. L.J. 709, where the Court held that it was bound by Alexander v Mercouris to find that "fitness for habitation" provided a measure of the required "work and materials" obligation, although Ramsey J. stated obiter that absent this authority he would have found that the duty created by s.1(1) was a threefold duty analogous to that at common law under Hancock v Brazier and not a single duty (see at [124]–[153]).
 - ^{255.} See Bole v Huntsbuild [2009] EWCA Civ 1146, per Dyson L.J. at [29] and also Harrison v Shepherd Homes Ltd [2011] EWHC 1811 (TCC), 27 Const. L.J. 709, per Ramsey J. at [154]–[165].
 - ^{256.} Rendlesham Estates Plc v Barr Ltd [2014] EWHC 3968 (TCC).
 - ^{257.} Andrews v Schooling [1991] 1 W.L.R. 783, 790.
 - ^{258.} See generally Vol.I, Ch.15.
 - ^{259.} See Vol.I, para.15-168.

- 260. That is, liability for breach of obligations or duties arising from things done or to be done by a person in the course of a business: s.1(3).
- 261. See, for example, Phillips Products Ltd v Hyland [1987] 1 W.L.R. 659; Smith v Eric S Bush [1990] A.C. 831.
- 262.  It is not necessary for a party's terms and condition to be incorporated in their entirety to trigger the application of this section. A single incorporated clause taken from a party's standard terms and condition may, on the right facts, be sufficient. See Commercial Management (Investments) Ltd v Mitchell Design & Construct Ltd [2016] EWHC 76 (TCC).
- 263. See Langstane Housing Association Ltd v First Riverside Construction Ltd [2009] CSOH 52, 124 Con. L.R., where the Outer House of the Court of Session held that a net contribution clause in the retainer of an engineer did not fall within the scope of cl.16 or 17 of the Act (as it applies in Scotland), but that had it done so it would have satisfied the fair and reasonable test and have been effective.
- 264. For judicial reference to Sch.2 in the construction context, see: Rees Hough Ltd v Redland Reinforced Plastics (1984) 27 B.L.R. 136; Barnard Pipeline Technology Ltd v Marston Construction Co Ltd (1992) C.I.L.L. 743; Edmund Murray Ltd v BSP International Foundations Ltd (1992) 33 Con. L.R. 1 CA. See also: Pegler Ltd v Wang (UK) Ltd [2000] B.L.R. 218; Casson v Ostley [2003] B.L.R. 147; Stent Foundations Ltd v MJ Gleeson Group Plc [2001] B.L.R. 134; and Watford Electronics Ltd v Sanderson CFL Ltd [2001] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 696, [2001] B.L.R. 143.
- 265. Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.11(5).
- 266. Sheffield v Pickfords Ltd [1997] EWCA Civ 984; Lacey's Footwear Ltd v Bowler [1997] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 369.
- 267. (1984) 27 B.L.R. 136, 153.
- 268. [1990] 1 A.C. 831, 847D, 859A.
- 269. at 847D.
- 270. (1991) 56 B.L.R. 115, 133–135.
- 271. [1992] Q.B. 600, 606, 609, [1992] 2 All E.R. 257, 261a, 263a–e.
- 272. (1991) C.I.L.L. 743.
- 273. [1996] 4 All E.R. 481.
- 274. (1998) 62 Con. L.R. 76.
- 275. 93/13 of April 5, 1993.
- 276. [1993] O.J. L95/29. For a discussion of the directive, see: Beale, Good Faith and Fault in Contract Law (1995).
- 277. reg.1 of the 1994 Regulations states that they "... shall come into force on 1st July 1995 ..."; reg.1 of the 1999 Regulations "... on 1st October 1999".
- 278. reg.8. A "Bulletin" is produced by the Office of Fair Trading containing, inter alia, "Case Studies" where the Regulations have been applied to standard terms in consumer transactions.
- 279. See above, para.15-168.

- 280. See Keating on Building Contracts, 9th edn (2012), paras 16–025. Powell-Smith and Billington, The Building Regulations—Explained and Illustrated, 10th edn (1995, 1998 reprint).
- 281. The Act came into force on December 1, 1984 when the relevant powers were to be exercised by the Department for the Environment. Since 2007 the relevant powers are transferred to the Department for Communities and Local Government.
- 282. SI 2010/2214.
- 283. There are other specialist regulations also derived from the 1984 Act: the Building (Approved Inspectors, etc.) Regulations 2010 (SI 2010/2215), the Building (Inner London) Regulations 1987 (SI 1987/748), the Building (Disabled People) Regulations 1987 (SI 1987/1445), the Building (Prescribed Fees) Regulations 1994 (SI 1994/2020), each of which are also regularly amended by further SIs.
- 284. SI 2010/2215.
- 285. National House Building Council.
- 286. Townsend (Builders) v Cinema News (1958) 20 B.L.R. 118 CA; Equitable Debenture Assets Corp v William Moss (1984) 2 Con. L.R. 1.
- 287. See Keating on Construction Contracts, 9th edn (2012), para.4–037.
- 288. Hunt v Optima Cambridge Ltd [2013] EWHC 681 (TCC).
- 289. [1991] 1 A.C. 398.
- 290. Ending 14 years of such claims, which commenced with Anns v Merton LBC [1978] A.C. 728.
- 291. Preston v Torfaen BC (1993) 36 Con. L.R. 49 CA.
- 292. See Powell-Smith and Billington, The Building Regulations—Explained and Illustrated, 11th edn (1999).

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts

Section 3. - Contract Terms

(e) - Tort in Construction

Overview

37-092

Although the law applicable to the modern construction industry is often perceived as being solely concerned with the operation of standard forms contracts, a broad range of statutory and common law obligations are also encountered in the construction context. The tort of negligence has in recent times played a particularly important role which has, however, now been significantly reduced and redefined.

Modern role of negligence

37-093

The departure from Anns v Merton LBC ²⁹³ in Murphy v Brentwood DC ²⁹⁴ had a fundamental impact upon the duties and liabilities which arise in the construction industry, ²⁹⁵ bringing with it the distinction between physical damage to person or other property ²⁹⁶ (recoverable on the basis of Donoghue v Stevenson) ²⁹⁷ and economic loss (irrecoverable save where there is some factor beyond the mere occurrence of the loss and the fact that its occurrence could be foreseen ²⁹⁸). This distinction is reflected in a number of decisions on building projects, ²⁹⁹ although it is to be observed that there has been a divergence of view between the English courts and other common law jurisdictions on this controversial subject. ³⁰⁰

Tort and contract

37-094

⚠ Following the decision in Henderson v Merrett Syndicates ³⁰¹ there has been further clarification of the underlying principles of tortious liability, which were traced back to Hedley Byrne v Heller & Partners ³⁰² with its frequent references to one party having assumed or undertaken a responsibility to another in respect of the application of a particular skill, then relied on by the other party. In the light of the assumption of responsibility principle developed in Henderson v Merrett, ³⁰³ the specialist building contractor is by no means immune from claims for pure economic loss in tort, although the situations where such liability may still arise will be narrow. ³⁰⁴ Accordingly, the Court of Appeal has held that a specialist contractor carrying out maintenance work (in this case the removal of asbestos) assumed a responsibility to the owner of the building which invited reliance no less than the work carried out by any other professional adviser, so that pure economic loss was recoverable. ³⁰⁵ This is to be contrasted with the Court of Appeal's decision in Robinson v PE Jones (Contractors) Ltd, ³⁰⁶ where it was held that a builder did not owe a home owner a duty of care in tort (concurrent with the obligations owed under the building contract between the same parties) in respect of economic losses associated with the quality of the building works to be undertaken pursuant to the building contract. It was decided that ordinarily the position of a builder in this respect is to be distinguished from that of a professional, who generally would be found to owe a concurrent duty of care in respect of such economic losses in parallel to any contractual obligations created by its retainer with the client. Adopting the same approach in the case of building contracts would involve the wholesale subordination of the law of tort into the law of contract and the parties had to be taken to have agreed that the rights and obligations between them were to be derived from the building contract alone. ³⁰⁷

Liability of professionals

37-095

A further aspect of liability in tort which is of substantial importance in construction is the liability of professionals within the industry, such as engineers, architects, project managers and quantity surveyors. ³⁰⁸ Although such professionals will typically have contracts of retainer with the employer (such retainer being often more formal than in other professions), the parallel liability in tort (based on the principles enunciated in Hedley Byrne v Heller, ³⁰⁹ Henderson v Merrett Syndicates ³¹⁰ and White v Jones ³¹¹) may be important in particular circumstances, such as where the claim in contract is time-barred. ³¹² The duties assumed by the architect or the engineer will depend upon terms of their assumption of responsibility, but there will typically be a duty to design the works ³¹³ and then to supervise the contractor, limited to ensuring that the work is completed in accordance with the contract, so that detailed method of working will be a matter for the builder. Accordingly, cl.3.22 of the RIBA terms provide that the client "... shall hold the contractor, and not the Architect, responsible for the contractor's management and operational methods and for the proper carrying out and completion of the Works and for health and safety provisions on the site ...". ³¹⁴ However, where the contract specifies a particular method of working as an important feature of the design, then there is clearly a duty upon the architect to supervise that work. The architect may also have an obligation in relation to general on-site supervision, and both the ACE and the RIBA conditions of appointment contemplate this as a possibility where necessary. Such an obligation will not be discharged by reference to, for example, a clerk of works installed by the architect or by the employer, since the architect will retain overall control. ³¹⁵ The extent of the supervision which the architect should supply will depend upon the project concerned, but should be sufficient to carry out the job successfully. ³¹⁶ The professional named in the building contract also has a duty of care towards his client in respect of the certificates which he issues, ³¹⁷ whether interim or final. ³¹⁸ However, the right of the building contractor to pursue a claim in negligence against the certifier is limited in the light of Pacific Associates v Baxter ³¹⁹ where the Court of Appeal struck out a claim by contractors under a FIDIC form of engineering contract against the engineers under the contract. It should be noted that a professional may limit its potential liability by way of a net contribution clause. In West v Ian Finlay & Associates, ³²⁰ it was held by the Court of Appeal that such a clause contained in an architect's retainer should be construed in accordance with the normal meaning of the unambiguous words used in it, that as a result it should apply to a main contractor as well as specialist sub-contractors and that it did not fall foul of the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999 ³²¹ as an unfair term nor fail the test of reasonableness under the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977.

^{293.} [1978] A.C. 728 HL.

^{294.} Murphy v Brentwood DC [1991] 1 A.C. 398 HL.

^{295.} For discussion, see Cane, Tort Law and Economic Interests, 2nd edn (1996), pp.208–214; and Baatz, Construction Law—Themes and Practice (1998).

^{296.} Jacobs v Moreton & Partners (1994) 72 B.L.R. 92; Tunnel Refineries Ltd v Bryan Donkin Co Ltd (1998) C.I.L.L. 1392. But see Bellefield Computer Services Ltd v E Turner & Sons Ltd [2000] B.L.R. 97 for a rejection of an attempt to circumvent the effect of Murphy by the suggestion of a distinction to be drawn in negligence claims between the damage to the negligently constructed building itself and items which are within but not part of the building. See also the decisions in Linklaters Business Services v Sir Robert McAlpine Ltd [2010] EWHC 1145 (TCC), [2010] B.L.R. 537 (at the interlocutory stage) and at [2010] EWHC 2931 (TCC), 133 Con. L.R. 211 (after trial) and Broster v Galliard Docklands Ltd [2011] EWHC 1722 (TCC) which all followed

Bellefield and discuss of the law of negligence as it applies to duties of care owed by contractors in the context of alleged complex structures.

- 297. [1932] A.C. 562 HL.
- 298. Murphy v Brentwood DC [1991] 1 A.C. 398, 487.
- 299. Hydrocarbons Great Britain Ltd v Cammell Laird Shipbuilders Ltd (1991) 58 B.L.R. 123; Lancashire and Cheshire Association of Baptist Churches Inc v Howard & Seddon Partnership (1991) 65 B.L.R. 21, [1993] 3 All E.R. 467; Morse v Barrett (Leeds) Ltd (1993) 9 Const. L.J. 158; Londonwaste Ltd v AMEC Civil Engineering Ltd (1997) 83 B.L.R. 136.
- 300. Bryan (Allan) v Judith Maloney (1995) (Australia) reported at 74 B.L.R. 35; Winnepeg Condominium Corp No.36 v Bird Construction Co Ltd and Smith Carter Partners (1995) (Canada) reported at 74 B.L.R. 1 and 11 Const. L.J. 306; Invergargill City Council v Noel Gordon Hamlin (1996) (New Zealand) reported at 78 B.L.R. 92; affirming 72 B.L.R. 39 and 11 Const. L.J. 285.
- 301. [1995] 2 A.C. 145 HL.
- 302. [1964] A.C. 465 HL.
- 303. See also White v Jones [1995] 2 A.C. 207 HL.
- 304. See Cartwright (1997) 13 Const. L.J. 157 and the decision of Ramsey J. in Biffa Waste Services v Maschinenfabrik Ernst Hese [2008] B.L.R. 155. The decision in first instance in Biffa Waste as to the vicarious liability of a contractor for the negligence of a third party has now been reversed by the Court of Appeal, see [2008] EWCA Civ 1257, [2009] 3 W.L.R. 324, [2009] B.L.R. 1.
- 305. Barclays Bank v Fairclough (1995) 76 B.L.R. 1 CA. See also BSkyB Ltd v HP Enterprise Services UK Ltd [2010] EWHC 86 (TCC), [2010] B.L.R. 267 at [341]–[358], where it was held that when considering whether a duty of care existed in respect of an alleged negligent misstatement, the impact of the contractual regime must be considered and a duty of care should not be permitted to circumvent or escape a contractual exclusion or limitation of liability clause.
- 306. [2011] EWCA Civ 9, [2011] 3 W.L.R. 815, [2011] B.L.R. 206.
- 307.  Following the Court of Appeal decision in Wellesley Partners LLP v Withers LLP [2015] EWCA Civ 1146 the contractual rules on remoteness, and possibly also causation, would continue to apply even where there are concurrent duties of care in contract and tort. See above, para.1-195A.
- 308. See Hodgkin, Professional Liability: Law and Insurance (Lloyd's 1996) Ch.3.
- 309. [1964] A.C. 465 HL.
- 310. [1994] 2 A.C. 145 HL.
- 311. [1995] 2 A.C. 207 HL.
- 312. Note that in Samuel Payne v John Setchell Ltd [2002] B.L.R. 489 H.H.J. Humphrey Lloyd Q.C. found that ordinarily there would be no concurrent duty of care owed in tort by a construction professional in respect of pure economic losses caused to his client as a result of the incompetent performance of his services. It was concluded that both a contractor and an engineer should ordinarily only be taken to owe a tortious duty to take reasonable care against causing their contractual client personal injury or damage to property other than to the building or construction work that is itself the subject of their work/services. It is thought, however, that the judgment gave insufficient weight to the decision in Henderson v Merrett and it is notable that the approach taken has not been followed in subsequent construction professional cases. Thus in Mirant Asia Pacific v Ove Arup [2005] P.N.L.R. 10 H.H.J. Toulmin Q.C. declined to follow the Court's reasoning in Payne v Setchell, holding instead that Henderson principles applied in the case of an engineer's concurrent duty of care to his client in respect of economic losses referable to design errors. It should also be noted that the approach taken in Payne v Setchell to this issue was not followed by H.H.J. Seymour Q.C. in Tesco v Costain (2003) C.I.L.L. 2062. Reference should also be made to Bellefield Computer Services Ltd v E Turner & Sons Ltd [2000] B.L.R. 96 where Schieman L.J. observed that in his view the builder in that case did owe a duty of care to the original owner of a property in respect of damage caused to the building itself.

- 313. In the absence of an express provision to the contrary, an architect is under a duty to review his design as necessary until the works are complete: Brickfield Properties v Newton [1971] 1 W.L.R. 862 CA; and for the position after completion, see Eckersley v Binnie & Partners (1988) 18 Const. L.R. 1, per Bingham L.J. But see now New Islington and Hackney HA v Pollard Thomas and Edwards Ltd [2001] B.L.R. 74.
- 314. See also Clayton v Woodman & Sons (Builders) Ltd [1962] 2 Q.B. 533 CA.
- 315. Leicester Gardens v Trollope (1911) 75 J.P. 197.
- 316. Alexander Corfield v David Grant (1992) 59 B.L.R. 102. The liability of construction professionals in negligence has been considered in J D Williams & Co Ltd v Michael Hyde & Associates Ltd [2001] B.L.R. 99 (the application of the Bolam test); and Baxall Securities Ltd and Norbain SDC v Sheard Walshaw Partnership [2002] B.L.R. 100 CA (consideration of the duties of the architect in a particular case of flooding and latent defects). It must of course be remembered that the test for negligence is a particular one (Bolam v Friern Hospital Management Committee [1957] 1 W.L.R. 582). For notable examples, see: Department of National Heritage v Steensen Varming Mulcahy (1998) 60 Con. L.R. 33; and London Underground Ltd v Kenchington Ford Plc (1998) 63 Con. L.R. 1.
- 317. Sutcliffe v Thackrah [1974] A.C. 727, 737 HL. See also John Barker Construction Ltd v London Portman Hotel Ltd (1996) 83 B.L.R. 31.
- 318. London Borough of Merton v Lowe (1981) 18 B.L.R. 130 CA.
- 319. [1990] 1 QB 993; (1988) 44 B.L.R. 33 CA; and see also Leon Engineering & Construction Co Ltd v Ka Duk Investment Co Ltd (1989) 47 B.L.R. 139 Hong Kong.
- 320. [2014] EWCA Civ 316, [2014] B.L.R. 324.
- 321. SI 1999/2083.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts

Section 4. - Particular Features

(a) - Variations

Introduction

37-096

It is commonplace that construction works, as finally built, will vary from what was contemplated at the date when the contract was priced by the contractor and executed between the parties. Without express authority there is no power to order the contractor to carry out extra work, ³²² and an unauthorised change to the works, if not corrected, may become a breach of contract. Under the law applying in the USA, both State and Federal, there is a principle which limits the power to order variations to those which fall within the general scope of the work. Variations outside this limit are termed "Cardinal Changes", and entitle the contractor to damages. ³²³ No such doctrine exists under English law, although there is high authority suggesting that there may be an implied limit on changes that may be ordered. ³²⁴ There may be a limit, prescribed by the contract, on variations which may be ordered. This may be in the form of a stated proportion of the value of the works which may not be exceeded without consent ³²⁵; or there may be a provision entitling the contractor to additional payment if net additions or deductions exceed a stated limit. ³²⁶ There may be a limit arising by implication in particular circumstances. ³²⁷ Otherwise, there will ordinarily be no limit, provided the changes fall within the express terms of the contract. ³²⁸

What constitutes a variation

37-097

! Modern construction contracts generally contain complex variation clauses which empower the contract administrator to order a wide range of changes under the power to give a variation. Such clauses usually comprise a series of examples rather than a definition. ³²⁹ The effect of such clauses will be to designate particular actions of the contract administrator as variations under the contract, e.g. an instruction which restricts access to the site ³³⁰; or an instruction to change the specified sequence of construction. ³³¹ A departure from the contract requirements not instructed by the contract administrator will not constitute a variation, although the contract administrator may be given authority to sanction such a departure as a variation. ³³² Even where there is no additional work, there may be a variation where an instruction has the effect of depriving the contractor of choice. Thus in English Industrial Estates v Kier Construction ³³³ the contractor had a choice whether to crush demolition waste on site or to import fill. An instruction of the engineer to crush all hard arisings was held to constitute a variation order by limiting the contractor's choice. In Strachan & Henshaw Ltd v Stein Industrie (UK) Ltd ³³⁴ the Court of Appeal considered whether the instruction given to the plaintiff sub-contractor to remove its cabins from next to the workface to a distance of half a mile away (involving an alleged increase in "walking time") was an "alteration to the Works" and a variation within the meaning of cl.27 of the MF/1 Conditions of Contract (as amended). It was held that the instruction given by the defendant contractor in relation to the location of the cabins did not alter the "work to be done by the Contractor under the Contract" which was the phrase used in cl.1.1 to define "the Works" and so there was no variation under cl.27. Variations under a contract are to be distinguished from variations of the contract itself. The wording of the particular contract may be relevant to whether a variation under or of the contract is recognised. However, in MWB Business Exchange Centres Ltd v

Rock Advertising Ltd ³³⁵  it was held by the Court of Appeal that where a contract contained an anti-oral variation clause and one party alleged a variation to the same was agreed orally, the anti-oral variation clause did not necessarily preclude a variation of the contract as the most important consideration was party autonomy and freedom of contract which entitles the parties to agree whatever terms they chose, even as variations in such circumstances, subject to certain limits imposed by public policy.

Work not constituting a variation

37-098

The carrying out of “additional” work not mentioned in the contract will not constitute a variation if the work is included within the contractor’s overall obligation to complete. ³³⁶ An instruction of the contract administrator to carry out particular work, where the contractor would otherwise have been obliged to carry out the same or similar work, has been held to be a variation. ³³⁷ But the better view, it is thought, is that there is no variation unless the contractor is required to carry out work additional to that necessarily included in the contract. In practice the question whether work which the contractor has not priced is a variation for which extra payment is due constitutes a dispute under the contract, to be determined by an adjudicator or arbitrator. ³³⁸ Note that under cl.51(3) of the ICC Form the contractor is not to be paid for any variation necessitated by the contractor’s default. While an ordered variation may consist of additional quantities of work, the mere carrying out of work in quantities additional to those stated does not, without more, constitute a variation. Additional quantities or reduced quantities may entitle the contractor to claim compensation where the change in quantities impacts upon the underlying nature of the work and the contractor’s tender assumptions or tender prices. ³³⁹

Payment for variations

37-099

The valuation of variations will either be carried out by reference to a mechanism contained within the contract, or on the broader basis of a reasonable valuation of the work. The contract mechanism may provide for a reasonable valuation in default of applicable rates.

Valuation under the contract

37-100

The Standard Forms of Contract make elaborate provision for the valuation of variations, which usually involve valuations of the work at rates and prices contained in (or to be ascertained from) the contract documents. Where additional work differs from the contract work, either by its nature or the conditions which it is executed, the additional work may be valued using the contract rates as a basis, or the contract may provide that reasonable rates are to be ascertained. ³⁴⁰ Work which cannot be measured may be ordered to be executed at daywork rates, ³⁴¹ and the contract may provide a schedule of daywork rates to be used in these circumstances. More modern forms of contract seek to quantify both the value and the time impact of variations in advance of their being instructed. ³⁴² In the absence of agreement, however, the variation and its effect must be valued subsequent to its order and carrying out. Standard Forms of Contract usually provide for additional compensation arising from the issue of variation instructions, typically in terms of general “loss and expense” incurred in addition to payment due in respect of the variation itself ³⁴³ or by way of adjustment of other contract rates which have been rendered “unreasonable or inapplicable” by the variation. ³⁴⁴ Where the contract does not contain a bill of quantities, provision is usually made for the contractor to submit a Schedule of Rates to be utilised in the valuation of variations. In Henry Boot Construction Ltd v Alstom Combined Cycles Ltd ³⁴⁵ it was held that mistakes in the contractor’s rates and prices were to be disregarded for the purposes of arriving at a new rate pursuant to cl.52(1) of the ICE 6th edition even though the practical effect of such an approach was to give the contractor a windfall. ³⁴⁶

Reasonable valuation

37-101

Where there are no rates or prices in the contract documents covering the variation in question and the contract does not provide for a reasonable rate to be determined, the contractor will be entitled to a reasonable sum on the basis of an implied term as to payment. ³⁴⁷ What is a reasonable sum will be a question requiring consideration of all the factors in the case, and there are no rigid rules which will apply in such cases. Although “cost plus a percentage for profit” is often associated with reasonable remuneration ³⁴⁸ there are situations where the contractor may recover on a more generous basis to take account of such matters as the value of the contractor’s work to the employer. ³⁴⁹ On the question of what is a reasonable sum, the shipping case of Greenmast Shipping v Jean Lion et Cie ³⁵⁰ is instructive and has been referred to in a number of decisions on building contracts. ³⁵¹ In that case, owners were entitled to payment in a situation where there was held to be an implied contract to pay for a vessel laying off Aqaba for nine days whilst the charterers resolved certain problems in relation to the sale of the vessel’s cargo. Saville J. approached the question of remuneration “... by asking simply what would be a fair commercial rate for the services provided outside the charter-party ...”. ³⁵²

^{322.} Dodd v Churton [1897] 1 Q.B. 562.

^{323.} See Construction Claims and Liability: Simon, sect.11.2 Wiley.

^{324.} Thorn v London Corp (1876) 1 App. Cas. 120.

^{325.} Model Form MF/1 cl.27.2.

^{326.} FIDIC Conditions 4th edn cl.52.3: additional payment in excess of 15 per cent. The 1998 edn contains a more conventional provision for the adjustment of rates where quantities are varied by more than 10 per cent: cl.12.3(a).

^{327.} Parkinson v Commissioner of Works [1949] 2 K.B. 632.

^{328.} McAlpine Humberoak v McDermott (1992) 58 B.L.R. 1.

^{329.} See ICC Form cl.51(1).

^{330.} JCT cl.5.1.2.1.

^{331.} ICC Form cl.51(1).

^{332.} JCT SBC 2011 cl.3.14.4.

^{333.} (1991) 56 B.L.R. 93.

^{334.} (1997) 87 B.L.R. 52 CA.

^{335.}  [2016] EWCA Civ 553, [2016] 3 W.L.R. 1519.

^{336.} Sharpe v San Paulo Railway (1873) L.R. 8 Ch. App. 597; Williams v Fitzmaurice (1858) 3 H. & N. 844; Bottoms v Mayor of York (1892) II Hudson’s Building Contracts (4th edn) 208.

^{337.} Simplex Concrete Piles v St Pancras BC (1958) 14 B.L.R. 80.

^{338.} See Howard de Walden v Costain (1991) 55 B.L.R. 124; Kirk & Kirk v Croydon Corp (1956) J.P.L. 585; and English Industrial Estates (1991) 56 B.L.R. 93; and see generally HH Judge

Anthony Thornton Q.C., The inclusive price principle—A tribute to Ian Duncan Wallace QC by HH Judge Anthony Thornton Q.C. July 2007, published by the Society of Construction Law at <http://www.scl.org.uk>.

- 339. See ICC Form cl.56(2)—rates or prices rendered unreasonable; and FIDIC (1993 edn) cl.12.3(a). For a case where a claim for extra payment for hard work conditions encountered on excavation was rejected, see: Workshop Tarmacadam Company Ltd v Hanneby (1995) 55 Con. L.R. 105.
- 340. See JCT 98 cl.13.5, JCT SBC 2005 cl.5.10, ICC Form cl.52(1), FIDIC (1998 edn) cl.12.3(b). Clause 52 of the ICE 6th edn, was considered by the Court of Appeal in Henry Boot Construction Ltd v Alstom Combined Cycles Ltd [2000] B.L.R. 247; and the entitlement to an uplift for overheads and profit as part of a fair valuation under the “third limb” of cl.52 was considered in Weldon Plant Ltd v The Commission for New Towns [2000] B.L.R. 496.
- 341. See above, para.37-067.
- 342. See ICC Design and Construct Version cl.52(1) and New Engineering and Construction Contracts cl.62.
- 343. See JCT 98 cl.26.1 and JCT SBC 2005 cl.4.23 to 4.26.
- 344. ICC Form cl.52(4).
- 345. (2000) 69 Con. L.R. 27 CA.
- 346. For observations on the decision at first instance, see: I. Duncan Wallace (2000) 16 Const. L.J. 40.
- 347. Thorn v London Corp (1876) 1 App. Cas. 120; Parkinson v Commissioner of Works [1949] 2 K.B. 632 CA; Pilgrim Shipping Co Ltd v The State Trading Co of India Ltd (The Hadjitsakos) [1975] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 356, 369; Costain Civil Engineering Ltd v Zanen Dredging and Contracting Co Ltd (1996) 85 B.L.R. 77, 94.
- 348. Sanjay Lachhani v Destination Canada (UK) Ltd (1997) 13 Const. L.J. 279.
- 349. Costain v Zanen (1996) 85 B.L.R. 77.
- 350. [1986] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 277.
- 351. Laserbore Ltd v Morrison Biggs Wall Ltd (1993) C.I.L.L. 896; Costain Civil Engineering v Zanen Dredging and Contracting Co Ltd (1996) 85 B.L.R. 77.
- 352. [1986] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 277, 279.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts
Section 4. - Particular Features
(b) - Instructions, Certificates and Approval

Introduction

37-102

These are three types of “event” typically provided for under the terms of a construction contract as part of the machinery of performance: the giving of instructions, the issue of certificates and the grant of approval. The effect of each will depend on the terms of the individual contract but there are some general principles which can be formulated from the cases. Each such event involves a decision in writing, or confirmed in writing, of the contract administrator. With limited exceptions, all such decisions are subject to review by adjudication or by arbitration or litigation, subject to any other dispute resolution process that may be incorporated into the contract.

Instructions

37-103

A construction contract will usually provide expressly for the issue of instructions, which allow for the ongoing direction and supervision of the works and of the contractor. The ICC Form cl.13(1), provides that the contractor “shall comply with and adhere strictly to the Engineer’s instructions on any matter ...”. Clause 13(3) then provides “if such instructions require any variation to any part of the Works the same shall be deemed to have been given pursuant to Clause 51”. These common provisions express the general principle that an “instruction” may or may not constitute a variation: if it does so, it will not be prevented from taking effect as such by being called an instruction; an instruction not amounting to a variation will take effect in accordance with the terms of the contract. ³⁵³ Examples of other types of instruction (not amounting to variations) are an instruction to commence the works, ³⁵⁴ an instruction to suspend the progress of the works (often referred to as an Order), ³⁵⁵ an instruction to carry out tests on materials or workmanship, ³⁵⁶ an instruction nominating a sub-contractor, ³⁵⁷ an instruction (referred to as a request) to furnish vouchers to prove the quality of materials ³⁵⁸ and an instruction to remove from the site work materials or goods ³⁵⁹ or any person employed thereon. ³⁶⁰ Every construction contract requires large numbers of instructions of the foregoing, and of many other, types for their practical operation. The power to give instructions may need to be implied as a matter of necessity, where not expressly stated in the contract documents. ³⁶¹

Certificates

37-104

Most construction contracts expressly require the issue of documents called “certificates” by the Contract Administrator. There is no definition of the term, but a certificate is usually taken to embody a decision requiring the exercise of professional skill and judgment on issues which will often require subjective assessments. ³⁶² The subject matter of certificates and of instructions may overlap, but the latter normally embodies no more than an administrative decision, while the former may involve the initial resolution of a dispute. In Kaye v Hosier and Dickinson it was said that the architect:

“... has to issue certificates showing how much money is owing. Incidentally, his certificates and instructions may resolve some controversial points, and he has to act fairly, but he is not primarily or characteristically adjudicating on disputes.” ³⁶³

Certificates may be categorised into interim (or payment) certificates, final certificates and certificates of record. They will be issued throughout the contract, as required by progress of the works. Completion will involve certificates of all three types. Although it is rare for a construction contract to specify the precise form for a certificate, to be effective the document should clearly and unambiguously represent the physical expression of the certifying process. ³⁶⁴ Further, a certificate is subject to the general rules of construction. ³⁶⁵

Interim certificates

37-105

These are the means whereby instalment payments are effected, the most usual arrangement being for monthly valuations to be made on the basis of an approximate measure of work carried out. ³⁶⁶ This will be appropriate whether the contract is for a lump sum or subject to remeasure. In the latter case, however, work will need to be accurately measured as each section is completed, for the purpose of the final account. ³⁶⁷ It was held by the House of Lords in Gilbert-Ash v Modern Engineering ³⁶⁸ that an interim certificate created a debt which could, subject to any contractual term to the contrary, be reduced or extinguished by set-off, reversing decisions of the Court of Appeal to the contrary. ³⁶⁹ An alternative form of interim payment not involving measurement is referred to as “milestone” payments, whereby the contract sum is divided into predetermined amounts to be released at dates or stages (milestones) of the work. Such payments may, depending on the terms of the contract, require a form of certificate, e.g. as to completion of the requisite work stages. Milestone payments may also be made subject to the achievement of stipulated rates of progress. Milestone payments have been recommended eventually to replace interim payments based on monthly measurement. ³⁷⁰ Although the value stated in interim certificates may be corrected in subsequent certificates, ³⁷¹ the contract administrator will be required to give more than a merely superficial glance at the works prior to the issue of a certificate. ³⁷² Furthermore, where the contract provides for interim payments to be made in respect of “... the total value of the sub-contract work on site properly executed by the sub-contractor ...” ³⁷³ or similar terms, ³⁷⁴ then defective work should not be included in a valuation, and should be included only when rectified at a later stage.

Final certificate

37-106

This is provided for under most construction contracts, although the terminology and the effect of such a certificate will vary between different forms of contract. A final certificate may take effect only as a statement of account ³⁷⁵ but in most cases it also certifies the work as being finally complete. ³⁷⁶ The certificate may also be made conditionally final and binding on the parties as to the opinion of the contract administrator on quality of the work. ³⁷⁷ A claim to have a sum included in a final certificate constitutes a separate and different cause of action to a claim to have a sum, even if the same, included in an interim certificate. ³⁷⁸

Certificates of record

37-107

The third type of certificate (not always so called) signifies events such as completion of the works ³⁷⁹ and making good of defects. ³⁸⁰ Other examples are a certificate that the contractor has failed to complete the works by the completion date ³⁸¹ and a certificate of the contractor's default prior to termination of employment.³⁸² Examples which are not called certificates, but operate as such, are extensions of time³⁸³ and the valuation of a contractual claim or variation, which will subsequently be incorporated into the next interim payment certificate.

Recovery without a certificate

37-108

It is a matter of construction of the underlying contract whether a certificate is a condition precedent to recovery of the sum of money to be certified. In *Lubenham v South Pembroke DC*³⁸⁴ the Court of Appeal held that a certificate issued under the JCT Standard Form of Building Contract, 1963 edition, where there was a patently incorrect deduction, was nevertheless binding, so that the contractor could not assert entitlement to a further sum. May L.J., giving the judgment of the court, held:

“Whatever the cause of the undervaluation, the proper remedy available to the contractor is, in our opinion, to request the Architect to make the appropriate adjustment in another certificate, or if he declines to do so, to take the dispute to arbitration under clause 35. In default of arbitration or a new certificate the conditions themselves give the contractor no right to sue for the higher sum. In other words we think that under this form of contract the issue of a certificate is always a condition precedent to the right of the contractor to be paid.”

Where the certificate is a condition precedent to recovery of payment, a sum otherwise due may be recovered without a certificate in the following circumstances: (i) where the condition precedent has been waived by the other parties to the contract; (ii) where the certifier has been disqualified by improper conduct³⁸⁵; (iii) where there has been prevention by or on behalf of the employer³⁸⁶; and (iv) where the certifier becomes incapacitated without being replaced.³⁸⁷ In practice, however, it will usually be more convenient to rely on the powers of an arbitrator to review and revise any certificate, which will ordinarily include the power to grant a certificate which has been refused by the certifier.³⁸⁸ Where the dispute is litigated, the same powers will be available to the court.³⁸⁹ In *Henry Boot Ltd v Alstom Combined Cycles Ltd*³⁹⁰ it was explained by the Court of Appeal that the absence of a certificate is not a bar to the right to payment even where it is expressed to be a condition precedent (at least where the contract administrator's decision is not expressed to be binding) because a court or arbitrator can find that a party was entitled to payment in a larger sum than certified.

Liability of the certifier

37-109

It was held in *Sutcliffe v Thackrah*³⁹¹ that the immunity assumed to attach to an arbitrator³⁹² did not apply to a certifier, reversing earlier authority to the contrary.³⁹³ The decision applied both to the issue of an interim or final certificate. The House recognised, however, the possibility that the function of a certifier might involve a “sufficient judicial element to require an arbitrator's immunity to attach”.³⁹⁴ Examples of “certification” which could attract immunity are the engineer's decision under cl.66 of earlier versions of the ICE Conditions, or the decision of an adjudicator under the terms of a contract.³⁹⁵

Approvals

37-110

Most construction contracts require a variety of approvals to be given by the contract administrator. These may be expressed in positive terms requiring “approval” to be expressed, or they may require the “satisfaction” of the engineer or architect. The Standard Form of Building Contract 1963 edition required the works generally to be to the architect's satisfaction, but this is modified in the 1998 edition, such satisfaction now being applicable “where and to the extent that approval of the quality of materials or of the standards of workmanship is a matter for the opinion of the Architect”; and in such a case the work is to be to his “reasonable satisfaction”. ³⁹⁶ In the JCT SBC 2005 and 2011, cl.1.10 is to similar effect. The ICC Form, however, requires the whole of the works to be “to the satisfaction of the Engineer”. ³⁹⁷ Other examples of an express approval are in relation to the “mode, manner and speed of construction of the works” which are to be “acceptable to the Engineer” under the ICC Form ³⁹⁸; and in relation to the contractor’s programme which is required to be accepted by the engineer. ³⁹⁹ The effect of the giving or withholding of such approvals is dependent on the terms of the contract. In general, however, action which is within the discretion of the contract administrator will not afford the contractor any ground of claim, while action outside the area of contractual discretion will give rise to a right to compensation, as a variation or as a breach. ⁴⁰⁰ Non-approval within the discretion of the contract administrator may give rise to express rights under the terms of the contract. ⁴⁰¹

-
- ^{353.} cl.13(3) of the ICC Form also provides for the possibility of additional payment where instructions disrupt the contractor’s arrangements.
 - ^{354.} ICC Form cl.41(1)(b), where the contractor is to be “notified”.
 - ^{355.} ICC Form cl.40(1).
 - ^{356.} ICC Form cl.36(1).
 - ^{357.} JCT 98 cl.35.1. Note that no equivalent provisions remains in JCT SBC 2005.
 - ^{358.} JCT 98 cl.8.2.1.
 - ^{359.} JCT 98 cl.8.4.1 and JCT SBC 2011 cl.3.18.1.
 - ^{360.} JCT 98 cl.8.6 and JCT SBC 2011 cl.3.21.
 - ^{361.} Where work is carried out in the absence of a formal instruction, then it will often be necessary for the contractor to rely upon estoppel arguments in order to recover payment for additional work carried out in the absence of an instruction or confirmation of verbal instruction, but nevertheless accepted by the employer. For a consideration of these issues, see Ministry of Defence v Scott Wilson Kirkpatrick [2000] B.L.R. 20 CA. See also the decision of the Court of Appeal of New South Wales in Trimis v Mina [2000] T.C.L.R. 346.
 - ^{362.} See, for example, JCT 2011 cl.2.28 (“If, in the opinion of the Architect, ... the Architect shall ... give an extension of time ... as he then estimates to be fair and reasonable ...”).
 - ^{363.} [1972] 1 W.L.R. 146.
 - ^{364.} See BR and EP Cantrell v Wright & Fuller Ltd [2003] B.L.R. 412 at 413.
 - ^{365.} [2003] B.L.R. 412 at 430–431.
 - ^{366.} See Secretary of State for Transport v Birse Farr Joint Venture [1993] 62 B.L.R. 36 at 53.
 - ^{367.} See ICC Form cl.55–57.
 - ^{368.} [1974] A.C. 689.
 - ^{369.} Dawnays v Minter [1971] 1 W.L.R. 1205; Frederick Mark v Schield [1972] 1 Lloyd’s Rep. 9; GKN Foundations v Wandsworth LBC [1972] 1 Lloyd’s Rep. 528; John Thompson v Wellingborough Steel (1972) 1 B.L.R. 69; Token Construction v Naviewland Properties (1973) 1 B.L.R. 48.

- 370. “Latham” Report—Constructing the Team, HMSO 1994.
- 371. See Rupert Morgan Building Services Ltd v Jervis [2003] EWCA Civ 1563, [2004] 1 W.L.R. 1867 CA at 1870. In Urang Commercial Ltd v Century Investments Ltd [2011] EWHC 1561 (TCC), 138 Con. L.R. 233 it was held, following the decision in Rupert Morgan, that the effect of the interim payment provisions under a JCT form of contract was that when a sum was certified as a “sum due” the employer had to pay the relevant amount on the date specified unless an appropriate withholding notice was issued within time (although there was no requirement to serve such a notice in respect of other claims made by the contractor).
- 372. Sutcliffe v Chippendale & Edmondson (1971) 18 B.L.R. 149; Townsend v Stone Toms & Partners (1984) 27 B.L.R. 26 CA.
- 373. DOM/1 Conditions cl.21.4. These words were considered (in the context of alleged defects) in Barrett Steel Building Ltd v Amec Construction Ltd Unreported March 3, 1997 (see 15-CLD–10-07).
- 374. See IFC 98 cl.4.2.1(a) and JCT IC 2005 cl.4.6 and 4.7, and JCT MW 2005 cl.4.3.
- 375. See ICC Form cl.60(4).
- 376. See JCT 98 cl.30.8, 30.9 and JCT SBC 2011 cl.4.15.
- 377. JCT 2011 cl.1.10. In certain circumstances, the protection afforded by a Final Certificate may arise on the basis of an estoppel; see Tameside MBC v Barlows Securities Group Services Ltd (1999) C.I.L.L. 1559. See Cantrell v Wright and Fuller Ltd [2003] EWHC 1545 (TCC), [2003] B.L.R. 412.
- 378. See Henry Boot Construction Ltd v Alstom Combined Cycles Ltd [2005] EWCA Civ 814, [2005] 1 W.L.R. 3850 at 3870 3873 (CA).
- 379. JCT 98 cl.17.1, and JCT SBC 2011 cl.2.30, ICC Form cl.48(2).
- 380. JCT 98 cl.17.4, and JCT SBC 2011 cl.2.39, ICC Form cl.61(1).
- 381. JCT 98 cl.24.1 and JCT SBC 2011 cl.2.31.
- 382. ICC Form cl.65(1).
- 383. JCT 98 cl.25, and JCT SBC 2011 cl.2.26 to 2.29, ICC Form cl.44.
- 384. (1986) 33 B.L.R. 39.
- 385. Panamena Europea Navigacion v Frederick Leyland [1947] A.C. 428; Hickman v Roberts [1913] A.C. 229.
- 386. Roberts v Bury Commissioners (1870) L.R. 5 C.P. 310; Croudace v London Borough of Lambeth (1986) 33 B.L.R. 20.
- 387. Perini Pacific v Commonwealth of Australia (1969) 12 B.L.R. 82; Croudace v Lambeth (1986) 33 B.L.R. 20.
- 388. See JCT 98 cl.41.4, JCT SBC 2011 cl.9.5 and ICC Form cl.66(8).
- 389. Beaufort Developments v Gilbert-Ash NI [1999] 1 A.C. 266.
- 390. [2005] EWCA Civ 814, [2005] 1 W.L.R. 3850 at 3861.
- 391. [1974] A.C. 727.

- 392. See now Arbitration Act 1996 s.29.
- 393. Chambers v Goldthorpe [1901] 1 Q.B. 624.
- 394. per Lord Reid.
- 395. See below.
- 396. 1998 edn cl.2.1.
- 397. ICC Form cl.13(1).
- 398. ICC Form cl.13(2).
- 399. ICC Form cl.14(2).
- 400. But see above as to effect of actions of the supervisor on the employer.
- 401. See ICC Form cl.13(3) where the contractor is entitled to compensation if an instruction of the engineer gives rise to costs which could not have been foreseen.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts
Section 4. - Particular Features
(c) - Completion, Maintenance and Performance

Scope of obligations

37-111

Construction contracts can be divided into an initial construction period followed by a post-completion period during which different types of contract impose different requirements. In the simplest case the contract may contain provisions which apply post-completion, for correction of latent defects which appear during a stipulated period. Alternatively, the contract may require works to be maintained for a stipulated period. Where the subject matter of the contract is plant or machinery, there is usually an obligation to operate and demonstrate performance, as part of the substantive obligations. In the case of process plant, performance is likely to include both consumption of resources and output in terms of product quality and rate. Various questions arise where fully conforming performance is not achieved, which are considered further below.

Completion

37-112

Standard form contracts will usually be found to stipulate the degree of completion required to bring the construction period to an end. This may be referred to as “practical” completion ⁴⁰² or “substantial” completion which may also be subject to passing any final testing or commissioning prescribed by the contract. ⁴⁰³ There may also be provisions entitling the contractor to achieve completion notwithstanding outstanding work. ⁴⁰⁴ In the absence of qualifying provisions, the work must be sensibly finished even though subject to defects or uncompleted details for which allowance is made. ⁴⁰⁵ The achievement of completion is unaffected by the subsequent manifestation of defects that were latent at the date of completion, ⁴⁰⁶ although such defects will entitle the owner to an abatement of, or set-off against, the contract price or any instalment payable upon completion. ⁴⁰⁷

Maintenance and defects correction

37-113

These terms are sometimes used interchangeably. Editions of the ICE Conditions of Contract up to the 5th (1973) referred to “maintenance” as meaning the correction of defects. The position is clarified under the 7th edition of the ICE Conditions and under the same provision of the ICC Form. ⁴⁰⁸ Maintenance, properly so called, refers to maintaining the works, by repair or renewal, during a specified period. Such an obligation will require express words, as opposed to the correction of defects for which the contractor will in any event be liable (see below) by way of damages for breach. The JCT Standard Form of Building Contract has traditionally referred to the period during which the contractor corrects “defects, shrinkages or other faults” as the defects liability period. While the contract could provide for the contractor’s liability for latent defects to be limited to such a period, it is clear that this is not the effect of the JCT Form of Contract. The effect of the “defects liability” provisions is not to render the contractor liable to correct defects (such liability existing in any event) but to afford the contractor a right to receive notice of defects in the stipulated period and to have the opportunity of correcting them at his own expense, as opposed to what may be the greater expense of bringing in other contractors. Once completion is achieved, any latent defect appearing in the work renders the contractor in breach and liable in damages which will not be capped by any provision for liquidated damages in respect of loss of use of the works. Conversely, defects appearing before the achievement of completion may be regarded as a “temporary disconformity” not ordinarily sounding in separate damages.⁴⁰⁹ In *Oksana Mul v Hutton Construction Ltd*⁴¹⁰ Akenhead J. held that cl.2.30 of the JCT Intermediate Form of Contract, which created a right for the employer to deduct sums from the contract sum in respect of unremedied defects in certain circumstances, did not exclude the employer’s parallel right to claim damages for defects present in the works as at practical completion.

Performance obligations

37-114

Contracts for the provision of process plant and machinery are usually divided into an initial construction period, followed by a post-completion period during which the plant must be operated and performance demonstrated.⁴¹¹ The provisions as to testing are usually accompanied by a detailed protocol involving stages, such as an initial period of operation followed by performance tests over a prescribed period. The contract may provide prescribed penalties or deductions as compensation in respect of failure to meet required performance levels. The detailed performance requirements will be specific to each item of plant or machinery, but standard forms exist which prescribe the basic contract structure.⁴¹² In addition to performance of obligations, the contract may require other services, such as training of operating personnel, the provision of spares for the plant, as-built drawing of the works and detailed operating manuals and instructions.

^{402.} JCT 2011, cl.2.30.

^{403.} ICC Form cl.48(1).

^{404.} ICC Form cl.49(1).

^{405.} Hoening v Isaacs [1952] 2 All E.R. 176; Bolton v Mahadeva [1972] 1 W.L.R. 1009.

^{406.} Jarvis v Westminster CC [1970] 1 W.L.R. 637.

^{407.} Gilbert-Ash v Modern Engineering [1974] A.C. 689 HL.

^{408.} cl.49 of ICE 7th edn and ICC Form.

^{409.} This passage is based on the (dissenting) judgment of Lord Diplock in P & M Kaye v Hosier & Dickenson [1972] 1 W.L.R. 146, but see further Lintest v Roberts (1980) 13 B.L.R. 38, where defects prior to completion were held to give rise to a vested right of correction.

^{410.} [2014] EWHC 1797 (TCC).

^{411.} For an example of a project with substantial performance testing, see Mitsui Babcock Energy Ltd v John Brown Engineering Ltd (1996) 51 Con. L.R. 129 where it was unsuccessfully argued that a failure of the parties to agree on performance testing meant that there was no contract at all.

^{412.} See for mechanical & electrical plant, Form MF/1 and for chemical plant the I. Chem. E. Conditions.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts
Section 4. - Particular Features
(d) - Extension of Time and Liquidated Damages

Date for completion

37-115

Construction contracts almost invariably stipulate a period or date for commencement and/or completion. The contractor must be afforded the opportunity to carry out the work within the stipulated period. ⁴¹³ Any act of prevention, such as the ordering of variations or late access to working areas, will release the contractor from the fixed period unless the contract provides machinery for adjustment of the time period. ⁴¹⁴ The major consequence of time becoming “at large” is that by operation of the so-called “prevention principle” the employer thereby loses its ability to rely upon any liquidated and ascertained damages clause in the contract. The prevention principle is based on the notion that a promisee cannot insist upon the performance of an obligation which he has prevented the promisor from performing. In a building contract, acts of prevention (such as variation instructions) do not have to amount to breaches of contract in order to trigger the application of the prevention principle. However, for the act relied upon to amount to an act of prevention, it must actually prevent the contractor from carrying out the works within the contract period. Thus, in Adyard Abu Dhabi v SD Marine Services ⁴¹⁵ it was held that where there were concurrent causes of delay (one the contractor’s responsibility and the other the employer’s) the prevention principle does not operate because the delay would have occurred anyway absent the employer’s delay event happening.

Extension of time

37-116

Clauses relating to the grant of extensions of time for completion are to be regarded as being inserted for the benefit of the employer, to permit re-fixing of the completion period where delay is occasioned by the employer. It follows that an extension of time clause is to be construed contra proferentem, against the employer, and that general words such as “other unavoidable circumstances” will not be construed so as to apply to specific delay occasioned by the employer. ⁴¹⁶ Extension of time clauses under standard forms of contract usually contain elaborate machinery providing for the giving of notice by the contractor and for decisions by the contract administrator, which may be given in stages. ⁴¹⁷ There is generally no objection to an extension of time being given retrospectively. ⁴¹⁸ The contractor’s notice may be made a condition precedent to the right to extension, ⁴¹⁹ but it is more usual to permit the grant of an extension in the absence of notice, in order to avoid time becoming “at large”. Alternatively, on a proper construction of the contract the procedural requirements may only be “directory”, in which case a failure to comply with the same will only be capable of sounding in damages as opposed to preventing the contractor obtaining an extension of time. Where there is ambiguity as to whether or not notification is a condition precedent to an extension of time, it is to be construed not to be. ⁴²⁰

Relevant delay

37-117

❗ The right to extension will be conditional on proof of the relevant events and may also require proof that “completion of the Works is likely to be delayed thereby”.⁴²¹ It has been held that under the JCT form of building contract, in order to establish an entitlement to an extension of time, it is necessary to show that the relevant event relied upon was likely to or did in fact cause actual delay to the progress of the works and thereby to the completion date for the works as a whole.⁴²² In Balfour Beatty v Chestermount Properties it was therefore held that delay to the completion date must be assessed by reference to the progress of the works in relation to the then-projected completion date.⁴²³ Following this approach, in Adyard Abu Dhabi v SD Marine Services it was held that merely establishing delay caused to a particular work activity which does not impact on the completion date of the works as a whole, or theoretical delay, will not suffice.⁴²⁴ In Adyard the Court rejected the claimant shipbuilder’s submission that an employer’s risk event need only be measured against the contractual completion date and that this did not require any factual analysis of competing causes of delay to the actual progress of the works that the claimant might be responsible for. Any extension of time awarded will invariably be added by reference to the period immediately following the contractual completion date, even if the delaying event in fact occurred at some other point in time, such as substantially after the original completion date.⁴²⁵ ❗ This could produce incongruous results in terms of liability for damages arising from late completion or claims for loss and expense, but it is submitted that such problems can be reduced or eliminated entirely by correctly applying the causation requirements of such subsequent claims rather than focussing too strictly on the period in respect of which an extension of time has been granted.

Alternatively, the right to extension may be conditioned on showing that “delay ... has been suffered by the contractor as a result of” the relevant event.⁴²⁶ In the latter case, the contractor may be entitled to an extension even though the work has not been shown to be delayed beyond the completion date. Such an extension may have the effect of allowing the contractor to mitigate the effect of his own delay or to claim compensation for delay caused by some other event for which the employer is liable.

Assessment of entitlement

37-118

The assessment of any extension of time entitlement involves an exercise of judgment by the contract administrator which must be fair and rational. In *John Barker Construction Ltd v London Portman Hotel Ltd*⁴²⁷ it was held that an architect, when considering what a “fair and reasonable” extension of time would consist of under cl.25 of the JCT Standard Form of Building Contract With Quantities (1980 edition), must (i) apply any relevant provisions of the building contract, (ii) make a logical and methodical analysis of the effect any relevant events had or were likely to have on the programme, and (iii) conduct a calculation of the relevant critical delay, rather than simply make an impressionistic general assessment of the same. Although the need for a logical and methodical analysis to underpin any award of an extension of time has been doubted.⁴²⁸ It is submitted that Arbitrators and Courts are likely to require contract administrators to discharge this function in a way that contains some form of logical and methodical assessment.

Time at large

37-119

Where the work is delayed by the employer and an appropriate extension of time is not granted, time is said to be “at large”, i.e. the contractual date is no longer binding. The contractual obligation is then replaced by an obligation to complete within a reasonable time.⁴²⁹ Time will be “at large” where delay is caused by the employer and no machinery exists under the contract allowing the completion date to be re-fixed.⁴³⁰ The same applies where the contract administrator fails to extend time.⁴³¹ In McAlpine Humberoak v McDermott International,⁴³² the contract provided for an extension of time but contained no machinery whereby it was to be granted. The Court of Appeal held that this did not prevent time being re-fixed, if necessary by the court, so as to permit the recovery of general (not liquidated) damages by the employer. Where the contract contains an arbitration clause, time may similarly be re-fixed by the arbitrator’s award, provided that the contract allows for an extension on the appropriate grounds.

Concurrent delay

37-120

⚠ Concurrent delay can be defined as a period of project overrun which results from two or more effective causes of delay which are of approximately equal causative potency. ⁴³³ Under the JCT and similar forms of construction contracts, as long as it is established that the relevant event relied upon as the basis of an extension of time claim is at least a concurrent cause of actual delay to the completion date of the works, the contractor will be entitled to an extension of time. ⁴³⁴ ⚠ The approach of the Scottish Courts in this situation, to permit an apportionment of the relevant period of delay between the parties so as to permit a partial award of an extension of time to the contractor, ⁴³⁵ probably does not reflect the law of England. ⁴³⁶

Liquidated damages

37-121

Most construction contracts make provision for recovery of pre-fixed or “liquidated” damages for delay in completion by the contractor. While such damages may be regarded as limiting the contractor’s liability, ⁴³⁷ all the modern authorities treat such damages potentially as a penalty, recoverable only where it is shown to be a “genuine pre-estimate of loss”. ⁴³⁸ There are very few instances in which the stipulated damages have been successfully challenged on the ground they were not a genuine pre-estimate. In Alfred McAlpine Capital Projects Ltd v Tilebox Ltd, ⁴³⁹ the court provided a useful summary of the law relating to liquidated damages and penalty clauses in the construction field: the pre-estimate of liquidated and ascertained damages did not have to be correct to be enforceable; the test for whether a clause was an unenforceable penalty was an objective one; for a pre-estimate to be unreasonable there had to be a substantial difference between the estimated and actual damage sustained; and the court would normally be predisposed to uphold the terms of the parties’ agreement in this respect when made in a commercial context between parties with comparable bargaining power. The fact that damages may be difficult or even impossible to estimate does not lead to the conclusion they must be a penalty. ⁴⁴⁰ There are, conversely, many cases in which the deduction of liquidated damages has been challenged on the ground of improper operation of the contract machinery, ⁴⁴¹ or inability to fix the damages with precision, ⁴⁴² or failure to establish the applicable completion date. ⁴⁴³ The leading case is Peak v McKinney, ⁴⁴⁴ where delay occurred on a local authority housing contract as a result of the discovery of defective work. Additional delay, not of the contractor’s making, was caused by the employers’ inaction. Liquidated damages were deducted but the Court of Appeal held that the words of the extension of time clause “or other unavoidable circumstances” should be construed contra proferentem, and therefore did not permit the architect to grant an extension on account of the employer’s delay. Consequently, time was at large and no liquidated damages could be recovered. The court further held that in such a case the employer was “left to his ordinary remedies; that is to say, to recover such damages as he can prove flow from the contractor’s breach”. ⁴⁴⁵

37-121A

⚠ In Cavendish Square Holding BV v Makdessi the Supreme Court held that the true test for a penalty is whether the impugned provision is a secondary obligation which imposes a detriment on the contract-breaker out of all proportion to any legitimate interest of the innocent party in the enforcement of the primary obligation. ⁴⁴⁶ ⚠ This test is likely to be more permissive of liquidated damages clauses and any cases pre-dating this decision must be treated with care.

37-122

An interesting question which arises is whether, upon the LAD provisions in the contract becoming unenforceable, the amount of LADs nevertheless takes effect as a limit on the unliquidated damages which can be recovered. A number of charterparty cases suggest that damages can be recovered in excess of the cap. ⁴⁴⁷ There is no direct authority dealing with the question in the case of construction contracts, although there is some support for the view that the unenforceable LAD clause should indeed operate as a limit on the damages which can be recovered. ⁴⁴⁸

Recovery of damages

37-123

Contracts will often require the employer to take certain procedural steps in relation to the contractor before he will become entitled to deduct liquidated damages. In JF Finnegan v Community Housing Association Ltd ⁴⁴⁹ it was held that JCT 80 cl.24.2.1 makes the requirement of notice in writing from the employer a condition precedent to the deduction of liquidated damages for the employer. Furthermore, the notice (which, it was conceded, could accompany the deduction and need not precede it) needed to specify: (i) whether the employer is making any deduction of liquidated damages; and (ii) what sum is being deducted, the whole or only part of the liquidated damages.

^{413.} Wells v Army & Navy Co-op (1902) 86 L.T. 764, HBC (4th edn), Vol.2, p.346.

^{414.} Dodd v Churton [1897] 1 Q.B. 562.

^{415.} [2011] EWHC 848 (Comm), [2011] B.L.R. 384.

^{416.} Peak v McKinney (1969) 1 B.L.R. 111.

^{417.} ICC Form cl.44, JCT SBC 2011 cl.2.27. In Walter Lilly & Co Ltd v DMW Developments Ltd [2012] EWHC 1773 (TCC), [2012] B.L.R. 503 it was held (at [362]–[365]) that cl.25.3.3 of the JCT Standard Form of Building Contract required a consideration of what events critically delayed the works as they went along, as opposed to a purely retrospective exercise.

^{418.} Amalgamated Building Contractors v Waltham Holy Cross UDC [1952] 2 All E.R. 452.

^{419.} See Bremer Handelsgesellschaft mbH v Vander Avenne Izegem PVBA [1978] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 109 (HL) for the general approach to the construction of a notice clause as a condition precedent, requiring the time for service and resultant loss of rights from a failure to comply to be expressed. But note the less stringent approach taken in Steria Ltd v Sigma Wireless Communications Ltd [2008] B.L.R. 79.

^{420.} Steria Ltd v Sigma Wireless Communications Ltd [2008] B.L.R. 79 TCC at [88] and [89]. See also WW Gear Construction Ltd v McGee Group Ltd [2010] EWHC 1460 (TCC) where it was indicated that in deciding whether a clause was or was not a condition precedent to recovery, the ordinary rules of contractual construction should apply (see at [11]–[13]).

^{421.} JCT 98 cl.25.3.1.2 and JCT SBC 2011 cl.2.28.1 and see generally Henry Boot v Central Lancashire NTDC (1980) 15 B.L.R. 1.

^{422.} See Balfour Beatty v Chestermount Properties Ltd (1993) 62 B.L.R. 1 at 27; Henry Boot Construction (UK) Ltd v Malmaison Hotel (Manchester) Ltd (1999) 70 Con. L.R. 32; and City Inn Ltd v Shepherd Construction Ltd [2010] B.L.R. 473 (per Lord Osborne at [42]).

^{423.} (1993) 62 B.L.R. 1, per Colman J. at [25] and [29]–[32].

^{424.} [2011] EWHC 848 (Comm), [2011] B.L.R. 384, per Hamblen J. at [257]–[292].

- 425.  Carillion Construction Ltd v Emtor Engineering Services Ltd [2017] EWCA Civ 65 where this was described as an extension being awarded on a “contiguous” basis.
- 426. ICC Form cl.44(2).
- 427. (1996) 83 B.L.R. 31.
- 428. See the dicta of H.H.J. Seymour Q.C. in Royal Brompton Hospital NHS Trust v Hammond (No.7) 76 Con. L.R. 148 at 176, which appeared to approve the adoption of an impressionistic approach.
- 429. Pentland Hick v Raymond and Reid [1893] A.C. 22; British Steel v Cleveland Bridge (1981) 24 B.L.R. 94. In Shawton Engineering Ltd v DGP International Ltd (t/a Design Group Partnership) [2005] EWCA Civ 1359, [2006] B.L.R. 1, the Court of Appeal held that when time was at large the determination of a reasonable time for completion was a composite question that had to be judged objectively as at the time when the question arose and in the light of all relevant circumstances—and not simply, e.g. by a consideration of the time required to complete any work associated with the instruction of a variation.
- 430. Stanmor Floors Ltd v Piper Construction Midlands Ltd Unreported May 4, 2000; Multiplex Construction (UK) Ltd v Honeywell Control Systems (No.2) [2007] EWHC 447 (TCC), [2007] B.L.R. 195.
- 431. Peak v McKinney (1969) 1 B.L.R. 111.
- 432. (1992) 58 B.L.R. 1.
- 433. See John Marrin Q.C., “Concurrent Delay” (2002) 18 Const. L.J. 6 at 436, as approved in Adyard Abu Dhabi v SD Marine Services [2011] EWHC 848 (Comm), per Hamblen J. at 277.
- 434.  See Henry Boot Construction (UK) Ltd v Malmaison Hotel (Manchester) Ltd (1999) 70 Con. L.R. 32. The Malmaison approach was apparently approved in Motherwell Bridge Construction Ltd v Micafil Vakuumtechnik (2002) 81 Con. L.R. 44, per H.H.J. Toulmin, CBE, Q.C., at 559-564; see also Walter Lilly & Co Ltd v Mackay & DMW Developments Ltd [2012] EWHC 1773 (TCC) where it was held that concurrent delay was sufficient to establish an entitlement to an extension of time under the JCT form, per Akenhead J. at 362–370; and also approved in Saga Cruises BDF Ltd v Fincantieri SpA [2016] EWHC 1875 (Comm) at 249–251.
- 435. See John Doyle Construction Ltd v Laing Management (Scotland) Ltd [2004] B.L.R. 295; and City Inn v Shepherd Construction Ltd [2010] B.L.R. 437. See also the obiter dicta in support of this approach in the decision of the High Court of Hong Kong in W. Hing Construction Co Ltd v Boost Investments Ltd [2009] B.L.R. 338 at [61]–[62].
- 436. See the discussion of this issue by Ramsey J. in the papers entitled “Claims for Delay & Disruption: the impact of City Inn”, presented at the annual TECBAR conference in January 2011 and in the TECBAR Review for Spring 2011. See also Walter Lilly & Co Ltd v DMW Developments Ltd [2012] EWHC 1773 (TCC), [2012] B.L.R. 503, where it was held that, under the JCT extension of time clause wording and similar forms of construction contracts, as long as it is established that the relevant event relied upon as the basis of an extension of time claim by a contractor is at least a concurrent cause of actual delay to the completion date of the works, the contractor will be entitled to an extension of time (see at [362]–[370]).
- 437. See Suisse Atlantique v Rotterdamsche Kolen Centrale [1967] 1 A.C. 361.
- 438. Dunlop v New Garage [1915] A.C. 79.
- 439. [2005] EWHC 281 (TCC), [2005] B.L.R. 271.
- 440. Clydebank Engineering v Don Jýse y Z Quierdo [1905] A.C. 6.

- 441. Ramac v Lesser [1975] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 430.
- 442. Brammell & Ogden v Sheffield CC (1983) 29 B.L.R. 73.
- 443. Miller v LCC (1934) 50 T.L.R. 479.
- 444. Miller v LCC (1934) 50 T.L.R. 479.
- 445. per Salmon L.J. at 121.
- 446.  [2015] UKSC 67 at [32], [255] and [291]. See above, paras 26-178 et seq.
- 447. Wall v Rederalktiebolaget Luggade [1915] 3 K.B. 66; Watts v Mitsui [1917] A.C. 227.
- 448. See Hudson on Building Contracts, para.10-022 referring to the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in Elsley v Collins Insurance (1978) 83 D.L.R. (3d) 1. Despite opportunities to do so, the English Court of Appeal has declined to deal with the point: see Rapid Building v Ealing Family Housing (1984) 29 B.L.R. 5, 16.
- 449. (1995) 77 B.L.R. 22 CA, approving A Bell & Son (Paddington) Ltd v CBF Residential Care and Housing Association (1989) 46 B.L.R. 102.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts

Section 4. - Particular Features

(e) - Bonds and Guarantees ⁴⁵⁰

The nature of suretyship ⁴⁵¹

37-124

Suretyship is a general term which describes a situation where A (the surety) agrees to take responsibility for an existing (or future) liability of B (the principal) to a third party C (the beneficiary) such that the liability of A to C is additional to the liability of B to C. Within the general category of contracts of suretyship, there are contracts of guarantee and contracts of indemnity. In a contract of guarantee, the guarantor (A) promises to be responsible—with the principal (B)—for the performance of the principal's obligations to the beneficiary (C) so that the guarantor will be personally liable if the principal fails to perform his obligations to the beneficiary (C) to the same extent as the principal (B). ⁴⁵² A contract of indemnity is not predicated upon the failure in performance of the principal (B). Although it will often, in practice, be understood as between the surety (A) and the principal (B) that the principal is to be primarily liable to the beneficiary (C), under a contract of indemnity, the surety has a liability to make good the loss suffered by the beneficiary (C) which is not dependent in any way on the continuing liability of the principal (B). ⁴⁵³ Whether a contract is one of guarantee or indemnity will be a matter of construction of all the words used in the document, ⁴⁵⁴ although the contract will be one of indemnity, and not guarantee, if there are circumstances in which the liability of the surety is separate or different from that of the principal. ⁴⁵⁵

Suretyship in the construction context

37-125

In the construction industry there are a variety of situations in which some form of security will be sought by an employer or contractor in relation to particular features of, or all of, a given project. A retention bond may be given by a contractor in return for early release of retention, or for payment in full without deduction, so as to provide him with the cash to complete the project without recourse to separate borrowing. Where a contract provides for payment to be made by the employer to the contractor in advance of work being carried out, then typically the employer will require a bond as security from the contractor. In The Wardens and Commonality of the Mystery of Mercers of the City of London v New Hampshire Insurance Company ⁴⁵⁶ the Court of Appeal construed a document as a guarantee of liability for sums which had not been earned under the terms of the building contract but had been paid in advance in order to avoid liability for VAT which would have become payable on the works at a future date.

Performance bonds ⁴⁵⁷

37-126

The type of suretyship most frequently encountered in the construction context is the performance bond (or performance guarantee). Some of the issues encountered in relation to this type of security are considered here. The underlying commercial purpose of the performance bond will depend upon the nature of the particular project and the particular terms of the bond. However, the purpose of a performance bond in a construction contract will often be quite different from that of a bond provided in connection with other commercial contracts such as a contract of international trade. In many commercial contracts, the bond is regarded as an easily realisable source of capital which can be used to maintain the transaction upon the occurrence of a default. In construction contracts, rapid availability of funds is less important than the existence of such funds where, for example, the contractor becomes insolvent. This divergence between the purpose of performance bonds in construction contracts and their use in other commercial fields, is one explanation for the difference in views between the Court of Appeal ⁴⁵⁸ and the House of Lords ⁴⁵⁹ in the Trafalgar House case (below).

Categories of bond

37-127

Performance bonds may be considered as falling into one of two categories. Conditional performance bonds exist where the guarantor only becomes liable to the party entitled to claim the bonded sum (the beneficiary), on proof of breach of the terms of the underlying building contract, or on proof of both breach and loss as a result of the breach. ⁴⁶⁰ Unconditional or (more usually) “on demand” bonds exist where, on a true construction of the words used in the bond, the guarantor is liable to pay the beneficiary the bonded sum when the demand is made in the manner provided for in the bond, without the need for the beneficiary to prove breach of the underlying building contract or damage (or both). It is a question of construction in each case whether a bond, taken as a whole, is conditional or “on demand” and, in the former case, the nature of the conditions attaching to the bond will also be a matter of the construction of the often complex and archaic ⁴⁶¹ language still used in such documents. In IE Contractors Ltd v Lloyds Bank Plc and Rafidain Bank ⁴⁶² Staughton L.J. said:

“The question is ‘What was the promise which the bank made to the beneficiary under the credit, and did the beneficiary avail himself of that promise?’ The degree of compliance required by a performance bond may be strict, or not so strict. It is a question of the construction of the bond ...”

Accordingly, although the words “on demand” may appear in the bond, they are not a term of art and so are not determinative ⁴⁶³ of the question of whether the bonded sum is payable on a conditional or on an “on demand” basis, since the bond must be construed as a whole. The courts have indicated the importance of construing bonds in the light of their overall presumed commercial purpose. ⁴⁶⁴ However, the basis and precise nature of the liability of the bondsman is ultimately a question of construction.

Conditional bonds

37-128

Conditional bonds are based upon breach of the underlying building contract by the contractor, and because they are based on a failure by the principal to perform, conditional bonds are in the nature of contracts of guarantee. ⁴⁶⁵ In Trafalgar House Construction (Regions) Ltd v General Surety & Guarantee Co Ltd ⁴⁶⁶ the House of Lords considered the effect of the following words in a performance bond:

“... or if on default by the Subcontractors the Surety shall satisfy and discharge the damages sustained by the Main Contractor hereby up to the amount of the above-written Bond ...”

Dealing with the first part of the clause (default), Lord Jauncey (with whom Lord Lloyd and Lord Steyn agreed) said, ⁴⁶⁷ after having considered the authorities, ⁴⁶⁸ that he had no hesitation in concluding that the performance bond amounted to a guarantee so that all questions of sums due and cross-claims could be raised in answer to the demand made. It was held that the words in the bond "... damages sustained by the main contractor ..." were not sufficient ⁴⁶⁹ to exclude the normal legal incidents of suretyship, with the result that the extent of the remaining obligation under the bond could only be determined after taking account of any unpaid sums and set-offs.

Termination of the underlying contract

37-129

In the case of a conditional performance bond which exists for the benefit of the employer in circumstances of default by the contractor (such as a failure to complete the contract works), the employer must be careful to ensure that it acts in such a way towards the contractor that its right to claim damages from the contractor, and its entitlement to call the bond, are preserved. In Perar BV v General Surety and Guarantee Co Ltd ⁴⁷⁰ there was a main contract substantially based on JCT 81 with contractor's design and cl.27.2 providing for the automatic termination of the contractor's employment in the event of administrative receivership. Prior to completion of the works, the contractor went into administrative receivership and was said to have abandoned the works. The plaintiff (as assignee of the rights of the employer under the bond) sought to recover the sum under the bond from the defendant surety. The claim was rejected at first instance. On appeal the Court of Appeal held that if, following automatic termination, the contractor had no right to continue with the contract work then he could have no duty to do so, and therefore was not in breach in failing to continue the works. For the same reasons, there had been no "default" of the contractor within the meaning of the bond in circumstances where the building contract provided specific machinery following on from the automatic termination. In Laing Management Ltd v Aegon Insurance Co (UK) Ltd ⁴⁷¹ it was held that although the appointment of an administrative receiver was not itself repudiatory conduct, the acceptance of other acts as repudiatory breaches in the statement of claim, meant that a claim in damages for the costs of completion could be recovered under the bond. In Aviva Insurance UK Ltd v Hackney Empire Ltd, ⁴⁷² it was held that a side agreement made between an employer and a contractor arising out a dispute relating to delay to a project did not have the effect of discharging a bond provided by the claimant in favour of the defendant employer. In CIMC Raffles Offshore (Singapore) Ltd v Schahin Holding SA ⁴⁷³ the Court of Appeal indicated that it would be difficult to disapply by the wording of a guarantee the doctrine ⁴⁷⁴ whereby a material variation to the contract guaranteed, without the guarantor's consent, may lead to the discharge of the guarantee.

"On demand" bonds

37-130

Where a performance bond is, on its true construction, unconditional (or "on demand") then the obligation of the surety will arise merely upon a demand being made (in the manner prescribed in the bond) by the beneficiary. ⁴⁷⁵ In Bache & Co (London) Ltd v Banque Vernes et Commerciale de Paris SA ⁴⁷⁶ a commercial guarantee provided for payment by the surety forthwith of the amount stated in the demand, such notice of default being conclusive evidence that the liability of the surety had accrued in that amount. The Court of Appeal upheld the claim of the beneficiary to sums under the bond. In Esal (Commodities) Ltd v Oriental Credit Ltd ⁴⁷⁷ it was held that, on a construction of the material words in the bond, the beneficiary did not have to demonstrate breach since it was thought that this would be wholly inconsistent with the entire object of the transaction. ⁴⁷⁸

Final accounting

37-131

Where a beneficiary makes a claim on an unconditional bond, then he is entitled without more to the whole sum stated in the bond from the surety. However, in the absence of clear words to the contrary (which may, in any event, be construed as a penalty ⁴⁷⁹) there will be an accounting exercise between the parties at some stage after the bond has been called. If the amount of the bond is not sufficient to satisfy the beneficiary's claim for damages then he can bring proceedings for his loss, giving credit for the amount received under the bond. However, if, following the accounting exercise, the amount received by the beneficiary under the bond exceeds the loss sustained, then the surety is entitled to recover the overpayment.⁴⁸⁰

-
- ^{450.} See generally, Andrews and Millett, Law of Guarantees, 3rd edn (2008); Phillips, The Modern Contract of Guarantee, 3rd edn (1996); Moss and Marks, Rowlatt on Principal and Surety, 5th edn (1999).
- ^{451.} See, generally, Ch.45.
- ^{452.} Moschi v Lep Air Services Ltd [1973] A.C. 331, 348 HL.
- ^{453.} Yeoman Credit Ltd v Latter [1961] 1 W.L.R. 828, 830; Davys v Buswell [1913] 2 K.B. 47, 53.
- ^{454.} Moschi v Lep Air Services Ltd [1973] A.C. 331, 349; Alfred McAlpine Construction Ltd v Unex Corp Ltd (1994) 38 Con. L.R. 38 CA.
- ^{455.} Yeoman Credit Ltd v Latter [1961] 1 W.L.R. 828, 832; Argo Caribbean Group v Lewis [1976] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 289, 296. See also Phillips, The Modern Contract of Guarantee, 3rd edn (1996), pp.25–31.
- ^{456.} [1992] 1 W.L.R. 792, [1992] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 365 CA.
- ^{457.} See generally Ch.45.
- ^{458.} (1994) 66 B.L.R. 42.
- ^{459.} [1996] A.C. 199.
- ^{460.} See OTV Birwelco Ltd v Technical and General Guarantee Co Ltd [2002] 4 All E.R. 668; (2002) 84 Con. L.R. 117.
- ^{461.} Trade Indemnity Co Ltd v Workington Harbour and Dock Board [1937] A.C. 1, 17; Tins' Industrial Co Ltd v Kono Insurance Ltd [1987] 3 H.K.C. 71, 77; Trafalgar House Construction (Regions) Ltd v General Surety and Guarantee Co Ltd [1996] A.C. 199; Paddington Churches Housing Association v Technical and General Guarantee [1999] B.L.R. 244.
- ^{462.} [1990] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 496, 500.
- ^{463.} cf. Tins' Industrial Co Ltd v Kono Insurance Ltd [1987] 3 H.K.C. 71, 76G where the Court of Appeal of Hong Kong appear to have been impressed with absence of the words "on demand" in reaching the conclusion that this was a conditional bond.
- ^{464.} For a careful analysis of a guarantee in a construction context, see: Try Build Ltd v Blue Star Garages (1998) 66 Con. L.R. 90.
- ^{465.} See Andrews and Millett, Law of Guarantees, 2nd edn (1995), para.1.4.
- ^{466.} [1996] 1 A.C. 199 HL.
- ^{467.} [1996] 1 A.C. 199, 207D and G.
- ^{468.} In particular, Trade Indemnity Co Ltd v Workington Harbour and Dock Board [1937] A.C. 1 HL ("the Workington case").

- 469. By contrast with the words used in Hyundai Shipbuilding & Heavy Industries Co Ltd v Pournaras [1978] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 502 CA.
- 470. (1994) 66 B.L.R. 72 CA.
- 471. (1997) 55 Con. L.R. 1.
- 472. [2012] EWCA Civ 1716, [2013] B.L.R. 57.
- 473. [2013] EWCA Civ 644, [2013] B.L.R. 458.
- 474. Holme v Brunskill (1877) 3 Q.B.D. 495; see generally below, para.45-104.
- 475. In these circumstances, the principal remaining defence to a summary call on the bond will be that the call involves fraud, on which see the decision in Balfour Beatty Civil Engineering Ltd v Technical & General Guarantee Co Ltd (1999) 66 Con. L.R. 90.
- 476. [1973] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 437 CA.
- 477. [1985] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 546 CA.
- 478. [1985] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 546, 549 (col.2).
- 479. Cargill International SA v Bangladesh Sugar and Food Industries Corp [1998] 1 W.L.R. 461.
- 480. Cargill International SA v Bangladesh Sugar and Food Industries Corp [1998] 1 W.L.R. 461, 465 See also: ENS Ltd v Derwent Cogeneration Ltd (1998) 62 Con. L.R. 141, 182.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts

Section 4. - Particular Features

(f) - Insurance

Introduction

37-132

On most construction projects, there will be a number of levels of insurance ⁴⁸¹ cover against different kinds of loss, the relevant policies being held by different participants. On major projects, a compendious arrangement is sometimes encountered known as "Project Insurance", which is intended to supersede (or duplicate) all the levels of cover as discussed below. The majority of projects, however, involve many individual policies which frequently overlap in practice. There is no general statutory requirement to provide insurance under construction projects. Individual parties may, however, be under statutory duties to insure, e.g. employers in respect of their employees.

Insurance of the works

37-133

In the absence of other cover, e.g. through project insurance, the construction contract will usually require the contractor to effect insurance of the works. This will usually include goods and materials awaiting incorporation and may cover the contractor's plant and equipment. The insurance cover required may be in respect of loss from any cause (all risks) save for specified excepted risks. ⁴⁸² Alternatively, some forms of contract require insurance only against specified perils. Where the work is to be carried out to, or to form part of, existing works or buildings, the contract must specify whether cover is required in respect of the existing works. Some contracts require insurance of the works to be in joint names, ⁴⁸³ which will enable either party to recover in the event of loss. In London Borough of Barking & Dagenham v Stamford Asphalt Co Ltd, ⁴⁸⁴ a case concerning conditions 6.2 and 6.3B of the JCT Agreement for Minor Building Works, it was held that, on the assumption that the sub-contractor's negligence had caused certain fire damage to the employer's property, then the failure of the employer to obtain condition 6.3B insurance did not affect the employer's right of recovery against the contractor under condition 6.2, since neither condition referred to or qualified the other. ⁴⁸⁵ However, the position in this respect under the JCT Minor Works Building Contract 2011 has probably been materially altered by the express exclusion from the terms of the cl.5.2 indemnity of loss and damage to any property required to be insured under cl.5.4B by a specified peril. Thus the employer may, in this case, bear the sole risk of damage to the existing structures caused by specified perils, even if due to the contractor's negligence.

Third party liability insurance

37-134

Construction contracts must also make provision for liability to third parties arising out of the works. The usual scheme is to render the contractor responsible for any such loss, and to require liability insurance in respect of it. ⁴⁸⁶ While insurance of the works will usually be effected by a bespoke policy, liability insurance will often be covered by a contractors all risks ("CAR") policy which will contain a variety of cover, usually including some cover in respect of materials, workmanship and design.

Professional indemnity

37-135

Insurance will usually be held by the professional team (architect, engineer and quantity surveyor) termed professional indemnity ("PI") insurance. Such policies will provide cover in respect of loss arising from design fault, which will usually be an excepted risk under the contractor's works insurance. The cover will, however, usually be limited to negligent acts or omissions. A potential lacuna therefore exists where loss arises from a design fault which is non-negligent.⁴⁸⁷ PI insurance may also provide cover in respect of defective work where negligent supervision is established.

^{481.} See Wright, Construction Insurance (1997). Following the Latham Report Working Group 10 of the Construction Industry Board has produced Liability law and latent defects insurance (1997, Thomas Telford).

^{482.} See ICC Form cl.20 and JCT 80 cl.22, JCT SBC 2011 cl.6.8.

^{483.} e.g. ICC Form cl.21(1). For consideration by the House of Lords of the JCT 1998 contractual machinery providing for Joint Names insurance, see CRS v Taylor Young Partnership [2002] UKHL 17, [2002] 1 W.L.R. 1419 where it was held that the effect of the contractual joint names insurance scheme was to exclude the normal rules for compensation for negligence and breach of contract and see also Bovis Construction Ltd v Commercial Union Assurance Co [2001] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 416. But note that the approach taken in CRS v Taylor Young Partnership was held not to be a rule of law and was distinguished on the facts in Tyco Fire & Integrated Solutions Ltd v Rolls Royce Motor Cars Ltd [2008] EWCA Civ 286, [2008] B.L.R. 285 where the joint names insurance provision under the particular building contract under consideration found not to exclude the contractor's potential liability for negligence causing damage to existing structures as provided for in other clauses of the contract. In TFW Printers Ltd v Interserve Project Services Ltd [2006] EWCA Civ 875, [2006] B.L.R. 299, the Court of Appeal held, in a case concerning a modified version of the JCT Agreement for Minor Building Works, that the employer's obligation under cl.6.3B to provide joint names' insurance cover against specified perils expired on practical completion of the works.

^{484.} (1997) 82 B.L.R. 25 CA, approving the reasoning of Otton J. in National Trust v Haden Young Ltd (1993) 66 B.L.R. 88 (upheld by the Court of Appeal at (1994) 72 B.L.R. 1).

^{485.} (1997) 82 B.L.R. 25 at 36B, per Auld L.J.

^{486.} JCT 98 cl.21, JCT SBC 2005 cl.6.1 to 6.4, ICC Form cl.23.

^{487.} See Queensland Railways v Manufacturers Insurance [1969] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 214.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts
Section 4. - Particular Features
(g) - Retention

Definition

37-136

Monies held on account of retention form part of the sums certified by the contract administrator and earned by the contractor but which are not payable to the contractor until the final stages of the contract works. Typically, once practical completion is reached the next certificate will include one half of the retention monies; and the second half will be stated to be due upon the certificate issued after the certificate of making good defects. The amount of retention as a percentage deducted from successive interim certificates can vary and will depend upon the provisions of the construction contract. In some cases retention can be a substantial percentage of the certified value,⁴⁸⁸ but in modern contracts based on the standard forms, retention is typically between 3 to 5 per cent of the value certified.

Purpose and operation

37-137

Under the JCT 2011 Standard Form, the status of retention, and the rights and obligations of the parties in relation to sums retained, is defined in cl.4.18.1 in the following way:

“... the Employer's interest in the Retention is fiduciary as trustee for the Contractor (but without obligation to invest) ...”

The operation of the retention fund can be viewed from the perspective of the (main) contractor, the employer and a nominated sub-contractor.

Position of contractor

37-138

The words impose a trustee type obligation upon the employer with the result that (i) the employer will be in breach of trust if he seeks to use the retention monies for his own purposes⁴⁸⁹, and (ii) as long as the employer is not in liquidation or administrative receivership,⁴⁹⁰ the court will enforce these obligations by requiring the employer (on application by the contractor) to set aside the retention fund⁴⁹¹ without the need for the contractor to show that the employer is financially at risk.⁴⁹² The contractor can require the employer to set up a retention trust account at any time during the life of the contract⁴⁹³ (provided the application is not too late),⁴⁹⁴ and the insolvency of the contractor or the termination of his employment under the contract is not a bar to such remedy.⁴⁹⁵

Position of employer

37-139

The stages at which retention typically becomes payable—practical completion and the issue of the certificate of making good defects—provide a clear indication that the practical purpose of retention is to ensure satisfactory completion by the contractor and by nominated sub-contractors. However, insofar as the employer has rights of deduction under the contract against the contractor, then he will (i) have a valid excuse for not having set up the retention fund in the first place; and (ii) have a right to withdraw sums from it. In Henry Boot Building v Croydon Hotel ⁴⁹⁶ the plaintiff contractor under a JCT Form of Contract was refused a mandatory injunction to set aside retention of £355,179 in circumstances where certificates had been issued by the architect under cl.22 entitling the defendant employer to liquidated damages in excess of the retained sums. There are also dicta in Rayack Construction (see above) which suggest that the employer may be entitled to have recourse to retention on the strength of a claim for damages for breach of the contract (and not just in relation to claims under the contract). ⁴⁹⁷

^{488.} In Rayack Construction Ltd v Lampeter Meat Co Ltd (1979) 12 B.L.R. 30, the retention was 50 per cent and this was to be retained during the whole of the five year defects liability period.

^{489.} Wates Construction v Franthom Property (1991) 53 B.L.R. 23, 37 CA.

^{490.} Re Jartay Developments Ltd (1982) 22 B.L.R. 134; Mac-Jordan Construction v Brookmount Erostin (1991) 56 B.L.R. 1 CA.

^{491.} Rayack v Lampeter (1979) 12 B.L.R. 30; Concorde Construction Co Ltd v Colgan Co Ltd (1984) 29 B.L.R. 125; Henry Boot Building v Croydon Hotel (1985) 36 B.L.R. 41 CA; Wates Construction v Franthom Property (1991) 53 B.L.R. 23 CA; Mac-Jordan Construction v Brookmount Erostin (1991) 56 B.L.R. 1 CA.

^{492.} Rayack v Lampeter Meat (1979) 12 B.L.R. 30, 38.

^{493.} Finnegan v Ford Sellars Morris Developments (1991) 53 B.L.R. 38.

^{494.} GPT Realisations v Panatown (1992) 61 B.L.R. 88.

^{495.} Re Arthur Sanders Ltd (1981) 17 B.L.R. 125.

^{496.} (1985) 36 B.L.R. 41 CA.

^{497.} Rayack Construction v Lampeter Meat (1979) 12 B.L.R. 30, 38.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts

Section 5. - Payment

(a) - Measure and Value

Payment generally

37-140

Payment under construction contracts typically involves the initial identification in the contract of a sum of money, variously called the “contract sum” ⁴⁹⁸ or “tender total”. ⁴⁹⁹ The contractor is entitled to this sum, or such other sum as may become payable in accordance with the contract conditions. In practice, the contractor is most unlikely to be paid the exact sum identified in the contract, given that every contract may be subject to variations, ⁵⁰⁰ claims, ⁵⁰¹ fluctuation payments ⁵⁰² or other factors by which the figure will require adjustment. This section addresses issues of payment which arise in construction contracts in the absence of fluctuations (which are dealt with elsewhere). Although the resolution of issues of payment will be a matter of the construction of the contract documents in the particular case, certain general principles can be identified and are discussed below.

Lump sum

37-141

Where the effect of the agreement, in accordance with the contract conditions, is to carry out the work for a stated amount, it is referred to as “lump sum”, a technical expression so understood by valuers. ⁵⁰³ The simplest form of lump sum contract is that in which the technical description of the works is contained in a specification and/or drawings, the terms of the contract requiring expressly, or as a matter of construction, that the contractor is to perform the whole of the work so described for the stated figure. This was the case in Sharpe v Sao Paulo Railway ⁵⁰⁴ where, although the contractor was involved in substantially more work than he could have anticipated, his promise to complete a railway from terminus to terminus meant that the increased work was not extra work under the contract. This represents the usual mode of contracting in the USA and many other parts of the world. In the majority of UK contracts, however, a bill of quantities ⁵⁰⁵ is also incorporated into the contract, primarily for the calculation of interim payments, but also having other effects.

Effect of bill of quantities

37-142

A bill of quantities does not prevent the contract operating as lump sum. The JCT Form of Contract, with quantities, operates in this way, providing expressly that the employer will pay the contractor “the contract sum or such other sum as shall become payable hereunder”. ⁵⁰⁶ The effect of a lump sum contract containing bills of quantities is that the contractor takes the risk that the given quantities will over—or under—state the true quantities. Only if it is shown that the bills have been prepared erroneously from the drawings will the contractor be entitled to seek an adjustment of the contract price. ⁵⁰⁷

Remeasurement

37-143

A contract containing quantities in which the sum finally due to the contractor is to be ascertained by recalculating each stated quantity from the actual amount of work performed, is referred to as a “remeasurement” contract. Various editions of the ICE Conditions and the ICC Form are to this effect, typically providing that the engineer shall “determine by admeasurement the value in accordance with the contract of the work done” ⁵⁰⁸ and providing further that the quantities set out in the bill “are not to be taken as the actual and correct quantities of the works”. ⁵⁰⁹ Remeasurement contracts are practically limited to civil engineering projects, where substantial changes can occur, particularly in relation to earthworks and foundations. The contract sum is to be recalculated using the actual quantities and the quoted rates; but the ICC Form also provides that the rate may be adjusted where an increase or decrease of the quantities stated in the bill “of itself shall so warrant”. ⁵¹⁰

Error or omission

37-144

Where a bill of quantities is used, questions may arise as to the precise work included in each item. If the effect of the contract conditions is that the drawings of other contract description are to prevail over the bill, the risk of any error or omission in the bill will be that of the contractor. However, it is now a common and almost invariable practice to provide that the bills are “deemed to have been prepared” in accordance with a stated method of measurement. ⁵¹¹ There are a range of standard methods of measurement (“SMMs”) available for building, civil Engineering, highways and other works, each of which sets out details of “deemed” item coverage. The contract conditions may then provide for the consequences of any departure from the SMM. Both the JCT Form ⁵¹² and the ICC Form ⁵¹³ require any error in description or omissions, by reference to the relevant SMM, to be corrected and treated as equivalent to a variation.

^{498.} JCT Form art.2.

^{499.} ICC Form cl.(1)(1)(i).

^{500.} See para.37-096.

^{501.} See para.37-238.

^{502.} See para.37-167.

^{503.} See Keating on Construction Contracts, 9th edn (2012), paras 4–01 to 4–015.

^{504.} (1873) L.R. 8 Ch. App. 597.

^{505.} See para.37-068.

^{506.} JCT Form art.2.

^{507.} See below, para.37-143.

^{508.} ICC Form cl.56(1).

^{509.} ICC Form cl.55(1).

^{510.} ICC Form cl.56(2).

- 511. ICC Form cl.57.
- 512. JCT SBC 2011 c.2.14.
- 513. ICC Form cl.55(2).

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts

Section 5. - Payment

(b) - Interim Payment and Milestones

Right to interim payment

37-145

⚠ A right to payment by instalments may arise by express agreement of the parties, where typically a periodic valuation will give rise to a stage payment, as with cl.4.9 of the JCT SBC 2011 Form. In H&J Martin v Board of Governors of Assumption Grammar School, ⁵¹⁴ it was held that interim payments under cl.30 of the 1998 JCT Standard Form of Building Contract may include a genuine valuation on an interim basis of an amount due for loss and expense actually incurred at the relevant certification date. In Stoczia Gdanska SA v Latvian Shipping Co ⁵¹⁵ (a shipbuilding case), the House of Lords confirmed that the contractor can sue to recover due but unpaid instalments where the contract is one for work and materials, but not where there is a simple contract of sale. Alternatively, there may be an implied term as to payment in stages, particularly where the work undertaken is long and costly. ⁵¹⁶ A contract which is a "construction contract" within the meaning of s.104 of the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996, and which contains no express provision for payment by instalments in relation to contract works with a duration of more than 45 days will be subject to the relevant provisions of the Scheme for Construction Contracts, ⁵¹⁷ which came into force on May 1, 1998. ⁵¹⁸ Construction contracts of any size almost invariably make express provision for interim or stage payments as the work proceeds. These may take any form and there is no requirement under the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 for the interim payments to relate either to the volume or value of work performed, or to the contract sum. ⁵¹⁹ ⚠ The usual provision in contracts of any substance is to provide for monthly payments, which are to be proportional to the work carried out and subject to retention, this consisting usually of a percentage deduction, (often 5 per cent) which may be subject to a cap.

Interim measurement

37-146

Where there is a bill of quantities, the contract conditions usually provide for approximate monthly measurement to be taken, based on the quantities and rates set out in the bill. In the case of a lump sum contract, the quantity surveyor will estimate the proportions of the total stated quantities which have been performed. In the case of a remeasurement contract, the work may need to be physically measured. This is particularly important where work is to be covered up by succeeding work. ⁵²⁰ Standard forms of contract frequently provide for interim payments to be made in respect of goods and materials on site but not yet incorporated, and even goods and materials manufactured but not yet delivered. ⁵²¹ The bill of quantities may also contain items other than measured work, such as preliminaries (i.e. fixed charges covering items such as insurance or the provision of site facilities) and method related charges. ⁵²² All such items will be paid proportionally through periodic interim measurement, subject to retention and to any other adjustment permitted under the contract.

Milestone payments

37-147

As an alternative to the somewhat cumbersome process of monthly measurement, a lump sum contract may provide for periodic payments in the form of a series of separate lump sums payable at stated intervals or by reference to stages of the work. Such payments are referred to as “milestones” and have been given the imprimatur of Sir Michael Latham in his report.⁵²³ The payments need not be equal and may be graduated to create an incentive to achieve completion. Their release may be made conditional upon performance to quality and/or programme requirements.

Interim certificates

37-148

Interim payments may become payable directly in accordance with the contract conditions; or they may be payable only upon the certificate of the contract administrator. In the latter case the certificate is usually a condition precedent to the right to claim payment.⁵²⁴ Where a certificate has been withheld by the contract administrator an arbitration clause may empower the arbitrator to award what is due, despite the absence of a certificate⁵²⁵; and where proceedings are brought, the court may exercise the same power to open up, review and revise any certificate or decision given under the contract.⁵²⁶ At common law, it has been held that a certificate creates a debt which is susceptible to right of set-off, unless the contract otherwise provides.⁵²⁷ This position is, however, substantially altered by s.111 of the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 which requires a notice to be served in a tight timeframe if the employer does not intend to pay the full sum stated in a certificate.⁵²⁸

^{514.} [2013] NIQB 98.

^{515.} [1998] 1 W.L.R. 574 HL.

^{516.} Appleby v Myers (1867) L.R. 2 C.P. 651 at 660, per Lord Blackburn where the clear suggestion is that payment prior to completion of the whole will occur in the absence of an agreement as to payment for the whole on completion; The Tergeste [1903] P. 26, 34, per Phillimore J.

^{517.} s.109(3).

^{518.} SI 1998/649. The Scheme has been amended by Regulations SI 2011/2333 and (for Wales) SI 2011/1715.

^{519.}  Grove Developments Ltd v Balfour Beatty Regional Construction Ltd [2016] EWHC 168 (TCC) at [33]; approved by the Court of Appeal at [2016] EWCA Civ 990.

^{520.} See ICC Form cl.56(3).

^{521.} See, generally, JCT 80 cl.30, JCT SBC 2011 cl.4.17, and ICC Form cl.60(1)(b), (c).

^{522.} See Civil Engineering Standard Method of Measurement, 2nd edn (1985).

^{523.} Constructing the Team, HMSO 1994.

^{524.} See generally Keating on Construction Contracts, 9th edn, Ch.5.

^{525.} Both the JCT Form and the ICC Form contain such arbitration clauses.

^{526.} Beaufort Developments v Gilbert-Ash NI [1999] 1 A.C. 266 HL.

- 527. Gilbert-Ash v Modern Engineering [1974] A.C. 689; Mondel v Steel (1841) 8 M. & W. 858; Hanak v Green [1958] 2 Q.B. 9.
- 528. See below, para.37-157.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts

Section 5. - Payment

(c) - Obligation to Pay

Requirement for completion

37-149

Formal contracts invariably contain extensive provisions relating to periodic payments and to their calculation. Subject to express and statutory (see above) rights to periodic payment, a construction contract normally operates as an entire contract ⁵²⁹ so that payment is conditional upon the achievement of substantial completion. ⁵³⁰ The same rule will apply to instalments in respect of defined sections of the work. In addition, it is not uncommon for payments to be made in advance of carrying out the work. For example, in major international projects, advance payment in foreign currency may be provided for to finance the establishment of the site or importation of plant. Such payments are likely to be conditional upon the provision of a repayment bond. Where advance payments are made, there is likely to be a reduction in subsequent periodic payments proportional to the value of the work performed.

Set-off and abatement

37-150

The right of the employer (under a main contract) or the contractor (under a sub-contract) to make deductions from sums which might otherwise be due under the terms of the contract, but for the existence of, for example, defects and delays to the works, is an important and controversial aspect of modern construction industry practice which often leads to formal disputes. From the point of view of the contractor or sub-contractor, regular income from work as it progresses is vital for cash flow. However, the employer will not wish to pay interim valuations in circumstances where there are existing problems with the works. The following paragraphs consider the grounds upon which the employer may resist payment of sums otherwise due to the contractor.

Connected cross-demands

37-151

Where parties have a series of debits and credits which are closely connected to the same underlying transaction in the manner of a running account, then it is the balance on the account which is regarded, as a matter of common law, as the debt, so that no question of set-off arises. ⁵³¹

Mutual liquidated demands

37-152

A set-off at common law is available if the claims made on both sides are in respect of liquidated debts or money demands which can readily and without difficulty be ascertained (rather than by litigation or arbitration).⁵³²

Equitable set-off

37-153

This is available where a cross-claim is so closely connected with the claim that it would be unjust to allow the claim without taking account of the cross-claim.⁵³³ In *Hanak v Green*⁵³⁴ the plaintiff employer sued the builder for damages arising out of a failure to complete building works properly. The builder succeeded in setting-off (i) his quantum meruit claims for additional work; (ii) his loss caused by the plaintiff's refusal to allow his men access; and (iii) his claim for trespass to his tools. Although the requirement for an "unjust factor" has not always been specifically identified in decisions on equitable set-off,⁵³⁵ it is clear from the decision of the House of Lords in *Aries Tanker Corp v Total Transport Ltd*⁵³⁶ that the prevention of manifest injustice has always been an ingredient in decisions on equitable set-off.⁵³⁷

Contractual set-off

37-154

Construction contracts will often contain machinery which allows set-off if made in accordance with the detailed provisions of the contract, such as the requirement that the employer (as against the contractor) or the contractor (as against his sub-contractor) serve a notice of such set-off.⁵³⁸ Since parties can, by use of clear words, exclude a right of set-off which would otherwise be available to them,⁵³⁹ the machinery of contractual set-off may be expressed to be the exclusive basis for rights of set-off.⁵⁴⁰ In these circumstances, it will be essential that the party seeking to set-off under the contract does so in full compliance with the relevant notice provisions since this is likely to be construed as an exhaustive machinery for effecting a contractual set-off.⁵⁴¹

Abatement

37-155

The principle of abatement,⁵⁴² settled in Mondel v Steel,⁵⁴³ applies to contracts for the sale of goods or for work or labour, and was described in *Gilbert-Ash (Northern) Ltd v Modern Engineering (Bristol) Ltd*⁵⁴⁴ when Lord Morris said:

"... it has long been an established principle of law that if one man does work for another, the latter, when sued, may defend himself by showing that the work was badly done and that the claim made in respect of it should be diminished ..."

There are a number of points on the principle of abatement which are of significance in the construction context. First, provisions of a building contract which exclude equitable set-off may not be sufficiently clear to exclude the common law defence of abatement. Where, for example, notices of set-off have not been complied with, then contractual and equitable set-off may not be open, but there will be an independent right to abate.⁵⁴⁵ Secondly, the rule of abatement applies only to matters that go to reduce the value of the work performed or of the goods sold and it does not apply to claims based on delay.⁵⁴⁶ Where there is an abatement by reference to defective work, the question becomes one of how to value an abatement. The measure of an abatement is how much less the subject matter of the action is worth by reason of the breach; but in *Duquemin v Slater*⁵⁴⁷ it was decided, by reference to the case of sale of goods, that the cost of repair could not be taken into account. It is thought that in many cases of abatement by reference to defects, the cost of remedial works will, in practical terms, be an important factor in deciding the extent of a right to abate.⁵⁴⁸

Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996, as amended

37-156

Interim payments are now regulated by the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 ⁵⁴⁹ in respect of “construction contracts” falling within the statutory definition. ⁵⁵⁰ Provisions of the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996, as amended, dealing with payment apply unless the duration of work is to be less than 45 days. ⁵⁵¹ Every construction contract within the Act is required to provide “an adequate mechanism for determining what payments become due under the contract and when” and “a final date for payment” ⁵⁵² and provide for the giving of notice, by either the payer, a third party certifier or the payee not later than five days after the date on which payment became due. In either case the notice must state the sum considered to be due and “the basis on which that sum is calculated”. ⁵⁵³ The sum stated in the notice is referred to as the “notified sum”.

37-157

In place of the earlier provision for a “withholding notice” the Act as amended now allows the payer to give notice of intention to pay less than the notified sum, provided the notice is given not later than the prescribed period before the final date for payment. ⁵⁵⁴ The prescribed period is to be as agreed or in default the Scheme for Construction Contracts ⁵⁵⁵ requires notice to be given seven days before the final date for payment. ⁵⁵⁶ If no such notice is given, the full sum stated as due in the relevant payment notice must be paid and no abatement or set-off is possible. ⁵⁵⁷

37-158

On the exceptional facts of Melville Dundas Ltd v George Wimpey UK Ltd ⁵⁵⁸ the terms of the contract were found to avoid the need to serve a withholding notice, so that no payment needed to be made even though no withholding notice had been served by the required deadline. In that case, the contractor had applied for an interim payment, but by the final date for payment the employer had neither made a payment nor served a withholding notice. The contractor then became insolvent and the employer on this ground terminated the contract. It was held that the words of cl.27.5.5.1 of the JCT Standard Form of Building Contract (With Design 1998 edition) were clear and that the contractor ceased to become entitled to any further payment whatever once the contract had been terminated, that there was no conflict between this clause and s.111(1) of the 1996 Act and therefore that the failure to serve a withholding notice in respect of the interim payment did not affect the parties' rights. Potentially this decision creates a problem for contractors or suppliers seeking to obtain payment, at least in a termination situation. ⁵⁵⁹ An amendment to the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 appears to confirm the effect of Melville Dundas in providing that the obligation to pay the notified sum does not apply where the contract provides for payment to be suspended upon insolvency. ⁵⁶⁰

The Scheme for Construction Contracts also makes provision for the value of each stage or periodic payments in the event no adequate express terms are incorporated. The valuation is to include “an amount equal to the value of any materials manufactured on site or brought onto site for the purposes of the Works”. ⁵⁶¹ It is to be noted that the Standard Forms of Contract provide for payment for materials not yet incorporated into the works to be discretionary and subject to appropriate security. ⁵⁶²

The Act further reinforces the right to prompt payment by providing a statutory right to suspend performance, subject first to giving seven days' notice. ⁵⁶³ The period during which performance is so suspended is to be disregarded in computing the time taken to complete any work affected by exercise of the right.

Pay-when-paid and pay-when-certified clauses

37-159

Section 113 of the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 (prohibition of conditional payment provisions) prevents reliance upon what are often termed “pay-when-paid” clauses except in the case of the insolvency of the employer (or any other person, payment by whom is a precondition to payment of the third party under the contract). While s.113 will prevent some of the potentially harsh effects of “pay-when-paid” clauses seen in other jurisdictions,⁵⁶⁴ the insolvency exception will mean that in certain cases the sub-contractor will, in practice, be accepting substantial risks in relation to the outcome of a construction project. In these circumstances, the effect of a particular “pay-when-paid” clause will be a matter of construction, requiring clear and unambiguous words, and requiring careful consideration of whether, on a true construction, the clause affects the right to payment or only the time for payment.⁵⁶⁵

37-160

The amendments to the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 made in 2011 introduced at s.110(1A) further limitations by prohibiting terms which make payment conditional upon the performance of obligations under another contract or the decisions of any other person as to whether obligations under another contract have been performed. This amendment prevents “pay-when-certified” clauses whereby a sub-contractor’s payment is conditional upon money being certified for payment under the main contract, a common way by which main contractors sought to circumvent the prohibition on pay-when-paid clauses described above.

-
- ^{529.} Gilbert-Ash v Modern Engineering [1974] A.C. 689 HL, per Lord Diplock.
- ^{530.} See above, para.37-009.
- ^{531.} Green v Farmer (1768) 4 Burr. 2214, 2221; Henriksens Rederi A/S v THZ Rolimpex (The Brede) [1974] Q.B. 233, 246.
- ^{532.} Stooke v Taylor (1880) 5 Q.B.D. 569, 575; Axel Johnson Petroleum AB v MG Mineral Group [1992] 1 W.L.R. 270; B Hargreaves Ltd v Action 2000 Ltd (1992) 62 B.L.R. 72.
- ^{533.} Hanak v Green [1958] 2 Q.B. 9 CA; Gilbert-Ash (Northern) Ltd v Modern Engineering (Bristol) Ltd [1974] A.C. 689, 717 HL; The Teno [1977] 2 Lloyd’s Rep. 289, 297; British Anzani (Felixstowe) Ltd v International Marine Management (UK) Ltd [1980] Q.B. 137, 144, 145; Dole Dried Fruit v Trustin Kerwood [1990] 2 Lloyd’s Rep. 309 CA.
- ^{534.} [1958] 2 Q.B. 9 CA.
- ^{535.} Henriksens Rederi A/S v THZ Rolimpex (The Brede) [1974] Q.B. 233, 248; Box v Midland Bank Ltd [1981] 1 Lloyd’s Rep. 434, 437.
- ^{536.} [1977] 1 W.L.R. 185, 191, 193.
- ^{537.} See also Geldof Metaalconstructie NV v Simon Carves Ltd [2010] EWCA Civ 667.
- ^{538.} Barrett Steel Building Ltd v Amec Construction Ltd Unreported March 3, 1997. In Reinwood Ltd v L Brown & Sons Ltd [2007] EWCA Civ 601, [2007] B.L.R. 10 the Court of Appeal held, in a case concerned with the JCT Standard Form of Building Contract 1998 edition, that a contractual right to deduct liquidated damages after service of a certificate of non-completion was not invalidated by the subsequent granting of an extension of time which negated the notice of non-completion. This decision was upheld by the House of Lords (see [2008] 1 W.L.R. 696) where it was held that although the effect of the extension of time was to cancel the non-completion certificate, this was not retrospective in its effect unless expressly provided for in the contract.
- ^{539.} Gilbert-Ash (Northern) Ltd v Modern Engineering (Bristol) Ltd [1974] A.C. 689, 717 HL; NEI Thompson v Wimpey Construction (1987) 39 B.L.R. 65, 73 CA.

- 540. For instance cl.23/4 of DOM/1 Conditions.
- 541. Hermcrest Plc v G Percy Trentham Ltd (1991) 53 B.L.R. 108 CA.
- 542. Derham, Set-off, 2nd edn (1996), pp.124–130.
- 543. (1841) 8 M. & W. 858.
- 544. [1974] A.C. 689 HL.
- 545. Acsim (Southern) Ltd v Danish Contracting and Development Co Ltd (1989) 47 B.L.R. 59 CA; Mellowes Archital v Bell Projects (1997) 87 B.L.R. 26 CA.
- 546. Mellowes Archital v Bell Projects (1997) 87 B.L.R. 26, 40 CA.
- 547. (1993) 65 B.L.R. 124.
- 548. See Barrett Steel Building Ltd v Amec Construction Ltd Unreported March 3, 1997 and the reference to Linden Gardens v Lenesta Sludge Disposals Ltd [1994] 1 A.C. 85, 111.
- 549. As amended by the Local Democracy, Economic Development and Construction Act 2009, which came into force on October 1, 2011.
- 550. ss.104, 105.
- 551. s.109(1).
- 552. s.110(1).
- 553. s.110A as inserted by the Local Democracy, Economic Development and Construction Act 2009.
- 554. s.111 as inserted by the Local Democracy, Economic Development and Construction Act 2009.
- 555. Scheme for Construction Contracts (England and Wales) Regulations 1998 Pt II: Payment, as amended by the Local Democracy, Economic Development and Construction Act 2009.
- 556. Scheme for Construction Contracts, as amended, para.10.
- 557. Rupert Morgan Building Services (Llc) Ltd v Jervis [2003] EWCA Civ 1563.
- 558. [2007] UKHL 18, [2007] UKHL 18, [2007] B.L.R. 257.
- 559. The decision in Melville Dundas was applied in Pierce Design International Ltd v Mark Johnston [2007] EWHC 1691 (TCC), [2007] B.L.R. 381.
- 560. s.111(10) as inserted by the Local Democracy, Economic Development and Construction Act 2009.
- 561. Scheme for Construction Contracts, para.2.
- 562. JCT 98 cl.30.3, JCT SBC 2011 cl.4.17, ICC Form cl.60(2).
- 563. s.112.
- 564. Hong Kong: Hong Kong Teakwood Works v Shui On Construction Ltd [1984] H.K.L.R. 235; Schindler Lifts (Hong Kong) Ltd v Shui On Construction Ltd [1985] H.K.L.R. 118; (1985) 29 B.L.R. 95; Singapore: Brightside Mechanical and Electrical Services Group Ltd v Hyundai Engineering and Construction Co Ltd (1988) 41 B.L.R. 110.

- 565. Iezzi Construction Pty v Curumbin Crest Development Pty (1995) 2 Qd. R. 350 Australia; Smith and Smith Glass Ltd v Winstone Cladding Systems Ltd [1992] 2 N.Z.L.R. 473 New Zealand. See “Back to Back Payment Clauses—‘If and When’ ” at (1995) C.I.L.L. 1029.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts

Section 5. - Payment

(d) - Cost-based Payment

Introduction

37-161

Where construction work is the subject of competitive tendering payment, both for the original contract work and for any varied work, is usually to be calculated on the basis of the tendered figures. Various devices exist for deriving rates to be used for the payment of variations where these are to be based on the original tendered figures. An alternative method of payment is one based on "cost". This requires appropriate definition since it is doubtful whether the term could have any absolute meaning. This section discusses a number of situations in which cost-based payments arise and the way in which such claims are to be valued.

Claims based on cost

37-162

The Standard Forms of Contract frequently contain provisions for particular payments to be based on cost rather than quoted rates. Under the ICC Form, a substantial number of provisions entitling the contractor to additional payment state that the payment is to be cost-based. For example, for delay in the provision of necessary instructions, the contractor is to be paid "the amount of such costs (incurred) as may be reasonable" ⁵⁶⁶; in respect of encountering conditions which could not reasonably have been foreseen, the contractor is entitled to be paid "the amount of any costs which may reasonably have been incurred by the contractor together with a reasonable percentage addition thereto in respect of profit" by reason of such conditions or obstructions ⁵⁶⁷; and in respect of general instructions issued by the Engineer the contractor is entitled to be paid any "cost beyond that reasonably to have been foreseen by an experienced contractor at the time of tender ... as may be reasonable except to the extent that such ... extra costs result from the contractors' default". ⁵⁶⁸ The form also includes a definition of "cost" as "all expenditure properly incurred or to be incurred whether on or off the site including overhead finance and other charges properly allocatable thereto but does not include any allowance for profit". ⁵⁶⁹ These provisions are typical of those found in many Standard Forms of Contract. The Standard Form of Building Contract, on the contrary, contains uniform procedures and definitions applying to all such claims, by which the contractor is entitled to recover:

"... direct loss and/or expense ... for which he would not be reimbursed by a payment under any other provision of this contract".

This is thought to be equivalent to cost. The contract itself does not contain a definition, but the words have been interpreted by the courts as being equivalent to damages, ⁵⁷⁰ and such as to include interest or finance costs. ⁵⁷¹

Prime cost

37-163

There is no fixed definition of this term which generally refers to work which is intended to be valued in accordance with a definition contained in the contract. This may be in the form of a lengthy schedule of sums which are to be allowable (and those which are not) so as to arrive at a definite computation of the sum payable. Various forms of prime cost contract have been issued containing elaborate definitions of sums recoverable in respect of labour, materials, plant and sub-contracted work. In all such cases, express provision needs to be made for the cost of supervision and of other forms of overhead, and all other matters which may give rise to dispute.

Prime cost sums37-164

Another distinct use of the term "prime cost" occurs in relation to intended sub-contracts. ⁵⁷² In such cases, it is customary to include a prime cost or PC sum chosen by the employer within the tender, with provision within the conditions of contract for the work in question to be executed by a sub-contractor, the actual cost of the sub-contracted work being substituted for the PC sum. ⁵⁷³ The sum to be paid constitutes actual cost to the contractor but not prime cost as may be defined. The usual procedure is for the employer (or the contract administrator) to obtain a lump sum tender from the prospective nominated subcontractor whose payment will then be terminated in accordance with the terms of the sub-contract, the final total replacing the PC sum for the purpose of the main contractor's account.

Dayworks37-165

This is a form of prime cost payment usually provided for under conditions of contract where the supervisor is empowered to order particular work to be executed on dayworks, usually on the basis that the work in question cannot properly be valued by measurement. ⁵⁷⁴ The term refers to lists of rates for labour, plant and materials together with appropriate mark-ups in respect of all additional charges. The rates in question may be included as an annex to the contract or reference may be made to published schedules. ⁵⁷⁵

Provisional sums37-166

This term appears in most forms of contract and refers to a sum of money (specified) which is to be "provided" in the contractor's price, to be expended as directed (usually by the contract administrator). It is therefore in the nature of a contingency item, where the contractor will be paid according to the instructions which may be given.

^{566.} ICC Form cl.7(4)(a).

^{567.} ICC Form cl.12(6).

^{568.} ICC Form cl.13(3).

^{569.} ICC Form cl.1(5).

^{570.} Wright v PH & T (Holdings) (1968) 13 B.L.R. 26.

- 571. Minter v WHTSO (1980) 13 B.L.R. 1; Rees & Kirby v Swansea CC (1985) 30 B.L.R. 1. Note that in Sempra Metals Ltd v Inland Revenue [2007] UKHL 34, [2007] 3 W.L.R. 354, the House of Lords has radically reassessed the circumstances in which a claimant may be entitled to claim compound interest. It was held that (i) the Court could award compound interest where a claimant was seeking restitution of money paid under a mistake; and (ii) the Court had a common law jurisdiction to award interest, simple or compound, as damages on claims for non-payment of debts as well as other claims for breach of contract and tort. It is therefore now open to claimants to plead and prove their actual interest losses as a result of a late payment of a debt, and this may include compound interest.
- 572. See below, para.37-178.
- 573. See NWM Hospital Board v Bickerton [1970] 1 W.L.R. 607 for the House of Lords' interpretation of the process of nomination and accounting.
- 574. See JCT 2011 cl. 5.7 and ICC Form cl.52(5), 56(4).
- 575. See definition of Prime Cost of Daywork carried out under a building contract issued by the RICS, and the BEC and Schedule of Dayworks carried out incidental to contract work issued by the FCEC (now CECA).

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts

Section 5. - Payment

(e) - Price Fluctuations

Meaning

37-167

Where the contract provides for the contractor to be compensated in respect of price increases, the additional payments are referred to as “fluctuation”. Such payments may be provided for whether the underlying contract is lump sum or subject to remeasure. Variations which are priced on the basis of rates contained in the contract may be subject to fluctuation payments, but not claims based on cost, which will be assumed to be current unless the contrary is stated. Contracts which provide for payment of such increases are commonly known as “fluctuation contracts” while those which are not so subject are usually termed “fixed price” (although the price is fixed only in this limited sense).

Net fluctuation clauses

37-168

Such provisions allow the contractor to recover the net increase in various costs on which the tender is deemed to be based by computing the actual price increase in respect of elements of the work actually carried out on a monthly basis. The JCT Forms of Contract print a separate clause applying to “rates of contribution levy and tax” payable by an employer, which is intended to apply in all cases.⁵⁷⁶ A more extensive clause covers net increases in labour and materials costs, in addition to employer's contribution, levy and tax.⁵⁷⁷ In respect of materials, goods, electricity and fuel, the clause is intended to operate from a list of “basic prices” provided by the contractor from which increases or decreases may be determined. Variants of this type of clause are found in many other standard construction contracts. Such clauses are important and may give rise to disputes in times of financial instability where the price, e.g. of hydrocarbon products to be used in the works may be subject to rapid and substantial change. The clauses also operate in reverse, at least in theory, where prices decrease. The objective of these clauses is for the contractor to recover the actual price increase in respect of the stipulated components. The price of any element not listed in the clause will be deemed to be fixed.

Formula adjustment

37-169

An alternative and somewhat simpler means of assessing price fluctuation is by use of a set of formulae for different components of the work. Such clauses are found both in the ICC Form⁵⁷⁸ and in the JCT Forms.⁵⁷⁹ The ICC model represents the simplest form of calculation, whereby a predetermined apportionment of the constituents of the work is made, which is then applied to published cost index figures to calculate the fluctuation payment each month. The clause thus operates irrespective of actual constituents of the work which has been carried out. An alternative version of the standard clause exists for fabricated structural steelwork whereby the apportionment can itself be adjusted. These clauses operate on the basis of “Baxter” indices, named after their originator. The JCT formula clause operates in a similar manner, but is based on Formula Rules issued by the Joint Contracts Tribunal. The clause applies to all work carried out save for items based on actual cost or current prices, including dayworks.

576. JCT SBC 2011 cl.4.21 and 4.22, and Sch.7.

577. JCT SBC 2011 cl.4.21 and 4.22.

578. The clause is published as a separate insert.

579. JCT SBC 2011 cl.4.21 and 4.22 and Sch.7.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts

Section 5. - Payment

(f) - Quantum Meruit

Where available

37-170

Payment based upon quantum meruit (literally “what he deserves”) is an important and surprisingly frequent feature of the construction industry and is most likely to arise in one of two particular situations which it is important to distinguish. First, where there is no contract, ⁵⁸⁰ a builder who carries out work at the request of, and for the benefit of, the employer, will be entitled to a quantum meruit by way of reasonable sum, for the work carried out. It is now clear that the underlying basis for such a claim is the law of unjust enrichment. ⁵⁸¹ In British Steel Corp v Cleveland Bridge and Engineering Co Ltd ⁵⁸² Robert Goff J. found that no contract had been concluded since the parties had not agreed the price or other essential terms, but held that the plaintiffs could recover on a quantum meruit for the work they had done, stating that:

“... if, contrary to their expectation, no contract was entered into, then the performance of the work is not referable to any contract the terms of which can be ascertained, and the law simply imposes an obligation on the party who made the request to pay a reasonable sum for such work as has been done pursuant to that request, such an obligation sounding in quasi contract or, as we now say, in restitution ...”

Secondly, where the contract contains no express provision relating to payment, both generally or in respect of specific matters such as a particular variation, the contractor will be entitled to a reasonable sum for the work carried out ⁵⁸³ on the basis of an implied term to that effect. The distinction between the contract and no-contract scenarios is important because it affects the basis upon which the valuation of a reasonable sum is carried out. ⁵⁸⁴

Quantum meruit on repudiation

37-171

It has been suggested that a contractor, whose contract is brought to an end by the repudiation of the employer, which is accepted by the contractor, may claim quantum meruit in respect of the whole of the contract works, as an alternative to claiming the value of work done together with loss of profit. ⁵⁸⁵ However, the better view is that older authorities supporting such a right cannot stand in the face of modern House of Lords authority; and that a contractor may not benefit from his own poor performance and obtain payment on a more favourable basis. ⁵⁸⁶ Thus, the contractor cannot put the contract to one side and recover the whole value of work done on the basis of a quantum meruit since in any event the contract, on repudiation, is determined only insofar as it is executory. ⁵⁸⁷

Assessment of a reasonable sum

37-172

The courts have laid down no rigid guide lines to be applied in the assessment of a reasonable sum although it is clear that the contractor should be paid a fair commercial rate for the work done in all the relevant circumstances. ⁵⁸⁸ The basis for any such assessment of a reasonable sum can be a source of controversy, since the employer may wish to confine recovery to the contractor's actual or tender costs, ⁵⁸⁹ whereas the contractor may want the reasonable sum to reflect the value which his work ultimately represented to the employer. ⁵⁹⁰ Although in some instances a reasonable sum will be calculated on the basis of actual cost plus an uplift for profit and overheads, it will be a matter of importance in the particular case whether, for example, the contractor who has obtained his resources at an especially low cost will be obliged to share that benefit with the employer, or whether a more objective view of "fair commercial rate" should be adopted. The correct answer will depend upon the legal basis of the quantum meruit claim. ⁵⁹¹ If the claim is in unjust enrichment, then the focus should be on the enrichment received by the employer whereas if the claim is on the basis of an implied term, then the intention of the parties will be used but it is likely that market rates will be applied.

^{580.} See Goff and Jones, The Law of Unjust Enrichment, 8th edn (2011), Mannolini (1996) M.L.R. 111; Ball (1983) L.Q.R. 572.

^{581.} See above, Vol.I, Ch.29. In Costello v MacDonald [2011] EWCA Civ 930 it was held by the Court of Appeal that there was no basis for a restitutionary claim for payment based upon unjust enrichment by the claimant building contractor against the owners of land on which a property was built because there was in existence a building contract for the works between the claimant and a company owned by the defendants that for tax reasons had been used as the employer for the project.

^{582.} [1984] 1 All E.R. 504.

^{583.} See Turriff Construction v Regalia Knitting Mills (1971) 9 B.L.R. 20. See also the decision of the Court of Appeal in Furmans Electrical Contractors v Elecref Ltd [2009] EWCA Civ 170.

^{584.} Benedetti v Sawaris [2013] EWSC 50 at [9].

^{585.} Planchè v Colburn (1831) 8 Bing 14; Appelby v Myers (1867) L.R. 2 C.P. 651 at 659; Lodder v Slavey [1904] A.C. 442 at 453 PC.

^{586.} Keating on Construction Contracts, 9th edn (2012), para.9–039.

^{587.} Bank of Boston v European Grain [1989] A.C. 1056, 1098 HL; Photo Production v Securicor [1980] A.C. 827, 849.

^{588.} Greenmast Shipping v Jean Lion (The Saronikos) [1986] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 277; Laserbore Ltd v Morrison Biggs Wall (1993) C.I.L.L. 896.

^{589.} An approach discussed in Sanjay Lachhani v Destination Canada (UK) Ltd (1997) 13 Const. L.J. 279, 284.

^{590.} Discussed in Costain Civil Engineering v Zanen Dredging (1996) 85 B.L.R. 77.

^{591.} Benedetti v Sawaris [2013] EWSC 50 at [9].

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts

Section 6. - Sub-contracts

(a) - Sub-Contractors

Use of sub-contractors

37-173

In the majority of the more substantial construction projects, the main contractor will engage specialist sub-contractors to carry out particular parts of the overall works identified in the main contract. So, in the context of a large commercial development, the main contractor will typically engage a specialist mechanical and electrical ("M&E") sub-contractor to carry out relevant works and there will be other "works packages" which will similarly be let under the direction of the main contractor or the professional team. In addition, sub-contracting often includes the more basic "building" elements of the work, such as foundation work, bricklaying, carpentry and the like. There are a number of standard forms of sub-contract which are used extensively within different parts of the construction industry in conjunction with particular standard forms of main contract. Sub-contractors are often liable for losses up the contractual chain pursuant to indemnity clauses. In Greenwich Millennium Village Ltd v Essex Services Group, ⁵⁹² the Court of Appeal found that an indemnity clause in a contract between a sub-contractor and its labour only sub-subcontractor operated to indemnify the sub-contractor in respect of a loss partly caused by its own negligence in failing to spot defects in works. This was because it was held as a matter of commercial common sense that is how the wording of the clause should be construed, notwithstanding the absence of clear words indicating such an intention. A main contractor may also have a claim in negligence against its sub-contractor. In Co-Operative Group Ltd v Birse Developments Ltd, ⁵⁹³ it was held that a cause of action in the tort of negligence, in respect of the main contractor's liability to its employer or its assignees, arose at the latest when the main contractor constructed the development in accordance with the defective design of its sub-contractor.

Standard forms—civil engineering

37-174

In the civil engineering context, the CECA (originally FCEC) form of sub-contract (also known as the "blue form") was designed for use in conjunction with the ICE Conditions of Contract, up to the 7th edition, and has been widely used. ⁵⁹⁴ The form will continue to be used in conjunction with the ICC Form. In a number of decisions the courts have considered ways in which the CECA form allows the sub-contractor to have the benefit (in a broad sense) of matters which are commercially relevant to the subcontractor but occur between the employer and the main contractor. In Mooney v Boot ⁵⁹⁵ the plaintiff carried out certain drainage works under the blue form for the defendant main contractor. The main contractor was subsequently paid a lump sum settlement by the employer in respect of claims which included a claim for delay and disruption to drainage works. The Court of Appeal decided that the words "such contractual benefits ... as may be claimable" in cl.10(2) ⁵⁹⁶ of the sub-contract meant that the sub-contractors could attach to such contractual benefits as may be claimed by the main contractor in good faith, and were not confined to such benefits as become due under the main contract, so that they included any unapportioned settlement windfall. In Redland Aggregates v Shepherd Hill Engineering ⁵⁹⁷ the Court of Appeal considered the interrelation between the arbitration clause under the FCEC sub-contract (cl.18) and the ICE main contract (cl.66). The practical effect of that decision is that all three parties may join in a single arbitration, but where the main contractor is unwilling or unable to proceed with a joint arbitration in the manner contemplated by cl.18(2) FCEC, then the main contractor will not be able to prevent the sub-contractor from proceeding with its own arbitration under cl.18(1).

Standard forms—building

37-175

In the context of building contracts, there are a number of standard forms of sub-contract available. The particular form selected will also depend upon whether the sub-contractor is domestic and selected by the contractor, or nominated on behalf of the employer. As with engineering subcontracts, standard forms of building contract raise issues as to the extent to which the sub-contractor can rely on events under the main contract. In Birse Construction v Co-operative Wholesale Society ⁵⁹⁸ the Court of Appeal considered the relationship between the JCT Standard Form 1963 (Private with Quantities) main contract and a sub-contract substantially in the form of the NFBTE/FASS/BEC Form of Sub-Contract 1963 in the context of “name borrowing”. It was held that it was implicit in the JCT scheme of main contract and subcontract that where, in an arbitration under the main contract, the arbitrator made an award of a sum which should have been certified as due under the subcontract, that sum was to be treated under the sub-contract as duly certified, so that the award became binding in the arbitration under the sub-contract.

No right to direct payment

37-176

In the absence of any provisions in the main contract to the contrary, the rules in relation to privity of contract will mean that the contractual relationship between the employer and the main contractor and between the main contractor and the sub-contractor will be quite distinct and separate. ⁵⁹⁹ It follows that, in the absence of a valid assignment from the contractor, the sub-contractor will not be able to sue the employer for goods supplied or work done under his sub-contract with the main contractor. Accordingly, in Hampton v Glamorgan CC ⁶⁰⁰ a builder contracted with a council to build a school in accordance with the specification and other documents contained in the contract. Part of the contract works comprised the provision of low pressure heating apparatus, and a specialist sub-contractor was asked to provide a scheme for this part of the works. During the course of the works, the builder paid the sub-contractor on account, but was eventually unable to pay the balance so that sub-contractor sued the council. It was held that on a true construction of the building contract there was no privity between the sub-contractor and the council, so the sub-contractor's claim failed. ⁶⁰¹ If the employer (following the demise or failure of the main contractor) gives an verbal assurance to the subcontractor that he will be paid if he completes his work, then it is possible that such action could be construed as an enforceable promise to pay, ⁶⁰² as opposed to a guarantee which may be unenforceable. ⁶⁰³ Equally, a direct instruction by the employer to the sub-contractor may be construed as a promise to pay the subcontractor. ⁶⁰⁴ In each case, it is a question of construction of the contract as to what rights and obligations have been conferred, or imposed, on the parties. ⁶⁰⁵

Direct liability for default

37-177

The employer will generally have no right of recourse against the sub-contractor for defects in that sub-contractor's work. A direct right of recourse may be created by use of a collateral warranty. These devices are widespread in the construction industry and their use is by no means limited to sub-contractors. Their subject matter may extend to compliance with design and programme requirements, as well as quality (see further section (b) below). The possibility of direct recourse is further subject to the effect of the Contracts (Rights of Third Parties) Act 1999. ⁶⁰⁶

- 592. [2014] EWCA Civ 960.
- 593. [2014] EWHC 530 (TCC), [2014] B.L.R. 359, 153 Con. L.R. 103 at [47].
- 594. The edition of July 1998 was intended for use with the sixth edition of the ICE Conditions but has been reprinted with amendments (April 2001) for use with the seventh edition. A similar form (also reprinted April 2001) is intended for sub-contracts under the ICE Design and Construct Conditions.
- 595. (1996) 80 B.L.R. 66 CA.
- 596. “On receiving any such contractual benefits from the Employer (including any extension of time) the Contractor shall in turn pass on to the Sub-Contractor such proportion if any thereof as may in all the circumstances be fair and reasonable”.
- 597. [1999] B.L.R. 252 CA; affirmed by the House of Lords, [2000] 1 W.L.R. 1621, [2000] B.L.R. 385.
- 598. (1997) 84 B.L.R. 58 CA.
- 599. Scobie & McIntosh Ltd v Clayton Bowmore Ltd (1990) 49 B.L.R. 119, 129–130.
- 600. [1917] A.C. 13 HL.
- 601. [1917] A.C. 13, 21.
- 602. Smith v Rudhall (1862) 3 F. & F. 143; Conrad v Kaplan (1914) 18 D.L.R. 37.
- 603. Poucher v Treahey (1875) 37 U.C.R. 367.
- 604. Dixon v Hatfield (1825) 2 Bing. 439.
- 605. Actionstrength Ltd v International Glass Engineering IN.GL.EN SpA [2003] UKHL 17, [2003] 2 A.C. 541; and Brican Fabrications Ltd v Merchant City Developments Ltd [2003] B.L.R. 512 Court of Session.
- 606. The case of Books v Veitchi [1983] A.C. 580 also remains as an unlikely but possible route to liability, in the tort of negligence, but on its own facts. In that case, the House of Lords refused to strike out a claim for economic loss brought by an employer against a nominated sub-contractor, in respect of defects in the flooring resulting from negligence of the sub-contractor. While the dissenting judgment of Lord Brandon received specific approval in D & F Estates v Church Commissioners [1989] A.C. 177, the case has not been disapproved and is now to be regarded, it appears, as based on the existence of a special relationship, equivalent to contract: see Murphy v Brentwood DC [1991] 1 A.C. 398, 466, 481. See above, Vol.I, para.1-207.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts

Section 6. - Sub-contracts

(b) - Nomination

Meaning

37-178

This refers to a practice which has evolved over many years, initially in the building industry, whereby a sub-contractor is selected or “nominated” by or on behalf of the employer to carry out designated work, usually of specialist nature. The objective is to ensure that particular items of work are executed by specialists to known standards. Nomination has traditionally been applied to elements such as lifts and mechanical services within buildings. Appropriate contractual devices have evolved whereby the work in question, usually designated as a Prime Cost or PC sum in the bill of quantities, is required to be executed by a sub-contractor to be selected and notified to the main contractor. The sub-contract price will be negotiated by or on behalf of the employer. The main contractor will be presented with a “nomination” instruction in which all the major terms of the sub-contract are specified. For the protection of the main contractor, the standard forms have traditionally provided for certain terms to be included in the nominated sub-contract. The prospective sub-contractor must also undertake to carry out the work within a period conformable with the requirements of the main contract. Upon acceptance of a nomination by the main contractor, the employer drops out of the picture, leaving the prospective sub-contract parties free to negotiate any outstanding terms. The main contractor subsequently receives payment due in accordance with the nomination, in place of the PC sum. The main contractor is usually entitled additionally to a stipulated level of profit and/or discount on the sums paid. Nomination under JCT forms of contract progressively lost its advantages as a result of limitations on the liability of the main contractor and, as a result, has been removed from the latest generation (2005) of JCT forms. It remains in other standard forms which have not so qualified the main contractor's liability; and it may be found that the principles developed in the cases apply to other ad hoc contracts where the employer retains the right to select or approve sub-contractors, even though not called nomination.

Effect on privity rule

37-179

It is an important feature of nomination that there is no transgression of the privity rule. Neither the employer nor the architect assumes any responsibility towards the nominated sub-contractor, as to payment or otherwise, nor does the nominated sub-contractor undertake, via the nomination system, any obligation towards the employer (but see below). This is so even though, as is commonly the position, the prospective nominated sub-contractor has performed and is intended to perform design work. Where such design work is carried out prior to and as part of the tendering process for the Prime Cost work, the product of the successful design will be incorporated into the nomination, and will take effect as an instruction of the architect. Where subsequent design work, including the provision of necessary construction details, is carried out by the nominated sub-contractor after the sub-contract has been entered into, the status of the design information so produced is uncertain. Where the main contract includes design responsibility, such information may be regarded as being provided pursuant to such responsibility. Where this is not the case, the status of design information remains uncertain. The question requires to be addressed in order to determine responsibility for such information being provided late and causing delay. The standard forms contain a number of express provisions relevant to these issues.

Direct warranties

37-180

These difficulties have been regulated, to some extent, by the development of a variety of direct or “collateral” warranties for use between the employer and the nominated sub-contractor. These may consist simply of undertakings by the sub-contractor in relation to design services; or there may be parallel obligations undertaken by the employer to operate the direct payment provisions under the main contract in favour of the nominated sub-contractor, if not paid. The origin of warranties may be traced to the case of Shanklin Pier v Detel Products.⁶⁰⁷ During the 1970s and 1980s⁶⁰⁸ the use of warranties was somewhat eclipsed by the apparent availability of remedies in tort. The law having now been clarified,⁶⁰⁹ warranties remain the prime source of establishing direct liability between parties otherwise displaced in the contractual chain, typically employer and sub-contractor.⁶¹⁰ As regards design, such warranties typically undertake a direct obligation to the employer to carry out such design services as are required. The warranty will usually cover past and future design work, and may include an obligation timeously to provide such details as may be required by the main contractor. In most cases the warranty is expressed, not in absolute terms, but as an undertaking to exercise (and to have exercised) reasonable skill and care, commensurate with the ordinary duty undertaken by the architect. Such a warranty, therefore, fills a lacuna in the network of obligations undertaken in relation to design and construction, but creates a theoretical gap in respect of non-negligent design error or delay.

Advantage of nomination

37-181

The nomination system can be seen as providing for the employer both the advantage of specialist and selected materials and components, while preserving the overall responsibility of the main contractor. Additionally, the employer has the advantage of specialised design services with a direct right of action against the designer being created by warranty. Under the JCT (and former RIBA) Standard Forms of Building Contract (prior to the 2005 suite), separate provision was made for nominated sub-contractors and nominated suppliers.⁶¹¹ The 1998 edition of the forms continued this distinction, nominated sub-contractors being the subject of a lengthy and detailed code.⁶¹² In traditional forms of building contract it has not been uncommon to find the value of nominated work amounting to one third or more of the total building cost. Nominated sub-contracting has been used in civil engineering, although to a lesser extent. The 5th edition of the ICE Conditions included, for the first time, fully detailed provisions governing nomination,⁶¹³ which is continued with some modification into the 6th and 7th editions and the ICC Form.⁶¹⁴ As a result of various decisions of the court and of the drafting bodies, nomination has become less utilised in favour of “listed” sub-contractors (see below).⁶¹⁵ The JCT SBC 2005 and 2011 forms do not provide for nominated sub-contractors at all; but now provides instead for the “three person” procedure.⁶¹⁶

Re-nomination

37-182

A number of questions concerning liability for performance of a nominated sub-contractor or supplier remained uncertain under the Standard Forms until resolved by decisions of the courts. Notably, the House of Lords decided in *NW Metropolitan Hospital Board v Bickerton*⁶¹⁷ that where a nominated sub-contractor repudiated by failing to complete or failing to perform, the architect was obliged to re-nominate so that the employer would bear the increased cost of carrying out the work. The decision was given in relation to the JCT 1963 edition but subsequently given contractual effect both in later editions of the JCT Form⁶¹⁸ and in the ICE Conditions.⁶¹⁹ It was further held by the Court of Appeal in *Fairclough v Rhuddlan BC*⁶²⁰ that, where a nominated sub-contractor repudiated, the main contractor was not responsible for defects in the nominated work discovered after repudiation. The re-nomination had, therefore, to include for the remedial work, necessarily at the employer's cost.

Delay

37-183

As part of the bargain by which the employer acquired the right to nominate, successive editions of the Standard Form of Building Contract have exonerated the main contractor from responsibility for delay caused by a nominated sub-contractor. ⁶²¹ The effect of this was not merely to relieve the main contractor but, in effect, to leave the sub-contractor without liability for its own delay, save for any loss suffered by the main contractor through such delay. The employer's loss may be covered by a direct warranty (see above) but recovery will be subject to proof by the employer of fault, rather than the onus falling on the sub-contractor to prove entitlement to extension of time. In practice, the effect of exonerating the main contractor from liability for delay by a nominated sub-contractor has usually meant that such loss could not be recovered. However, where delay resulted from the need to re-nominate a replacement sub-contractor, it was held by the House of Lords in Percy Bilton v GLC, ⁶²² that such delay was not the responsibility of the employer, not being caused by his fault nor covered by any of the express provisions of the contract. Furthermore, once a nominated sub-contractor has achieved apparent completion, the subsequent discovery of latent defects does not constitute delay on the part of a nominated sub-contractor. ⁶²³ These decisions apply only to the JCT Form of Contract prior to the 2005 suite. Other major Standard Forms do not provide a direct right of extension in respect of delay by a nominated sub-contractor. In the absence of such a provision, the general rule is that the main contractor remains liable and must pass on any such liability to the sub-contractor.

Listed sub-contractors

37-184

The difficulties surrounding nomination, as outlined above, led to employers seeking alternative means of selection, not involving any reduction in the liability of the main contractor. The 2005 JCT suite of contracts has omitted the previous formal procedures associated with nominated sub-contractors as well as provisions for "listed" or "specified" sub-contractors which were also found in earlier form of the contract. The 2005 forms provide, in their place, a "three person procedure". Thus, under cl.3.8 of JCT SCB 2005 the contract bills may list not fewer than three persons from whom the contractor may select at his sole discretion a sub-contractor to carry out the work described in the bills. ⁶²⁴

^{607.} [1951] 2 K.B. 854.

^{608.} See Dutton v Bognor Regis UDC [1972] 1 Q.B. 373; and D & F Estates v Church Commissioners [1989] A.C. 177.

^{609.} Murphy v Brentwood DC [1991] 1 A.C. 398.

^{610.} The possible use of the Contracts (Rights of Third Parties) Act 1999 to fill gaps in the contractual chain has been eschewed generally by the construction industry in favour of continued use of warranties.

^{611.} See 1939 edn cl.22, 23 and 1963 edn cl.27, 28.

^{612.} JCT 98 cl.35 and see also cl.36.

^{613.} See cl.58, 59 A, B, C.

- 614. See cl.58, 59.
- 615. The continuing utility of nomination has, however, been recognised by the inclusion of such provisions in more modern forms such as GC/Works/1 (1998) and FIDIC (1998), generally without relieving the main contractor of overall responsibility, as provided by earlier forms.
- 616. See below, para.37-184.
- 617. [1970] 1 W.L.R. 607.
- 618. JCT 98 cl.35.
- 619. ICE 5th edn cl.59B.
- 620. (1985) 30 B.L.R. 26.
- 621. See above, para.37–178. See JCT 1963 edn cl.23(g) and JCT 98 cl.25.4.7.
- 622. [1982] 1 W.L.R. 794.
- 623. Jarvis v Westminster Corp [1970] 1 W.L.R. 637.
- 624. See generally Keating on Construction Contracts, 9th edn (2012) at paras 20–168 to 20–170.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts
Section 7. - The Contract Administrator
(a) - Engineers, Architects and Quantity Surveyors

Introduction

37-185

This section deals with professionals who are appointed under the terms of a construction contract, not as a party to the contract, but to perform designated functions. Engineers, architects, surveyors and other professionals are appointed under standard forms, and other bespoke contracts, to exercise the powers and duties assigned to a third party, variously designated as the supervising officer, project manager, contract administrator, employer's agent or, more traditionally, the engineer or architect. The appointment may be of an individual or, more usually, a professional partnership. There may also be a corporate or ex-officio appointment, e.g. a Borough surveyor. In the case of a partnership or company, the contract may require identification of the individual who is to act. Otherwise, the question of how a partnership or corporation is to form a professional opinion appears not to have been the subject of any judicial consideration. A common abuse of the standard forms is for the corporate employer to be appointed also as the contract administrator, including the role of giving a professional opinion on matters of difference. Such procedure, while open to criticism, has been upheld by the courts on the basis of a concession, accepted by the court, that "in all its judgments, decisions and certificates the employer was obliged to act honestly, fairly and reasonably".⁶²⁵ Later authority, however, has cast doubt on whether such an appointment can be effective.⁶²⁶ The ICE Conditions of Contract for Minor Works required the employer to appoint "a named individual to act as Engineer" and the same wording is adopted in the ICC Form.⁶²⁷ The roles of the most prominent professionals likely to be encountered under standard forms of contract are described below.

Architect

37-186

An architect, in order to practise under the title, must be registered by the Architect's Registration Council pursuant to s.20 of the Architects Act 1997.⁶²⁸ In addition to having an ongoing responsibility for the design⁶²⁹ and often for obtaining all necessary planning and other permissions for the works,⁶³⁰ the architect, under many standard forms of building contract, will be responsible for the supervision and monitoring of the works, and this will often include the issuing of instructions, variations and certificates. In relation to the grant of certificates, the assessments which the architect will be required to make call for the formation of an opinion⁶³¹ which will often be subjective and open to interpretation. However, the architect will owe a duty to his client, the building owner, to use reasonable care in issuing his certificates.⁶³²

Engineer

37-187

This term is used generically in that different types of construction contract will contemplate people with qualifications from different specialist bodies (e.g. the Institution of Mechanical Engineers or the Institution of Civil Engineers). Typically, the engineer will carry out a similar range of functions under engineering contracts as is performed by the architect in the context of building contracts.

Quantity surveyor

37-188

A quantity surveyor may have different functions at different stages in a construction contract, but will generally be concerned with the quantity (measure) and value of work. Before commencement of the works, the quantity surveyor will typically be involved in drawing up the bills of quantities (for the employer) or pricing the bills of quantities (for the contractor). During the contract works, a quantity surveyor will be engaged in the preparation and submission of interim applications (for the contractor), or in measuring and valuing work (either as a professional named in the contract,⁶³³ or informally for the employer).⁶³⁴

Project manager

37-189

A project manager will often be used by the employer in complex construction projects to organise and coordinate the activities of the contractor and the professional team (i.e. architect, quantity surveyor, specialist engineers, etc.). However, the scope of the project management function will be shaped by the particular character of the project involved, so that any general definition of the role is unlikely to assist on the question what, on a true construction of the terms of a particular contract, are the rights and obligations of the parties.⁶³⁵ It has been held that a project manager had a duty to his client to ensure that contractor's liability insurance was in place.⁶³⁶

^{625.} Balfour Beatty v DLR (1996) 78 B.L.R. 42. The basis of the case was the decision in Northern Regional Health Authority v Crouch [1984] Q.B. 644, now reversed by Beaufort Developments Ltd v Gilbert-Ash NI Ltd [1999] 1 A.C. 266 HL.

^{626.} Scheldebouw BV v St James Homes (Grosvenor Dock) Ltd [2006] EWHC 89 (TCC), [2006] B.L.R. 113.

^{627.} ICE Conditions cl.2.1 The ICC Form cl.2(2)(a) requires, where the engineer is not an individual, that a chartered engineer be named to act on behalf of the engineer.

^{628.} See ss.118–125 of the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 in relation to the regulation of architects. For a discussion of the architect and his role, see: Munckenbeck and Marshall v Kensington Hotel (1999) 15 Const. L.J. 231.

^{629.} Brickfield Properties Ltd v Newton [1971] 1 W.L.R. 862 CA; University of Glasgow v William Whitfield (1988) 42 B.L.R. 66; New Islington and Hackney Housing Association Ltd v Pollard Thomas and Edwards Ltd [2001] B.L.R. 74.

^{630.} In some cases an architect may be under a duty to take some steps to ascertain the financial viability of tenderers, as in Partridge v Morris (1995) C.I.L.L. 1095.

^{631.} See JCT SBC 2011 cl.4.9.

^{632.} Arenson v Arenson [1977] A.C. 405 HL; Michael Salliss & Co v Calil and William F Newman (1987) 13 Con. L.R. 68; see also Pacific Associates v Baxter (1988) 44 B.L.R. 33, [1990] 1 Q.B. 993 CA and Galliford Try Infrastructure Ltd v Matt McDonald Ltd [2008] EWHC 1570 (TCC).

- 633. As provided for by art.4 of the Articles of Agreement used in conjunction with JCT.
- 634. In Dhamija v Sunningdale Joineries Ltd [2010] EWHC 2396 (TCC), [2011] P.N.L.R. 9, it was held that ordinarily there would be no implied term of a quantity surveyor's retainer to the effect that there was a positive obligation to ensure that only properly executed work was valued or to inspect work being valued to consider whether the same were properly executed or not; but there would be an implied obligation, where the quantity surveyor was aware of the related terms of the building contract, to take reasonable care to value only properly executed work (per Coulson J. at [18]–[26]).
- 635. Pozzolanic Lytag Ltd v Bryan Hobson Associates [1999] B.L.R. 267; and Costain Ltd v Bechtel Ltd [2005] EWHC 1018 (TCC).
- 636. Pozzolanic Lytag Ltd v Bryan Hobson Associates [1999] B.L.R. 267.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts
Section 7. - The Contract Administrator
(b) - Role Under Contracts

Dual role

37-190

The role of professionals who may be identified in construction contracts will depend upon a true construction of the terms contained in the particular contract. ⁶³⁷ Generally, the role will be divided between actions taken as the employer's agent, where the contract administrator must act in the employer's best interest, and those involving a professional opinion. In the latter case, the role of the architect has been described in the following terms:

“The building owner and the contractor make their contract on the understanding that in all such matters the Architect will act in a fair and unbiased manner and it must therefore be implicit in the owner's contract with the Architect that he shall not only exercise due care and skill but also reach such decisions fairly, holding the balance between his client and the contractor.” ⁶³⁸

Such duty is sometimes said to be “independent”, but the term is unnecessary and potentially misleading given that the contract administrator is invariably employed by, and can therefore be dismissed by, the employer. ⁶³⁹ The proper analysis, it is submitted, is that the employer undertakes that a person will be appointed (or re-appointed as necessary) who is capable of performing the actions required by the contract. However, the employer does not promise that the actions will be performed. ⁶⁴⁰

Action as agent

37-191

When giving instructions for a variation, the contract administrator acts as the employer's agent, and requires appropriate authority. Likewise, certain instructions involving consequences akin to variation of the works involve acting as agent, e.g. an instruction given under cl.13 of the ICC Form (see above, s.3(b)). An instruction nominating a sub-contractor will be given as the employer's agent. In matters of approval of the work for compliance with the contract requirements, the contract administrator also acts as the employer's agent, being under a duty to ensure that the employer does not suffer loss through certification of defective work or materials. In cases where approval, or “satisfaction” are a matter of professional judgment, the contract administrator's role is likely to be that of reaching a decision “fairly, holding the balance between his client and the contractor” (see above).

Authority

37-192

Where the contract terms empower the contract administrator to take particular actions, his unqualified appointment by the employer necessarily involves authority, by holding out, to exercise all such power. In addition, the contract administrator will have an implied authority to do other things reasonably necessary and ancillary to those matters for which express authority is given. ⁶⁴¹ It follows that any limitation of authority to exercise the powers set out in the contract must be notified to the contractor, if the employer is to avoid being bound. In practice, there may be a limitation on the authority of the Contract Administrator to perform functions which are necessary to the operation of the contract, such as granting extensions of time. For this reason, many standard forms expressly require any limitation upon the authority of the Contract Administrator to be stated. ⁶⁴²

Acting impartially

37-193

Actions of the contract administrator which are to be taken having regard to the interests of both parties, involving the giving of a professional opinion, are sometimes termed “impartial” decisions. Actions falling within this category include valuing the works for the purpose of issuing interim and final payment certificates, granting extensions of time, accepting the contractor’s programme, ⁶⁴³ giving a certificate of default as part of the termination procedure ⁶⁴⁴ and many other specific instances. Even though acting impartially, the contract administrator acts pursuant to his duty to the employer, under the contract of employment. The employer, in turn, has an obligation under the construction contract to appoint a contract administrator who can carry out the duties required under the contract (see above). ⁶⁴⁵

Challenging the contract administrator

37-194

Under a traditional standard form construction contract, the decision of the Contract Administrator is binding, subject to challenge by arbitration, which, in many cases could not be brought until completion of the works. ⁶⁴⁶ The position is also now radically altered by the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 which provides, in respect of construction contracts within the Act, for a right of adjudication at any time. ⁶⁴⁷ The effect is that either party now ⁶⁴⁸ may immediately challenge any decision of the contract administrator. The adjudicator’s decision is to be binding until the dispute is finally terminated by legal proceedings or arbitration. ⁶⁴⁹ Under the ICE Conditions provision was made, after the decision of the contract administrator, for a “second stage” decision on matters of dispute or difference, which were required to be referred to the engineer for his decision before a further challenge by arbitration ⁶⁵⁰; and under the FIDIC Conditions (1998 edition), disputes are to be referred, after an initial decision, to a Dispute Adjudication Board. ⁶⁵¹ Where the contract in question is subject to the Act, the existence of a dispute gives rise to an immediate right to refer the matter for adjudication, followed by arbitration or litigation, thus rendering the engineer’s decision otiose. The ICE Conditions were initially amended in an attempt to avoid any “dispute” arising until after the matter had been referred to the engineer, so as to postpone the right to refer a dispute for adjudication. This was palpably contrary to s.108(2)(a) of the Act, by which the contract must enable the parties to give notice “at any time of his intention to refer a dispute to adjudication”. The amendment was subsequently withdrawn and the ICE Conditions and now the ICC Form thus contain no provision for a further decision of the engineer, and provide for adjudication at any time.

37-195

Decisions of the contract administrator under the main contract are frequently referred to in forms of sub-contract, where the sub-contractor may be bound to comply with instructions given under the main contract. Other provisions may link the rights of the sub-contractor to payment, extensions of time and other matters to decisions given by the contract administrator under the main contract. The question arises whether the sub-contractor has the right to challenge such decisions under the main contract and if so in what manner. ⁶⁵² In the light of Beaufort Developments v Gilbert-Ash NI ⁶⁵³ it is thought that there would be no difficulty in challenging such decisions under a sub-contract, in the absence of clear words giving the decisions binding effect. Any such challenge would also be subject to the right of adjudication at any time. Difficulties may nevertheless arise where the decision is also challenged under the head contract, unless the proceedings can be joined.

Project manager and employer's agent

37-196

These terms are met in particular types of contract, e.g. the new Engineering and Construction Contract. The particular role created is entirely dependent upon the conditions of contract. Usually, such appointment indicates a person or body appointed to act solely on behalf of the employer. In the case of the project manager, there may be additional management functions allowing greater control and direction of the works than normally exercised by a contract administrator.

-
- 637. For a consideration of the duties of members of a large professional team in a particular context, see Chesham Properties Ltd v Bucknall Austin Project Management Services Ltd (1996) 53 Con. L.R. 1.
 - 638. Sutcliffe v Thackrah [1974] A.C. 727, 737.
 - 639. See the description of the architect in Beaufort Developments Ltd v Gilbert Ash Ltd [1999] 1 A.C. 266, 276, per Lord Hoffmann (“... He is a professional man but can hardly be called independent”). See also: John Holland Construction and Engineering Ltd v Majorca Products (Supreme Court of Victoria, July 26, 1996) reported in (2000) 16 Const. L.J. 114.
 - 640. See Perini Corp v Commonwealth of Australia (1969) 12 B.L.R. 82 Sup Ct NSW.
 - 641. See the decision of the Court of Appeal in Naylor & Naylor v JL Builders & Son [2009] EWCA Civ 1621 where it was held that the contractual functions of an agent were not to extend beyond what he was expressly instructed to do or what was reasonably incidental thereto.
 - 642. See FIDIC (1998 edn) cl.3.1 and ICC Form cl.2(1)(b).
 - 643. ICC Form cl.14(2).
 - 644. ICC Form cl.65(1), JCT 2011 cl.8.4.
 - 645. For an analysis of the duties of a “Construction Manager”, where those duties involve the issue of certificates, see the judgment of Jackson J. in Scheldebouw BV v St James Homes (Grosvenor Dock) Ltd [2006] EWHC 89 (TCC), [2006] B.L.R. 113.
 - 646. Important exceptions are contained in cl.41 of JCT 98 and JCT SBC 2005 art.8 which now provides expressly for the right to immediate dispute resolution during the works. Under ICC Form there is no limit on when arbitration may be pursued.
 - 647. s.108.
 - 648. Provided the contract was entered into on or after May 1, 1998.
 - 649. s.108(3). For discussion of the status of the adjudicator's decision, see Macob Civil Engineering Ltd v Morrison Construction Ltd [1999] 3 B.L.R. 93; and Outwing Construction Ltd v H Randell and Son Ltd [1999] B.L.R. 156.
 - 650. ICE 7th edn cl.66.
 - 651. FIDIC (1998 edn) cl.20.2.

- 652. See Modern Engineering v Miskin [1981] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 135; (1980) 15 B.L.R. 82 where the point was decided by an arbitrator, who was then removed for misconduct.
- 653. [1999] 1 A.C. 266.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts

Section 7. - The Contract Administrator

(c) - Liability of Contract Administrator

Basis of liability

37-197

The contract administrator owes duties under his contract of appointment to the employer. He will be liable for the negligent exercise of those duties, whether involving acts as the employer's agent or acts performed impartially. ⁶⁵⁴ Earlier authority suggested that the contract administrator might have immunity from suit on the basis that acting impartially involved a "judicial" element. ⁶⁵⁵ It is clear that no such immunity attaches to the ordinary process of certifying but the possibility remains of actions under particular contracts being regarded as of a "judicial" nature. The contract administrator will be additionally liable for breach of authority for actions done without appropriate authority where the employer is bound by virtue of the terms of the main contract.

Standard of duty

37-198

The contract administrator owes a duty in contract, implied if not express, to act with reasonable skill and care. ⁶⁵⁶ The duty of a professional man in a construction context (albeit involving a claim in tort) was considered in Eckersley v Binnie & Partners ⁶⁵⁷ where Bingham L.J. (dealing with the liability of engineers who had failed to provide against the possibility of methane migration into a water transfer pipe and dissenting in the result from the majority of the Court of Appeal) said that a professional man:

"... must bring to any professional task he undertakes no less expertise, skill and care than other ordinary competent members would bring but need bring no more. The standard is that of the reasonable average. The law does not require of a professional man that he be a paragon combining the qualities of polymath and prophet."

In Greaves v Baynham Meikle & Partners ⁶⁵⁸ an engineer was held liable on the basis that work under his design was not fit for purpose, despite there being no findings of negligence. The particular circumstances of the case were that the engineer was employed by a design and build contractor who was himself assumed to be liable on a fitness for purpose basis. The decision has not been followed in similar circumstances, ⁶⁵⁹ and may be regarded as limited to its own facts. Most design and build contracts now limit the contractor's design responsibility to that which would be assumed by a separately engaged design professional. ⁶⁶⁰ In the absence of such limitation, however, there is likely to be an implied term of fitness for purpose which could render the designer similarly liable. ⁶⁶¹ It is also to be noted that where design work is carried out by the contractor under the FIDIC Conditions the works are expressly required to be "fit for the purposes for which the works are intended". ⁶⁶²

Liability in particular circumstances

37-199

In circumstances where construction projects have become far more complex in recent years, there are many professionals in addition to the traditional architect/engineer to take responsibility for particular features of a project. Again, the liability of such professionals will depend upon their terms of engagement and the responsibilities assumed by them in fact. In Pozzolanic Lytag Ltd v Bryan Hobson Associates ⁶⁶³ it was held that a project manager had a duty to his client to ensure that all adequate insurance arrangements for the liability of a building contractor were in place, as required by the contract for the proposed project. In the same way, decisions in relation to the liability of architects have indicated the increasing range of functions performed by architects, such as decisions to proceed with a given development ⁶⁶⁴ and advice given on the acceptability of tenderers. ⁶⁶⁵ However, the scope of an architect's obligations will always depend upon his brief and all the circumstances of the project, so that in Tesco Stores Ltd v The Norman Hitchcox Partnership Ltd ⁶⁶⁶ the court decided that the architect did not owe any duty towards the employer to inspect the supermarket shell works during or at the end of their construction merely as a consequence of the architect's retainer to design those works.

Liability to third parties

37-200

Engineers, architects and surveyors may incur liability to third parties under the general law of tort ⁶⁶⁷ and under the special circumstances envisaged by the law relating to negligent misstatement. ⁶⁶⁸ The important distinction between these heads of liability is that the former is generally limited to a liability in respect of physical damage, including personal injury, ⁶⁶⁹ while the latter may include purely economic loss, as now understood. ⁶⁷⁰ Of particular interest is the possible liability of the contract administrator to the building contractor. ⁶⁷¹ In Pacific Associates v Baxter, ⁶⁷² the plaintiff contractor sought to recover damages against the defendant engineer, who had rejected the contractor's claim under the contract. In subsequent arbitration proceedings, the claim succeeded but was settled for a small proportion of the contractor's loss. The contractor sought to recover the balance from the engineer on the basis of negligent administration of contract. The claim was struck out as disclosing no reasonable cause of action, on the basis that the defendant had entered into a contractual relationship with the employer, against whom the contractor had separate rights to bring arbitration proceedings. There had been no voluntary assumption of responsibility to the plaintiff and no duty upon the engineer had been established. The main contract, additionally, contained a disclaimer by which the defendant declined to accept any responsibility for the plaintiff, but the conclusions of the Court of Appeal may be seen as standing independent of such disclaimer. ⁶⁷³

^{654.} Sutcliffe v Thackrah [1974] A.C. 727.

^{655.} See Chambers v Goldthorpe [1901] 1 K.B. 624, overruled by Sutcliffe v Thackrah [1974] A.C. 727. But an express contractual term requiring a "first class" service has been held to be more onerous than a duty to exercise reasonable skill and care: Conoco Phillips Petroleum Co Ltd v Snamprogetti Ltd [2003] All E.R. (D) 134.

^{656.} Bolam v Friern Hospital Management Committee [1957] 1 W.L.R. 582; and see Holland Hannen & Cubitts v WHTSO (1985) 35 B.L.R. 1.

^{657.} (1988) 18 Con. L.R. 1.

^{658.} [1975] 1 W.L.R. 1095.

^{659.} George Hawkins v Chrysler (1986) 38 B.L.R. 36.

^{660.} ICE Design and Construction Conditions cl.8(2).

- 661. IBA v EMI & BICC (1980) 14 B.L.R. 1 and 11 B.L.R. 29 CA; Viking Grain v T H White (1985) 3 Con. L.R. 53.
- 662. FIDIC Plant and Design-Build Conditions (Yellow Book), cl.4.1; FIDIC Construction Conditions (Red Book) cl.4.1(c).
- 663. [1999] B.L.R. 267.
- 664. Gable House Estates Ltd v The Halpern Partnership and Bovis Construction Ltd (1995) 48 Con. L.R. 1.
- 665. Partridge v Morris (1995) C.I.L.L. 1095.
- 666. (1997) 56 Con. L.R. 42.
- 667. D & F Estates v Church Commissioners [1989] A.C. 117; DoE v Thomas Bates [1991] 1 A.C. 499; and Murphy v Brentwood DC [1991] 1 A.C. 398.
- 668. Hedley Byrne v Heller [1964] A.C. 465.
- 669. See Clay v Crump [1964] 1 Q.B. 533; and Spartan Steel v Martin [1973] Q.B. 27.
- 670. Sutherland Shire Council v Heyman (1985) 60 A.L.R. 1 High Ct Australia.
- 671. See Old School v Gleeson (1976) 4 B.L.R. 103.
- 672. [1990] 1 Q.B. 993.
- 673. See also South Nation River v Auto Concrete Curb (1993) 11 Con. L.J. 155 Sup Ct Canada but see John Mowlem v Eagle Star Insurance (No.1) (1992) 62 B.L.R. 126. Also, in Leon Engineering Construction v Ka Duk Investments (1989) 47 B.L.R. 139, the Supreme Court of Canada held that it was arguable that engineers would be liable for negligent misstatement in respect of errors in tender documents.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts
Section 7. - The Contract Administrator
(d) - Contract with Employer

Standard terms

37-201

Contracts for professional services require no formality. The professional bodies, however, issue standard forms of engagement which make detailed provisions as to duties, work stages and payment. Provision may be made for a "scale fee", which is dependent upon the valuation of the works at various stages. Architects and engineers, at least, are now frequently required to submit lump sum design "tenders", with the resulting fee being paid in stages to be agreed. Standard conditions of engagement invariably provide for an express duty of reasonable skill and care together with certain exclusions or limitations such as:

"The client shall hold the contractor and not the Architect responsible for the contractor's management and operational methods and for the proper carrying out and completion of the works and for health and safety provisions on site." ⁶⁷⁴

Delegation

37-202

A professional may not delegate design duties without express authority. In Moresk Cleaners v Hicks ⁶⁷⁵ an architect delegated the design of reinforced concrete work to a sub-contractor. It was held that the architect had the option of arranging for the client to employ the specialist designer or of employing the specialist himself, while retaining responsibility for the design. An architect may, however, properly delegate a specialist design process details of which would not be revealed by the supplier. Thus in Merton LBC v Lowe ⁶⁷⁶ an architect was held to be entitled to delegate the design of a specialist ceiling finish. Waller L.J. stated:

"Pyroc were nominated sub-contractors employed for a specialist task of making a ceiling with their own proprietary material. It was the defendant's duty to use reasonable care as Architects. In view of successful work done elsewhere, they decided that to employ Pyroc was reasonable. No witness called suggested that it was not at the beginning."

The architects were, however, held liable under their general design responsibility for failing to take adequate steps to remedy defects which subsequently became apparent.

Continuing duty

37-203

A continuing duty to review a design was upheld by the Court of Appeal in Brickfield Properties v Newton ⁶⁷⁷ where Sachs L.J. said:

“The Architect is under a continuing duty to check that his design will work in practice and to correct any errors which may emerge. It savours the ridiculous for the Architect to be able to say ‘true my design was faulty, but of course I saw to it that the contractors followed it faithfully.’”

Although there is authority that duties last until completion of the works, ⁶⁷⁸ it is probably right that duties endure beyond completion. The extent of a continuing post-completion design duty gives rise to serious potential difficulties. In Eckersley v Binnie, ⁶⁷⁹ where an explosion attributed to methane occurred some years after completion of a project, Bingham L.J. considered the nature of a duty continuing into the future. He said ⁶⁸⁰:

“What is plain is that if any such duty at all is to be imposed, the nature, scope and limits of such a duty require to be very carefully and cautiously defined. The development of the law on this point, if it ever occurs, will be gradual and analogical.”

However, the “continuing” duty to review the design only arises after the initial breach associated with a defective design, when a “trigger event” occurs to put the architect on notice that a review is or may be required. ⁶⁸¹

The extent to which the courts will impose continuing obligations to warn or advise will, in practice, be determined by the manner and extent to which the parties provide for this in their contract.

^{674.} RIBA Standard Form of Appointment (SFA/92), published as an Appendix in Keating on Building Contracts, 6th edn (1995). A similar wording is contained in SFA198 (see App.C to the 7th edition of Keating on Construction Contracts).

^{675.} [1966] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 338.

^{676.} (1982) 18 B.L.R. 130.

^{677.} [1971] 1 W.L.R. 862, 873.

^{678.} Chelmsford DC v Evers (1985) 25 B.L.R. 99, 106; Equitable Debenture Assets Corp v William Moss (1984) 2 Con. L.R. 1, 24.

^{679.} (1988) 18 Con. L.R. 1.

^{680.} The judgment of Bingham L.J. was a dissenting opinion on the question of liability of the engineers, but his observations on the continuing nature of the design obligation, while obiter, are of great significance.

^{681.} See New Islington and Hackney Housing Association Ltd v Pollard Thomas and Edwards Ltd [2001] B.L.R. 74 at 80.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts
Section 8. - Breach and Non-Performance
(a) - General Principles

The basis for a claim for breach

37-204

In construction contracts, as with contracts generally, it is fundamental to distinguish ⁶⁸² between claims made under the contract and claims for breach of the contract which are the subject of this section. A breach of contract by party A which has not been excused will give party B a right to claim at least nominal damages simply on the basis that there has been “an infraction of a legal right”. ⁶⁸³ Where B can go further and show that A’s breach of contract is causative of a type of loss which the law will allow, and where the loss claimed is not too remote, ⁶⁸⁴ then B will be entitled to claim substantial damages. ⁶⁸⁵ Although an award of damages is a question of fact in the particular case, ⁶⁸⁶ the broad principle behind any award of damages for breach of contract remains “where a party sustains a loss by reason of a breach of contract he is, so far as money can do it, to be placed in the same situation with respect to damages as if the contract had been performed”. ⁶⁸⁷ A further principle is that before considering any question of causation or remoteness of damage it is necessary to consider whether the type or kind of loss in respect of which damages are claimed was within the contractual scope of the obligation that has been breached. ⁶⁸⁸

Mitigation of loss

37-205

A plaintiff must take all reasonable steps to minimise the loss to him as a result of breach, but the plaintiff is under no obligation to take any step which a reasonable and prudent man would not ordinarily take in the course of his business. ⁶⁸⁹ The plaintiff need not, for example, take steps which would involve him in complicated litigation ⁶⁹⁰ or steps which he cannot financially afford. ⁶⁹¹ In the context of construction contracts, a failure by the employer (or by the contract administrator on his behalf) to permit the contractor to return to the site to correct minor defects (often referred to as “snagging”) may amount to a failure to mitigate. ⁶⁹² Likewise, where more substantial defects appear postcompletion the employer should consider whether it is reasonable to permit or invite the contractor to carry out repairs. The decision will be a complex matter where the repairs proposed by the contractor are less extensive than those advised by the employer’s expert advisers. ⁶⁹³

Betterment

37-206

If, following defective work by the builder in breach of contract, the plaintiff takes the step of rebuilding to a higher standard than necessary, or to a standard higher than the building contract, properly performed, would have produced, then the plaintiff must give credit for the element of betterment. ⁶⁹⁴ However, betterment will not apply where the plaintiff obtains a building which, whilst necessarily newer and better than the defective building, is a reasonable choice of replacement in all the circumstances. ⁶⁹⁵

Causation

37-207

For a plaintiff to succeed in his claim for substantial damages, he must show an effective ⁶⁹⁶ causal connection between breach and loss, and causation will be a matter of fact in each case to be determined by the application of common sense. ⁶⁹⁷ In practical terms, causation is at the core of most construction disputes, since the connection, or possible competing connections, between breach and loss will not be clear-cut, and will be a matter of impression or inference from the primary facts. ⁶⁹⁸ In Lamb v Jarvis ⁶⁹⁹ the court considered that the defective jointing of pipework by the plaintiff, taken with the defendant's defective groundworks, had jointly caused leaks which were the damage forming the subject matter of the remedial scheme for which the plaintiff sought payment from the defendant. Faced with the problems of causation and apportionment, it was held ⁷⁰⁰ that the court was entitled to arrive at an apportionment between the parties, rather than being bound to arrive at a conclusion on an "all or nothing" basis. ⁷⁰¹

^{682.} In complex building cases, the distinction can sometimes be in danger of being overlooked: see McAlpine Humberoak v McDermott International (No.1) (1992) 58 B.L.R. 1, 22 CA.

^{683.} The Mediana [1900] A.C. 113, 116.

^{684.} See the discussion of the rule in Hadley v Baxendale (1854) 9 Ex. 341 in McGregor on Damages, 19th edn (2014), paras 8-157 et seq.; and in Keating on Construction Contracts, 9th edn (2012) at paras 9-003 to 9-006; and also Balfour Beatty Construction (Scotland) Ltd v Scottish Power Plc, 1994 S.C. 20; (1994) 71 B.L.R. 20 HL.

^{685.} See also the discussion of the general principles when considering an award of damages in relation to defective premises in Harrison v Shepherd Homes Ltd [2011] EWHC 1811 (TCC), 27 Const. L.J. 709, per Ramsey J. at [234]–[264].

^{686.} British Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co Ltd v Underground Electric Railways Co Ltd [1912] A.C. 673, 688.

^{687.} Robinson v Harman (1848) 1 Exch. 850, 855. For other clear expressions of the principle see Wertheim v Chicoutimi Pulp Co [1911] A.C. 301, 307; Monarch SS Co Ltd v Karlhamns Oljefabriker [1949] A.C. 196 at 220; Radford v De Froberville [1977] 1 W.L.R. 1262, 1268; DO Ferguson v M Sohl (1992) 62 B.L.R. 95, 103; Ruxley Electronics Ltd v Forsyth [1996] 1 A.C. 344, 365. See also Fuller and Perdue (1936–37) 46 Yale L.J. 52, 373.

^{688.} See South Australia Asset Management Ltd v York Montague Ltd [1997] A.C. 191; and Transfield Shipping Inc v Mercator Shipping Inc [2009] 1 A.C. 61 (on which see further above, Vol.I, paras 26-126 et seq.). For an application of these principles in a construction contract context, see HOK Sport Ltd v Aintree Racecourse Co Ltd [2003] B.L.R. 155; Earl Terrace Properties v Nilsson Design [2004] B.L.R. 273 and Hancock v Tucker [1999] Lloyd's P.N. 814. See also John Grimes Partnership Ltd v Gubbins [2013] EWCA Civ 37, [2013] B.L.R. 126 where the Court of Appeal held that if the type or kind of loss was, at the time of contract, reasonably foreseeable by the defendant as not unlikely to result from his breach (had a breach been contemplated at that time) then such a type or kind of loss was not too remote (see at [17]–[19]).

^{689.} British Westinghouse Electric v Underground Electric Railways [1912] A.C. 673, 689.

^{690.} Pilkington v Wood [1953] Ch. 770, 777.

^{691.} Clippens Oil Co Ltd v Edinburgh and District Water Trustees [1907] A.C. 291; Perry v Sidney Phillips & Son [1982] 1 W.L.R. 1297, [1982] 1 All E.R. 1005, 1013; Trans Trust SPRL v

- Danubian Trading Co Ltd* [1952] 2 Q.B. 297, 306.
- 692. City Axis Ltd v Daniel P Jackson (1998) 64 Con. L.R. 84.
- 693. See Great Ormond Street Hospital v McLaughlin & Harvey (1987) 19 Con. L.R. 25; and Kaye v Hosier & Dickinson [1972] 1 W.L.R. 146.
- 694. British Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing v Underground Electric Railways [1912] A.C. 673, 691; Richard Roberts v Douglas Smith Stimson (1988) 46 B.L.R. 50; Skandia Property (UK) v Thames Water (1998) C.I.L.L. 1326. An appeal against this decision was dismissed; see [1999] B.L.R. 338. See Linklaters Business Services v Sir Robert McAlpine Ltd [2010] EWHC 2931 (TCC), 133 Con. L.R. 211, per Akenhead J. at [145]–[146], where Skandia was distinguished and a claimant was permitted to recover damages based upon the cost of replacing damaged pipework instead of remedying defects to insulation and corrosion to pipework locally because, in all the circumstances, this was a reasonable decision to have made (not least because bona fide experienced experts advised that replacement was required and there was no suggestion that this advice was negligent or that further experts should have been called in to provide advice as well).
- 695. Harbutts Plasticine v Wayne Tank & Pump Co [1970] 1 Q.B. 447. See also Voaden v Champion [2002] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 623 at [85]–[89] where the test of reasonableness in this sense is set out.
- 696. Monarch Steamship Co v Karlshamns Oljefabriker [1949] A.C. 196, 226.
- 697. Galoo Ltd v Bright Grahame Murray [1994] 1 W.L.R. 1360, 1369–1375 CA. See also Nulty v Milton Keynes BC [2013] EWCA Civ 15, [2013] B.L.R. 134, where the Court of Appeal held that the civil balance of probability test meant no less and no more than the court having to be satisfied on rational and objective grounds that the case for believing that the suggested means of causation occurred was stronger than the case for not believing it (at [35]). But also note the unusual approach taken to the burden of proof in relation to the application of the “but for” test in West v Ian Finlay & Associates [2013] EWHC 868 (TCC) (reversed on other grounds, [2014] EWCA Civ 316, [2014] B.L.R. 324). In this case the defendant architect was found to have been negligent in failing to notice the poor quality of the M&E services installations in the renovation of the claimants' property, but argued that there was no loss because the work under this contract would never have been properly carried out and completed by the M&E contractor irrespective of how competently it had acted. It was held that given the nature of its breaches of duty, the onus was on the defendant to show that even if it had acted with reasonable care the damage would probably still have occurred, applying the approach adopted by the Court of Appeal in the context of a road traffic personal injury claim in Phethean-Hubble v Coles [2012] EWCA Civ 349, [2012] R.T.R. 31.
- 698. For building cases in which causation is directly discussed, see Pratt v George J Hill Associates (1987) 38 B.L.R. 25 CA; Gable House Estates v The Halpern Partnership (1995) 48 Con. L.R. 1; Skandia Property (UK) Ltd and Vala Properties BV v Thames Water (1997) 57 Con. L.R. 65.
- 699. (1998) 60 Con. L.R. 1.
- 700. Following the decision in Tennant Radiant Heat Ltd v Warrington Development Corp [1988] 1 E.G.L.R. 41 CA.
- 701. See also the discussion of approaches to causation in Keating on Construction Contracts, 9th edn (2012), paras 8–25 to 8–28.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts
Section 8. - Breach and Non-Performance
(b) - Breach by Employer

Introduction

37-208

Although the contractor, in practice, may follow a less systematic pattern, claims for damages by the contractor against the employer are based upon the assumption that the contractor, in tendering for given works, has: (i) analysed the scope of the work by reference to documentation and/or inspection of the works; (ii) identified his basic costs (labour and materials) of carrying out the work; (iii) included in his tender prices a margin for overheads (vehicles, head office costs) and for profit; and (iv) foregone other profitable work in tendering for the given works. Since claims for damages are based upon the compensation of loss incurred, the assumptions identified above will need (along with many other factors) to be revisited on the facts of each case, to ascertain the true extent of the contractor's recoverable loss. Some of the principal areas of liability of the employer to pay damages to the building contractor are considered below.

Payment for work done

37-209

The contractor's entitlement to be paid (both in timing and amount) will be derived from the terms of the construction contract, and failure to pay will amount to a breach. Although non-payment by the employer is not generally a breach which will entitle the contractor to treat the contract as at an end, ⁷⁰² the failure of the employer to pay under a "construction contract" falling within the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 ⁷⁰³ will confer upon the contractor a right to suspend work. If there is no express provision relating to time for payment, then payment is to be made within a reasonable time in all the circumstances. ⁷⁰⁴ Where the employer wrongfully terminates the contract prior to completion by the contractor, then the contractor is entitled to be paid (either under the contract or as damages) ⁷⁰⁵ for work done, and the rate of payment will be by reference to the rates and prices in the contract, and not on the basis of a reasonable sum. Additionally, in respect of that portion of the work which the contractor was prevented from completing, the contractor may claim either the expenditure which he has wasted following the employer's breach, or alternatively loss of profit on the work. ⁷⁰⁶

Withdrawal of work

37-210

Although the general rule may be altered or displaced by the terms of the contract, the contractor has a legitimate expectation and contractual right to carry out the work contained in the contract. The employer cannot generally remove work from a contractor in order to have that work carried out by a third party. ⁷⁰⁷ The contractor will be entitled to recover by way of damages for breach the loss of profit element on the work withdrawn, by reason of the reduced amount of turnover. In assessing such a claim for loss of profit, the court will have to consider whether the work was indeed profitable, as well as assessing how far (if at all) the loss of profit on the particular item of work reduced the overall profit of the contractor's business.

Delay and disruption

37-211

Where the employer, in breach of the express or implied terms of the contract, interrupts or otherwise interferes with the work of the contractor ⁷⁰⁸ then the contractor may incur costs which are additional to the extra direct cost of carrying out the work. The different heads of recovery for delay and disruption (increased preliminaries, overheads, loss of profit, loss of productivity, increased costs as a result of inflation, interest for non-payment of money) are considered in detail in the specialist textbooks. ⁷⁰⁹ Disruption claims are difficult to establish. The contractor must prove that there was disruption to its activities, that this was caused by a breach of contract or a matter that the employer is contractually responsible for and that the sum/loss claimed flowed from the same. In Walter Lilly & Co Ltd v DMW Developments Ltd ⁷¹⁰ Akenhead J. stated that there is no set way to prove these elements and that it is open to contractors to prove them with whatever evidence will satisfy the tribunal to the requisite standard of proof. However, it is to be noted that the calculation of loss of overheads and profit in construction contracts will often be evaluated together by reference to the "Hudson formula" which takes a percentage for head office cost or profit and multiplies this by the contract sum. This is multiplied by the period of delay (in weeks), divided by the contract period. The formula has been the subject of consideration by the courts, ⁷¹¹ but it is thought that it must be used with some regard being paid to some factors which the formula may ignore, such as the effect of re-deployment of resources during the period of delay and the likelihood that the profit multiplier will not take account of the element for profit already contained within the contract sum. It appears also that claims for overhead and profit have to be established in principle, i.e. the contractor must show that there was other work available that, but for the employer's breach, would have been undertaken in the relevant period. ⁷¹² In Cleveland Bridge UK Ltd v Severfield-Rowen Structures Ltd ⁷¹³ it was held that where the Court is satisfied that some (more than de minimis) disruption must have occurred as a result of the contractor's breaches, it should make a reasoned assessment, albeit one based on the minimum loss or expense probably attributable to the same.

^{702.} D R Bradley (Cable Jointing) Ltd v Jefco Mechanical Services Ltd Unreported 1988 (see 6–CLD–07–21).

^{703.} See s.112 of the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996, as amended by the Local Democracy, Economic Development and Construction Act 2009.

^{704.} Here again the applicability of the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 must be considered.

^{705.} Canterbury Pipe Lines v Christchurch Drainage (1979) 16 B.L.R. 76 Court of Appeal of New Zealand.

^{706.} Felton v Wharrie (1906) H.B.C. (4th edn) Vol.2, 398 CA. See also the discussion in Keating on Construction Contracts, 9th edn (2012), para.9–37 to 9–40.

^{707.} Gallagher v Hirsch [1899] N.Y. 454 App. Div. 467; Carr v JA Berriman Pty Ltd (1953) 27 A.J.L.R. 273; Commissioners of Main Roads v Reed and Stuart (1974) 12 B.L.R. 55; Abbey Developments Ltd v PP Brickwork Ltd [2003] C.I.L.L. 2033 (TCC).

^{708.} Common examples will be delayed, reduced and interrupted access to the works, or late procurement of planning or building permissions (on which see Ellis-Don v Parking Authority of Toronto (1978) 28 B.L.R. 98, 110).

^{709.} See for example Keating on Construction Contracts, 9th edn (2012), paras 9–29 to 9–33.

- 710. [2012] EWHC 1773 (TCC), [2012] B.L.R. 503 at [486c].
- 711. Ellis-Don v Parking Authority of Toronto (1978) 28 B.L.R. 98 Supreme Court of Ontario; Finnegan v Sheffield City Council (1988) 43 B.L.R. 124; see also Walter Lilly & Co Ltd v Mackay & DMW Developments Ltd [2012] EWHC 1773 (TCC) where it was held that the use of a formula, supported by relevant factual evidence of opportunities foregone, was a legitimate and helpful way of establishing this head of loss, per Akenhead J. at 540–543.
- 712. See generally Keating on Construction Contracts, 9th edn, paras 9–30 to 9–36. In Walter Lilly & Co Ltd v DMW Developments Ltd [2012] EWHC 1773 (TCC), [2012] B.L.R. 503 it was held that the use of a formula, supported by relevant factual evidence of opportunities foregone, was a legitimate way of establishing this head of loss; but that in order to prove a claim for loss of profit and head office overheads caused by delay it had to be shown on the balance of probabilities that, but for the delay, the claimant would have secured other work which would have contributed to such overheads and/or generated profit and the loss would not have been sustained (see at [540]–[543]).
- 713. [2012] EWHC 3652.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts
Section 8. - Breach and Non-Performance
(c) - Breach by the Contractor

Introduction

37-212

Claims for damages by the employer following breach by the contractor are considered in this section by reference to: (i) failure to build; (ii) defective work; (iii) delay; (iv) consequential loss; and (v) claims for nonpecuniary loss. In considering the types of claims typically made by the employer in construction contracts, the application of general principles relating to the duty to mitigate and the requirement to account for betterment ⁷¹⁴ should be borne in mind.

Failure to build

37-213

Where the contractor fails to build at all or in part, then the normal measure of damages is the cost to the employer of completing the building works in a reasonable manner less the contract price. The leading authority on the point is still Mertens v Home Freeholds. ⁷¹⁵ The employer may also (though not on the facts of Mertens), ⁷¹⁶ recover in respect of increased costs arising through delay in completion following the contractor's failure to build. ⁷¹⁷

Defective work

37-214

Where, after completion, there are defects in the works, the employer will normally be entitled to damages equal to the costs of making good the defects (this is sometimes referred to as the costs of reinstatement). ⁷¹⁸ However, whilst such an award of damages puts the plaintiff (employer) into the position he would be in if the contract had been properly performed in the first place, it is still for the plaintiff to show that reinstatement is a reasonable response to the damage in question. ⁷¹⁹ In Ruxley Electronics & Constructions Ltd v Forsyth ⁷²⁰ the plaintiff contractor was engaged to build a swimming pool for Mr Forsyth which was to have a diving area 7ft 6ins deep, whereas the pool which was built had a diving area with a depth of 6ft. The pool was suitable for diving and the failure to follow the requirement as to depth was found to have had no effect on the value of Mr Forsyth's property. Mr Forsyth counterclaimed the cost of re-building the pool to the depth specified in the contract with the plaintiff contractor, which was estimated at £21,560. The House of Lords (reversing the decision of the Court of Appeal) awarded Mr Forsyth modest damages for loss of amenity, and not the costs of reinstatement. ⁷²¹ The judgments in Ruxley, both in the Court of Appeal and House of Lords dealt with the question of the intention of the innocent party to carry out re-instatement. The position appears to be that the court normally has no concern with the use to which an award of damages will be put and an undertaking to re-instate would be irrelevant. However, intention may be relevant to the reasonableness of re-instatement. ⁷²²

Delay

37-215

Where a contractor, without excuse, fails to complete in accordance with the timescale provided for within the contract, ⁷²³ then the employer will either be entitled to levy “liquidated and ascertained damages” at the contractual rate ⁷²⁴ or he will be entitled to claim general (unliquidated) damages referable to the loss incurred by reason of the delay. Furthermore, where the form of contract provides for the contractor to proceed with the works regularly and diligently, ⁷²⁵ then a failure to do so may entitle the employer to dismiss the contractor from the site ⁷²⁶ if the breach is to be regarded as repudiatory (see below). This is to be distinguished from termination under the terms of the contract. Where (which will be rare in construction contracts) time is stated to be of the essence, then failure by the contractor will mean that the employer is entitled to treat the contract as at an end and dismiss the contractor from the site. ⁷²⁷ In HDK Ltd v Sunshine Ventures Ltd ⁷²⁸ it was held that where the party seeking to give notice so as to make time of the essence has by its conduct previously waived the right to rely on a stipulation as to time in the original contract, in order to be effective the notice must make clear the consequences that will follow from a failure to comply with its provisions and the time by which compliance is required; and there must be a reasonable time between service of such notice and the date required for compliance.

Consequential loss

37-216

In construction projects, defects in the works will often have a wider impact upon the employer's existing operations and production process. Such losses will rarely be said to arise naturally according to the usual course of things and, accordingly, consequential losses will usually fall under the second limb of Hadley v Baxendale ⁷²⁹: that is, damage which, in the reasonable contemplation of both parties at the time of making the contract would, had they thought about it, have had a very substantial degree of probability. ⁷³⁰ Construction contracts will often have clauses limiting or excluding liability for “consequential loss”, and the effect of such clauses will be a matter of construction, ⁷³¹ although it may also be important to consider whether such exclusion is reasonable for the purposes of the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977. ⁷³²

Non-pecuniary loss

37-217

Where building works are to the plaintiff's main dwelling, he will be able to recover modest damages for anxiety and distress associated with the defective work of the building contractor. ⁷³³ However, this head of loss will not be recoverable as between commercial parties, or where the plaintiff's property is substantially for investment purposes. ⁷³⁴

^{714.} See section (a) above.

^{715.} [1921] 2 K.B. 526, 535 CA. There are no other authorities on this point, although in DO Ferguson v M Sohl (1992) 62 B.L.R. 95, 104, the relevant passage from the judgment of Lord Sterndale M.R. in Mertens was referred to by Hirst L.J. without adverse comment.

^{716.} [1921] 2 K.B. 526, 543.

^{717.} See also Dodd Properties v Canterbury CC [1980] 1 W.L.R. 433.

^{718.} East Ham Corp v Bernard Sunley & Sons Ltd [1966] A.C. 406 HL. See Brit Inns Ltd v BDW Trading Ltd [2012] EWHC 2143 (TCC), 145 Con. L.R. 181 for an example of the approach to the measure and proof of damages in claims for defective work and loss of profits.

719. See Atkins v Scott (1990) 7 Const. L.J. 215 CA.

720. [1996] 1 A.C. 344 HL.

721. Note in particular the passage in the speech of Lord Mustill at 360. See on this, McInnes, "The Yellow Brick Road: Ruxley revisited" (1998) 14 Const. L.J. 33. See also Bovis Lend Lease v RD Fire Protection (2003) 89 Con. L.R. 169, where the cost of reinstatement was also refused. See also Harrison v Shepherd Homes Ltd [2011] EWHC 1811 (TCC), 27 Const. L.J. 709, per Ramsey J. at [263]–[264], for a summary of the general principles to apply when considering an award of damages for defective premises and, in particular, the circumstances in which damages based on the cost of reinstatement, diminution in value and loss of amenity and inconvenience will be appropriate.

722. See [1996] A.C. 344, per Lord Jauncey at 359 and Lord Lloyd at 372–373 and [1994] 1 W.L.R. 650, per Staughton L.J. at 658; and see Radford v DeFroberville [1977] 1 W.L.R. 1262. For a decision in which a claimant had no intention of conducting the postulated repair work and where this was found to be relevant to the reasonableness of adopting reinstatement costs as the basis for the measure of damages, see London Fire and Emergency Planning Authority v Halcrow Gilbert Associates Ltd [2007] EWHC 2546 (TCC).

723. Or within a reasonable time: Hick v Raymond & Reid [1893] A.C. 22, 32.

724. See above, para.37-031.

725. In Leander Construction Ltd v Mulalley & Co Ltd [2011] EWHC 3449 (TCC) it was held that ordinarily there will be no implied term in a building contract that the contractor should proceed regularly and diligently with the works prior to the contract completion date.

726. West Faulkner Associates v London Borough of Newham (1994) 71 B.L.R. 1 CA. See also Sabic UK Petrochemicals Ltd v Punj Lloyd Ltd [2013] EWHC 2916 (TCC), [2014] B.L.R. 43, where it was held in relation to an express term requiring a contractor to carry out and complete the works with due diligence that a consideration of what was required to satisfy this obligation was linked to the parties' other contractual obligations and, in particular, on the facts of the case to the contractor's obligation to meet a milestone date for the commencement of commissioning.

727. Rickards v Oppenheim [1950] 1 K.B. 616, 628 CA.

728. [2009] EWHC 2866 (QB).

729. (1854) 9 Ex. 341. This is the broad effect of British Sugar Plc v NEI Power Projects Ltd (1997) 87 B.L.R. 4 CA.

730. Balfour Beatty Construction (Scotland) Ltd v Scottish Power Plc, 1994 S.C. 20; (1994) 71 B.L.R. 20 HL.

731. British Sugar Plc v NEI Power Projects Ltd (1997) 87 B.L.R. 42 CA; Hotel Services Ltd v Hilton International Hotels (UK) Ltd [2000] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 750, [2000] B.L.R. 235.

732. See above, para.37-084.

733. Rawlings v Rentokil Laboratories [1972] E.G.D. 744; Perry v Sidney Phillips [1982] 1 W.L.R. 1292; Ruxley Electronics v Forsyth [1996] A.C. 344, 360–361 HL. See also, Franklin, "Mere Heartache" (1992) 7 Const. L.J. 318; Humphries, "Contractual Damages for Mental Distress" (1996) S.J. 182.

734. Hutchinson v Harris (1978) 10 B.L.R. 19, 37.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts
Section 8. - Breach and Non-Performance
(d) - Repudiation and Discharge

Repudiatory breach

37-218

Where one party so acts or expresses himself as to show that he does not mean to accept the obligations of the contract any further, then this may, depending on the circumstances, amount to a repudiatory breach of contract. ⁷³⁵ Generally, a breach of contract will only give rise to a claim for damages, and the innocent party will be obliged to continue its outstanding performance of the contract notwithstanding the breach. ⁷³⁶ However, where there is a breach of a condition which amounts to a refusal to perform going to the root of the contract, then there will be a repudiatory breach ⁷³⁷ entitling the innocent party, on acceptance of the repudiation, to treat the contract as at an end. ⁷³⁸ The act of repudiation may consist of a clear unqualified refusal, but will more probably involve some other breach which goes to the root of the contract, or may be such as to indicate an intention no longer to be bound by the contract. ⁷³⁹ In considering where there has been a repudiation, it is necessary to look at the conduct and the circumstances of the parties as a whole. ⁷⁴⁰

Acceptance

37-219

The innocent party faced with a repudiatory breach can do one of two things: (i) affirm the contract in a clear way; or (ii) accept the repudiation by making it plain that by reason of the repudiatory act of the defaulting party, he considers that the contract is at an end. ⁷⁴¹

What will amount to repudiation?

37-220

What will amount to a repudiation of the contract will depend upon the terms which the parties have agreed and the relative importance which they have placed on them. In relation to acts or defaults of the contractor, a refusal to carry out work is likely to evince the appropriate intention no longer to be bound. Poor workmanship, however, will generally not be sufficient to constitute repudiation, ⁷⁴² unless there is a manifest inability to comply with the requirements of the contract indicative of a basic inability, or basic lack of competence and intention, to perform the contract. Unless time is of the essence, delay may amount to a repudiation only where the delay gives rise to the inference that the defaulting party does not intend to be bound by the terms of the contract. In relation to acts or defaults of the employer, an act of prevention such as a refusal to grant the contractor access to the site, or dismissal of the contractor from the site, is likely to amount to a repudiation. A failure by the employer to pay the contractor could amount to a repudiation, depending on the terms as to payment, and the circumstances of the refusal, ⁷⁴³ but generally there is no right to suspend work where payment is withheld from the contractor. ⁷⁴⁴ It is to be noted that s.112 of the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 ⁷⁴⁵ gives rise to a right to suspend in specified circumstances of default.

Repudiation and contractual termination

37-221

Save where the contract provides that the machinery of contractual termination ⁷⁴⁶ is an exclusive remedy of the parties, then such machinery will not exclude the remedies available at common law following an act of repudiation. ⁷⁴⁷ However, the often complex machinery for termination of employment under a given contract will have to be operated with care and precision. In particular, standard form contracts will often identify particular defaults the occurrence of which will entitle the other party to terminate. The contract will also often identify periods of time during which the innocent party must give proper notice of default to the party in breach ⁷⁴⁸ so that the specified default can be made good. A party who operates the machinery of contractual termination without justification under the contract is likely to be regarded as having repudiated the contract, since operation of the machinery will typically be accompanied by a refusal to perform obligations under the contract. ⁷⁴⁹

^{735.} Heyman v Darwins [1942] A.C. 356, 378 HL.

^{736.} Channel Tunnel Group v Balfour Beatty [1992] Q.B. 656, 666 CA.

^{737.} Woodar Investment Development v Wimpey Construction UK [1980] 1 W.L.R. 277, 283. See also Eminence Property Developments Ltd v Heaney [2010] EWCA Civ 1168, [2011] 2 All E.R. (Comm) 223, where the Court of Appeal held, following Woodar, that the legal test for repudiatory conduct was whether, looking at all the circumstances of the case objectively, from the perspective of a reasonable person in the innocent party's position, the contract breaker had clearly shown an intention to abandon and altogether refuse to perform the contract (per Etherton L.J. at [33]–[61]).

^{738.} Photo Productions Ltd v Securicor Transport Ltd [1980] A.C. 827, 849; see also Scobie & McIntosh v Clayton Bowmore (1990) 49 B.L.R. 119.

^{739.} General Billposting Co Ltd v Atkinson [1909] AC 118, 122; Sutcliffe v Chippendale and Edmondson (1971) 18 B.L.R. 157, 161 (Sir William Stubb Q.C.); Woodar Ltd v Wimpey Ltd [1980] 1 W.L.R. 277, 282–283 HL. See also Price v Great Yarmouth BC (2003) T.C.L.R. 1 CA at 9.

^{740.} Woodar Ltd v Wimpey Ltd [1980] 1 W.L.R. 277, 281 HL.

^{741.} Fercometal v Mediterranean Shipping [1989] A.C. 788, 805 HL. On acceptance of repudiatory breach, see also Laing Management Ltd v Aegon Insurance Co (UK) Ltd (1997) 55 Con. L.R. 1.

^{742.} There were not sufficient in Sheffield v Conrad (1987) 22 Con. L.R. 108 CA.

^{743.} In Alan Auld Associates Ltd v Rick Pollard Associates [2008] EWCA Civ 655, [2008] B.L.R. 419, it was held by the Court of Appeal that in a contract for the provision of engineering services, which was analogous to an employment contract, a party's persistent and cynical failure to pay invoices in spite of repeated complaints from the party providing the services amounted to a repudiatory breach of contract. Also, note that in Mayhaven Healthcare Ltd v Bothma & Bothma [2009] EWHC 2634 (TCC), [2010] B.L.R. 154 it was held that the question of whether a contractor's wrongful suspension of works amounts to a repudiatory breach of contract was not capable of a simple answer, as it would depend upon the terms of the contract, the nature of the breach and all the facts and circumstances of the case.

^{744.} Supamarl v Federated Homes Ltd (1981) 9 Con. L.R. 25; Channel Tunnel Group v Balfour Beatty [1992] Q.B. 656, 666 CA. See also Multiplex Constructions (UK) Ltd v Cleveland Bridge UK Ltd [2006] EWHC (TCC) 1341, (2006) 107 Con. L.R. 1, where it was held that a contractor's failure to make payments to its sub-contractor in accordance with a supplementary agreement did not amount to a repudiatory breach of contract in all the circumstances, especially having regard to the fact that the contractor had referred the relevant payment dispute to adjudication.

- 745. As amended by the Local Democracy, Economic Development and Construction Act 2009.
- 746. See paras 37-244 to 37-246 below.
- 747. Architectural Installation v James Gibbons (1989) 46 B.L.R. 91. However, Lockland Builders v John Kim Rickwood (1995) 77 B.L.R. 38 CA indicates that it may be easier to exclude common law rights following repudiatory breach than was previously thought. Note that in Golden Straight Corp v Nippon Kisen Kaisha [2007] UKHL 12, [2007] 2 W.L.R. 891 the House of Lords held that the assessment of damages for wrongful repudiation could take into account events which took place after the date of the acceptance of the repudiatory breach.
- 748. See cl.8.4 and 8.9, JCT 2011.
- 749. Architectural Installation Services v James Gibbons (1989) 46 B.L.R. 91. See also Stocznia Gdynia SA v Gearbulk Holdings Ltd [2009] EWCA Civ 75, [2009] 3 W.L.R. 677, [2009] B.L.R. 196, where it was held by the Court of Appeal that a party did not lose its right to treat a contract as repudiated and to recover damages for repudiation simply because it exercised its contractual termination rights; and that on the facts there was no inconsistency between recovering instalments of the price, pursuant to the termination provisions, and claiming damages at common law for loss of bargain.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts
Section 8. - Breach and Non-Performance
(e) - Frustration and Force Majeure

Frustration

37-222

This is a principle ⁷⁵⁰ which addresses those situations where the underlying objectives of the parties in entering into a contract are defeated, without fault of either party, through changes in circumstances which are unforeseen, or on the occurrence of particular types of supervening events. The general rule is that contractual obligations are binding and absolute, so that a party is not absolved from performance merely because this has become more expensive, more difficult or even proves to be impossible. ⁷⁵¹ Prior to the decision in Taylor v Caldwell, ⁷⁵² parties were regarded as capable of making provision for the occurrence of supervening events in their contracts, so that a very strict view prevailed. In its modern form, the doctrine of frustration, as seen in the case of construction contracts as well as other kinds of contract, involves the identification of situations where it would be unjust and unreasonable to hold parties to their contracts. ⁷⁵³ However, the authorities indicate that a plea of frustration ought not to be lightly invoked, since the operation of the doctrine has been kept within very narrow limits. In particular, to see if the doctrine applies “you have first to construe the contract and see whether the parties have themselves provided for the situation which has arisen. If they have provided for it, the contract must govern”. ⁷⁵⁴

Frustration of construction contract

37-223

In construction contracts, frustration arising out of delay will be kept within very narrow confines, such as occurred in Metropolitan Water Board v Dick Kerr & Co. ⁷⁵⁵ Here, indefinite delay was imposed by a government order to stop work under the Defence of the Realm Acts which was held not to fall under the extension of time provision in the contract. Frustration will almost invariably have no application to a case of ground conditions which render construction impossible, since the onus is upon the contractor to ascertain at tender stage whether there are difficulties which may affect the site. Unexpected adverse weather conditions will only excuse nonperformance by the contractor to the extent provided by the contract terms. ⁷⁵⁶ Since the courts will not generally release parties from the consequences of poor bargains, unforeseen increases in costs and price in the course of a construction contract will not give rise to frustration save where increases make the obligations radically different from those contemplated. ⁷⁵⁷

Force majeure

37-224

Parties to commercial contracts will often make provision for situations where circumstances beyond the control of the parties render performance impossible by one of the contracting parties. ⁷⁵⁸ Most of the standard forms of contract include clauses dealing with force majeure ⁷⁵⁹ covering such matters as war, strikes, fire, weather and government action, but each clause must be construed carefully to ascertain its true scope and effect.

-
- 750. See also McKendrick, Force Majeure and Frustration of Contract, 2nd edn (1995). In a construction context see Davis Contractors v Fareham [1956] A.C. 696.
- 751. Paradine v Jane (1647) Aleyn 26; (1647) 82 E.R. 897, where it was held that the tenant was not released from the obligation to pay rent in circumstances where the lease had become dispossessed by Royalists during the English Civil War; The Company of Proprietors of the Brecknock and Abergavenny Canal Navigation Co v Pritchard (1796) 6 T.R. 750 (the defendant builders were not released from a liability to maintain a bridge which was washed away by flood); see also Davis Contractors Ltd v Fareham UDC [1956] A.C. 696, 729 HL (serious shortages of labour caused work to take 22 months rather than the anticipated 8 months).
- 752. (1863) 3 B. & S. 826.
- 753. J Lauritzen AS v Wijsmuller BV (The Super Servant Two) [1990] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 1 CA.
- 754. The Eugenia [1964] 2 Q.B. 226, 239 CA; Bank Line Ltd v Capel [1919] A.C. 435, 456 HL.
- 755. [1918] A.C. 119 HL, also considered by the Privy Council in Wong Lai Yong v Chinachem (1979) 13 B.L.R. 81.
- 756. (1888) 52 J.P. 392.
- 757. Wates Ltd v Greater London Council (1983) 25 B.L.R. 1, 35 CA.
- 758. For one judicial definition of force majeure see Lebeaupin v Crispin [1920] 2 K.B. 714, 718.
- 759. JCT 2011 cl.8.11.1.1.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts
Section 8. - Breach and Non-Performance
(f) - The Privity Rule and its Exceptions

The privity rule

37-225

The general rule of the common law is that no-one but the parties to a contract can be entitled under it, or bound by it. ⁷⁶⁰ The privity rule is best seen as distinct from the rule that consideration must move from the promisee, ⁷⁶¹ since privity is concerned with who can enforce a contract, whereas the doctrine of consideration regulates the kinds of promises which the parties can enforce. ⁷⁶² There is an important distinction to be drawn between the privity rule and the remedies of the promisee (see Ch.19).

Criticism of the privity rule

37-226

The privity rule has been the subject of trenchant criticism, both from the judiciary and from academic lawyers. ⁷⁶³ Some of the most important decisions on the contemporary scope of the privity rule have been cases on construction contracts, reflecting the complex array of parties affected by construction work. For example, in complex projects, the owner of the land and the party employing the builder will rarely go on to occupy the building on completion, since rights of ownership or occupation will be the subject of a lease, sale, assignment or other transfer. ⁷⁶⁴ Accordingly, it will frequently occur that the party who suffers the loss and damage caused by defects in the building will be different from the party with which the builder has a direct contractual relationship.

Exceptions to the privity rule

37-227

The response of the courts to the problems created by the rule has been to couple the suggestion for systematic ⁷⁶⁵ reform by the legislature, ⁷⁶⁶ with a process of developing exceptions to the privity rule on a case-by-case basis. Although the precise scope of the exceptions to the privity rule is unclear, it is nevertheless apparent that in allowing exceptions the underlying rationale, at least in part, is this: what was in the contemplation of the parties at the time when the building contract was entered into? The starting-point for the development of what has now been described as a “contract-based” ⁷⁶⁷ approach to the privity rule is the proposition that consignor in a contract for the carriage of goods by sea under a bill of lading is entitled to substantial damages from the carrier, although property in the goods had passed to a third party when the damage occurred. ⁷⁶⁸

Decisions on privity

37-228

A number of important cases in the construction field have raised privity issues. In St Martin's Property Corp v Sir Robert McAlpine ⁷⁶⁹ the contract between the employer and the contractor contained a prohibition on assignment save where the contractor gave his consent in writing. The employer subsequently assigned ownership in the site to a third party, but that assignment was ineffective to transfer to the third party the benefit of the building contract. The House of Lords held that the employer was entitled to recover damages for defects where the loss was suffered by the third party. ⁷⁷⁰ Having referred to Dunlop v Lambert Lord Browne-Wilkinson said:

"In my judgment the present case falls within the rationale of the exceptions to the general rule that a plaintiff can only recover damages for his own loss. The contract was for a large development of property which, to the knowledge of both the Corporation and McAlpine, was going to be occupied, and possibly purchased, by third parties and not by the Corporation itself. Therefore it could be foreseen that damage caused by a breach would cause loss to a later owner and not merely to the original contracting party, Corporation."

37-229

In Darlington BC v Wiltshier Northern Ltd ⁷⁷¹ the Council employer entered into an arrangement to procure the construction of a recreational centre which would not be affected by restrictions on its powers of borrowing. There was a contract between the building contractor and a bank and a second contract between the bank and the Council, whereby the bank contracted to procure the construction of the centre for the Council and to assign all benefits to the Council. The Court of Appeal held that since the building contracts, to the knowledge of both parties, were entered into for the benefit of the Council, then it was foreseeable that the Council, as assignee of the bank's rights, would claim substantial damages, even though (in contrast to the McAlpine case) the bank never acquired or transmitted to the Council any proprietary interest in the centre. ⁷⁷² In Alfred McAlpine v Panatown, ⁷⁷³ for reasons of VAT liability, the building contract was concluded between the builder (McAlpine) and a company (Panatown) within the same group as the owner of the site which wished to develop the site (Unex), although there was also a Duty of Care Deed between McAlpine and Unex. Panatown proceeded against McAlpine for damages for breach of contract. The Court of Appeal ⁷⁷⁴ held that Panatown was entitled to recover substantial damages from McAlpine, on the basis that it was "intended or contemplated" that Panatown should have such a right. However, the House of Lords allowed the appeal of McAlpine on the basis that the Linden Gardens exception to the general rule that a party could only claim substantial damages in respect of its own loss, did not apply on the facts of this case as Unex and McAlpine had their own direct contractual relationship under the duty of care deed.

^{760.} Tweddle v Atkinson (1861) 1 B. & S. 393 (but see the comments in Darlington BC v Wiltshier Northern Ltd [1995] 1 W.L.R. 68, 76G, per Steyn L.J.); Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co Ltd v Selfridge & Co Ltd [1915] A.C. 847 at 853 ("Our law knows nothing of a jus quaesitum tertio arising by way of contract"); Beswick v Beswick [1968] A.C. 58 at 72, 78, 83 and 92 HL; and see generally Law. Com. No.242 Privity of Contract: Contracts for the Benefit of Third Parties (1996).

^{761.} Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co Ltd v Selfridge & Co Ltd [1915] A.C. 847, 853.

^{762.} See the Contracts (Right of Third Parties) Act 1999. In Themis Avraamides v Mark Colwill and Stephen Martin (t/a Bathroom Trading Company) [2006] EWCA Civ 1533, [2007] B.L.R. 76, a building case concerning the installation of defective bathroom equipment, it was held that s.1(3) of the Contracts (Rights of Third Parties) Act 1999 required the third-party beneficiary to be expressly identified in order for the subsection to be relied upon.

^{763.} Some of the most important sources of criticism are reviewed in Darlington BC v Wiltshier

Northern [1995] 1 W.L.R. 68, 73, and 77.

- 764. In Technotrade Ltd v Larkstore Ltd [2006] EWCA Civ 1079, [2006] 1 W.L.R. 2926, [2006] B.L.R. 345, the Court of Appeal held that the rights and benefits under a ground investigation report prepared for the original owner of some development land could be assigned to and relied upon by a purchaser of the land in a claim for breach of contract by the purchaser against the party that produced the report in respect of damage that had occurred between the date of sale of the land and the assignment. But a claimant cannot pursue claims in relation to a contract as an assignee where the terms of the relevant contract preclude the assignment, see Ruttle Plant Hire v Secretary of State for the Environment, Food and Rural Affairs [2007] EWHC 2870 (TCC).
- 765. See Darlington BC v Wiltshier Northern Ltd [1995] 1 W.L.R. 68, 76E.
- 766. Contracts (Rights of Third Parties) Act 1999: see generally Ch.18.
- 767. Alfred McAlpine Construction Ltd v Panatown Ltd [2001] 1 A.C. 518.
- 768. Dunlop v Lambert (1839) 6 Cl. & F. 600 as explained in The Albazero [1977] A.C. 774, 847.
- 769. This appeal was heard with Linden Gardens Trust Ltd v Lenesta Sludge Disposals Ltd [1994] 1 A.C. 85 HL.
- 770. Note the broader principle on which Lord Griffiths was prepared to decide the matter (at 96-97) and with which Steyn L.J. agreed in Darlington BC v Wiltshier Northern Ltd [1995] 1 W.L.R. 68, 80, although not adopted in Alfred McAlpine v Panatown [2001] 1 A.C. 518.
- 771. [1995] 1 W.L.R. 68 CA.
- 772. [1995] 1 W.L.R. 68, 75.
- 773. [2000] 1 A.C. 518.
- 774. (1998) 88 B.L.R. 67.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts
Section 8. - Breach and Non-Performance
(g) - Non-performance Not Amounting to Substantial Breach

Introduction

37-230

Construction contracts often create obligations whose non-fulfilment does not or may not amount to breach sounding in substantial damages at the suit of the party adversely affected. This is usually because, on analysis, there is no “breach” at the time in question, the right of the injured party being transferred into some secondary obligation under the terms of the contract. Alternatively, where non-fulfilment or default occurs on the part of the engineer/architect, who is not a party to the primary contract, no direct or immediate remedy may be available against the employer. ⁷⁷⁵

Complaint by employer

37-231

Non-performance not amounting to breach occurs in the case of (i) failure to comply with quality obligations, ⁷⁷⁶ where the employer’s right before completion will be limited to nominal damages, contractual rights of rectification and other rights available in the case of serious default ⁷⁷⁷; and (ii) failure to comply with a programme issued under the terms of the contract, which will usually give rise to a secondary obligation to prepare a revised programme or to take steps to expedite progress if so instructed. ⁷⁷⁸ An obligation to achieve sectional completion will be enforceable provided it is clear that separate damages are intended to be recovered. If liquidated damages are provided for failure to achieve overall completion, the failure to achieve completion of a section within the specified time will sound in damages whether or not separate liquidated damages are provided for the section. ⁷⁷⁹ Where the employer is concerned about the quality of the works prior to their completion, then as discussed above, the employer will rarely be justified in ejecting the contractor from the site. ⁷⁸⁰ The employer will need to exercise considerable caution before preventing his contractor from returning to complete and carry out snagging to the works, since any such acts of prevention may amount to a failure to mitigate loss. In City Axis v Daniel P Jackson ⁷⁸¹ it was held that the defendant employer had acted unreasonably in refusing the plaintiff access to complete certain building works, and that the failure to permit snagging constituted a failure to mitigate loss.

Complaint by the contractor

37-232

Where the contractor is aggrieved by failure of the contract administrator to carry out specified duties under the contract, e.g. to certify appropriately, or to grant extensions of time, such failure will not generally be actionable against the employer ⁷⁸², nor generally, will the failure be actionable against the contract administrator. ⁷⁸³ Complex questions can arise where non-fulfilment of the duties of the contract administrator impede or prevent proper operation of the contract machinery vis-à-vis the contract parties. In such a situation, the courts have proceeded on the basis that the actions of the contract administrator, even if patently flawed, should continue to bind the parties until revised by arbitration or other agreed procedure. ⁷⁸⁴

- ^{775.} The alternative analysis is that the employer has a right to nominal damages for breach of contract, which, in the rare cases where substantial loss will result if the error is not immediately dealt with, becomes a right to substantial damages or other remedy. On this analysis, the contractor is protected by the fact that if the error is remediable, he will always have the right to attempt to remedy it first.
- ^{776.} See Kay v Hosier & Dickinson [1972] 1 W.L.R. 146 at 165D-H where such non-fulfilment is characterised as a “temporary disconformity” in a dissenting speech by Lord Diplock. Lord Diplock’s dictum has, however, never been enthusiastically adopted; see: Lintest Building v Roberts (1980) 13 B.L.R. 38 at 44; Nene Housing Society Ltd v National Westminster Bank Ltd (1980) 16 B.L.R. 22 at 32; Surrey Heath BC v Lovell Construction Ltd and Haden Young Ltd (1988) 42 B.L.R. 25; Guinness Plc v CMD Property Developments Ltd (1995) 76 B.L.R. 40 at 57–58; Pearce and High Ltd v Baxter Pt 3 [1999] B.L.R. 101 CA.
- ^{777.} Principally termination of employment.
- ^{778.} ICC Form cl.46.
- ^{779.} Turner v Mathind (1992) 23 Con. L.R. 16 at 27 CA.
- ^{780.} See Sutcliffe v Chippendale & Edmondson (1971) 18 B.L.R. 157, 165; and the references to Yeoman Credit Ltd v Apps [1962] 2 Q.B. 508 CA.
- ^{781.} 64 Con. L.R. 84.
- ^{782.} London Borough of Merton v Leach (1985) 32 B.L.R. 51, 78; and see Perini v Commonwealth of Australia (1969) 12 B.L.R. 82.
- ^{783.} Pacific Associates v Baxter (1988) 44 B.L.R. 33.
- ^{784.} Lubenham Fidelities v South Pembrokeshire DC (1988) 33 B.L.R. 39; and see Channel Tunnel Group v Balfour Beatty [1993] A.C. 334; (1993) 61 B.L.R. 1 HL.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts

Section 9. - Remedies by Enforcement

(a) - Control by Contract Administrator

Introduction

37-233

Commercial contracts may contain both primary obligations (e.g. description of subject matter, delivery dates, etc.) and secondary obligations ⁷⁸⁵ which take effect upon breach or non-performance of the former (e.g. an obligation to pay liquidated damages). In construction contracts such extensive use is made of secondary obligations that it may be said that the principal and often exclusive remedies for non-performance are to be found within the contract terms, through direct enforcement. The principal agency through which this is achieved (by whichever party enforcement is sought) will usually be the contract administrator. Thus, while claims for breach of contract will usually be available, they are often in practical terms limited, in the case of the employer to those arising from latent defects which are manifested after completion and, in the case of the contractor, to claims similar to or even duplicating those available under the contract terms.

Alternative to breach

37-234

The Standard Forms of Contract empower the contract administrator to give decisions whose effect is to correct potential breaches, so as to bring the work back into conformity, where there is a departure from the requirements of the contract. Under JCT SBC 2011, for example, the architect may issue instructions for the removal from site of any work or materials not in accordance with the contract. ⁷⁸⁶ Similar powers exist under ICC Form, which also contains elaborate provisions for testing to ascertain compliance with the contract. ⁷⁸⁷ Where the work is brought back into conformity as a result of Contract Administrator instructions, there will be no further contractual consequence save that the contractor remains liable to the employer for any delay and must himself bear any expense which results from the need for the instruction in the first place. However, where the basis of the instruction is disputed, both the cost and delay consequences may form the subject of a claim by the contractor.

Delay by contractor

37-235

Intervention by the contract administrator where the contractor's default consists of delay (as opposed to defects in quality) involves more difficult concepts, since delay will usually be measured by a programme which is not itself an express obligation of the contractor. No breach, therefore occurs until the completion date is reached, save for the possibility of establishing a failure to proceed with due expedition ⁷⁸⁸ or regularly and diligently. In West Faulkner Associates v London Borough of Newham ⁷⁸⁹ it was held that cl.25(1)(b) of the JCT form for use by Local Authorities (1963 edn 1977 rev.) required the contractor to proceed both regularly and diligently, and that the contractor could be dismissed from the site if he failed to do either. Some contracts empower the contract administrator to give instructions which are intended to result in more expeditious progress. ⁷⁹⁰ The exercise of such powers, however, frequently lead to disputes where the contractor claims to be entitled to extension of time. In such a case, the instruction may be contended to be an instruction to accelerate. ⁷⁹¹

Operation of the contract

37-236

Many of the powers of the contract administrator are essential to operation of the procedures of the contract. Thus, payment provisions depend on the proper operation of the procedure for interim and final certificates of payment, including detailed provisions for measurement and valuation. These powers include decisions on whether work and materials conform to the requirements of the contract, as well as decisions on “claims” made by the contractor. Where delay occurs, the contract requires decisions on whether or not extension of time is merited, where rejection will almost invariably lead, when the completion date is passed, to a claim by the employer for delay damages. The contract administrator must exercise his power to consider the grant of extensions of time as much for the benefit of the employer as for the benefit of the contractor. This is because the courts will not allow a claim for liquidated damages by an employer who has effectively prevented completion. ⁷⁹²

Powers of control generally

37-237

Standard forms of construction contract, particularly those of a more traditional kind, tend to vest the contract administrator with wide and seemingly arbitrary powers of control which appear to place the appointed person in full charge of the works. Thus, under ICC Form, cl.13(1) provides that the contractor shall “complete the Works in strict accordance with the contract to the satisfaction of the Engineer and shall comply with and adhere strictly to the Engineer’s instructions on any matter connected therewith (whether mentioned in the contract or not”. Such clauses do not, however, in practice lead to the engineer taking control of the works, since by doing so the engineer would risk incurring liability on behalf of the employer for any variation to the works that might be ordered. ⁷⁹³ The standard forms generally provide other means of claiming compensation in addition, where the contractor’s ability to carry out the works as he may choose is interfered with. ⁷⁹⁴ Engineers and architects will therefore generally be reluctant to exercise powers vested in them, save where this is clearly necessary or (in the case of a variation) authorised by the client, who must bear the financial consequence. Other powers typically available to the contract administrator, and which will in practice be utilised with caution, include powers to suspend or postpone work ⁷⁹⁵ and to terminate the contractor’s employment under the contract (see below).

^{785.} See Photoproductions v Securicor Transport [1980] A.C. 827; Lombard North v Butterworth [1987] Q.B. 527.

^{786.} JCT SBC 2011 cl.3.18.1.

^{787.} See cl.36, 38 and 39.

^{788.} See ICC Form cl.41(2).

^{789.} (1994) 71 B.L.R. 1 CA.

^{790.} See, e.g. ICC Form cl.46.

^{791.} In the absence of direct English authority, see Norair Engineering v US (1981) 666 F. 546; and Morrison Knudsen v BC Hydro (1978) 85 D.L.R. 3d 186; (1978) 7 Const. L.J. 227.

^{792.} Percy Bilton Ltd v GLC [1982] 1 W.L.R. 794; (1982) 20 B.L.R. 1 HL.

- 793. The term “variation” tends to be given a wide definition under most standard construction contracts: see, e.g. ICC Form cl.51, JCT 98 cl.13 and JCT SBC 2005 cl.5.1.
- 794. See ICC Form cl.13(3), JCT 98 cl.26 and JCT SBC 2005 cl.4.23 to 4.26.
- 795. ICC Form cl.40, JCT 2011 cl. 3.15.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts
Section 9. - Remedies by Enforcement
(b) - Claims

Claims by contractor

37-238

The term “claim” is often applied to any application involving payment beyond the stated contract sum (in the case of a lump sum contract) or beyond the sum of the remeasured quantities applied to the contract rates (in the case of a remeasurement contract). Claims typically include payment for disputed extras and payment under the provisions of the contract which allow for additional recovery in specified circumstances. A claim brought pursuant to the terms of a contract is for enforcement of its terms, subject to proof of the facts asserted where these are disputed, and so is a claim under the contract, rather than being a claim for breach. In addition, the term “claim” is often applied to a claim for damages for breach.⁷⁹⁶ Such claims often overlap with or form an alternative to a contractual claim, the facts relied on and the financial consequences asserted being common. Where this is so, consideration needs to be given to whether the effect of the contract is to render the contractual claim an exclusive remedy. Generally, the reverse is the case. The effect of bringing an alternative claim for breach may be to avoid the effect of a notice provision which would bar the claim under the contract terms.

Claims by employer—delay

37-239

Claims under the terms of the contract brought by the employer are usually limited to claims for delay damages, which are frequently expressed as liquidated (i.e. predetermined) damages involving no requirement of proof. Whether a delay claim is for liquidated or actual damages, it is rarely necessary for the employer to launch proceedings since, under most systems of procurement, the employer is the debtor and may simply set-off the sum claimed. The claim will then require proof as a counterclaim to any proceedings for non-payment which may be brought by the contractor.⁷⁹⁷

Claims by employer—quality

37-240

Claims by the employer relating to the quality of the work arising during the period of performance are generally intended to be settled by the contract administrator by decisions given under express powers, i.e. to reject non-conforming work. The work should, therefore, comply fully with the contract at the date of the completion certificate.⁷⁹⁸ Latent defects appearing during the “defects liability period”⁷⁹⁹ or “rectification period”⁸⁰⁰ amount to a breach of contract, which the contractor, by virtue of these provisions, is entitled to be given the opportunity to correct.⁸⁰¹ Where the contractor fails to carry out such correction or there is a dispute, the employer remains the debtor through the retention fund, to which recourse may be had to satisfy any loss. It is therefore similarly unlikely that the employer will need to bring proceedings. With the possible exception of a claim for termination or repudiation, claims by the employer (other than claims by set-off) are in practice limited to those arising from latent defects in the work. Such claims are not usually subject to any action by the contract administrator, who will be functus officio. Such a claim will be for breach of contract ⁸⁰² and will be subject to the effect of any final certificate as well as limitation.

Particular provisions for claims

37-241

Each form of contract has its own characteristic types of claim, based on risks typically encountered by a particular industry. Thus, in civil engineering work, unexpected sub-surface conditions are a frequent cause of difficulty. The ICE Conditions and subsequently the ICC Form has, from its inception, made provision for dividing this risk between the parties such that the contractor undertakes the risk of ground conditions which could reasonably be foreseen by an experienced contractor and the employer takes the risk where such conditions could not reasonably be so foreseen. ⁸⁰³ Where such a claim is established the conditions of contract entitle the contractor to be paid for the additional cost incurred, including delay. Building contracts are typically silent as regards ground conditions which will therefore be at the contractor's risk unless conditions exist which should have been measured in accordance with the relevant standard method of measurement ⁸⁰⁴ or unless the circumstances can be brought within any other provision of the contract. Adverse ground conditions are typical of claims in which the risk may be placed upon the employer (as under the ICC Form), but where the contract is silent, the risk will fall upon the contractor (as under the JCT Form). Another example is cost inflation (fluctuations) where the risk will fall upon the contractor unless transferred to the employer by the terms of the contract.

Claims for loss and expense

37-242

⚠ The JCT Form of Contract contains a well-known claim provision entitling the contractor to payment of "direct loss and/or expense" arising from a variety of matters including late provision of instructions, failure to give access and architect's instructions requiring a variation. ⁸⁰⁵ Such a claim is conditional upon timely notice ⁸⁰⁶ and upon the loss or expense being such that it would "not be reimbursed by payment under any other provision in this contract". In the case of a variation, therefore, the contractor is entitled to recover payment for the work itself pursuant to the valuation provisions included in the contract, together with any additional loss and/or expense incurred. ⁸⁰⁷ Normally a contractor will be unable to recover loss and expense in relation to delay where it would have suffered the exact same loss and expense anyway, even absent the relevant matters alleged to be the employer's responsibility, as a result of causes within the contractor's control or for which it is contractually responsible. ⁸⁰⁸ The ICC Form contains no similar provision, but allow a claim based on variations where it is established that the effect is to render "any rate or price contained in the contract ... unreasonable or inapplicable". ⁸⁰⁹ The engineer is then empowered to increase the rate in question so as to compensate the contractor. Claims for late instructions or failure to give access are dealt with under other specific clauses. In contrast to the last paragraph, claims for loss and/or expense or rate adjustment are matters which may, absent provisions under the contract, still be regarded as employer's risks since they arise from interference through the issuing of variations. Such claims may otherwise be expressed, in the alternative, as claims for breach. A party seeking to prove a claim on a global or total costs basis carries a greater burden than a party seeking to prove the same claim on a particularised or itemised basis. ⁸¹⁰ ⚠

Extensions of time and claims

37-243

Where a ground of claim also gives rise to an extension of time, part of the quantification of the claim will be the time-dependent element of the loss or additional cost. Not all grounds of claim give rise to delay, nor do all entitlements to extension of time carry a right to payment. For example, exceptionally adverse weather is usually recognised (but subject to the precise wording of the contract) as qualifying for an extension but any additional cost is at the contractor's risk. Under the JCT 2011, cl.2.29 lists those relevant events which entitle the contractor to an extension of time ⁸¹¹ and cl.4.24 lists those relevant matters which entitle the contractor to recover loss and expense including time related costs. A comparison of those two clauses reveals those issues which entitle the contractor to additional time but not additional money. Under the ICC Form grounds of claim carrying an entitlement to reimbursement are contained within individual clauses. ⁸¹² Extensions of time are dealt with by a general clause as well as in a number of individual clauses. ⁸¹³

-
- ^{796.} For an analysis of the problems of quantifying claims for time and money, see: Ascon Contracting Ltd v Alfred McAlpine Construction (Isle of Man) Ltd (1999) 66 Con. L.R. 119.
- ^{797.} For contracts subject to the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 (as amended by the Local Democracy, Economic Development and Construction Act 2009) a counterclaim also requires appropriate notice, pursuant to s.111(3) as amended, of intention to pay less than the sum otherwise due to the contractor.
- ^{798.} With the exception of particular powers whereby the Contract Administrator may accept completion subject to minor or outstanding work see, e.g. ICC Form cl.48, 49.
- ^{799.} See JCT 98 cl.17.
- ^{800.} See JCT SBC 2005 cl.2.34 and 2.39.
- ^{801.} See Kaye v Hosier & Dickinson [1972] 1 W.L.R. 146 HL.
- ^{802.} In McGlenn v Waltham Contractors Ltd [2007] EWHC 149 (TCC), [2007] 111 Con. L.R. 1 it was held that a claimant who had demolished and rebuilt his property due to building defects was only entitled to damages based upon the cost of repairing the defects, rather than the higher cost of demolishing and rebuilding the property, because the defects complained of were aesthetic rather than structural and he had not acted reasonably in demolishing the building.
- ^{803.} ICC Form cl.12.
- ^{804.} Such as rock or running sand.
- ^{805.} JCT SBC 2011 cl.4.23 and 4.24.
- ^{806.} See WW Gear Construction Ltd v McGee Group Ltd [2010] EWHC 1460 (TCC), 131 Con. L.R. 63, where the JCT Standard Trade Contract (TC/C) Conditions 2002 (as amended) were construed to make a timely request in writing a pre-condition for an entitlement to recover loss and expense under the contract, and where it was indicated that in deciding whether a clause was or was not a condition precedent to recovery, the ordinary rules of contractual construction should apply (at [11]–[13]).
- ^{807.} Loss and/or expense has been equated to common law damages: Wright v PT & H (Holdings) (1968) 13 B.L.R. 26.
- ^{808.} See De Beers v Atos Origin IT Services [2011] B.L.R. 274, per Edwards-Stuart J. at [177]–[178]. The distinction between the test of causation that applies to extension of time and loss and expense provisions using the JCT wording was confirmed in Walter Lilly & Co Ltd v DMW Developments Ltd [2012] EWHC 1773 (TCC), [2012] B.L.R. 503, per Akenhead J. at [362]–[370] and [540]–[543].
- ^{809.} ICC Form cl.52(4).
- ^{810.}  Walter Lilly & Co Ltd v Mackay, DMW Developments Ltd [2012] EWHC 1773 (TCC), [2012]

B.L.R. 503 per Akenhead J. at [486]; John Sisk & Son Ltd v Carmel Building Services Ltd [2016] EWHC 806 (TCC), [2016] B.L.R. 283, per Carr J. at [55]-[56].

- 811. Relevant Events are discussed in Henry Boot Construction (UK) Ltd v Malmaison Hotel (Manchester) Ltd (1999) 70 Con. L.R. 32. A contractor may be entitled to an extension of time not only if the matter relied upon is the dominant cause of delay, but also if it has only “equal causative potency”, see Henry Boot Construction v Malmaison; Steria Ltd v Sigma Wireless Comm Ltd [2008] B.L.R. 79 and Keating on Construction, 9th edn (2012) at para.8-025 to 8-028.
- 812. For example, cl.7: late instructions; cl.12: adverse ground conditions; cl.13: engineer’s instructions.
- 813. See cl.7, 12, 13 above and cl.44. For a consideration of the different approach to causation in the context of a claim for damages compared to an extension of time claim, see Costain Ltd v Charles Haswell & Partners Ltd [2009] EWHC 3140 (TCC), 128 Con. L.R. 154.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts
Section 9. - Remedies by Enforcement
(c) - Termination of Employment

Meaning

37-244

This refers to termination of the employment of the contractor under the contract, as opposed to bringing the contract itself to an end. Other terms, including “forfeiture”, appear in different forms of the contract but the effect is the same. Both parties remain bound by terms of the contract which are to apply upon termination coming into effect. These will include provisions for the drawing up of accounts, including those relating to completion of the work by others. The consequences of termination for default are broadly equivalent to the effect of acceptance of a repudiatory breach of contract as terminating the contract. In the case of termination of the contractor’s employment pursuant to the terms of the contract, however, the contract makes express provision for the consequences. Termination is brought about by service of appropriate notices, whose effect may be subject to subsequent proof of the matters asserted.

Termination by employer

37-245

A provision entitling the employer to terminate on the ground of various defaults is found in practically every form of construction contract. The grounds upon which such termination is available, however, differ. Generally, termination of the contractor’s employment will be at the employer’s option and will not occur until the service of a notice to that effect. It is not uncommon for contract to require a notice of default to be served prior to the termination, giving the contractor a chance to remedy any breach. For example, under cl.8.4 of the JCT 2011 contract, the employer must give 14 days’ notice of various defaults such as a failure to proceed regularly and diligently with the works before he is entitled to terminate. By contrast, in the event of contractor insolvency under cl.8.5, the right to terminate arises immediately and even before it is exercised certain interim measures take automatic effect.

Termination by contractor

37-246

Some, but not all, forms of contract provide for termination by the contractor. The JCT Form allows termination by the contractor on various grounds, notably non-payment on a certificate after notice, and suspension of the works. ⁸¹⁴ The ICE Form introduced, in the 7th edition, a right of termination available to the contractor following events equivalent to insolvency of the employer, or where the employer attempts to assign without prior consent, and this continues in the ICC Form. ⁸¹⁵ Where the grounds of termination under the contract are equivalent to repudiation, termination may be effected both under the contract and, in the alternative, in common law. It is possible that the two remedies may be seen as involving mutual inconsistency. There is authority, however, to the effect that both remedies may be exercised in the alternative. ⁸¹⁶ The remedy provided, following a valid termination for default, ⁸¹⁷ whether by employer or contractor, is usually equivalent to common law damages following termination at law, but with added contractual remedies. Thus, there is usually a provision that upon termination by the employer the contractor must assign the benefit of sub-contracts. ⁸¹⁸ Under the 6th edition of the ICE Conditions, property in plant and materials was deemed to vest in the employer when on the site and could subsequently be used by the employer after any termination. ⁸¹⁹ These provisions were removed from the 7th edition and do not appear in the ICC Form.

Termination of employment and fundamental breach compared

37-247

It is important to note that in the case of termination by either the employer or the contractor, the grounds provided under the contract may fall far short of what could be regarded as fundamental breach, leading to a right to terminate the contract in law.

Termination at will

37-248

Many forms of contract provide for termination, solely by the employer, without ground of default, providing a remedy broadly equivalent to that generally available under civil law in respect of an administrative contract. ⁸²⁰ Such provisions exist in Form GC Works/1, formerly issued for use by UK government departments. In such cases, the contractor will usually be entitled to full compensation, including loss of profit. The JCT Form of Contract provides for termination without fault where the works are suspended for specified reasons, including force majeure. ⁸²¹ Such termination may be effected by either party.

Disputed termination

37-249

To be effective, the act of termination by one party must be followed by withdrawal from the site. In the case of termination by the employer it is possible that the contractor may seek to resist physical removal from the site pending final resolution of the question whether the employer was entitled to take such action. In Hounslow v Twickenham Gardens ⁸²² the contractor refused to leave the site after service of notice of termination under a JCT Form of Contract. The employer sought an injunction which was refused by Megarry J. on the ground that the employer was under an implied obligation not to revoke the contractor's licence to occupy the site except in accordance with the contract. It was held that the employer had not, for the purpose of the injunction proceedings, conclusively established the validity of its termination notices. It was stated:

"I fully accept the importance to the Borough on social grounds as well as others of securing the due completion of the contract, and the unsatisfactory nature of damages as an alternative. But the contract was made, and the Contractors are not to be stripped of their rights under it, however desirable that may be for the Borough. A contract remains a contract even if (or perhaps especially if) it turns out badly."

This decision has been much criticised and has not been followed in a number of cases including Chermer v Pretest ⁸²³ and Tara Civil Engineering v Moorfield Developments. ⁸²⁴ In the latter case, where a contractor disputed notice of termination served under the ICE Conditions, the Court rejected the contractor's claim to be entitled to remain on the site in the interim, holding that the issues raised by the parties were to be decided by arbitration. Pending ultimate resolution, the balance of convenience was strongly in favour of the court supporting the engineer's decision. ⁸²⁵ It would appear unlikely that the courts will now support a challenge to an apparently bona fide exercise of a contractual right of termination by granting an injunction.

Mutual termination

37-250

In some cases both parties have sought, virtually simultaneously, to exercise rights of termination. This was the case in Att-Gen of Hong Kong v Ko Hon Mau, ⁸²⁶ where the contractor gave notice of termination under the HK Public Works Highways Maintenance Conditions. Ten days later, the Government gave cross-notice of termination and physically re-entered the site taking possession of the contractor's plant. The contractor sought to enforce his right to take possession of the plant, which was resisted by the Government. The Hong Kong Court of Appeal upheld the contractor's right on the basis that his notice was first in time, both notices being accepted as bona fide. The court observed that both notices were provisional in the sense that they would only take final effect at the conclusion of the arbitration proceedings.

^{814.} See JCT SBC 2011 cl.8.9.

^{815.} This latter provision is surprising given that any such purported assignment will be of no effect: Linden Gardens Trust Ltd v Lenesta Sludge Disposals Ltd [1994] A.C. 84; Hendry v Chartsearch [1998] EWCA Civ 1276.

^{816.} Supamarl v Federated Homes [1981] 9 Con. L.R. 25; Architectural Installation Services v James Gibbon (1989) 46 B.L.R. 91; but see also Lockland Builders v John Kim Rickwood (1995) 77 B.L.R. 38 CA and para.37-218, above.

^{817.} See Laing Management Ltd v Aegon Insurance Company (UK) Ltd (1997) 56 Con. L.R. where it was decided that the exercise of a contractual right to terminate was not to be treated as acceptance of a repudiatory breach so as to discharge both parties from future performance.

^{818.} See, e.g. JCT 98 cl.27.4 and JCT SBC 2011 cl.8.7.2.3.

^{819.} ICE 6th edn cl.53, 63(2).

^{820.} See further N. Brown and J.S. Bell, French Administrative Law, 5th edn (1998).

^{821.} See JCT SBC 2011 cl.8.11.

^{822.} [1971] Ch. 233.

^{823.} 8 Const. L.J. 44.

^{824.} (1989) 46 B.L.R. 72.

^{825.} Following American Cyanamid v Ethicon [1975] A.C. 396.

^{826.} (1988) 44 B.L.R. 144.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts
Section 9. - Remedies by Enforcement
(d) - Final Certificates

Binding effect

37-251

The issue of the final certificate (for which provision is made in most standard forms of contract) will occur in the final stages of the work of the contract administrator. This may have a profound effect on the ability of either party subsequently to enforce the terms of the contract. In JCT 2011, cl.1.10 provides for the issue of a Final Certificate, which may be disputed within 28 days after issue, but will become binding both as to matters of quality and payment to the extent that it is not specifically challenged. The significance and effect of the issue of a final certificate which is not challenged within the specified period, will be a matter of construction. ⁸²⁷ In Crown Estates Commissioners v John Mowlem ⁸²⁸ the Court of Appeal held that the final certificate issued under JCT 80 was conclusive in respect of all works under the contract, since on a true construction of cl.30.9.1.1 all matters of standards and quality of work and materials were for the reasonable opinion of the architect and so were concluded (in the absence of arbitration) by the issue of a final certificate. A similar decision had previously been reached in relation to the IFC 84 Form in Colbart v Kumar. ⁸²⁹ The consequence of these decisions is that, under these forms of contract, no evidence may be called to contradict or qualify the architect's decision as expressed in the final certificate, so that it is effectively binding on the parties on all relevant questions of fact. However, although the final certificate operates as an evidential bar, it does not constitute a cessation of liability for the purposes, for example, of the Civil Liability (Contribution) Act 1978. ⁸³⁰

Decisions criticized

37-252

The decision in Crown Estates was the subject of trenchant criticism ⁸³¹ and it is also to be observed that the JCT changed the wording of the clause to overcome the perceived difficulties created by Crown Estates. The current version of the clause gives the final certificate conclusive effect in respect of the quality of work or materials only if the contract documents make it clear that the parties have agreed to abide by the decision of the architect in issuing the final certificate for the relevant parts or requirements of the works. However, decisions on final certificates in other standard forms indicate that a broad construction of the relevant contract terms is still preferred. In Matthew Hall Ordtech v Tarmac Roadstone ⁸³² it was held that on a true construction of cl.38.5 of the Institution of Chemical Engineers Model Form of Conditions of Contract for Process Plants (1981 rev.) the final certificate is conclusive evidence that all work has been completed in accordance with the requirements of the contract. However, it is to be observed that the Scottish Court of Session has given a more restrictive view to the effect of a Final Certificate issued under JCT 63 (July 1977 revision) Form of Contract. ⁸³³

^{827.} See generally as to the effect of final certificates Kaye v Hosier and Dickinson [1972] 1 W.L.R. 146 HL; and East Ham Corp v Bernard Sunley & Sons Ltd [1966] A.C. 406 HL.

- 828. (1994) 70 B.L.R. 1 CA.
- 829. (1992) 59 B.L.R. 89.
- 830. Oxford University Fixed Assets Ltd v Architects Design Partnership (1999) 64 Con. L.R. 12.
- 831. Duncan Wallace (1995) 11 Const. L.J. 184.
- 832. (1997) 87 B.L.R. 96.
- 833. Belcher Food Products Ltd v Miller & Black, 1999 S.L.T. 142 (opinion of Lord Gill).

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts
Section 10. - Disputes
(a) - Nature of Disputes

Disputes under construction contracts

37-253

In contrast to a contract for sale of goods, where disputes may relate to the quality of the goods as delivered or to the date of delivery, disputes under construction contracts can arise from every aspect of the production of the works required by the contract, including the speed of production. Moreover, as regards quality, as a consequence of the proper application of the contract terms, the works as finally delivered may be expected to accord to the requirements of the contract and to give rise to subsequent disputes only in respect of latent defects. Disputes concerning pre-delivery performance of the work are likely to involve, in addition to the original contract requirements, consideration of instructions, variations and approvals, both in terms of their timing and overall effect. Where delay occurs, there may be detailed disputes as to the causes, including scrutiny of programmes and progress reports. In all such cases, decisions may have been made by the contract administrator which may (with limited exceptions) subsequently be challenged by way of adjudication, arbitration or litigation. Disputes may thus encompass all aspects of quality, timing and payment. The question of whether a “dispute” or “difference” has in fact arisen may be important in the context of dispute resolution procedures, particularly in the case of adjudication or arbitration, where a dispute or difference must have arisen before those procedures are operated, in order to vest the adjudicator or arbitrator with jurisdiction. The most authoritative discussion of this topic, in the context of arbitration but equally applicable to adjudication, is in Amec Civil Engineering Ltd v Secretary of State for Transport,⁸³⁴ and in Collins (Contractors) Ltd v Baltic Quay Management (1994) Ltd,⁸³⁵ where Clarke L.J. accepted as “broadly correct” the test set out in the form of the seven propositions by Jackson J. in the first instance decision in Amec.

⁸³⁴. [2005] EWCA Civ 291, [2005] 1 W.L.R. 2339.

⁸³⁵. [2004] EWCA Civ 1757, [2005] B.L.R. 63.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts

Section 10. - Disputes

(b) - Conditions Precedent

Multi-stage disputes

37-254

While disputes are a widespread feature of construction contracts, their incidence is usually controlled by the terms of the contract. Generally, more elaborate contracts will provide for a series of stages through which a dispute may or must proceed before arbitration or litigation become available to the parties. Where a particular stage, on the true construction of the contract, is mandatory, it will operate as a condition precedent to the right to pursue the claim to the next stage.⁸³⁶ Subject to any question of waiver, the failure to comply with such a condition precedent may afford the other party a defence to the claim.⁸³⁷ Such conditions precedent may arise through necessary implication from the express requirements of the contract. An example is the requirement for a claim or contention to be referred to the engineer under earlier versions of the ICE Conditions⁸³⁸ of Contract.⁸³⁹ The 1998 edition of FIDIC similarly requires disputes which have not been settled through reference to the engineer to be referred to a Dispute Adjudication Board. The effect of these provisions (subject to the effect of the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 where applicable) is that the matter in question must have been so referred, and other provisions of the contract (such as the service of timely notice) also complied with, as a condition precedent to an arbitrator subsequently appointed having jurisdiction. Complex issues of fact and construction can arise under such clauses, for example where the engineer has failed to give a clear response under the contract.⁸⁴⁰ Care must also be exercised in complying with the requirements for the commencement of arbitration proceedings within agreed time periods since the courts will make use of the power under s.12 of the Arbitration Act 1996 (to extend time for reference to arbitration) sparingly, and not to overcome the carelessness or ignorance of one of the parties.⁸⁴¹

Enforcement of conditions precedent

37-255

The modern attitude of the courts to such provisions was expressed by Lord Mustill in *Channel Tunnel Group v Balfour Beatty Construction*⁸⁴² as follows:

“Having made this choice I believe that it is in accordance not only with the presumption exemplified in the English cases cited above that those who make arrangements for the resolution of disputes must show good reasons for departing from them, but also with the interests of the orderly regulation of international commerce, that having promised to take their complaints to the experts and if necessary to the arbitrators, that is where the appellants should go. The fact that the appellants now find their chosen method too slow to suit their purpose, is to my way of thinking quite beside the point.”

The case concerned the enforcement by the court, pursuant to its inherent jurisdiction, of a dispute resolution procedure involving reference to a panel of experts, to be followed by arbitration, where one party had sought an injunction from the court in respect of an issue which was to be so referred. Where litigation has been commenced without the parties having fully complied with mandatory steps in the dispute resolution procedure, the Courts will ordinarily enforce the agreed procedure by granting a stay of the proceedings until such time as the preceding steps in the procedure have been complied with, although there is a residual discretion not to grant a stay.⁸⁴³

- ^{836.} See Channel Tunnel Group v Balfour Beatty [1993] A.C. 334, per Lord Mustill at 353.
- ^{837.} A party who concurs in arbitration proceedings without raising any alleged condition precedent may found a waiver or estoppel or even give rise to an ad hoc submission: see Jones v Balfour Beatty (1992) 42 Con. L.R. 1; and see also Arbitration Act 1996 s.73 as to the timely raising of questions of jurisdiction.
- ^{838.} cl.66, as to which see Monmouthshire CC v Costelloe & Kemple [1965] 5 B.L.R. 83 at 91; Anglian Water v RDL Contracting (1988) 43 B.L.R. 98; Wigan Metropolitan BC v Sharkey Bros (1988) 43 B.L.R. 115; ECC Quarries v Merriman (1988) 45 B.L.R. 90; Mid Glamorgan CC v The Land Authority for Wales (1990) 49 B.L.R. 61; Havant BC v South Coast Shipping Company (1998) 14 Const. L.J. 420; Edmund Nuttall v RG Carter [2002] B.L.R. 312.
- ^{839.} The ICE Conditions were substantially amended in the light of the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act and the ICC Form now contains no requirement for an engineer's decision.
- ^{840.} See I.N.D. Wallace Q.C., Construction Contracts: Principles and Policies in Tort and Contract, Ch.18—The Timebar in FIDIC cl.67.
- ^{841.} Harbour and General Works v Environmental Agency [1999] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 953, [1999] B.L.R. 143.
- ^{842.} [1993] A.C. 334.
- ^{843.} See DGT Steel and Cladding Ltd v Cubitt Building and Interiors Ltd [2007] EWHC 1584 (TCC) at paras 5 to 13 and cases cited therein.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts
Section 10. - Disputes
(c) - Arbitration

Alternative fora

37-256

Most standard form construction contracts, ⁸⁴⁴ and particularly those in use internationally, provide for arbitration as the final means of resolution of disputes between the parties to the contract. ⁸⁴⁵ In the case of an arbitration agreement contained in a domestic construction contract (being one in which both parties and the seat of the arbitration are located in England and Wales), arbitration and litigation effectively provide alternative fora for the resolution of disputes. Either party is, however, entitled to enforce an arbitration agreement ⁸⁴⁶ irrespective of the wish of the other party to bring concurrent court proceedings against other parties which may not be available in arbitration, ⁸⁴⁷ or of any other considerations which might render litigation more appropriate. The discretion formerly available to the court is no longer available under the Arbitration Act 1996. ⁸⁴⁸

Jurisdiction of court

37-257

In Northern RHA v Derek Crouch Construction ⁸⁴⁹ the Court of Appeal held that, where an arbitration clause empowered the arbitrator to “open up review and revise” a certificate of the architect, the court did not possess such a power but was limited to enforcing the terms of the contract. The effect was that any dispute which involved challenging decisions given by an architect, engineer or other contract administrator had to be brought by arbitration. This was followed in a number of subsequent cases. ⁸⁵⁰ The decision has, however, now been conclusively reversed by the House of Lords in Beaufort Developments v Gilbert-Ash, ⁸⁵¹ with the effect that words expressly empowering an arbitrator to grant particular remedies will not be construed as limiting those remedies to arbitration proceedings. While the contract may provide for certificates to bind the court:

“... in all other respects, where a party comes to the court in the search for an ordinary remedy under the contract or for a remedy in respect of an alleged breach of it, the court is entitled to examine the facts and to form its own opinion upon them in the light of the evidence. The fact that the Architect has formed an opinion on the matter will be part of the evidence. But, as it will not be conclusive evidence, the Court can disregard his opinion if it does not agree with it.” ⁸⁵²

^{844.} It should be noted that the default position in respect of dispute resolution under the JCT 2005 suite of contracts is now litigation, not arbitration. This represents a change from previous editions of the JCT Standard Form suite of contracts, although the parties are of course free to make arbitration the final means of dispute resolution by way of an appropriate amendment or by ad hoc agreement to refer.

- 845. Arbitration clauses are to be construed in the same way as any other contractual clause. However, whilst arbitration clauses, like any other clause, can be unenforceable for ambiguity, the court will generally lean heavily towards a construction of the words used by the parties which gives a sensible and effective interpretation to the arbitration clause. See: Star Shipping AS v China National Foreign Trade Transportation Corp (The Star Texas) [1993] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 445 CA; Lobb Partnership Ltd v Aintree Racecourse Co Ltd [2000] B.L.R. 65.
- 846. See Arbitration Act 1996 s.9.
- 847. See Taunton Collins v Cromie [1964] 1 W.L.R. 633, a case under the Arbitration Act 1950, which gave the court discretion to refuse a stay where litigation was considered more appropriate.
- 848. The statutory provisions which created a discretion were s.4(1) of the Arbitration Act 1950 and s.86 of the Arbitration Act 1996 (not brought into effect). For decisions on the mandatory stay provided by s.9(4) of the Arbitration Act 1996, see: Halki Shipping v Sopex Oils [1998] 1 W.L.R. 726 CA; Birse Construction Ltd v St David Ltd [2000] B.L.R. 57 CA; Ahmad Al-Naimi (trading as Buildmaster Construction Services) v Islamic Press Agency Inc [2000] B.L.R. 150 CA. The requirements for a "step" within the meaning of s.9(3) of the Arbitration Act 1996 were considered in Bhailbhai Patel v Dilesh R Patel [2000] Q.B. 551, [1999] B.L.R. 227 CA.
- 849. [1984] Q.B. 644.
- 850. Including the decisions of the Court of Appeal in: Rapid Building v Ealing Family Housing Association (1984) 29 B.L.R. 5; Turner & Goudy v McConnell [1985] 1 W.L.R. 898; CM Pillings v Kent Instruments (1985) 30 B.L.R. 80; Youll v Arthur White (Contractors) Ltd Unreported March 5, 1987; Benstrete Construction v Hill (1987) 38 B.L.R. 115; Ashville Investments v Elmer Contractors [1989] Q.B. 488; North West Reg Thames RHA v Shephard Robson (1995) 50 Con. L.R. 79; Balfour Beatty Civil Engineering v Docklands Light Railway (1996) 78 B.L.R. 42.
- 851. [1999] 1 A.C. 266.
- 852. per Lord Hope at 291-292.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts

Section 10. - Disputes

(d) - Litigation

Technology and Construction Court

37-258

In cases where the parties do not enter into, or do not seek to enforce, an arbitration agreement, either party is free to litigate any issue arising under a construction contract, subject to the effect of any certificate ⁸⁵³ or decision rendered binding under the terms of the contract. ⁸⁵⁴ The existence of an arbitration clause, if not enforced, is immaterial. ⁸⁵⁵ Proceedings may be brought in the newly named Technology and Construction Court (TCC), ⁸⁵⁶ where cases are heard by specialist judges experienced in construction matters.

Particular features of the TCC

37-259

For the purposes of Pt 49 of the new Civil Procedure Rules, the TCC is considered as specialist proceedings. Every claim allocated to the TCC will be allocated to the multi-track and the rules relating to track allocation will not apply. ⁸⁵⁷ "TCC business" includes any claim which involves issues or questions which are technically complex or for which trial by a judge of the TCC is for any other reason desirable. TCC business may be dealt with either in the High Court or in the county court. Under their former name as Official Referees' Courts, original procedures were introduced, many of which have been adopted generally throughout the courts. These include the exchange of expert evidence, ⁸⁵⁸ exchange of witness statements ⁸⁵⁹ and meetings between experts without prejudice. ⁸⁶⁰ Procedures not commonly adopted in other divisions include preparation of pleadings and particulars in the form of schedules. A schedule which sets out, in columns, the items in dispute with a note of the contention of each party and the sums contended for is popularly known as a "Scott Schedule". ⁸⁶¹

Presentation of claims

37-260

The nature and often complicated factual basis for many claims made in construction litigation will mean that special difficulties arise in the way they are presented and pleaded in court. The use of the Scott Schedule has already been mentioned. Where an alleged loss may be attributed to a series of possible competing technical causes, there is a question as to the degree of particulars and detailed analysis of nexus which must be set out in the written presentation of the case. In a "global claim" or "total cost claim" ⁸⁶² the claimant will identify alleged breaches, events alleged to permit recovery and alleged loss suffered, but the loss will be given as a global sum without specific linkages to particular alleged causative events. The practical difficulties and necessary limitation in pleading an accurate apportionment of loss between competing causes was accepted in Crosby v Portland UDC ⁸⁶³, but in other cases, a far more demanding approach to the requirements of pleading has been adopted. ⁸⁶⁴ The courts have emphasised that it is not for the court to require that a claim should be pleaded in a particular way, ⁸⁶⁵ and that the overriding concern is to see that all the necessary information is properly placed before the court.⁸⁶⁶ His Honour Judge Lloyd Q.C. pointed out in Bernhard's Rugby that the time was approaching, under the new Civil Procedure Rules,⁸⁶⁷ that a plaintiff would be required from the outset to present its claim in "... considerably more detail than is present customary ...".⁸⁶⁸ In *London Underground Ltd v Citylink Telecommunications Ltd*⁸⁶⁹ the approach to global claims in the light of the Scottish Court of Session decision in *John Doyle Construction Ltd v Laing Management (Scotland) Ltd*⁸⁷⁰ was considered. In John Doyle it was held, in relation to a global claim for losses alleged to have resulted from a series of events, that although the events relied upon and the heads of loss should be set out comprehensively in the claimant's pleading it would usually be sufficient, to establish the causal links between those events and the claimed losses, simply to assert that such links existed. In the London Underground case, Ramsey J. accepted this approach and added that, in the event of the successful undermining of the global claim such that the claim itself failed, the court could consider whether a more limited claim for delay and/or loss caused by specific events was available to the claimant in the light of the evidence. The surviving claim would emerge from the evidence in relation to the global claim without the need for such a claim to be specifically pleaded.⁸⁷¹

Alternative dispute resolution (ADR)

37-261

Where a commercial agreement between parties requires ADR to be undertaken, the strong tendency of the courts, especially in the specialist divisions, is to refuse to permit a party to pursue proceedings without having first instituted ADR proceedings.⁸⁷² There is a separate jurisdiction to stay proceedings in accordance with the principles set out in the CPR, and in *Shirayama Shokusan Company Ltd v Danovo Ltd*⁸⁷³ Blackburne J. concluded that the court had jurisdiction to order the parties to mediate even where one party was opposed to any mediation, and although the prospects for success of such a process was limited. A refusal by one party to mediate will often, though not necessarily, have adverse costs consequences, but each case will depend on its own facts.⁸⁷⁴

^{853.} The question of final certificates was further considered in London Borough of Barking & Dagenham v Terrapin Construction Ltd [2000] B.L.R. 479 CA (in the context of JCT 1981 with Contractor's Design); and in Tameside MBC v Barlow Securities Group Services Ltd [2001] B.L.R. 113 CA.

^{854.} See above.

^{855.} See Beaufort Development v Gilbert-Ash [1998] 2 W.L.R. 860.

^{856.} Formerly the Official Referees Division of the Queen's Bench.

^{857.} TCC Practice Direction (March 11, 1999). For changes, consult the website of the Lord Chancellor's Department. See also Pt 60 of the CPR (which came into force on March 25, 2002), the Supplementary Practice Direction and the TCC Guide (2nd edn) with effect from October 3, 2007).

^{858.} Originally RSC Ord.38 rr.35–37, now CPR r.35.5.

^{859.} Originally RSC Ord.38 r.2A, now CPR r.32.4.

^{860.} Originally RSC Ord.38 r.38, now CPR r.35.12.

^{861.} After a former Official Referee, George Alexander Scott (1920–1933). See now The White Book Service, 2008, para.2C–71.

^{862.} See Mid-Glamorgan CC v J Devonald Williams (1991) 29 Con. L.R. 129. See the review of the decided cases on "global" claims by Lord Macfayden in John Doyle Construction Ltd v Laing Management (Scotland) Ltd [2002] B.L.R. 393 Court of Session. Subsequent to the opinion of the Lord Ordinary, see the opinions of Lords MacLean, Johnston and Drummond Young in the Extra Division of the Inner House of the Court of Session (following a reclaiming motion by the management contractor) in Laing Management (Scotland) Ltd v John Doyle Construction Ltd [2004] B.L.R. 295.

863. (1967) 5 B.L.R. 121.

864. Wharf Properties Ltd v Eric Cumine Associates (No.2) (1991) 52 B.L.R. 1 PC.

865. GMTC Tools and Equipment v Yuasa (1994) 73 B.L.R. 102 CA.

866. Bernhard's Rugby Landscape v Stockley Park (1997) 82 B.L.R. 39; Inserco Ltd v Honeywell Control Systems (1998) C.I.L.L. 1368 CA. See also GAB Robins Holdings Ltd v Specialist Computer Centres Ltd (1999) 15 Const. L.J. 43 CA.

867. In force from April 26, 1999.

868. For a useful review of (pre-CPR) authorities on pleadings in the context of construction see Gaitskell, Construction Law: Looking to the Future (CCLM Conference papers, 1998).

869. [2007] B.L.R. 391.

870. [2004] B.L.R. 295.

871. See also Great Eastern Hotel Co Ltd v John Laing Co Ltd [2005] 99 Con. L.R. 45 TCC; and City Inn Ltd v Shepherd Construction Ltd [2007] C.S.O.H. 190, [2008] B.L.R. 269.

872. Cable & Wireless Plc v IBM UK Ltd [2002] EWHC 2059 (Comm), [2003] B.L.R. 89.

873. [2003] EWHC 3306 (Ch), [2004] B.L.R. 207.

874. The Wethered Estate Ltd v Michael Davis [2006] B.L.R. 86 Ch D.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts

Section 10. - Disputes

(e) - Adjudication

Meaning of adjudication

37-262

There are numerous instances of particular construction contracts making provision for “adjudication”, whether as a matter of agreement or to achieve compliance with statutory obligations. ⁸⁷⁵ Despite this, there is no generally accepted definition of the term and no statutory definition. Guidance may be had from a number of court decisions. ⁸⁷⁶ It is to be assumed that the process envisaged by the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 is to be similar to that previously applied under contract. ⁸⁷⁷ The process involves an assessment, not necessarily exhaustive, ⁸⁷⁸ of the case advanced by each party, one of the principal objectives being to reach a rapid decision. In the case of statutory adjudication the decision is required to be given within 28 days of appointment ⁸⁷⁹ subject to any authorised extension. An adjudicator must act impartially. ⁸⁸⁰ There can be no objection as such to the adjudicator meeting the parties separately; but the adjudicator must make available to each party information submitted by the other which he intends to take into account. ⁸⁸¹

Adjudication under contract

37-263

This was introduced originally in response to a perceived need to regulate “cash-flow” in construction contracts following the House of Lords decision in Gilbert-Ash v Modern Engineering, ⁸⁸² affirming the general availability of equitable set-off, but subject to the terms of the contract. Provisions for the appointment of an adjudicator, subject to the giving of timely notice, were introduced into various forms of sub-contract and are now found in both nominated and domestic forms issued by the JCT. ⁸⁸³ Various decisions of the court have clarified the status of adjudication awards and their enforceability. ⁸⁸⁴

Adjudication by statute

37-264

This was introduced by the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 in somewhat controversial circumstances following the Latham Report of 1994. ⁸⁸⁵ The legislation enacted does not relate directly to the recommendations of the Latham Report, nor to the consultation papers issued by the DoE. Reference to the parliamentary debates reveals an intention to avoid protracted disputes under construction contracts and to speed up payment. The relevant legislation is contained in s.108 of the Act and in statutory instruments issued shortly before the coming into effect of the provisions on May 1, 1998. ⁸⁸⁶

Statutory requirements

37-265

The Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996, as now amended, lays down a series of requirements for an adjudication procedure in any construction contract as defined. Section 108 requires that the contract shall:

- (a) enable a party to give notice at any time of his intentions to refer a dispute to adjudication;
- (b) provide a timetable with the object of securing the appointment of the adjudicator and referral of the dispute to him within seven days of such notice;
- (c) require the adjudicator to reach a decision within 28 days of referral or such longer period as is agreed by the parties after the dispute has been referred;
- (d) allow the adjudicator to extend the period of 28 days by up to 14 days, with the consent of the party by whom the dispute was referred;
- (e) impose a duty on the adjudicator to act impartially; and
- (f) enable the adjudicator to take the initiative in ascertaining the facts and the law.

Section 108 of the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 further provides that a party to a construction contract has the right to refer a dispute for adjudication, that the contract is to provide that the decision of the adjudicator is binding until finally determined by arbitration or other means, and that the contract provides for immunity of the adjudicator.

The statutory scheme37-266

If the contract does not comply with the requirements of s.108 of the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act, the Scheme for Construction Contracts ⁸⁸⁷ ("the Scheme") applies. ⁸⁸⁸ The Scheme sets out, inter alia, the powers and responsibilities of the adjudicator together with a strict timetable for the conduct of the adjudication proceedings. However, the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 makes no provision for the enforcement of an adjudicator's award. Accordingly, one of the early questions raised by the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 was the attitude which the court would take to enforcement.

In Macob Civil Engineering Ltd v Morrison Construction Ltd, ⁸⁸⁹ MCL, the unsuccessful party in an adjudication, argued that, given that the adjudicator's determination was challenged, ⁸⁹⁰ it was not a "decision" within para.23 of the Scheme. Dyson J. rejected this argument pointing out that, if it were correct, it would substantially undermine the effectiveness of the Scheme, which was intended by Parliament "... to introduce a speedy mechanism for settling disputes in construction contracts on a provisional interim basis ...". ⁸⁹¹ MCL also sought a mandatory stay to arbitration under s.9 of the Arbitration Act 1996, but this was rejected on the facts of the case. ⁸⁹² Finally, Dyson J. indicated that the usual remedy for failure to pay in accordance with an adjudicator's decision will be for the successful party to issue proceedings claiming the sum due, followed by an application for summary judgment. ⁸⁹³ In Ringway Infrastructure Services Ltd v Vauxhall Motors Ltd ⁸⁹⁴ Akenhead J. held that the cause of action to enforce an adjudicator's award was contractual and that for the purposes of an award of interest under s.35A of the Senior Courts Act 1981, it accrued when the defendant failed to honour the decision.

The enforcement of adjudicator's awards

37-267

⚠ Following Macob, the courts have taken a robust approach to the enforcement of adjudicator's awards, although in the light of the decision of the Court of Appeal in Halki Shipping v Sopex Oils ⁸⁹⁵ it is not altogether easy to see why the question of enforcement ought not to be a matter to be referred to arbitration. However, the effect of the decisions on the enforcement of adjudicator's awards may be summarised as follows ⁸⁹⁶:

(1)

A decision of an adjudicator whose validity is challenged as to its factual or legal conclusions or as to procedural error remains a decision that is both enforceable and should be enforced. ⁸⁹⁷

(2)

A decision that is erroneous, even if the error is disclosed by the reasons, will still not ordinarily be capable of being challenged and should, ordinarily, still be enforced. ⁸⁹⁸

(3)

A decision may be challenged on the ground that the adjudicator was not empowered by the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act to make the decision because there was no underlying construction contract between the parties ⁸⁹⁹ or because the adjudicator has gone outside his terms of reference ⁹⁰⁰ or because there has been a breach of the rules of natural justice, ⁹⁰¹ although in the case of the latter it has been emphasised that enforcement will only be refused in the clearest cases. ⁹⁰²

(4)

Adjudication is intended to be a speedy process in which mistakes will inevitably occur. Accordingly, the court should guard against characterising a mistaken answer to an issue, which is within the adjudicator's jurisdiction, as being an excess of jurisdiction. Furthermore, the court should give a fair, natural and sensible interpretation to the decision in the light of the disputes that are the subject of the reference. ⁹⁰³

(5)

An issue as to whether a construction contract ever came into existence, which is an issue challenging the jurisdiction of the adjudicator, so long as it is reasonably and clearly raised, must be determined by the court on the balance of probabilities with, if necessary, oral and documentary evidence. ⁹⁰⁴

(6)

Generally the courts will view an alleged set off against an adjudicator's decision as an attempt to frustrate the operation of the 1996 Act which will ordinarily not be permitted, especially where the subject matter of the set off has been implicitly dealt with in the adjudicator's decision. ⁹⁰⁵

Whilst adjudicators' decisions are binding until finally determined, it is possible and sometimes permissible for the losing party to seek final determination of legal issues in Court prior to, or at the same time as, any enforcement steps are taken by the successful party. ⁹⁰⁶  This can have the effect that the outcome of the adjudication is overturned before it can be enforced. However, more recently the Courts have sought to limit the availability of such a process by making it available only in cases where the adjudicator's decision is unconscionably wrong or beyond any rational justification.

⁹⁰⁷

Some procedural aspects of adjudication

37-268

 The decisions of the courts on adjudication have also clarified a number of procedural issues which may be summarised as follows:

(1)

A party to a "construction contract" to which the provisions of the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 apply, can refer a matter to adjudication at any time and even in the course of ongoing court proceedings. ⁹⁰⁸ Section 107 of the original Act required the contract to be "in writing", which was held to require that the whole of the contract should be evidenced in writing. ⁹⁰⁹ The section is repealed by the Local Democracy, Economic Development and Construction Act 2009 with respect to contracts entered into on or after October 1, 2011.

(2)

A party responding to an adjudication notice can raise any matter by way of response to the claim (including set-off and counterclaim) provided that all of those matters are raised in the responding party's notice of intention to withhold payment or, in a case subject to the amendments introduced by the Local Democracy, Economic Development and Construction Act 2009, that those matters are raised in the notice of intention to pay less than the notified sum. ⁹¹⁰

(3)

Neither the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 nor the Scheme confers on an adjudicator the power to award costs in adjudication proceedings but, since adjudication is a matter of contract, parties are free to agree that the adjudicator should have the power to order one party to an adjudication to pay the costs of the other party. ⁹¹¹

(4)

Although much will depend upon the terms of the particular contract, the mere fact that the responding party to an adjudication has failed to serve a proper notice of intention not to pay sums otherwise due will not relieve the referring party from the obligation to demonstrate entitlement and prove its case. ⁹¹²  This is an issue which, however, the Court of Appeal declined to consider in C&B Scene Concept Design v Isobars. ⁹¹³

(5)

Mere procedural breaches of little consequence are not to be taken as vitiating the decision reached by an adjudicator ⁹¹⁴ but the adjudicator does have an obligation to follow the Scheme and "... to conduct the proceedings in accordance with the rules of natural justice or as fairly as the limitations imposed by Parliament permit ...". ⁹¹⁵

(6)

The general law in relation to actual or apparent bias will apply to the conduct of adjudicators, but the courts have indicated that a robust approach will be taken, so that a telephone conversation with one side may not amount to apparent bias ⁹¹⁶; and where the adjudicator receives privileged material, he may properly continue if he concludes that there can be no legitimate fear that he might not have been impartial (see Specialist Ceiling Services Ltd v ZVI Construction (UK) Ltd ⁹¹⁷ ). However, where an adjudicator is very critical of a party for not producing a witness who was never asked to attend, this may amount to bias (as in A&S Enterprises Ltd v Kema Holdings Ltd ⁹¹⁸ ).

(7)

Although the possibility has been raised that some disputes may be so complex that it is impossible for them to be dealt with fairly within the timescales available in the adjudication process, ⁹¹⁹ such concerns have subsequently not found favour with the courts, particularly in cases where substantial extensions of time have been agreed between the parties. ⁹²⁰

(8)

Where a contract has been entered into under duress, then that contract is voidable; and so, if it has in fact been avoided by the innocent party, then the agreement to adjudicate is unenforceable and the adjudicator will have no jurisdiction. ⁹²¹ The adjudicator may have the power to award costs in the event that an adjudication is discontinued. ⁹²²

Contractual adjudication schemes

37-269

In most cases, Standard Forms of Contract have now been amended to take account of the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 by the addition of conforming adjudication procedures which apply in place of the Scheme. A party who signs up to such a contract without amending the dispute resolution provisions will be bound by the adjudication clause even if he would not ordinarily fall within the Act, for example because one of the parties is a residential occupier. ⁹²³ The solution generally adopted for enforcement of an adjudication decision is to provide that the arbitration clause does not apply to an adjudication decision, leaving the parties free to enforce through the courts.

Effect of an adjudicator's decision

37-270

 Unless the contract provides otherwise, the decision of an adjudicator, at least in the statutory context, is taken to be temporarily binding, meaning that it must be complied with, but can be overturned by a subsequent Court decision showing it to be wrong. There is a difficult issue as to the legal basis on which an unsuccessful party to adjudication may seek to obtain repayment of sums paid over to a referring party as a result of an adjudicator's decision. In Aspect Contracts (Asbestos)

Ltd v Higgins Construction Plc ⁹²⁴  it was held by the Court of Appeal that there was an implied term in the contract under consideration (as a result of para.23(2) of the Scheme) to the effect that the losing party had a right to refer the dispute to court and, if successful, have any money paid out returned to it. ⁹²⁵

-
- ^{875.} Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 Pt II, as amended by the Local Democracy, Economic Development and Construction Act 2009.
 - ^{876.} A Cameron Ltd v John Mowlem & Co Plc (1990) 52 B.L.R. 24 CA; Cape Durasteel Ltd v Rosser & Russell Building Services Ltd (1995) Con. L.R. 75.
 - ^{877.} The Act was intended to implement part of the recommendations of the Latham Report 1996, which recommended the more widespread use of adjudication as then employed in certain contracts.
 - ^{878.} Although under the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 and the statutory scheme for adjudication (SI 1998/649) he is permitted to take the initiative in the manner in which he decides the matters in dispute (paras 12 and 13 of the Scheme) he must, for example, adhere to the rules of natural justice and allow each side to put its case, by analogy with established case law: Fisher v PG Wellfair [1981] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 514, (1981) 19 B.L.R. 52 CA. Equally, other established bases for challenging decisions of a certifier/arbitrator may have application to adjudication: John Parker Construction Ltd v London Portman Hotel Ltd (1996) 50 Con. L.R. 43; Conoco v Phillips Petroleum Co (1996) C.I.L.L. 1204.
 - ^{879.} s.108(2)(c).
 - ^{880.} s.108(2)(e).
 - ^{881.} See Scheme for Construction Contracts para.17.
 - ^{882.} [1974] A.C. 689.
 - ^{883.} See above under s.4(c) Obligation to Pay.
 - ^{884.} See below, para.37-267.
 - ^{885.} Constructing the Team, HMSO.
 - ^{886.} Both the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 and the Scheme for Construction Contracts are amended by the Local Democracy, Economic Development and Construction Act 2009.
 - ^{887.} The Scheme for Construction Contracts (England and Wales) Regulations 1998 (SI 1998/649).
 - ^{888.} The Scheme applied in Macob Civil Engineering Ltd v Morrison Construction Ltd [1999] B.L.R. 93; and in Outwing Construction Ltd v H Randall & Son Ltd [1999] B.L.R. 156.
 - ^{889.} [1999] B.L.R. 93.
 - ^{890.} In this case, both on the merits and on the basis of certain breaches of natural justice.
 - ^{891.} [1998] B.L.R. 93 at 97.
 - ^{892.} To this extent, the interrelationship between s.9 of the Arbitration Act 1996 (as considered in

- Halki* [1998] W.L.R. 726 CA) and the Scheme may benefit from further consideration by the courts.
- 893. The decision in Outwing Construction Ltd v H Randall & Son Ltd [1999] B.L.R. 156 further emphasises the robust approach taken by the courts in implementing the presumed intention of the legislature where enforcement of the Scheme is concerned.
- 894. (2007) 115 Con. L.R. 149.
- 895. [1998] 1 W.L.R. 726 CA.
- 896. See Sherwood & Casson Ltd v Mackenzie Engineering Ltd (2000) 2 T.C.L.R. 418.
- 897. Macob v Morrison [1999] B.L.R. 93; C&B Scene Concept Design Ltd v Isobars Ltd [2002] B.L.R. 93 CA.
- 898. Bouygues (UK) Ltd v Dahl-Jensen (UK) Ltd [2000] B.L.R. 49. The adjudicator is permitted to take the initiative in ascertaining the facts and the law, but the proper ambit of the dispute will be determined by the notice of adjudication, properly construed, and the adjudicator will ordinarily have no jurisdiction to decide what is the real dispute between the parties: McAlpine PPS Pipeline Systems Joint Venture v Transco Plc [2004] EWHC 2030 (TCC), [2004] B.L.R. 352.
- 899. The Project Consultancy Group v The Trustees of the Gray Trust [1999] B.L.R. 377. Redworth Construction Ltd v Brookdale Healthcare Ltd [2006] EWHC 1994 (TCC), [2006] B.L.R. 366. In Treasure & Son Ltd v Martin Dawes [2008] B.L.R. 24 Akenhead J. held that there was jurisdiction for the adjudicator to make the decision under consideration notwithstanding the fact that there had been an oral variation of the original written contract that contained the adjudication clause. But see Lead Technical Services Ltd v CMS Medical Ltd [2007] EWCA Civ 316, [2007] B.L.R. 251 where the Court of Appeal held that there was an arguable case that an adjudicator had no jurisdiction because the relevant contract was partly oral. See also Pegram Shopfitters Ltd v Tally Wiejl (UK) Ltd [2003] EWCA Civ 1750, [2004] 1 W.L.R. 2082 in which the Court of Appeal held that it had been wrong to enter summary judgment on an adjudicator's decision where it had been contended that there was no contract at all between the parties. As to the need for all of the material terms to be contained in writing, see RJT Consulting Engineers Ltd v DM Engineering (NI) Ltd [2002] B.L.R. 217.
- 900. Bouygues (UK) Ltd v Dahl-Jensen (UK) Ltd [2000] B.L.R. 49.
- 901. Quietfield Ltd v Vascroft Construction Ltd [2006] EWCA Civ 1737, [2007] B.L.R. 67, on appeal from [2006] EWHC 174 (TCC), (2006) 109 Con. L.R. 29. For an example of a breach of natural justice being found by the Court, see CJP Builders Ltd v William Verry Ltd [2008] EWHC 2025 (TCC), [2008] B.L.R. 545. See also Vision Homes Ltd v Lancsville Construction Ltd [2009] EWHC 2042 (TCC), [2009] B.L.R. 525, where it was held that no breach of natural justice occurred; and PC Harrington Contractors Ltd v Tyroddy Construction Ltd [2011] EWHC 813 (TCC), where it was held that an adjudicator had acted in breach of natural justice by not dealing with a specific defence raised by a party and by not giving either party an opportunity to deal with a jurisdictional issue that arose and which was decided in the adjudication.
- 902. Carillion Construction Ltd v Devonport Royal Dockyard Ltd [2005] EWCA Civ 1358, [2006] B.L.R. 15. Note that in Speymill Contracts Ltd v Baskind [2010] EWCA Civ 120, [2010] B.L.R. 257 the Court of Appeal confirmed that fraud or deceit could be raised as a defence in adjudication enforcement proceedings provided that it was a real defence to the claims being made and was supported by clear and unambiguous evidence.
- 903. Carillion Construction Ltd v Devonport [2005] EWCA Civ 1358, [2006] B.L.R. 15.
- 904. The Project Consultancy Group v The Trustees of the Gray Trust [1999] B.L.R. 377. See also Adonis Construction v O'Keefe Soil Remediation [2009] EWHC 2047 (TCC), where it was held that there was no written contract for the purposes of the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 in circumstances where the sub-contractor had never signed the order for works and where the draft order did not amount to an offer capable of acceptance to form a contract. See Naylor Construction Services Ltd v Acoustafom Ltd [2010] B.L.R. 183 (TCC), where it was held that all material terms were sufficiently set out in the relevant documents. Also in Durham CC v Kendall [2011] EWHC 780 (TCC), [2011] B.L.R. 425, it was held, following RJT Consulting, that an agreed minute of a meeting was capable of being a written record for these purposes if it recorded the agreement in writing of a material term.

905. Ferson Contractors Ltd v Levolux AT Ltd [2003] B.L.R. 118.

906.  Caledonian Modular Ltd v Mar City Developments Ltd [2015] EWHC 1855 (TCC) at [13].

907.  Hutton Construction Ltd v Wilson Properties (London) Ltd [2017] EWHC 517 (TCC) at [18].

908. Herschel Engineering Ltd v Breen Property Ltd [2000] B.L.R. 272. See also Connex South Eastern Ltd v MJ Building Services Group Plc [2005] EWCA Civ 193, [2005] 1 W.L.R. 3323, [2005] B.L.R. 201, where the Court of Appeal held that the words “at any time” were to be given their literal and ordinary meaning and that therefore a dispute could be referred to adjudication (subject to the possibility that the right to adjudicate has been waived or was the subject of an estoppel) even after the expiry of a relevant limitation period—although, of course, the responding party would be able to take the limitation point as part of its defence in this event.

909. RJT Consulting Engineers Ltd v D M Engineering (NI) [2002] B.L.R. 217.

910. VHE Construction Plc v RBSTB Trust Ltd [2000] B.L.R. 187; Northern Developments (Cumbria) Ltd v J & J Nichol [2000] B.L.R. 158; and see s.111(3) of the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 as inserted by the Local Democracy, Economic Development and Construction Act 2009.

911. Northern Developments (Cumbria) Ltd v J & J Nichol [2000] B.L.R. 158, where Judge Peter Bowsher Q.C. declined to follow the decision of Judge Marshall Evans Q.C. in John Cotliff Ltd v Allen Build (North West) Ltd (1999) C.I.L.L. 1530. The contractual disposition of costs is now regulated by s.108A of the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 as inserted by the Local Democracy, Economic Development and Construction Act 2009.

912.  Woods Hardwick Ltd v Chiltern Air Conditioning Ltd [2001] B.L.R. 23; SL Timber Systems Ltd v Carillion Construction Ltd [2001] B.L.R. 516 (Lord Macfayden, Outer House). It had become popular to argue that, in cases where statutory interest runs, s.5A(2A) of the Late Payment of Commercial Debts (Interest) Act 1998 would permit a party to recover its reasonable legal costs of pursuing a debt claim by adjudication. In practice, this argument was accepted by a number of adjudicators but it appears that this approach is incorrect and that on the issue of party adjudication costs s.108A of the Housing Grants Act takes precedence over s.5A(2A) of the Late Payment Act 1998; see Enviroflow Management Ltd v Redhill Works (Nottingham) Ltd [2017] EWHC 2159 (TCC).

913. [2002] B.L.R. 93.

914. See Discaint Project Services Ltd v Opecprime Development Ltd (No.1) [2000] B.L.R. 402; and Balfour Beatty Construction Ltd v Lambeth LBC [2002] EWHC 597 (TCC), [2002] B.L.R. 288.

915. Glencot Developments v Ben Barrett [2001] B.L.R. 207; and Discaint Project Services Ltd v Opecprime Ltd (No.1) [2000] B.L.R. 402.

916. Amec Capital Projects Ltd v Whitefriars City Estates Ltd [2004] EWCA Civ 1418, [2005] B.L.R. 1.

917.  [2004] B.L.R. 403. cf. Paice v Harding (t/a MJ Harding Contractors) [2015] EWHC 661 (TCC)

918.  [2005] EWHC 3365 (QB), [2005] B.L.R. 76. See also Cofely Ltd v Bingham [2016] EWHC 240

(Comm), [2016] B.L.R. 187, where it was held by Hamblen J. that an arbitrator's scale of prior appointments as an adjudicator and arbitrator in disputes involving the claimant, either as a party or party representative, together with his conduct of the arbitration and his reaction to questions concerning his relationship with the claimant, generated the required basis for a finding of apparent bias.

- 919. AWG v Rockingham Motorway Speedway Ltd (2004) T.C.L.R. 6.
- 920. CIB Properties Ltd v Birse Construction Ltd [2005] 1 W.L.R. 2252.
- 921. Capital Structures Plc v Time & Tide Construction Ltd [2006] B.L.R. 226.
- 922. John Roberts Architects v Parkcare Homes (No.2) [2006] EWCA Civ 64, [2006] 105 Con. L.R. 36.
- 923. Treasure & Son Ltd v Dawes [2007] EWHC 2420 (TCC).
- 924.  [2013] EWCA Civ 1541; approved by the Supreme Court at [2015] UKSC 38.
- 925. cf. above, para.28-056.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 37 - Construction Contracts

Section 10. - Disputes

(f) - International Disputes

Forum, jurisdiction and choice of law

37-271

Many construction projects involve contracts or sub-contracts of an international character. In such cases problems of forum, jurisdiction and choice of law may arise. Such questions are to be determined in accordance with the applicable rules of conflict of laws. As regards litigation, where issues arise between parties from European states, questions of forum and jurisdiction will be governed by the Brussels Convention ⁹²⁶ and the Judgments Regulations ⁹²⁷ and matters of choice of law by the Rome Convention. ⁹²⁸ Where the matters are before the court in England and Wales, the relevant enacting legislation in relation to forum is the Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Act 1982 ⁹²⁹ and, in the case of choice of law, the Contracts (Applicable Law) Act 1990.

Arbitration

37-272

Prima facie, neither Convention applies to arbitration, which is overwhelmingly the most frequently used form of dispute resolution in international construction matters. In the case of an international arbitration ⁹³⁰ whether the seat is in England and Wales or abroad, the procedural law will, prima facie, be that of the seat of the arbitration ⁹³¹ together with such rules as may be stated in or incorporated by the arbitration agreement. Many such contracts incorporate either the ICC ⁹³² or the LCIA ⁹³³ Rules, each of which provide for the arbitration to be administered.

The proper law or governing law, in the absence of express choice, will be determined by the applicable rules of conflict of laws, but is almost invariably specified in the terms of the contract. ⁹³⁴ Where there is no choice of applicable law but the arbitration is subject to Institutional Rules, these may empower the Tribunal to apply rules of law to the merits of the dispute which are not necessarily the same as the proper or governing law which would be applied by a court. ⁹³⁵

37-273

Where the seat of an international arbitration is in London (or technically England and Wales) Pt I of the Arbitration Act 1996 applies ⁹³⁶ including the right to seek leave to appeal against an award on a point of law. ⁹³⁷ The parties may by agreement exclude any right of appeal ⁹³⁸ and both the ICC and LCIA Arbitration Rules contain such an exclusion agreement. Where appeal is not excluded the question of law must be a question of English law. ⁹³⁹ In Reliance Industries Ltd v Enron Oil and Gas India Ltd ⁹⁴⁰ the applicant sought to argue that there was a question of English law arising out of the award of an arbitral tribunal within the meaning of s.69 of the Arbitration Act 1996 on the basis that, although the substantive law was Indian law, the arbitrators had in practice applied English law. The arbitrators had in fact applied Indian law, which happened to be the same as English law on the point in question, but it was held by the Commercial Court that there was no basis for an appeal under the Arbitration Act. In Braes of Doune Wind Farm v Alfred McAlpine ⁹⁴¹ the arbitration clause provided that the seat of the arbitration was Glasgow but the arbitration was to be subject to the English Arbitration Act 1996. On an application to the TCC in London for leave to appeal it was held that, on the construction of the arbitration agreement, the venue of the hearing was to be Glasgow but seat of the arbitration was England so that the court had jurisdiction to entertain the application.

New York Convention 1958

37-274

The successor of the Geneva Convention 1927,⁹⁴² the New York Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards 1958 is probably the most important international instrument relating to international commercial arbitration, providing for the recognition and enforcement of arbitration agreements and of foreign arbitral awards. In particular in relation to international arbitration agreements, the Convention requires the national courts of contracting states to refuse to allow a dispute which is the subject of an arbitration agreement to be litigated if an objection is raised by any party to the arbitration agreement.⁹⁴³ This is given effect to by s.9 of the English Arbitration Act 1996, which applies whether or not the seat is in England and Wales.⁹⁴⁴ Enforcement of awards under the New York Convention is provided for under English law by Pt III, ss.100–104 of the Arbitration Act 1996.

^{926.} Convention on Jurisdiction and the Enforcement of Judgments in Civil and Commercial Matters 1968, as amended.

^{927.} Which came into force on March 1, 2002; with the necessary changes to the Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Act 1982 being made by the Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Order 2001 (SI 2001/3929).

^{928.} Convention on the Law Applicable to Contractual Obligations 1980.

^{929.} As extended by the Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Act 1991 and to the Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Order 2001 (SI 2001/3929).

^{930.} There is no universal definition, but art.1(3) of the UNCITRAL Model Law on International Commercial Arbitration, provides that an arbitration is international, inter alia, if the parties have their places of business in different states.

^{931.} Miller v Whitworth Street Estates [1970] A.C. 583; and see also Arbitration Act 1996 s.2.

^{932.} International Chamber of Commerce, Paris.

^{933.} London Court of International Arbitration.

^{934.} See, for example, FIDIC (1998 edn) cl.1.4.

^{935.} See ICC Rules of Arbitration 1998 art.17.1 and LCIA Arbitration Rules 1998 art.22.3.

^{936.} By s.2(1) of the Act.

^{937.} Under s.69.

^{938.} Arbitration Act 1996 s.69(1).

^{939.} Arbitration Act 1996 s.82(1)(a).

^{940.} [2002] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 59, [2002] B.L.R. 36.

^{941.} [2008] EWHC 426 (TCC), [2008] B.L.R. 321.

- 942. Which remains in force in England by virtue of Pt II of the Arbitration Act 1950, and s.99 of the Arbitration Act 1996.
- 943. See further, Redfern and Hunter, Law and Practice of International Commercial Arbitration, 4th edn (2004); Dicey, Morris and Collins, The Conflict of Laws, 14th edn (2007), Ch.16. See also Collins, Essays in International Litigation and the Conflict of Laws (1994), Ch.5 on arbitration.
- 944. Arbitration Act 1996 s.2(2).

© 2018 Sweet & Maxwell

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 1. - Introduction

Development of the law

38-001

The English common law of contract has rarely been developed by the courts in a way which regulates directly and specifically contracts between traders and consumers, although many developments of the law more generally have had the incidental effect of providing protection for consumer parties to such contracts. So, for example, the general requirement that standard terms can be incorporated into a contract only on reasonable notice, while not restricted to the case where the person to be bound by the term is a consumer, has had an significant role in protecting consumers from unfair contract terms.¹ Similarly, implied terms in contracts of sale of goods where the seller contracts in the course of business protected consumer buyers as well as buyers contracting in the course of business,² a breadth of application which continued when these terms were given legislative expression in the Sale of Goods Act 1893.³ And a consumer party to a contract can exercise a right to rescission of a contract concluded as a result of a misrepresentation made by the other party as can a misrepresentee who is not a consumer.⁴ A rare example of the restriction of a development of the common law for the benefit of consumers, or at least of non-traders, can be seen in Barclays Bank Plc v O'Brien,⁵ *Royal Bank of Scotland v Etridge (No.2)*⁶ and the case-law following these leading decisions.⁷ In these cases, the courts recognised that a surety may defeat a claim under the contract of suretyship by a bank which has extended credit to that surety's spouse or partner on the ground of misrepresentation or undue influence by that spouse or partner, but they have restricted this protection to the situation where the relationship between the surety and the spouse/debtor is noncommercial.⁸

Legislative protection for consumer contractors

38-002

⚠ The beginnings of modern protection for consumers in relation to the contracts which they conclude can be seen in the 1970s. So, first, in 1973 the Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) Act controlled the exclusion by a seller of his liability arising from breach of the statutory implied terms in respect of title, description and quality and fitness for purpose set out in the Sale of Goods Act 1893.⁹ Under the 1973 Act, while any exemption clauses in respect of the implied warranty of title were rendered void,

¹⁰ ⚠ as regards the other liabilities a distinction was drawn between "consumer sales" (where an exemption clause was rendered void) and other cases (where the term was "not enforceable to the extent that it is shown that it would not be fair and reasonable to show reliance on the term").¹¹ ⚠ The 1973 Act defined "consumer sale" for the purposes of this rule, in terms of a sale of goods concluded by a

"seller in the course of business where the goods—

(a)

are of a type ordinarily bought for private use or consumption; and are sold to a person who does not buy or hold himself out as buying them in the course of a business.”¹²

(b)

However, when this tentative control of exemption clauses was extended by the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977, the protection for consumers was rearranged and the reference to “consumer sales” was not replaced by reference to “consumer contracts”, but instead by the notion of a person “dealing as consumer”.¹³ As the courts made clear, this definition could apply so as to protect not merely consumers in the sense defined by the 1973 Act, but also to businesses (even if incorporated) where the contract is neither an integral part of their business nor, if incidental to their business, of a type which they regularly enter.¹⁴ Further important legislation for the protection of consumers was enacted by the Consumer Credit Act 1974, where the protection extended (and still extends) to a range of individuals including sole traders, small partnerships and unincorporated associations.¹⁵ Moreover, in 1994 the well-known provisions in the Sale of Goods Act 1979 implying terms as to the quality and fitness for purpose of the goods sold were amended so as to make them more appropriate for consumers, in particular, the reference to “merchantable quality” being replaced by one to “satisfactory quality”.¹⁶

The growing importance of European law¹⁷

38-003

 However, from the late 1980s EEC (later EC and now EU) law has become increasingly important as a source of legislative protection for consumer contractors, typically by way of directive and therefore requiring implementation by the UK into national law, whether by statute or, as has been more usual, by secondary legislation under the European Communities Act 1972.¹⁸ Some of these legislative instruments have required national rules governing consumer contracts which are concluded in particular ways (as in the case of “doorstep selling”¹⁹ and “distance contracts”²⁰); some have required rules governing aspects of particular types of contracts (as in the case of contracts for the sale of goods,²¹ timeshare contracts,²² package travel contracts,²³  consumer credit²⁴ and passenger transport²⁵); and perhaps the most prominent example, the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Directive 1993, which subjected most contract terms which had not been “individually negotiated” in all consumer contracts to a test of unfairness.²⁶ At this earlier stage in its development, EU contract law generally required only “minimum harmonisation”, that is to say, the European legislation required only minimum rights or protections for the consumer, thereby allowing Member States to enact national laws which are more protective of consumers than the EU law required.²⁷ However, at the beginning of the present century, the European Commission started a wide-ranging review of EC/EU legislation in the area of contract law, with particular reference to consumer law,²⁸ and there have been a number of consequences for EU (and therefore UK) consumer contract law. First, the Commission has sought (and to an extent achieved) the reform and consolidation of existing directives so as to provide greater consistency between them, this being noticeable particularly in the Consumer Rights Directive 2011,²⁹ which, inter alia, consolidated the information duties required by the directives concerning “doorstep selling” (later “off-premises contracting”)³⁰ and “distance contracts”,³¹ though it did not consolidate the requirements contained in directives on guarantees in contracts for the sale of goods³² nor on unfair contract terms³³ as had earlier been proposed.³⁴ Other earlier consumer contract directives have also been subject to reform and consolidation, for example, on timeshare contracts.³⁵ Secondly, the Commission has sought to move directives in the area of consumer protection from requiring “minimum harmonisation” to requiring “full harmonisation”, that is to say, the European legislation sets rights or protections for the consumer for which Member States must provide but which they must not exceed in the interests of greater protection for the consumer.³⁶ Thirdly, and related to this, by the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005 the European legislator enacted an important general and “fully harmonised” framework for the regulation of unfair commercial practices business-to-consumer.³⁷ While the 2005 Directive is expressly stated as being “without prejudice to contract law and, in particular, to the rules on the validity, formation or effect of a contract”³⁸ and the UK’s first implementation reflected this scope,³⁹ in 2014 the UK legislator nonetheless chose to give some “contract law” effects to certain aspects of the 2005 Directive’s requirements, thereby creating new rights to redress for consumers against their trader contracting partners.⁴⁰ Fourthly, the EU legislator brought earlier European Conventions on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments (the “Brussels Convention”)⁴¹ and on the law applicable to contractual obligations (the “Rome Convention”)⁴² directly within the fold of EU law by enacting regulations to replace them.⁴³ These regulations set uniform rules of private international law governing applicable law for “contractual obligations” and jurisdiction, recognition and the enforcement of judgments in “matters relating to a contract”⁴⁴ as well as special rules for, for example, consumers in these contexts.⁴⁵ The present significance of these private international law rules governing consumer contracts is that the European Court of Justice has interpreted the concepts which they use (notably, “consumer”), and this case-law may be helpful in the interpretation of the same or similar concepts in the EU substantive law legislation governing consumer contracts.⁴⁶

Earlier approaches to UK implementation of European directives

38-004

For a long time UK implementation of the various European directives governing consumer contracts was often effected in a piecemeal way. Indeed, in many instances, directives were implemented by standalone statutory instrument, thereby creating new and distinct bodies of legislative controls; this can be seen in the context of package travel, package tours and package holidays,⁴⁷ doorstep selling⁴⁸ and distance contracts.⁴⁹ In the case of the Unfair Terms in Consumer

Contracts Directive 1993, the resulting standalone statutory instrument created a set of legislative rules which overlapped considerably with, but formally were entirely separate from, the existing domestic legislation in the area, the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977. In the context of unfair contract terms, the resulting complexity attracted a good deal of criticism, and, in turn, a recommendation from the Law Commissions that the legislation should be recast into a single enactment.⁵⁰ In the case of other directives, the UK legislature sought to integrate their requirements within existing legislative frameworks. In the case of timeshare contracts, this was easily achieved as these had already been the subject of regulation by UK statute.⁵¹ However, in other cases, the process was more difficult, a particularly striking example being found in the legislative implementation of the Consumer Sales Directive of 1999, which was effected in English law principally by the insertion of a new Pt 5A into the Sale of Goods Act 1979.⁵² This amendment created a series of dedicated rights for consumer buyers in respect of the “contractual non-conformity” of the goods in addition to (and in an awkward relationship with) the classic rights of rejection of the goods, restitution of the price and damages for breach of the implied statutory conditions governing satisfactory quality and fitness for purpose also foreseen by the Sale of Goods Act.⁵³ Here, therefore, implementation of the European directive led to very considerable substantive complexity and, to an extent, overlap, even though it was effected by change to existing wider legislation.

Recent reforms to UK consumer contract legislation: (i) the Consumer Rights Act 2015

38-005

Recent legislation has sought to remedy some of the problems caused by this piecemeal and overly complex approach to legislative implementation of EU consumer law, prompted to an extent by the requirement to implement the Consumer Rights Directive of 2011 (which sought to bring more consistency into the underlying EU framework as regards pre-contractual information duties imposed on sellers and suppliers to consumers), but even more by a view in government that UK legislative implementation should be consistent, easier to find and easier to understand.⁵⁴ The principal result of this view is the Consumer Rights Act 2015, whose provisions re-implement earlier EU directives requiring consumer rights in respect of contractual non-conformity and the control of unfair contract terms, but do so in a way which seeks to integrate their requirements into a wider framework, in part drawn from other domestic UK legislation (notably, the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977,⁵⁵ the Sale of Goods Act 1979,⁵⁶ and the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982⁵⁷) and in part developed specially for the purpose (as in the case of the new rules governing contracts for the supply of “digital content”⁵⁸). In this way, the 2015 Act reflects a broad strategy of separating the most prominent special rules governing contracts between traders and consumer from the legislative schemes applicable to contracts between other categories of contractor. So, notably, the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 (as amended by the 2015 Act) no longer contains any rules restricted to the situation where one party “deals as consumer”.⁵⁹

(ii) Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013⁶⁰

38-006

However, the UK legislature did not seek to place all relevant consumer contract law in the Consumer Rights Act 2015. So, rather confusingly, the UK implemented the Consumer Rights Directive 2011 principally by enactment of standalone regulations, the 2013 (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 (“2013 Regulations”), rather than in the Consumer Rights Act.⁶¹ The 2013 Regulations are principally concerned with rules governing a trader’s information duties and the consumer’s rights of cancellation in off-premises contracts and distance contracts other than relating to financial services, though they also create other particular consumer protection rules, notably, in relation to inertia selling and additional charges.⁶²

(iii) Creating rights to redress in respect of certain unfair commercial Practices

38-007

As earlier noted, in 2014 the UK legislator chose to give some “contract law” effects to certain aspects of the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005’s prohibitions by inserting new provisions into the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 (“the 2008 Regulations”) which had earlier implemented the directive, thereby creating new rights to redress for consumers against their trader contracting partners.⁶³ As a result, a consumer to whom a misleading statement has been made by a trader or who has been the object of an aggressive commercial practice may enjoy a short-lived “right to unwind in respect of a business to consumer contract”, a “right to a discount” and/or a right to damages.⁶⁴ These new consumer rights are related to the wider provisions governing unfair commercial practices from which they spring in the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008, but they are separate from the broader framework of consumer rights against traders established by the 2015 Act. Moreover, the rights to redress under the amended 2008 Regulations bear a complex relationship with traditional rights for contracting parties established by the common law⁶⁵ and by the Misrepresentation Act 1967.⁶⁶ These complexities, which will be explained below, are hardly welcome, even if the new provisions create rights for consumers which they would not otherwise enjoy.⁶⁷

(iv) Special rules governing consumer contracts of insurance

38-008

In parallel to these developments specifically relating to consumer protection and principally concerned with legislation implementing EU directives, the English and Scottish Law Commissions undertook a series of studies into the law governing misrepresentation and non-disclosure in contracts of insurance.⁶⁸ The first tranche of legislation resulting from their recommendations was the Consumer Insurance (Disclosure and Representations) Act 2012, which made new provision governing a consumer assured’s duty of utmost good faith and the insurer’s remedies for breach. The second tranche of legislation is the Insurance Act 2015, which, inter alia, abolishes the rule permitting a party to a contract of insurance to avoid the contract on the ground that the utmost good faith has not been observed by the other party,⁶⁹ sets out new rules governing non-consumer insurance contracts and supplements the 2012 Act’s provisions governing consumer insurance contracts. These new provisions are discussed in Ch.42 (Insurance) of the present work.⁷⁰

The relationship between “contract law” and prohibitions or preventive Measures

38-009

This chapter will follow the general approach of this work in focussing on “contract law” in the sense of the law which sets out the circumstances in which consumer contracts are concluded, the grounds of their invalidity and/or of the invalidity of their terms, the relative rights and obligations which they create for their parties, and the remedies which arise on their breach (“contract law” in the narrow and usual sense), rather than on the wider laws which regulate the behaviour of contracting parties, whether through structures such as the regulation of financial services, administrative powers of control and review or the criminal law.⁷¹ However, in the case of consumer law, this contrast is blurred in a number of important ways, since modern consumer protection legislation has often combined rules governing contract law in the narrow sense (for example, providing a consumer with a right of cancellation of the contract, rendering unfair terms not binding on consumers, or creating special rights in respect of breach of contract) with preventive measures of the behaviour of traders with which these contract law rules are concerned.⁷² Many of these preventive measures have been required by European directives which also set out the “contract law” consumer protection measures, and this combination has been relied on by the European Court of Justice as a reason for national courts having a duty to raise the issue of the consumer’s protection of their own motion.⁷³ At the same time, the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005, which requires a fully harmonised framework of the control of unfair commercial practices business-to-consumer distinguishes expressly between its own concern with the prohibition of unfair commercial practices and “contract law and, in particular, ... the rules on the validity, formation or effect of a contract”, this being the case whether those rules are EU or national,⁷⁴ though, as earlier indicated, UK law has recently chosen to enact legislation which provides rights to redress for consumers in respect of certain unfair commercial practices by traders.⁷⁵

The structure and scope of this chapter

38-010

This chapter will consider the law governing consumer contracts under the following headings: the relationship of EU and UK consumer contract law; definitions of consumer contract; information requirements and consumers’ rights of cancellation; unfair commercial practices and the consumer’s rights to redress; the control of unfair contract terms; contracts for the supply of goods, digital content or services. This chapter will not discuss the law governing consumer credit agreements, which is discussed in Ch.39, nor, as already noted, rules governing consumer insurance contracts, which are discussed in Ch.42. Chapters 35 Carriage by Air and 36 Carriage by Land discuss the law governing these contracts including for the protection of passengers.⁷⁶ Moreover, the present chapter will not discuss the legislative and regulatory frameworks governing the provision of financial services put in place by the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 and the Financial Services Act 2012.

Changes in the law

38-011

The preceding paragraphs make clear that there has been very considerable change in the legislation governing consumer contracts since the publication of the previous edition of the present work. In general, this chapter will set out the law as it is in force at the time of writing,⁷⁷ with some reference to the earlier law where this is helpful to understand its development. However, in the case of the regulation of unfair contract terms and the special rules and remedies applicable to contracts for the sale of goods and related contracts, hire and contracts for the supply of services and (where the earlier law remains applicable to contracts made before October 1, 2015, when the relevant provisions in the Consumer Rights Act 2015 came into force)⁷⁸ this chapter will discuss first the old law (together with the important interpretation given to it both by the European Court of Justice and by English courts) and then the new law, highlighting similarities and differences with the earlier position.⁷⁹

-
1. An early example may be found in Parker v South Eastern Ry (1877) 2 C.P.D. 416, 421, 423 and see Vol.I, paras 13-014–13-017. There remain the important exceptions to this general requirement of reasonable notice where the other party has signed a document containing, or incorporating by reference, the terms in question (L'Estrange v Graucob [1934] 2 K.B. 394) or where standard terms form part of a course of dealing and see Vol.I, paras 13-002, 13-011.
 2. Jones v Bright (1829) 5 Bing. 533; Jones v Just (1868) L.R. III Q.B. 197.
 3. Sale of Goods Act 1893 ss.12–15, which were repealed and replaced by the Sale of Goods Act 1979 ss.12–15.
 4. See Vol.I, paras 7-111 et seq.
 5. [1994] 1 A.C. 180.
 6. [2001] UKHL 44, [2002] 1 A.C. 773.
 7. [2001] UKHL 44, [2002] 1 A.C. 773 at [87] and [89] and see Vol.I, paras 8-108 et seq.
 8. Vol.I, para.8-116.
 9. Sale of Goods Act 1893 ss.12–15.
 10.  1973 Act s.4 creating new Sale of Goods Act 1893 s.55(3).
 11.  1973 Act s.4 creating new Sale of Goods Act 1893 s.55(4).
 12.  1973 Act s.4 creating new Sale of Goods Act 1893 s.55(7).
 13. Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.12 (definition). Reference to a person “dealing as consumer” was then made relevant to the controls in s.3(1) (contractual liability generally), s.4 (indemnity clauses), s.6(2) (statutory implied terms in sale of goods) and s.7(2) (statutory implied terms in miscellaneous contracts under which goods pass).
 14. R. B. Customs Brokers Co Ltd v United Dominions Trust Ltd [1988] 1 W.L.R. 321 and see Vol.I, para.15-074.
 15. See below, para.39-005.
 16. Sale and Supply of Goods Act 1994 s.1. This change was recommended by Law Commission, Sale and Supply of Goods, Law Com. No.160 § 3.27.
 17. See general note on the significance of the decision that the United Kingdom will leave the European Union, above, para.1-013A.
 18. European Communities Act 1972 s.2(2).
 19. Directive 85/577/EEC to protect the consumer in respect of contracts negotiated away from business premises [1985] O.J. L372/31 implemented in UK law by the Consumer Protection (Cancellation of Contracts Concluded Away from Business Premises) Regulations 1987 (SI 1987/2117), which were replaced by the Cancellation of Contracts made in a Consumer's Home or Place of Work, etc. Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1816). The current law is contained in the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 (SI 2013/3134) (“2013 Regulations”) on which see below, paras 37-057 et seq.

- 20. Directive 97/7/EC on the protection of consumers in respect of distance contracts [1997] O.J. L144/19 implemented in UK law by the Consumer Protection (Distance Selling) Regulations 2000 (SI 2000/2334) (the current law is contained in the 2013 Regulations, on which see below paras 38-057 et seq.); Directive 2002/65/EC concerning the distance marketing of consumer financial services [2002] O.J. L271/16 art.3(2) implemented principally by the Financial Services (Distance Marketing) Regulations 2004 (SI 2004/2095) on which see below, para.38-131.
- 21. Directive 99/44/EC on certain aspects of the sale of consumer goods and associated guarantees [1999] O.J. L171/7 (“Consumer Sales Directive”, “1999 Directive”).
- 22. Directive 94/47/EC on the protection of purchasers in respect of certain aspects of contracts relating to the purchase of the right to use immovable properties on a timeshare basis [1994] O.J. L280/83 and see for the current legislation below, paras 38-136—38-142.
- 23.  Directive 90/314/EEC on package travel, package holidays and package tours [1990] O.J. L158/59; [1994] O.J. L280/83. See below, paras 38-132—38-135. The 1990 Directive is repealed by Directive (EU) 2015/2302 on package travel and linked travel arrangements [2015] O.J. L326/1.
- 24. Directive 87/102/EEC on consumer credit [1987] O.J. L42/48 repealed and replaced by Directive 2008/48/EC on credit agreements for consumers [2008] O.J. L133/66.
- 25. e.g. Regulation (EC) 261/2004 establishing common rules on compensation and assistance to passengers in the event of denied boarding and of cancellation or long delay of flights [2004] O.J. L46/1.
- 26. Directive 93/13/EEC [1993] O.J. L95/29 (“1993 Directive”).
- 27. See, notably, Directive 93/13/EEC of April 5, 1993 on unfair terms in consumer contracts, art.8 and see below, para.38-020.
- 28. See Communication from the Commission to the Council and the European Parliament on European Contract Law Com(2001) 398 final; Communication from the Commission to the European Parliament and the Council, A more coherent European Contract Law, An Action Plan Com(2003) 68 final; European Contract Law and the revision of the acquis: the way forward Com(2004) 651 final; EU Commission, Green Paper from the Commission on policy option for progress towards a European Contract Law for consumers and businesses COM(2010) 348 final.
- 29. Directive 2011/83/EU on consumer rights [2011] O.J. L304/64 (“Consumer Rights Directive” or “2011 Directive”).
- 30. Directive 85/577/EEC to protect the consumer in respect of contracts negotiated away from business premises [1985] O.J. L372/31.
- 31. Directive 97/7/EC on the protection of consumers in respect of distance contracts [1997] O.J. L144/19. The Consumer Rights Directive did not, however, include elements from the Directive 2002/65/EC concerning the distance marketing of consumer financial services [2002] O.J. L271/16.
- 32. Directive 99/44/EC on certain aspects of the sale of consumer goods and associated guarantees [1999] O.J. L171/7 (the “Consumer Sales Directive”).
- 33. Directive 93/13/EEC of April 5, 1993 on unfair terms in consumer contracts [1993] O.J. L95/29 (“Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Directive” or “1993 Directive”).
- 34. Proposal for a Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council on Consumer Rights of 8 October 2008 Com(2008) 614/3 final, Chs IV and V.
- 35. Directive 2008/122/EC on the protection of consumers in respect of certain aspects of timeshare, long-term holiday product, resale and exchange contracts [2009] O.J. L33/30 repealing and replacing Directive 94/47/EC on the protection of purchasers in respect of certain aspects of contracts relating to the purchase of the right to use immovable properties on a timeshare basis [1994] O.J. L280/83; Directive 2008/48/EC on credit agreements for consumers [2008] O.J. L133/66.

- 36. e.g. Directive 2011/83/EU on consumer rights art.4; Directive 2008/48/EC on credit agreements for consumers recital 9, though as the following recitals explain, the directive leaves a good deal of competence in Member States as regards matters outside its carefully delineated scope.
- 37. Directive 2005/29/EC concerning unfair business-to-consumer commercial practices [2005] O.J. L149/22 (“Unfair Commercial Practices Directive” or “2005 Directive”) especially art.4. The Directive excludes certain areas from “full harmonisation”, notably, art.3(9) (financial services).
- 38. Directive 2005/29/EC art.3(2), on which see Whittaker, The Regulation of Unfair Commercial Practices under EC Directive 2005/29, New Rules and New Techniques (2007), Ch.8.
- 39. The Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1277) (“2008 Regulations”) reg.29 (as enacted) provided explicitly that “an agreement shall not be void or unenforceable by reason only of a breach of these regulations” but said no more as to the wider lack of effect of the Regulations on the “law of contract”, apparently on the basis that they set out the consequences of the new controls and did not need to set out other non-consequences.
- 40. Consumer Protection (Amendment) Regulations 2014 (SI 2014/870) inserting, notably, new Pt 4A Consumers’ Rights to Redress in Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1277). See further, below paras 38-160 et seq.
- 41. Convention on Jurisdiction and the Enforcement of Judgments in Civil and Commercial Matters 1968.
- 42. Rome Convention on the Law Applicable to Contractual Obligations 1980.
- 43. Regulation (EC) 593/2008 on the law applicable to contractual obligations (“Rome I”) [2008] O.J. L177/6; Regulation (EC) 864/2007 applicable to non-contractual obligations (“Rome II Regulation”) [2007] O.J. L199/40 (some of whose provisions bear an important relationship with contract, notably art.12 “culpa in contrahendo”); Council Regulation 44/2001 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters [2001] O.J. L12/1 (“Brussels I Regulation”) first replaced the Brussels Convention and then was itself replaced as from January 10, 2015 by Regulation (EU) 1215/2012 of 12 December 2012 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters (recast) (“the Brussels Ibis Regulation”).
- 44. Brussels Ibis Regulation art.7(1); Rome I Regulation generally.
- 45. Brussels Ibis Regulation arts 17–19; Rome I Regulation art.6.
- 46. See below para.38-015.
- 47. Package Travel, Package Holidays and Package Tours Regulations 1992 (SI 1992/3288).
- 48. Consumer Protection (Cancellation of Contracts Concluded Away from Business Premises) Regulations 1987 (SI 1987/2117) later replaced by the Cancellation of Contracts made in a Consumer’s Home or Place of Work, etc. Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1816). As will be explained, the latter have been revoked and replaced by the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 (SI 2013/3134): below, paras 38-057 et seq.
- 49. Consumer Protection (Distance Selling) Regulations 2000 (SI 2000/2334) which have been revoked and replaced by the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 (SI 2013/3134) (below, paras 37-057 et seq.); Financial Services (Distance Marketing) Regulations 2004 (SI 2004/2095).

50. Law Commission, Scottish Law Commission, Unfair Terms in Contracts (Law Com. No.292, Scot Law Com. No.199, 2005).
51. Timeshare Act 1992, which preceded the Directive 94/47/EC on the protection of purchasers in respect of certain aspects of contracts relating to the purchase of the right to use immovable properties on a timeshare basis. The 1994 Directive was implemented by amendment of the Timeshare Act 1992 by regulation: Timeshare Regulations 1997 (SI 1997/1081). Subsequently, the UK's treatment of timeshare and related contracts has been made by the Timeshare, Holiday Products, Resale and Exchange Contracts Regulations 2010 (SI 2010/2960) on which see below, paras 38-136—38-142.
52. On this implementation, see below, paras 38-408 et seq.
53. s.14.
54. BIS, Enhancing consumer confidence by clarifying consumer law (July 2012); BIS, Enhancing consumer confidence through effective enforcement, consultation on consolidating and modernising consumer law enforcement powers (March 2012).
55. e.g. Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.65 reflecting Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.2 (1), below, para.38-377.
56. Consumer Rights Act 2015 ss.9–11, 13 reflecting Sale of Goods Act 1979 ss.13–15: below, paras 38-462—38-464, 38-466.
57. Consumer Rights Act 2015 ss.9–11, 13 reflecting Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 ss.3–5 (on which see below, paras 38-462—38-464, 38-466); Consumer Rights Act 2015 ss.49, 51–53 reflecting Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 ss.13–16: below paras 38-351, 38-537—38-538.
58. Consumer Rights Act 2015 ss.33–47: below, paras 38-501 et seq.
59. Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.75, Sch.4 paras 5–11 on which see Vol.I, Ch.15 where it is explained that certain persons who “deal as consumer” do not count as “consumer” and are therefore no longer protected under either the 1977 or the 2015 Act: see especially paras 15-073—15-079.
60. SI 2013/3134 (“2013 Regulations”).
61. An exception is found in the Consumer Rights Act 2015 ss.28 (delivery of goods) and 29 (passing of risk), which implement the Consumer Rights Directive 2011 arts 18 and 20 (which were formerly implemented by the 2013 Regulations regs 42 and 43): below paras 38-489—38-490. A further exception is that the 2015 Act gives contractual force to information supplied by a trader as required by the 2011 Directive art.6(5): 2015 Act s.11(4)–(5), 12 (goods contracts); s.36(3)–(4), 37 (digital content contracts); and s.50(3) and (4) (services contracts), on which see below, paras 38-464—38-465, 38-508—38-509 and 38-535 respectively.
62. SI 2013/3134 Pt 4 see below, paras 38-057 et seq.
63. Consumer Protection (Amendment) Regulations 2014 (SI 2014/870) inserting, notably, new Pt 4A Consumers' Rights to Redress in Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1277). Rights are also created for consumers in respect of payments which they have made: for the details see below paras 38-160 et seq.
64. Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 Pt 4A.
65. e.g. the relationship between the right to rescind a contract for misrepresentation and the “right to unwind” the contract for a misleading statement under the 2008 Regulations (as amended).

- 66. e.g. the relationship between the rights to/possibility of award of damages for misrepresentation under the Misrepresentation Act 1967 s.2(1) and 2(2) and the right to damages in respect of a misleading statement under the 2008 Regulations (as amended).
- 67. Below, paras 38-160 et seq.
- 68. See below, para.42-045 at n.333.
- 69. Insurance Act 2015 s.13.
- 70. See below, paras 42-030—42-032, 42-046—42-050.
- 71. See Vol.I, para.1-001.
- 72. See below, paras 38-127—38-129 (in relation to “off-premises contracts” and “distance contracts”); paras 38-323—38-333, 38-387—38-394 (unfair contract terms) and para.38-495 (remedies for non-conformity in the context of sale of goods etc.).
- 73. See below, para.38-018.
- 74. Directive 2005/29 art.3(2), recital 9. cf. Consumer Rights Directive 2011 art.3(5) below, paras 38-059—38-061.
- 75. Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1277) Pt 4A (as inserted by Consumer Protection (Amendment) Regulations 2014 (SI 2014/870) and see below, paras 38-160 et seq.
- 76. See above, paras 35-071—35-073.
- 77. i.e. July 31, 2015.
- 78. The Consumer Rights Act 2015 (Commencement No.3, Transitional Provisions, Savings and Consequential Amendments) Order 2015 (SI 2015/1630) art.3(a)–(c) (with the exceptions and qualifications made by arts 4 and 6: see further below, paras 38-197, 38-335 and 38-403).
- 79. See below, paras 38-201—38-333 and 38-334—38-394 respectively.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 2. - The Relationship of EU and UK Consumer Contract Law

(a) - The Continuing Interpretative Significance of EU Directives

EU regulations and directives ⁸⁰

38-012

! The vast majority of EU legislative instruments governing the substantive law of consumer contracts has been in the form of directives rather than regulations, ⁸¹ unlike EU private international law which has been enacted by EU regulation. ⁸² As the European treaties have made clear, a regulation has “general application” and is “binding in its entirety and directly applicable in all Member States”. ⁸³ By contrast, a directive is “binding, as to the result to be achieved, upon each Member State to which it is addressed, but shall leave to the national authorities the choice of form and methods”. ⁸⁴ Use of directives by the EU legislator therefore allows a Member State a degree of leeway in terms of the juristic or procedural mechanisms by which it is to be implemented. This degree of choice in the “form and methods” of implementation of a directive must be distinguished from the question of whether it allows a Member State to go further than the directive requires, which, in the context of consumer protection, turns on the distinction between “minimum” and “full harmonisation” and on the scope of the particular instrument. ⁸⁵ While the UK legislator’s earlier approach to the implementation of EEC consumer protection law sought to take full advantage of the degree of leeway allowed by directives (as can be seen in the “domestication” of the Product Liability Directive’s requirements by the Consumer Protection Act 1987), ⁸⁶ from the 1990s the UK legislator has generally preferred to take a more cautious route, sometimes following almost word for word the text of a directive, an approach sometimes known as “copyout”, of which the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations provide a well-known example. ⁸⁷ An important exception to this general pattern (though not one which affects the rights of individual consumers) can be seen in relation to the measures put in place by the UK legislature for the enforcement of European consumer protection rules. Here, the various directives require Member States to put in place “adequate and effective means” for the prevention of the practices controlled by them (for example, the use by traders of unfair contract terms) and this has given Member States very considerable discretion as to the mechanisms by which they do so. ⁸⁸ The Consumer Rights Act 2015 follows a similar route as regards the preventive and enforcement measures which it consolidates and reforms, but its provisions which set out the consumer’s substantive rights against traders do not follow the earlier pattern of UK implementation and instead seek to integrate, at least to an extent, the European rules within earlier domestic legislative rules, while at the same time “improving” and adding to them so as to conform to UK consumer protection policy. ⁸⁹

Significance of EU source of English consumer contract law for its interpretation

38-013

! EU directives remain important even after their implementation into English law by statute or statutory instrument. This importance stems from the fact that as a matter of EU legal principle and of English judicial practice UK implementing legislation must “as far as possible” be interpreted by English courts so as to give effect not merely to the terms but also the purposes of a directive, this principle of conforming interpretation sometimes being said to lead to the “indirect effect” of directives.

⁹⁰ ! Thus, where the terms of a directive (on their proper, i.e. EU, interpretation) have one significance, this must wherever possible prevail over any significance which is apparently intended by the words of the United Kingdom's implementing legislation. ⁹¹ The Court of Justice of the EU has recognised, however, that:

“the obligation for a national court to refer to the content of a directive when interpreting and applying the relevant rules of domestic law is limited by general principles of law and cannot serve as the basis for an interpretation of national law contra legem [i.e. contrary to the clear words of the legislation].” ⁹²

Moreover, the Court of Justice has consistently held that “even a clear, precise and unconditional provision of a directive seeking to confer rights or impose obligations on individuals cannot of itself apply in proceedings exclusively between private parties”. ⁹³ So, in the usual case of a dispute arising from consumer contract law (which seeks to confer rights on consumers against traders), where an English court considers itself unable to interpret national implementing legislation so as to conform to the requirements of the underlying EU directive, then it must apply the national legislation even though this would lead to the UK being in breach of its Treaty obligations: in principle, directives do not have “horizontal effects”. ⁹⁴ Finally, where UK law does implement a EU directive, and the Court of Justice of the EU ⁹⁵ has ruled on the meaning of or laid down principles in relation to that directive, UK courts must follow that ruling or those principles. ⁹⁶

“Autonomous” and national interpretations

38-014

! In interpreting the terms of a directive, an important distinction is to be drawn according to whether the Court of Justice has treated or is likely to treat a particular issue as one on which a European view should be taken (giving rise to an “autonomous” or “independent” interpretation) or as one which should be left to the national laws of the Member States. For this purpose, the Court of Justice has stated that:

“According to settled case-law, the need for a uniform application of European Union law and the principle of equality require that the terms of a provision of European Union law which makes no express reference to the law of the Member States for the purpose of determining its meaning and scope must normally be given an independent and uniform interpretation throughout the European Union.” ⁹⁷

For those issues where a particular legal concept is itself defined (at least in part) by a directive or regulation, it is clear that an “autonomous” interpretation is at least to this extent to be taken. ⁹⁸ So, for example, in Kásler the Court of Justice held that the terms used by art.4(2) of the Directive on unfair terms in consumer contracts (which create an exclusion from its general test of unfairness) must be given an autonomous interpretation, and the Court then set out “the criteria that the national court may or must apply when examining a contractual term” for this purpose. ⁹⁹ In some contexts in constructing such an autonomous interpretation, the Court of Justice may rely on academic instruments setting out “European contract law” ¹⁰⁰ on the basis that these reflect principles common to the laws of Member States. ¹⁰¹ However, as the passage from the Court of Justice recognises, the Court’s development of autonomous interpretations of concepts used by EU legislation finds an exception in the case of provisions which expressly refer to the law of the Member States for the purpose of determining its meaning and scope. An important example of this may be found in context of consumer contracts in the Consumer Rights Directive 2011, art.3(5) of which states that:

“This Directive shall not affect national general contract law such as the rules on the validity, formation or effect of a contract, in so far as general contract law aspects are not regulated in this Directive.”

As will be explained, this rather opaque provision is intended to allocate the interpretation of some of the “contract law” concepts used by the Directive to national law, even though the Directive requires the enactment of contract law rules. ¹⁰²  Moreover, even in the absence of a provision such as art.3(5) of the 2011 Directive, the Court of Justice may depart from its normal approach requiring an autonomous interpretation as regards some concepts used by a directive, principally on the ground of the difficulty of construction of an autonomous interpretation (as may be the case for the definition of “contract” itself). ¹⁰³ Where this is the case, the Court may allow national legislation or national courts to take their own view of the meaning of a concept, subject in particular to the principle of the effectiveness of the protection for consumers. ¹⁰⁴

Interpretative approach of Court of Justice

38-015

As is well known, the Court of Justice of the EU takes a less literal and more teleological approach to the interpretation of legislation than is traditional in English law, this meaning that the purposes of a directive, especially as set out in its recitals, must be kept in mind in resolving any question of interpretation of its provisions. ¹⁰⁵ Furthermore, the recitals to directives often seek to explain provisions in their main text and the Court of Justice takes these explanations into account in its interpretation of the text, although it will not allow the recitals to contradict that text. ¹⁰⁶ So, for example, the text of the Consumer Rights Directive of 2011 follows earlier European legislative practice in providing that:

““consumer” means any natural person who, in contracts covered by this Directive, is acting for purposes which are outside his trade, business, craft or profession.” ¹⁰⁷

However, recital 17 of the Directive glosses this definition by adding that:

“in the case of dual purpose contracts, where the contract is concluded for purposes partly within and partly outside the person’s trade and the trade purpose is so limited as not to be predominant in the overall context of the contract, that person should also be considered as a consumer.”

Given the interpretative significance given by the CJEU to a directive’s recitals, the definition in the text of the 2011 Directive must therefore be read subject to this gloss. ¹⁰⁸ The Court may also take into account the travaux préparatoires of a regulation or directive in interpreting its provisions. ¹⁰⁹ Moreover, the different language versions of regulations and directives are equally authoritative and so recourse may need to be had at times to language versions other than English. ¹¹⁰ The CJEU also takes in account wider EU legal principle (such as the principles of legal certainty, effectiveness or the “principle of the procedural autonomy” of national laws ¹¹¹); and more recently, it has also taken into account relevant provisions of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union. ¹¹² Finally, as part of its seeking to interpret every provision of EU law in the light of EU law as a whole, ¹¹³ the Court of Justice sometimes takes into account its case-law interpreting a concept in one context in deciding the interpretation of the same or a similar concept in another. This quest for consistency of interpretation can be seen in relation to some of its decisions in the area of EU consumer contract law. ¹¹⁴

Interpretation, application and “guidance” by the Court of Justice

38-016

While in principle the Court of Justice holds that the interpretation of EU law is ultimately for itself, it recognises that the application of EU law is for national courts, a division of function reflected in the preliminary ruling procedure by which a national court may or, where a question of interpretation is raised in a case before a national court “against whose decisions there is no judicial remedy under national law”, must ask the Luxembourg court for its interpretative view.¹¹⁵ However, the line between interpretation and application can be blurred, especially in the case of evaluative concepts such as the “unfairness of a contract term” (as set out in the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Directive 1993). In this context, the approach of the Court of Justice was for long quite restrained, holding that while it:

“... may interpret general criteria used by the Community legislation in order to define the concept of unfair terms ... it should not rule on the application of these general criteria to a particular term, which must be considered in the light of the particular circumstances of the case in question.”¹¹⁶

However, while still formally adhering to this position, since 2011 the Court has chosen to explain in some detail the considerations that a national court should take into account in applying the test of unfairness, by way of “guidance”.¹¹⁷ The Court has taken a similar view of other provisions within the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Directive, so in Matei v SC Volksbank România SA the Court ruled, in relation to the exclusion from the test of unfairness of terms which reflect the main subject matter of the contract and in relation to the price/quality ratio in art.4(2),¹¹⁸ that:

“although it is for the national court alone to rule on the classification of [the relevant terms] in accordance with the particular circumstances of the case, the fact remains that the Court has jurisdiction to elicit from the provisions of Directive 93/13, in this case the provisions of Article 4(2), the criteria that the national court may or must apply when examining a contractual term.”¹¹⁹

Approach of English courts

38-017

English courts have sought to follow the interpretative practice of the Court of Justice and, where necessary or helpful, look at the recitals to a directive as an aid to its interpretation,¹²⁰ consider other language versions of its text,¹²¹ and, of course, apply the interpretations and guidance of the Court of Justice in their own decision-making.¹²² In the following discussion, therefore, while primary reference will be made to the UK legislation implementing an EU directive in English law on the general assumption that it reflects that directive, where necessary reference will be made to this wider body of authoritative material.

The duty of national courts to intervene of their own motion to protect EU consumer rights

38-018

⚠ In a series of cases starting with Océano Grupo Editorial, the European Court of Justice has held that national courts have both a power and a duty to raise of their own motion the question of the unfairness of a term in a consumer contract falling within the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Directive,¹²³ as long as the national court “has available to it the legal and factual elements necessary for that task”.¹²⁴ ⚠ This position is justified by the Court by the need to ensure that the consumer enjoys effective protection in view of the real risk that he is unaware of his rights or encounters difficulties in enforcing them.¹²⁵ This line of cases appeared at first to be distinct from the Court’s general case-law governing the question whether a national court must raise an issue of EU law of its own motion under Van Schijndel,¹²⁶ according to which national procedural rules on this question must not be less favourable than those governing similar domestic actions nor render virtually impossible or excessively difficult the exercise of rights conferred by EU law.¹²⁷ Moreover, in *Rampion*¹²⁸ the Court of Justice extended this special judicial protection for consumers, holding that a national court must have the power to raise the rights of the consumer under the Consumer Credit Directive 1986¹²⁹ of its own motion, given that that directive's purpose was to ensure the creation of a common consumer credit market and the protection of consumers.¹³⁰  On the other hand, in Martín Martín the Court held that a national court of appeal may, of its own motion, declare void a contract which infringes the Doorstep Selling Directive's provisions on consumer protection,¹³¹ even though the issue had not been raised at first instance,¹³² but in doing so it preferred to follow its approach in Van Schijndel, seeing this limitation on the power of national courts as "justified by the principle that, in a civil suit, it is for the parties to take the initiative, and that, as a result, the court is able to act of its own motion only in exceptional cases where the public interest requires intervention".¹³³ According to the Court, the Doorstep Selling Directive 1985 seeks to redress the imbalance and, therefore, disadvantage with which consumers, as "weaker parties" are faced with in the circumstances of doorstep selling by providing them with a right of cancellation, notice of which the business must give to them.¹³⁴ This notice of the consumer's rights "plays a central role in the overall scheme of the directive ... for the exercise of that right and, therefore, for the effectiveness of consumer protection sought by the Community legislature"¹³⁵: positive intervention allows the national court to "compensate for the imbalance between the consumer and the trader" in the context.¹³⁶ More recently, this approach has been adopted by the Court in the contexts of the Unfair Contract Terms Directive itself¹³⁷  as well as to the availability of different rights for the consumer in respect of non-conformity of goods bought under the Consumer Sales Directive 1999.¹³⁸

A wider duty to request information from parties?

38-018A

In *Faber v Autobedrijf Hazet Ochten BV*¹³⁹ the Court of Justice of the EU considered whether a national court has a duty to consider of its own motion whether a party to a contract subject to a dispute was a "consumer" so as to attract the application of national legislation implementing that directive. In doing so, the Court followed its own general approach under Van Schijndel, so as to subject any national procedural rules to the principles of equivalence and effectiveness.¹⁴⁰ According to the Court:

"In that regard, it is, in principle, for the national court, for the purpose of identifying the legal rules applicable to a dispute which has been brought before it, to assign a legal classification to the facts and acts on which the parties rely in support of their claims. That legal classification is a prerequisite in a case in which, like that in the main proceedings, the guarantee or warranty in respect of the goods sold, on which the applicant is relying, may be governed by different rules depending on the purchaser's status. Such a classification does not, in itself, imply that the court is, of its own motion, exercising a discretion, but merely that it is establishing and ascertaining whether there is a statutory condition which determines the applicable legal rule."¹⁴¹

This view reflects a general approach in many continental national procedural laws according to which it is the role of a civil court to classify the facts and transactions ("acts"¹⁴²) on which parties base their claims following the principle iura novit curia ("the court knows the law"), but it contrasts sharply with the approach of the common law generally (and English law in particular) where in principle it is for the parties to characterise in legal terms the basis of their claims.¹⁴³ Following Van Schijndel, the Court of Justice did not treat the court's duty here to be one governed merely by national law to be applied in the EU law context by way of application of the principle of equivalence,¹⁴⁴ but rather one which may need to reflect the principle of effectiveness:

"the principle of effectiveness requires a national court before which a dispute relating to a contract which may be covered by that directive has been brought to determine whether the purchaser may be classified as a consumer, even if the purchaser has not expressly claimed to have that status, as soon as that court has at its disposal the matters of law and of fact that are necessary for that purpose or may have them at its disposal simply by making a request for clarification." ¹⁴⁵

To decide otherwise would be "tantamount to making the consumer subject to the obligation to carry out a full classification of his situation himself, failing which he would lose the rights which the EU legislature intended to confer on him" by the 1999 Directive. ¹⁴⁶ As will be seen, from the point of view of English law the radical element here is the requirement that, where a national court cannot on the facts as otherwise available to it determine whether a case before it falls within the scope of national legislation implementing an EU consumer protection directive, it may be required as a matter of EU law to request a party to clarify the factual position so as to be able to do so. ¹⁴⁷

Significance for English law

38-019

In the context of the regulation of unfair contract terms, the significance of the case-law following Océano Grupo Editorial ¹⁴⁸ has long been recognised and this has now been given legislative expression in the UK by the Consumer Rights Act 2015 which provides that, in proceedings before a court which relate to a term of a consumer contract ¹⁴⁹:

"The court must consider whether the term is fair even if none of the parties to the proceedings has raised that issue or indicated that it intends to raise it" ¹⁵⁰ provided that:

"the court considers that it has before it sufficient legal and factual material to enable it to consider the fairness of the term." ¹⁵¹

Outside this context, the UK legislation (primary and secondary) which implements EU consumer contract directives does not refer to any power or duty in courts to raise the issue of any rights which the consumer may have under EU law of their own motion. However, given the case-law in Rampion, ¹⁵² Martín Martín, ¹⁵³ and Faber v Autobedrijf Hazet Ochten BV, ¹⁵⁴ it is clear that a court in England and Wales may have a duty to raise of its own motion the issue of whether a party to proceedings is a "consumer" and, if so, what rights he or she may enjoy under the legislation implementing EU consumer contract law subject principally to the condition that the right is important for the effectiveness of the particular consumer protection which is foreseen by the EU directive and a court may even be required to request a party to clarify the facts to do so.

^{80.} See general note on the announcement that the United Kingdom will leave the European Union, above, para.1-013A.

^{81.} An example of an EU regulation creating rights for consumers (though not formally limited to consumers) is Regulation (EC) 261/2004 establishing common rules on compensation and assistance to passengers in the event of denied boarding and of cancellation or long delay of flights [2004] O.J. L46/1 (the "Denied Boarding Regulation"), on which see above, paras 35-071—35-073.

^{82.} Notably, Regulation (EC) 593/2008 on the law applicable to contractual obligations ("Rome I")

[2008] O.J. L177/6; Council Regulation 44/2001 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters [2001] O.J. L012/1 (“Brussels I Regulation”) which was itself replaced by Regulation (EU) 1215/2012 of 12 December 2012 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters (recast) (“the Brussels I bis Regulation”); Regulation (EC) 864/2007 applicable to non-contractual obligations (“Rome II Regulation”) [2007] O.J. L199/40 (some of whose provisions bear an important relationship with contract, notably art.12 “culpa in contrahendo”).

83. art.288 TFEU (formerly art.249 EC).

84. art.288 TFEU (formerly art.249 EC).

85. Below, paras 38-020—38-026.

86. Directive 1985/374/EEC concerning liability for defective products. HL Deb. Vol.483 col. 851 (Lord Lucas) (government’s purpose was “to make clear those of [1985 Directive’s] provisions which are unfamiliar to our law or might otherwise give rise to debate”).

87. Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1994 (SI 1994/3159), which were revoked and replaced by the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999 (SI 1999/2083). For criticisms of “copy-out” in this context see Bright and Bright (1995) 111 L.Q.R. 655; Reynolds (1994) 111 L.Q.R. 1.

88. e.g. Directive 93/13/EEC art.7; Nemzeti Fogyasztóvédelmi Hatóság v Invitel Távközlési Zrt (C-472/10) of April 26, 2012 at para.38 and see below, paras 38-323—38-333.

89. Below, paras 38-339—38-344.

90.  For the main European decisions see Von Colson and Kammann v Land Nordrhein-Westfalen (C-14/83) [1984] E.C.R. 1891, Marleasing SA v La Comercial Internacional de Alimentacion SA (C-106/89) [1990] E.C.R. I-4135, Pfeiffer v Deutsches Rotes Kreuz, Kreisverband Waldshut eV (C-397-403/01) [2004] E.C.R. I-8835, Schulte v Deutsche Bausparkasse Badenia AG (C-350/03) [2005] E.C.R. I-0912 at para.71 and see Prechal, Directives in EC Law, 2nd edn (2005), Ch.8; Craig and De Búrca, EU Law, 6th edn (2015), pp.209 et seq. For the UK see in particular Robertson v Swift [2014] UKSC 50, [2014] 1 W.L.R. 3438 at [20]–[23] approving the summary of the impact of this principle by Sir Andrew Morritt, C. at Vodafone 2 v Commissioners for Her Majesty’s Revenue and Customs [2010] Ch. 77 at [37]; United States of America v Nolan [2015] UKSC 63, [2016] A.C. 463 where Lord Mance J.S.C. (with whom Lord Neuberger of Abbotsbury P.S.C., Baroness Hale of Richmond D.P.S.C. and Lord Reed J.S.C. agreed) at [14] described the principle of conforming interpretation as “a cardinal principle of European Union and domestic law”.

91. Robertson v Swift [2014] UKSC 50, [2014] 1 W.L.R. 3438 at [30]–[33] provides a good example of this in the context of the Cancellation of Contracts made in a Consumer’s Home or Place of Work, etc. Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1816) implementing the Doorstep Selling Directive 1985.

92. Kásler v OTP Jelzálogbank Zrt (C-26/13) of April 30, 2014 para.65 (in the context of Directive 93/13 on unfair terms in consumer contracts).

93. Faccini Dori v Recreb Srl (C-91/92) [1994] E.C.R. I-03325 paras 22–25 (in the context of the consumer’s right of cancellation under the Doorstep Selling Directive 85/577/EEC); Association de médiation sociale v Union locale des syndicats CGT (C-176/12) of January 15, 2014, para.36.

94. Marshall v Southampton and South-West Hampshire Area Health Authority (152/84) [1986] E.C.R. 723 para.48; Craig and De Búrca, EU Law, 6th edn (2015) pp.200–209.

95. Formerly the European Court of Justice.

96. European Communities Act 1972 s.3(1).

- 97. Ekro BV Vee- en Vleeshandel v Produktschap voor Vee en Vlees (C-327/82) [1984] E.C.R. 00107 para.11; UsedSoft GmbH v Oracle International Corp (C-128/11) para.39 and see similarly Infopaq International (C-5/08) [2009] E.C.R. I-6569 para.27; Stichting ter Exploitatie van Naburige Rechten (SENA) v Nederlandse Omroep Stichting (NOS) (C-245/00) [2003] E.C.R. I-1251 para.23; BKK Mobil Oil Körperschaft des öffentlichen Rechts v Zentrale zur Bekämpfung unlauteren Wettbewerbs eV (C-59/12) of October 3, 2013 para.25.
- 98. Other examples of the ECJ/CJEU taking autonomous interpretations of concepts in EU consumer directives may be found in easyCar (UK) Ltd v Office of Fair Trading (C-336/03) [2005] E.C.R. I-1947 paras 20–24 (“contract for the provision of transport services” under Directive 97/7/EC on the protection of consumers in respect of distance contracts art.3(2)); Leitner v TUI Deutschland GmbH & Co KG (C-168/00) [2002] E.C.R. I-02631 (“damage” for the purposes of Directive 90/314/EEC of 13 June 1990 on package travel, package holidays and package tours art.5); Wallentin-Hermann v Alitalia-Linee Aeree Italiane SpA (C-549/07) [2008] E.C.R. I-11061 (“extraordinary circumstances” for the purposes of the Denied Boarding Regulation).
- 99. Kásler v OTP Jelzálogbank Zrt (C-26/13) of April 30, 2014 at paras 38, 45–51 and see below, paras 38-229—38-230.
- 100. Notably, Lando and Beale, Principles of European Contract Law Pts I and II (1999), Lando, Clive, Prüm and Zimmermann, Principles of European Contract Law Pt III (2003); Principles, Definitions and Model Rules of European Private Law, Draft Common Frame of Reference (DCFR) prepared by the Study Group on a European Civil Code and the Research Group on EC Private Law (Acquis Group), 2010, six volumes. Although subsequently withdrawn by the EU Commission, the CJEU could nevertheless take into account the Proposal for a Regulation on a Common European Sales Law Com(2011) 635 final, whose Annex I setting out a Common European Sales Law (“CESL”) contains provisions on many issues applicable to contracts generally.
- 101. See, e.g. Masdar (UK) Ltd v EC Commission (T-333/03) [2007] 2 All E.R. 261 where the Court of First Instance accepted reference to the work of the Study Group on a European Civil Code in order to develop a EU law of restitution for unjustified enrichment under art.288 (formerly 215) EC; Hamilton v Volksbank Filder eG (C-412/06) (A.G. Poires Maturo at para.24 referring to time limits for the exercise of a right as being a “principle common to the laws of the Member States” and citing the possible future DCFR); A.G. Trstenjak’s reference to art.167(3) CESL in the context of the 1993 Directive in Banco Español de Crédito SA v Calderón Camino (C-618/10) para.42.
- 102.  See below, paras 38-059—38-061. Identical provision to art.3(5) of the 2011 Directive is found in Directive (EU) 2015/2302 on package travel and linked travel arrangements [2015] O.J. L326/1 art.2(3) (this Directive repeals and replaces Directive 90/314/EEC on package travel, package holidays and package tours [1990] O.J. L158/59).
- 103. See below, paras 38-210—38-211 respectively.
- 104. cf. e.g. Veedfald v Århus Amtskommune (C-203/99) [2001] E.C.R. I-03569 at para.27 (in the context of Directive 85/374/EEC concerning liability for defective products [1985] O.J. L210/29 art.9).
- 105. See, e.g. in the context of the Denied Boarding Regulation Sturgeon v Condor Flugdienst GmbH (C-402/07 and C-432/07) [2009] E.C.R. I-10923 paras 40–42.
- 106. Société d'Importation Edouard Leclerc-Siplec v TF1 Publicité SA (412/93) [1995] E.C.R. I-00179 at paras 45–47.
- 107. Directive 2011/83/EU on consumer rights, art.2(1). See similarly Directive 93/13/EEC on unfair terms in consumer contracts art.2(b) (in the same terms, except without reference to “craft”).
- 108. This is the case in the context of the UK’s implementation of the Consumer Rights Directive 2011 which defines “consumer” explicitly in this way: 2013 Regulations reg.4; Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.2(3) and see below, para.38-038. It remains a more controversial question whether this gloss on the standard definition of “consumer” should and would be read over to other EU secondary legislation: below, para.38-034.

- 109. Schønberg and Frick (2003) 28 European Law Review 149. For a recent example in the consumer law context see Faber v Autobedrijf Hazet Ochten BV (C-497/13) of June 4, 2015 at paras 54, 61 and 72 (referring to the European Commission’s explanatory memorandum to the proposal for the Consumer Sales Directive 1999, Com(95) 520 final).
- 110. Srl CILFIT and Lanificio di Gavardo SpA v Ministry of Health (C-283/81) [1982] E.C.R. 03415 at para.18; Kyocera Electronics Europe GmbH v Hauptzollamt Krefeld (C-152/01) [2003] E.C.R. I-13821 at paras 32–33 and see below, para.38-048 (“trader”).
- 111. e.g. Asturcom Telecomunicaciones SL v Rodriguez Nogueira (C-40/08) [2009] E.C.R. I-9579, below para.38-306.
- 112. e.g. Asociación de Consumidores Independientes de Castilla y León v Anuntis Segundamano España SL (C-413/12).
- 113. Srl CILFIT and Lanificio di Gavardo SpA v Ministry of Health (C-283/81) [1982] E.C.R. 03415 at para.20.
- 114. e.g. BKK Mobil Oil Körperschaft des öffentlichen Rechts v Zentrale zur Bekämpfung unlauteren Wettbewerbs eV (C-59/12) of October 3, 2013 at [33]–[35] where the CJEU analogised between definitions of “consumer” for the purposes of Directive 2005/29/EC concerning unfair business-to-consumer commercial practices [2005] O.J. L149/22 art.2(b) and the Brussels Convention on Jurisdiction and the Enforcement of Foreign Judgments in Civil and Commercial Matters of September 27, 1968 art.13 (jurisdiction on consumer contracts).
- 115. art.267 TFEU (formerly art.177 EC). The most important qualification on the duty to refer is found in the doctrine of acte clair, where “the correct application of Community law [is] so obvious as to leave no scope for any reasonable doubt as to the manner in which the question raised is to be resolved”: Srl CILFIT and Lanificio di Gavardo SpA v Ministry of Health (283/81) [1982] E.C.R. 03415 at para.16; Craig and De Búrca, EU Law, 6th edn (2015) 500–501.
- 116. Freiburger Kommunalbauten GmbH Baugesellschaft & Co KG v Hofstetter (C-237/02) [2004] 2 C.M.L.R. 13 at para.22.
- 117. Pereni#ová v SPS finance spol. sro (C-453/10) para.44; Nemzeti Fogyasztóvédelmi Hatóság v Invitel Távközlési Zrt (C-472/10) at para.22; RWE Vertrieb AG v Verbraucherzentrale Nordrhein-Westfalen eV (C-92/11) para.48; Aziz v Caixa d’Estalvis de Catalunya, Tarragona i Manresa (C-415/11) at para.66; Constructora Principado SA v Menéndez Álvarez (C-226/12) of January 16, 2014 at para.20; Sebestyén v Kővári (C-342/13) of April 3, 2014, para.25. See further below, paras 38-247—38-248, 38-252 and 38-288.
- 118. Below, paras 38-224 et seq.
- 119. Matei v SC Volksbank România SA (C-143/13) of February 26, 2015, para.53, referring to Kásler v OTP Jelzálogbank Zrt (C-26/13) of April 30, 2014 para.45.
- 120. Freiburger Kommunalbauten GmbH Baugesellschaft & Co KG v Hofstetter (C-237/02) [2004] 2 C.M.L.R. 13 at para.22 (unfair contract terms). For examples in the English courts see: Director General of Fair Trading v First National Bank Plc [2001] UKHL 52, [2002] 1 A.C. 481 (Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Directive 1993); Sean Titshall v Qwerty Travel Ltd [2011] EWCA Civ 1569, [2011] C.T.L.C. 219 at [5] (Package Travel Directive 1990)
- 121. e.g. Lord Rodger of Earlsferry’s discussion of the German and French texts of art.4(2) of Directive 93/13/EEC in Director General of Fair Trading v First National Bank Plc [2001] UKHL 52 at [64].

- 122. e.g. Robertson v Swift [2014] UKSC 50, [2014] 1 W.L.R. 3238 at [23]–[24], [27]–[28].
- 123. Océano Grupo Editorial SA v Murciano Quintero (C-240/98 to C-244/98) [2000] E.C.R. I-4941; Mostaza Claro v Centro Móvil Milenium SL (C-168/05) [2006] E.C.R. I-10421. On this caselaw see below, paras 38-304–38-307. For a general discussion of these questions see Whittaker, The Involvement of EU Law in Private Relationships (2013) Ch.6.
- 124.  Pannon GSM Zrt v Erzsébet Sustikné Györfi (C-243/08) [2009] E.C.R. I-4713 at para.32; Bucura v SC Bancpost SA (C-348/14) July 9, 2015 para.44. On the possibility that a Member State may incur liability for a court's failure to protect a consumer's EU law rights see Tomášová v Republic of Slovakia (C-168/15) July 28, 2016, below, para.38-304.
- 125. Océano Grupo Editorial SA v Murciano Quintero (C-240/98 to C-244/98) at para.26.
- 126. Van Schijndel v Stichting Pensioenfonds voor Fysiotherapeuten (C-430/93 and C-431/93) [1995] E.C.R. I-4705; Peterbroeck, Van Campenhout & Cie SCS v Belgium (C-312/93) [1995] E.C.R. I-4599; Heemskerk BV and Firma Schaap v Productschap Vee en Vlees (C-455/06) [2008] E.C.R. I-8763.
- 127. Van Schijndel (C-430/93 and C-431/93) at para.17.
- 128. Rampion v Franfinance SA (C-429/05) [2007] E.C.R. I-8017.
- 129. Directive 87/102/EEC [1987] O.J. L42/48.
- 130.  Rampion (C-429/05) at para.59; Radlinger v Finway a.s. (C-377/14) April 21, 2016 at paras 62–74 (information duties) and see below, para.38-063A.
- 131. Directive 85/577/EEC. The Directive itself requires only that the consumer be given a right of cancellation of the contract, but the Court held that a national court was entitled to declare a contract void in these circumstances: first, because the Directive allows national authorities a discretion in determining the consequences which follow the infringement in question; and second, because the Directive puts in place only a minimum level of harmonisation: Martín Martín v EDP Editores SL (C-227/08) [2009] E.C.R. I-11939, paras 32–33. On this directive generally and its replacement by the Consumer Rights Directive 2011 see below, paras 38-055–38-056.
- 132. Martín Martín v EDP Editores SL (C-227/08) [2009] E.C.R. I-11939, para.18.
- 133. C-227/08 para.20.
- 134. C-227/08 paras 21–26.
- 135. C-227/08 para.27.
- 136. C-227/08 para.28.
- 137.  Banif Plus Bank Zrt v Csipai (C-472/11) [2013] W.L.R. (D) 76 at para.27; Asturcom Telecomunicaciones SL v Rodriguez Nogueira (C-40/08) [2009] E.C.R. I-9579, below, para.38-306. See also Margarit Panicello v Hernández Martínez (C-503/15) A.G. Opinion of September 15, 2016 at [127]–[128] (The CJEU judgment of February 16, 2017 did not comment on these issues).
- 138.  Directive 1999/44/EEC; Duarte Hueros v Autociba SSA and Automóviles Citroen España SA (C-32/12) [2014] 1 C.M.L.R. 53 especially at paras 31–43 (in the context of a national rule denying a court the power recognise the consumer's right to reduction of the price on the ground of nonconformity where the consumer had claimed unsuccessfully rescission of the contract). cf. Radlinger v Finway a.s. (C-377/14) April 21, 2016 at paras 62–74 where the CJEU recognised an obligation on the national court to consider whether the information duties of the trader under the Consumer Credit Directive 2008 had been complied with simply by reference to the need to ensure the protection of the consumer and to its earlier case-law.

- 139. C-497/13 of June 4, 2015 (“Faber (C-497/13)”).
- 140. Van Schijndel v Stichting Pensioenfonds voor Fysiotherapeuten (C-430/93 and C-431/93) [1995] E.C.R. I-4705 above, para.38-018.
- 141. Faber (C-497/13) at para.38.
- 142. cf. the French version of para.38, which refers to “faits et actes”.
- 143. See generally Whittaker, The Involvement of EU Law in Private Relationships (2013) Ch.6.
- 144. Faber (C-497/13) at para.39.
- 145. Faber (C-497/13) at para.46 (emphasis added).
- 146. Faber (C-497/13) at para.44. For this purpose, the Court held that it is irrelevant whether or not a consumer is assisted by a lawyer: Faber (C-497/13) at para.47.
- 147. cf. the more cautious approach of A.G. Sharpston, advising that the national court should not have a duty to go beyond the ambit of the dispute as defined by the parties and not, therefore, where the legal and factual elements are neither already part of the file or are obtainable in accordance with national procedural law: Opinion in Faber (C-497/13) of November 27, 2014, especially at paras 70-73.
- 148. Océano Grupo Editorial SA v Murciano Quintero (C-240/98 to C-244/98) [2000] E.C.R. I-4941.
- 149. Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.71(1) and see below, para.38-361 in particular on the question whether restricting the court’s duty to the situation where “proceedings before a court relate to a term of a consumer contract” is compatible with the case-law of the CJEU.
- 150. Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.71(2).
- 151. Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.71(3).
- 152. Rampion v Franfinance SA (C-429/05) [2007] E.C.R. I-8017.
- 153. Directive 85/577/EEC; Martín Martín v EDP Editores SL (C-227/08) [2009] E.C.R. I-11939 paras 32-33.
- 154. C-497/13 above, para.38-018A.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 2. - The Relationship of EU and UK Consumer Contract Law

(b) - The Intensity of Harmonisation Required by EU Legislation

“Minimum harmonisation”

38-020

As earlier noted, earlier European directives seeking to harmonise consumer contract law did so in a way which explicitly required only “minimum harmonisation”. The typical example ¹⁵⁵ may be found in the case of the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Directive 1993, art.8 of which allows Member States to “adopt or retain the most stringent provisions compatible with the Treaty in the area covered by this Directive, to ensure a maximum degree of protection for the consumer.”

This has consequences for the lawfulness of any national extension of protections as a matter of EU. For example, in Caja de Madrid ¹⁵⁶ the Court of Justice held that Spanish legislation implementing the 1993 Directive in a way which does not include the exclusion from the requirement of fairness of terms provided by art.4(2) of the 1993 Directive is compatible with that Directive and with EU law more generally, as the exclusion falls within the “material scope” of the Directive and therefore within art.8’s minimum harmonisation clause. ¹⁵⁷ As regards the condition in art.8 of the Directive that any such extension of the protection of consumers must be “compatible with the Treaty”, the Court of Justice ruled that the Treaty provisions cited for this purpose by one of the parties to the national litigation as precluding the omission of art.4(2) of the Directive from its national implementing legislation did not give rise to clear and unconditional obligations on Member States and therefore could not have this effect. ¹⁵⁸ As a result, in principle, art.8 allows Member States to extend the scheme of control required by the 1993 Directive where these fall within the “material scope” of the Directive, that is to say, “the laws, regulations and administrative provisions of the Member States relating to unfair terms in contracts concluded between a seller or supplier and a consumer” ¹⁵⁹ with the exception of “contractual terms which reflect mandatory statutory or regulatory provisions and the provisions or principles of international conventions to which the Member States or the Community are party”. ¹⁶⁰ However, the power of national legislatures to extend the protection set out by minimum harmonisation directives does not mean that issues not expressly covered by a directive remain within the competence of national legislatures and, therefore, national law, at least if the issue is implicitly covered by the Directive as correctly interpreted. So, for example, in Leitner the ECJ rejected the argument that the lack of the inclusion of “non-material damage” (notably, loss of enjoyment) as a damage for which a package tour operator is responsible under the Package Travel Directive 1990 in cases where it has failed to perform its contract with the consumer does not mean that the issue of the recoverability of “non-material damage” was within the competence of national legislatures, holding instead that “damage” must be interpreted as including “non-material damage” in this context. ¹⁶¹

“Minimum harmonisation” and national legislation beyond the scope of the instrument

38-021

The power recognised by a “minimum harmonisation” clause in a EU directive to maintain or introduce stricter provisions to extend the protection for consumers is restricted to the scope of that directive. ¹⁶² However, after the enactment of a directive, in principle Member States remain competent to enact laws outside its scope, subject to any other EU law obligation to the contrary. To give a very clear example, the enactment of the (minimum harmonisation) Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Directive did not (and does not) prevent Member States from enacting rules to govern unfair terms in contracts falling outside its scope, notably, commercial contracts or contracts between two private individuals neither of whom are acting in the course of business, as is the case in English law in the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977. Moreover, there is no reason why a Member State should not for this purpose adopt the regulatory framework used by a directive. ¹⁶³

Examples of “minimum harmonisation” directives

38-022

⚠ Apart from the 1993 Directive, a number of EU legislative instruments in the area of consumer contract law still require only “minimum harmonisation”, notably, the Consumer Sales Directive 1999, ¹⁶⁴ the Package Travel Directive 1990 ¹⁶⁵ ⚠ and the Denied Boarding Regulation. ¹⁶⁶

“Full harmonisation”

38-023

In the later 1990s the European Commission became dissatisfied with the effect of “minimum harmonisation” as a tool for the development of the internal market, seeing the extensions of protection for consumers (and others) by national laws which this allows as creating “legal fragmentation” between those laws and, therefore, distortions in competition and inhibitions to the development of the internal market. ¹⁶⁷ The Commission has therefore sought to move from minimum harmonisation to “full harmonisation” both as regards areas already covered by EU legislation and in new areas of EU legislative intervention. In the context of consumer law, “full harmonisation” requires Member States to put in place the rights which the relevant instrument requires for their protection, but it prohibits Member States from going further than these requirements and putting in place stricter consumer protection. This means that a directive held to require “full harmonisation” will not merely prohibit Member States from enacting implementing legislation which goes beyond the instrument's requirements, but will also require them to cut down any existing national rules for the protection of consumers which do so. Here, therefore, the “material scope” of the EU legislative instrument becomes of crucial importance, for any “full harmonisation” required by it applies only within the scope of the instrument and not beyond it. For example, in 2002 the Court of Justice held that the Product Liability Directive 1985 ¹⁶⁸ required “complete harmonisation” of national laws within its scope. ¹⁶⁹ In its implementing legislation France had imposed liability on producers in respect of damage to property caused by their defective products without the restrictions contained in the Directive which set a lower threshold of 500 ECU and which concern only an item of property which “is of a type ordinarily intended for private use or consumption” which “was used by the injured person mainly for his own private use or consumption” (which will be termed here “consumer property”). ¹⁷⁰ The Court of Justice held first that the omission of the lower threshold was incompatible with the Directive's requirement of “complete harmonisation”. ¹⁷¹ However, in a later case, the Court of Justice held that French implementing legislation's imposition of liability on producers in respect of any damage to property caused by a defective product including property intended for business use and employed for that purpose (and therefore without the restrictions in the Directive) did not fall foul of the “complete harmonisation” required by the Directive: the Directive does not seek exhaustively to harmonise the field of liability for defective products beyond the matters regulated by it and the definition of “damage” in the Directive is restricted to consumer property. ¹⁷² Moreover, even if an issue is not regulated by a provision in a directive which requires full harmonisation, but the issue is nevertheless held to fall within its scope, then Member States are in principle precluded from regulating that issue as the directive has to this extent a “pre-emptive” effect. ¹⁷³

Examples of “full harmonisation” and “partial full harmonisation”: Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005 ¹⁷⁴

38-024

⚠ Perhaps the most important example of “full harmonisation” in EU consumer protection law is found in the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005, which contains a so-called “internal market clause” according to which:

“Member States shall neither restrict the freedom to provide services nor restrict the free movement of goods for reasons falling within the field approximated by this Directive.” ¹⁷⁵

The Court of Justice has held that this provision means that the 2005 Directive requires “full harmonisation” of “the laws, regulations and administrative provisions of the Member States on unfair commercial practices harming consumers’ economic interests” within its scope, except where the 2005 Directive itself recognises exceptions to, or qualifications on, this position. ¹⁷⁶ Crucially, therefore, in principle, Member States must not prohibit business-to-consumer commercial practices within the scope of the 2005 Directive unless they are prohibited under the controls set out by the 2005 Directive itself. ¹⁷⁷ However, the 2005 Directive is stated as being “without prejudice to contract law and, in particular, to the rules on the validity, formation or effect of a contract”, this being the case whether those rules are EU or national. ¹⁷⁸ As a result, the 2005 Directive neither requires any changes to “contract law” nor, equally importantly, prohibits any changes to “contract law” even if they would otherwise appear to fall within its scope. This means, inter alia, that Member States remain competent to use the framework of control of the 2005 Directive (or just one or more of its controls) as the basis of “contract law” remedies in national legislation despite the Directive’s generally required “full harmonisation”. While the UK did not do so in its original implementation of the 2005 Directive, ¹⁷⁹ in 2014 its implementing legislation was amended so as to create a series of “rights to redress” for consumers against traders in respect of some unfair commercial practices, thereby taking advantage of this remaining competence. ¹⁸⁰ Moreover, as will be seen, the relationship between the 2005 Directive’s requirement of full harmonisation and national laws which implement directives in the area of contract law (such as the Directive on unfair terms in consumer contracts) and which take advantage of their “minimum harmonisation” is not straightforward. ¹⁸¹

Financial Services Distance Contracts Directive 2002

38-025

This Directive ¹⁸² sets full harmonisation as its general rule, but then exempts from this rule its central provisions imposing information requirements, thereby imposing there only minimum harmonisation. ¹⁸³

Consumer Rights Directive 2011

38-026

As originally proposed in 2008 the Consumer Rights Directive would have moved four existing directives from minimum to full harmonisation (including the Consumer Sales Directive and the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Directive), ¹⁸⁴ but the Consumer Rights Directive 2011 ¹⁸⁵ as enacted has a more restricted ambit, reworking earlier provisions concerning “off-premises contracts” and “distance contracts” ¹⁸⁶ (though not in the area of financial services ¹⁸⁷), adding new provisions governing pre-contractual information requirements for consumer contracts more generally, ¹⁸⁸ and making other particular changes. ¹⁸⁹ Article 4 declares that:

“Member States shall not maintain or introduce, in their national law, provisions diverging from those laid down in this Directive, including more or less stringent provisions to ensure a different level of consumer protection, unless otherwise provided for in this Directive.”

It will be seen, therefore, that the Consumer Rights Directive sets a general rule of “full harmonisation” but then notes that the Directive itself provides for some exceptions to this effect, for example, in relation to information requirements applicable to contracts other than “off-premises contracts” or distance contracts.¹⁹⁰ Moreover, the Consumer Rights Directive defines its scope elaborately, stating generally that it applies to “any contract concluded between a trader and a consumer” but then setting out a series of qualifications and restrictions.¹⁹¹

^{155.} This was seen as the typical example by the ECJ in Commission v France (C-52/00) of April 25, 2002 [2002] E.C.R. I-3827 at para.18 (where Directive 85/374/EEC on liability for defective products was held to require “complete harmonisation”).

^{156.} Caja de Ahorros y Monte de Piedad de Madrid v Asociación de Usuarios de Servicios Bancarios (Ausbanc) (C-484/08) (“Caja de Madrid (C-484/08)”) [2010] E.C.R. I-04785. The CJEU has also accepted that national legislation which prohibits the terms listed in the annex to the 1993 Directive (a “black list”) rather than constituting an “indicative list” (a “grey list”) is also compatible with EU law given the minimum harmonisation foreseen by that Directive: Matei v SC Volksbank România SA (C-143/13) of February 26, 2015, paras 60-61.

^{157.} Caja de Madrid (C-484/08) at paras 30-35. For an example in the UK context see Robertson v Swift [2014] UKSC 50, [2014] 1 W.L.R. 3438 at [18] approving in this respect the decision of the Court of Appeal sub. nom. Swift v Robinson [2013] EWCA Civ 1794, [2013] Bus. L.R. 479 at [48]-[54] (holding intra vires the extension by UK regulations made under the European Communities Act 1972 s.2(2) so as to include contracts made when a trader visits the consumer's house at the latter's request which was not required by the Doorstep Selling Directive 85/577/EEC (the SC reversed the Court of Appeal's decision on other grounds).

^{158.} Caja de Madrid (C-484/08) at paras 45-49 in relation to arts 2, 3(1)(g), 4(1) EC. See also Buet v Ministère public (C-382/87) [1989] E.C.R. 1235; Gysbrechts and Santurel Inter BVBA (C-205/07) [2008] E.C.R. I-09947. cf. Alemo-Herron v Parkwood Leisure Ltd (C-426/11) especially at para.32 qualifying the impact of a “minimum harmonisation” clause in Directive 2001/23 relating to the safeguarding of employees' rights in the event of transfers of undertakings, businesses or parts of undertakings or businesses [2001] O.J. L82/16 arts 3(1) and (8) by reference to art.16 of the EU Charter of Fundamental Right which “covers, inter alia, freedom of contract”, on which see Vol.I para.1-029.

^{159.} 1993 Directive art.1(1).

^{160.} 1993 Directive art.1(2), on which see below, paras 38-214—38-219.

^{161.} Leitner v TUI Deutschland GmbH & Co KG (C-168/00) [2002] E.C.R. I-02631 paras 16, 23 and 24.

^{162.} Caja de Madrid (C-484/08) paras 29-35.

^{163.} e.g. Di Pinto (C-361/89) [1991] E.C.R. I-01189 at para.22 (national extension of protection of Directive on “doorstep selling” for the benefit of businesses not precluded by Directive as this extension falls outside its scope).

^{164.} Directive 99/44/EC art.8(2).

^{165.}  Directive 90/314/EEC on package travel, package holidays and package tours art.8. The 1990 Directive is repealed by Directive (EU) 2015/2302 on package travel and linked travel

- arrangements [2015] O.J. L326/1, art.4 of which sets a general principle of full harmonisation. The Directive must be implemented by the UK by January 1, 2018.
- 166. Regulation (EC) 261/2004 establishing common rules on compensation and assistance to passengers in the event of denied boarding and of cancellation or long delay of flights, art.1(1) referring to “minimum rights for passengers”.
- 167. This is clearly set out in the Consumer Rights Directive 2011 (as enacted) recitals 6 and 7.
- 168. Council Directive 1985/374/EEC concerning liability for defective products, [1985] O.J. L210/29.
- 169. Commission v France (C-52/00) of April 25, 2002 [2002] E.C.R. I-3827; Commission v Greece (C-154/00) of April 25, 2002 [2002] E.C.R. I-3879; González Sanchez v Medicina Asturiana SA (C-183/00) of April 25, 2002 [2002] E.C.R. I-3901.
- 170. Directive 85/374/EEC art.9(b).
- 171. Commission v France (C-52/00) paras 26-34.
- 172. Moteurs Leroy Somer v Dalkia France (C-285/08) [2009] E.C.R. I-4733 paras 25-32.
- 173. See Weatherill, EU Consumer Law and Policy, 2nd edn (2013), 84-85 on “pre-emptive effect”. For the impact of full harmonisation on issues within a EU legislative instrument but not overtly regulated by it see Whittaker (2009) European Review of Contract Law 2.
- 174. Directive (EU) 2015/2302 on package travel and linked travel arrangements [2015] O.J. L326/1 art.4 sets a general principle of full harmonisation, with certain exceptions which the Directive itself sets out.
- 175. Directive 2005/29/EC concerning unfair business-to-consumer commercial practices [2005] O.J. L149/22 (“2005 Directive”) art.4.
- 176. Directive 2005/29/EC art.1. On the scope of the 2005 Directive see recitals 6-9 and art.3.
- 177. VTB-VAB NV Total Belgium NV (C-261/07 and C-299/07) [2009] E.C.R. I-2949 at para.63; Mediaprint Zeitungs und Zeitschriftenverlag GMBH & Co KG v “Österreich”-Zeitungsverlag GmbH (C-540/08) [2010] E.C.R. I-10909 at para.27, Zentrale sur Bekämpfung unlauteren Weebewerbs eV v Plus Warenhandels-gesellschaft mbh (C-304/08) [2010] E.C.R. I-00217 at para.41, Wamo BVBA v JBC NV (C-288/10) [2011] E.C.R. I-5835 at para.33. There is an important exception to “full harmonisation” in relation to “financial services”: 2005 Directive art.3(9).
- 178. 2005 Directive art.3(2), recital 9.
- 179. Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1277) (as originally enacted).
- 180. Consumer Protection (Amendment) Regulations 2014 (SI 2014/870) inserting, notably, new Pt 4A Consumers’ Rights to Redress in the 2008 Regulations (SI 2008/1277). See further below, paras 38-160 et seq.
- 181. See below, paras 38-389—38-394 in relation to the Consumer Rights Act 2015.
- 182. Directive 2002/65/EC concerning the distance marketing of consumer financial services, art.4(2) (relating to the Directive’s information requirements). The Directive is implemented in UK law by the Financial Services (Distance Marketing) Regulations 2004 (SI 2004/2095) see below, para.38-131.
- 183. 2002 Directive recital 13, arts 3 and 4.

- 184. Proposal for a Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council on Consumer Rights of 8 October 2008 Com(2008) 614/3 final.
- 185. Directive 2011/83/EU on consumer rights [2011] O.J. L304/64 and see below, para.38-056.
- 186. Directive 2011/83/EU on consumer rights arts 6-16.
- 187. Directive 2011/83/EU art.3(3)(d). Directive 2002/65/EC concerning the distance marketing of consumer financial services remains in force and, as earlier noted, its information provisions require only minimum harmonisation: art.3(4).
- 188. Directive 2011/83/EU art.5.
- 189. Directive 2011/83/EU Ch.IV ("Other consumer rights").
- 190. Directive 2011/83/EU art.5(4).
- 191. Directive 2011/83/EU art.3.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts
Section 3. - Definitions of Consumer Contract
(a) - Introduction

Definition by reference to contracting parties

38-027

As will be seen, each UK statute or statutory instrument governing consumer contracts defines the ambit of the protections which it provides specially for its own purposes. In terms of their subject matter, some protections apply to particular types of contracts, such as “contracts to supply goods to a consumer” ¹⁹² or “holiday accommodation contracts”, ¹⁹³ while others apply in principle to all types of contract in this sense, notably protections against unfair terms, ¹⁹⁴ and in respect of “on-premises contracts”, “off-premises contracts” or “distance contracts”. ¹⁹⁵ However, whatever the subject matter of the contracts which they govern, the contracts affected by these statutes and statutory instruments are also restricted by reference to the categories of contracting party: broadly speaking, consumers on the one hand, and traders (or persons acting in the course of a business) on the other. While there remain significant differences in the ways in which these two categories of party are described in the legislation, the modern UK law (following to an extent EU law in this respect) has become increasingly consistent. The following paragraphs will therefore explain the background (UK and EU) to the definitions of the parties to consumer contracts in UK legislation, leaving any particular points of qualification or refinement to later paragraphs dealing with the particular statutes or statutory instruments to which they relate.

^{192.} Consumer Rights Act 2015 Pt 1 Ch.2.

^{193.} Timeshare, Holiday Products, Resale and Exchange Contracts Regulations 2010 (SI 2010/2960) regs 3 and 4, below, para.38-137.

^{194.} Consumer Rights Act 2015 Pt 2; formerly the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999: below, paras 38-203, 38-355.

^{195.} Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 (SI 2013/3134) reg.7(1), with the exclusions set out in the remainder of reg.7. The categories of contract are themselves defined by reg.5: below paras 38-064 et seq.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts
Section 3. - Definitions of Consumer Contract
(b) - “Consumer”

Background

38-028

Although until recently the approach of English law to the definition of the person to be protected by its consumer protection legislation was particular and contextual, three broad approaches could be identified. ¹⁹⁶ First, the Consumer Credit Act 1974 applied (and still applies) its principal controls to “consumer credit agreements”, defined as agreements between an individual (the “debtor”) and any other person (the “creditor”) by which the creditor provides the debtor with credit of any amount. ¹⁹⁷ Secondly, the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 protected persons “dealing as consumer” against exemption clauses and indemnity clauses. ¹⁹⁸ Thirdly, a number of particular statutes and statutory instruments implementing EU directives protected “consumers” defined in a near-standard form of words derived from their parent directives, as in the case of the Doorstep Selling Regulations 1987 ¹⁹⁹ and the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999. ²⁰⁰ Of these three approaches, the Consumer Credit Act’s definition of the ambit of its controls by reference to the person provided with credit remains distinct and special for its purposes, the established domestic approach being subject to a further layer of complexity by the restricted scope of new controls required by the Consumer Credit Directive 2008. ²⁰¹ This law is discussed in Ch.39 of the present work. ²⁰² By contrast, since 2012 UK legislation has sought to bring a considerable degree of consistency to the definition of the “protected party” (the consumer) in its consumer contract protection law, these changes being inspired in part by the concern to provide a consistent approach to the interpretative gloss given to “consumer” at the EU level by the Consumer Rights Directive 2011. ²⁰³

38-029

The following paragraphs will therefore discuss earlier case-law of the European Court of Justice on the standard definition of “consumer” in EU legislation and English case-law on UK implementing legislation; they will then explain the significance of the reformulation given to the definition in the UK legislation, itself reflecting the model set by the Consumer Rights Directive.

“Consumer” in EU law

38-030

! While the precise (English) form of words defining “consumer” in the text of the directives of the consumer acquis varies, the definition found in the Doorstep Selling Directive of 1985 set a pattern which was much used. It provided that:

“Consumer” means a natural person who, in transactions covered by this Directive, is acting for purposes which can be regarded as outside his trade or profession.” ²⁰⁴

Given the extent of its use, this will be termed here the EU standard definition. ²⁰⁵

“Natural persons”

38-031

This standard definition restricts consumers to “natural persons” ²⁰⁶ and therefore, unlike a person “dealing as consumer” under s.12 of the Unfair Contract Terms Act, a company cannot rely on UK regulations implementing a directive containing this definition, even if it acts “for purposes which are outside [its] business”, ²⁰⁷ unless the implementing legislation (or other UK legislation) extends the scope of its controls to persons contracting in this way. ²⁰⁸ It is more controversial as a matter of EU law whether a body of natural persons, such as an unincorporated association like a sports club, can be a “consumer” for the purposes of this type of definition. ²⁰⁹

European case-law

38-032

 The Court of Justice of the EU has made clear that it will take an autonomous definition of the concept of “consumer” for the purposes of the EU secondary legislative instruments which use this term. ²¹⁰ In this respect, the Court of Justice is likely to take into account the purpose of this body of legislation, which it sees as being protective of consumers, while still acknowledging that the need for harmonisation is justified by the requirements of the internal market. ²¹¹ So, for example, the Court has explained in relation to the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Directive that:

“the system of protection established by Directive 93/13 is based on the idea that the consumer is in a weak position vis-à-vis the trader as regards both his bargaining power and his level of knowledge, which leads to the consumer agreeing to terms drawn up in advance by the trader without being able to influence the content of those terms.” ²¹²

However, the Court has taken a fairly restrictive view of “consumer” for these purposes, ²¹³ particularly when contrasted with the expansive view taken by English law for the purposes of the Unfair Contract Terms Act, where it has been held that a business which makes a contract of a kind which does not form a regular part of its business may “deal as consumer”. ²¹⁴ So, for example, in Di Pinto ²¹⁵ the question arose whether a trader could ever be a “consumer” for the purposes of the Doorstep Selling Directive, which used the standard defining language for “consumer” earlier noted. ²¹⁶ The European Court held that:

“... the criterion for the application of protection lies in the connection between the transactions which are the subject of the canvassing and the professional activity of the trader: the latter may claim that the directive is applicable only if the transaction in respect of which he is canvassed lies outside his trade or profession. Article 2, which is drafted in general terms, does not make it possible, with regard to acts performed in the context of such a trade or profession, to draw a distinction between normal acts and those which are exceptional in nature.” ²¹⁷

The Court added that:

“Acts which are preparatory to the sale of a business, such as the conclusion of a contract for the publication of an advertisement in a periodical, are connected with the professional activity of the trader although such acts may bring the running of the business to an end, they are managerial acts performed for the purpose of satisfying requirements other than the family or personal requirements of the trader." ²¹⁸

The last italicised phrase could be seen as suggesting that a person does not act as a consumer unless contracting for their "family or personal needs". In Benincasa v Dentalkit ²¹⁹ the European Court considered the concept of consumer for the purposes of art.13 of the Brussels Convention, ²²⁰ upholding its previous view that this referred to "private final consumer" in this context ²²¹:

"Consequently, only contracts concluded for the purpose of satisfying an individual's own needs in terms of private consumption come under the provisions designed to protect the consumer as the party deemed to be the weaker party economically." ²²²

The Court of Justice has recently held that, in order to determine whether a person was acting as a consumer for the purposes of the Directive on unfair terms in consumer contracts, a national court should take into account "all the circumstances of the case, particularly the nature of the goods or service covered by the contract in question, capable of showing the purpose for which those goods or that service is being acquired", ²²³ ! this being a "functional criterion". ²²⁴ ! However, the concept of "consumer" is "objective in nature and is distinct from the concrete knowledge the person in question may have, or from the information that person actually has". ²²⁵ ! As a result, while lawyers may constitute "traders" in their contracts with their own clients, ²²⁶ ! they may, even if they are technically knowledgeable, nonetheless act as consumers in other transactions as they may be weaker parties compared to the traders with whom they deal. ²²⁷ !

Contracts with mixed purposes

38-033

Again in the context of art.13 of the Brussels Convention, in Gruber v Bay Wa AG ²²⁸ the European Court of Justice held that a person who concludes a contract for goods intended for purposes which are in part within and in part outside of his trade or profession (in the case itself, a farmer who bought tiles to roof a building used both for agricultural and for domestic purposes) may not rely on the special rules in the Convention provided for consumer contracts:

"... unless the trade or professional purpose is so limited as to be negligible in the overall context of the supply, the fact that the private element is predominant being irrelevant in that respect." ²²⁹

The Court further held that a national court must assess whether this is the case by reference to all the evidence, but it:

"... must not take account of facts or circumstances of which the other party to the contract [the business supplier] may have been aware when the contract was concluded, unless the person who claims the capacity of consumer behaved in such a way as to give the other party to the contract the legitimate impression that he was acting for the purposes of his business." ²³⁰

While this observation was made in the context of a person (the alleged "consumer") acting partly for business and partly for non-business purposes, it suggests more generally that a person who in fact contracts as a consumer but gives the trader the impression that he acts in the course of a business cannot rely on his status as consumer. ²³¹ Finally, it is to be noted that the analogy between

“consumer” for the purposes of art.13 of the Convention and for the 1993 Directive was expressly drawn by Advocate-General Mischo in proceedings in which the European Court confirmed that a body corporate could not be a consumer for the latter’s purposes. ²³²

The Consumer Rights Directive and its possible wider influence

38-034

⚠ On the other hand, while the Consumer Rights Directive of 2011 (which principally repealed and replaced the earlier Doorstep Selling Directive and Distance Contracts Directive ²³³) uses an almost identical form of words to define consumer as is used by the EU standard definition as earlier identified, ²³⁴ recital 17 states that:

“in the case of dual purpose contracts, where the contract is concluded for purposes partly within and partly outside the person’s trade and the trade purpose is so limited as not to be predominant in the overall context of the contract, that person should also be considered as a consumer.”

While rather awkwardly phrased, this recital therefore includes a person as a “consumer” where they act mainly for non-trade purposes and therefore reflects a more extensive view of the understanding of “consumer” by the EU legislature than was taken by the Court of Justice in the context of the Brussels Convention in Gruber v Bay Wa AG, ²³⁵ where any business purpose other than one which is “so limited as to be negligible” deprives a person of their status as consumer. ²³⁶ The Consumer Rights Directive seeks to achieve this by indicating the proper interpretation to be taken to the standard form of words defining consumer and, owing to the significance of the recitals to a directive for the interpretation of its text, ²³⁷ this gloss on “consumer” therefore clearly governs the definition in the Consumer Rights Directive itself and this directive does make an insertion into the 1993 Directive, though not one of substantive significance. ²³⁸ ⚠ But this gloss may have a wider significance as it could encourage the Court of Justice to hold that “consumer” can include persons mainly acting outside their trade or profession for the purposes of other substantive law directives in the consumer acquis, distinguishing its more restrictive approach in Gruber on the basis that it concerned the special (and therefore exceptional) provisions in the Brussels Convention governing international jurisdiction. ²³⁹ This way of thinking has, indeed, been adopted by Advocate General Crux Villalón in Costea v SC Volksbank România SA. ²⁴⁰ ⚠

Earlier UK standard definition of “consumer” and its interpretation by English courts

38-035

As earlier noted, until recently, the UK legislature implemented the standard EU definition of “consumer” faithfully, in general not seeking to extend it to cover non-human persons nor those acting partly in the course of business. ²⁴¹ So, for example, the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999 provided that:

“... “consumer” means any natural person who, in contracts covered by these Regulations, is acting for purposes which are outside his trade, business or profession.” ²⁴²

Later versions of this standard definition in other instruments have replaced “natural person” with “individual”, but this was clearly not intended to make any substantive difference. ²⁴³

United Kingdom case-law on earlier definition

38-036

In Standard Bank London Ltd v Apostolakis ²⁴⁴ the proper understanding of the standard definition of “consumer” in the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999 arose in unusual circumstances. The defendants were wealthy individuals (a civil engineer and a lawyer) who had used their personal funds for dealings in foreign exchange under an “umbrella contract” with a bank in Athens, where they resided. The question arose as to the validity of an exclusive jurisdiction clause of the English courts in this contract, either under art.13 of the Brussels Convention or the 1999 Regulations. It was held first that this was a “consumer contract” for the purposes of art.13. ²⁴⁵ According to Longmore J.:

“It is certainly not part of a person’s trade as a civil engineer or a lawyer ... to enter into foreign exchange contracts. They were using the money in a way which they hoped would be profitable but merely to use money in a way which they hoped would be profitable is not enough ... to be engaging in trade.” ²⁴⁶

Even if the wording used by the European Court in Benincasa ²⁴⁷ were applied literally, the foreign exchange contracts:

“... were for the purpose of satisfying the needs of [the defendants], defined as an appropriate use of their income, and that that need was a need in terms of private consumption. Consumption cannot be taken as literally consumed so as to be destroyed but rather consumer in the sense that a consumer consumes, viz. he uses or enjoys the relevant product.” ²⁴⁸

It was later assumed that the defendants were also “consumers” for the purposes of the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Directive 1993 and held that, apart from this decision under the Convention, the choice of jurisdiction clause was “unfair” within the meaning of the 1999 Regulations. ²⁴⁹

38-037

⚠ However, in Maple Leaf Macro Volatility Master Fund v Rouvroy ²⁵⁰ Andrew Smith J. questioned the conclusion of Longmore J. as regards the status as consumer of the defendants in the Apostolakis case, which he saw as concerning the question whether the dealing of the defendants there was of a nature that they were to be regarded as carrying on a trade. Andrew Smith J. distinguished the case before him, which instead concerned the question whether an agreement made by directors of (and major shareholders in) a company for funding of a securities transaction to regain control of that company was so connected with their business activities as not to be regarded as outside their trade. He held that it was not to be so regarded, so that the directors did not qualify as “consumers” either for the purposes of art.15 of the Brussels I Regulation or of the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts

Regulations 1999. ²⁵¹ ⚠ In Prostar Management Ltd v Twaddle, ²⁵² a professional footballer claimed that he acted as “consumer” for the purposes of the 1999 Regulations in relation to his receipt of services under a management agreement for the promotion of his career, profile and sponsorship. The Glasgow and Strathkelvin Sheriff Court had regard to the decisions of the European Court in Di Pinto ²⁵³ and Benincasa ²⁵⁴ and rejected this claim, holding that being a footballer was the defender’s “trade or profession” and that the contract in question could not be regarded as being outside it. ²⁵⁵ Finally in Overy v Paypal (Europe) Ltd ²⁵⁶ the High Court, having reviewed the European case-law on the proper understanding of “consumer”, ²⁵⁷ held that the claimant, a professional photographer who opened a “business account” with an online provider of electronic payment services and who used it partly for the purposes of his photography business and partly to sell his house by means of an online competition, did not count as a “consumer” so as to be protected by the 1999 Regulations: first, while the competition was “not an adventure in the nature of trade”, he also intended to use it for his photography business and “that purpose could not reasonably be regarded as one which was insignificant or negligible” ²⁵⁸; and, secondly, by the nature of the application which he made online and the information which the claimant provided in so doing, “he clearly conducted himself in such a way as to lead to the obvious conclusion that he was acting in his trade or professional capacity". ²⁵⁹ In Ashfaq v International Insurance Co of Hannover Plc the Court of Appeal applied the approach of the High Court in Overy v Paypal (Europe) Ltd to the context of an individual who had concluded a contract of insurance on a house which he let to tenants at a profit. ²⁶⁰  In these circumstances, the individual did not contract as a "consumer" within the meaning of the 1999 Regulations as the contract was a business insurance even though the individual may also carry on some unrelated business activity. ²⁶¹

The new UK standard legislative definition of "consumer"

38-038

In 2012 the Law Commissions recommended that any new Acts on consumer law should specify that an individual who uses a product wholly or mainly for non-business use should be protected, considering the approach of the European Court of Justice in Gruber v Bay Wa AG ²⁶² to be too narrow, noting this approach had been adopted by the Consumer Insurance (Disclosure and Representations) Bill then before Parliament. ²⁶³ As enacted, the Consumer Insurance (Disclosure and Representations) Act 2012 defines the consumer party to a contract of insurance as being:

"an individual who enters into the contract wholly or mainly for purposes unrelated to the individual's trade, business or profession". ²⁶⁴

The same, more extensive approach was adopted by the Consumer Rights (Payment Surcharges) Regulations 2012 ²⁶⁵ and the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 on their implementing the Consumer Rights Directive. ²⁶⁶ The 2013 Regulations provide that:

"'Consumer" means an individual acting for purposes that are wholly or mainly outside the individual's trade, business, craft or profession." ²⁶⁷

The Consumer Rights Act 2015 adopted an identical definition ²⁶⁸ and, furthermore, abolished the special protection for those "dealing as consumer" contained in the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 and the Sale of Goods Act 1979 and instead placed the substance of these protections within the framework of its own protection of "consumers". ²⁶⁹ In this way, the UK legislator has adopted the definition of consumer in the Consumer Rights Directive 2011 even though that directive does not impose any requirements as regards unfair contract terms or consumer guarantees in contracts of sale of goods. ²⁷⁰

38-039

 The key change here from the earlier standard UK definition is the addition of the words "wholly or mainly", allowing to this extent an individual who contracts partly for business purposes to be protected. The new definition of "consumer" in the Consumer Rights Act 2015 applies to its provisions on the rights of consumer buyers and other transferees of goods earlier provided by the Sale of Goods Act 1979 and the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982, ²⁷¹ and to the new rights of consumers under "digital content contracts". ²⁷² This adoption by the 2015 Act of the definition of consumer drawn from the Consumer Rights Directive 2011 therefore allows a consistent definition between the 2015 Act and the UK secondary legislation implementing the Consumer Rights Directive itself, viz the Consumer Rights (Payment Surcharges) Regulations 2012 ²⁷³ and the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013. ²⁷⁴  Finally, when in 2014 the UK legislator created "rights to redress" for consumers in respect of certain unfair commercial practices, it changed the definition of "consumer" both for these particular purposes and for the wider purposes of the regulation of unfair commercial practices. ²⁷⁵ As a result, the definition of “consumer” in the UK legislation implementing the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005 (which establishes “full harmonisation” within its scope) defines “consumer” for this purpose following the approach of the Consumer Rights Directive 2011 rather than the 2005 Directive itself.

Compatibility with EU law

38-040

It has earlier been suggested that the interpretative gloss of the EU legislation’s standard definition of “consumer” provided by the Consumer Rights Directive 2011 may persuade the Court of Justice of the EU to extend the protection of other consumer protection directives in the area of contract law to persons acting wholly or mainly for purposes which are outside that person’s business or profession.²⁷⁶ If this were the case, then clearly the new standard UK definitions would merely reflect the true EU position. However, if this were not the case, it is submitted that the UK extension of the scope of its implementing legislation would in principle be compatible with EU law, as it would extend the scheme of the relevant directives to persons outside their scope. As earlier explained, such an extension is permissible in EU law, whether a directive requires “full harmonisation” or merely “minimum harmonisation”.²⁷⁷

The “average consumer”

38-041

! EU legislation and case-law has been seen as reflecting “standards” by which consumers’ behaviour or understanding should be viewed: “confident” or sophisticated consumers; “average” consumers; and “vulnerable” consumers.²⁷⁸ However, of these approaches, the dominant one in the Court of Justice is the standard of the “average consumer” who is “reasonably well informed and reasonably observant and circumspect”, a standard used by it in the context of legislation on misleading advertising and the marketing of particular products.²⁷⁹ This standard is not, however, a uniform one and this was reflected in the way in which the concept of “average consumer” was described and used by the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005.²⁸⁰ As earlier noted, the 2005 Directive creates a fully harmonised “general framework” for preventive measures of consumer protection though it is “without prejudice to contract law”.²⁸¹ For this purpose, the 2005 Directive distinguishes between: (i) the average consumer; (ii) the average member of the group where a commercial practice is directed to a particular group of consumers; and (iii) the average member of a clearly identifiable group of consumers who are particularly vulnerable to the practice or the underlying product because of their mental or physical infirmity, age or credulity in a way which the trader could reasonably be expected to foresee.²⁸² ! Given this background, the “average consumer” is therefore a necessary element in the UK’s legislation on unfair commercial practices, which, as earlier noted, has recently been extended to create certain rights to redress for consumers against traders.²⁸³

The wider significance of “average consumer” in EU and UK consumer protection law

38-042

As earlier noted, the 2005 Directive’s treatment of the standard of average consumer reflects the Court of Justice’s established case-law and the Court has recently seen it as relevant to other EU consumer protection legislation.²⁸⁴ A key example may be found in relation to the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Directive 1993, where the standard by which the consumer (and particular the consumer’s understanding) is to be assessed may be relevant to the requirement of fairness and of “plain, intelligible language”.²⁸⁵ This relevance has now been accepted by the Court in Luxembourg. So, in Banco Español de Crédito, SA v Calderón Camino Advocate General Trstenjak referred to the Court’s general case-law on average consumer in the context of the procedural position of a consumer in relation to the assessment of the fairness of terms under the 1993 Directive.²⁸⁶ And in Kásler the Court of Justice of the EU adopted the standard of “the average consumer, who is reasonably well informed and reasonably observant and circumspect” for the purposes of the application of the requirements of plain, intelligible language in arts 4(2) and 5 of the 1993 Directive.²⁸⁷ The “transparency” of terms is also relevant to their fairness under art.3 of that Directive.²⁸⁸ This interpretative approach of the Court of Justice was adopted explicitly by the Consumer Rights Act 2015, which uses the standard of the “average consumer”, meaning “a consumer who is reasonably wellinformed, observant and circumspect” for the purpose of determining the “prominence” of a term, “prominence” being a new condition for the “core exclusion” of terms from the test of fairness of terms which specify the main subject matter of the contract, etc.²⁸⁹

Other legislative contexts

38-043

The “average consumer” may be a useful bench-mark for assessing the demands of requirements in other EU consumer protection directives. So, for example, the Consumer Rights Directive 2011 (implemented in UK law mainly by the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013) imposes a general information requirement on traders to consumer contracts that they provide the consumer with various information “in a clear and comprehensible manner”.²⁹⁰ On the other hand, where UK legislation neither implements nor is based on a scheme provided by EU legislation, then the idea of the “average consumer” has no direct relevance, stemming, as it does, from European case-law and thinking. So, for example, the UK legislation governing consumer insurance (which does not reflect EU law) itself defines those things which a consumer/insured ought to know for the purposes of their duty of fair representation,²⁹¹ rather than appealing to a general standard such as the “average consumer assured”.

Consumers as the supplier of goods or services?

38-044

⚠ Typically, a “consumer” is a person who receives goods or services from a trader,²⁹² ⚠ but the standard definition of consumer (both in EU law and in recent UK legislation²⁹³) is not explicitly restricted in this way, since an individual who acts for purposes that are (wholly or mainly²⁹⁴) outside his or her trade, business, craft or profession may equally supply goods or services to a trader, for example, in the case of a person who sells their second-hand car to a dealer or a person who guarantees a relative’s debts to a bank. Moreover, in the case of consumer contract law derived from EU law, its declared purpose of the protection of consumers as the weaker or less informed party²⁹⁵ could apply equally to an individual who supplies goods or services to a trader as to one who receives them. It is submitted, however, that the question whether such an individual is included within the various legislative schemes of protection in EU or UK law cannot be given a general answer, but must instead be considered in the context of each scheme, for while some legislation is clear on the question, other legislation is more open to argument. For example, the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005 states that it applies to “unfair business-to-consumer commercial practices”,²⁹⁶ defined as:

“act, omission, course of conduct or representation, commercial communication including advertising and marketing, by a trader, directly connected with the promotion, sale or supply of a product to consumers.”²⁹⁷

The general test of an unfair commercial practice also suggests that it applies only to commercial practices in relation to “products” supplied to a consumer²⁹⁸ and the European Commission’s view is that the 2005 Directive does not apply to “consumer-to-business relations”.²⁹⁹ On the other hand, the main examples of unfair commercial practices in the 2005 Directive (misleading statements, misleading omissions and aggressive behaviour) are not worded in a way which suggests such a restriction.³⁰⁰ Moreover, the 2005 Directive is concerned with commercial practices business-to-consumer, both from the point of view of fairness of competition between traders and of the protection of “consumers”,³⁰¹ and unfair commercial practices can take place where an individual supplies goods or services to a trader on the basis of, for example, a misleading statement, omission or aggressive practice. But if the Commission's view is correct, then the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 go further than the 2005 Directive requires, as they define "commercial practice" as any act, etc. "by a trader, which is directly connected with the promotion, sale or supply of a product to or from consumers".³⁰² This extension also applies to the new rights to redress for consumers against traders created by amendment in 2014 of the 2008 Regulations.³⁰³ By contrast, the Consumer Rights Act 2015 Pt 1 states explicitly that its provisions governing "goods contracts" apply only to "contracts for a trader to supply goods to a consumer"³⁰⁴; this restriction makes sense, of course, given that these provisions create rights for buyers.³⁰⁵ And while the wording of the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Directive 1993 (formerly implemented in UK law by the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999 and now by the Consumer Rights Act 2015)³⁰⁶  is not completely clear, the Court of Justice has recently held that there is no requirement that the "consumer" be the recipient of goods or services and so may apply to a contract under which a natural person acting other than in the course of business guarantees a loan made by a creditor to a commercial company.³⁰⁷  As a result, this question of the application of the consumer protection laws discussed in this chapter to contracts "consumer-to-business" will be discussed in the context of each particular legislative scheme.³⁰⁸

Burden of proof as to "consumer"

38-045

The Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 provides expressly that "it is for those claiming that a party does not deal as consumer to show that he does not" and this burden of proof applied both to the 1977 Act's provisions controlling exemption clauses and indemnity clauses, and to the provisions in the Sale of Goods Act 1979 creating rights for buyers "dealing as consumer".³⁰⁹ By contrast, earlier UK legislation implementing other EU directives governing consumer contracts did not set express burdens of proof as to whether a person was a "consumer" so as to benefit from their provisions, following in this respect the directives themselves.³¹⁰ It is not entirely clear how EU law would treat the issue of burden of proof on this issue in such a directive, for example, the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Directive 1993³¹¹ or the Consumer Rights Directive 2011.³¹² It may be that the Court of Justice of the EU would hold that, given the absence of any provision in the European legislation on this issue especially where this is in contrast to other issues,³¹³ the issue of burden of proof lies with national laws as part of the law of procedure and following the general principle of the autonomy of national laws in this area.³¹⁴ On the other hand, the Court could hold that the issue requires an autonomous European view and therefore place the burden of proof as to the issue on the consumer following the general principle common to national laws that it is in general for a person alleging something to prove it (actori incumbit probatio).³¹⁵ However, recent case-law of the Court of Justice in the context of the Consumer Sales Directive imposes a duty on national courts to consider whether a party to litigation is a "consumer" as part of its role in the classification of facts in legal terms and in order to give proper effect to the directive's policy of consumer protection, and this case-law strongly suggests that while in principle it is for the parties to adduce and establish the facts on which such a classification is founded (supplemented as needs be by the court requesting clarification), the classification of a party as "consumer" itself is for the court by way of neutral assessment rather than being appropriate to the allocation of a burden of proof.³¹⁶

Recent UK legislation

38-046

Recent UK consumer protection legislation differs in relation to the issue of burden of proof as to "consumer". For example, the new legislation governing consumer insurance contracts sets no express burden of proof on this issue.³¹⁷ This is also the case as regards the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013, which, inter alia, imposes duties of information on traders and provides consumers with rights of cancellation in certain circumstances,³¹⁸ and the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008, both as regards its provisions prohibiting unfair commercial practices and its new provisions creating rights to redress for consumer in respect of certain such practices.³¹⁹ The reason for this lack of express provision as to burden of proof in these sets of regulations is that they implement EU directives which require “full harmonisation” and such a rule could be seen as extending the protection for consumers within their respective scopes. ³²⁰ In contrast, the Consumer Rights Act 2015 provides that:

“A trader claiming that an individual was not acting for purposes wholly or mainly outside the individual's trade, business, craft or profession must prove it.” ³²¹

This burden of proof applies for the purposes of Pt 1 of the Act (which provides rules governing contracts between a trader and a consumer for the trader to supply goods, digital content or services) and of Pt 2 of the Act (which provides rules governing unfair contract terms). Some of these rules are new and original (not being drawn from EU law), ³²² but the majority are drawn either from earlier domestic UK legislation ³²³ or from EU directives requiring only minimum harmonisation. ³²⁴ The main exception to this pattern is found in the 2015 Act's provisions governing the delivery of and passing of risk in goods in contracts to supply goods ³²⁵ which implement provisions in the Consumer Rights Directive 2011 which requires (generally and in these cases) “full harmonisation”. ³²⁶ In these situations, it is therefore possible that the 2015 Act fails properly to implement this Directive in that, to this extent, it goes beyond its requirements within its scope.

^{196.} cf. above, para.38-002.

^{197.} Consumer Credit Act 1974 s.8(1) (as amended) and see below, para.39-016.

^{198.} On this law (now abrogated by the Consumer Rights Act 2015) see Vol.I, Ch.15 and especially paras 15-074—15-079.

^{199.} Consumer Protection (Cancellation of Contracts Concluded Away from Business Premises) Regulations 1987 (SI 1987/2117) reg.2(1) (“Doorstep Selling Regulations 1987”) (“consumer” means a person, other than a body corporate, who, in making a contract to which these Regulations apply, is acting for purposes which can be regarded as outside his business”) and cf. Directive 85/577/EEC art.2 (“consumer” means a natural person who, in transactions covered by this Directive, is acting for purposes which can be regarded as outside his trade or profession”).

^{200.} SI 1999/2083 reg.3(1) (“consumer” means any natural person who, in contracts covered by these Regulations, is acting for purposes which are outside his trade, business or profession”) and cf. Directive 93/13/EEC art.2(b) (“consumer” means any natural person who, in contracts covered by this Directive, is acting for purposes which are outside his trade, business or profession”).

^{201.} Directive 2008/48/EC concerning credit agreements for consumers [2008] O.J. L133/66, replacing Directive 87/102/EEC concerning consumer credit O.J. L42/48.

^{202.} See below, para.39-011.

^{203.} Consumer Rights Directive 2011 recital 17; art.2(1) and see below, paras 38-034, 38-038.

^{204.} Directive 85/577/EEC art.2 (repealed and replaced by Directive 2011/83/EU on consumer rights, Ch.III and art.31).

^{205.}  The following directives followed this definition, with very minor variations: Directive 93/13/EC on unfair terms in consumer contracts art.2(b); Directive 97/7/EC on the protection of consumers in respect of distance contracts art.2(2) (directive repealed and replaced by Directive 2011/83/EU on consumer rights, Ch.III and art.31); Directive 98/6/EEC on consumer protection in the indication of the prices of products offered to consumers [1998] O.J. L80/27 art.2(e); Directive 99/44/EC on certain aspects of the sale of consumer goods and associated guarantees art.1(2)(a); Directive 87/102/EEC concerning consumer credit, art.1(2)(a) (repealed and replaced by Directive 2008/48/EC concerning credit agreements for consumers art.3(a)); Directive 2000/31/EC "Directive on electronic commerce" [2000] O.J. L178/1 art.2(e); Directive 2002/65/EC concerning the distance marketing of consumer financial services art.2(d). More complex versions of the same approach to definition of "consumer" can be seen in Directive 94/47/EEC art.2 (first Timeshare Directive). Directive 90/314/EEC on package travel, package holidays and package tours, art.2(4) adopts a much more elaborate definition specific to its context. Cape Snc v Idealservice Srl (C-541/99) [2001] E.C.R. I-09049. However, the 1990 Directive is repealed (as of January 1, 2018) by Directive (EU) 2015/2302 on package travel and linked travel arrangements [2015] O.J. L326/1 which substitutes for "consumer" a new category of "traveller" which "means any person who is seeking to conclude a contract, or is entitled to travel on the basis of a contract concluded, within the scope of [the] Directive": art.3(6). As recital 7 explains, the majority of travellers buying packages or linked travel arrangements are "consumers within the meaning of Union consumer law", but the Directive's protections should extend to "business travellers including members of liberal professions, or self-employed or other natural persons where they do not make travel arrangements on the basis of a general agreement".

- 206. Cape Snc v Idealservice Srl (C-541/99 and C-542/99) [2001] E.C.R. I-09049.
- 207. Cape Snc v Idealservice Srl (C-541/99 and C-542/99); 1999 Regulations reg.3(1).
- 208. For English law, the 1999 Regulations are extended to consumer arbitration agreements including as "consumer" for this purpose legal as well as natural persons: Arbitration Act 1996 s.90; Heifer International Inc v Christiansen [2007] EWHC 3015 (TCC), [2008] All E.R. (D) 120 (Jan) and see below, para.38-206. This extension has remained in place under the Consumer Rights Act 2015, below, para.38-380.
- 209. cf. the decision of the French First Chamber of the Cour de cassation of June 4, 2014, [2014] Bull. civ.1 no.102, [2014] E.C.C. 30 which held that a co-ownership association (a syndicat de copropriétaires) which is treated as having legal personality by French law could not count as "consumer" for the purposes of French legislation implementing Directive 93/13/EEC art.7 both on the ground of its possessing legal personality and on the ground that such an association (even though formed by private individuals) has as its object an economic activity in the upkeep and management of the property and therefore was not "non-professionnel" (non-business).
- 210. e.g. Cape Snc v Idealservice Srl (C-541/99) [2001] E.C.R. I-09049 paras 16-17 (Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Directive); France v Di Pinto (361/89) [1991] E.C.R. I-1189 (Doorstep Selling Directive).
- 211. This is typically required by the competence on which the directives have been made, this being art.114 TFEU (formerly art.95 EC).
- 212. Pereni#ová v SOS finance, spol. sro (C-453/10) [2012] 2 C.M.L.R. 28 para.27 repeating similar formulations in earlier judgments from Mostaza Claro v Centro Móvil Milenium SL (C-168/05) [2006] E.C.R. I-10421 (which used "seller or supplier" rather than "trader"). See similarly BKK Mobil Oil Körperschaft des öffentlichen Rechts v Zentrale zur Bekämpfung unlauteren Wettbewerbs eV (C-59/12) of October 3, 2013 para.35 in the context of the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005.
- 213. Reich (1995) 4 European Review of Private Law 285, 292-293.
- 214. Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.12; R. & B. Customs Brokers Co Ltd v United Dominions Trust Ltd [1988] 1 W.L.R. 321: on which see Vol.I, para.15-074.
- 215. France v Di Pinto (361/89) [1991] E.C.R. I-1189.
- 216. Directive 85/577 to protect the consumer in respect of contracts negotiated away from business premises [1985] O.J. L372/31 art.2 (repealed and replaced by Directive 2011/83/EU on consumer rights [2011] O.J. L304/64).

- 217. [1991] E.C.R. I-1189 at [15].
- 218. [1991] E.C.R. I-1189 at [16] (emphasis added).
- 219. C-269/95 [1997] E.C.R. I-3767.
- 220. Brussels Convention on Jurisdiction and the Enforcement of Foreign Judgments in Civil and Commercial Matters of September 27, 1968 replaced by Council Regulation 44/2001 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters [2001] O.J. L12/1, which was itself replaced as from January 10, 2015 by Regulation (EU) 1215/2012 of 12 December 2012 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters (recast) (“the Brussels Ibis Regulation”).
- 221. [1997] E.C.R. I-3767 at para.15; Shearson Lehman Hutton (C-89/91) [1993] E.C.R. I-139 at paras 20 and 22.
- 222. [1997] E.C.R. I-3767 at [17].
- 223.  Costea v SC Volksbank România SA (C-110/14) April 23, 2015 at para.23.
- 224.  Tarc#u v Banca Comercial# Intesa Sanpaolo România SA (C-74/15) Order of CJEU November 19, 2015 at para.27.
- 225.  Costea v SC Volksbank România SA (C-110/14) April 23, 2015 at para.21. See similarly, Tarc#u v Banca Comercial# Intesa Sanpaolo România SA (C-74/15) Order of CJEU November 19, 2015 para.27 on which see below, paras 38-207 and 45-156.
- 226.  Šiba v Dev#nas (C-537/13) January 15, 2015 [2015] Bus. L.R. 291 paras 23 and 24.
- 227.  Costea v SC Volksbank România SA (C-110/14) April 23, 2015 at paras 20–27.
- 228. C-464/01 [2005] E.C.R. I-439.
- 229. [2005] E.C.R. I-439 at [54].
- 230. [2005] E.C.R. I-439 at [54].
- 231. cf. Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.12(1)(a) which provided that a person “deals as consumer” if “he neither makes the contract in the course of a business nor holds himself out as doing so”, on which see Vol.I, para.15-074.
- 232. Cape Snc v Idealservice Srl (C-541/99 and C-542/99) [2001] E.C.R. I-9049. (The ECJ did not advert to this point.) The equivalent paragraphs to this paragraph in the 30th edition of the present work were cited with apparent approval by the High Court in Turner & Co (GB) Ltd v Abi [2010] EWHC 2078 (QB), [2011] 1 C.M.L.R. 17 at [32]–[41]. In Ali v Spirit Motor Transport Ltd Unreported January 24, 2014 (Leeds County Court) it was held a purchase for dual purposes was not a consumer contract with the meaning of the Cancellation of Contracts made in a Consumer’s Home or Place of Work, etc. Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1816) unless the trade purpose was negligible, 75 per cent not being negligible for these purposes.
- 233. Below, para.38-056.
- 234. “Consumer” means any natural person who, in contracts covered by this Directive, is acting for purposes which are outside his trade, business, craft or profession”. The main difference is the additional reference to “craft”: cf. above, para.38-030.
- 235. C-464/01 [2005] E.C.R. I-439.

- 236. Above, para.38-033.
- 237. Above, para.38-015.
- 238. !The 2011 Directive art.32 inserts a new art.8a in the 1993 Directive which requires Member States to inform the EU Commission of any exercises of their power to extend the protection for consumers by way of art.8. Although A.G. Crux Villalón in Costea v SC Volksbank România SA (C-110/14) did not advert to it, Directive 2013/11/EU of 21 May 2013 on ADR for consumer disputes [2013] O.J. L165/63 art.4(1)(a) defines “consumer” in the standard way, but its recital 18 then glosses this definition in an almost identical way as 2011 Directive recital 17. A similar pattern is found in Directive 2014/17/EU of 4 February 2014 on credit agreements for consumers relating to immovable property [2014] O.J. L60/34 (the “Mortgage Credit Directive”) recital 12 and art.4(1), referring to the definition of “consumer” in Directive 2008/48/EC of 23 April 2008 on credit agreements for consumers [2008] O.J. L133/66 art.3(1). This gives further support to the view that the Court of Justice should hold that this gloss is to be applied more generally to definitions of “consumer” in the EU consumer protection acquis, unless the context otherwise requires.
- 239. Above, para.38-033.
- 240. !C-110/14 of April 23, 2015 especially at paras 35-47. The CJEU in its judgment of September 3, 2015 did not address this issue.
- 241. This was not the universal practice. For example, when the Consumer Sales Directive 1999 was implemented by inserting a new Pt 5A Additional rights of buyer in consumer cases, it applied where “the buyer deals as consumer” rather than merely to a “consumer” buyer, thereby applying to the wider category of person identified by the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977: Sale of Goods Act 1979 s.61(5A) referring to the construction of “dealing as consumer” under the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 Pt 1: see below, para.38-410 (before s.61(5A)’s repeal by the Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.60 and Sch.1 para.35(3)).
- 242. SI 1999/2083 reg.3(1) “consumer”. See similarly Consumer Protection (Distance Selling) Regulations (SI 2000/2334) reg.3(1) “consumer”; Cancellation of Contracts made in a Consumer’s Home or Place of Work, etc. Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1816) reg.2(1) “consumer”.
- 243. Financial Services (Distance Marketing) Regulations 2004 (SI 2004/2095) reg.2(1).
- 244. Standard Bank London Ltd v Apostolakis (No.1) [2000] I.L. Pr. 766 (Longmore J.); Standard Bank London Ltd v Apostolakis (No.2) [2001] Lloyd’s Rep. Bank. 240 (Steel J.).
- 245. [2000] I.L. Pr. 766.
- 246. [2000] I.L. Pr. 766, 771, per Longmore J.
- 247. Benincasa v Dentalkit (C-269/95) [1997] E.C.R. I-3767, above, para.38-032.
- 248. [2000] I.L. Pr. 766, 773.
- 249. Standard Bank London Ltd v Apostolakis (No.2) [2001] Lloyd’s Rep. Bank. 240.
- 250. [2009] EWHC 257 (Comm), [2009] 1 Lloyd’s Rep. 475.
- 251. ![2009] EWHC 257 (Comm) at [209] and [270]. The Brussels Convention on jurisdiction and the enforcement of judgements in civil and commercial matters 1968 art.13 is now replaced by Regulation (EU) 1215/2012 of 12 December 2012 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters (recast) (“the Brussels I bis Regulation”) art.17. In commenting on the contrast between the Apostolakis and Rouvroy decisions, the HC in AMT Futures Ltd v Mazillier, Dr Meier & Dr Gunther

Rechtsanwaltsgesellschaft mbH [2014] EWHC 1085 (Comm), [2015] 2 W.L.R. 187 at [58] considered that the dividing line between investors who count as “consumers” and those who do not “is likely to be heavily dependent on the circumstances of each individual and the nature and pattern of investment”. (This point was not discussed on appeal to the CA or the SC: [2015] EWCA Civ 143, [2015] Q.B. 699; [2017] UKSC 13, [2017] 2 W.L.R. 853). See also Barclays Bank Plc v Kufner [2008] EWHC 2319 at [31], [2009] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 1 (person entering guarantee contract to acquire (through an offshore company) the component parts of a ship chartering business not a “consumer”); Heifer International Inc v Christiansen [2007] EWHC 3015 (TCC), [2008] All E.R. (D) 120 (Jan) at [243]-[250] (offshore company set up to purchase a residential property for its beneficial owners acted “for purposes outside [its] trade, business, or profession” when it entered contracts for the purchase and renovation of the property in question); Wilson v MF Global UK Ltd [2011] EWHC 138 (QB) at [129]-[131] (claimant trading through defendant in volatile financial market apparently held not a “consumer”); Turner & Co (GB) Ltd v Abi [2010] EWHC 2078 (QB), [2011] 1 C.M.L.R. 17 at [42] (shareholder director of a business commissioning an agent to sell the business not acting as a “consumer” but for the purposes of that business); The Office of Fair Trading v Foxtons Ltd [2009] EWHC 1681 (Ch), [2009] 29 E.G. 98 (C.S.) at [28] (owners of property seeking to lease it acted as “consumers” in entering a letting agency contract with an estate agent, although other “professional” or “commercial” landlords would not); RTA (Business Consultants) Ltd v Bracewell [2015] EWHC 630 (QB), [2015] Bus. L.R. 800 at [51]-[60] (person contracting with estate agent for the sale of his business not a “consumer” for the purposes of the Cancellation of Contracts made in a Consumer’s Home or Place of Work etc. Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1816)); R. (on the application of Bluefin Insurance Services Ltd) v Financial Ombudsman Service Ltd [2014] EWHC 3413 at [121]-[128] (director of company taking out a Directors and Officers Insurance Policy was not a “consumer” for the purposes of the Financial Ombudsman Service’s jurisdiction (which was defined by reference, inter alia, to the definition of “consumer” in the 1993 Directive) as the insurance concerned his liability for acts in the course of his trade, business, or profession). cf. Evans v Cherry Tree Finance Ltd Unreported April 13, 2007 Ch D (concession that if any purposes for which the claimant contracted were outside his trade or business, then he was a consumer as defined by the regulations).

252. [2003] S.L.T. (Sh. Ct.) 11.

253. France v Di Pinto [1991] E.C.R. I-1189.

254. C-269/95 [1997] E.C.R. I-3767.

255. [2003] S.L.T. (Sh. Ct.) 11 at [12]-[14].

256. [2012] EWHC 2659 (QB), [2013] Bus. L.R. Digest D1.

257. Above, paras 38-032—38-033.

258. [2012] EWHC 2659 (QB) at [174]-[175] per Judge Hegarty Q.C. and cf. Gruber v Bay Wa AG (C-464/01) [2005] E.C.R. I-439 at para.54 discussed above, para.38-033.

259. [2012] EWHC 2659 (QB) at [176] per Judge Hegarty Q.C. and cf. Gruber v Bay Wa AG (C-464/01) [2005] E.C.R. I-439 at para.54 discussed above, para.38-033.

260.  [2017] EWCA Civ 357.

261.  [2017] EWCA Civ 357 at [45]-[57]. cf. Chesterton Global Ltd v Finney Unreported, April 30, 2010, Lambeth County Ct where an individual who leased a “buy-to-let” property was held to have done so as a “consumer”.

262. C-464/01 [2005] E.C.R. I-439.

263. Law Commission and Scottish Law Commission, Consumer Redress for Misleading and Aggressive Practices Law Com. No.332, Scot. Law Com. No.226 (2012) paras 6.11-6.13.

- 264. Consumer Insurance (Disclosure and Representations) Act 2012 s.1 and see below, para.42-031.
- 265. SI 2012/3110 reg.2 “consumer”.
- 266. SI 2013/3134 reg.4: see below, para.38-064.
- 267. SI 2013/3134 reg.4 “consumer” (which refers to “craft” as foreseen by the 2011 Directive).
- 268. Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.2(3). In the case of “sales contracts” the 2015 Act s.2(5) and (6) qualify this definition in some situations: see below, para.38-453.
- 269. Below, paras 38-254, 38-447.
- 270. Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.76(2) referring to s.2(3). See also the Alternative Dispute Resolution for Consumer Disputes (Competent Authorities and Information) Regulations 2015 (SI 2015/542) reg.3 “consumer” on which see below, para.38-143.
- 271. Consumer Rights Act 2015 ss.2(3), 3-32; 48-57 (“goods contracts”).
- 272. Consumer Rights Act 2015 ss.2(3), 33-47.
- 273. SI 2012/3110 reg.2 “consumer”: and see generally below, para.38-395—38-396.
- 274.  SI 2013/3134. See Christopher Linnett Ltd v Harding (t/a MJ Harding Contractors) [2017] EWHC 1781 (TCC) at [84] (sole trader not a “consumer” for the purposes of the 2013 Regulations when contracting with an adjudicator for services at least mainly part of his business).
- 275. Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1277) reg.2(1) (as amended by Consumer Protection (Amendment) Regulations 2014 (SI 2014/870) reg.2(3) below, para.38-156.
- 276. Above, paras 38-033—38-034.
- 277. Above, paras 38-021 and 38-023. This was the view taken by the Law Commissions Law Com. No.332, Scot. Law Com. No.226 (2012) para.6.13.
- 278. See further Weatherill in Weatherill and Bernitz, The Regulation of Unfair Commercial Practices under EC Directive 2005/29 (2007), Ch.7.
- 279. The ECJ case-law in question can be seen in Pippig Augenoptik GmbH & Co KG v Hartlauer Handelsgesellschaft mbH (C-44/01) [2003] E.C.R. I-3095 at [55]; De Landtsheer Emmanuel SA v Comité Interprofessionnel du Vin du Champagne (381/05) [2007] Bus. L.R. 1487; Lidl Belgium GmbH & Co KG v Etablissements Franz Colruyt NV (356/04) [2007] Bus. L.R. 492 at [78] (misleading advertising); Gut Springenheide GmbH and Rudolf Trusky v Oberkreisdirektor des Kreises Steinfurt-Amft für Lebensmittelüberwachung (C-210/96) [1998] E.C.R. I-4657 (marketing standards for eggs); Estée Lauder Cosmetics GmbH & Co OHG v Lancaster Group GmbH (C-220/98) [2000] E.C.R. I-0117 (marketing of cosmetics); Mundipharma v Office for Harmonisation in the Internal Market (Trade Marks and Designs) - Altana Pharma (RESPICUR) (T-256/04) [2007] E.C.R. II-449 (trademarks); Tifosi Optics Inc v Office for Harmonisation in the Internal Market (Trade Marks and Designs) (OHIM) (T-531/12) (trade marks). See also the recent discussion of “average consumer” in OFT v Purely Creative [2011] EWHC 106 (Ch), [2011] E.C.C. 20 at [73]-[74]; Secretary of State for Business, Innovation and Skills v PLT Antimarketing Ltd [2015] EWCA Civ 76, [2015] C.T.L.C.8 at [30]-[31] for the purposes of the 2008 Regulations.
- 280. Directive 2005/29/EC concerning unfair business-to-consumer commercial practices [2005] O.J. L149/22, recitals 18 and 19; arts 5(2)(b) and (3), 6(1) and (2), 7(1) and (2), and 8. This directive is implemented in UK law by the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008

- (SI 2008/1277), on which see below, paras 38-145 et seq.
- 281. Directive 2005/29 art.3(2), below, para.38-148 but cf. paras 38-160 et seq.
- 282.  These distinctions are drawn from 2005 Directive art.5(2) and 5(3), below, para.38-157. See also Konsumentombudsmannen v Ving Sverige AB (C-122/10) of May 12, 2011.
- 283. Above, para.38-003 and see below, paras 38-260 et seq.
- 284. cf. Whittaker in Weatherill and Bernitz at Ch.8.
- 285. Directive 93/13/EEC arts 3 and 5 respectively.
- 286. Banco Español de Crédito, SA v Calderón Camino (C-618/10) Opinion of February 14, 2012 para.73, on which see below, para.38-306 n.1839.
- 287. Kásler v OTP Jelzálogbank Zrt (C-26/13) of April 30, 2014 at para.74. On the other hand, the CJEU did not adopt the perspective of the “average consumer” for the purposes of identification of the clauses to which art.4(2) of the 1993 Directive applied: see below, paras 38-233 and 38-239.
- 288. Below, paras 38-259—38-260.
- 289. Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.64(4) and (5) on which see below, paras 38-367—38-368.
- 290. Consumer Rights Directive 2011 art.5(1), 6(1) and 7(1) (“plain, intelligible language”); Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 (SI 2013/3134) regs 9(1), 10(1) and 13(1).
- 291. Insurance Act 2015 ss.3 and 4 and see below, paras 42-046—42-047.
- 292.  cf. “dealing as consumer” under the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 before this concept was abolished by the Consumer Rights Act 2015. Under the 1977 Act, a person might “deal as consumer” in supplying goods or services to a person contracting in the course of business: Peel, Treitel on The Law of Contract, 14th edn (2015), para.7–054; Vol.I, para.15-074.
- 293. Above, paras 38-034, 38-038.
- 294. On this point, see above, para.38-034.
- 295. See above, para.38-032.
- 296. Directive 2005/29/EC concerning unfair business-to-consumer commercial practices [2005] O.J. L149/22 art.1.
- 297. Directive 2005/29/EC art.2(d).
- 298. Directive 2005/29/EC art.5, especially 5(2)(b).
- 299. First Report from the Commission to the European Parliament, the Council and the European Economic and Social Committee on the application of Directive 2005/29/EC etc. accompanying Communication Com (2013) 138 final, p.10.
- 300. Directive 2005/29/EC arts 6-8.
- 301. Directive 2005/29/EC recitals 1-5.
- 302. SI 2008/1277 reg.2(1). It is submitted that this extension of the scheme of the 2005 Directive is compatible with its general requirement of “full harmonisation” as, on the narrower view taken by the Commission, consumer-to-business commercial practices fall outside the 2005 Directive's scope and therefore beyond the force of this requirement: cf. above, para.38-023.

- 303. SI 2008/1277 reg.27A(2)(b) referring to “consumer to business contract” and see below, para.38-165.
- 304. Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.3(1). See similarly s.33(1) (“contract for a trader to supply digital content to a consumer”) and s.48(1) (“contract for a trader to supply a service to a consumer”): below, paras 38-431 et seq.
- 305. The main exception to this is 2015 Act s.51's provision regarding the imposition of a reasonable price on the consumer under “services contracts”: below, para.38-538.
- 306.  See Vol.II, paras 38-192 et seq.
- 307.  Tarc#u v Banca Comercial# Intesa Sanpaolo România SA (C-74/15) Order of CJEU November 19, 2015, on which see below, para.38-207.
- 308. See below, para.38-074 (off-premises contracts and distance contracts), para.38-203 (unfair terms) and below, paras 38-154 and 38-165 (unfair commercial practices).
- 309. Sale of Goods Act 1979 Pt 5A s.61(5A) which expressly applies the same burden of proof. Similar provision was made for provisions applying to those “dealing as consumer” under the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 s.18(4). These provisions are now repealed and replaced by the Consumer Rights Act 2015, on which see below, paras 38-046, 38-354.
- 310. e.g. Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999 on which see below, para.38-206.
- 311. Directive 93/13/EEC.
- 312. Directive 2011/83/EU.
- 313. cf., e.g. the position as to the “individual negotiation” of a term under Directive 93/13/EEC art.3(2).
- 314. cf. below, para.38-307—38-308.
- 315. See, e.g. Systran SA and Systran Luxembourg SA v Commission (T-19/07) of December 16, 2010, para.206 (where the General Court stated in the context of the Commission's non-contractual liability that “[a]s a general rule, as the Commission claims, where there is a dispute over the existence of a right, it is for the person claiming that the right does or does not exist to substantiate that claim (actori incumbit probatio)”).
- 316. Faber v Autobedrijf Hazet Ochten BV (C-497/13) of June 4, 2015, above, para.38-018A. cf. below, para.38-309.
- 317. Consumer Insurance (Disclosure and Representations) Act 2012 s.1 defining “consumer insurance contract” and adopted by Insurance Act 2015 s.1.
- 318. Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 (SI 2013/3134) reg.4 “consumer”.
- 319. Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1277) reg.2(1) “consumer” as amended by Consumer Protection (Amendment) Regulations 2014 (SI 2014/870).
- 320. The 2008 Regulations (SI 2008/1277) implement the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005 on whose “full harmonisation” see below, para.38-147; the 2013 Regulations (SI 2013/3134) implement the Consumer Rights Directive 2011 on whose “full harmonisation” see below, para.38-058.

- 321. Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.2(4).
- 322. e.g. Consumer Rights Act 2015 ss.33–47 (contracts to supply digital content).
- 323. Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977; Sale of Goods Act 1979; Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982.
- 324. Directive 93/13/EEC art.8; Directive 99/44/EEC art.8, above, paras 38-020—38-022.
- 325. 2015 Act s.28–29.
- 326. Consumer Rights Directive 2011/83/EEC arts 18 and 20. As will be explained, the 2015 Act also implements the 2013 Regulations art.6(5) to the extent to which it gives contractual force to the information required of and given by traders to consumers under those Regulations: 2015 Act ss.11(4)–(6), 12; 36(3)–(4); and 50(3), below, paras 38-464—38-465, 38-508—38-509 and 38-535 respectively.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts
Section 3. - Definitions of Consumer Contract
(c) - The Other Party to Consumer Contracts—“Traders”

Background

38-047

The fact that one of the parties to a contract has concluded it in the course of a business has long been significant in English contract law, the best-known example being the restriction of the statutory implication of terms as to quality and fitness for purpose of goods sold to sellers so acting. ³²⁷ Whether a person does or does not contract “in the course of a business” is also relevant under the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977, many of whose controls are restricted to exemption clauses governing “business liability”, ³²⁸ and some of whose controls were for the benefit of persons “dealing as consumer”, an element of whose definition contained a requirement that the other party does have to make the contract in the course of a business. ³²⁹ While the Consumer Rights Act 2015 abolishes the category of persons “dealing as consumer” ³³⁰ and repeals and reforms some of the “business liabilities” contained in the Sale of Goods Act 1979, the notion of a party contracting “in the course of a business” remains significant in some non-consumer contracts, as discussed elsewhere in the present work. ³³¹ For present purposes, modern legislation governing consumer contracts (both EU and UK) defines the non-consumer party to a consumer contract by reference, broadly speaking, to that person’s acting in the course of a business, but the precise wording used has differed considerably depending on the context.

EU legislation

38-048

! Unlike the relatively consistent approach to the definition of “consumer” in EU consumer protection legislation, ³³² EU directives have used a wide variety of terms and definitions to describe the party to a consumer contract other than the consumer depending on the particular subject matter of that legislation. So, for example, the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Directive refers to the “seller or supplier” of goods and services, meaning:

“any natural or legal person who, in contracts covered by this Directive, is acting for purposes relating to his trade, business or profession, whether publicly owned or privately owned.” ³³³

The term “seller or supplier” is not, however, reflected in some other language versions of the 1993 Directive, which instead refer to a “professional” or “tradesman”, defined in a similar manner. ³³⁴ Other directives refer to the trader party to a consumer contract by reference to the type of contract in question, as in the case of a “seller” under the Consumer Sales Directive 1999 which principally concerns contracts for the sale of goods, and who is then defined in a similar way to the 1993

Directive except that it omits the reference to public or private ownership. ³³⁵ ! The UK’s implementation of these directives reflected this diversity of terminology and of definition. ³³⁶ However, the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005 may be seen as marking the beginning of a more consistent approach in this respect, providing that:

“trader” means any natural or legal person who, in commercial practices covered by this Directive, is acting for purposes relating to his trade, business, craft or profession and anyone acting in the name of or on behalf of a trader.” ³³⁷

This general form of words was taken up by the Consumer Rights Directive 2011, which provides that:

“trader” means any natural or legal person, irrespective of whether privately or publicly owned, who is acting, including through any other person acting in his name or on his behalf, for purposes relating to his trade, business, craft or profession in relation to contracts covered by this Directive.” ³³⁸

It will be seen, though, that while “trader” is used in both cases, there remains no textual consistency in relation to the question whether the trader is public or private (in activity or ownership) and whether the trader acts personally or through an agent.

European case-law

38-049

However, the Court of Justice has taken a very broad approach to the expression acting “in the course of business” and “trader” in the context of EU consumer protection legislation. In Veedfald v Århus Amtskommune ³³⁹ the Court of Justice considered the meaning of a defence to liability in a producer in art.7(c) of the Product Liability Directive 1985 where the producer can prove that “the product was neither manufactured by him for sale or any form of distribution for economic purpose nor manufactured or distributed by him in the course of his business”. ³⁴⁰ In Veedfald a public hospital argued that, as it had produced and used the product in question in the course of providing publicly funded health care for which its patient did not pay, it therefore did not do so for an economic purpose or in the course of [its] business within the meaning of art.7(c). ³⁴¹ However, the European Court disagreed, holding that the fact that products are manufactured for a service for which the patient has not paid and which is financed from public funds:

“... cannot detract from the economic and business character of that manufacture. The activity in question is not a charitable one which could therefore be covered by the exemption from liability provided for in Article 7(c) of the Directive. Besides, the [defendant hospital] itself admitted at the hearing that, in similar circumstances, a private hospital would undoubtedly be liable for the defectiveness of the product pursuant to the provisions of the Directive.” ³⁴²

This last point was clearly addressed to the argument put to the Court that the application of the 1985 Directive’s scheme of liability to public hospitals would have harmful consequences for public health care and place them at a disadvantage in relation to private health schemes. ³⁴³ While this decision concerned a provision in a defence to liability and the European Court interprets such defences narrowly (especially where they reduce the protection of consumers ³⁴⁴), it suggests that the Court is likely to interpret “course of business” in other consumer protection directives so as to further their purposes of the facilitation of the internal market by reducing distortions of competition and the furtherance of the protection of consumers. ³⁴⁵

38-050

This broad approach is confirmed by BKK Mobil Oil where the Court of Justice of the EU considered the proper approach to be taken to the definition of “trader” and “business” for the purposes of Unfair Commercial Practices Directive, ³⁴⁶ in the context of the question whether a health insurance fund established as a public law body in German law is subject to the controls in that Directive. As earlier noted, the Directive provides:

“... “trader” means any natural or legal person who, in commercial practices covered by this Directive, is acting for purposes relating to his trade, business, craft or profession and anyone acting in the name of or on behalf of a trader.” ³⁴⁷

First, the Court held that an “autonomous and uniform” European interpretation must be given to this definition, and, as a result, “the classification, legal status and specific characteristics of the body at issue under national law are irrelevant”. ³⁴⁸ The Court further held that the definition of “trader” is “particularly broad” not excluding “either bodies pursuing a task of public interest or those which are governed by public law” and must be determined “in relation to the related but diametrically opposed concept of ‘consumer’, which refers to any individual not engaged in commercial or trade activities”. ³⁴⁹ In the Court’s view, given that the health insurance fund’s members were manifestly consumers, the fund must be treated as a “trader” and “whether the body at issue or the specific task it pursues are public or private is irrelevant”. ³⁵⁰ In this respect, the Court of Justice did not follow the advice of Advocate General Bott, who saw “the common thread” running through a number of EU consumer protection directives, including the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Directive 1993 and the Consumer Rights Directive 2011, as being:

“that a trader may be a natural person or a public-law or private-law body who, in his relations with consumers, is acting for purposes relating to his trade or profession, which presupposes that he acts within the framework of a regular profit-making activity.” ³⁵¹

Moreover, in Šiba v Dev#nas the Court of Justice applied its approach to “trader” in the 2005 Directive to “seller or supplier” under the 1993 Directive, holding therefore that the public or private nature of the specific task which forms the subject matter of the contract cannot determine the Directive’s application. ³⁵² This case-law strongly suggests that the Court of Justice would take a similarly very broad interpretation of the definition of the trader party to a consumer contract for the purposes of other directives in the consumer acquis, without the need for any explicit reference to a business being “publicly owned or privately owned”.

A regular part of his business?

38-051

For the purposes of domestic legislation, English courts have come to contrasting views on the question whether, in order to act “in the course” of a business, a person must contract in a way which forms part of the regular course of dealing of that business. On the one hand, in R. & B. Customs Brokers Co Ltd v United Dominions Trust Ltd the Court of Appeal held that a person may “deal as consumer” within the meaning of the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977, even though contracting as part of its business if the contract was neither integral to its business or forms a regular part of it. ³⁵³ On the other hand, in Stevenson v Rogers the Court of Appeal held that a person who contracts as part of his business does so “in the course of” that business for the purposes of the implication of the term as to quality of goods sold in the Sale of Goods Act 1979, ³⁵⁴ this decision being influenced by the change in wording from the 1893 Act which required that the “goods [were] bought by description from a seller who deals in goods of that description”. ³⁵⁵ While apparently inconsistent, these two decisions have in common that they extended the ambit of the legislative controls in question, whether in terms of the imposition of liability for failures in quality of goods sold or the control of exemption clauses. As regards consumer contracts, the legislative contexts of these earlier decisions have changed, since the Consumer Rights Act 2015 now provides for the statutory terms to be included in consumer contracts for the supply of goods, digital content and services and the rules governing unfair contract terms, using a single definition of “trader” for both these purposes. ³⁵⁶ In doing so, the 2015 Act thereby implements EU directives affecting sales of goods and unfair contract terms. ³⁵⁷

EU law

38-052

This then raises the question as to the likely view of the Court of Justice as to the need for regularity in contracting for a trader to act in the course of a business for the purposes of EU consumer protection legislation. This may, of course, be influenced by the particular wording or context of the directive in question, but the Court of Justice of the EU would resolve the question by reference to its purposes in the light of general EU principle. In this respect, EU legislation in this context is intended to create protection for consumers as “weaker” and less well-informed parties, throughout the European Union and by this means increase consumer confidence and thus the facilitation of the establishment of the internal market. ³⁵⁸ In this respect, a consumer will not usually be aware or able to become aware of the nature of the business of a supplier of goods or services and, therefore, whether or not the contract which he intends to conclude does or does not form a regular part of its business. In terms of authority, as has been seen, the Court of Justice in BKK Mobil Oil did not require a trader’s act to fall “within the framework of a regular profit-making activity” as had its Advocate General. ³⁵⁹ As a result, it is submitted that, in principle, the consumer should not be deprived of the protections required by a directive merely because the contract in question is unusual for the supplier.

Traders as “intermediaries” of non-traders

38-052A

❗ In Wathelet v Garage Bietheres & Fils SPRL ³⁶⁰ ❗ a consumer had bought a second-hand car from a garage, the car in fact being owned by a private individual on behalf of whom the garage sold the car. Although the issue was disputed, the national court held that there was “strong, specific and circumstantial evidence indicating that [the private individual] was not informed that it was a private sale”. ³⁶¹

❗ The question arose whether a trader who acts as intermediary on behalf of a non-professional seller counts as a “seller” within the meaning of the Consumer Sales Directive 1999 so as to bear the liabilities which that directive imposes on “sellers”, whether or not the trader is remunerated and whether or not the trader informed the prospective buyer that the seller is a private individual. ³⁶²

❗ The Court of Justice of the EU held in this respect, first, that the sale was a “private sale” as the owner of the vehicle was a private individual, the garage acting as a trader as authorised intermediary. ³⁶³

❗ For this purpose, the concept of “seller” must be given an autonomous interpretation for the purposes of the 1999 Directive and, while the definition in the Directive does not cover intermediaries, it should be interpreted as covering “a trader acting as intermediary on behalf of a private individual who has not duly informed the consumer of the fact that the owner of the goods sold is a private individual”, which is for the national court to decide on the facts, ³⁶⁴ ❗ taking into account the degree of participation and the amount of effort employed by the intermediary in the sale, the circumstances in which the goods were presented to the consumer, and the latter’s behaviour. ³⁶⁵

❗ This decision does not depend on whether or not the intermediary is remunerated for so acting. ³⁶⁶

❗ This result was justified by the Court of Justice by the need to ensure the high level of consumer protection required by the 1999 Directive which would be put at risk if the consumer’s ignorance concerning the capacity in which the trader acts were allowed to deprive him of the rights provided by the Directive. ³⁶⁷

❗ In English law, it would seem that in these circumstances the trader would be considered to be the agent of an undisclosed principal, ³⁶⁸ ❗ and so could be sued on the contract of sale as “seller” on this basis. ³⁶⁹

Recent UK legislation: a standard approach to “trader”

38-053

The Consumer Rights (Payment Surcharges) Regulations 2012, ³⁷⁰ the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Payments) Regulations 2013 and the Consumer Rights Act 2015 all refer to the non-consumer party to the contracts to which they apply as a “trader” and state that:

“trader” means a person acting for purposes relating to that person’s trade, business, craft or profession, whether acting personally or through another person acting in the trader’s name or on the trader’s behalf.” ³⁷¹

“Business” includes the activities of any government department or local or public authority. ³⁷² While the form of the definitions of “trader” and “business” in the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 (as amended in 2014) differ slightly from this form of words, the substance of all the new statutory definitions is identical except that a “trader” is stated as including “a person acting in the name of or on behalf of a trader” ³⁷³ except for the purposes of the consumer’s new rights to redress against “traders”. ³⁷⁴

EU and UK legislative interpretation

38-054

All the recent UK consumer contract legislation where these definitions of “trader” are encountered reflect EU directives which use and define the “trader”. ³⁷⁵ In this respect, as earlier noted, the Court of Justice of the EU has adopted a broad approach to the definition of “trader” for the purposes of two of these directives ³⁷⁶ and is likely to take the same approach to the other relevant consumer protection directives. ³⁷⁷ In particular, the Court has recognised that public authorities can be “traders” and that there is, therefore, no requirement that a trader acts with a view to profit. ³⁷⁸ Moreover, if the arguments earlier set out hold good, this would also mean that the definition of “trader” would not require any contract made with a consumer to form an integral part of the trader’s business or be concluded with any degree of regularity by him. ³⁷⁹

^{327.} Sale of Goods Act 1893 s.14(2) (which required that the goods are of a description which it is in the courses of the seller’s business to supply); Sale of Goods Act 1979 s.14(2) and (3) (sale of goods in the course of a business).

^{328.} Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.1(3) (as amended).

^{329.} Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s.12(1)(b). As earlier noted, the Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.75, Sch.4 para.11 deletes the notion of “dealing as consumer” from the 1977 Act: see below, paras 38-341 and see Vol.I, paras 15-073—15-079.

^{330.} Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.75, Sch.4 para.11 and see below, paras 38-341.

^{331.} e.g. Sale of Goods Act 1979 s.14 (amended by the 2015 Act s.60, Sch.1 para.13); Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 s.4 (as amended by the 2015 Act s.60, Sch.1 para.40), s.13. See below, para.44-096.

^{332.} Above, para.38-030.

- 333. Directive 93/13/EEC art.2(c).
- 334. The non-consumer party to the contract is termed professionnel in the French and Gewerbetreibender in the German versions of Directive 93/13/EEC art.2(c).
- 335.  Directive 99/44/EEC art.1(2)(c). The French version of this provision refers to “business activity, whether public or private” (“activité professionnelle, qu’elle soit publique ou privée”). See similarly, Package Travel Directive 90/314/EEC art.2(2) and (3) (“organizer” and “retailer”) (this approach is amended by Directive (EU) 2015/2302 on package travel and linked travel arrangements [2015] O.J. L326/1, which revokes and replaces the 1990 Directive. Article 3 of the new Directive defines “organiser” and “retailer” as categories of “trader”, which is itself defined and which extends to persons facilitating a “linked travel arrangement”); Timeshare Directive 94/47 art.2 (“vendor”). The directives differ also as to whether they mention that the business party acts through an agent: cf. the Doorstep Selling Directive 85/577/EEC art.2 (“anyone acting in the name or on behalf of a trader”) and the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Directive 93/13/EEC art.2(c) which makes no such reference.
- 336. The 1999 Directive was first implemented in English law by amendment of the Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) Act 1973, the Sale of Goods Act 1979 and the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 (as explained below, paras 38-405 et seq.), all of which define the trader party to the contract as “seller”, “bailor” or “supplier” as the case may be.
- 337. Directive 2005/29/EC art.2(b).
- 338. Directive 2011/83/EU art.2(2) (emphasis added) and see also recital 16.
- 339. Veedfald v Århus Amtskommune (C-203/99) [2001] E.C.R. I-3569.
- 340. Directive 1985/374/EEC art.7(c).
- 341. [2001] E.C.R. I-3569 at [20].
- 342. [2001] E.C.R. I-3569 at [21].
- 343. [2001] E.C.R. I-3569 at [20].
- 344. [2001] E.C.R. I-3569 at [15].
- 345. See, e.g. 1993 Directive recitals 1–2.
- 346. BKK Mobil Oil Körperschaft des öffentlichen Rechts v Zentrale zur Bekämpfung unlauteren Wettbewerbs eV (C-59/12) of October 3, 2013.
- 347. Directive 2005/29/EC art.2(b).
- 348. C-59/12 at paras 25-26.
- 349. C-59/12 at paras 32-33 citing by analogy Shearson Lehman Hutton v TVB Treuhandgesellschaft für Vermögensverwaltung und Beteiligungen mbH (C-89/91) [1993] E.C.R. I-00139 at para.22 on art.13 of the Brussels Convention on jurisdiction and the enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters.
- 350. C-59/12 at paras 36-38.
- 351. C-59/12 A.G. Opinion February 12, 2014 at para.42 (emphasis added). cf. Vol.I, para.15-072, n.391 where it is said that “business” for the purposes of s.1(3) of the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 does not require acting with the view to profit relying principally on Town Investments Ltd v Department of Environment [1978] A.C. 359 (government department could conclude a “business tenancy”).

- 352. C-537/13 of January 15, 2015 [2015] Bus. L.R. 291, para.28.
- 353. [1988] 1 W.L.R. 321.
- 354. [1999] Q.B. 1028; Feldarol Foundry Plc v Hermes Leasing (London) Ltd [2004] EWCA Civ 747, (2004) 101 (24) L.S.G. 32.
- 355. Sale of Goods Act 1893 s.14(2); [1999] Q.B. 1028, 1035–1040.
- 356. Consumer Rights Act 2015 ss.2(2) and (7) (Pt 1); s.76(2) (applying the Pt 1 definitions for Pt 2), below, paras 38-334 et seq. and especially 38-352; 38-431 et seq. and especially 38-448.
- 357. i.e. Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Directive 1993; Consumer Sales Directive 1999.
- 358. e.g. 1993 Directive recitals 5, 6 and 10. On the role of EU consumer law as protecting the consumer as weaker party and less well-informed party see further Pereni#ová v SOS finance, spol. s ro (C-453/10) [2012] 2 C.M.L.R. 28 para.27.
- 359. C-59/12 and cf. A.G. Bott's Opinion at para.42 quoted more fully above, para.38-050.
- 360.  C-149/15 [2017] 1 W.L.R. 865.
- 361.  C-149/15 at para.22.
- 362.  C-149/15 at para.23. 1999 Directive art.1(1)(c) (“seller: shall mean any natural or legal person who, under a contract, sells consumer goods in the course of his trade, business or profession”). On the significance of the 1999 Directive and its implementation in English law see Main Work, Vol.II, paras 38-400 et seq.
- 363.  C-149/15 at paras 24–26.
- 364.  C-149/15 at paras 28–30 and 45.
- 365.  C-149/15 at para.44.
- 366.  C-149/15 at para.45. Remuneration was seen as part of the contractual relationship between the individual owner of the goods and the intermediary and therefore outside the scope of the Directive: C-149/15 at para.43.
- 367.  C-149/15 at paras 36–42.
- 368.  There is a degree of uncertainty here as the A.G.'s Opinion refers to an intermediary acting in the name of as well as on behalf of the individual and the former suggests that the agency is disclosed, whereas the CJEU states the facts as being that the consumer was told that her apparent seller acted as an intermediary only after the contract had been concluded: C-149/15 at para.14.
- 369.  See Main Work, Vol.I, para.31-063. The general law of agency applies to contracts for the sale of goods: Sale of Goods Act 1979 s.62(2); Benjamin's Sale of Goods 10th edn (2017), para.3-002.
- 370. SI 2012/3110 reg.2 “trader” (as amended by SI 2013/3134 Sch.4 para.15(2)) and see generally below, para.38-396.
- 371. Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 (SI 2013/3134) reg.4 “trader”; Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.2(2).

- 372. The Consumer Rights (Payment Surcharges) Regulations 2012 (SI 2012/3110) reg.3 “business” (as inserted by SI 2013/3134 Sch.4 para.15(3)(a)); Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 (SI 2013/3134) reg.5 “business”; Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.2(7).
- 373. Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1277) reg.2(1) “business” and “trader” (as amended by SI 2014/870). The effect of this inclusion is to subject a trader’s agent to a possible personal responsibility in respect of the commission of an unfair commercial practice, as foreseen by reg.8 (offences relating to unfair commercial practices).
- 374. Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1277) reg.2(1) “trader” (b) (as amended by SI 2014/870). The definition of the non-consumer party to “consumer insurance contracts” under the Consumer Insurance (Disclosure and Representations) Act 2012 and Insurance Act 2015 (neither of which implement EU legislation) differs, designating that party as “a person who carries on the business of insurance and who becomes a party to the contract by way of that business (whether or not in accordance with permission for the purposes of the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000)” (2012 Act s.1(b) “consumer insurance contract”); Insurance Act 2015 s.1: and see below, para.42-031.
- 375. In the case of the Consumer Rights (Payment Surcharges) Regulations 2012, the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Payments) Regulations 2013 and the Consumer Rights Act 2015 the UK legislation implements the relevant directive; in the case of the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 (as amended in 2014), the regulations as a whole implement a directive (the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005), even though the consumer’s rights to redress are not required by that directive: below, para.38-145 et seq.
- 376. BKK Mobil Oil Körperschaft des öffentlichen Rechts v Zentrale zur Bekämpfung unlauteren Wettbewerbs eV (C-59/12) of October 3, 2013 (Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005); Diba v Devėnas (C-537/13) (Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Directive 1993) above, paras 38-048—38-049.
- 377. i.e. the Consumer Sales Directive 1999 and the Consumer Rights Directive 2011. If this were not the case and these directives were interpreted by the CJEU as having a narrower understanding of “trader”, it is submitted that the broader UK statutory definitions would be compatible with EU law, as their references to a trader acting through an agent and to a trader undertaking activities of a public character would then represent extensions of the protective schemes of the directives to persons otherwise outside their scope of application and so such an extension would not fall foul even of those directives which require “full harmonisation”: cf. the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005 and the Consumer Rights Directive 2011 (both of which in principle require “full harmonisation”) and the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Directive 1993 and the Consumer Sales Directive (both of which require merely “minimum harmonisation”): see above, paras 38-020, 38-022, 38-024 and 38-026.
- 378. Above, para.38-050.
- 379. Above, para.38-052 for the arguments in support of this view.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 4. - Information Requirements and Consumers' Rights of Cancellation

(a) - Introduction

Rationale

38-055

! In the context of the protection of the economic interests of consumers, the European legislator has long seen the use of duties of information in traders towards consumers before the conclusion of a contract as an important regulatory technique. ³⁸⁰ As Weatherill observes:

“These techniques do not address directly the content of the bargain between trader and consumer. Contractual terms remain to be fixed by private negotiation. ³⁸¹ The assumption underlying [this] type of regulatory technique ... is that an imbalance of economic power can be sufficiently corrected by adjusting the environment within which the bargain is struck by giving the consumer extra information in advance and extra time to consider the implications.” ³⁸²

Rather than a single regime, the EU legislator enacted a series of distinct regimes dealing with contracts made in particular circumstances or with particular categories of contract. As a result, duties of information were imposed on traders in relation to contracts made in particular circumstances (notably, contracts made away from business premises (“doorstep selling”) ³⁸³ and contracts made at a distance ³⁸⁴) or contracts where the consumer is seen as particularly at risk of abuse, as in the case of timeshare contracts ³⁸⁵ and package holidays. ³⁸⁶ ! Other information requirements were imposed on the providers of “information society services” (such as selling goods online) which apply for the benefit of all their recipients, but in the case of consumers cannot be excluded by agreement. ³⁸⁷ Often the imposition of information duties on the trader before the conclusion of a contract has been combined with the provision of a cooling-off period within which consumers are entitled to cancel ³⁸⁸ the contract. ³⁸⁹ The justifications for these rights of cancellation have differed according to context: in timeshare contracts, the right is provided so as to give consumers the “opportunity of fully understanding their rights and obligations under the contract” ³⁹⁰; in distance contracts, it is justified on the ground that the consumer is not able to see the goods before concluding the contract, ³⁹¹ and in off-premises contracts because of the risk of surprise and the frequent inability of consumers to compare the offer made with other offers. ³⁹² Following the general pattern, these directives required merely “minimum harmonisation”. ³⁹³

The Consumer Rights Directive 2011

38-056

! The main provisions of the 2011 directive are concerned with the reformulation of the information requirements and rights of cancellation for door-step selling (renamed “off-premises contracting”) and distance contracts generally (but not distance contracts related to financial services ³⁹⁴), but the directive also introduces new information requirements in traders to consumers in contracts which are neither off-premises contracts nor distance contracts, and requires certain other measures for the protection of consumers in relation to contracts (for example, in relation to the imposition of “additional payments”). ³⁹⁵  After implementation of the 2011 Directive in UK law by the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 (the “2013 Regulations”), ³⁹⁶ these regulations contain the general and most important information and cancellation provisions governing consumer contracts. However, there are other, special provisions governing particular categories of contract: “distance contracts” for the supply of financial services, ³⁹⁷ timeshare, ³⁹⁸ package travel ³⁹⁹ and contracts concluded by electronic means. ⁴⁰⁰  There are also information requirements imposed on traders in relation to alternative dispute resolution (ADR). ⁴⁰¹ This section will focus on the 2013 Regulations, but its final paragraphs will outline the legislation governing these special categories. ⁴⁰²

Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013

38-057

 The UK implemented most (though not all) of the requirements of the Consumer Rights Directive by the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 (the “2013 Regulations”). ⁴⁰³  The 2013 Regulations therefore replaced earlier UK regulations implementing the directives which the 2011 Directive itself replaced, the Cancellation of Contracts made in a Consumer’s Home or Place of Work, etc. Regulations 2008 ⁴⁰⁴  and the Consumer Protection (Distance Selling) Regulations 2000. ⁴⁰⁵  This section will principally explain the provisions of the 2013 Regulations governing information and cancellation, ⁴⁰⁶ and will note the special rules governing, for example, timeshare contracts, ⁴⁰⁷ but will leave until later in this chapter the UK’s legislation implementing the Consumer Rights Directive’s requirements other than those relating to information and cancellation. ⁴⁰⁸ As yet there is no case-law on either the 2011 Directive or the 2013 Regulations, but, where still relevant, reference will be made to European and English case-law on the directives and regulations which they respectively replaced.

“Full harmonisation” with qualifications

38-058

The Consumer Rights Directive makes clear that, in principle, it requires “full harmonisation” of the matters within its scope, but adds “unless otherwise provided for in this Directive”. ⁴⁰⁹ There are a number of matters which remain required only as a matter of “minimum harmonisation”, notably, the information requirements imposed on traders where the contracts which they conclude with consumers are neither off-premises contracts nor distance contracts ⁴¹⁰ (termed “on-premises contracts” by the 2013 Regulations ⁴¹¹) and the 2011 Directive also provides expressly for options for Member States in relation to some of its provisions. For example, while in the case of the effect of cancellation by a consumer on “ancillary contracts” the Directive provides the general rule that cancellation shall automatically terminate such ancillary contracts “without any costs for the consumer”, it adds that “Member States shall lay down detailed rules on the termination of such contracts”. ⁴¹² The following discussion will explain how the 2013 Regulations relate to the underlying provisions in the 2011 Directive only where this is relevant to their interpretation or application.

Autonomous interpretations and “national general contract law”

38-059

Article 3(5) of the Consumer Rights Directive states that:

“This Directive shall not affect national general contract law such as the rules on the validity, formation or effect of a contract, in so far as general contract law aspects are not regulated in this Directive.”

This provision is contained within an article entitled “scope” and, at first sight, resembles closely art.3(2) of the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005 which states that it is “without prejudice to contract law and, in particular, to the rules on the validity, formation or effect of a contract”.⁴¹³ It is true that art.3(5) of the Consumer Rights Directive and art.3(2) of the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive rest on a distinction between “(general) contract law” and other aspects of their respective requirements (and notably the compliance measures for the enforcement of the duties and prohibitions imposed on traders⁴¹⁴), but the functions of the two provisions differ significantly. For while art.3(2) of the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive excludes “contract law” entirely from its scope and, therefore, from the impact of the full harmonisation which the 2005 Directive generally imposes in respect of its prohibitions on unfair commercial practices business-to-consumer,⁴¹⁵ art.3(5) of the 2011 Directive implicitly acknowledges that some of its provisions do regulate “(general) contract law”. As Recital 14 to the 2011 Directive explains:

“This Directive should not affect national law in the area of contract law for contract law aspects that are not regulated by this Directive. Therefore, this Directive should be without prejudice to national law regulating for instance the conclusion or the validity of a contract (for instance in the case of lack of consent). Similarly, this Directive should not affect national law in relation to the general contractual legal remedies, the rules on public economic order, for instance rules on excessive or extortionate prices, and the rules on unethical legal transactions.”

So, art.3(5) of the 2011 Directive does not put aside “contract law” from its scope, but rather specifies that “contract law” issues raised by its own provisions (and therefore within its scope) but not regulated by it, are to be regulated by “national general contract law”. The 2011 Directive therefore expressly allocates this category of unregulated contractual issues to national law with the result that, under its own case-law, the Court of Justice of the EU should not seek to construct “autonomous” European views as to these issues.⁴¹⁶ In this way, the 2011 Directive’s allocation of “unregulated” contractual issues to national contract law has a direct impact on the way in which the 2013 Regulations are to be interpreted and applied.

Contract law issues regulated by the 2011 Directive

38-060

Three examples may be provided of issues of contract law regulated by the 2011 Directive. A first example may be found in the provision stating that information given by traders to consumers before the consumer is bound by an off-premises or distance contract in performance of the duties which the Directive imposes “shall form an integral part” of the contract in question “and shall not be altered unless the contracting parties expressly agree otherwise”.⁴¹⁷ A second set of examples may be found in the Directive’s provisions that exercise by a consumer of a right of cancellation “shall terminate the obligations of the parties ... to perform the distance or off-premises contract”⁴¹⁸ with consequential obligations for both the trader and the consumer.⁴¹⁹ A third example may be found in relation to inertia selling, which had earlier been prohibited when practiced business-to-consumer by the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005.⁴²⁰ However, the 2005 Directive did not create any contractual remedy in respect of this practice and so the 2011 Directive requires “the contractual remedy of exempting the consumer from the obligation to provide any consideration for such unsolicited supply or provision”.⁴²¹

Contract law issues within the 2011 Directive but not regulated by it

38-061

Recital 14 of the 2011 Directive quoted above refers to the conclusion or validity of a contract on the ground of lack of consent as examples of contract law aspects not regulated by its provisions which are therefore left to national contract law.⁴²² This is relevant to the Directive's central provisions which require traders to provide consumers with information "[b]efore the consumer is bound by a contract ... or any corresponding offer",⁴²³ as the issues whether and, if so, when the consumer is so bound are not regulated by the Directive itself; these issues therefore fall to be determined by the common law rules governing the conclusion of a contract.⁴²⁴ In this respect, while the 2011 Directive refers to the possibility of a consumer being bound by an offer (as is recognised in some European national laws⁴²⁵), the 2013 Regulations reflect the general English common law position that a person is not bound by an offer until it is accepted, thereby concluding a contract.⁴²⁶

Mandatory nature of 2013 Regulations

38-062

While the 2013 Regulations do not themselves provide that the information requirements which they impose are mandatory, the Consumer Rights Directive does so, providing that where the law applicable to the contract is the law of a Member State, "consumers may not waive the rights conferred on them by the national measures transposing" the Directive.⁴²⁷ The Directive further provides that any contract terms "which directly or indirectly waive or restrict the rights resulting" from it "shall not be binding on the consumer".⁴²⁸ As a result, and following the principle of the conforming interpretation of national measures implementing a directive,⁴²⁹ any contract term seeking to exclude or restrict the trader's duties of information or any of the legal consequences set out by the 2013 Regulations for the provision of or failure to provide information which they require would not be binding on a consumer.⁴³⁰ Similarly, any waiver by the consumers of their rights under the Regulations would not be binding on the consumer, whether this waiver took place before or after any resulting contract was concluded.⁴³¹

Express consent or agreement of consumer

38-063

On the other hand, a number of provisions in the Regulations set out the legal position which would apply to a situation generally, but then provide for a different position if the consumer expressly agrees with the trader, or requests or consents otherwise. This is the case, for example, as regards any change to the information supplied by the trader before concluding a contract which must be "expressly agreed between the consumer and the trader",⁴³² an express choice of a more expensive kind of delivery of goods,⁴³³ and an express request by the consumer for services to be supplied before the end of the cancellation period,⁴³⁴ and an express consent by the consumer for digital content to be supplied before the end of the cancellation period.⁴³⁵ These examples are all expressly foreseen by the 2011 Directive and therefore form qualifications on the mandatory nature of its provisions.

Duty of court in relation to compliance with information duties

38-063A

⚠ The Court of Justice of the EU has held that the purpose of consumer protection pursued by a number of directives requires national courts to raise of their own motion issues relating to possible rights for the consumer under national laws implementing those directives.⁴³⁶ ⚠ In *Radlinger v Finway a.s.*⁴³⁷ ⚠ the Court of Justice of the EU followed this case-law in the context of the information requirements imposed on traders to consumers by the Consumer Credit Directive 2008. The particular justification for such a duty as regards information requirements was that the consumer is in "a weak position vis-à-vis the seller or supplier, as regards both his bargaining power and his level of knowledge, which leads to the consumer agreeing to terms drawn up in advance by the seller or supplier without being able to influence the content of those terms". ⁴³⁸  The Court of Justice continued:

"In that regard, information, before and at the time of concluding a contract, on the terms of the contract and the consequences of concluding it is of fundamental importance for a consumer. It is, in particular, on the basis of that information that the consumer decides whether he wishes to be bound by the conditions drafted in advance by the seller or supplier." ⁴³⁹

There is a real risk, moreover, that the consumer may not rely on a legal rule protecting him owing to lack of awareness. ⁴⁴⁰  Effective consumer protection therefore requires national courts to consider whether the information duties in the 2008 Directive have been complied with and, if that have not, they must draw all the consequences provided by national law, in the context, as regards penalties imposed as required by that directive. ⁴⁴¹  It is submitted that this reasoning applies by analogy to other information requirements imposed on traders by EU directives for the benefit of consumers and, therefore, that the Court of Justice would equally require national courts to raise the question whether these other information requirements have been fulfilled and, if not, with what effect. This special role of the court in relation to information duties must be borne in mind when considering the range of legal consequences of non-compliance with the information requirements under the 2013 Regulations. ⁴⁴²

^{380.} Weatherill, EU Consumer Law and Policy, 2nd edn (2013), Ch.4.

^{381.} cf., though, the important controls on unfair contract terms put in place by Directive 93/13/EEC on unfair terms in consumer contracts, below, para.38-193.

^{382.} Weatherill, EU Consumer Law and Policy, 2nd edn (2013), n.353, p.92, who also considers criticisms of this technique.

^{383.} Directive 85/577/EEC to protect the consumer in respect of contracts negotiated away from business premises [1985] O.J. L372/31 ("Doorstep Selling Directive 1985").

^{384.} Directive 97/7/EC on the protection of consumers in respect of distance contracts [1997] O.J. L144/19; Directive 2002/65/EC concerning the distance marketing of consumer financial services [2002] O.J. L271/16.

^{385.} Directive 94/47/EC on the protection of purchasers in respect of certain aspects of contracts relating to the purchase of the right to use immovable properties on a timeshare basis, revoked and replaced by the Timeshare Directive 2008/122/EC ("Timeshare Directive 2009"), below, paras 38-136 et seq.

^{386.}  Directive 90/314/EEC on package travel, package holidays and package tours, below, paras 38-132—38-133. Directive (EU) 2015/2302 on package travel and linked travel arrangements [2015] O.J. L326/1 repeals and replaces the 1990 Directive: see below, para. 38-132.

^{387.} Directive 2000/31/EC on certain legal aspects of information society services, in particular electronic commerce, in the Internal Market ("Directive on electronic commerce") [2000] O.J. L178/1 art.10. This requirement is implemented in UK law by the Electronic Commerce (EC Directive) Regulations 2002 (SI 2002/2013), below, para.38-144.

^{388.} The EU directives refer here to "withdrawal" rather than "cancellation" of a contract, but recent UK secondary legislation refers to "cancellation" when the directives refer to "withdrawal" and instead use "withdrawal" to describe a consumer's right to revoke his offer: Consumer Contracts

(Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 (SI 2013/3134) (“2013 Regulations”) regs 29(3), 32(1), 33, 34 and 38 and see below, para.38-108. This chapter will follow the usage in these UK regulations.

- 389. Weatherill, EU Consumer Law and Policy, 2nd edn (2013), n.353, p.92.
- 390. Timeshare Directive 2009 recital 11.
- 391. Directive 97/7/EC recital 14 and see similarly Consumer Rights Directive 2011 recital 37.
- 392. Directive 85/577/EEC recital 3 and see similarly Consumer Rights Directive 2011 recital 37 which refers also to the risk of psychological pressure. See also Martín Martín v EDP Editores SL (C-227/08) [2009] E.C.R. I-11939 para.22 where the ECJ stated that the Doorstep Selling Directive was “designed to protect consumers against the risks inherent in the conclusion of contracts away from business premises ... as the special feature of those contracts is that as a rule it is the trader who initiates the contract negotiations, and the consumer has not prepared for such door-to-door selling by, inter alia, comparing the price and quality of the different offers available”, a passage relied on by the SC in Roberton v Swift [2014] UKSC 50, [2014] 1 W.L.R. 3438 at [9]. The ECJ has held that where a consumer was in one of the situations of “doorstep selling” as set out by the Doorstep Selling Directive 1985, then he enjoyed a right of renunciation of the contract even though “specific conduct or an intention to manipulate on the part of the trader” are not established: Travel Vac SL v Antelm Sanchis (C-423/97) [1999] E.C.R. I-2195 at para.43.
- 393. Directive 85/577/EEC art.8; Directive 97/7/EC art.14; Directive 94/47/EC art.11. On the significance of “minimum harmonisation” generally see above, paras 38-020—38-021.
- 394. These remain governed by Directive 2002/65/EC.
- 395.  Consumer Rights Directive 2011 Ch.IV “Other Consumer Rights”. On the 2011 Directive generally see European Commission, DG Justice Guidance Document concerning Directive 2011/83/EU etc. (June 2014) (“DG Justice Guidance Document on 2011 Directive”) available at http://ec.europa.eu/justice/consumer-marketing/files/crd_guidance_en.pdf. See also European Commission, Report from the Commission to the European Parliament and the Council on the application of Directive 2011/83/EU [etc.], COM(2017) 259 final.
- 396. SI 2013/3134.
- 397. Financial Services (Distance Marketing) Regulations 2004 (SI 2004/2095) below, para.38-131.
- 398. Timeshare, Holiday Products, Resale and Exchange Contracts Regulations 2010 (SI 2010/2960) below, paras 38-136—38-142.
- 399. The Package Travel, Package Holidays and Package Tours Regulations 1992 (SI 1992/3288), below, paras 38-132—38-135.
- 400.  Electronic Commerce (EC Directive) Regulations 2002 (SI 2002/2013) reg.9, below, para. 38-144. There are two further situations foreseen by the Consumer Rights Act 2015 in which traders must provide information to consumers and others. First, ss.83–88 impose a duty on letting agents to publicise their fees, though the enforcement measures provided by s.87 of the Act do not affect the validity of any contract made. Secondly, ss.90–95 impose on persons who resell tickets for a recreational, sporting or cultural event in the UK through a secondary ticketing facility a number of information duties (e.g. as to the ticket, the venue, etc.), prohibit the original seller from cancelling resold tickets or blacklisting persons reselling (in both cases subject to conditions), but again the enforcement measures provided by s.93 do not affect the validity of any contract made. (Section 90 of the 2015 Act is amended by the Digital Economy Act 2017 s.105 as from a date to be appointed).
- 401. Directive 2013/11/EU of May 31, 2013 on alternative dispute resolution for consumer disputes [2013] O.J. L165/63, below, para.38-143.

- 402. See below, paras 38-130 et seq.
- 403. !SI 2013/3134 (in force June 13, 2014). The Consumer Rights Act 2015 ss.11(4) and (5), 12 (goods contracts), s.36(3) and (4), 37 (digital content contracts) and s.50 (services contracts) give effect to the Consumer Rights Directive 2011 art.6(5)'s requirement that information provided by traders as required by the 2011 Directive (in relation to off-premises and distance contracts) forms part of the contract: see below, paras 38-100, 38-464—38-465, 38-508—38-509 and 38-535. The Consumer Rights (Payment Charges) Regulations 2012 (SI 2012/3110) gives effect to the Consumer Rights Directive 2011 art.19 on which see below, para.38-396.
- 404. !SI 2008/1816, itself replacing Consumer Protection (Cancellation of Contracts Concluded away from Business Premises) Regulations 1987 (SI 1987/2117) implementing the Directive 85/577/EEC. The 2008 Regulations (SI 2008/1816) therefore do not apply to contracts entered into on or after June 13, 2014, being the date of coming into force of the 2013 Regulations: 2013 Regulations reg.2(b).
- 405. !SI 2000/2334 implementing Directive 97/7/EC. The 2000 Regulations (SI 2000/2334) therefore do not apply to contracts entered into on or after June 13, 2014, being the date of coming into force of the 2013 Regulations: 2013 Regulations reg.2(a).
- 406. They also note the earlier provisions governing information and cancellation in the Financial Services (Distance Marketing) Regulations 2004 (SI 2004/2095) which implemented the Distance Contracts for Financial Services Directive 2002 [2002] O.J. L271/16. On these regulations see below, para.38-131.
- 407. See below, paras 38-136 et seq.
- 408. The Consumer Rights Directive's provisions (arts 18 and 20) on delivery of goods and the passing of risk in "sales contracts" were implemented in UK law first by the 2013 Regulations regs 42 and 43, but were reimplemented by the Consumer Rights Act 2015 ss.28 and 29. The Consumer Rights Directive's provisions on fees for the use of means of payment (art.19) were implemented by the Consumer Rights (Payment Charges) Regulations 2012 (SI 2012/3110) (on which see below, para.38-396) and its provision on "communication by telephone", "additional payments" and inertia selling (arts 21, 22 and 27 respectively) were implemented by the 2013 Regulations regs 41, 40 and 39 respectively (on which see below, paras 38-397—38-398).
- 409. Consumer Rights Directive 2011 art.4.
- 410. Consumer Rights Directive 2011 art.5(4).
- 411. 2013 Regulations reg.5 "on-premises contract".
- 412. Consumer Rights Directive 2011 art.15. Further examples may be found in art.6(7) (language requirements) and art.7(4) (off-premises contracts concerning certain works of repairs or maintenance where payment does not exceed 200€).
- 413. Directive 2005/29/EC art.3(2), on which see Whittaker, The Regulation of Unfair Commercial Practices under EC Directive 2005/29, New Rules and New Techniques (2007), Ch.8 and below, para.38-148. The guidance provided by the European Commission on art.3(5)'s application is limited, as it provides merely two particular examples ("if national contract law makes it possible for rights and obligations under an existing contract to be transferred from one consumer to another, no new contract would be concluded to which the Directive would apply" and "how a trader may enforce a consumer's liability for the diminished value of the goods under art.14(2)": DG Justice Guidance Document on 2011 Directive, paras 2.7 and 6.4.4. respectively.
- 414. Consumer Rights Directive 2011, especially arts 23–24. The central example of the duties on traders to be so enforced are found in relation to duties of information under arts 5 and 6.

- 415. Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005 arts 4, 5 and 11 and see above, para.38-024 and below 38-398—38-394 on the significance of this for aspects of the Consumer Rights Act 2015. Article 3(2) of the 2005 Directive does not prevent Member States from giving “contract law” significance to its provisions, as the UK has recently done by amendment in 2014 of the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1277) by the Consumer Protection (Amendment) Regulations 2014 (SI 2014/870) inserting, notably, new Pt 4A Consumers’ Rights to Redress, on which see below, paras 38-160 et seq.
- 416. cf. above, para.38-014. Presumably, however, this allocation of contract issues left unregulated by the 2011 Directive to national contract law would be subject to the general principles of EU law, notably, the principle of the effectiveness. cf., for this purpose, the approach of the CJEU to the principle of the autonomy of national procedural law, above, paras 38-018—38-018A.
- 417. Consumer Rights Directive 2011 art.6(5). On this see below, para.38-100.
- 418. Consumer Rights Directive 2011 art.12(a) (referring to “withdrawal” rather than “cancellation”, on which see above, n.361).
- 419. Consumer Rights Directive 2011 arts 13 and 14.
- 420. Consumer Rights Directive 2011 art.27; Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005 2005/29/EC art.5(5), Annex point 29, implemented in UK law by the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1277) reg.3(4)(d), Sch.1 para.29.
- 421. Consumer Rights Directive 2011 recital 60; art.27. This change was effected in UK law by amendment of the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1277) by the 2013 Regulations reg.39 (as itself amended by SI 2014/870).
- 422. Above, para.38-059.
- 423. Consumer Rights Directive 2011 arts 5(1) and 6(1) and see the 2013 Regulations regs 9(1), (10(1) and 12(1).
- 424. See Vol.I, Ch.2. Recent examples in relation to the earlier Cancellation of Contracts made in a Consumer’s Home or Place of Work, etc. Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1816) may be found in Cox v Woodlands Manor Care Home Ltd [2015] EWCA Civ 415, [2015] 3 Costs L.O. 327, where the Court of Appeal held that a conditional fee agreement had been made at a consumer’s home where it was signed, even though it was subject to a condition depending on the possibility of funding from legal expenses insurance and Howes Percival Ltd v Page [2013] EWHC 4104 (Ch) at [237] unreported where it was held to be “little more than happenstance” that one of the meetings between parties took place at the consumers’ home, neither the contract nor an offer being made there.
- 425. e.g. French law: Bell, Boyron and Whittaker, Principles of French Law, 2nd edn (2008) p.303.
- 426. See Vol.I, para.2-093. Following its earlier pattern in arts 5(1) and 6(1), the 2011 Directive later provides for the effects of consumer withdrawal from the contract in cases of concluded contracts and “in cases where an offer was made by the consumer”: art.12. In implementing these provisions, the UK Regulations distinguish between a consumer’s right of cancellation of his contract (following here the 2011 Directive’s provisions to this effect) and the possibility for a consumer withdrawing his offer. In the case of the latter, the circumstances in which a consumer can withdraw his offer will be set by the common law, but the 2013 Regulations (following the 2011 Directive) set some of the effects of the consumer’s exercise of such a power of withdrawal, notably, as to recovery of any sums paid in advance: below, para.38-118.
- 427. 2011 Directive art.25, first sentence. The Department of Business Innovation & Skills, Directive 2011/83/EU on consumer rights, Draft Transposition Note (August 2013) p.14 states that “no specific implementation” is required for 2011 Directive art.25 as the provisions of the Regulations are mandatory. cf. the express provisions on “no contracting-out” in the Consumer Protection (Distance Selling) Regulations 2000 (SI 2000/2334) reg.25 and the Cancellation of Contracts made in a Consumer's Home or Place of Work, etc. Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1816) reg.15. The 2011 Directive makes no explicit anti-avoidance provision as regards choice of applicable law (unlike, e.g. the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Directive 1993 art.6(2), below, para.38-322) with the result that the controls on choice of law are those generally applicable under the Rome I Regulation arts 3(4) and 6: Dicey, Morris and Collins, The Conflict of Laws, 15th edn (2012) Vol.II para.33–179.

428. 2011 Directive art.25, second sentence.

429. Above, para.38-013.

430. cf. the position as regards information actually supplied by the trader which, under the Consumer Rights Act 2015, is treated as included as a term of the contract and which subjects liability for breach to stringent controls by the same Act: 2015 Act ss.11(3), 12, and 31(1)(c) and (d) (goods contracts) below, para.38-492; s.36(3), 37 and 47(1)(c) and (d) (digital content contracts), below, para.38-500; and s.50(3) and 57(2) (services contracts), below, para.38-546.

431. See below, para.38-115.

432. 2013 Regulations reg.9(4) (on-premises contracts); reg.10(6) (off-premises contracts) and 13(7) (distance contracts), below, para.38-100.

433. 2013 Regulations reg.34(2), below, para.38-119.

434. Regulations reg.36(1).

435. 2013 Regulations reg.37(1). Other examples are found in reg.11(2) (consumer expressly agrees for information to be on another durable medium rather on paper in the case of off-premises contracts in connection with repair or maintenance); and reg.34(7) (express agreement of consumer to different means of payment for reimbursement of payments made).

436.  See Vol.II, paras 38-018—38-019.

437.  C-377/14, April 21, 2016 ("Radlinger (C-377/14)").

438.  Radlinger (C-377/14) at para.63, referring to ERSTE Bank Hungary Zrt v Sugár (C-32/14) October 1, 2015 at para.39 (which concerned the 1993 Directive).

439.  Radlinger (C-377/14) at para.64, referring to Constructora Principado SA v Menéndez Álvarez (C-226/12) January 16, 2014 at para.25 (which concerned the 1993 Directive).

440.  Radlinger (C-377/14) at paras 65, 70 and 74 (an obligation and not merely a power).

441.  Radlinger (C-377/14) at para.73.

442.  See Vol.II, paras 38-099 et seq.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts
Section 4. - Information Requirements and Consumers' Rights of Cancellation
(b) - Contracts Covered by the 2013 Regulations

All consumer contracts

38-064

Article 3(1) of the 2011 Directive states that:

“This Directive shall apply, under the conditions and to the extent set out in its provisions, to any contract concluded between a trader and a consumer. It shall also apply to contracts for the supply of water, gas, electricity or district heating, including by public providers, to the extent that these commodities are provided on a contractual basis.”

As a result, and although it is nowhere stated explicitly, the 2013 Regulations also apply in principle to all types of consumer contract, defined by reference to their parties though some provisions have a more restricted ambit. ⁴⁴³ For this purpose, the 2013 Regulations use the standard definition of “trader” and of “consumer” adopted by recent UK consumer law:

““consumer” means an individual acting for purposes that are wholly or mainly outside the individual’s trade, business, craft or profession.” ⁴⁴⁴

““trader” means a person acting for purposes relating to that person’s trade, business, craft or profession, whether acting personally or through another person acting in the trader’s name or on the trader’s behalf.” ⁴⁴⁵

““business” includes the activities of any government department or local or public authority.” ⁴⁴⁶

The background to these definitions and their likely significance have already been discussed. ⁴⁴⁷

“A contractual basis”

38-065

As just noted, art.3(1) of the 2011 Directive specifically includes within its scope:

“contracts for the supply of water, gas, electricity or district heating, including by public providers, to the extent that these commodities are provided on a contractual basis.”

This statement reinforces the definition of “trader”, which includes a “legal person, irrespective of whether privately or publicly owned”, ⁴⁴⁸ but it also makes a further point, that is, that these commodities must be supplied under a contract, as distinct from, in particular, a public law or statutory basis. Given that the Directive does not explain for these purposes what “contractual basis” means, it could be argued that art.3(5)’s allocation of contract law issues raised (but not regulated) by the Directive to national contract law would include the issue whether these commodities are supplied under a “contract”, rather than on the basis of an autonomous view of “contract”. So, for example, in English law where these commodities are supplied under a statutory duty to do so, the courts have held this supply to be non-contractual. ⁴⁴⁹ As a result, these supplies would not be subject to the requirements which the 2011 Directive (and therefore the 2013 Regulations) would otherwise impose. On the other hand, the Court of Justice of the EU could instead hold—despite art.3(5)—that it should take an autonomous view of “contractual basis” for the purposes of the 2011 Directive given that this is fundamentally important to the directive’s scope and, therefore, to the achievement of the directive’s purposes. ⁴⁵⁰

Distinctions according to the circumstances in which the contracts are made

38-066

Within the broad category of consumer contracts, the most prominent distinction in the 2013 Regulations is the three-fold distinction between “off-premises contracts”, “distance contracts” and “on-premises contracts”, which are defined by reference to the circumstances in which they are concluded, as well as by their parties. The detailed definitions of each of these categories will be set out later, but at this stage it is helpful to note that “on-premises contracts” is a residual category, defined simply as “a contract between a trader and a consumer which is neither a distance contract nor an off-premises contract”. ⁴⁵¹

Distinctions according to the subject matter of the contract

38-067

⚠ The 2011 Directive which the 2013 Regulations implement distinguishes four categories of contract according to their subject matter: (i) sales contracts, (ii) services contracts, (iii) contracts for the supply of digital content not in a durable medium, ⁴⁵² ⚠ and (iv) contracts for the supply of water, gas or electricity where they are not put up for sale in a limited volume or set quantity, or district heating. ⁴⁵³ However, this four-fold classification is not followed entirely by the 2013 Regulations, which instead include within “service contracts” the contracts falling within the Directive’s category (iv). ⁴⁵⁴ As a result, the 2013 Regulations distinguish between three distinct categories of consumer contract defined according to their subject matter and, at times, regulate them specially: “sales contracts”, “service contracts” and “contracts for the supply of digital content not in a durable medium”. ⁴⁵⁵ While it is nowhere clearly stated by the Regulations, it would seem clear from the requirements of the 2011 Directive, that the provisions in the Regulations which impose requirements on traders in respect of information apply to all these three types of contract, even though some of the elements of their definitions appear to be restricted to sales and services contracts. ⁴⁵⁶ As will be seen, though, some of the rules governing consumer contracts apply only to sales contracts, service contracts, ⁴⁵⁷ or contracts for the supply of digital content not in a durable medium, ⁴⁵⁸ and this three-fold distinction is particularly clear in the rules governing the commencement of the “normal period” for cancellation in off-premises and distance contracts, ⁴⁵⁹ and in the way in which some particular information requirements are described. ⁴⁶⁰ As will be seen, this three-fold distinction according to the subject matter of consumer contracts is also reflected in the Consumer Rights Act 2015, though it is treated there differently. ⁴⁶¹

“Sales contract” and “service contract”

38-068

The 2013 Regulations define “sales contract” as:

“a contract under which a trader transfers or agrees to transfer the ownership of goods to a consumer and the consumer pays or agrees to pay the price, including any contract that has both goods and services as its object.” 462

“Goods” for these purposes are defined as:

“any tangible moveable items, but that includes water, gas and electricity if and only if they are put up for sale in a limited volume or set quantity”. 463

“Service contract” is defined as:

“a contract, other than a sales contract, under which a trader supplies or agrees to supply a service to a consumer and the consumer pays or agrees to pay the price.” 464

And “service” is stated as including:

- “(a)
the supply of water, gas or electricity if they are not put up for sale in a limited volume or a set quantity, and
- (b)
the supply of district heating.” 465

Contracts for the supply of goods and services

38-069

It will be seen from the definition of “sales contract” set out above, that this category includes “any contract that has both goods and services as its object”. This appears to mean that the rules governing “sales contracts” rather than the rules governing “service contracts” apply to these mixed contracts. 466 At first sight, this does not follow recital 50 of the 2011 Directive, according to which:

“For contracts having as their object both goods and services, the rules provided for in this Directive on the return of goods should apply to the goods aspects and the compensation regime for services should apply to the services aspects.”

However, on turning to the relevant provisions in the 2013 Regulations, it will be seen that while reg.35 governing the return of goods in the event of cancellation is restricted to “sales contracts”, the provisions in reg.36 which set out the “compensation regime for services” supplied are not restricted to “service contracts” but rather to the situation where “a service has been supplied in the cancellation period”. ⁴⁶⁷ This allows the nuanced approach required by the 2011 Directive to be applied under the 2013 Regulations.

Contracts for the supply of digital content

38-070

“Digital content” is defined as “data which are produced and supplied in digital form”. ⁴⁶⁸ As recital 19 to the 2011 Directive explains:

“Digital content means data which are produced and supplied in digital form, such as computer programs, applications, games, music, videos or texts, irrespective of whether they are accessed through downloading or streaming, from a tangible medium or through any other means.” ⁴⁶⁹

However, neither the 2013 Regulations nor the 2011 Directive define contracts for the supply of digital content even though they regulate them specially, ⁴⁷⁰ but recital 19 explains that:

“If digital content is supplied on a tangible medium, such as a CD or a DVD, it should be considered as goods within the meaning of this Directive.”

This fits with the definitions of “sales contracts” in both the Directive and the Regulations as the tangible medium would constitute “goods” (“tangible moveable item”) and the digital content would form an element of those goods. ⁴⁷¹ On the other hand, “contracts for digital content which is not supplied on a tangible medium” would not fall within the definition of sales contracts nor are they specifically included within service contracts, unlike contracts for the supply of water, gas or electricity where they are not put up for sale in a limited volume or set quantity, or district heating. ⁴⁷² In support of this view, the 2013 Regulations make special provision governing this category of contract as regards the consumer's loss of the right to cancel if he or she has consented to the beginning of performance. ⁴⁷³ Moreover, in the view of the European Commission, the distinction drawn by recital 19 of the 2011 Directive between digital content supplied under a sales contract or services contract and digital content supplied in digital form means that contracts for online digital content are subject to the Directive even if they do not involve the payment of a price by the consumer, as there is no requirement as to contracts for the supply of digital content in digital form equivalent to the requirement of payment of a price as regards sales and service contracts. ⁴⁷⁴ As the Commission acknowledges, this view leads not merely to a considerable expansion of the scope of the application of the Directive, but it also leads to the drawing of difficult lines as to the application of the Directive to the free supply of digital content. So, the Commission argues that the Directive should not apply to online digital content provided by means of broadcasting of information on the internet “without the express conclusion of a contract” nor “in itself” to access to a website or a download from a website. Here, it may be that the Court of Justice would consider it necessary to find an autonomous definition of contract for this purpose, but it could hold that the definition of a “contract” should instead fall under art.3(5)'s general allocation of issues not governed by the Directive to “national general contract law” as earlier explained. ⁴⁷⁵

Exclusions from the scope of the 2013 Regulations

38-071

! The 2013 Regulations exclude from their general scope a number of types of contracts and of contracts concluded in certain ways, ⁴⁷⁶ as well as excluding certain types of contracts from their provisions requiring traders to give consumers information, ⁴⁷⁷ and from their provisions governing the consumer's right of cancellation. ⁴⁷⁸ In terms of exclusions from their general scope, reg.6 provides that the 2013 Regulations do not apply to gambling contracts ⁴⁷⁹; contracts for services of a banking, credit, insurance, personal pension, investment or payment nature ⁴⁸⁰; contracts for the creation of immovable property or of rights in immovable property ⁴⁸¹; contracts for rental of accommodation for residential purposes ⁴⁸²; contracts for the construction of new buildings or the construction of substantially new buildings by the conversion of existing buildings ⁴⁸³; contracts for the supply of foodstuffs, beverages or other goods intended for current consumption in the household and which are supplied by a trader on frequent and regular rounds to the consumer's home, residence or workplace ⁴⁸⁴; package holiday and tour contracts within the scope of the Package Travel Directive ⁴⁸⁵

1; and timeshare and related contracts within the scope of the Timeshare Directive. ⁴⁸⁶ Moreover, the 2013 Regulations do not apply to contracts concluded by means of automatic vending machines or automated commercial premises ⁴⁸⁷; contracts concluded with a telecommunications operator through a public telephone for the use of the telephone ⁴⁸⁸; contracts concluded for the use of one single connection, by telephone, internet or fax, established by a consumer ⁴⁸⁹; or to contracts under which goods are sold by way of execution or otherwise by authority of law. ⁴⁹⁰

Contracts not excluded (or not excluded entirely) by the 2013 Regulations though excluded from the 2011 Directive

38-072

Contracts for social services, including social housing, childcare and support for families and persons permanently or temporarily in need, including long-term care are excluded from the 2011 Directive, ⁴⁹¹ but not from the 2013 Regulations. ⁴⁹² The 2011 Directive also excludes generally contracts for healthcare, ⁴⁹³ but the 2013 Regulations exclude only contracts for the supply of a medicinal product by administration by a prescriber, or under a prescription or directions given by a prescriber or for the supply of a product by a health care professional in certain circumstances from the effect of its provisions governing information requirements and the consumer's right of cancellation. ⁴⁹⁴

Contracts for passenger transport services

38-073

While not excluded from the scope of the 2013 Regulations as a whole, ⁴⁹⁵ "contracts to the extent that they are for passenger transport services" are excluded from the provisions governing the consumer's rights of cancellation ⁴⁹⁶ and are excluded from their provisions governing information requirements, with the exception of requirements applicable to distance contracts concluded by electronic means. ⁴⁹⁷ For this purpose, "contracts for the provision of transport services" in the predecessor to this exclusion in the Distance Contracts Directive ⁴⁹⁸ was interpreted very broadly by the European Court of Justice as referring to all contracts governing services in the field of transport and not merely to contracts of carriage, and as a result included a contract for hire of a car. ⁴⁹⁹ However, recital 27 to the 2011 Directive explains that while passenger transport is generally excluded from the scope of the Directive, ⁵⁰⁰ "in relation to transport of goods and car rental which are services, consumers should benefit" from the Directive's protection, with the important exception of the right of cancellation. ⁵⁰¹

Consumer-to-business contracts?

38-074

As noted above, the Consumer Rights Directive 2011 (which the 2013 Regulations implement) states that it "shall apply, under the conditions and to the extent set out in its provisions, to any contract concluded between a trader and a consumer", ⁵⁰² thereby expressing itself in a way which is neutral as to whether it is the trader or the consumer who supplies goods or services under a contract. ⁵⁰³ The definitions of "trader" and "consumer" used by the 2011 Directive (and also the 2013 Regulations) are equally neutral on this point.⁵⁰⁴ However, as has been seen, the definitions of “sales contract” and “service contract” are cast in terms under which the trader supplies the goods or services to the consumer and on this ground the European Commission tentatively argues that the 2011 Directive does not apply to contracts under which the consumer transfers goods to a trader.⁵⁰⁵ On the other hand, the definitions of “off-premises contract”, “distance contract”, and “on-premises contract” differ as to whether they are expressed in a way which suggests that contracts under which a consumer supplies goods or services to a trader are included or excluded from their scope. The issue will therefore be addressed in the context of each category of contract in turn.⁵⁰⁶

The temporal application of the 2013 Regulations

38-075

The 2013 Regulations apply in relation to contracts entered into on or after June 13, 2014.⁵⁰⁷ Given what has earlier been said in relation to the Consumer Rights Directive’s acknowledgement of the role of national contract law for contract law issues not regulated by the Directive,⁵⁰⁸ it is submitted that the question when a contract was “entered into” for the purposes of this regulation must be determined by reference to the general English law of contract, rather than on the basis of an autonomous European rule or rules.⁵⁰⁹ As noted above, earlier UK regulations may apply to off-premises contracts and distance contracts (but not to on-premises contracts which were not included in earlier EU or UK legislative schemes) made on or before June 12, 2014, though the scope of the contracts to which these regulations apply and the content of their requirements differ.⁵¹⁰

^{443.} cf. below para.38-074 on the question whether the 2011 Directive (and therefore the 2013 Regulations) apply (at least sometimes) to contracts consumer-to-business as well as business-to-consumer.

^{444.} 2013 Regulations reg.4 “consumer”.

^{445.} 2013 Regulations reg.4 “trader”.

^{446.} 2013 Regulations reg.5 “business”.

^{447.} Above, paras 38-028—38-046, 38-047—38-054 respectively.

^{448.} 2011 Directive art.2(2), reflected in substance by the definition of “trader” and “business” in the 2013 Regulations regs 4 and 5 respectively.

^{449.} Read v Croydon Corp [1938] 4 All E.R. 631; Norweb Plc v Dixon [1995] 1 W.L.R. 637 and see Vol.I, para.1-032.

^{450.} cf. the discussion of the possible construction of an autonomous view of “contract” for the purposes of Directive 93/13/EEC on unfair terms in consumer contracts, below, paras 38-210—38-211.

^{451.} 2013 Regulations reg.5 “on-premises contracts”.

^{452.}  Defined by 2011 Directive art.2(10); 2013 Regulations reg.5. cf. Software Incubator Ltd v Computer Associates UK Ltd [2016] EWHC 1587 (QB) at [35]–[69] (contract for the supply of software may constitute a “sale of goods” for the purposes of the Commercial Agents (Council Directive) Regulations 1993 (SI 1993/3053), the court distinguishing the position in the law of sale of goods).

^{453.} This is made clear by recital 19, which states that the latter two types of contract “should be classified, for the purpose of this Directive, neither as sales contracts nor as service contracts”. This is then followed through by its definitions of “goods”, “sales contract” and “service contract” in art.2(3), (5) and (6) respectively.

- 454. 2013 Regulations reg.5 “service”. This treatment in the 2013 Regulations is compatible with the 2011 Directive’s requirements as it applies the same rules to supplies of water, gas or electricity where they are not put up for sale in a limited volume, etc. as to services: arts 5(2), 7(3), 8(8), 9(2)(a) and (c), 14(4)(a) and 17(2).
- 455. The distinction between the three categories of contract is particularly marked in reg.30. “Durable medium” is defined by reg.5 as: “paper or email, or any other medium that— (a) allows information to be addressed personally to the recipient, (b) enables the recipient to store the information in a way accessible for future reference for a period that is long enough for the purposes of the information, and (c) allows the unchanged reproduction of the information stored”. On “durable medium” see Content Services Ltd v Bundesarbeitskammer (C-49/11) July 5, 2012 paras 39–50 in the context of the Distance Contracts Directive 1997: “a durable medium must ensure that the consumer, in a similar way to paper form, is in possession of the [relevant] information ... to enable him to exercise his rights where necessary”: (C-49/11) at para.42.
- 456. See notably, element (d) of the definition of “off-premises contract” in reg.5 which refers to the trader’s intended “selling goods or services to the consumer”; and the requirement in the definition of “distance contract” also in reg.5 that the contract should be concluded under “an organised distance sales or service-provision scheme”: for these, see below, paras 38-076—38-080, 38-081—38-084.
- 457. For “sales contract” see reg.12(4)(a); reg.28(3) (below, para.38-107); reg.30(3)–(6) (below, para.38-112); reg.34(5) and (9) (below, para.38-109) and reg.35(1) (below, para.38-123); for “service contract” see reg.30(2)(a) (below, para.38-068) and reg.36(2) (below, para.38-069).
- 458. 2013 Regulations reg.12(5), 16(3), 30(2)(b) and 37.
- 459. 2013 Regulations reg.30 (below, para.38-112).
- 460. 2013 Regulations Sch.1 paras (a), (c), (e); Sch.2 paras (a), (f), (j), the references to “digital content” being added by SI 2014/870 reg.9(3) and (4).
- 461. Consumer Rights Act 2015 Pt 1 Ch.2 (goods contracts); Ch.3 (digital content contracts, though the exclusion from this category of digital content contracts supplied on a durable medium is inherent in the definition of “goods contracts”) and Ch.4 (“services contracts”). In particular, the 2015 Act does not distinguish sharply as regards the different types of contract under which digital content is supplied, but rather allows its categories of contract (and therefore their regulation) to overlap where the type of contract (either with “goods contracts” or “services contracts”) as its subject matter requires. See below, paras 38-450, 38-469 and 38-503.
- 462. 2013 Regulations reg.5 “sales contract” reflecting closely 2011 Directive art.2(5). cf. Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.5, below, para.38-452—38-454.
- 463. 2013 Regulations reg.5 “goods”; 2011 Directive art.2(3).
- 464. 2013 Regulations reg.5 “service contract”; 2011 Directive art.2(6). cf. Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.48, below, para.38-528.
- 465. 2013 Regulations reg.5 “service”, picking up the explanation in 2011 Directive recital 25 of its own use of “service” in the definition of “service contract” in art.2(6). Recital 25 continues by noting that “district heating refers to the supply of heat, inter alia, in the form of steam or hot water, from a central source of production through a transmission and distribution system to multiple buildings, for the purpose of heating”. From the point of view of legislative drafting, the inclusion of these types of contract within “service contract” allows the Regulations to state the relevant cancellation period in a single provision (2013 Regulations reg.30(2)(a), on which see below, para.38-112) whereas the 2011 Directive makes specific provision for them which is identical to service contracts as more generally understood: Directive 2011/83/EU arts 9(2)(a) and (c). cf. the different treatment of “services contracts” under the Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.48, below, para.38-528.

- 466. See above, para.38-068. cf. DG Justice Guidance Document on 2011 Directive, para.2.2 which argues that contracts which contain elements of both goods and services should be classified either as “sales contracts” or “services contracts” depending on which element reflects their main purpose, relying in particular on case-law of the CJEU governing the Treaty provisions on free movement of goods and the freedom to provide services: Burmanjer (C-20/03) [2005] E.C.R. I-4133 at paras 34–35.
- 467. 2013 Regulations reg.36(3)-(6) (on which see below, para.38-123). cf. reg.36(2) which concerns the loss of the consumer’s right to cancel a “service contract”.
- 468. 2013 Regulations reg.5 “digital content”; 2011 Directive art.2(11). This definition is adopted by the Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.2(9), below, para.38-501.
- 469. 2011 Directive recital 19, first sentence.
- 470. 2013 Regulations reg.12(5) (below, para.38-096); reg.16(3) (below, para.38-096); reg.30(2) and 30(6) (below, para.38-112); reg.37 (below, para.38-123). cf. Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.33 which defines “contract to supply digital content” for the purpose of Ch.3 of the Act specially for its purposes: below, para.38-502.
- 471. On which see above, para.38-068.
- 472. See above, para.38-068.
- 473. 2013 Regulations reg.37; 2011 Directive art.14(4)(b).
- 474. DG Justice Guidance Document on 2011 Directive, para.12.1.
- 475. Above, paras 38-059—38-016 and 38-065.
- 476. 2013 Regulations reg.6.
- 477. 2013 Regulations reg.7(2)-(4), below, para.38-072. The information requirements for offpremises contracts are also excluded as regards repair or maintenance contracts” as defined: 2013 Regulations reg.11.
- 478. 2013 Regulations regs 27(2)-(3), 28 on which see below, paras 38-107.
- 479. 2013 Regulations reg.6(1)(a) which explains this category.
- 480. 2013 Regulations reg.6(1)(b); 2011 Directive arts 2(12) and 3(3)(d). There are two exceptions for the case of the effect of cancellation or withdrawal on “ancillary contracts” (reg.38(4)) and “additional payments” (reg.40(3), discussed below, para.38-397): 2013 Regulations reg.6(3). In the case of off-premises contracts, this exclusion marks a significant difference from the 2008 Regulations (SI 2008/1816) which applied to contracts of consumer credit with certain exclusions: regs 5 and 6. In the case of “distance contracts” (but not off-premises contracts), duties of information and rights of cancellation are provided by the Financial Services (Distance Marketing) Regulations 2004 (SI 2004/2095) reg.2(1) of which defines “financial service” identically to the excluded contracts in reg.6(1)(b) of the 2013 Regulations: SI 2004/2095 implementing Directive 2002/65/EC concerning the distance marketing of consumer financial services, on which see below, para.38-131.
- 481. 2013 Regulations reg.6(1)(c), implementing 2011 Directive art.3(3)(e). In Travel Vac SL v Antelm Sanchis (C-423/97) [1999] E.C.R. I-2195 at para.25 the ECJ held that the Doorstep Selling Directive 1985 could apply to a contract of timeshare despite an exclusion of contracts relating to immovable property (art.3(2)(a)) identical to the one provided by the 2011 Directive art.3(3)(e) as long as the contract “concerns the provision of separate services of a value higher than that of the right to use the property". However, in Schulte v Deutsche Bausparkasse Badenia AG (C-350/03) [2005] E.C.R. I-9215 paras 77-80 the ECJ held that this did not mean that the 1985 Directive could apply to a separate contract of sale of immovable property even though it formed part of a single economic unit in which service elements predominated. This point is now resolved in its specific context by 2011 Directive art.3(3)(h) (implemented in UK law by 2013 Regulations reg.6(1)(h)) which excludes from its scope contracts falling under the Timeshare Directive 2008/122/EC. Similarly, in Friz GmbH v von der Heyden (C-215/08) [2010] E.C.R. I-02947 the ECJ held that Directive 85/577 could apply to a contract under which the consumer entered a "real property fund by means of the acquisition of holdings in a partnership in exchange for a capital investment" despite its exclusion of contracts concerning rights to immovable property, but such a contract is likely to fall within the exclusion of "contracts for services of a banking, credit, insurance, personal pension, investment or payment nature" in the 2011 Directive art.3(3)(d) as explained by art.2(12) (implemented by the 2013 Regulations reg.6(1)(b)).

482. 2013 Regulations reg.6(1)(d).

483. 2013 Regulations reg.6(1)(e).

484. 2013 Regulations reg.6(1)(f).

485.  Directive 90/314/EEC on package travel, package holidays and package tours; 2013 Regulations reg.6(1)(g) (as amended by the Consumer Contracts (Amendment) Regulations 2015 (SI 2015/1629) art.3), below, paras 38-132—38-135. The scope of this exclusion will change on implementation of Directive (EU) 2015/2302 on package travel and linked travel arrangements [2015] O.J. L326/1, which repeals and replaces the 1990 Directive (see below, para.38-132) and which excludes only the provisions in the 2015 Directive governing "packages" (and not therefore "linked travel arrangements") from the scope of the 2011 Directive: 2015 Directive art.3(2), (3) and (5) and art.27(2) (amending the 2011 Directive art.3(3)).

486. Directive 2008/122/EC on the protection of consumers in respect of certain aspects of timeshare, long-term holiday product, resale and exchange contracts ("Timeshare Directive 2009"); 2013 Regulations reg.6(1)(h): on the Timeshare Directive 2009 see below, paras 38-136—38-142.

487. 2013 Regulations reg.6(2)(a).

488. 2013 Regulations reg.6(2)(b).

489. 2013 Regulations reg.6(2)(c).

490. 2013 Regulations reg.6(2)(d).

491. 2011 Directive art.3(3)(a).

492. On the lawfulness of this extension as a matter of EU law, see above, para.38-023.

493. 2011 Directive art.3(3)(b) "healthcare" being defined by reference to Directive 2011/24/EU on the application of patients' rights in cross-border healthcare [2011] O.J. L88/45 art.3(a), which provides that: "'healthcare' means health services provided by health professionals to patients to assess, maintain or restore their state of health, including the prescription, dispensation and provision of medicinal products and medical devices".

494. 2013 Regulations reg.7(2) and reg.27(2) and (4) (with definitions provided by reg.7(5)).

495. The 2011 Directive art.3(3)(k) excludes generally contracts for passenger transport services from its scope with the exceptions of art.8(2) (information requirements for distance contracts concluded by electronic means), art.19 (fees for the use of means of payment) and art.22 (additional payments). As a result, the provisions in the 2013 Regulations governing information requirements for distance contracts concluded by electronic means (reg.14(1)-(5)), additional payments (reg.40) and help-line charges over basic rate (reg.41) apply to contracts for passenger transport services. The 2011 Directive art.19's provisions (fees for the use of means of payment) are implemented by the Consumer Rights (Payment Charges) Regulations 2012 (SI 2012/3110 reg.5 of which does not exclude contracts for the passenger transport services: on which see below, para.38-396.

- 496. 2013 Regulations reg.27(2)(c).
- 497. 2013 Regulations reg.7(3); reg.14(1)-14(5) (both as set out by 2011 Directive arts 3(3)(k) and 8(2)). The 2011 Directive recital 27 justifies this exclusion on the basis that these contracts are already subject to EU legislation or to regulation at a national level.
- 498. Directive 97/7/EC art.3(2).
- 499. easyCar (UK) Ltd v Office of Fair Trading (C-336/03) [2005] E.C.R. I-01947 especially at paras 22-27.
- 500. The exceptions are noted in n.459.
- 501. (emphasis added). This particular exclusion is effected by art.16(l) referring explicitly to "car rental services", implemented in UK law by 2013 Regulations reg.28(1)(h): see below, para.38-107.
- 502. 2011 Directive art.3(1), first sentence, on which see above, para.38-064.
- 503. The English version of recital 7 to the 2011 Directive refers to its regulating "certain aspects of business-to-consumer contracts across the Union" which suggests that it applies only to contracts under which the trader supplies goods or services to the consumer, but this terminology is not reflected in all the language versions. For example, the French version of recital 7 refers merely to its governing "certains aspects des contrats entre les entreprises et les consommateurs au sein de l'Union", the Italian version to "taluni aspetti dei contratti tra imprese e consumatori nell'Unione" and the German version to "bestimmte Aspekte von Verträgen zwischen Unternehmen und Verbrauchern unionsweit" (all of which can be translated as "certain aspects of contracts between businesses and consumers across the Union"). It is submitted, therefore, that no significance should be attached to the use of the convenient English jargon expression "business-to-consumer" in this recital or in recitals 5 and 9.
- 504. Above, para.38-064.
- 505. Above, para.38-068; 2011 Directive art.2(4) and (6) (2013 Regulations reg.5); DG Justice Guidance Document on 2011 Directive, para.2.1.
- 506. Below, paras 38-078 and 38-083.
- 507. 2013 Regulations reg.1(2).
- 508. 2011 Directive art.3(5), above, paras 38-059—38-061.
- 509. For which see, in particular, Vol.I, Ch.2 of the present work.
- 510. Cancellation of Contracts made in a Consumer's Home or Place of Work, etc. Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1816) replacing Consumer Protection (Cancellation of Contracts Concluded Away from Business Premises) Regulations 1987 (SI 1987/2117); Consumer Protection (Distance Selling) Regulations 2000 (SI 2000/2334).

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts
Section 4. - Information Requirements and Consumers' Rights of Cancellation
(b) - Contracts Covered by the 2013 Regulations
(i) - "Off-Premises Contracts"

"Off-premises contracts"

38-076

The 2013 Regulations reg.5 provides that:

"off-premises contract" means a contract between a trader and a consumer which is any of these—

- (a)
a contract concluded in the simultaneous physical presence of the trader and the consumer, in a place which is not the business premises of the trader;
- (b)
a contract for which an offer was made by the consumer in the simultaneous physical presence of the trader and the consumer, in a place which is not the business premises of the trader;
- (c)
a contract concluded on the business premises of the trader or through any means of distance communication immediately after the consumer was personally and individually addressed in a place which is not the business premises of the trader in the simultaneous physical presence of the trader and the consumer;
- (d)
a contract concluded during an excursion organised by the trader with the aim or effect of promoting and selling goods or services to the consumer."

Regulation 5 further explains that:

“business premises” ⁵¹¹ in relation to a trader means—

- (a) any immovable retail premises where the activity of the trader is carried out on a permanent basis, or
- (b) any movable retail premises where the activity of the trader is carried out on a usual basis.”

These definitions reflect very closely the Consumer Rights Directive 2011, which the 2013 Regulations implement. ⁵¹² Taken together, they mean that “off-premises contract” is a wider category than the contracts covered by the earlier UK Cancellation of Contracts made in a Consumer’s Home or Place of Work, etc. Regulations 2008, and these Regulations were themselves of broader application than the Doorstep Selling Directive 1985 which the Consumer Rights Directive 2011 replaced. ⁵¹³ In this respect, the 2013 Regulations define the contracts negatively, so as to cover all contracts which are not concluded on the trader’s premises, rather than seeking to set out (as did the 2008 Regulations) the situations in which contracts are not so made (notably, those made “during a visit by the trader to the consumer’s home or place of work, or to the home of another individual” ⁵¹⁴). The exception to this approach is that the 2013 Regulations specifically include contracts concluded “during an excursion organised by the trader with the aim or effect of promoting and selling goods or services to the consumer” (as, for example, where a trader organises an apparently recreational coach or boat trip and then seeks to sell goods or services on the coach or boat). ⁵¹⁵ Clearly, though, the main example of the application of this definition is the case where the trader visits the consumer at the latter’s home or place of work. ⁵¹⁶ While aspect (d) of the definition of “off-premises contracts” looks as though it is restricted to sales contracts or service contracts, it is submitted that it also includes contracts for the supply of digital content not on a tangible medium ⁵¹⁷ as these attract special regulation regarding their confirmation. ⁵¹⁸

38-077

However, the definition of “off-premises contracts” in the 2013 Regulations specifically seeks to prevent the trader being able to make technical points as to where (according to national contract law ⁵¹⁹) a contract was concluded, by including contracts “for which an offer was made by the consumer in the simultaneous physical presence of the trader and the consumer, in a place which is not the business premises of the trader” ⁵²⁰ and contracts concluded “immediately after the consumer was personally and individually addressed in a place which is not the business premises of the trader in the simultaneous physical presence of the trader and the consumer” even though the contract was itself “concluded on the business premises of the trader or through any means of distance communication”. ⁵²¹ For these purposes, it makes no difference that the trader was or was not invited to the home or workplace of the consumer (the nonbusiness premises). ⁵²² As recital 21 explains:

“In an off-premises context, the consumer may be under potential psychological pressure or may be confronted with an element of surprise, irrespective of whether or not the consumer has solicited the visit.” ⁵²³

It is submitted that, for these purposes, the Supreme Court’s view in Robertson v Swift that earlier UK regulations implementing the Doorstep Selling Directive 1985 were not restricted to contracts which were negotiated and concluded during a single visit to the consumer’s home ⁵²⁴ remains valid, as there is no requirement either in the 2011 Directive or in the 2013 Regulations that an offpremises contract is concluded during a single visit on non-business premises. ⁵²⁵ On the other hand, recital 22 of the 2011 Directive also explains that:

“The definition of an off-premises contract should not cover situations in which the trader first comes to the consumer’s home strictly with a view to taking measurements or giving an estimate without any commitment of the consumer and where the contract is then concluded only at a later point in time on the business premises of the trader or via means of distance communication on the basis of the trader’s estimate. In those cases, the contract is not to be considered as having been concluded immediately after the trader has addressed the consumer if the consumer has had time to reflect upon the estimate of the trader before concluding the contract.” ⁵²⁶

Consumer-to-business contracts?

38-078

The definition of “off-premises” contract is ambivalent as to whether contracts under which a consumer supplies goods or services to a trader are included. For while the first three of the situations falling within an “off-premises contract” are neutral on this point, the fourth is expressly concerned with contracts:

“concluded during an excursion organised by the trader with the aim or effect of promoting and selling goods or services to the consumer.” ⁵²⁷

This means, therefore, that this example of an “off-premises contract” appears to be restricted to contracts business-to-consumer, but, at a purely textual level, this example could either support an argument that this reflects the general position for off-premises contracts or that the other examples provided by the definition are not so restricted. In any event, much of the information required of traders and the consequences of the exercise of the consumer’s right to cancel is appropriate only to the provision of goods or services by traders to consumers. ⁵²⁸

Dietzinger

38-079

For this purpose the European Court of Justice’s decision in Dietzinger may be significant, as there it held that the earlier Doorstep Selling Directive 1985 (which the 2011 Directive’s provisions on off-premises contracts replaced) applied to a contract of guarantee concluded by a person other than in the course of his trade or profession which guaranteed a contract supplying goods or services by a person in the course of his trade, etc. to a person who was not acting in the course of his trade, etc., despite the fact that the 1985 Directive was expressed as applying to “contracts under which a trader supplies goods or services to a consumer”, ⁵²⁹ the Court observing that “nothing in the wording of the directive requires that the person concluding the contract under which goods or services are to be supplied be the person to whom they are supplied”, ⁵³⁰ as long as the “consumer assumes obligations towards the trader with a view to obtaining goods or services from him”. ⁵³¹ The reason for this inclusive approach by the Court of Justice was the purpose of the 1985 Directive, which was “to protect consumers by enabling them to withdraw from a contract concluded on the initiative of the trader rather than of the customer, where the customer may be unable to see all on the implications of his act.” ⁵³² Given that the 2011 Directive’s provisions governing off-premises contracts share this purpose with the 1985 Directive, it could be argued that these provisions (and therefore the 2013 Regulations) should also apply to off-premises contracts under which a consumer agrees to provide goods or services to a trader, as well to contracts under which a trader agrees to provide goods or services to a consumer. Moreover, given the changed and generally more neutral wording used to describe the contracts to which the 2011 Directive generally applies, it is submitted that this may be the case even if the consumer does not also conclude a contract for the provision of goods or services from the trader required by the Court in Dietzinger.

Examples

38-080

If the 2011 Directive applies in principle to contracts under which a consumer supplies goods or services to a trader as well as to one under which a consumer receives goods or services from a trader, then the information and cancellation provisions in the 2013 Regulations would apply, for example, to a contract under which a consumer sells goods to an antique dealer who has visited him at home. However, the position of contracts of guarantee made by a consumer to a trader who provides credit either to himself or to a third party (whether or not that third party was also a consumer) is less certain. For even if in principle such a contract qualifies as a “consumer contract” for the purposes of the 2011 Directive and the 2013 Regulations, it may fall within the exclusion from their scope of “contracts for financial services”, that is, “contracts for services of a banking, credit, insurance, personal pension, investment or payment nature”.⁵³³ On the other hand, it could be argued that a contract of guarantee undertaken by a “consumer” does not count as a “contract for services of a banking ... nature” and therefore falls outside this exclusion, particularly given that exclusions to schemes of consumer protection in EU legislation are to be interpreted strictly.⁵³⁴

-
- ^{511.} Consumer Rights Directive 2011 recital 22 explains that “[b]usiness premises should include premises in whatever form (such as shops, stalls or lorries) which service as a permanent or usual place of business for the trader”. It then provides a series of illustrations of this broad approach.
 - ^{512.} Consumer Rights Directive 2011 art.2(8) and (9) respectively.
 - ^{513.} Cancellation of Contracts made in a Consumer’s Home or Place of Work, etc. Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1816) reg.5 (defining the scope of the contracts to which the Regulations apply); Doorstep Selling Directive 1985 art.1(1).
 - ^{514.} SI 2008/1816 reg.5(a).
 - ^{515.} 2013 Regulations reg.5 “off-premises contract” (d); cf. SI 2008/1816 reg.5(b). In Travel Vac SL v Antelm Sanchis (C-423/97) [1999] E.C.R. I-2195 at para.38 the ECJ held (in relation to the equivalent provision in Directive 85/577/EEC (art.1(1)) that a contract “concluded in a situation in which a trader has invited a consumer to go in person to a specified place at a certain distance from the place where the consumer lives, and which is different from the premises where the trader usually carries on his business and is not clearly identified as premises for sales to the public, in order to present to him the products and services he is offering, must be considered to have been concluded during an excursion organised by the trader away from his business premises within the meaning of Directive 85/577”.
 - ^{516.} Consumer Rights Directive 2011 recital 21.
 - ^{517.} Above, para.38-070.
 - ^{518.} 2013 Regulations reg.12(5).
 - ^{519.} See above, paras 38-059—38-061 on the role of national contract law here.
 - ^{520.} 2013 Regulations reg.5 “off-premises contract” (b) (emphasis added); cf. SI 2008/1816 reg.5(c).
 - ^{521.} 2013 Regulations reg.5 “off-premises contract” (c) (emphasis added), e.g. where a trader’s representative approaches a particular consumer in the street with an offer for a subscription magazine and the contract is immediately signed on the trader’s nearby business premises: DG

Justice Guidance Document on 2011 Directive, para.3.3.

- 522. Consumer Rights Directive 2011 recital 21. The earlier UK Regulations (SI 2008/1816) implemented Directive 85/577/EEC (art.1(1) of which provided that it did not apply to contracts concluded during a visit made at the consumer's express request) "so as to embrace visits a trader made to the consumer's home at the request of the consumer" and this extension was held lawful both as a matter of EU law (as the 1985 Directive art.8 allowed such a "more favourable provision" to protect consumers) and under s.2(2) of the European Communities Act 1972: Swift v Robertson [2013] EWCA Civ 1794, [2013] Bus. L.R. 479 at [48]-[54] approved (though no longer in issue) by the SC sub. nom. Robertson v Swift [2014] UKSC 50, [2014] 1 W.L.R. 3438 at [18].
- 523. 2011 Directive recital 21, second sentence.
- 524. Robinson v Swift [2014] UKSC 50, [2014] 1 W.L.R. 3438 at [17], describing as "plainly right" the decision of the Court of Appeal below sub. nom. Swift v Robinson [2013] EWCA Civ 1794, [2013] Bus. L.R. 479 at [40]-[43], [67] and [68], though the point was no longer in issue before the SC.
- 525. 2013 Regulations reg.5 "off-premises contract".
- 526. 2011 Directive recital 22, fourth and fifth sentences.
- 527. 2011 Directive art.2(8)(d); 2013 Regulations reg.5 "off-premises contract" (d). Above, para. 38-076 and see generally above, para.38-074.
- 528. Below, paras 38-086 et seq.
- 529. Directive 85/577 art.1(1); Bayerische Hypotheken- und Wechselbank AG v Dietzinger (C-45/96) [1998] E.C.R. I-1199.
- 530. (C-45/96) [1998] E.C.R. I-1199 at para.19.
- 531. (C-45/96) [1998] E.C.R. I-1199 at para.22.
- 532. (C-45/96) [1998] E.C.R. I-1199 at para.19.
- 533. 2013 Regulations reg.6(1)(b); 2011 Directive art.3(3)(d), "financial service" being defined by art.2(12).
- 534. Veedfald v Århus Amtskommune (C-203/99) [2001] E.C.R. I-3569 at para.15; easyCar (UK) Ltd v Office of Fair Trading (C-336/03) [2005] E.C.R. I-01947 at para.21; Kásler v OTP Jelzálogbank Zrt (C-26/13) of April 30, 2014 at para.42; Kusionová v SMART Capital a.s. (C-34/13) of September 10, 2014 at para.77.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 4. - Information Requirements and Consumers' Rights of Cancellation

(b) - Contracts Covered by the 2013 Regulations

(ii) - Distance Contracts

Definition

38-081

The 2013 Regulations provide that:

“distance contract” means a contract concluded between a trader and a consumer under an organised distance sales or service-provision scheme without the simultaneous physical presence of the trader and the consumer, with the exclusive use of one or more means of distance communication up to and including the time at which the contract is concluded.” ⁵³⁵

This definition reflects word-for-word the definition found in the 2011 Directive. ⁵³⁶ It contains a number of elements.

“A contract concluded ... under an organised distance sales or service-provision scheme”

38-082

! Neither the 2013 Regulations nor the text of the 2011 Directive defines these notions, but recital 20 of the Directive explains that:

“The notion of an organised distance sales or service-provision scheme should include those schemes offered by a third party other than the trader but used by the trader, such as an online platform. It should not, however, cover cases where websites merely offer information on the trader, his goods and/or services and his contact details.”

While this aspect of the definition of “distance contract” suggests that they are restricted to sales contracts and services contracts, it is submitted that the definition extends to schemes under which contracts for the supply of digital content not in a tangible medium (which are neither sales contracts nor services contracts ⁵³⁷) are provided, since they attract a special rule governing confirmation. ⁵³⁸ On the other hand, recital 20 to the Directive explains that “distance contract” does not include contracts negotiated at the business premises of the trader and finally concluded by distance communication, contracts initiated by means of a distance communication but finally concluded at the business premises of the trader, and contracts where a consumer makes a reservation by means of a distance communication to request the provision of a service, giving as an example a consumer telephoning to request an appointment with a hair-dresser. And it has been held that a scheme whereby, for a fee, the Royal Institute of Chartered Surveyors nominates adjudicators as part of its statutory function as an adjudicator nomination body is not an “organised distance sales scheme” so that a contract concluded with the adjudicator does not count as a “distance contract” for the purposes of the 2013 Regulations.⁵³⁹  These cases would, therefore, fall outside both “distance contracts” and “offpremises contracts” and therefore, under the 2013 Regulations, into the residual category of “on-premises contracts”.⁵⁴⁰

Contracts consumer-to-business?

38-083

While the definition of distance contract make clear the breadth of the contracts covered by the provisions in the 2013 Regulations on distance contracts, it is expressed in a way which indicates clearly that the contracts involved the provision of goods or services by a trader to a consumer.⁵⁴¹ As a purely textual level, therefore, this suggests these provisions do not apply to contracts under which a consumer supplies goods or services to a trader.

“Means of distance communication”

38-084

Unlike the earlier legislation on distance contracts,⁵⁴² the 2013 Regulations (following the text of the 2011 Directive) do not define or illustrate what is meant by “means of distance communication”, but recital 20 of the Directive explains that:

“The definition of distance contract should cover all cases where a contract is concluded between the trader and the consumer under an organised distance sales or service-provision scheme, with the exclusive use of one or more means of distance communication (such as mail order, Internet, telephone or fax) up to and including the time at which the contract is concluded.”

^{535.} 2013 Regulations reg.5 “distance contract”.

^{536.} 2011 Directive art.2(7).

^{537.} Above, para.38-070.

^{538.} 2013 Regulations reg.16(3).

^{539.}  Christopher Linnett Ltd v Harding (t/a MJ Harding Contractors) [2017] EWHC 1781 (TCC) at [86].

^{540.} Above, paras 38-066 and below, para.38-085.

^{541.} cf. above, para.38-074.

^{542.} Directive 97/7/EC art.2 (4) “means of distance communication” referring to an “indicative list” in Annex I, implemented by SI 2000/2334 reg.3(1) “means of distance communication”; Sch.1.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts
Section 4. - Information Requirements and Consumers' Rights of Cancellation
(b) - Contracts Covered by the 2013 Regulations
(iii) - "On-Premises Contract"

A residual category

38-085

The 2013 Regulations provide that:

"on-premises contract" means a contract between a trader and a consumer which is neither a distance contract nor an off-premises contract." ⁵⁴³

The 2011 Directive does not refer to "on-premises contracts", but instead imposes information requirements on traders in respect of contracts other than distance or off-premises contracts. ⁵⁴⁴ The use by the 2013 Regulations of the notion of "on-premises contracts" as they define it achieves the same result, but given the breadth and relative complexity of the definitions of "off-premises contract" and "distance contract", the term "on-premises contract" risks causing confusion. For example, as has been seen, the 2013 Regulations include within an "off-premises contract":

"a contract concluded on the business premises of the trader ... immediately after the consumer was personally and individually addressed in a place which is not the business premises of the trader in the simultaneous physical presence of the trader and the consumer." ⁵⁴⁵

Therefore, some contracts concluded on the business premises of the trader will not count as "on-premises contracts" for the purposes of the 2013 Regulations. Moreover, some contracts concluded entirely by means of distance communication ⁵⁴⁶ (such as email or telephone) will not constitute a "distance contract" as they are not made "under an organised distance sales or service-provision scheme". ⁵⁴⁷ Confusingly, such a contract would count as an "on-premises contract" within the meaning of the 2013 Regulations.

^{543.} 2013 Regulations reg.5 "on-premises contract".

^{544.} 2011 Directive art.5.

^{545.} 2013 Regulations reg.5 "off-premises contract" (c) (emphasis added), above, para.38-076.

^{546.} On which see above, para.38-084.

547. 2013 Regulations reg.5, above, para.38-082.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 4. - Information Requirements and Consumers' Rights of Cancellation

(c) - Information Requirements

(i) - General

“Giving information”, “providing it” and “making it available”

38-086

The 2011 Directive requires some information to be given, some provided and some made available by the trader to the consumer. ⁵⁴⁸ The differences between the provision and giving of information and merely making it available was considered by the Court of Justice of the EU in Content Services Ltd ⁵⁴⁹ in the context of the earlier Distance Contracts Directive, which required the trader to give the consumer written confirmation of information which he should receive. ⁵⁵⁰ The Court held that for this purpose the words “given” and “receive” should be given their usual meaning in everyday language, taking into account their context and, as a result, “refer to a process of transmission”. ⁵⁵¹ As a result, and taking into account the directive’s purpose of consumer protection, a trader who merely provides a hyperlink on a website or within an email which allows the consumer to access the relevant information does not give that information, nor does the consumer receive it, as the consumer: “must act in order to acquaint himself with the information in question and he must, in any event, click on that link.” ⁵⁵² In so holding, the Court contrasted the Directive’s requirements as to pre-contractual information, with which the consumer was to be “provided” by the trader, considering that this was a “more neutral formulation” in the vast majority of its linguistic versions. ⁵⁵³

The terminology in the Consumer Rights Directive

38-087

In turning to the Consumer Rights Directive 2011, the terminology has changed. As regards all three types of contract (off-premises contracts, distance contracts and other contracts) the trader is generally required to provide the consumer with the listed information before the consumer is bound ⁵⁵⁴; but for off-premises contracts the Directive then requires the information to be given, though their confirmation is to be provided. ⁵⁵⁵ By contrast, in the case of distance contracts, the trader must give the necessary information before the consumer is bound “or make that information available to the consumer in a way appropriate to the means of distance communication”, ⁵⁵⁶ although there is no similar alternative as regards the confirmation which the trader must provide after the distance contract is concluded. ⁵⁵⁷ As recital 36 explains:

“In the case of distance contracts, the information requirements should be adapted to take into account the technical constraints of certain media, such as the restrictions on the number of characters on certain mobile telephone screens or the time constraint on television sales spots. In such cases the trader should comply with a minimum set of information requirements and refer the consumer to another source of information, for instance by providing a toll free telephone number or a hypertext link to a webpage of the trader where the relevant information is directly available and easily accessible.” ⁵⁵⁸

The terminology in the 2013 Regulations

38-088

This special treatment of distance contracts is reflected in the 2013 Regulations for its pre-contractual information requirements and explains that, for these purposes “something is made available to a consumer only if the consumer can reasonably be expected to know how to access it”.⁵⁵⁹ However, the 2013 Regulations then add that the confirmation to be given to the consumer “is treated as provided as soon as the trader has sent it or done what is necessary to make it available to the consumer”⁵⁶⁰ and also allow information governing “on-premises contracts”⁵⁶¹ and information in connection with repair or maintenance contracts concluded off-premises⁵⁶² to be made available instead of being given. It will be seen, therefore, that while the “making available” of information as an alternative to its provision is foreseen by the 2011 Directive as regards pre-contractual information for distance contracts,⁵⁶³ the other examples of use of this phrase in the 2013 Regulations find no counterpart in the 2011 Directive, and therefore must be vulnerable to the argument that to this extent they fail properly to implement the minimum requirements of the 2011 Directive.

Vulnerable consumers

38-089

While neither the 2013 Regulations nor the text of the 2011 Directive refer to the type of consumer the trader must have in mind in providing information which they require, recital 34 of the Directive states:

“In providing that information, the trader should take into account the specific needs of consumers who are particularly vulnerable because of their mental, physical or psychological infirmity, age or credulity in a way which the trader could reasonably be expected to foresee. However, taking into account such specific needs should not lead to different levels of consumer protection.”

A trader must therefore bear in mind the particular needs of vulnerable consumers, in particular in the manner in which information is provided.⁵⁶⁴ This echoes the treatment of the “average consumer” by the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005, which similarly requires traders to take into account in their business-to-consumer practices the particular vulnerability of consumers which the trader can reasonably be expected to foresee.⁵⁶⁵

Burden of proof

38-090

In case of dispute about a trader’s compliance with the provisions in Pt 2 of the 2013 Regulations imposing information and confirmation requirements in relation to off-premises and distance contracts, it is for the trader to show that the provision in question was complied with, though this rule does not apply to proceedings relating to an offence relating to a trader’s failure to give notice of the right to cancel nor to proceedings relating to compliance with an injunction to secure compliance with the Regulations.⁵⁶⁶

^{548.} 2011 Directive arts 5(1), 6(1), 7(2), 7(4)(a) (“the trader shall provide”); arts 7(1) and 8(1) (“the trader shall give”); and art.8(1) (“the trader shall ... make that information available”): see further below, para.38-087.

^{549.} Content Services Ltd v Bundesarbeitskammer (C-49/11) of July 5, 2012 (“Content Services Ltd

(C-49/11)").

- 550. Directive 97/7/EC art.5(1).
- 551. Content Services Ltd (C-49/11) paras 32-33.
- 552. Content Services Ltd (C-49/11) paras 33 and 37.
- 553. Content Services Ltd (C-49/11) para.35, referring to Directive 97/7/EC art.4(1).
- 554. 2011 Directive arts 5(1) and 6(1).
- 555. 2011 Directive art.7(1) and 7(2).
- 556. 2011 Directive art.8(1).
- 557. 2011 Directive art.8(7).
- 558. 2011 Directive recital 36.
- 559. 2013 Regulations reg.13(1) and reg.8.
- 560. 2013 Regulations reg.16(5).
- 561. 2013 Regulations reg.9(1).
- 562. 2013 Regulations reg.11(2).
- 563. 2011 Directive art.8(1), though art.8(7) does not so refer as regards confirmation of the contract.
- 564. The 2011 Directive art.6(7) (relating to off-premises and distance contracts) also provides that Member States may maintain or introduce in their national laws language requirements regarding contractual information, so as to ensure that such information is easily understood by the consumer.
- 565. Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005/29/EC art.5(3), recital 18 glossing the notion of "average consumer": see above, para.38-041.
- 566. 2013 Regulations reg.17; 2011 Directive art.6(9). There is no equivalent provision in the 2013 Regulations setting a burden of proof as to the information requirements in relation to "on-premises contracts", following the 2011 Directive.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts
Section 4. - Information Requirements and Consumers' Rights of Cancellation
(c) - Information Requirements
(ii) - Off-Premises Contracts and Distance Contracts

Application of the requirements

38-091

Part 2 of the 2013 Regulations imposes a series of requirements on traders ⁵⁶⁷ to give or (in the case of distance contracts) to make available ⁵⁶⁸ to consumers ⁵⁶⁹ before they are bound by an off-premises contract ⁵⁷⁰ or distance contract ⁵⁷¹ and to provide consumers with a copy or confirmation of any resulting contract. ⁵⁷² In principle, these requirements apply to all types of "consumer contract" with the exceptions already noted, ⁵⁷³ but in addition Pt 2 excludes from its scope certain contracts for the supply of medicinal or other health care products ⁵⁷⁴ and off-premises contracts under which the payment to be made by the consumer is not more than £42. ⁵⁷⁵

Information requirements

38-092

The 2013 Regulations provide that, before the consumer is bound by an off-premises contract, the trader must give the consumer in a clear and comprehensible manner a list of required information. ⁵⁷⁶ In the case of distance contracts, the trader must give or make available ⁵⁷⁷ the information in a clear and comprehensible manner and in a way appropriate to the means of distance communication used. ⁵⁷⁸ In all these requirements, it is submitted that the requirement that the information be provided or made available in a clear and comprehensible manner should be assessed from the point of view of the "average consumer", taking into account any particular vulnerability of consumers in the context which the trader can reasonably be expected to foresee. ⁵⁷⁹

The information required

38-093

Schedule 2 to the 2013 Regulations ⁵⁸⁰ lists the information so required:

"(a)

the main characteristics of the goods, services or digital content, ⁵⁸¹ to the extent appropriate to the medium of communication and to the goods, services or digital content ⁵⁸²;

- (b)
the identity of the trader (such as the trader's trading name);
- (c)
the geographical address at which the trader is established and, where available, the trader's telephone number, fax number and e-mail address, to enable the consumer to contact the trader quickly and communicate efficiently;
- (d)
where the trader is acting on behalf of another trader, the geographical address and identity of that other trader;
- (e)
if different from the address provided in accordance with paragraph (c), the geographical address of the place of business of the trader, and, where the trader acts on behalf of another trader, the geographical address of the place of business of that other trader, where the consumer can address any complaints;
- (f)
the total price of the goods, services or digital content inclusive of taxes, or where the nature of the goods, services or digital content is such that the price cannot reasonably be calculated in advance, the manner in which the price is to be calculated;
- (g)
where applicable, all additional delivery charges and any other costs or, where those charges cannot reasonably be calculated in advance, the fact that such additional charges may be payable;
- (h)
in the case of a contract of indeterminate duration or a contract containing a subscription, the total costs per billing period or (where such contracts are charged at a fixed rate) the total monthly costs;
- (i)
the cost of using the means of distance communication for the conclusion of the contract where that cost is calculated other than at the basic rate;
- (j)
the arrangements for payment, delivery, performance, and the time by which the trader undertakes to deliver the goods, to perform the services or to supply the digital content;
- (k)
where applicable, the trader's complaint handling policy;

- (l)
where a right to cancel exists, the conditions, time limit and procedures for exercising that right in accordance with regulations 27 to 38;
- (m)
where applicable, that the consumer will have to bear the cost of returning the goods in case of cancellation and, for distance contracts, if the goods, by their nature, cannot normally be returned by post, the cost of returning the goods;
- (n)
that, if the consumer exercises the right to cancel after having made a request in accordance with regulation 36(1), the consumer is to be liable to pay costs in accordance with regulation 36(4);
- (o)
where under regulation 28, 36 or 37 there is no right to cancel or the right to cancel may be lost, the information that the consumer will not benefit from a right to cancel, or the circumstances under which the consumer loses the right to cancel;
- (p) in the case of a sales contract, a reminder that the trader is under a legal duty to supply goods that are in conformity with the contract;
- (q)
where applicable, the existence and the conditions of after-sale customer assistance, after-sales services and commercial guarantees;
- (r)
the existence of relevant codes of conduct, as defined in regulation 5(3)(b) of the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008, and how copies of them can be obtained, where applicable;
- (s)
the duration of the contract, where applicable, or, if the contract is of indeterminate duration or is to be extended automatically, the conditions for terminating the contract;
- (t)
where applicable, the minimum duration of the consumer's obligations under the contract;
- (u)
where applicable, the existence and the conditions of deposits or other financial guarantees to be paid or provided by the consumer at the request of the trader; where applicable, the functionality, ⁵⁸³ including applicable technical protection measures, of digital content ⁵⁸⁴;

(v)

(w)

where applicable, any relevant compatibility of digital content with hardware and software that the trader is aware of or can reasonably be expected to have been aware of ⁵⁸⁵;

(x)

where applicable, the possibility of having recourse to an out-of-court complaint and redress mechanism, to which the trader is subject, and the methods for having access to it". ⁵⁸⁶

The information relating to the consumer's cancellation right in paras (l), (m) and (n) above may be provided by means of the "model instructions on cancellation" set out by the Regulations, and if the trader uses this model correctly filled in, this is to be treated as compliance with those requirements. ⁵⁸⁷ The Regulations also provide that, if a right to cancel exists, the trader must give (or, in the case of distance contracts, make available to) the consumer a cancellation form which they set out. ⁵⁸⁸ In the case of off-premises contracts, the information and any cancellation form must be given on paper or, if the consumer agrees, on another durable medium and must be legible ⁵⁸⁹; for distance contracts, it must be legible in so far as the information is provided on a durable medium. ⁵⁹⁰ In the case of distance contracts, the 2013 Regulations qualify the general rules as to the provision of information where they are concluded through a means of distance communication which allows limited space or time to display the information. ⁵⁹¹

Distance contracts concluded by electronic means

38-094

There are special information requirements for distance contracts concluded by electronic means. ⁵⁹² Moreover, where the contract places the consumer under an obligation to pay, the trader must ensure that "the consumer, when placing the order, explicitly acknowledges that the order implies an obligation to pay", failing which the consumer is not bound by the contract or order. ⁵⁹³

Telephone calls to conclude a distance contract

38-095

If a trader makes a telephone call to the consumer with a view to concluding a distance contract, the trader must, at the beginning of the conversation with the consumer, disclose the trader's identify, where applicable, the identity of the person on whose behalf the trader makes the call and the commercial purpose of the call. ⁵⁹⁴

Provision of copy or confirmation of contract

38-096

In the case of off-premises contracts, the trader must give the consumer a copy of the signed contract or confirmation of the contract on paper or, if the consumer agrees, on another durable medium ⁵⁹⁵; in the case of distance contracts, the trader must give or make available ⁵⁹⁶ to the consumer confirmation of the contract on a durable medium. ⁵⁹⁷ In either case, the trader must act within a reasonable time after the conclusion of the contract and, in any event, not later than the time of delivery of any goods or beginning of the performance of any service supplied under the contract, ⁵⁹⁸ and any confirmation must include all the information which should have been provided before the contract was concluded, unless already so provided in a durable medium. ⁵⁹⁹

- ⁵⁶⁷. On the meaning of “trader” see above, paras 38-064, 38-047—38-054.
- ⁵⁶⁸. On the significance of “make available to” see above, paras 38-086—38-087.
- ⁵⁶⁹. On the meaning of “consumer” see above, paras 38-064, 38-028 et seq.
- ⁵⁷⁰. On the definition of “off-premises contract” see above, paras 38-076—38-079.
- ⁵⁷¹. On the definition of “distance contract” see above, paras 38-081—38-084.
- ⁵⁷². 2013 Regulations reg.12 (off-premises contracts); reg.16 (distance contracts): below, para.38-096.
- ⁵⁷³. For the contracts to which Pt 2 applies, see reg.7(1) and above, paras 38-064—38-074, which notes the contracts excluded from the scope of the Regulations as a whole.
- ⁵⁷⁴. 2013 Regulations reg.7(2).
- ⁵⁷⁵. 2013 Regulations reg.7(4) reflecting an option for Member States provided by the 2011 Directive art.3(4) and explained by recital 28 on the basis that to this extent it would relieve traders from an administrative burden.
- ⁵⁷⁶. 2013 Regulations reg.10(1) (off-premises contracts).
- ⁵⁷⁷. See above, paras 38-086—38-087 on the significance of “make available”.
- ⁵⁷⁸. 2013 Regulations reg.13(1), on which see above, para.38-084.
- ⁵⁷⁹. See above, para.38-089.
- ⁵⁸⁰. As amended by SI 2014/870.
- ⁵⁸¹. “Digital content” means “data which are produced and supplied in digital form”: 2013 Regulations reg.5 “digital content”.
- ⁵⁸². On the special significance of this requirement under the Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.11(4) (goods contracts) and s.36(3) (digital content contracts), see below, paras 38-464 and 38-508 respectively.
- ⁵⁸³. 2013 Regulations reg.5 provides that “‘functionality’ in relation to digital content includes region coding, restrictions incorporated for the purposes of digital rights management, and other technical restrictions”.
- ⁵⁸⁴. On the particular significance of this category of information under the Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.36(3), see below, para.35-508.
- ⁵⁸⁵. On the particular significance of this category of information under the Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.36(3), see below, para.35-508.

- 586. 2013 Regulations Sch.2, which notes that in the case of a public auction (as defined by reg.5 “public auction” and explained by the 2011 Directive recital 24) the information listed in paras (b) to (e) may be replaced with the equivalent details for the auctioneer.
- 587. 2013 Regulations reg.10(3) (off-premises contracts); reg.13(3) (distance contracts), referring to the “Model instructions for cancellation” in Sch.3(a).
- 588. 2013 Regulations reg.10(1)(b) (off-premises contracts); reg.13(1)(b) (distance contracts); Sch.3(b).
- 589. 2013 Regulations reg.10(2). Regulations 10 (3), (4), and (6) makes further incidental provision as to these requirements. Regulation 11 makes special provision for the provision of information in connection with repair or maintenance contracts. On the definition of “durable medium” in reg.5, see above, n.421.
- 590. 2013 Regulations reg.13(2).
- 591. 2013 Regulations reg.13(4).
- 592. 2013 Regulations reg.14.
- 593. 2013 Regulations reg.14(3)-(5).
- 594. 2013 Regulations reg.15 implementing Consumer Rights Directive 2011 art.8(5). On the sanctions for a trader failing to do so, see 2013 Regulations regs 44 et seq., below, paras 38-127 et seq.
- 595. 2013 Regulations reg.12(1) and (3). On the definition of “durable medium” in reg.5, see above, n.421. In the case of off-premises contracts for the supply of digital content not on a tangible medium and the consumer has given the consent and acknowledgment in respect of its supply during the cancellation period, then the copy or confirmation must include confirmation of the consent and acknowledgment: 2013 Regulations reg.12(5) and see below, para.38-110.
- 596. See above, paras 38-086—38-087 on the significance of “make available to”.
- 597. 2013 Regulations reg.16(1) and (5). On the definition of “durable medium” in reg.5, see above, n.421. In the case of distance contracts for the supply of digital content not on a tangible medium and the consumer has given the consent and acknowledgment in respect of its supply during the cancellation period, then the copy or confirmation must include confirmation of the consent and acknowledgment: 2013 Regulations reg.16(3) and see below, para.38-110.
- 598. 2013 Regulations reg.12(4) (off-premises contracts); reg.16(4) (distance contracts).
- 599. 2013 Regulations reg.12(2) (off-premises contracts) and reg.16(2) (distance contracts) referring to Sch.2. The relevant information is detailed at para.38-093 above.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 4. - Information Requirements and Consumers' Rights of Cancellation

(c) - Information Requirements

(iii) - On-Premises Contracts

38-097

In principle, the information required of traders in respect of on-premises contracts apply to all "consumer contracts" with the exceptions already noted. ⁶⁰⁰ In this respect, the trader must give or make available ⁶⁰¹ the information to the consumer in a clear and comprehensible manner ⁶⁰² if that information is not already apparent from the context. ⁶⁰³ However, the information requirements do:

"not apply to a contract which involves a day-to-day transaction and is performed immediately at the time when the contract is entered into." ⁶⁰⁴

As the Departmental Implementing Guidance explains:

"The principle behind the exemption for day-to-day transactions sold on premises is that the consumer will be very familiar with the goods or services and their cost, so that the level of information required by the Regulations would be superfluous. Thus buying a cup of coffee, the daily paper, weekly groceries, a tube of toothpaste etc. would all constitute day-to-day transactions. By their nature, such transactions are likely to be low cost items." ⁶⁰⁵

Presumably, the question whether a contract is an example of a "day-to-day transaction" is to be judged by its frequency in the practice of the average consumer. Although this exclusion may be justified (as does the Department's Guidance) on the basis of the likely familiarity of the consumer with the subject matter of such a transaction, it may also reflect a concern for the practical inconvenience and administrative cost of the imposition of information requirements on traders in relation to such transactions.

The information required

38-098

Schedule 1 to the 2013 Regulations ⁶⁰⁶ lists the information required:

"(a)

the main characteristics of the goods, services or digital content, to the extent appropriate to the medium of communication and to the goods, services or digital content ⁶⁰⁷;

(b)

the identity of the trader (such as the trader's trading name), the geographical address at which the trader is established and the trader's telephone number;

(c)

the total price of the goods, services or digital content inclusive of taxes, or where the nature of the goods, services or digital content is such that the price cannot reasonably be calculated in advance, the manner in which the price is to be calculated;

(d)

where applicable, all additional delivery charges or, where those charges cannot reasonably be calculated in advance, the fact that such additional charges may be payable; where applicable, the arrangements for payment, delivery, performance, and the time by which the trader undertakes to deliver the goods, to perform the service or to supply the digital content;

(e)

(f)

where applicable, the trader's complaint handling policy;

(g) in the case of a sales contract, a reminder that the trader is under a legal duty to supply goods that are in conformity with the contract;

(h)

where applicable, the existence and the conditions of after-sales services and commercial guarantees;

(i)

the duration of the contract, where applicable, or, if the contract is of indeterminate duration or is to be extended automatically, the conditions for terminating the contract;

(j)

where applicable, the functionality, ⁶⁰⁸ including applicable technical protection measures, of digital content ⁶⁰⁹;

(k)

where applicable, any relevant compatibility of digital content with hardware and software that the trader is aware of or can reasonably be expected to have been aware of.” ⁶¹⁰

-
- ^{600.} For the contracts to which Pt 2 of the 2013 Regulations applies, see above, paras 38-064, 38-067—38-074, which note the contracts excluded from the scope of the Regulations as a whole.
- ^{601.} See above, paras 38-086—38-087 on the significance of “make available”.
- ^{602.} See above, para.38-092.
- ^{603.} 2013 Regulations reg.9(1).
- ^{604.} 2013 Regulations reg.9(2).
- ^{605.} Department for Business Innovation & Skills, Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations, Implementing Guidance (December 2013) C, para.6. The inclusion of this exemption reflects the exercise of an option for Member States under the Consumer Rights Directive 2011 art.5(3).
- ^{606.} As amended by SI 2014/870.
- ^{607.} On the special significance of this requirement under the Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.11(4) (goods contracts) and s.36(3)(digital content contracts), see below, paras 38-464 and 38-508 respectively.
- ^{608.} See above, n.545 on the significance of “functionality” of digital content.
- ^{609.} On the particular significance of this category of information under the Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.36(3), see below, para.38-508.
- ^{610.} On the particular significance of this category of information under the Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.36(3), see below, para.38-508.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 4. - Information Requirements and Consumers' Rights of Cancellation

(c) - Information Requirements

(iv) - The Effects of the Information Requirements

General

38-099

⚠ The information requirements imposed on traders as outlined above may have a number of different consequences: the provision of inaccurate information and the failure to provide information are both made to constitute breach of contract ⁶¹¹; in the context of off-premises contracts and distance contracts, a trader's failure to provide information on the consumer's right to cancel affects the period within which the consumer may cancel ⁶¹²; and, in the context of off-premises contracts, this failure may constitute a criminal offence. ⁶¹³ In addition, the various requirements imposed on traders may be enforced by injunction on the application of a weights and measures authority. ⁶¹⁴ Finally, the provision of inaccurate information or the failure to provide information may constitute an unfair commercial practice within the meaning of the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008. ⁶¹⁵ As has earlier been noted, the Court of Justice has held that the effectiveness of the protection provided by information requirements for consumers in the Consumer Credit Directive 2008 means that a national court must raise the issue whether these requirements have been fulfilled and, if not, must "draw all the consequences provided for under national law". ⁶¹⁶ ⚠

The contractual significance of information supplied

38-100

⚠ For all three types of contracts (off-premises contracts, distance contracts and on-premises contracts), the 2013 Regulations (as made) provided that any information which is given by a trader to a consumer as they require "is to be treated as included as a term of the contract" ⁶¹⁷ and that:

"a change to any of that information, made before entering into the contract or later, is not effective unless expressly agreed between the consumer and the trader." ⁶¹⁸

In general English law, the effect of making the information given a term of the contract would apparently be that the trader is held to have promised that the information is accurate, with the result that any inaccuracy would constitute a breach of contract by the trader, with the normal set of remedies for breach at common law. However, as regards the goods contracts and digital content contracts to which it applies, ⁶¹⁹ the Consumer Rights Act 2015 expressly provides for this purpose by stating that information concerning the main characteristics of the goods or digital content provided by the trader as required by the 2013 Regulations ⁶²⁰ is to be included as a term of the contract under its provisions on sale or supply by description, ⁶²¹ with the result that breach of these terms gives rise to the rights for consumers which the Act then provides ⁶²²; and the 2015 Act further provides that other information required by the 2013 Regulations for these contracts and for services contracts, is to be treated as a term of these contracts ⁶²³ with the result that breach gives rise to rights for the consumer which vary according to the category of contract in question. ⁶²⁴ After the enactment of these provisions in the 2015 Act, the 2013 Regulations were amended so that their own broad provisions governing the contractual significance of information are replaced with a residual provision to similar effect but applicable only to contracts for the supply of digital content other than for a price paid by the consumer. ⁶²⁵

Effect on the contract of failure to provide information

38-101

 Under the earlier Cancellation of Contracts made in a Consumer's Home or Place of Work, etc. Regulations 2008, ⁶²⁶ a trader's failure to provide the information to the consumer as they required rendered a contract unenforceable against the consumer. ⁶²⁷  There is no equivalent provision in the 2013 Regulations, but they do provide that every contract to which Pt 2 applies ⁶²⁸ is to be treated as including a term that the trader has complied with the information requirements which it sets out, with the exception of those required of traders by telephone with a view to concluding a distance contract. ⁶²⁹ This provision has no equivalent in the 2011 Directive, but can be seen as part of the UK's provision of "adequate and effective means" to ensure compliance with the Directive, ⁶³⁰ and/or as setting out "general contract law" effects of the Directive's provisions which the latter does not itself regulate. ⁶³¹ The use by the Regulations of the technique of deemed contract term means that any failure to provide information as required by the Regulations would constitute a breach of contract, with the consequences set out by the general common law. ⁶³² In addition to these effects on the contract, as regards off-premises contracts and distance contracts, failure in a trader to provide information on the consumer's right to cancel results in an extension of the period of cancellation from 14 days to a year, unless in the meanwhile the trader provides the consumer with the requisite information. ⁶³³

Criminal law: off-premises contracts

38-102

 In the case of off-premises contracts (but not distance contracts or on-premises contracts), the 2013 Regulations create an offence for a trader who enters into an off-premises contract but fails to give the consumer the required information on the consumer's right of cancellation. ⁶³⁴ A person guilty of such an offence is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 5 on the standard scale, i.e. £5,000. ⁶³⁵ The Regulations make further and incidental provision on the creation of this offence, including a defence of due diligence for the trader. ⁶³⁶  In England and Wales, this offence is to be enforced and prosecuted by weights and measures authorities, often known as the local trading standards service. ⁶³⁷

Enforcement of information requirements

38-103

The information requirements set out by the 2013 Regulations attract the general enforcement measures available to weights and measures authorities for the enforcement of the Regulations generally, as noted later in this section. ⁶³⁸

Relationship between information requirements and law governing unfair commercial practices

38-104

In principle, a trader's failure to provide the information required by the 2013 Regulations or, as the case may be, a failure to provide such information accurately, may constitute (respectively) a "misleading omission" or "misleading action" in that trader within the meaning of the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008 ("2008 Regulations"), subject in particular to the condition that doing so caused, or was likely to cause, the average consumer to take a transactional decision he would not have taken otherwise and to the other conditions which those 2008 Regulations set out. ⁶³⁹ Where this is the case, then the consequences of such failures would give rise to the enforcement measures and (in the case of misleading actions but not misleading omissions) to the rights to redress for consumers which those Regulations provide in addition to the consequences and enforcement measures already noted. ⁶⁴⁰

Misleading omissions

38-105

 In this respect, the position as regards misleading omissions is clear, as reg.6(1) of the 2008 Regulations provides that:

"(1)

A commercial practice is a misleading omission if, in its factual context, taking account of the matters in paragraph (2)—

(a)

the commercial practice omits material information,

(b)

the commercial practice hides material information,

(c)

the commercial practice provides material information in a manner which is unclear, unintelligible, ambiguous or untimely, or

(d)

the commercial practice fails to identify its commercial intent, unless this is already apparent from the context, and as a result it causes or is likely to cause the average consumer to take a transactional decision he would not have taken otherwise."

And for this purpose, reg.6(3) provides that "material information" means:

"(a)

the information which the average consumer needs, according to the context, to take an informed transactional decision; and

(b)

any information requirement which applies in relation to a commercial communication as a result of an EU obligation.”

As a result, for example, a trader’s failure to provide the information required by the 2013 Regulations (which implement the Consumer Rights Directive 2011) falls within reg.6(3)(b) so as to satisfy the “material information” element of the 2008 Regulations’ definition of a “misleading omission”. ⁶⁴¹  This means that such a failure could give rise to the enforcement measures available under the 2008 Regulations, ⁶⁴² though not to any right to redress for consumers under these Regulations as these do not extend to “misleading omissions”. ⁶⁴³

Misleading actions

38-106

 Similarly where a trader provides a consumer with false information of the types required by the 2013 Regulations, this could in principle constitute a “misleading action” within the meaning of the 2008 Regulations, subject to the other conditions for the incidence of this particular form of unfair commercial practice. ⁶⁴⁴ As will be seen, the definition of a “misleading action” under the 2008 Regulations is quite complex, but its central element concerns a commercial practice where “it contains false information and is therefore untruthful” in relation to a series of matters which it then specifies, ⁶⁴⁵ these matters being drawn directly from the 2005 Directive on which the 2008 Regulations are based. ⁶⁴⁶ In this respect, it is submitted that this possibility is not prevented by art.3(4) of the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005 (which the 2008 Regulations implement), according to which:

“In the case of conflict between the provisions of this Directive and other Community rules regulating specific aspects of unfair commercial practices, the latter shall prevail and apply to those specific aspects.”

As recital 10 of the 2005 Directive explains, art.3(4) seeks to ensure that the Directive’s its relationship with existing Community law is coherent, and so “applies only in so far as there are no specific Community law provisions regulating specific aspects of unfair commercial practices, such as information requirements and rules on the way the information is presented to the consumer.”

In the result, ⁶⁴⁷ art.3(4) therefore resolves:

“irreconcilable conflict between substantive norms, i.e. situations where the same business-to-consumer commercial practice would qualify as ‘unfair’ under one provision and ‘non-unfair’ ... under another provision. In such cases, the EU special provision shall ‘prevail’.” ⁶⁴⁸

While the information requirements in the 2011 Directive must “prevail” over the more general information requirements set out by the 2005 Directive, a failure accurately to provide this information may constitute a “misleading action” under the 2005 Directive (subject to its other conditions, notably, that the information “deceives or is likely to deceive the average consumer” and “causes or is likely to cause the average consumer to take a transactional decision he would not have taken otherwise” ⁶⁴⁹ ). In the result, in the UK context the provision of false or misleading information of the types required by the 2013 Regulations ⁶⁵⁰ may constitute a “misleading action” and so give rise to the enforcement measures set out by the 2008 Regulations and they may also give rise to a right to redress for individual consumers, as these rights can arise in respect of the commission of a misleading action. ⁶⁵¹ Where this is the case, the consumer's rights to civil redress in respect of a misleading action and the consumer's rights for breach of contract in respect of information provided by a trader under the 2013 Regulations (and treated as a term of the contract under the Consumer Rights Act 2015) ⁶⁵² may in principle co-exist, though it is submitted that the courts would so interpret the two regimes that the consumer could not in these circumstances obtain double recovery.

⁶¹¹. Below, paras 38-100—38-101.

⁶¹². 2013 Regulations reg.31, below, para.38-113.

⁶¹³. Below, para.38-102.

⁶¹⁴. Below, paras 38-103, 38-127.

⁶¹⁵. Below, paras 38-104—38-106.

⁶¹⁶.  Radlinger v Finway a.s. (C-377/14) April 21, 2016 at paras 62–74 and see above, para. 38-063A.

⁶¹⁷. 2013 Regulations reg.9(3) (on-premises contract); reg.10(5) (off-premises contract); and reg.13(6) (distance contract).

⁶¹⁸. 2013 Regulations reg.9(4) (on-premises contract); reg.10(4) (off-premises contract); and reg.13(7) (distance contract). While the Consumer Rights Directive 2011 art.6(5) requires these provisions for off-premises and distance contracts, art.5 concerning contracts other than off-premises and distance contracts does not do so. It is submitted, though, that, art.3(5) of the Directive leaves this issue to national contract law, here reflected in the 2013 Regulations reg.9(4): on the significance of art.3(5) of the 2011 Directive see above, paras 38-059—38-061. The 2013 Regulations refer to changes to “information, made before entering into the contract or later”, whereas art.6(5) of the 2011 Directive states that information forming a part of the contract “shall not be altered unless the contracting parties expressly agree otherwise”. A simple example may be found in the case of the parties agreeing by exchange of emails to a different time of delivery of the goods. It may be thought that the wording of the Regulations is broad enough to forbid changes by the trader to information provided even where these are made under an express variation clause in the contract. However, according to the European Commission, while a provision in a trader's standard terms stating that it may derogate from the information provided would not satisfy art.6(5)'s requirement for the express agreement of the parties, art.6(5) would not prevent changes made to the terms of a contract after it has been concluded (apparently) under an express variation clause, though the latter would be subject to control under the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Directive 1993: DG Justice Guidance Document on 2011 Directive, para.4.2.5 and see below on the control of variation clauses under the 1999 Regulations (paras 38-286—38-289) or the Consumer Rights Act 2015 Pt 2 (paras 38-358 et seq.) (which implement the 1993 Directive). If the Commission's view holds good, if possible, the terms of the 2013 Regulations must be read so as to conform to this reading of the 2011 Directive, as here it requires “full harmonisation”: 2011 Directive art.4 and above, para.38-058.

⁶¹⁹. The 2013 Regulations apply to contracts entered into on or after June 13, 2014: reg.1(2). The relevant provisions of the Consumer Rights Act 2015 Pt 1 came into force on October 1, 2015:

below, paras 38-335 and 38-403.

- 620. 2013 Regulations Sch.1 para.(a) or Sch.2 para.(a) (goods contracts); Sch.1 paras (a), (j) and (k) or Sch.2 paras (a), (v) or (w) (digital contents contracts), which make clear that the categories of information are wider as regards digital content contracts.
- 621. Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.11(4)–(6) (goods contracts); s.36(3)–(5) (digital content contracts).
- 622. Consumer Rights Act 2015 ss.11(7) and 19 (goods contracts); ss.36(5), 42 (digital content contracts): see below, paras 38-459, 38-464 and 38-477 et seq.; 38-504, 38-508 and 38-517 et seq.
- 623. 2015 Act s.12 (goods contracts) on which see below, para.38-465; s.37 (digital content contracts) on which see below, para.38-509; and s.50 (services contracts) on which see below, para.38-532—38-536.
- 624. 2015 Act s.19(5) (goods contracts) on which see below, paras 38-459, 38-477 et seq.; s.42(4) (digital content contracts) on which see below, paras 38-504, 37-517 et seq.; and s.54 (services contracts) on which see below, paras 38-530, 38-540 et seq.
- 625. !Consumer Contracts (Amendment) Regulations 2015 (SI 2015/1629) arts 4–6 (replacing 2013 Regulations reg.9(3) (on-premises contracts), reg.10(5) (off-premises contracts) and reg.13(6) (distance contracts)). The intention was that the 2013 Regulations should still apply to contracts under which digital content is supplied which do not fall within the definition of “digital content contracts” in the 2015 Act: Explanatory Note to SI 2015/1629, which states that the amendments are “in consequence of the Act and revoke provisions of the 2013 Regulations to the extent they are replicated in the Act”. The retention of the residual category of contracts for the supply of digital content in the 2013 Regulations as amended is required by their broad scope following in this respect the Consumer Rights Directive 2011: see Vol.II, para.38-067. However, under the 2015 Act Pt 1 Ch.3, “a contract for a trader to supply digital content to a consumer” is of two types: where digital content “is supplied for a price paid by the consumer” (s.33(1)) and where “(a) it is supplied free with goods or services or other digital content for which the consumer pays a price, and (b) it is not generally available to consumers unless they have paid a price for it or for goods or services or other digital content” (s.33(2)). This being the case, it would appear that the second type of digital content contract defined by s.33(2) would also count as a “contract for the supply of digital content other than for a price paid by the consumer” under the new 2013 Regulations (regs 9(3), 10(5) and 13(6), thus retaining (apparently by mistake) a degree of regulatory overlap. (The amendments to the 2013 Regulations apply to contracts entered into on or after October 1, 2015: SI 2015/1629 art.1).
- 626. There was no equivalent provision in the Consumer Protection (Distance Selling) Regulations 2000 (SI 2000/2334).
- 627. !SI 2008/1816 reg.7(6); W v Veolia Environmental Services (UK Plc) [2011] EWHC 2020 (QB), [2012] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 667; Allproperty Claims Ltd v Tang [2015] EWHC 2198 (QB) at [45] and cf. Kell v Department of Energy and Climate Change (Newcastle upon Tyne County Ct, July 23, 2015).
- 628. i.e. off-premises contracts, distance contracts and on-premises contracts: 2013 Regulations reg.7 and see paras 38-064—38-074.
- 629. 2013 Regulations reg.18 referring specifically to the information requirements in regs 9–14 and 16.
- 630. 2011 Directive art.23(1).
- 631. As permitted by 2011 Directive art.3(5) as explained above, paras 38-059—38-061.
- 632. See Vol.I, Chs 24, 26 and 27. In particular, this could lead to termination for breach of contract subject to the normal requirement that breach by the trader substantially deprived the consumer of the benefit of the contract and/or damages: Vol.I, para.24-041.

- 633. 2013 Regulations reg.31, on which see below, para.38-113.
- 634. 2013 Regulations reg.19, referring to the information listed in paras (l), (m) or (n) of Sch.2 (on which see above, para.38-093).
- 635. Criminal Justice Act 1982 s.37 (as amended in 1992).
- 636.  2013 Regulations regs 20–23; regs 24–26 (powers of investigation, obstruction of authorised officers, and freedom from self-incrimination, respectively) were revoked by the Consumer Rights Act 2015 (Consequential Amendments) Order 2015 (SI 2015/1726) art.2, Sch. Pt 2, para.7; the 2015 Act is amended so as to include the 2013 Regulations in the list of legislation to which the investigatory powers in that Act (Sch.5) applies: SI 2015/1726 art.2, Sch. Pt 1 para.6.
- 637. 2013 Regulations reg.23.
- 638. 2013 Regulations Pt 6, below, para.38-127—38-129.
- 639. SI 2008/1277 reg.5 and especially 5(2)(b) (misleading actions) and reg.6 especially 6(1) (misleading omissions), below, paras 38-153 et seq.
- 640. 2008 Regulations (as amended by SI 2014/870), Pt 4 Enforcement; Pt 4A Consumers' Rights to Redress: on the latter, see below, paras 38-160 et seq.
- 641.  This reflects accurately the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005 art.7(5), which refers to a “non-exhaustive list” in its Annex II, and the latter includes Directive 97/7/EC on distance contracts, arts 4 and 5 of which were the predecessor provisions to the information requirements now contained in the Consumer Rights Directive 2011 arts 6 and 7 which are implemented in UK law by the 2013 Regulations regs 13 and 14. For the “complementary nature” of information obligations under specific EU legislation and the provision in art.7(5) of the 2005 Directive (implemented by reg.6(3)(b) of the 2013 Regulations), see Abcur AB v Apoteket Farmaci, Apoteket AB and Apoteket Farmaci AB (C-544/13 and C-545/13) July 16, 2015 at paras 78–82 (medicinal products for human use). For recent discussion of the significance of “misleading omission” under reg.6(3)(a) of the 2008 Regulations see Secretary of State for Business, Innovation and Skills v PLT Antimarketing Ltd [2015] EWCA Civ 76, [2015] C.T.L.C.8 at [30]–[31] where the Court of Appeal identified the “critical question” as being “whether the average consumer can be said to need to obtain that information from the trader in question, rather than obtain it (for example) by shopping around, and finding out for himself whether something better, or cheaper, is on offer”: Secretary of State for Business, Innovation and Skills v PLT Antimarketing Ltd at [31] per Briggs L.J. (with whom Ryder and Richards L.JJ. agreed) later referring to this as “the “needs” test”: Secretary of State for Business, Innovation and Skills v PLT Antimarketing Ltd at [40]. cf. the approach of the CJEU to art.6 of the 2005 Directive’s requirements as regards “misleading actions” in Nemzeti Fogyasztóvédelmi Hatóság v UPC Magyarország Kft (C-388/13) of April 18, 2015 at paras 53-54 (where a trader provides erroneous information to the consumer, the fact that the consumer could himself have obtained the correct information is irrelevant).
- 642. On which see below, paras 38-158—38-159.
- 643. Below, para.38-172.
- 644. 2008 Regulations reg.5 and see below, paras 38-167—38-170.
- 645. 2008 Regulations reg.5(2)(a) and 5(4).
- 646. Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005 art.6(2). On the 2005 Directive, see below, para.38-147 et seq.

647. See also below, para.38-390.

648. Orlando (2011) European Review of Contract Law 25 at 50–51 (emphases omitted), and see below, para.38-149.

649.  2008 Regulations reg.5(1)(a) and (b). In Abcur AB v Apoteket Farmaci, Apoteket AB and Apoteket Farmaci AB (C-544/13 and C-545/13) July 16, 2015 the CJEU held that art.3(4) of the 2005 Directive “applies only in so far as there are no specific EU law provisions regulating specific aspects of unfair commercial practices, such as information requirements and rules on the way the information is presented to the consumer” in relation to medical products for human use (at para.79) and that, where the specific provisions conflict with the provisions in the 2005 Directive, the former “take precedence and apply to those specific aspects of unfair commercial practices” (at para.81), but in the result, this allowed advertising practices relating to such medical products to fall within the scope of the 2005 Directive “provided that the conditions for the application of that directive are satisfied” (at para.83). Moreover, it is submitted that the line of argument is not contradicted by the later judgment in Citroën Commerce GmbH v Zentralvereinigung des Kraftfahrzeuggewerbes zur Aufrechterhaltung lauterer Wettbewerbs eV (ZLW) (C-476/14) July 7, 2016 at paras 44–46. There, the CJEU held that the provision in the 2005 Directive regarding the materiality of certain information in invitations to purchase for the purposes of misleading omissions (which included “the price inclusive of taxes” (art.7(4)(c))) could not apply to the case before them “as the aspect relating to the selling price referred to in an advertisement”, as that issue was governed by Directive 98/6/EC on consumer protection in the indication of the prices of products offered to customers [1998] O.J. L80/27 art.3(1)’s provision on “selling price”: the 1998 Directive governed this “specific aspect” within the meaning of art.3(4) of the 2005 Directive, which therefore “cannot apply as regards that aspect”: (C-476/14 judgment at para.45). This case therefore provides an example of where the “special provision” must prevail.

650. See above, paras 38-903 (off-premises and distance contracts) and 38-908 (on-premises contracts).

651. 2008 Regulations regs 27A(4)(a), 27B(1)(a) below, paras 38-160 et seq. especially at 38-166.

652. Above, para.38-100.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 4. - Information Requirements and Consumers' Rights of Cancellation

(d) - The Consumer's Right of Cancellation or Withdrawal

(i) - The Situations in Which the Right Arises and its Duration

The contracts affected

38-107

Part 3 of the 2013 Regulations creates rights of cancellation for consumers, and regulates the effect of their exercise and of the withdrawal of an offer by a consumer, in respect of off-premises and distance contracts but not on-premises contracts. ⁶⁵³ Otherwise, Pt 3 excludes the same types of contracts from the application of these provisions as they exclude from Pt 2's information requirements, ⁶⁵⁴ in addition to those types of contracts or contracts made in particular circumstances which are excluded entirely from the scope of the 2013 Regulations. ⁶⁵⁵ Part 3 also excludes from its scope contracts for the supply of goods or services of certain types or supplied in certain circumstances, for example, for the supply of goods made to the consumer's specifications, ⁶⁵⁶ wine bought en primeur, ⁶⁵⁷ newspapers, periodicals or magazines supplied other than under a subscription, ⁶⁵⁸ contracts for the supply of accommodation, transport of goods, vehicle rental services, catering or services relating to leisure activities, if the contract provides for a specific date or period of performance ⁶⁵⁹ and contracts concluded at a public auction. ⁶⁶⁰ Moreover, the rights conferred by Pt 3 cease to be available to the consumer in the case of contracts for the supply of sealed goods which are not suitable for return due to health protection or hygiene reasons, if they become unsealed after delivery; contracts for the supply of sealed audio or sealed video recordings or sealed computer software, if the goods become unsealed after delivery; and any sales contract, if the goods become mixed inseparably (according to their nature) with other items after delivery. ⁶⁶¹

The right to cancel the contract and the right to withdraw an offer

38-108

The 2013 Regulations distinguish between the consumer's right to cancel the off-premises contract or distance contract after it has been concluded and the consumer's right to withdraw an offer which he or she has made. ⁶⁶² The right to cancel itself is created and delineated by the Regulations, both in terms of when it starts, how long it exists and the effects of its exercise. As reg.29(1) provides, "[t]he consumer may cancel a distance or off-premises contract at any time in the cancellation period without giving any reason, and without incurring any liability" except in the circumstances which the Regulations themselves set out. ⁶⁶³ By contrast, reg.29(3) provides that:

"(3)

Paragraph (1) does not affect the consumer's right to withdraw an offer made by the consumer to enter into a distance or off-premises contract, at any time before the contract is entered into, without giving any reason and without incurring any liability."

This provision does not create any right in a consumer to withdraw an offer, but rather implicitly recognises that such a right exists (as it does in English law at common law ⁶⁶⁴) and that this right is not affected by the recognition of the right to cancel the contract created by the Regulations. As explained in Vol.I of the present work, at common law a person (the offeror) has a general right to withdraw his or her offer before it has been accepted by the offeree; and this right of withdrawal is subject to a requirement of communication of the withdrawal to the offeree, though this may be satisfied by communication other than from the offeror and is subject to exceptions. ⁶⁶⁵ By contrast, the Regulations require the consumer to inform the trader of the decision to withdraw any offer made to a trader in respect of the contracts covered by Pt 3, and provides that, where a consumer does so, the trader must in principle reimburse payments received from the consumer (subject to exceptions and qualifications), and that any “ancillary contract” made by the consumer is automatically terminated. ⁶⁶⁶ As a result, while the circumstances in which a consumer may withdraw an offer to contract in respect of an off-premises or distance contract are determined by the common law, the Regulations set both a legal requirement of informing the trader that is distinct from the requirement of communication of a withdrawal or revocation of offer at common law and two distinct legal consequences of its exercise. In both respects, the 2013 Regulations therefore seek to harmonise the circumstances in which a consumer can withdraw an offer and can cancel any concluded contract. This is clearly sensible in terms of legislative policy, as otherwise a trader could argue that the Regulations’ provisions on the reimbursement of payments made by a consumer and ancillary contracts do not apply to offers made but not accepted by the trader, since no contract was concluded and, therefore, no right of cancellation of the contract was generated. This is all the more the case as a trader could seek to rely either on the general common law position or on its own standard terms of business to claim that its own communications constitute mere invitations to treat and a communication to it from a consumer constitutes an offer accepted only on communication by the trader. ⁶⁶⁷ On the other hand, the Regulations make no provision in respect of any possible right in a consumer to revoke an acceptance which he or she has posted, ⁶⁶⁸ except by way of its own right of cancellation.

The right to cancel: general

38-109

As earlier noted, the 2013 Regulations provide that:

“[t]he consumer may cancel a distance or off-premises contract at any time in the cancellation period without giving any reason, and without incurring any liability”, ⁶⁶⁹

though they then provide four circumstances in which the consumer may incur some liability as a result of the exercise of the right to cancel. ⁶⁷⁰ While the Consumer Rights Directive 2011 justifies the right to cancel in distance contracts on the basis that, as the consumer has not seen the goods, he or she “should be allowed to test and inspect the goods he has bought to the extent necessary to establish the nature, characteristics and the functioning of the goods” and the right to cancel in off-premises contracts “because of the potential surprise element and/or psychological pressure” in this situation, the Directive (and in turn the Regulations) do not attempt to restrict the right to cancel to cases where these grounds are relevant, but instead allow the consumer to cancel “without giving any reason”. ⁶⁷¹

Supply of services or digital content in cancellation period

38-110

The 2013 Regulations provide that the trader must not begin the supply of a service before the end of the cancellation period ⁶⁷² unless the consumer has made an express request to this effect and, in the case of an off-premises contract, this was made on a durable medium. ⁶⁷³ Where the trader begins performance of the service at such a request by the consumer, the latter ceases to have the right to cancel the contract once the service has been fully performed, provided that he or she acknowledged that this would be the case when performance of the service began.⁶⁷⁴ Similarly, a trader must not begin to supply digital content not on a tangible medium⁶⁷⁵ unless the consumer has given express consent and has acknowledged that the right to cancel will be lost.⁶⁷⁶ Where these conditions are satisfied, however, the consumer ceases to have a right to cancel the contract.⁶⁷⁷

The cancellation period

38-111

The earlier directives on doorstep selling and distance contracts set a period of seven days within which the consumer could cancel these types of contract,⁶⁷⁸ but their requirement of only “minimum harmonisation”⁶⁷⁹ led to differing cancellation periods in the laws of Member States.⁶⁸⁰ The Consumer Rights Directive 2011 saw these differences as causing legal uncertainty and compliance costs for traders, and so requires instead a uniform period of 14 days,⁶⁸¹ this being faithfully reflected in the 2013 Regulations.⁶⁸² Under the Directive, this period refers to 14 days after the relevant day (“days” referring to calendar days),⁶⁸³ and this is given effect by the 2013 Regulations by referring to each cancellation period as ending, for example, “at the end of 14 days after the day on which the contract is entered into”.⁶⁸⁴ However, this apparent simplicity is then marred by the considerable complexity of the provisions governing the commencement of this period and its extension by up to a year for the situation where the trader has not notified the consumer of the existence of the right.⁶⁸⁵ This scheme is set by the 2013 Regulations by means of provision in reg.30 governing the “normal cancellation period” and in reg.31 governing the extended cancellation period where the information requirement is breached.

Normal cancellation period

38-112

The 2013 Regulations set the day relevant to the start of the 14-day cancellation period differently according to the particular type of contract in question. So, in the case of service contracts⁶⁸⁶ and contracts for the supply of digital content which is not supplied on a tangible medium, the cancellation period starts on the day after the contract is entered into,⁶⁸⁷ the latter to be determined by the application of the normal rules at common law governing the formation of contract.⁶⁸⁸ In the case of “sales contracts”,⁶⁸⁹ the Regulations set a basis rule according to which the cancellation period ends at the end of 14 days after the day on which the goods come into the physical possession of either the consumer or of a person, other than the carrier, identified by the consumer to take possession of them.⁶⁹⁰ This rule is then nuanced for the cases where the sales contract concerns multiple goods ordered in one order but delivered on different days (the day on which the last of the goods comes into the possession of the consumer, etc.); multiple lots of goods or pieces of something delivered on different days (the day on which the last of the lots or pieces come into the possession of the consumer, etc.); and for the regular delivery of goods during a defined period of more than one day (the day on which the first of the goods comes into the possession of the consumer, etc.).⁶⁹¹ For these purposes, it is submitted that the notion of goods “coming into the physical possession of the consumer” would attract an autonomous European significance, since the 2011 Directive (which the Regulations implement) uses this notion in relation to sales contracts both in the context of the consumer’s right of cancellation⁶⁹² and in relation to its provisions governing the delivery of goods and the passing of risk,⁶⁹³ and as regards the passing of risk, recital 55 of the Directive explains that “a consumer should be considered to have acquired the physical possession of the goods when he has received them”.⁶⁹⁴ Given this significance, the question whether goods have come into the physical possession of a consumer would remain for national courts as a matter of the application of the law to the facts as they find them.⁶⁹⁵

Cancellation period extended for breach of information requirement

38-113

Where a trader did not provide the consumer before the conclusion of the contract with information on the right to cancel as the Regulations require,⁶⁹⁶ the cancellation period ends at the end of 12 months after the day on which it would otherwise have ended under the normal cancellation periods (for example, for service contracts the day of the conclusion of the contract),⁶⁹⁷ unless in the meanwhile the trader provides the consumer with that information, when the cancellation period ends 14 days after the consumer receives that information.⁶⁹⁸ These rules mark a significant change from the unsatisfactory position under the earlier directives, under which the period for exercise of the right of cancellation in doorstep selling contracts started only on receipt by the consumer of notice of that right⁶⁹⁹ and was therefore held to be inconsistent with any temporal limitation in national law⁷⁰⁰; and in distance contracts where a trader's failure to inform led to the right lasting for three months or until seven days after the information had been supplied.⁷⁰¹ The 2011 Directive instead requires a uniform period of 12 months throughout the EU in the interests of legal certainty.⁷⁰²

Exercise of the right to cancel

38-114

The 2013 Regulations provide generally that “to cancel a contract ... the consumer must inform the trader of the decision to cancel it”,⁷⁰³ either by using a “form following the model cancellation form” which the Regulations themselves provide⁷⁰⁴ or by making “any other clear statement setting out the decision to cancel the contract”.⁷⁰⁵ Where a trader gives consumers the option of using such a form or other statement on the trader's website, the Regulations provide that the consumers need not use it, but if they do, the trader must communicate to them an acknowledgement of receipt of the cancellation on a durable medium⁷⁰⁶ without delay.⁷⁰⁷ Where a consumer cancels by making “any other clear statement setting out the decision to cancel the contract”, the Regulations provide that:

“the consumer is to be treated as having cancelled the contract in the cancellation period if the communication is sent before the end of that period.”⁷⁰⁸

It is for a consumer to show that the contract was cancelled in the cancellation period which they set out.⁷⁰⁹

No effective waiver of right by consumer

38-115

⚠ As earlier noted, under the 2013 Regulations, where the right to cancel exists, the consumer may choose to cancel without giving any reason. In other situations where English law recognises a right in a party to a contract to set that contract aside (whether rescission for misrepresentation or termination for breach of contract), such a party may instead choose to affirm the contract and so lose the right to set it aside.⁷¹⁰ While the 2013 Regulations do not so provide, the 2011 Directive (which they implement) states expressly that, where the law applicable to the contract is the law of a Member State, “consumers may not waive the rights conferred on them by the national measures transposing this Directive”.⁷¹¹ ⚠ Given the duty of national courts to interpret the Regulations so as to conform to the UK's obligation faithfully to implement the Directive,⁷¹² it is submitted that a consumer would not lose any right of cancellation under the Regulations by any purported affirmation of the contract or waiver of the right to do so. On the other hand, this position is unlikely to be of great practical significance given the short-lived nature of the right of cancellation, except in the case where the trader has not informed the consumer of the right of cancellation, but in that case it is unlikely that the consumer would know of it and therefore be found in possession of the knowledge of the right requisite for affirmation or waiver.⁷¹³

Contract unenforceable where right of cancellation exists

38-116

Under the earlier Cancellation of Contracts made in a Consumer's Home or Place of Work, etc. Regulations 2008, a trader's failure to provide the information to the consumer rendered a contract unenforceable against the consumer and, as a result, it was held that a company which hired a car to a consumer could not recover the hire costs from an insurer liable for damage caused to the consumer's car which the hired car replaced.⁷¹⁴ While the 2013 Regulations do not make express provision as to the unenforceability of an off-premises contract or distance contract in these circumstances,⁷¹⁵ it is submitted that, where a right of cancellation in a consumer exists, then the contract is unenforceable against the consumer, with the potential for similar effects on the liability of a third party.

-
- 653. 2013 Regulations reg.27(1) (referring to Pt 3). For the definition of these contracts see above, paras 38-076 (off-premises contract); 38-081 (distance contract) and 38-085 (on-premises contract).
 - 654. 2013 Regulation reg.27(2)–(4) and cf. reg.7(2)–(5) whose contents are noted above, para. 38-072. The only qualification on this position is that contracts for passenger transport services are wholly excluded from Pt 3 of the 2013 Regulations, whereas their exclusion from Pt 2 finds an exception in the case of distance contracts concluded by electronic means: see above, para.38-073.
 - 655. Above, para.38-071.
 - 656. 2013 Regulations reg.28(1)(b).
 - 657. 2013 Regulations reg.28(1)(d) as explained by 2011 Directive recital 49.
 - 658. 2013 Regulations reg.28(1)(f).
 - 659. 2013 Regulations reg.28(1)(h).
 - 660. 2013 Regulations reg.28(1)(g); “public auction” is defined by reg.5 “public auction”. The full list is contained in 2013 Regulations reg.28.
 - 661. 2013 Regulations reg.28(3).
 - 662. The terminology adopted by the Regulations for this purpose differs from the terminology used by the 2011 Directive, which refers to what appears in the Regulations as the right to cancel as a right to withdraw. As earlier noted at para.38-061, the Directive also provides for the case (as recognised by some national laws) of a consumer being bound by an offer (art.5(1), art.6(1)) and therefore appears to extend the consumer's right to withdraw to the situation where he would otherwise be bound by his offer to conclude a distance or off-premises contract: art.12(b) describing the effects of withdrawal, even though arts 9 to 11 which describe the right of withdrawal itself and its exercise do not refer to this.
 - 663. 2013 Regulations reg.29(1) referring to regs 34(3) and (9), 35(5) and 36(4), on which see below, paras 38-119, 38-120, 38-122 and 38-124.
 - 664. Vol.I, para.2-093. Withdrawal of an offer is often described as its revocation.
 - 665. Vol.I, paras 2-094—2-096.
 - 666. 2013 Regulations regs 32(1), 34 and 38.
 - 667. On the general rules at common law, see Vol.I, paras 2-011—2-014 (offer and invitation to treat); paras 2-026 et seq. (acceptance).

- 668. Vol.I, paras 2-059—2-060.
- 669. 2013 Regulations reg.29(1).
- 670. 2013 Regulations reg.29(1), referring to reg.34(3), 34(9), 34(5) and 36(4) on which see below, paras 38-119, 38-120, 38-122 and 38-124.
- 671. 2011 Directive recital 37.
- 672. On which, see below, paras 38-111—38-112.
- 673. 2013 Regulations reg.36(1). On the definition of “durable medium” in reg.5, see above, n.421.
- 674. 2013 Regulations reg.36(2). This restriction on the availability of the right of cancellation does not apply to contracts for the supply of water, gas, electricity or district heating (on which see above, n.431). For the consequences of a consumer’s exercise of a right to cancel falling outside this restriction where services are supplied during the cancellation period; see 2013 Regulations reg.36(3)–(6), below, paras 38-123—38-125.
- 675. For “digital content” and “tangible medium” see 2013 Regulations reg.5, above, para.38-070.
- 676. 2013 Regulations reg.37(1).
- 677. 2013 Regulations reg.37(2). For the consequences of a consumer’s exercise of a right to cancel falling outside this restriction, see reg.37(3)–(4).
- 678. Directive 85/577/EEC art.5(1); Directive 97/7/EC art.6(1).
- 679. On which see above, para.38-020.
- 680. Directive 2011/83/EU recital 40.
- 681. Directive 2011/83/EU art.9.
- 682. 2013 Regulations regs 30 and 31.
- 683. Directive 2011/83/EU recital 41 referring to Council Regulation (EEC, Euratom) 1182/71, [1971] O.J. L124/1.
- 684. 2013 Regulations reg.30(2) (emphasis added). A similar formulation is used in regs 30(3), (4), (5) and (6) and 31(2) and (3).
- 685. Directive 2011/83/EU arts 9 and 10.
- 686. For the definition of “service contract” see above, para.38-068.
- 687. “Digital content” means “data which are produced and supplied in digital form”: 2013 Regulations reg.5 “digital content”. On the definition of “durable medium” in reg.5, see above, n.421.
- 688. This results from Directive 2011/83/EU reg.3(5) as explained by paras 38-059-38-061, above.
- 689. For the definition of “sales contract” see above, para.38-068.
- 690. 2013 Regulations reg.30(3).
- 691. 2013 Regulations reg.30(4)–(6).
- 692. Directive 2011/83/EU art.9(2)(b).

- 693. Directive 2011/83/EU arts 18 and 20, which were first implemented by 2013 Regulations regs 42 and 43, but were then re-implemented by the Consumer Rights Act 2015 ss.28 and 29: see below, paras 38-489—38-490. These provisions all refer to goods coming into the possession of the consumer or a person identified by the consumer to take the possession of the goods.
- 694. The explanation in this recital supports the view that the Directive requires an autonomous view of the notion of “goods coming into the physical possession” of the consumer and this means that art.3(5)’s saving of unregulated contract law issues for national law would not apply, even if this notion were seen as belonging to “contract law”: on the significance of art.3(5), see above, paras 38-059—38-061.
- 695. Above, para.38-016.
- 696. 2013 Regulations regs 10(1) (off-premises contracts); 13(1) (distance contracts). The information requirement is contained in Sch.2 para.(l). In Hamilton v Volksbank Filder eG (C-412/06) [2008] E.C.R. I-02383 at paras 34-36 the ECJ held that the supply of incorrect information on the consumer’s right of cancellation is equivalent to no information and this was confirmed by the form of words used by Directive 2011/83/EU art.10, 2013 Regulations reg.31(1).
- 697. 2013 Regulations reg.31(1) and see above, para.38-112 for the normal cancellation periods applicable to other types of contract.
- 698. 2013 Regulations reg.31(2).
- 699. Directive 85/577/EEC art.5.
- 700. Heininger v Bayerische Hypo- und Vereinsbank AG (C-481/99) [2001] E.C.R. I-09945 at paras 44-48.
- 701. Directive 97/7/EC art.6.
- 702. Directive 2011/83/EU recital 43. The uniform nature of this period stems from the Directive’s general requirement of “full harmonisation” in art.4, see above, para.38-058.
- 703. 2013 Regulations reg.32(2), referring to cancellation under reg.29(1). cf. above, para.38-108 on the position as regards the consumer’s right to withdraw an offer.
- 704. 2013 Regulations reg.32(3)(a); Sch.3 Pt B.
- 705. 2013 Regulations reg.32(3)(b).
- 706. On “durable medium” see 2013 Regulations reg.5 as noted above, n.421.
- 707. 2013 Regulations reg.32(4).
- 708. 2013 Regulations reg.32(5).
- 709. 2013 Regulations reg.32(6).
- 710. See Vol.I, paras 7-132—7-133 (misrepresentation) and 24-003 (breach of contract).
- 711.  Directive 2011/83/EU art.25, first sentence. Article 25 distinguishes this from the exclusion of cancellation by agreement by its second sentence providing that “any contractual terms which directly or indirectly waive or restrict the rights resulting from the Directive shall not be binding on the consumer”. cf. Salat v Barutis [2013] EWCA Civ 1499, [2014] E.C.C. 2 at [22] (CA “inclined to agree” that under the Cancellation of Contracts made in a Consumer’s Home or Place of Work etc. Regulations 2008 (SI 2008/1816) (which were replaced by the 2013 Regulations) a consumer cannot affirm a contract that would otherwise be unenforceable against him).

712. Above, para.38-013.

713. See Vol.I, paras 7-133 and 24-003.

714. SI 2008/1816 reg.7(6); W v Veolia Environmental Services (UK Plc) [2011] EWHC 2020 (QB), [2012] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 667 at [49] and [54] applying to this context Dimond v Lovell [2000] UKHL 27, [2002] 1 A.C. 384.

715. Above, para.38-101.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 4. - Information Requirements and Consumers' Rights of Cancellation

(d) - The Consumer's Right of Cancellation or Withdrawal

(ii) - The Effects of Cancellation or Withdrawal

General effect of cancellation

38-117

The 2013 Regulations provide that where a consumer exercises the right of cancellation which they create, "cancellation ends the obligations of the parties to perform the contract". ⁷¹⁶ This form of words, which follows closely the 2011 Directive, ⁷¹⁷ is restricted to the parties' obligations to perform the contract, but it is submitted that the notion of "performance" for these purposes should not be interpreted narrowly so as to include only the main obligations of the parties to supply goods or services (on the one hand) or to pay (on the other), but extends at least to certain types of incidental obligations, such as an obligation in a consumer to take a dispute to arbitration (to the extent to which a contract term creating such an obligation were otherwise to be binding on the consumer ⁷¹⁸) as well, of course, to any secondary obligation to pay damages for non-performance which might otherwise have arisen. On the other hand, the 2013 Regulations assume that cancellation by the consumer does not terminate all the obligations arising from the contract itself, as they provide that the trader must bear the direct cost of returning the goods where he has agreed to do so ⁷¹⁹ and the "contract is to be treated as including a term that the trader must bear the direct cost of the consumer returning the goods" where the trader failed to provide the consumer with the information about the consumer bearing those costs as the Regulations elsewhere provide. ⁷²⁰ These provisions therefore assume that the intended effect of these contract terms survives cancellation. Moreover, the 2013 Regulations provide that cancellation by the consumer gives rise to obligations in the trader to reimburse payments received from the consumer and obligations in the consumer to return goods received and to pay an amount in respect of any diminution in the value of the goods as a result of their handling beyond what is necessary to establish their nature, characteristics and functioning, in both cases subject to a series of provisos and qualifications ⁷²¹ or, in the case of some services, to pay to the trader a proportionate amount for the supply of the service during the cancellation period, ⁷²² though it is earlier provided that, apart from these specified situations, the consumer may cancel "without any liability". ⁷²³ Overall, in this way the 2013 Regulations seek to set out the principal consequences of cancellation for both the parties and to preclude any other "liabilities" in the consumer, this reflecting the 2011 Directive's concern to address these issues at a European level in contrast to the earlier directives whose provisions gave rise to uncertainty as to whether they were to be settled by the Court of Justice by the development of autonomous interpretations or by national laws. ⁷²⁴ On the other hand, where cancellation of the contract gives rise to issues between the parties other than those regulated by the 2011 Directive (as implemented by the 2013 Regulations), then art.3(5) of the Directive allocates them to national contract law for resolution. ⁷²⁵

Reimbursement by the trader of payments received from the consumer

38-118

❗ As regards all the types of contract (sales contracts, service contracts and contracts for the supply of digital content not on a durable medium) which may give rise to a right of cancellation, ⁷²⁶ on cancellation or withdrawal of an offer by the consumer, the trader must reimburse “all payments, other than payments for delivery, ⁷²⁷ received from the consumer”, subject only to the possibility of some allowance being made in respect of the diminution in value of the goods as a result of their handling by the consumer. ⁷²⁸ This general right of restitution of monies paid is clearly not dependent on the normal rules of English common law in similar circumstances, notably the requirement of total failure of consideration. ⁷²⁹ Under the Regulations, reimbursement must be made without delay, and in any event not later than the following specified days: in the case of sales contracts, if the trader has not offered to collect the goods, the end of 14 days after the day on which the trader receives the goods back or, if earlier, the day on which the consumer supplies evidence of having sent the goods back; otherwise, the end of 14 days after the day on which the trader is informed of the consumer’s decision to withdraw the offer or cancel the contract. ⁷³⁰  The trader must make the reimbursement using the same means of payment as the consumer used for the initial transaction, unless the consumer has expressly agreed otherwise; and the trader must not impose any fee on the consumer in respect of the reimbursement. ⁷³¹

Payments for delivery

38-119

The trader must reimburse any payment for delivery ⁷³² received from the consumer, unless the consumer expressly chose a kind of delivery costing more than the “least expensive common and generally acceptable kind of delivery offered by the trader”, in which case the trader must reimburse any payment for delivery received from the consumer up to the amount the consumer would have paid if the consumer had chosen that kind of delivery. ⁷³³

Allowance for diminution in value as a result of handling

38-120

In the case of sales contracts, if the value of the goods is diminished:

“by any amount as a result of handling of the goods by the consumer beyond what is necessary to establish the nature, characteristics and functioning of the goods, the trader may recover that amount from the consumer, up to the contract price.” ⁷³⁴

For these purposes, the Regulations explain that handling of this kind takes place in particular if “it goes beyond the sort of handling that might reasonably be allowed in a shop”. ⁷³⁵ While not so restricted by the Regulations, a trader’s right of recovery on this ground will normally apply only to cases of cancellation of the contract, as it assumes that the trader has already supplied the goods to the consumer and such a supply will normally take place only after a contract is concluded (and therefore after the consumer’s right to withdraw his or her offer has ceased ⁷³⁶). This “recovery” by the trader may take the form either of a deduction from any payment to be reimbursed from the consumer or by a payment to be made by the consumer to the trader. ⁷³⁷ A trader who has failed to provide the consumer with information on the right to cancel as required by the Regulations has no right to recovery on this ground. ⁷³⁸

Return of goods by the consumer in the event of cancellation

38-121

In general, where a contract is cancelled by the consumer, the latter must send back the goods to the trader or hand them over to the trader or to a person authorised by him to receive them ⁷³⁹ without undue delay and in any event not later than 14 days after the day on which the consumer informs the trader that he or she is cancelling the contract. ⁷⁴⁰ The consumer must bear the cost of doing so (but no other cost), ⁷⁴¹ unless the trader has agreed to bear them or unless the trader has failed to provide the consumer with the information about the consumer bearing those costs as the Regulations require.⁷⁴² The exceptions to this position are found in the cases where the trader has offered to collect the goods or where in the case of an off-premises contract, the goods were delivered to the consumer's home when the contract was entered into and could not, by their nature, normally be returned by post.⁷⁴³ In these cases, it is the trader's responsibility to collect the goods and the consumer is not required to bear any cost of returning them unless the trader offered to collect the goods and the consumer has agreed to bear the cost of his or her doing so.⁷⁴⁴

Trader's duties have contractual force

38-122

The 2013 Regulations provide that in the case of cancellation of a contract, the contracts are "to be treated as including a term" that the trader must reimburse payments (including, where applicable, delivery payments) according to the rules earlier noted⁷⁴⁵ and to bear the direct cost of the consumer returning the goods where he or she has agreed to do so.⁷⁴⁶ There is no equivalent position in the Consumer Rights Directive, but the Directive permits Member States to give contractual force to the duties which it requires for traders, either as a matter of their general duty to put in place adequate and effective means to ensure compliance with the Directive or as a matter of their residual competence as regards "contract law" issues raised by the Directive but not regulated by it since the latter means that the remedial consequences of giving the trader's duties contractual force rests with general English law on this subject.⁷⁴⁷ For this purpose, it is not clear whether breach of a trader's duty of reimbursement and to bear the cost would be remedied by the action for the agreed sum or damages, the difference being that the latter would extend to losses caused by the breach rather than simply the sum in question, subject to the restrictions generally applicable for this purpose.⁷⁴⁸ It should be noted that the Regulations do not include any parallel provision setting the consumer's duties (viz to send back the goods⁷⁴⁹ at his or her own cost) as a term of the contract.⁷⁵⁰

Supply of services or digital content in cancellation period

38-123

As earlier explained, where services or digital content not on a tangible medium are supplied during the cancellation period at the request of the consumer, the consumer may lose the right to cancel the contract which would normally be available.⁷⁵¹

38-124

In the case of services supplied during the cancellation period where the consumer does not lose the right to cancel in this way and the consumer chooses to exercise this right, the 2013 Regulations distinguish two situations. On the one hand, where the service is supplied in response to an express request (made, in the case of an off-premises contract, on a durable medium), in principle the consumer must pay the trader an amount for the supply of the service for the period for which it is supplied, ending with the time when the trader is informed of the consumer's decision to cancel, in proportion to what has been supplied in comparison with the full coverage of the contract.⁷⁵² This amount is to be calculated on the basis of the total contract price or, if this is excessive,⁷⁵³ on the basis of the market value of the service that has been supplied at the time of the conclusion of the contract calculated by comparing prices for equivalent services supplied by other traders.⁷⁵⁴ On the other hand, where the service is not supplied in response to a request by the consumer as outlined above or where the trader has failed to provide the consumer with information on his or her right to cancel or on his or her liability to pay the reasonable cost⁷⁵⁵ of any services requested, then "[t]he consumer bears no cost for the supply of the service, in full or in part, in the cancellation period".⁷⁵⁶

38-125

Special provision is made for contracts under which digital content is supplied not in a tangible medium. In this case, where the digital content is supplied during the cancellation period in circumstances in which the consumer does not lose the right to cancel by reason of his express request that it should be so supplied, ⁷⁵⁷ and the consumer chooses to exercise this right, the 2013 Regulations provide that the consumer bears no cost for the supply (whether in full or in part) of the digital content in the cancellation period ⁷⁵⁸ as long as the consumer did not give “prior express consent to the beginning of the performance of the digital content before the end of the 14 day cancellation period” (as explained earlier ⁷⁵⁹), the consumer gave that consent but did not acknowledge when giving it that the right to cancel would be lost, or the trader failed to provide confirmation of the consumer’s consent or acknowledgment. ⁷⁶⁰ Where none of these situations apply, then under 2011 Directive the consumer is liable to pay a reasonable cost in respect of receipt of the digital content, ⁷⁶¹ but the provision in the Regulations governing liability in the consumer to pay a reasonable cost is worded in a way which is restricted to contracts for the supply of a service, ⁷⁶² which are generally distinguished in the Regulations from contracts for the supply of digital content not on a durable medium. ⁷⁶³

Effect of withdrawal or cancellation on ancillary contracts

38-126

Regulation 38 makes special provision for the effect of withdrawal of an offer or cancellation of a consumer contract on “ancillary contracts”. For this purpose:

“An “ancillary contract” , in relation to a distance or off-premises contract (the ‘main contract’), means a contract by which the consumer acquires goods or services related to the main contract, where those goods or services are provided—by the trader, or

(a)

(b)

by a third party on the basis of an arrangement between the third party and the trader”. ⁷⁶⁴

Regulation 38 makes clear that such an ancillary contract may include the provision of a financial service. ⁷⁶⁵ Examples of such an “ancillary contract” include an extended warranty, insurance (for example, for a purchase of jewellery) or a credit agreement to finance goods or services, ⁷⁶⁶ but not all contracts of this type concluded at the same time as the purchase of goods or services from a trader are “ancillary contracts” for the purposes of reg.38 as the latter requires that the ancillary contract is provided either by that trader or by a “third party on the basis of an arrangement between the third party and the trader”. Where these conditions are satisfied, reg.38 provides that where a consumer withdraws an offer or cancels the main contract, then “any ancillary contracts are automatically terminated, without any costs for the consumer” other than the costs foreseen by the provisions governing the consumer’s liability for “costs” on cancellation of that main contract. ⁷⁶⁷ When a trader is informed by a consumer of a decision to withdraw an offer or cancel a contract, the trader must inform any other trader with whom the consumer has an ancillary contract that it is terminated. ⁷⁶⁸ In terms of payments, the Departmental Implementing Guidance explains that “responsibility for refund should follow the original flow of funds”, so that if the money for the ancillary contract was paid directly to the trader they should reimburse the consumer and recover from the third party; but if the money was paid directly by the consumer to the third party, the third party should refund the money to the consumer. ⁷⁶⁹

- 716. 2013 Regulations reg.33(1)(a).
- 717. Directive 2011/83/EU art.12(a).
- 718. In English law, such an arbitration clause would not be binding on a consumer where a claim refers to a “modest amount”, currently £5,000, under the Arbitration Act 1996 ss.89, 90 on which see below, para.38-276 (unfair contract terms).
- 719. 2013 Regulations reg.35(5)(a).
- 720. 2013 Regulations reg.35(5)(b), 35(6); the information requirement is contained in Sch.2 para.(m).
- 721. 2013 Regulations regs 34 and 35 on which see below, paras 38-118 et seq.
- 722. 2013 Regulations reg.36(3)–(6), below, para.38-124.
- 723. 2013 Regulations reg.29(1).
- 724. For the earlier case-law on these issues see: Travel Vac SL v Antelm Sanchis (C-423/97) [1999] E.C.R. I-2195 at paras 53-60, Schulte v Deutsche Bausparkasse Badenia AG (350/03) [2005] E.C.R. I-0912 at paras 67-69, 82-93, Travel Vac SL v Antelm Sanchis (C-423/97) [1999] E.C.R. I-2195 at paras 53-60, Hamilton v Volksbank Filder eG (C-412/06) [2008] E.C.R. I-02383 at paras 37-49 (all doorstep selling), Messner v Firma Stefan Krüger (C-489/07) [2009] E.C.R. I-07315, Handelsgesellschaft Heinrich Heine GmbH v Verbraucherzentrale Nordrhein-Westfalen eV (C-511/08) [2010] E.C.R. I-03047 (both distance contracts).
- 725. Above, paras 38-059—38-061.
- 726. Above, para.38-107.
- 727. On which see below, para.38-119.
- 728. 2013 Regulations reg.34(1) referring to reg.34(10).
- 729. On which see Vol.I, paras 29-057 et seq.
- 730.  2013 Regulations reg.34(4)–(6) (as amended by SI 2015/1629 art.7).
- 731. 2013 Regulations reg.34(7) and (8).
- 732. “Delivery” means “voluntary transfer of possession from one person to another”: 2013 Regulations reg.5. And see above, para.38-112.
- 733. 2013 Regulations reg.34(2) and (3).
- 734. 2013 Regulations reg.34(9).
- 735. 2013 Regulations reg.34(12); 2011 Directive recital 47.
- 736. Above, para.38-108.
- 737. 2013 Regulations reg.34(10).
- 738. 2013 Regulations reg.34(11). On this information requirement see above, para.38-113.
- 739. 2013 Regulations reg.35(2). Regulation 35(3) explains that the consumer must send them back to any address specified by the trader for this purpose or for the consumer to contact him and, failing this, any place of business of the trader.

- 740. 2013 Regulations reg.35(4).
- 741. 2013 Regulations reg.35(5)(a) and (7).
- 742. 2013 Regulations reg.35(5). The information requirement is set out by Sch.2 para.(m), above, para.38-093.
- 743. 2013 Regulations reg.35(1).
- 744. 2013 Regulations reg.35(1) and (8) (as amended by SI 2013/3134 reg.9(2)).
- 745. 2013 Regulations reg.34(1), (2) (on which see above, paras 38-118—38-119); reg.34(13).
- 746. 2013 Regulations reg.35(2) and (5)(a) (on which see above, para.38-121); reg.35(6).
- 747. 2011 Directive art.3(5), above, paras 38-059—38-061.
- 748. See Vol.I, paras 21-041, 26-008.
- 749. 2013 Regulations reg.35(2)(a).
- 750. 2013 Regulations reg.35(5).
- 751. 2013 Regulations regs 36(1)–(2), 37(1)–(2), above, para.38-110 (which set out the further conditions for the application of this restriction).
- 752. 2013 Regulations reg.36(4).
- 753. Directive 2011/83/EU recital 50 suggests that the burden of proof as to the excessive character of the price lies on the consumer.
- 754. 2013 Regulations reg.36(5) implementing Directive 2011/83/EU art.14(3). The reference to the time of the conclusion of the contract reflects the gloss contained in recital 50 of the Directive.
- 755. This description is not used by 2013 Regulations reg.36(4) but is used by Sch.2 para.(n).
- 756. 2013 Regulations reg.36(6). In this form of words “in full or in part” could refer either to the supply or the cost, whereas Directive 2011/83/EU art.14(4)(a) makes clear that it refers to the supply. The categories of information referred to in the text are required to be supplied by the trader under regs 10(1)(a) and 13(1)(a) as set out in Sch.2 paras (l) and (n), on which see above, para.38-093.
- 757. On which see 2013 Regulations reg.37(1) and (2), above, para.38-110.
- 758. 2013 Regulations reg.37(4) which refers confusingly to “no cost for supply of the digital content, in full or in part” in which “in full or in part” could refer either to the supply or the cost, whereas Directive 2011/83/EU art.14(4)(b) makes clear that it refers to the supply.
- 759. Above, para.38-110 referring to 2013 Regulations reg.30.
- 760. 2013 Regulations reg.37(4) referring to regs 12(5) and 16(3).
- 761. 2011 Directive art.14(3).
- 762. 2013 Regulations reg.36(4) and (5), above, para.38-124.
- 763. Above, paras 38-068 and 38-070.
- 764. 2013 Regulations reg.38(3).

- 765. 2013 Regulations reg.38(4) (technically putting aside the general exclusion of financial services contracts in reg.6(1)(b)).
- 766. Department for Business Innovation & Skills, Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations, Implementing Guidance (December 2013) A, para.5.
- 767. 2013 Regulations reg.38(1), referring to reg.34(3) (on which see para.38-119); reg.34(9) (on which see para.38-120); reg.35(5) (on which see para.38-122); and reg.36(4) (on which see para.38-124).
- 768. 2013 Regulations reg.38(2).
- 769. Department for Business Innovation & Skills, Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations, Implementing Guidance (December 2013) G, para.20.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 4. - Information Requirements and Consumers' Rights of Cancellation

(e) - Enforcement

The scheme in the 2013 Regulations

38-127

The 2013 Regulations provide their own dedicated regime for the enforcement of the requirements which they set out. Under this regime, local weights and measures authorities are designated as “enforcement authorities” ⁷⁷⁰ and it is provided that it is their duty to consider any complaint made to it about contravention of the Regulations unless it appears to be frivolous or vexatious or another enforcement authority has notified the Competition and Markets Authority (CMA) ⁷⁷¹ that it agrees to consider the complaint, in which case that other authority comes under a duty to do so. ⁷⁷² An enforcement authority may apply for an injunction against any person who appears to it to be responsible for a contravention of the Regulations and a court hearing such an application may grant an injunction “on such terms as it thinks fit to secure compliance with these Regulations”. ⁷⁷³ However, the Regulations envisage that an enforcement authority may instead seek an undertaking from a person in respect of its contravention and/or future compliance with the Regulations as they provide that an enforcement authority must notify the CMA of “any undertaking given to it by or on behalf of any person who appears to it to be responsible for a contravention of these Regulations”. ⁷⁷⁴ An enforcement authority must also notify the CMA of the outcome of any application to a court for an injunction and of the terms of any undertaking given to the court or order made by it, or the outcome of any application made by such an authority to enforce a previous court order. ⁷⁷⁵ For all these purposes, clearly the main concern is with the enforcement of the various requirements made of traders by the Regulations, ⁷⁷⁶ but the Regulations enforcement regime is not restricted to this context and could in principle extend to the enforcement of the duties which they impose on consumers, notably, the duty to return goods after cancellation of a distance or off-premises contract. ⁷⁷⁷ This is specifically foreseen by the 2011 Directive’s preamble, which provides that:

“In situations where the trader or the consumer does not fulfil the obligations relating to the exercise of the right of withdrawal, penalties provided for by national legislation in accordance with this Directive should apply as well as contract law provisions.” ⁷⁷⁸

However, it will surely be very rare for an enforcement authority to seek to exercise its enforcement powers under the 2013 Regulations against a consumer.

“Enforcement orders” under the Enterprise Act 2002

38-128

Under Pt 8 of the Enterprise Act 2002, the CMA (replacing the OFT) ⁷⁷⁹ and other persons or bodies, termed “enforcers”, may apply to the court for an “enforcement order” against a person to stop breaking legislation enacted for the benefit of consumers. ⁷⁸⁰ The 2002 Act distinguishes for this purpose between the infringement of domestic legislation ⁷⁸¹ and of “European Community” legislation, including within the latter for this purpose a number of directives whose UK implementing legislation is the subject of this chapter and, for present purposes, the Consumer Rights Directive 2011.⁷⁸² “Enforcers” are divided into “general enforcers”,⁷⁸³ which include the CMA and local weights and measures authorities in Great Britain; “designated enforcers”, which are any public or private body in the United Kingdom which the Secretary of State designates as a person or body one of whose purposes is the protection of the collective interests of consumers and which include the Civil Aviation Authority, the Information Commissioner and the Rail Regulator⁷⁸⁴; “Community enforcers”, which are qualified entities listed for this purpose by the EU, the list including a number of public and private bodies (notably, consumers’ associations)⁷⁸⁵; and “CPC enforcers”, which are bodies or persons designated by the Secretary of State under the EU Regulation on consumer protection co-operation,⁷⁸⁶ these including the CMA, local weights and measures authorities and certain other public bodies and persons.⁷⁸⁷ The inclusion of “Community enforcers” within the class of those entitled to apply for enforcement orders reflects the policy of the EU to promote cross-border policing under its own consumer protection legislation.⁷⁸⁸ The designation of “CPC enforcers” seeks to give effect to a policy of encouraging and facilitating co-operation between European national authorities in the enforcement of consumer protection.⁷⁸⁹ Where a domestic or a Community infringement (including therefore an infringement of the requirements of the 2013 Regulations) harms the collective interest of consumers,⁷⁹⁰ an “enforcer” can apply to the court for an enforcement order, but only after engaging in appropriate consultation with the person against whom the order would be made and, if the enforcer is not the CMA, the enforcer has given notice to the CMA of the enforcer’s intention to apply for the enforcement order, and the appropriate minimum period has elapsed.⁷⁹¹ Where a court finds that an infringement has been committed or is likely to be committed by the defendant to proceedings brought under these provisions, it may make an enforcement order, notably, to prevent the defendant from continuing the relevant conduct.⁷⁹²

“Enhanced consumer measures”

38-129

⚠ The Consumer Rights Act 2015⁷⁹³ amends the Enterprise Act 2002 Pt 8 so as to extend a court’s power to make an “enforcement order” under that Act to require a person against whom the order is made to take “enhanced consumer measures”.⁷⁹⁴ ⚠ There are three categories of enhanced consumer measures: the “redress category”, the “compliance category”, and the “choice category”.⁷⁹⁵ Each of these categories of measure are defined by the legislation,⁷⁹⁶ but for present purposes of most interest is the “redress category”, which includes:

“(a) measures offering compensation or other redress to consumers who have suffered loss as a result of the conduct which has given rise to the enforcement order or undertaking, where the conduct referred to in paragraph (a) relates to a contract, measures offering such consumers the option to terminate (but not vary) that contract,

(b)

(c)

where such consumers cannot be identified, or cannot be identified without disproportionate cost to the subject of the enforcement order or undertaking, measures intended to be in the collective interests of consumers.”⁷⁹⁷

It will be seen that this is an innovative new power, allowing a court to order a trader to offer compensation to consumers who have suffered loss as a result of an infringement of a legislative provision for their protection or the option of terminating any contract to which that infringement relates. However, this power is subject both to the conditions of the availability of an enforcement order under Pt 8 generally (and in particular that an infringement harms the collective interests of consumers ⁷⁹⁸) and to a general requirement that such enhanced consumer measures may be ordered only as the court considers to be just and reasonable ⁷⁹⁹ and to a series of particular conditions set by the Act for this purpose. ⁸⁰⁰

-
- ^{770.} This is true of Great Britain; in Northern Ireland, the enforcement authority is the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment in Northern Ireland: 2013 Regulations reg.44(3).
- ^{771.} As from April 1, 2014, the Office of Fair Trading was abolished and its functions taken over by the Competition and Markets Authority (CMA).
- ^{772.} 2013 Regulations reg.44(1) and (2).
- ^{773.} 2013 Regulations reg.45(1) and (2).
- ^{774.} 2013 Regulations reg.46(a).
- ^{775.} 2013 Regulations reg.46(b) and (c).
- ^{776.} Notably, the information requirements (above, paras 38-086 et seq.) and the trader's responsibilities to reimburse payments made by the consumer following the latter's cancellation of a contract (above, para.38-118).
- ^{777.} 2013 Regulation reg.35, above, para.38-121.
- ^{778.} 2011 Directive recital 48, second sentence (emphasis added). The Directive expresses the consequences of withdrawal by the consumer in terms of obligations on the trader and the consumer (arts 13 and 14); its provisions on enforcement and penalties are found in arts 23 and 24.
- ^{779.} As from April 1, 2014, the OFT was abolished and its functions under the 1999 Regulations taken over by the Competition and Markets Authority ("CMA"): Enterprise and Regulatory Reform Act 2013 (Competition) (Consequential, Transitional and Saving Provisions) (No.2) Order 2014 (SI 2014/549) Sch.1(2) para.26; Public Bodies (The Office of Fair Trading Transfer of Consumer Advice Scheme Function and Modification of Enforcement Functions) Order 2013 (SI 2013/783) art.10.
- ^{780.} The Enterprise Act 2002 Pt 8 came into force on June 20, 2003: The Enterprise Act 2002 (Commencement No.3, Transitional and Transitory Provisions and Savings) Order 2003 (SI 2003/1397) art.2. It replaced the Fair Trading Act 1973 Pt III and the Stop Now Orders (EC Directive) Regulations 2001 (SI 2001/1422). Its provisions concerning "community infringements" implement into UK law Directive 2009/22/EC on injunctions for the protection of consumers' interests [2009] O.J. L110/30. It has been held that the conduct of a person taking place before the coming into force of Pt 8 of the Enterprise Act 2002 can form the basis of granting an order under it: Office of Fair Trading v MB Designs (Scotland) Ltd [2005] S.L.T. 691 at [23] OH of the Ct of Sess, where Pt 8 is discussed more generally. The powers contained in the Enterprise Act 2002 were extended (in particular) by the Enterprise Act 2002 (Amendment) Regulations 2006 (SI 2006/3363) implementing arts 4(6) and 13(4) of the Regulation 2006/2004 on co-operation between national authorities responsible for the enforcement of consumer protection laws (the Regulation on consumer protection co-operation), as amended by Directive 2005/29/EC. The Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.79 Sch.7 changes the powers contained in Pt 8 of the 2002 Act, as noted in the present and following paragraphs, in relation to conduct which occurs, or which is likely to occur, after its commencement: 2015 Act s.79(2). This section (together with the other provisions in Pts 1 and 2 of the Act) came into force on October 1, 2015: see below, para.38-335.

- 781. Enterprise Act 2002 s.211 (which was amended on the coming into force of s.75 and Sch.7 of the 2015 Act).
- 782. Enterprise Act 2002 ss.210 and 212, Sch.13 Pt 1 para.9F. The list in Sch.13 also includes the Package Travel Directive 90/314/EEC (Sch.13 Pt 1 para.4; see below, para.38-132); the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Directive 93/13 (Sch.13 Pt 1 para.5; see below, para.38-199); the Consumer Sales Directive 1999/44/EC (Sch.13 Pt 1 para.8; see below, para.38-400) and the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005/29/EC (Sch.13 Pt 1 para.9C; see below, para.38-147). The powers of a court in relation to “enforcement orders” are contained in s.215 of the 2002 Act and with the coming into force of the Consumer Rights Act 2015 are extended so as to allow a court to require a person against whom an order is made to take “enhanced consumer measures”: see below, para.38-129.
- 783. Enterprise Act 2002 s.213(1).
- 784. Enterprise Act 2002 s.213(2)–(4); the Enterprise Act 2002 (Pt 8 Designated Enforcers: Criteria for Designation, Designation of Public Bodies as Designated and Transitional Provisions) Order 2003 (SI 2003/1399) art.5, Sch.1.
- 785. Enterprise Act 2002 s.213(5); Directive 2009/22/EC on injunctions for the protection of consumers’ interests. The list of qualified bodies is listed by the EU Commission and published in the Official Journal.
- 786. Regulation (EC) 2006/2004 on cooperation between national authorities responsible for the enforcement of the consumer protection law [2004] O.J. L364/1.
- 787. Enterprise Act 2002 s.213(5A).
- 788. Directive 2009/22/EC recitals 4–8.
- 789. Regulation 2006/2004 recitals.
- 790. Enterprise Act 2002 ss.211(1)(c), 212(1). On the requirement of “harming the collective interest of consumers” see Office of Fair Trading v MB Designs (Scotland) Ltd [2005] S.L.T. 691 at [23], [1], [13]–[16].
- 791. Enterprise Act 2002 s.214(1) as replaced by Public Bodies (the Office of Fair Trading Transfer of Consumer Advice Scheme Function and Modification of Enforcement Functions) Order 2013 (SI 2013/783) art.9(2) and amended by Enterprise and Regulatory Reform Act 2013 (Competition) (Consequential, Transitional and Saving Provisions) Order 2014 (SI 2014/892) Sch.1(1) para.7.
- 792. 2002 Act ss.217–218 (as amended). Section 219 of the 2002 Act provides a power in enforcers to accept an undertaking from a person who has engaged, is engaging or who is likely to engage in conduct constituting an infringement in specified circumstances.
- 793. The Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.79 (which makes these amendments) was brought into force on October 1, 2015: the Consumer Rights Act 2015 (Commencement No.3, Transitional Provisions, Savings and Consequential Amendments) Order 2015 (SI 2015/1630) art.3(d) and (i). Section 79(2) of the Act provides that these amendments “have effect only in relation to conduct which occurs, or which is likely to occur, after the commencement of [s.79]”.
- 794.  2002 Act s.217(10A) as inserted by 2015 Act s.79, Sch.7 para.7. The power also extends the court’s power in relation to taking undertakings: 2002 Act s.217(10B). See Department for Business, Innovation and Skills, Enhanced Consumer Measures, Guidance for enforcers of consumer law (May 2015).
- 795. See 2002 Act s.219A(2)–(5) as inserted by 2015 Act s.79, Sch.7 para.8.
- 796. 2002 Act s.219A(1) as inserted by 2015 Act s.79, Sch.7 para.8.

- 797. 2002 Act s.219A(2) as inserted by 2015 Act s.79, Sch.7 para.8.
- 798. 2002 Act ss.211(1) and 212(2), above, para.38-128.
- 799. 2002 Act s.219B(1) as inserted by 2015 Act s.79, Sch.7 para.8.
- 800. 2002 Act s.219B and 219C as inserted by 2015 Act s.79, Sch.7 para.8. Similar conditions are imposed on the taking of undertakings by an enforcer: 2002 Act ss.219(5ZA) and (5ZB), 219A and 219B as inserted by 2015 Act s.79, Sch.7 paras 7 and 8.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 4. - Information Requirements and Consumers' Rights of Cancellation

(f) - Special Rules for Financial Services Contracts, Timeshare Contracts, Package Travel Contracts, Contracts Concluded by Electronic Means and ADR

(i) - Introduction

Special rules governing particular contracts in EU law

38-130

⚠ As outlined above, ⁸⁰¹ the general framework for the information requirements imposed on traders and rights of cancellation for consumers required by the Consumer Rights Directive 2011 and implemented by the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 is supplemented by a series of other special rules required by EU legislation governing particular categories of contract or governing particular situations. This is the case as regards the rules governing “distance contracts” for the supply of financial services, which are excluded from the scope of the 2011 Directive and also the 2013 Regulations, and remain subject to the dedicated regime provided by the Financial Services (Distance Marketing) Regulations 2004 ⁸⁰² which implemented the Financial Services Distance Marketing Directive 2002. ⁸⁰³ Moreover, EU directives on timeshare ⁸⁰⁴ and package travel ⁸⁰⁵ ⚠ impose special information requirements and rights of cancellation implemented in UK law by regulation and in the case of both of these types of contracts, the directives added other special rules governing these contracts which it will be convenient to discuss here. ⁸⁰⁶ Very recently, EU legislation has required Member States to ensure that ADR is available for consumer disputes ⁸⁰⁷ and, in doing so, has required them to impose on trader’s information as to the availability of ADR. ⁸⁰⁸ Finally, the Electronic Commerce (EC Directive) Regulations 2002 (implementing the relevant provisions of the Electronic Commerce Directive 2000) impose pre-contractual information requirements in respect of contracts made by electronic means by persons providing an information service to all whether or not their recipient is a consumer, but disallow their exclusion where the recipient is a consumer. ⁸⁰⁹

^{801.} Above, paras 38-056 et seq.

^{802.} SI 2004/2095.

^{803.} Directive 2002/65/EC concerning the distance marketing of consumer financial services [2002] O.J. L271/16 below, para.38-131.

^{804.} The UK first imposed legislation in this context by the Timeshare Act 1992, which preceded Directive 94/47/EC on the protection of purchasers in respect of certain aspects of contracts relating to the purchase of the right to use immovable properties on a timeshare basis. The 1994 Directive was implemented by amendment of the Timeshare Act 1992 by regulation: Timeshare Regulations 1997 (SI 1997/1081). Subsequently, the UK’s treatment of timeshare and related contracts has been made by the Timeshare, Holiday Products, Resale and Exchange Contracts Regulations 2010 (SI 2010/2960) which implements the later Directive 2008/122/EC on the protection of consumers in respect of certain aspects of timeshare, long-term holiday product, resale and exchange contracts [2009] O.J. L33/30 (which itself replaced the 1994 Directive). See below, paras 38-136—38-142.

805.

⚠ The Package Travel, Package Holidays and Package Tours Regulations 1992 (SI 1992/3288) implementing Directive 90/314/EEC of 13 June 1990 on package travel, package holidays and package tours [1990] O.J. L158/59; [1994] O.J. L280/83. See below, paras 38-132—38-135. The 1990 Directive is repealed and replaced by Directive (EU) 2015/2302 on package travel and linked travel arrangements [2015] O.J. L326/1. At the time of writing, this directive has not been implemented in UK law.

806.

The international conventions and UK and EU laws providing for the protection of passengers are discussed in Ch.35, Carriage by Air and Ch.36 Carriage by Land, paras 36-079 et seq.

807.

Directive 2013/11/EU of 21 May 2013 on alternative dispute resolution for consumer disputes [2013] O.J. L165/63; Regulation (EU) 524/2013 of 21 May 2013 on online dispute resolution for consumer disputes (Regulation on consumer ODR) [2013] O.J. L165/1.

808.

Directive 2013/11/EU art.13 implemented in UK law by the Alternative Dispute Resolution for Consumer Disputes (Competent Authorities and Information) Regulations 2015 (SI 2015/542) reg.19 below, para.38-143.

809.

SI 2002/2013 reg.9, below, para.38-144.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 4. - Information Requirements and Consumers' Rights of Cancellation

(f) - Special Rules for Financial Services Contracts, Timeshare Contracts, Package Travel Contracts, Contracts Concluded by Electronic Means and ADR

(ii) - The Distance Marketing of Financial Services

Summary

38-131

As earlier noted, contracts for the provision of financial services are excluded from the scope of the 2013 Regulations, ⁸¹⁰ but the earlier Financial Services (Distance Marketing) Regulations 2004 ⁸¹¹ make very broadly similar provision for distance contracts for the provision of financial services ⁸¹² as the 2013 Regulations make in relation to other contracts. So, a "distance contract" under the 2004 Regulations is defined as:

"any contract concerning one or more financial services concluded between a supplier and a consumer under an organised distance sales or service-provision scheme run by the supplier or by an intermediary, who, for the purpose of that contract, makes exclusive use of one or more means of distance communication up to and including the time at which the contract is concluded." ⁸¹³

The 2004 Regulations impose information requirements on the supplier of the service which are similar to those under the 2013 Regulations though tailored to suit the subject matter of the contracts, and this information is to be provided "in a clear and comprehensible manner appropriate to the means of distance communication used". ⁸¹⁴ However, certain categories of financial service contracts are excluded from these pre-contractual requirements ⁸¹⁵ and the 2004 Regulations also exclude more generally from their principal provisions governing information duties and the consumer's right to cancel some contracts for and supplies of financial services where equivalent provision is made by other regimes, notably, contracts and supplies made by suppliers who is an "authorised person, the making or performance of which constitutes or is part of a regulated activity carried on by him" within the meaning of the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 ⁸¹⁶ and those made by suppliers established in another State within the EEA where the law of that State regulates the contract or supply in accordance with the 2002 Directive. ⁸¹⁷ The 2002 Regulations' provisions on cancellation by the consumer are also similar to those under the 2013 Regulations (though they make a series of detailed exceptions to the availability of the consumer's right to cancel ⁸¹⁸) and so provide that the consumer may cancel within a period of 14 days from the conclusion of the contract, unless the supplier has failed to provide information as they require, in which case the period is 14 days after the day of supply of that information. ⁸¹⁹ The effect of an exercise of the right to cancel is that the notice of cancellation terminates the contract at the time when it is given, ⁸²⁰ with a consequential refund of monies paid by the consumer subject to a charge made by the supplier in respect of a "service actually provided by the supplier in accordance with the contract". ⁸²¹ Equally, the consumer must refund any sums or return any property transferred to him or her under the contract. ⁸²² The 2004 Regulations specify that any contract term which is inconsistent with their application is void ⁸²³ and that they will apply notwithstanding any choice of applicable law of a State which is not an EEA State if the contract or supply has a close connection with the territory of an EEA State. ⁸²⁴ The 2004

Regulations entrust their enforcement to the Financial Conduct Authority,⁸²⁵ the Competition and Markets Authority and local weights and measure authority, depending on the nature of the alleged breach,⁸²⁶ and this enforcement may include an application for an injunction.⁸²⁷

-
- ^{810.} 2013 Regulations reg.6(1)(b), above, para.38-071.
 - ^{811.} SI 2004/2095, implementing Directive 2002/65/EC concerning the distance marketing of consumer financial services [2002] O.J. L271/16, cf. above, para.38-025.
 - ^{812.} “Financial service” means any service of a banking, credit, insurance, personal pension, investment or payment nature: 2004 Regulations reg.2(1).
 - ^{813.} 2004 Regulations reg.2(1) “distance contract”.
 - ^{814.} 2004 Regulations reg.7 especially reg.7(2) and Sch.1.
 - ^{815.} 2004 Regulations reg.7(6) and (7) (consumer credit agreements and authorised non-business overdraft agreements).
 - ^{816.} 2004 Regulations reg.4(2) referring to regs 7–11, 15 (with the qualifications made by reg.4(5)). Regulation 4(3) disapplies the 2004 Regulations regs 7 and 8 (i.e. the main information requirements) as regards contracts made by a supplier who is an “appointed representative” within the meaning of s.39(2) of the Financial Services Markets Act 2000, where the making or performance of that contract constitutes or is part of a regulated activity within the meaning of s.22 of the 2000 Act (apart from an “exempt regulated activity” within the meaning of s.325(2) of that Act) carried on by the supplier, with similar exclusions as regards supplies by such persons as regards reg.15 (which concerns unsolicited services). Regulation 4(4) makes the same exclusions as regards contracts or supplies where the supplier is bound etc. by “rules of a designated professional body which are equivalent to those regulations” and the making or performance of that contract or the supply constitutes or is part of an exempt regulated activity carried on by the supplier. Regulations 6(3) and (4) make certain saving provisions in respect of these exclusions.
 - ^{817.} 2004 Regulations reg.4(1) referring to regs 7–14, 15. See further reg.4 more generally.
 - ^{818.} 2004 Regulations reg.11, e.g. contract where the price of that service depends on fluctuations of the money market outside the supplier's control.
 - ^{819.} 2004 Regulations regs 9 and 10.
 - ^{820.} 2004 Regulations reg.9(2).
 - ^{821.} 2004 Regulations reg.13, especially reg.13(3) and (6).
 - ^{822.} 2004 Regulations reg.13(11) and (12).
 - ^{823.} 2004 Regulations reg.16(1) reflecting 2002 Directive art.12(1).
 - ^{824.} 2004 Regulations reg.16(3) reflecting 2002 Directive art.12(2). To this extent, the general rules in the Rome I Regulation are therefore qualified: Regulation (EC) 593/2008 on the law applicable to contractual obligations (“Rome I Regulation”) on which see Vol.I, para.30-129 et seq.
 - ^{825.} 2004 Regulations reg.17.
 - ^{826.} 2004 Regulations reg.17.

827. 2004 Regulations reg.19. Further enforcement provisions are set out in regs 20–23.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 4. - Information Requirements and Consumers' Rights of Cancellation

(f) - Special Rules for Financial Services Contracts, Timeshare Contracts, Package Travel Contracts, Contracts Concluded by Electronic Means and ADR

(iii) - Package Travel, Package Holidays and Package Tours

Introduction

38-132

⚠ The Package Travel, Package Holidays and Package Tours Regulations 1992 ⁸²⁸ ("1992 Regulations") implement in UK law the Package Travel Directive 1990 ⁸²⁹ ⚠ (the "1990 Directive") which makes a series of "minimum harmonisation" requirements for the protection of consumers. ⁸³⁰ The 1992 Regulations apply to "packages" defined as the "pre-arranged combination" ⁸³¹ of at least two of three components (transport, accommodation or other tourist services not ancillary to either) and "accounting for a significant proportion of the package", when sold or offered for sale at an inclusive price ⁸³² and the service covers a period of more than 24 hours or includes overnight accommodation. ⁸³³ The "organiser" refers to the person who "otherwise than occasionally, organises packages and sells or offers them for sale, whether directly or through a retailer"; the "retailer" refers to "the person who sells or offers for sale the package put together by the organiser"; and the "consumer" generally refers to "the person who takes or agrees to take the package". ⁸³⁴ In addition to the rules outlined below, the Regulations protect the consumer in the event of the insolvency of the organiser or retailer. ⁸³⁵

Information, withdrawal and cancellation

38-133

The 1992 Regulations prohibit the organiser and the retailer from supplying to the consumer any "descriptive matter concerning a package, the price of a package or any other conditions applying to the contract" which contains any misleading information. ⁸³⁶ The Regulations require organisers of package travel etc. to provide brochures which set out information about the price and other matters which they set out in a Schedule, ⁸³⁷ and in principle any particulars supplied in such a brochure are contractually binding on the organiser and may give rise to a claim for damages. ⁸³⁸ The Regulations also impose on the organiser and/or the retailer a duty to provide specified travel information (such as visa requirements, health formalities or security for money paid over) before the contract is concluded and further practical travel information before the start of the journey: breach of these duties constitutes a criminal offence. ⁸³⁹ The Regulations impose requirements as to the contents and form of the contracts to which they apply, ⁸⁴⁰ to allow consumers to transfer their bookings, governing price revision and notice to the consumer of any significant alterations to essential terms. ⁸⁴¹ In this respect, the Regulations insert into the contract an implied term to the effect that where the organiser is constrained before departure to alter significantly an essential term of the contract, such as the price (to the extent to which the Regulations allow him to do so under their price revision rules), the organiser will notify the consumer to enable him to decide what to do and, in particular, to "withdraw from the contract without penalty or to accept a rider to the contract specifying the alterations made and their impact on the price". ⁸⁴² Where the consumer withdraws from a contract under this provision or where the organiser cancels the package for any reason other than the fault of the consumer, the consumer is entitled to take a substitute package (either of equivalent or superior quality or, if lower quality, with a reduction in price) or to repay him all monies paid as soon as possible, ⁸⁴³ together with compensation. ⁸⁴⁴ Other terms are implied into the contract to provide for cases where, after departure, a significant proportion of the services contracted for are not provided or the organiser realises that this will be the case; here, the organiser must make suitable alternative arrangements with compensation as appropriate. ⁸⁴⁵

Liability for proper performance of the contract

38-134

⚠ The 1992 Regulations also make the organiser and retailer of a package:

“liable to the consumer for the proper performance of the obligations under the contract, irrespective of whether such obligations are to be performed by that other party or by other suppliers of services.” ⁸⁴⁶

The organiser and retailer are liable for “any damage caused” to the consumer as a result of the improper performance of the contract, ⁸⁴⁷ ⚠ unless it is due neither to their own fault or to that of another supplier of services ⁸⁴⁸ because it is attributable to the consumer, or to other specified circumstances. ⁸⁴⁹ For this purpose, damages in respect of “damage” suffered by the consumer may include compensation for personal injuries and, following the position established at common law, physical discomfort and mental distress, including for disappointment and loss of enjoyment. ⁸⁵⁰ The Regulations provide that liability on this basis cannot be excluded in respect of personal injury or death, but liability for a term of the contract may limit the amount of compensation in respect of other damage unless the limitation is unreasonable. ⁸⁵¹

Enforcement

38-135

The 1992 Regulations make no dedicated provision for enforcement of their requirements by injunction, but the Enterprise Act 2002 includes the 1990 Directive in the list of instruments which may give rise to a “Community infringement” and so apply Pt 8 of the 2002 Act for their purposes. ⁸⁵² As a result, where an infringement by a trader of any of the requirements for consumers in the 2010 Regulations harms the collective interest of consumers, ⁸⁵³ an “enforcer” may apply to the court for an enforcement order, subject to the conditions set out earlier. ⁸⁵⁴

⁸²⁸. SI 1992/3288.

⁸²⁹. ⚠ Directive 90/314/EEC of 13 June 1990 on package travel, package holidays and package tours: [1990] O.J. L158/59. The 1990 Directive is repealed and replaced by Directive (EU) 2015/2302 on package travel and linked travel arrangements [2015] O.J. L326/1, which must be implemented by January 1, 2018. (At the time of writing, it has not been implemented in UK law.) The 2015 Directive requires significant changes to the law governing package travel, creating a new category of “linked travel arrangements” and in principle requiring “full harmonisation”.

⁸³⁰. 1990 Directive art.8. On the nature of “minimum harmonisation” see above, para.38-020.

⁸³¹. On which see Club-Tour, Viagens et Turismo SA v Goncalves Garrido (C-400/00) [2002] E.C.R.

I-4051.

- 832. On which see Sean Titshall v Qwerty Travel Ltd [2011] EWCA Civ 1569, [2011] C.T.L.C. 219.
- 833. 1992 Regulations reg.2(1) “package”, with further refinements.
- 834. 1992 Regulations reg.2(1) “organiser” and “retailer” and (2) (specifying other uses of “consumer”).
- 835. 1992 Regulations regs 16–22.
- 836. 1992 Regulations reg.4(1). Breach of this duty may give rise to liability to compensate the consumer for any resulting loss: reg.4(2).
- 837. 1992 Regulations reg.5.
- 838. 1992 Regulations reg.6(1), with exceptions set out in reg.6(2) and (3). The consumer’s claim is limited to damages by the stipulation that the particulars take effect as contractual warranties: reg.6(1).
- 839. 1992 Regulations regs 7 and 8. For incidental provision as to these and the other offences created by the Regulations see regs 24–27.
- 840. 1992 Regulations reg.9.
- 841. 1992 Regulations regs 10–12.
- 842. 1992 Regulations reg.12(a). It will be noted that the 1992 Regulations refer to a right to withdraw in the consumer, rather than a right to cancel in the consumer (unlike the 2013 Regulations which distinguish between a right to cancel a contract and a right to withdraw an offer, above, para.38-108). The 1992 Regulations instead use cancellation to refer to the organiser’s act of cancellation of the package as set out in regs 13(1)–(2).
- 843. 1992 Regulations reg.13(1)–(2).
- 844. 1992 Regulations reg.13(3)–(4). Compensation is not available where the package is cancelled owing to the package not reaching a minimum number of persons where this was indicated to the consumer in its description or where it is cancelled by reason of “unusual and unforeseeable circumstances beyond the control of the party by which could not have been avoided even if all due care had been exercised”, but the latter does not include overbooking.
- 845. 1992 Regulations reg.14.
- 846. 1992 Regulations reg.15(1). The contract must oblige the consumer to communicate to the supplier of the services concerned or to the organiser or retailer any failure in the services at the place where they are supplied: 1992 Regulations reg.15(9).
- 847.  “Improper performance” depends on the terms of the contract and in the absence of an assumption of an absolute obligation on the part of the supplier of the service, reasonable care will be required: Hone v Going Places Ltd [2001] EWCA Civ 947 at [15]–[16], applied in Evans v Kosmar Villa Holidays Plc [2007] EWCA Civ 1003, [2008] 1 W.L.R. 297 at [21] and Committeri v Club Mediterranee SA [2016] EWHC 1510 (QB) at [29], where it was also held (at [49]–[53]) that liability arising from national law implementing the 1990 Directive and therefore arising in respect of “the proper performance of the obligations arising from the contract” is contractual rather than non-contractual for the purposes of the EU private law instruments on applicable law, i.e. Regulation 593/2008 on the law applicable to contractual obligations (“Rome I”) [2008] O.J. L177/6 (on which see Vol.I, paras 30-129 et seq.) and Regulation 864/2007 of the European Parliament and of the Council law applicable to non-contractual obligations (“Rome II Regulation”) [2007] O.J. L199/40. See also X v Kuoni Travel Ltd [2016] EWHC 3090 (QB) at [43]–[44] (appeal pending).

- 848. It has been held that the reasonable care of the service supplier must be judged by the standards of the place where the service is provided: Lougheed v On the Beach Ltd [2014] EWCA Civ 1538 at [16] applying Wilson v Best Travel Ltd [1993] 1 All E.R. 353 (which was decided at common law).
- 849. 1992 Regulations reg.15(2).
- 850. See Milner v Carnival Plc [2010] EWCA Civ 389, [2010] P.I.Q.R. Q3. For the common law position see Jarvis v Swann Tours Ltd [1973] Q.B.233; Jackson v Horizon Holidays [1975] 1 W.L.R. 1468 and see Vol.I, para.26-144. In Leitner v Tui Deutschland GmbH & Co KG (C-168/00) [2002] E.C.R. I-2631 the ECJ held that “damage” under the Package Travel Directive 1990 includes loss of enjoyment and therefore national laws must allow recovery for this type of loss in their national legislation implementing the Directive.
- 851. 1992 Regulations reg.15(4)–(5). The contract may also provide for compensation to be limited in accordance with international conventions which govern the relevant services forming part of the package: reg.15(3).
- 852. Enterprise Act 2002 ss.210(6)(b) and (7), 212; Sch.13 Pt 1 para.4.
- 853. Enterprise Act 2002 s.212. See above, paras 38-128—38-129.
- 854. Enterprise Act 2002 s.214(1).

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 4. - Information Requirements and Consumers' Rights of Cancellation

(f) - Special Rules for Financial Services Contracts, Timeshare Contracts, Package Travel Contracts, Contracts Concluded by Electronic Means and ADR

(iv) - Timeshare and Related Contracts

Timeshare and related contracts

38-136

The Timeshare, Holiday Products, Resale and Exchange Contracts Regulations 2010 (the "Timeshare Regulations" or "2010 Regulations") ⁸⁵⁵ implement in the UK the EU Timeshare Directive 2009, revoking and replacing earlier legislation. ⁸⁵⁶ The Timeshare Directive 2009 provides generally for "full harmonisation", and the 2010 Regulations follow its substantive requirements closely, though with considerable reordering and rephrasing. ⁸⁵⁷ Very broadly, the 2010 Regulations impose on the trader a range of pre-contractual information duties, make specific and demanding formal and language requirements for the contracts affected, and, in addition, provide the consumer with a 14-day right of withdrawal which is extended where the trader fails to provide the consumer with a withdrawal form and/or "key information". ⁸⁵⁸

The contracts affected

38-137

The 2010 Regulations govern two types of contract ("timeshare contracts" and "long-term holiday product contracts"), ⁸⁵⁹ together with two further types of contract which are related to them: "resale contracts" and "exchange contracts". ⁸⁶⁰ A timeshare contract is defined as

"a contract between a trader and a consumer—

(a)

under which the consumer, for consideration, acquires the right to use overnight accommodation for more than one period of occupation, and which has a duration of more than one year, or contains provision allowing for the contract to be renewed or extended so that it has a duration of more than one year."

(b)

⁸⁶¹

For this purpose, "accommodation" includes a reference to "accommodation within a pool of accommodation". ⁸⁶² A "long-term holiday product contract" is defined as the main effect of which is that the consumer, for consideration, acquires the right to obtain discounts or other benefits in respect of accommodation, and which has a duration of more than one year, or contains provision allowing for the contract to be renewed or extended so that it has a duration of more than one year, irrespective of whether the contract makes provision for the consumer to acquire other services." ⁸⁶³

"a contract between a trader and a consumer—

(a)

(b)

The two related contracts which are also affected by the 2010 Regulations are resale contracts defined as:

"a contract between a trader and a consumer under which the trader, for consideration, assists the consumer in buying or selling rights under a timeshare contract or under a long-term holiday product contract" ⁸⁶⁴ and exchange contracts defined as:

"a contract between ... a consumer who is also party to a timeshare contract, and ... a trader, under which the consumer, for consideration, joins a timeshare exchange system." ⁸⁶⁵

Timeshare contracts and long-term holiday product contracts and these two related contracts are together termed "holiday accommodation contracts" by the Regulations and, if they satisfy a series of conditions and do not fall within a series of exclusions, then qualify as "regulated contracts". ⁸⁶⁶ For the purposes of the four contracts described above, the definitions of "trader" and "consumer" follow closely the definitions of the 1990 Directive, without any extension to the consumer acting "wholly or mainly" for non-business purposes. ⁸⁶⁷ In addition to these four "regulated contracts", "ancillary contracts" and "related credit agreements" are automatically terminated if the consumer withdraws from a regulated contract under the Regulations. ⁸⁶⁸

Information requirements

38-138

The 2010 Regulations impose a number of requirements on traders to give ⁸⁶⁹ "key information in relation to the contract" to the consumer in good time before entering a "regulated contract". ⁸⁷⁰ The "key information" is defined by reference to "standard information forms" which the 2010 Regulations themselves provide, the four forms (for timeshare contracts, long-term holiday product contract, resale contracts and exchange contracts respectively ⁸⁷¹) consisting of a series of headings under which the trader is required to fill in the relevant particular information, so, for example, in relation to timeshare contracts this includes a short description of the immovable property, the exact nature and content of the consumer's rights under the contract, and summaries of the services and facilities which the consumer will enjoy, and the consumer's right of withdrawal. ⁸⁷² The information must be provided by the trader using the relevant form, ⁸⁷³ must be "clear, comprehensible and accurate" and "sufficient to enable the consumer to make an informed decision about whether or not to enter into the contract", ⁸⁷⁴ and must be provided in an official language of an EEA State in which the consumer is resident or is a national. ⁸⁷⁵ A trader's failure in any of these requirements constitutes a criminal offence. ⁸⁷⁶ The Regulations make further requirements as to the advertising and marketing of a "regulated contract", again buttressed by criminal penalties. ⁸⁷⁷

Formalities

38-139

The 2010 Regulations require that a regulated contract ⁸⁷⁸ must be in writing and include the identity, place of residence and signature of the parties, the date and place of conclusion of the contract, must include the "key information" in relation to the contract ⁸⁷⁹ as "terms of the contract, and with no changes, other than permitted changes", ⁸⁸⁰ and must include the standard withdrawal form which they set out. ⁸⁸¹ The trader must draw the consumer's attention to three important matters (the consumer's right of withdrawal and its length, and the prohibition on "advanced consideration" ⁸⁸²) and obtain the consumer's signature in relation to each section of the contract dealing with them, and the trader must provide the consumer with a copy of the contract. ⁸⁸³ Any failure by the trader in any of these respects constitutes a criminal offence and the contract is rendered unenforceable against the consumer. ⁸⁸⁴ The Regulations make provision for the language in which the contract must be drawn up ⁸⁸⁵ and, in the case of timeshare contracts whose subject is a "single item of specific immovable property situated in a EEA State" a certified translation of the contract into an official language of that State. ⁸⁸⁶

Consumer's right to withdraw

38-140

The 2010 Regulations provide that a consumer may withdraw ⁸⁸⁷ from a "regulated contract" ⁸⁸⁸ by written notice ⁸⁸⁹ without giving any reason and may use the standard withdrawal form which should have been included in the contract to do so. ⁸⁹⁰ The basic withdrawal period is 14 days beginning with the date of conclusion of the contract or the date on which the consumer receives a copy of the contract, whichever is later, ⁸⁹¹ but if no standard withdrawal form is included in the contract the period is extended until the form is provided to the consumer plus 14 days up to a limit of a year and 14 days ⁸⁹²; and if the "key information" ⁸⁹³ is not provided by the trader, the period is extended until that information is provided plus 14 days up to a limit of three months and 14 days. ⁸⁹⁴ The exercise of this right of withdrawal by a consumer terminates the parties' obligations under the relevant "regulated contract" ⁸⁹⁵; and where this is a timeshare contract or long-term holiday accommodation contract, it terminates their obligations under any "ancillary contract" by which the consumer acquires services which are related to the main contract either provided by the trader or by a third party under an arrangement between the latter and the trader ⁸⁹⁶; withdrawal by the consumer from a timeshare contract also terminates the parties' obligations under any exchange contract which is related to it. ⁸⁹⁷ On withdrawal, the consumer is not liable for any costs or charges in respect of the regulated contract or any ancillary contract affected, including any costs or charges corresponding to services provided before withdrawal, ⁸⁹⁸ and any related credit agreement is automatically terminated at no cost to the consumer. ⁸⁹⁹ As regards timeshare contracts, long-term holiday product contracts and exchange contracts, it is an offence for a person to accept any consideration (and notably, any payment ⁹⁰⁰) before the end of the period for withdrawal allowed for the consumer and, in the case of resale contracts, to accept any consideration before the sale of those rights takes place or the contract in question is otherwise terminated. ⁹⁰¹ In addition to a right of withdrawal, in the case of a long-term holiday product contract which is a "regulated contract", the consumer may terminate the contract without penalty by giving notice of termination no later than 14 days after any day on which the consumer receives a request for payment of an instalment (other than the first instalment) as set out by the payment schedule which the Regulations require for this category of contract. ⁹⁰²

Exclusion by agreement or choice of law

38-141

 The 2010 Regulations provide that a term of a “regulated contract”⁹⁰³ is void to the extent that it purports to allow the consumer to waive the rights conferred on them by these Regulations.⁹⁰⁴ Article 12 of the 2009 Directive makes overt provision for its application “in international cases”, but in the scheme of the 2010 Regulations these special controls on choice of applicable law are given effect by reg.5’s provisions specifying the “holiday accommodation contracts” to which the Regulations apply.⁹⁰⁵ The background to this special provision is that under the Rome I Regulation, the contracts falling within the scope of the 2009 Directive⁹⁰⁶ may fall under art.3’s general provisions allowing choice of law and art.6’s special provisions governing consumer contracts⁹⁰⁷ or, where they do not, art.4’s default provisions governing contracts even where (as in the case of timeshare contracts) they concern rights in rem in immovable property and tenancies.⁹⁰⁸ In very broad terms, the 2009 Directive⁹⁰⁹ (and so also the 2010 Regulations) seek to give consumers additional protection to that provided by the Rome I Regulation⁹¹⁰ so as to prevent the avoidance of their controls by choice of applicable law, in a similar way to the anti-avoidance provisions in the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Directive 1993⁹¹¹ and the Consumer Sales Directive 1999.⁹¹² As a result, reg.5 provides that the 2010 Regulations apply to a “holiday accommodation contract”⁹¹³ in any one of three circumstances. First, where the contract is to any extent governed by the law of the United Kingdom, or of a part of the United Kingdom.⁹¹⁴ Secondly, where the contract is to any extent governed by the law of a country other than an EEA State, but the relevant accommodation⁹¹⁵ is in immovable property situated in an EEA State, and “the parties to the contract are to any extent subject to the jurisdiction of a court in the United Kingdom in relation to the contract”.⁹¹⁶ And thirdly, where the contract is to any extent governed by the law of a country other than an EEA State, is not directly related to immovable property, and the trader carries on commercial or professional activities in the United Kingdom or by any means directs such activities to the United Kingdom and the contract falls within the scope of those activities.⁹¹⁷ Finally, it would appear that an express choice of law clause in a contract falling within the scope of the 2010 Regulations may be assessed for its fairness under the general controls on unfair contract terms implementing the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Directive 1993, i.e. the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999 or the Consumer Rights Act 2015 Pt 2.⁹¹⁸

Enforcement

38-142

The 2010 Regulations provide that the offences which they create are to be punished by fines,⁹¹⁹ and makes further incidental provision relating to these offences⁹²⁰; their enforcement is entrusted to local weights and measures authorities.⁹²¹ Obligations owed by traders to consumers under the Regulations in relation to the key information requirements and to the form, formalities, language and translation of the contract are “duties owed” by them and are actionable accordingly and any civil liability arising as a result cannot be excluded by any contract term, notice or other provision.⁹²² While the 2010 Regulations make no dedicated provision for enforcement of their requirements by injunction, the Enterprise Act 2002 includes the Timeshare Directive 2009 in the list of directives and regulations which may give rise to a “Community infringement” and so apply Pt 8 of the 2002 Act for their purposes.⁹²³ As a result, where an infringement by a trader of any of the requirements for consumers in the 2010 Regulations harms the collective interest of consumers,⁹²⁴ an “enforcer” may apply to the court for an enforcement order, subject to the conditions set out earlier.⁹²⁵

^{855.} SI 2010/2960.

^{856.} Directive 2008/122/EC on the protection of consumers in respect of certain aspects of timeshare, long-term holiday product, resale and exchange contracts (“Timeshare Directive

2009"). The earlier UK legislation was the Timeshare Act 1992 and the Timeshare Regulations 1997 (SI 1997/1081) (as amended in 2003), which were revoked by the 2010 Regulations reg.36.

- 857. Timeshare Directive 2009 recital 3. On full harmonisation, see above, para.38-023. The text of the Directive allows exceptions to the general requirement of full harmonisation, so, e.g. art.5(1)(a)–(b) allow Member States in which the consumer is resident to make further requirements as to the language in which the contract is provided to the consumer than are required by art.5(1), first sentence of the Directive itself. This option has been exercised by the UK in the 2010 Regulations reg.18.
- 858. 2010 Regulations regs 12–15 (information requirements), regs 15–18; regs 20–24 (right of withdrawal for consumer, below, paras 38-138–38-140).
- 859. 2010 Regulations regs 3 and 4–6. On the related contracts, see below.
- 860. 2010 Regulations, defined in regs 9 and 10. The 2010 Regulations came into force on February 23, 2011: 2010 Regulations reg.1(2).
- 861. 2010 Regulations reg.7(1).
- 862. 2010 Regulations reg.7(2).
- 863. 2010 Regulations reg.8.
- 864. 2010 Regulations reg.9.
- 865. 2010 Regulations reg.10(1). Regulation 10(2) explains that "[a] 'timeshare exchange system' is a system which allows a consumer access to overnight accommodation or other services in exchange for giving other persons temporary access to the benefits deriving from the consumer's timeshare contract.
- 866. The structure of the UK legislation is quite complex. Technically, the four types of contract (timeshare, long-term holiday product contract, resale contract and exchange contract) are all "holiday accommodation contracts": reg.4. Regulation 5 then determines to which holiday accommodation contracts the Regulations apply, the relevant rules in fact determining the Regulations' application as a matter of private international law: this is discussed below, para.38-141. A "regulated contract" refers to "a holiday accommodation contract" to which the Regulations apply in this technical sense, as long as it is not an "excluded arrangement" within the meaning of reg.6. The provisions on "excluded arrangements" reflect recitals 6 and 7 of the Timeshare Directive 2009 which explain that timeshare contracts for its purposes do not cover the arrangements excluded by reg.6(1)–(4): these consist of multiple reservations of accommodation to the extent that they do not imply rights and obligations beyond those arising from the separate reservations; lease agreements which provide for a single continuous period of occupation and hotel loyalty schemes (which it defines). Regulation 6(5) also excludes contracts of insurance where the effecting or the carrying out of the contract constitutes a regulated activity for the purposes of the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (which do not appear to fall within the scope of the 2009 Directive).
- 867. 2010 Regulations reg.11(1): " "consumer" means an individual who is not acting for the purposes of a trade, business, craft or profession" and: " "trader" means (a) a person acting for purposes relating to that person's trade, business, craft or profession, or (b) anyone acting in the name of, or on behalf of, a person falling within paragraph (a)". Regulation 11(2) adds that this applies where either of these is either the party or a would-be party to the "regulated contract". The definitions in the 2009 Directive are found in art.2(1)(e) and (f). For discussion of the treatment of "consumer" and "trader" in EU law, see above, paras 38-032–38-034 and 38-048–38-052.
- 868. 2010 Regulations regs 22(2)(b) and (6)–(7) (ancillary contracts) and 23 (related credit agreements), below, para.38-140.

- 869. The information must be provided in writing, free of charge, and “in a manner which is easily accessible to the consumer”: 2010 Regulations reg.12(5)(b)–(c). cf. the discussion above, para. 38-086 between a trading “providing” (or giving) and “making available” information. The 2009 Directive art.4 requires the trader to “provide the consumer” with the information in question.
- 870. For the significance of “regulated contract” see 2010 Regulations regs 3–4 as explained by para.38-137.
- 871. 2010 Regulations reg.13(2). The forms are set out in 2010 Regulations Schs 1–4 (for timeshare contracts, long-term holiday product contract, re-sale contracts and exchange contracts respectively). Regulation 13(1) imposes further rules as to the completion of these forms.
- 872. 2010 Regulations reg.12, referring to Sch.1 Pts 1–3.
- 873. 2010 Regulations reg.12(5)(a).
- 874. 2010 Regulations reg.12(4).
- 875. 2010 Regulations reg.12(6)–(7).
- 876. 2010 Regulations reg.12(5) and (8). Further provision for these offences is made by regs 27–34.
- 877. 2010 Regulations reg.14. Further provision for these offences is made by regs 27–34.
- 878. On which, see above, para.38-137.
- 879. As defined by 2010 Regulations reg.12, above, para.38-138.
- 880. 2010 Regulations reg.15(4). “Permitted changes” are defined as: “changes to the key information which were communicated to the consumer in writing before the conclusion of the contract and which (a) were expressly agreed between the trader and the consumer, or (b) resulted from unusual and unforeseeable circumstances beyond the trader’s control, the consequences of which could not have been avoided even if all due care had been exercised”. “Permitted changes” must be expressly mentioned in the contract: reg.15(6). cf. the similar provisions as regards the information requirements in the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 reg.9(3)–(4) (on-premises contracts); reg.10(5)–(6) (off-premises contracts); and reg.13(6)–(7) (distance contracts), above para.38-100.
- 881. 2010 Regulations reg.15(7); Sch.5.
- 882. On this prohibition see 2010 Regulations reg.25, below, para.38-140.
- 883. 2010 Regulations reg.16(1)–(3).
- 884. 2010 Regulations reg.15(8) (referring to the reg.15 requirements) and reg.16(4) (referring to the reg.16 requirements). Further provision for these criminal offences is made by regs 27–34.
- 885. 2010 Regulations reg.17.
- 886. 2010 Regulations reg.18.
- 887. Notice that, unlike the 2013 Regulations which distinguish between a right to cancel a contract and a right to withdraw an offer (above, para.38-108), the 2010 Regulations refer to the right of the consumer to withdraw from a contract (reg.20(1)) and to a right to terminate long-term holiday product contracts (reg.24).
- 888. On which see 2010 Regulations regs 3–6 and above, para.38-137.

- 889. Written notice is deemed as given at the time it is sent by the consumer: 2010 Regulations reg.20(2).
- 890. 2010 Regulations reg.20. The requirement of inclusion of the form is made by reg.15(7).
- 891. 2010 Regulations reg.21(1)–(2).
- 892. 2010 Regulations reg.21(3)–(4).
- 893. On which see 2010 Regulations reg.12 and above, para.38-138.
- 894. 2010 Regulations reg.21(5) and (6). Regulation 21(7) provides that where the trader has failed in both requirements the withdrawal period ends with the later of the two dates set. Where an exchange contract is related to a timeshare contract and offered to the consumer at the same time, the withdrawal period for both contracts is the one applicable to the timeshare contract: reg.21(8)–(10).
- 895. As defined by 2010 Regulations regs 3–6 and see above, para.38-137.
- 896. 2010 Regulations reg.22(2)(b) and (6). In the case of long term holiday product contracts, withdrawal terminates an obligation to pay any penalty or further instalments of the payment schedule as required by reg.26: reg.22(3).
- 897. 2010 Regulations reg.22(7) referring to reg.21(10) and deeming such a contract to be “ancillary” for the purposes of reg.22(6).
- 898. 2010 Regulations reg.22(4) and (5).
- 899. 2010 Regulations reg.23(1) and (2). Regulation 23(4) defines such a related credit agreement as being one “under which credit which fully or partly covers any payment under the regulated contract is granted to the consumer by (a) the trader, or (b) a third party on the basis of an arrangement between the third party and the trader”.
- 900. “Consideration” includes payments, guarantees, reservations of money on account, and acknowledgements of debt: 2010 Regulations reg.25(6).
- 901. 2010 Regulations reg.25.
- 902. 2010 Regulations reg.24. The requirements for a payment schedule are set out by reg.26.
- 903. Above, para.38-137.
- 904. 2010 Regulations reg.19.
- 905. 2010 Regulations reg.5; “holiday accommodation contracts” are defined by reg.4. These two elements, together with the provisions in reg.6 excluding certain arrangements are then put together for the definition of “regulated contract” by reg.3, as explained above, n.825.
- 906. Regulation (EC) 593/2008 on the law applicable to contractual obligations (“Rome I Regulation”) reg.6(4)(b) refers to the repealed Timeshare Directive 1994, but the 2009 Directive art.18 requires this reference to be construed as referring to the 2009 Directive.
- 907. Rome I Regulation art.6(4)(b).
- 908. Rome I Regulation art.4(1)(c) and (d) on which see Dicey, Morris and Collins, The Conflict of Laws, 15th edn (2012), Vol.II, paras 33-044, 33-047—33-048. On these provisions of the Rome I Regulation generally see Vol.I, para.30-192.
- 909. 2009 Directive art.12(2).

- 910. 2009 Directive recital 17.
- 911. 1993 Directive art.6(2) below, paras 38-322 and 38-386.
- 912. 1999 Directive art.7(2) below, para.38-494.
- 913. Defined by 2010 Regulations regs 4 and 7-10, above, para.38-137.
- 914. 2010 Regulations reg.5(1) and (2).
- 915. Defined as “(i) the accommodation which is the subject of the contract, or (ii) in a case where a pool of accommodation is the subject of the contract, some or all of the accommodation in that pool”: 2010 Regulations reg.5(5)(a).
- 916. 2010 Regulations reg.5(1), (3) and (5)(b).
- 917. 2010 Regulations reg.5(1), (4) and (5)(b).
- 918.  cf. Verein für Konsumenteninformation v Amazon EU Sàrl (C-191/15) July 28, 2016, see below, para.38-295A. For the relevant controls, see Vol.II, paras 38-192 et seq.
- 919. 2010 Regulations reg.27.
- 920. 2010 Regulations regs 28-32.
- 921. 2010 Regulations reg.32 (in Northern Ireland, the Department of Enterprise Trade and Investment in Northern Ireland).
- 922. 2010 Regulations reg.35 (1)-(2), (4)-(5).
- 923. Enterprise Act 2002 ss.210(6)(b) and (7), 212; Sch.13 Pt 1 para.9E, 212(1).
- 924. Enterprise Act 2002 s.212.
- 925. Enterprise Act 2002 s.214(1). See above, paras 38-128—38-129.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 4. - Information Requirements and Consumers' Rights of Cancellation

(f) - Special Rules for Financial Services Contracts, Timeshare Contracts, Package Travel Contracts, Contracts Concluded by Electronic Means and ADR

(v) - Trader's Information Duties in Relation to ADR

EU law and ADR

38-143

⚠ EU legislation has recently provided for the establishment of a European online dispute resolution (ODR) platform ⁹²⁶ and has required Member States to ensure that ADR is available for consumer disputes by the "ADR Directive", ⁹²⁷ although the legislation does not make ADR mandatory. ⁹²⁸ ⚠ As part of this scheme, the ADR Directive requires Member States to impose on traders a duty to inform consumers as to the availability of ADR. ⁹²⁹ Following the scope of the Directive as a whole, this requirement applies to domestic and cross-border disputes ⁹³⁰ relating to contractual obligations stemming from sales contracts or service contracts ⁹³¹ between traders and consumers, where the consumer claims against the trader. ⁹³² Implementing this requirement in the UK, the Alternative Dispute Resolution for Consumer Disputes (Competent Authorities and Information) Regulations 2015 (the "2015 Regulations") distinguish between two situations. ⁹³³ ⚠ First, where a trader is obliged to use ADR services provided by an ADR entity or EU listed body ⁹³⁴ under an enactment, the rules of a trade association to which the trader belongs, or a term of a contract, the trader must provide the name and website address of the ADR entity or EU listed body on its website, if it has one and in the "general terms and conditions of sales or service contracts between the trader and a consumer where they exist". ⁹³⁵ Secondly, where a trader has exhausted its internal complaint handling procedure when considering a complaint from a consumer relating to a sales contract or a service contract:

"the trader must inform the consumer, on a durable medium:

(a)

that the trader cannot settle the complaint with the consumer;

(b)

of the name and website address of an ADR entity or EU listed body which would be competent to deal with the complaint, should the consumer wish to use alternative dispute resolution; and

(c)

whether the trader is obliged, or prepared, to submit to an alternative dispute resolution procedure operated by that ADR entity or EU listed body.”⁹³⁶

These requirements apply in addition to any information requirements applicable to traders regarding out-of-court redress procedures contained in any other enactment.⁹³⁷ The 2015 Regulations make similar provision as to the provision of information by online traders and online marketplaces to consumers regarding the ODR platform.⁹³⁸ In addition to these information requirements, the ADR Directive makes other requirements in relation to consumer contracts which are implemented by the 2015 Regulations, including that Member States must ensure that an agreement between a consumer and a trader to submit complaints to an ADR entity is not binding on the consumer if it was concluded before the dispute has materialised and if it has the effect of depriving the consumer of his right to bring an action before the courts for the settlement of the dispute.⁹³⁹

^{926.} Regulation (EU) 524/2013 of 21 May 2013 on online dispute resolution for consumer disputes (Regulation on consumer ODR) [2013] O.J. L165/1.

^{927.} Directive 2013/11/EU of 21 May 2013 on alternative dispute resolution for consumer disputes [2013] O.J. L165/63.

^{928.}  ADR Directive art.1 referring to the availability of ADR procedures to consumers “on a voluntary basis”, though adding that the Directive is without prejudice to national legislation making participation in such procedures mandatory, “provided that such legislation does not prevent the parties from exercising their right of access to the judicial system”. See further Menini and Rampanelli v Banco Popolare Società Cooperativa (C-75/16) of June 14, 2017 at paras 45 et seq.

^{929.} ADR Directive art.13.

^{930.} ADR Directive art.2(1). The Directive is implemented in UK law by the Alternative Dispute Resolution for Consumer Disputes (Competent Authorities and Information) Regulations 2015 (SI 2015/542) (the “2015 Regulations”), as amended by the Alternative Dispute Resolution for Consumer Disputes (Amendment) Regulations 2015 (SI 2015/1392).

^{931.} “Sales contracts” and “services contracts” are defined by the ADR Directive art.4(1)(c) and (d) (as implemented by the 2015 Regulations reg.5). Recital 16 explains that this means that the Directive applies to disputes between traders and consumers “in all economic sectors, other than the exempted sectors” and includes “disputes arising from the sale or provision of digital content for remuneration”.

^{932.} ADR Directive recital 16; art.2 (with exclusions there made), especially art.2(2)(g).

^{933.}  Alternative Dispute Resolution for Consumer Disputes (Competent Authorities and Information) Regulations 2015 (SI 2015/542) (as amended by SI 2015/1392) reg.19 (the amendment came into force on July 9, 2015 but could not take effect until the commencement of SI 2015/542 reg.19 on October 1, 2015).

^{934.} 2015 Regulations reg.4 provides that an “ADR entity” means a body whose name appears on a list maintained by the Secretary of State or other body specified by the Regulations (reg.5 referring to Sch.1 Pt 1 col.1; Pt 2) as satisfying a list of requirements: reg.9(4), 10 and Sch.3. An “EU listed body” means a person, other than an ADR entity, whose name appears on a list referred to in the ADR Directive art.20(2): 2015 Regulations (as amended) reg.5.

^{935.} 2015 Regulations reg.19(1).

- 936. 2015 Regulations reg.19(2).
- 937. 2015 Regulations reg.19(3).
- 938. 2015 Regulations reg.19A (as amended by SI 2015/1392) (in force January 9, 2016).
- 939. ADR Directive art.10(1); 2015 Regulations reg.14B (inserted by SI 2015/1392 reg.2(8)) (in force on July 9, 2015).

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 4. - Information Requirements and Consumers' Rights of Cancellation

(f) - Special Rules for Financial Services Contracts, Timeshare Contracts, Package Travel Contracts, Contracts Concluded by Electronic Means and ADR

(vi) - Contracts Concluded by Electronic Means

Summary

38-144

The Electronic Commerce (EC Directive) Regulations 2002 (the "Electronic Commerce Regulations 2002") reg.9 (implementing art.10 of the Electronic Commerce Directive 2000 ⁹⁴⁰) imposes a duty on providers of information society services, such as selling goods online, ⁹⁴¹ to provide information on specified matters before the conclusion of contract to be concluded by electronic means. ⁹⁴² The matters on which information must be provided "in a clear, comprehensible and unambiguous manner" relate to the different technical steps to follow to conclude the contract, whether or not the concluded contract will be filed by the service provider and whether it will be accessible, the technical means for identifying and correcting input errors prior to the placing of an order, and the languages offered for the conclusion of the contract ⁹⁴³; the provider must make available ⁹⁴⁴ any terms and conditions applicable to the contract to recipients in a way which allows them to store and reproduce them ⁹⁴⁵; and it must also indicate any relevant code of conduct to which it subscribes and how they may be accessed. ⁹⁴⁶ The provider must acknowledge receipt of any order without undue delay and by electronic means and must make available ⁹⁴⁷ the technical means which allow the identification and correction of input errors. ⁹⁴⁸ These duties do not apply to "contracts concluded exclusively by exchange of electronic mail or by equivalent individual communications". ⁹⁴⁹ Moreover, while the duties apply for the benefit of all "recipients" of the service, they may be excluded by agreement only where the parties are not consumers. ⁹⁵⁰ The Electronic Commerce Regulations 2002 provide that the duties which they impose on service providers in this respect ⁹⁵¹ shall be enforceable by the recipient of the service in the tort of breach of statutory duty ⁹⁵² and that, in the case of a failure in the service provider to make available means of allowing a person to identify and correct input elements, a person may rescind any contract made, unless a court orders otherwise on the former's application. ⁹⁵³ Apart from the last provision, the service provider's failures to perform these duties are not stated as affecting the validity of any contract made, but as a "Community infringement" they may attract enforcement measures under Pt 8 of the Enterprise Act 2008. ⁹⁵⁴

⁹⁴⁰. Directive 2000/31/EC on certain legal aspects of information society services, in particular electronic commerce, in the Internal Market ("Directive on electronic commerce") [2000] O.J. L178/17.

⁹⁴¹. The Electronic Commerce Regulations 2002 (SI 2002/2013) reg.2(1) defines "service provider" as "any person providing an information society service" and explains "information society service" by reference to the 2000 Directive art.2(a) (which itself refers to Directive 98/34/EC laying down a procedure for the provision of technical standards and regulations [1998] O.J. L204/37 art.1(2)) and recital 17's explanation that it covers "any service normally provided for remuneration, at a distance, by means of electronic equipment for the processing (including digital compression) and storage of data, and at the individual request of a recipient of a service”.

- 942. SI 2002/2013 reg.9. Regulations 6-8 impose other requirements on society service providers: to make available general information (such as the name of the provider, geographical address etc) in a form which is “easily, directly and permanently accessible”; to ensure the clarity of commercial communications provided; and to ensure that unsolicited commercial communications sent by electronic mail are clearly and unambiguously identifiable as such as soon as it is received.
- 943. Electronic Commerce Regulations 2002 reg.9(1).
- 944. On this concept cf. above, para.38-086.
- 945. Electronic Commerce Regulations 2002 reg.9(3). This requirement may be enforced by court order: reg.14.
- 946. Electronic Commerce Regulations 2002 reg.9(2).
- 947. On this concept cf. above, para.38-086.
- 948. Electronic Commerce Regulations 2002 reg.11(1) and (2).
- 949. Electronic Commerce Regulations 2002 reg.9(1) and (4), 11(4).
- 950. Electronic Commerce Regulations 2002 reg.9(1) and (2).
- 951. i.e. under Electronic Commerce Regulations 2002 regs 6–8, 9(1) and 11(1)(a).
- 952. Electronic Commerce Regulations 2002 reg.13.
- 953. Electronic Commerce Regulations 2002 reg.15 referring to the duty in reg.11(1)(b).
- 954. Enterprise Act 2002 s.210(6) and 212; Sch.13 Pt 1 para.9. On these enforcement powers see above, paras 38-128—38-129.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts
Section 5. - Unfair Commercial Practices and the Consumer's Rights to redress
(a) - Introduction

Legislative history

38-145

In 2008 the UK government enacted the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations (the "2008 Regulations"), ⁹⁵⁵ repealing a good deal of the Fair Trading Act 1968 and implementing a new scheme for the control of "unfair commercial practices" business-to-consumer as required by the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005 (the "2005 Directive"). When issued, the 2008 Regulations had no impact on "contract law" in the sense that the commission of an unfair commercial practice by a trader which led to a contract with a consumer was not on this ground invalid ⁹⁵⁶; nor did they create any "private rights" of redress for the consumer in respect of such an unfair commercial practice, such as by way of a claim for damages for any loss caused to the consumer as a result. However, in 2014 the UK government issued a further set of regulations to create a new set of "rights to redress" for consumers in respect of certain unfair commercial practices by traders by the insertion of a new Pt 4A into the 2008 Regulations. ⁹⁵⁷ These rights to redress consist of a "right to unwind" a concluded contract or a payment made by a consumer to a trader, ⁹⁵⁸ a right to a discount ⁹⁵⁹ and a right to damages. ⁹⁶⁰ As will be explained, the relationship between these new rights to redress and existing rights at common law, in equity and, in particular, under s.2 of the Misrepresentation Act 1967 is not straightforward. ⁹⁶¹

The structure of this section

38-146

This section will look briefly at the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive, at the general scheme of the 2008 Regulations prohibiting unfair commercial practices and then at the new rights to redress for consumers.

⁹⁵⁵. SI 2008/1277. In the following the "2008 Regulations" refers to SI 2008/1277 as amended by SI 2014/870 in contrast to the "2008 Regulations (as issued)", which refers to the 2008 Regulations before their amendment in 2014.

⁹⁵⁶. 2008 Regulations reg.29 (as issued).

⁹⁵⁷. Consumer Protection (Amendment) Regulations 2014 (SI 2014/870). These Regulations also made certain other amendments to the 2008 Regulations, notably, in respect of their definitions: SI 2014/870 reg.2.

⁹⁵⁸. 2008 Regulations regs 27E-27H.

- 959. 2008 Regulations reg.27I.
- 960. 2008 Regulations reg.27J.
- 961. Below, paras 38-160 et seq.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 5. - Unfair Commercial Practices and the Consumer's Rights to redress

(b) - The Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005

General

38-147

⚠ The Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005 requires Member States to put in place a very general framework of control prohibiting unfair business-to-consumer commercial practices. ⁹⁶² Its purposes in doing so combine concerns with the protection of the economic interests of consumers and the prevention of unfair competition in the interests of competitors, with an internal market concern that national unfair competition laws should not be allowed to act as a barrier to cross-border trade. ⁹⁶³ To achieve the last of these purposes, the 2005 Directive generally requires “full harmonisation”, with the result that, within its scope, Member States must not prohibit business-to-consumer commercial practices unless they are prohibited as unfair under the controls set out by the 2005 Directive itself. ⁹⁶⁴ ⚠ On the other hand, within its scope, the purpose of the Directive is to protect consumers and, according to the Court of Justice of the EU, its provisions are “essentially designed with the consumer as the target and victim of unfair commercial practices in mind” and on the assumption that the consumer is “in a weaker position, particularly with regard to the level of information, in that the consumer must be considered to be economically weaker and less experienced in legal matters” than the trader. ⁹⁶⁵

Scope of the 2005 Directive

38-148

⚠ For present purposes, there are two important aspects of the scope of the Directive. First, it applies to “unfair business-to-consumer commercial practices ... before, during and after a commercial transaction in relation to a product”. ⁹⁶⁶ As noted by the Court of Justice of the EU, the Directive gives a “particularly wide definition” ⁹⁶⁷ to “business-to-consumer commercial practices” for this purpose, as this refers to:

“any act, omission, cause of conduct or representation, commercial communication including advertising and marketing, by a trader directly connected with the promotion, sale or supply of a product to consumers.” ⁹⁶⁸ ⚠

A “product” is also understood very broadly, as it means “any goods or service including immovable property, rights and obligations”. ⁹⁶⁹ ⚠ Overall, therefore, a good deal of what traders do in relation to the conclusion and performance of contracts with consumers falls within the scope of the 2005 Directive. On the other hand, secondly, the 2005 Directive provides that it is “without prejudice to contract law and, in particular, to the rules on the validity, formation or effect of a contract”. ⁹⁷⁰ As a result, the national, as well as EU, ⁹⁷¹ legal rules of “contract law” are not affected by the 2005

Directive and this means, in particular, that national contract laws are protected from the potential impact of the Directive's full harmonisation. For this purpose, the reference "in particular" to the rules on the validity, formation or effect of a contract strongly suggest that "contract law" refers to rules governing the relative rights and obligations of parties to a contract. ⁹⁷² On the other hand, this also means that Member States are free in principle to give "contract law" significance to some or all of the prohibitions of unfair commercial practices as the Directive understands them.

Relationship with other EU legislation

38-149

! The 2005 Directive was intended as a "framework directive" with the result that more particular EU provisions on unfair business-to-consumer commercial practices (such as those required by the Unfair Contract Terms Directive ⁹⁷³ or the Consumer Rights Directive ⁹⁷⁴) retain their force within this wider framework: the special rules derogate from the general. ⁹⁷⁵ According to art.3(4) of the 2005 Directive:

"In the case of conflict between the provisions of this Directive and other Community rules regulating specific aspects of unfair commercial practices, the latter shall prevail and apply to those specific aspects."

As earlier noted, this provision resolves:

"irreconcilable conflict between substantive norms, i.e. situations where the same business-to-consumer commercial practice would qualify as 'unfair' under one provision and 'non-unfair' ... under another provision. In such cases, the EU special provision shall 'prevail'." ⁹⁷⁶ !

So, UK legislative provisions implementing other EU directives and thereby creating "rules regulating specific aspects of unfair commercial practices" prevail over the national rules implementing the 2005 Directive (that is, the 2008 Regulations), but only where those UK legislative provisions follow the requirements of that other EU directive itself.

A transitional period for "minimum harmonisation" legislation

38-150

On the other hand, art.3(5) of the 2005 Directive protected from the force of its "full harmonisation" national legal prohibitions of business-to-consumer commercial practices which were "more restrictive or prescriptive" than the 2005 Directive and which implemented the requirements of EU "minimum harmonisation" legislation, but only where this was already provided by national law for the protection of consumers at the time of the coming into force of the 2005 Directive and only for a transitional period of six years, ending on June 11, 2013. ⁹⁷⁷ This means, therefore, that, after this date, national legal provisions which prohibit the use or recommendation for use of unfair terms beyond the requirements of minimum harmonisation directives without an evaluation of the fairness of that "commercial practice" within the meaning of the 2005 Directive are inconsistent with the 2005 Directive; in particular, national law is not entitled to add to the list of commercial practices provided by Annex 1 of the 2005 Directive which "shall in all circumstances be regarded as unfair". ⁹⁷⁸ As will be seen in relation to the regulation of unfair contract terms under the Consumer Rights Act 2015, the relationship which the 2005 Directive envisages between its own fully harmonised requirements and other more particular, minimum harmonisation directives can cause problems for national implementing measures which go beyond the controls which these directives require. ⁹⁷⁹

Scheme of control of the 2005 Directive

38-151

Under the 2005 Directive, there are three main ways in which a commercial practice is to be held unfair. First, there is a general test of an unfair commercial practice where:

“(a)

it is contrary to the requirements of professional diligence, and

(b)

it materially distorts or is likely to materially distort the economic behaviour with regard to the product of the average consumer whom it reaches or to whom it is addressed, or of the average member of the group when a commercial practice is directed to a particular group of consumers.”⁹⁸⁰

The Directive then defines or explains most of the elements of this general evaluative test.⁹⁸¹ Secondly, the 2005 Directive identifies two commercial practices which “in particular ... shall be unfair”: misleading commercial practices (whether constituted by action or omission) and aggressive commercial practices.⁹⁸² Thirdly, the 2005 Directive sets out a list of “those commercial practices which shall in all circumstances be regarded as unfair”,⁹⁸³ without, that is, any “case-by-case” evaluation of the practice under the earlier tests,⁹⁸⁴ though the list itself divides these examples between “misleading commercial practices”⁹⁸⁵ and “aggressive commercial practices”.⁹⁸⁶

Enforcement

38-152

Following its broad declaration that “unfair commercial practices shall be prohibited”,⁹⁸⁷ the 2005 Directive requires Member States to put in place “adequate and effective means” to enforce compliance with its provisions and to lay down penalties for the infringement of national provisions implementing its requirements.⁹⁸⁸ Moreover, the 2005 Directive adds itself to the list of legislation which attract the cross-border injunctive relief under the Consumer Injunctions Directive and the Regulation on Consumer Protection Co-operation.⁹⁸⁹

^{962.} See in particular the essays in Collins (ed.) The Forthcoming EC Directive on Unfair Commercial Practices, Contract, Consumer and Competition Law Implications (2004) and in Weatherill and Bernitz, The Regulation of Unfair Commercial Practices under EC Directive 2005/29, New Rules and New Techniques (2007).

^{963.} Bernitz, The Regulation of Unfair Commercial Practices under EC Directive 2005/29, New Rules and New Techniques (2007), Ch.3 at p. 37; Stuyck in Bernitz and Weatherill, Ch.9 at pp.171–172.

^{964.}  2005 Directive art.4; VTB-VAB NV Total Belgium NV (C-261/07 and C-299/07) [2009] E.C.R. I-2949 at [63]; Mediaprint Zeitungs- und Zeitschriftenverlag GMBH & Co KG v “Österreich”-Zeitungsverlag GmbH (C-540/08) [2010] E.C.R. I-10909 at [27], Zentral sur Bekämpfung unlauteren Weebewerbs eV v Plus Warenhandels-gesellschaft mbh (C-304/08) [2010] E.C.R.

- I-00217 at [41], Wamo BVBA v JBC NV (C-288/10) [2011] E.C.R. I-5835 at [33]; Europamur Alimentación SA v Dirección General de Comercio y Protección del Consumidor de la Comunidad Autónoma de la Región de Murcia (C-295/16) Opinion of A.G. Saugmandsgaard Øe of June 29, 2017 at paras 57–59. There is also an important exception to “full harmonisation” in relation to “financial services”: 2005 Directive art.3(9). cf. above, paras 38-023—38-024.
965. Nemzeti Fogyasztóvédelmi Hatóság v UPC Magyarország Kft (C-388/13) of April 18, 2015 at paras 52–53 referring to BKK Mobil Oil Körperschaft des öffentlichen Rechts v Zentrale zur Bekämpfung unlauteren Wettbewerbs eV (C-59/12) of October 3, 2013 para.36.
966. 2005 Directive art.3(1).
967. Total Belgium & Galatea (C-261/07 and C-299/07) at [49].
968. !2005 Directive art.2(d). The CJEU has held, therefore, that a “commercial practice” covers “any measure taken in relation not only to the to the conclusion of a contract but also to its performance, and in particular the measures taken in order to obtain payment for the product”: UAB ‘Gelvora’ v Valstybin# vartotoj# teisi# apsaugos tarnyba (C-357/16) of July 20, 2017 at para.21. It therefore further held that where the claims assigned to a debt collection agency originated in the supply of a service (the provision of credit at interest), its debt recovery activities may be regarded as a “product” within the meaning of art.2(c) of the 2005 Directive and may constitute an unfair “commercial practice” as the measures which it adopts are liable to influence the consumer’s decision in respect of payment of the product: C-357/16 at paras 21–25. For this purpose, the fact that the existence of the debt was confirmed by a court decision and that that decision was passed for enforcement to a bailiff is without consequence: C-357/16 at para.31.
969. !2005 Directive art.2(c). On the CJEU’s interpretation of “product” to include practices in which a debt collection agency engages to recover the debt, see UAB ‘Gelvora’ v Valstybin# vartotoj# teisi# apsaugos tarnyba (C-357/16) of July 20, 2017 noted above, n.924.
970. Directive 2005/29/EC art.3(2), on which see Whittaker, The Regulation of Unfair Commercial Practices under EC Directive 2005/29, New Rules and New Techniques (2007), Ch.8.
971. 2005 Directive recital 9.
972. Whittaker, The Regulation of Unfair Commercial Practices under EC Directive 2005/29, New Rules and New Techniques (2007), n.749 and cf. above, para. 38-059 for a similar understanding of “contract law” for the purposes of the Consumer Rights Directive 2011 art.3(5).
973. Directive 93/13/EEC, on which see below, paras 38-199.
974. Above, paras 38-056.
975. EC Commission, Green Paper on European Union Consumer Protection Com(2001) 531 final, para.3.4 and see Bernitz, The Regulation of Unfair Commercial Practices under EC Directive 2005/29 (2007) 33 at 44. See also Opinion of A.G. Bot in Vueling Airlines SA v Instituto Galego de Consumo de la Xunta de Galicia (C-487/12) of January 23, 2014 para.61 referring to provisions on the pricing of air carriage in Regulation (EC) 1008/2008 on common rules for the operation of air services in the Community [2008] O.J. L293/3 art.23 as “lex specialis” in relation to the general rules in the Directive 2005/29/EC and Directive 2011/83/EU. (This point was not referred to by the CJEU in its decision of September 18, 2014.)
976. !Orlando (2011) European Review of Contract Law 25 at 50–51 (emphases omitted), above, para.38-106. See also above, para.38-106, discussing Citroën Commerce GmbH v Zentralvereinigung des Kraftfahrzeuggewerbes zur Aufrechterhaltung lauterer Wettbewerbs eV (ZLW) (C-476/14) July 7, 2016 at paras 44–46.

- 977. 2005 Directive art.3(5); European Commission v Belgium (C-421/12) of July 10, 2014 at [73]. This permission was subject to a condition that the measures were “essential to ensure that consumers are adequately protected against unfair commercial practices and must be proportionate to the attainment of this objective”. This transitional period has not been extended as was foreseen as possible by the 2005 Directive art.3(5), third sentence and the Commission has stated that it should not be: EU Commission, First Report on the application of Directive 2005/29/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 May 2005 concerning unfair business-to-consumer commercial practices in the internal market etc. Com(2013) 139 final, para.2.4.
- 978. 2005 Directive art.5(5), recital 17; Zentral sur Bekämpfung unlauteren Weebewerbs eV v Plus Warenhandels-gesellschaft mbh (C-304/08) [2010] E.C.R. I-00217 at [45]; Wamo BVBA v JBC NV (C-288/10) [2011] E.C.R. I-5835 at [37].
- 979. Below, paras 38-389—38-394.
- 980. 2005 Directive art.5(2)(a) and (b).
- 981. 2005 Directive art.2 (definitions); art.5(3) (explaining the material distortion of the economic behaviour of the average consumer).
- 982. 2005 Directive arts 5(4), 6-8.
- 983. 2005 Directive art.5(5); Annex I.
- 984. 2005 Directive recital 17; Zentrale sur Bekämpfung unlauteren Weebewerbs eV v Plus Warenhandels-gesellschaft mbh (C-304/08) [2010] E.C.R. I-00217 at para.45.
- 985. 2005 Directive Annex I points 1–23.
- 986. 2005 Directive Annex I points 24–31.
- 987. 2005 Directive art.5(1).
- 988. 2005 Directive arts 11 and 13.
- 989. 2005 Directive art.16; Directive 98/27 on injunctions for the protection of consumers’ interests [1998] O.J. L166/51 (itself repealed and replaced by Directive 2009/22/EC on injunctions for the protection of consumers’ interests [2009] O.J. L110/30); Regulation (EC) 2006/2004 on cooperation between national authorities responsible for the enforcement of the consumer protection law [2004] O.J. L364/1. The significance of this addition is explained below, para.38-159.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts
Section 5. - Unfair Commercial Practices and the Consumer's Rights to redress
(c) - The General Scheme of the 2008 Regulations

Faithful implementation of the 2005 Directive

38-153

 When enacted in 2008, the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations followed very faithfully the scope and pattern of the controls of unfair commercial practices required by the 2005 Directive ⁹⁹⁰ and repealed or amended a number of primary and secondary UK legislative provisions so as to conform to the Directive's general standard of full harmonisation. ⁹⁹¹ This faithful implementation was continued when the Regulations were amended in 2014 so as to create the consumer's new rights to redress, although some amendments were also made to the definitions applicable both to the existing regime and to the new provisions. ⁹⁹² So, reg.3 provides that "unfair commercial practices are prohibited" ⁹⁹³ and provides a general test according to which:

"A commercial practice is unfair if—

- (a)
it contravenes the requirements of professional diligence; and
- (b) it materially distorts or is likely to materially distort the economic behaviour of the average consumer with regard to the product." ⁹⁹⁴

Regulation 3 also provides that:

"A commercial practice is unfair if—

- (a)
it is a misleading action under the provisions of regulation 5;
- (b) it is a misleading omission under the provisions of regulation 6;

(c) it is aggressive under the provisions of regulation 7; or

(d)

it is listed in Schedule 1.”

In this way, the Regulations reflect exactly the ways in which a commercial practice is to be held unfair under the 2005 Directive. ⁹⁹⁵

“Commercial practice”

38-154

Under the 2008 Regulations:

“commercial practice” means any act, omission, course of conduct, representation or commercial communication (including advertising and marketing) by a trader, which is directly connected with the promotion, sale or supply of a product to or from consumers, whether occurring before, during or after a commercial transaction (if any) in relation to a product.’ ⁹⁹⁶

This definition follows closely the 2005 Directive ⁹⁹⁷ with the qualification that it concerns behaviour “by a trader, which is directly connected with the promotion, sale or supply of a product to or from consumers”. ⁹⁹⁸ If or to the extent to which the 2005 Directive does not itself cover commercial practices consumer to a trader, ⁹⁹⁹ to this extent the 2008 Regulations extend their prohibitions beyond the scope of the Directive. ¹⁰⁰⁰ In the case of the consumer’s rights to redress, the 2008 Regulations proscribe the circumstances in which this extension applies. ¹⁰⁰¹

“Commercial practice” and isolated events

38-155

Can a commercial practice consist of an isolated event, for example, a single false statement inducing a contract or must it form part of a wider scheme? The definition of “commercial practice” could be read as concerned with the nature of the act or omission and not with whether it needs to be repeated, or part of a scheme, in order to amount to a practice and, as has been noted, the Court of Justice of the EU has held that the definition of “commercial practice” in the 2005 Directive is “particularly wide”, ¹⁰⁰² a width that is linked to the main purposes of the Directive in creating a fully-harmonised system of fair competition as well as consumer protection throughout the EU. ¹⁰⁰³ In terms of English authority, while the Crown Court earlier held that a misrepresentation that relates to only one consumer and one contract will not amount to a “practice” within the meaning of the 2008 Regulations, ¹⁰⁰⁴ the Court of Appeal has held in R. v X Ltd the Crown Court’s reasoning in the case to be unpersuasive ¹⁰⁰⁵: a commercial practice can be derived from a single incident, this finding textual support in the reference in the definition to “any act ... by a trader which is directly connected with the promotion, sale or supply of a product” ¹⁰⁰⁶ and in the Court of Justice’s view that the definition of “commercial practice” in the Directive is wide. ¹⁰⁰⁷ On the other hand, the Court of Appeal considered that the question whether a single incident can constitute, or perhaps better, can reflect a commercial practice will depend on the circumstances: according to the Court of Appeal, “the concept is concerned with systems” ¹⁰⁰⁸ and, while “a single failing (or perhaps more than one failing) to one customer may not be sufficient”, on the facts the jury was entitled to find that there was a failure in the process. ¹⁰⁰⁹ However, this English case-law has now been overtaken by the very recent decision of the Court of Justice of the EU in UPC Magyarország. ¹⁰¹⁰ In that case, a provider of cable television services (the trader) had informed a customer (the consumer) that the service for which he had paid finished on a particular date, but by reason of “a simple clerical error” gave the consumer the wrong date. As a result, the consumer terminated the contract after the end of the period already paid for and was charged an amount for the remaining period, even though he had contracted for the provision of a cable service from another provider. The Hungarian National Consumer Protection Authority brought proceedings against the trader on the basis that its provision of erroneous information was a “misleading commercial practice”, but the trader argued that an “isolated administrative error relating to a single client” could not constitute a “commercial practice” within the meaning of the 2005 Directive. In this respect, the Court of Justice referred to its earlier case-law on the “particularly wide” character of the Directive’s definition of “commercial practice”, ¹⁰¹¹ and noted that:

“the sole criterion referred to in [art.2(d) of the Directive] is that the trader’s practice must be directly connected with the promotion, sale or supply of a product or service to consumers.” ¹⁰¹²

Having held that the provision of misleading information by a trader as part of an after-sales service to a consumer satisfies all the elements of a “misleading action” under the Directive, ¹⁰¹³ the Court of Justice observed that:

“In this regard, it should be stated that the fact that the action of the professional concerned took place on only one occasion and affected only one single consumer is immaterial in this context.

Neither the definitions set out in Articles 2(c) and (d), 3(1) and 6(1) of the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive nor the latter, considered as a whole, contain any indication that the act or omission on the part of the professional must be recurrent or must concern more than one consumer.”

In the light of the need to protect consumers which underlies that directive, those provisions cannot be interpreted as imposing conditions of that kind where they do not even set out such conditions explicitly”. ¹⁰¹⁴ Moreover, according to the Court of Justice, the contrary view would have “serious disadvantages”. ¹⁰¹⁵ First, a requirement of frequency of acts or number of consumers affected without any threshold to determine whether an act or omission would come within the scope of the Directive would threaten its compatibility with the principle of legal certainty; and, secondly, it would be extremely difficult for the consumer to establish that other individuals had been harmed by that same trader. ¹⁰¹⁶ On the other hand, the frequency of the unfair commercial practice complained would be relevant to any sanction attached to that practice by national law in fulfilment of its duty to impose penalties which are “effective, proportionate and dissuasive”. ¹⁰¹⁷ In conclusion, it is submitted, therefore, that the decision of the Court of Justice in UPC Magyarország makes clear that an isolated act or omission by a trader may constitute an unfair commercial practice within the meaning of the 2005 Directive and this view should be followed by English courts rather than the approach of the Court of Appeal in R. v X Ltd. ¹⁰¹⁸

Other definitions

38-156

The 2008 Regulations follow the 2005 Directive in defining a number of the important elements of their controls. ¹⁰¹⁹ So, “product” refers to goods, a service, digital content, immoveable property, and rights or obligations”. ¹⁰²⁰ And:

““professional diligence” means the standard of special skill and care which a trader may reasonably be expected to exercise towards consumers which is commensurate with either—honest market practice in the trader’s field of activity, or

(a)

(b)

the general principle of good faith in the trader’s field of activity.” ¹⁰²¹

However, as earlier noted, the definitions of “consumer” and “trader” were refined on the amendment of the 2008 Regulations in 2014, so that:

““consumer” means an individual acting for purposes that are wholly or mainly outside that individual’s business.

““trader” means a person acting for purposes relating to that person’s business, whether acting personally or through another person acting in the trader’s name or on the trader’s behalf.” ¹⁰²²

And trader “includes a person acting in the name of or on behalf of a trader” except for the purposes of Pt 4A’s rights of civil redress. ¹⁰²³ Finally, the 2008 Regulations define “transactional decision” for their general purposes as:

“any decision taken by a consumer, whether it is to act or to refrain from acting, concerning—whether, how and on what terms to purchase, make payment in whole or in part for, retain or dispose of a product; or whether, how and on what terms to exercise a contractual right in relation to a product.” ¹⁰²⁴

(a)

(b)

As will be seen, however, this definition does not apply for the purposes of the consumers’ rights to redress. ¹⁰²⁵

“Average consumer”

38-157

⚠ As noted above, ¹⁰²⁶ the idea of the “average consumer” is drawn by the 2005 Directive from the case-law of the European Court of Justice and explained quite elaborately in its text and recitals. ¹⁰²⁷ The 2008 Regulations again follow the Directive and thereby adopt a variable objective approach. The starting point is that:

“In determining the effect of a commercial practice on the average consumer where the practice reaches or is addressed to a consumer or consumers account shall be taken of the material characteristics of such an average consumer including his being reasonably well informed, reasonably observant and circumspect.” ¹⁰²⁸

However, where a commercial practice is “directed to a particular group of consumers, a reference to the average consumer shall be read as referring to the average member of that group” ¹⁰²⁹ and:

“In determining the effect of a commercial practice on the average consumer—

(a)

where a clearly identifiable group of consumers is particularly vulnerable to the practice or the underlying product because of their mental or physical infirmity, age or credulity in a way which the trader could reasonably be expected to foresee, and where the practice is likely to materially distort the economic behaviour only of that group, a reference to the average consumer shall be read as referring to the average member of that group.” ¹⁰³⁰

(b)

This final provision is stated as being without prejudice to “the common and legitimate advertising practice of making exaggerated statements which are not meant to be taken literally”. ¹⁰³¹ Although this is not set out in the 2008 Regulations, recital 18 of the 2005 Directive states that the Directive “takes as a benchmark the average consumer, who is reasonably well-informed and reasonably observant and circumspect, taking into account social, cultural and linguistic factors”. ¹⁰³² ⚠ Moreover, recital 18 adds that

“[t]he average consumer test is not a statistical test. National courts and authorities will have to exercise their own faculty of judgement, having regard to the case-law of the Court of Justice, to determine the typical reaction of the average consumer in a given case.” ¹⁰³³ ⚠

Criminal offences

38-158

Part 3 of the 2008 Regulations creates a series of criminal offences in traders where they knowingly or recklessly engage in a commercial practice which fails the general test of unfairness,¹⁰³⁴ where the practice constitutes a misleading action,¹⁰³⁵ misleading omission¹⁰³⁶ or an aggressive commercial practice,¹⁰³⁷ or where it consists of a commercial practice prohibited in all circumstances.¹⁰³⁸ These crimes may, on summary conviction, lead to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or, on conviction on indictment, to a fine or imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years or both.¹⁰³⁹ In principle, a person convicted of an offence under the Regulations may be ordered to pay compensation to the victim (the consumer),¹⁰⁴⁰ but this power has been interpreted as requiring evidence of loss and has in general been little used.¹⁰⁴¹ The 2008 Regulations make further provision incidental to the creation of these offences,¹⁰⁴² including for a defence of due diligence.¹⁰⁴³

Enforcement by authorities

38-159

⚠ Apart from these criminal offences, the 2008 Regulations are buttressed by two systems of enforcement of their prohibition of unfair commercial practices. First, Pt 4 of the Regulations sets out a special scheme of enforcement, under which every weights and measures authority has a duty to enforce the regulations, and the CMA has a power to do so,¹⁰⁴⁴ in both cases taking into account the desirability of encouraging control of unfair commercial practices by such established means as it considers appropriate in all the circumstances.¹⁰⁴⁵ These enforcement authorities have the power to make test purchases and powers of entry and investigation.¹⁰⁴⁶ ⚠ Secondly, the 2008 Regulations amended the Enterprise Act 2002 so as to include the 2005 Directive in the list of directives and regulations which constitute a “Community infringement” and so apply Pt 8 of the 2002 Act for their purposes.¹⁰⁴⁷ As a result, where an infringement of the prohibition against unfair commercial practices by a trader harms the collective interest of consumers,¹⁰⁴⁸ an “enforcer” can apply to the court for an enforcement order, subject to the conditions set out earlier.¹⁰⁴⁹ The 2008 Regulations also provide that, where an enforcer has brought an application for an enforcement order under Pt 8 of the 2002 Act against a trader in respect of a contravention of the requirements of the 2005 Directive, the court has a power to require that trader to provide evidence as to the accuracy of any factual claim made as part of a commercial practice by that trader.¹⁰⁵⁰ Where the trader fails to do so or fails to do so adequately, “the court may consider that the factual claim is inaccurate”.¹⁰⁵¹

^{990.} 2008 Regulations regs 3-7. The main definitional provisions are contained in reg.2.

^{991.} 2008 Regulations reg.30(1); Schs 2 and 4.

^{992.} See below, para.38-156. The most important amendment was the redefinition of “consumer” so as to extend the protection of the 2008 Regulations to “individuals acting for purposes that are wholly or mainly outside that individual’s business”: 2008 Regulations reg.2(1) “consumer”. cf. above, paras 38-034—38-035.

^{993.} 2008 Regulations reg.3(1).

^{994.} ⚠2008 Regulations reg.3(3). On this general test see Deroo-Blanquart v Sony Europe Ltd (C-310/15) of September 7, 2016, referring to art.5 of the 2005 Directive.

^{995.} ⚠2005 Directive art.5. The 2005 Directive art.5(4)(a) treats misleading actions and misleading omissions as examples of a single category of misleading commercial practices. Schedule 1 of the 2008 Regulations lists 31 “commercial practices which are in all circumstances considered unfair”. For the interpretation of one example of these prohibited practices by the CJEU see ‘4finance’ UAB v Valstybin# vartotoj# teisi# apsaugos tarnyba (C-515/12) of April 3, 2014;

Loterie Nationale—National Loterij NV van publiek recht v Adriaensen, De Kesel and The Right Frequency VZW (C-667/15) of December 15, 2016 (concerning 2005 Directive Annex I, point 14 implemented by 2008 Regulations Sch.1 para.14 (pyramid promotional schemes)).

- 996. 2008 Regulations reg.2(1) “commercial practice” and cf. above, para.38-148 on the view of the CJEU on the interpretation of this notion.
- 997. The definition of “commercial practice” in reg.2(1) combines the definition of “business-to-consumer commercial practices” in art.2(d) of the 2005 Directive, with art.3(1)’s definition of the scope of the Directive, with the clarification that there is no need for a commercial transaction to have been made.
- 998. 2008 Regulations reg.2(1) (emphasis added). It is submitted that this extension of the scheme of the 2005 Directive is compatible with its general requirement of “full harmonisation” as, on the narrower view of the scope of the 2005 Directive taken by the European Commission, consumer-to-business commercial practices fall outside the 2005 Directive’s scope and therefore beyond the force of this requirement: cf. above, para.38-023.
- 999. On which see above, para.38-044.
- 1000. On such an extension beyond the scope of a “full harmonisation” directive, see above, para.38-023.
- 1001. 2008 Regulations reg.27A(2)(b), below, para.38-165.
- 1002. VTB-VAB NV Total Belgium NV (C-261/07 and C-299/07) [2009] E.C.R. I-2949 at para.49; Mediaprint Zeitungs- und Zeitschriftenverlag GMBH & Co KG v “Österreich”-Zeitungsverlag GmbH (C-540/08) [2010] E.C.R. I-10909 at para.17; Zentrale sur Bekämpfung unlauteren Weebewerbs eV v Plus Warenhandelsgessellschaft mbh (C-304/08) [2010] E.C.R. I-00217 at para.36; Wamo BVBA v JBC NV (C-288/10) [2011] E.C.R. I-5835 at para.33; Pereni#ová v SOS finance, spol. sro (C-453/10) at para.38.
- 1003. Above, para.38-147.
- 1004. R. (on the application of Tower Hamlets LBC) v Steele [2012] C.T.L.C. 109.
- 1005. R. v X Ltd [2013] EWCA Crim 818, [2014] 1 W.L.R. 591 at [24].
- 1006. [2013] EWCA Crim 818 at [22] (emphasis added by Court of Appeal).
- 1007. [2013] EWCA Crim 818 at [26] referring to Zentrale sur Bekämpfung unlauteren Weebewerbs eV v Plus Warenhandelsgessellschaft mbh (C-304/08) [2010] E.C.R. I-00217 at para.36.
- 1008. [2013] EWCA Crim 818 at [23].
- 1009. [2013] EWCA Crim 818 at [33].
- 1010. Nemzeti Fogyasztóvédelmi Hatóság v UPC Magyarország (C-388/13) of April 16, 2015 (“UPC Magyarország (C-388/13)”). cf. Pereni#ová v SOS finance, spol. sro (C-453/10) at para.41, where the CJEU held that “commercial practice” included the indication in an individual credit agreement of an APR lower than the real rate which therefore constitutes false information as to the total cost of the credit and hence the price”, without requiring explicitly that this false indication formed part of a wider practice on the part of the creditor.
- 1011. UPC Magyarország (C-388/13) para.34.
- 1012. UPC Magyarország (C-388/13) para.35.
- 1013. 2005 Directive art.2(c), 3(1) and 6(1); recital 13; UPC Magyarország (C-388/13) paras 36-40.

- 1014. UPC Magyarország (C-388/13) paras 41–43 citing, as regards the final point, CHS Tour Services GmbH v Team4 Travel GmbH (C-435/11) of September 19, 2013.
- 1015. UPC Magyarország (C-388/13) para.44.
- 1016. UPC Magyarország (C-388/13) paras 45 and 46. It is to be noted that the reference to the consumer establishing that other individuals have been harmed looks inappropriate in the context of the 2005 Directive, which does not seek to establish any rights for consumers against the trader, but is concerned rather to prohibit certain categories of actions and omissions of traders: see above, para.38-145. This is confirmed by the nature of the national proceedings in UPC Magyarország, which were brought by the Hungarian National Authority for Consumer Protection at the request of the individual consumer affected by the trader's "practice" and resulted in the imposition of a fine on the trader. Indeed, this aspect of the 2005 Directive was later emphasised in the CJEU's judgment (at para.56).
- 1017. 2005 Directive arts 11 and 13; UPC Magyarország (C-388/13) at para.57; Köck v Schutzverband gegen unlauteren Wettbewerb (C-206/11) of January 17, 2013 para.44. The CJEU also held that the unintentional nature of the trader's actions, whether or not it has caused the consumer any harm and whether the consumer could have obtained correct information elsewhere, are not relevant to the question whether the trader has committed a misleading commercial practice, though the first two of these would be relevant to the question of an appropriate penalty: UPC Magyarország (C-388/13) at paras 47–54, 58.
- 1018. [2013] EWCA Crim 818, above.
- 1019. The definitions are contained in 2005 Directive art.2.
- 1020. 2008 Regulations reg.2(1) "product", which also makes special provision for this purpose for cases where a trader demands payment from a consumer in full or partial settlement of C's liabilities, where the "product" is to be treated as that full or partial settlement: 2008 Regulations reg.2(1A) and (1B). As will be explained, there are restrictions on the definition of "product" for the purposes of the consumer's rights to civil redress: 2008 Regulations regs 27C and 27D, below, para.38-164. The definition of "product" in the 2005 Directive is found in art.2(b).
- 1021. 2008 Regulations reg.2(1) "professional diligence"; 2005 Directive art.2(h).
- 1022. 2008 Regulations reg.2(1) "consumer" and "trader" and see above, paras 38-030 et seq. and 38-047 et seq.
- 1023. 2008 Regulations reg.2(1) "trader".
- 1024. 2008 Regulations reg.2(1) "transactional decision"; 2005 Directive art.2(k).
- 1025. 2008 Regulations reg.27B(2), below, para.38-170.
- 1026. Above, paras 38-041—38-042.
- 1027. 2005 Directive recitals 18 and 19; art.5(2)(b), 5(3).
- 1028. 2008 Regulations reg.2(2).
- 1029. 2008 Regulations reg.2(4).
- 1030. 2008 Regulations reg.2(5).
- 1031. 2008 Regulations reg.2(6).
- 1032.  Emphasis added. See also Konsumentombudsmannen v Ving Sverige AB (C-122/10) of May 12, 2011 ("Canal Digital Denmark A/S (C-611/14)") at paras 22–23.

- 1033.  And see Canal Digital Denmark A/S (C-611/14) at para.39.
- 1034. 2008 Regulations reg.8 (subject to the conditions there specified).
- 1035. 2008 Regulations reg.9 referring to reg.5, but excluding the case foreseen by reg.5(3)(b).
- 1036. 2008 Regulations reg.10 referring to reg.6.
- 1037. 2008 Regulations reg.11 referring to reg.7.
- 1038. 2008 Regulations reg.12 referring to Sch.1, but excluding for these purposes the commercial practices foreseen by Sch.1 paras 11 (“advertorial”) and 28 (including in an advertisement a direct exhortation to children to buy advertised products or persuade their parents or other adults to buy advertised products for them).
- 1039. 2008 Regulations reg.13.
- 1040. Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s.130(4).
- 1041. Law Commission, Scottish Law Commission, Consumer Redress for Misleading and Aggressive Practices (2012) Law Com No.332; Scot Law Com No.226, Cm 8323 para.2.44, 2.46.
- 1042. 2008 Regulations reg.14 (time limit for prosecution); reg.15 (offences committed by bodies of persons); reg.16 (offence due to the default of another person); reg.17 (due diligence defence); reg.18 (innocent publication of advertisement defence).
- 1043. 2008 Regulations reg.17.
- 1044. In Northern Ireland, this duty is owed by Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment in Northern Ireland. The duty to enforce does not extend to the consumer’s rights to redress in Pt 4A of the Regulations: reg.19.
- 1045. 2008 Regulations reg.19(4).
- 1046.  2008 Regulations regs 20–25. (As from October 1, 2015 these provisions are revoked by the Consumer Rights Act 2015 (Commencement No.3, Transitional Provisions, Savings and Consequential Amendments) Order 2015 (SI 2015/1630) art.5, Sch.2 para.115 subject to transitional provisions set out in art.8.) From that date, the enforcement authorities instead enjoy the investigatory powers set out under the general regime in the 2015 Act, Sch.5 (as specified by Pt 2 para.10 referring to the 2008 Regulations reg.19(1) and (1A)): SI 2015/1630 art.3(h).
- 1047. 2008 Regulations reg.26.
- 1048. Enterprise Act 2002 ss.211(1)(c), 212(1). See above, para.38-128.
- 1049. Enterprise Act 2002 ss.214–218 (as amended) and see above, paras 38-128—38-129.
- 1050. Enterprise Act 2002 s.218A(1) and (2) as inserted by 2008 Regulations reg.27.
- 1051. Enterprise Act 2002 s.218A(3) as inserted by 2008 Regulations reg.27.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 5. - Unfair Commercial Practices and the Consumer's Rights to redress

(d) - The New Rights to Civil Redress for Consumers

(i) - Introduction

The Law Commissions' recommendations

38-160

The new rights to redress for consumers introduced by amendment of the 2008 Regulations by the 2014 Regulations resulted from recommendations of the Law Commissions in their report Consumer Redress for Misleading and Aggressive Practices (the "Law Commissions' Report").¹⁰⁵² The Law Commissions considered that there were considerable social problems not being addressed properly by existing law, expressing a particular concern with the extent to which vulnerable persons, such as the elderly or the disabled, were being targeted by "scams" or pressured into buying goods or services.¹⁰⁵³ The Law Commissions identified two main deficiencies in the existing law. First, in the case of misleading actions by traders, the law governing remedies for misrepresentation is "fragmented, complex and unclear",¹⁰⁵⁴ with particular uncertainty as to the relationship between rescission and damages¹⁰⁵⁵ and difficulties for consumers in the valuation of their loss.¹⁰⁵⁶ Secondly, in the case of aggressive commercial practices, the law governing remedies for duress, undue influence and (especially) unconscionable conduct is unclear and restrictive, being "not readily accessible to non-lawyers"¹⁰⁵⁷ and leaving important gaps in protection for the victim of "scams", there being in particular no clear right to damages to victims of duress.¹⁰⁵⁸ The Law Commissions' purpose in making their recommendations was therefore to "simplify the consumer remedies against misleading practices and to improve protection against aggressive practices".¹⁰⁵⁹ However, contrary to the views of consumer groups and the Office of Fair Trading,¹⁰⁶⁰ the Law Commissions recommended that the new rights be "targeted" in the sense that they should not arise in respect of all unfair commercial practices caught by the 2008 Regulations. In particular, the new rights should apply only in the case of misleading actions and aggressive practices: as a result, a misleading omission and a commercial practice found unfair under the general test in the 2008 Regulations should not give rise to the new rights to redress¹⁰⁶¹; and a commercial practice listed as unfair in all circumstances would not do so unless it would be likely to cause the average consumer to enter into a contract or make a payment which they would not otherwise have done.¹⁰⁶² As this further indicates, the new rights should not arise merely as a result of a misleading or aggressive practice, as they should be subject to a condition that they contributed to the conclusion of a contract or the making of a payment.¹⁰⁶³ These restrictions were seen by the Law Commissions as needed as wider availability could generate "unpredictable" costs on traders".¹⁰⁶⁴ In terms of the new remedies for consumers arising from misleading or aggressive practices, the Law Commissions recommended a two-tiered approach: the first tier would provide the consumer with a short-lived right to unwind the contract or payment, with full refund of any payments made; and, where the goods or services have been fully consumed, where there has been delay or where the consumer chooses to keep the contract, a right to a discount based on "pre-set bands" of percentages of the price of the contract; the second tier would provide a right to damages recoverable only on proof of loss or harm by the consumer.¹⁰⁶⁵

The structure of the new law

38-161

Rather than introducing primary legislation, as foreseen by the Law Commissions,¹⁰⁶⁶ the new rights for consumers were introduced by amendment of the 2008 Regulations by the 2014 Regulations.¹⁰⁶⁷ Despite a principal purpose of the new law being to introduce a new simple regime for consumers, the new law is itself complex and bears a complex relationship with the general law of misrepresentation, duress and undue influence. Nevertheless, the fundamental distinction made by the 2008 Regulations (as so amended) is between general conditions for the availability of the new rights to redress¹⁰⁶⁸ and particular conditions, attributes and consequences of the three different rights to redress: the “right to unwind”; the right to a discount; and the right to damages.¹⁰⁶⁹ In order to enjoy a right to redress, a consumer must establish that both sets of conditions are satisfied.¹⁰⁷⁰ The 2008 Regulations (as so amended) then make consequential provision for the procedural expression of the new rights to redress and on the relationship of the new rights to existing law.¹⁰⁷¹ This section will follow this broad structure.

No duty on court to raise issue of consumer’s rights to redress

38-162

The Court of Justice of the EU has recognised that national courts may have a duty to raise of their own motion the existence of a right for consumers in national law which reflects EU legislation for the protection of consumers.¹⁰⁷² While the rights to redress in Pt 4A of the 2008 Regulations are tied to the commission by a trader of certain unfair commercial practices whose prohibition reflects the Unfair Commercial Practices Directive 2005 (whose purpose was, inter alia, to protect consumers), that Directive did not provide for any rights for consumers such as are contained in Pt 4A.¹⁰⁷³ As a result, the Pt 4A rights to redress are not rights in EU law and do not, therefore, attract the case-law of the Court of Justice which may impose duties in national courts to raise the rights of consumers of their own motion.

Temporal application of the new law

38-163

The provisions of the 2014 Regulations amending the 2008 Regulations and creating the new rights to redress came into force on October 1, 2014 “and apply in relation to contracts entered into, or payments made, on or after that date”.¹⁰⁷⁴

¹⁰⁵². Law Com No.332; Scot Law Com No.226 (2012); Cm 8323. See also Department for Business Innovation & Skills, Misleading and Aggressive Practices—A New Private Right for Consumers, Government response to consultation on the draft regulations (April 2014) p.3 noting that the Government had in their draft regulations accepted almost all the Commissions’ recommendations.

¹⁰⁵³. Law Commissions’ Report (2012) SS.3 and 21, paras 1.13, 1.15, 3.50, 3.55, 4.22 and 8.58. An example of such a case is R. v X Ltd [2013] EWCA Crim 818, [2014] 1 W.L.R. 591.

¹⁰⁵⁴. Law Commissions’ Report (2012) S.12, p.x.

¹⁰⁵⁵. In particular, under Misrepresentation Act 1967 s.2(2), on which see Vol.I, paras 7-104—7-110.

¹⁰⁵⁶. Law Commissions’ Report (2012) para.4.15.

¹⁰⁵⁷. Law Commissions’ Report (2012) S.16, p.x.

¹⁰⁵⁸. Law Commissions’ Report (2012) paras 3.49 et seq. On this law see Vol.I, Ch.8 and especially para.8-056.

1059. Law Commissions' Report (2012) para.1.4.

1060. Law Commissions' Report (2012) para.1.37.

1061. The general test was seen as "so uncertain as to be intrinsically unsuited to form the basis of private law rights": Law Commissions' Report (2012) para.2.15.

1062. Law Commissions' Report (2012) paras 4.46 and 5.5.

1063. Law Commissions' Report (2012) para.5.6.

1064. Law Commissions' Report (2012) para.4.42 and see paras 4.57–4.63.

1065. Law Commissions' Report (2012) paras 8.24 et seq.

1066. Law Commissions' Report (2012) para.5.16.

1067. Consumer Protection (Amendment) Regulations 2014 (SI 2014/870).

1068. 2008 Regulations regs 27A–27D.

1069. 2008 Regulations regs 27E–27J.

1070. 2008 Regulations reg.27A(1).

1071. 2008 Regulations regs 27K–27L.

1072. Above, paras 38-018—38-019.

1073. Above, paras 38-147—38-148.

1074. SI 2014/870 reg.1(3). The 2014 Regulations reg.9's provisions making minor amendments to the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 (SI 2013/3134) came into force on June 13, 2014 immediately before the latter Regulations themselves: 2014 Regulations reg.1(2). For the 2013 Regulations generally, see above, paras 38-057 et seq.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 5. - Unfair Commercial Practices and the Consumer's Rights to redress

(d) - The New Rights to Civil Redress for Consumers

(ii) - General Conditions for the Availability of the Rights to Redress

Introduction

38-164

In very broad terms, Pt 4A of the 2008 Regulations requires that the consumer must establish that a misleading action or aggressive commercial practice by a trader was a significant factor in the consumer's decision to enter a contract or make a payment to the trader in respect of a product supplied. This broad picture is expressed by subjecting the general availability of the consumer's rights to redress to three conditions: (i) the existence of a contract between the trader and the consumer or a payment made by the consumer to the trader; (ii) the commission of a misleading action or aggressive practice by the trader or by a "producer" of goods or digital content ¹⁰⁷⁵; and (iii) the prohibited practice is a significant factor in the consumer's decision to enter the contract or make the payment. ¹⁰⁷⁶ As will be seen, the first two of these conditions are the subject of considerable nuance. ¹⁰⁷⁷ Moreover, following the recommendations of the Law Commissions, ¹⁰⁷⁸ the 2008 Regulations qualify the general definition of "product" ¹⁰⁷⁹ for the purposes of the Pt 4A rights by excluding from it immoveable property apart from an assured tenancy or a contract of lease for the supply of holiday accommodation ¹⁰⁸⁰ and services provided in the course of carrying on a "regulated activity" within the meaning of the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 other than where the service consists of the provision of credit for a transaction between the borrower and the lender or for a transaction between the borrower and a person other than the lender. ¹⁰⁸¹

First condition: contract or payment

38-165

As has been seen, the prohibition of unfair commercial practices in the 2008 Regulations applies where these practices materially distort or are likely materially to distort the economic behaviour of the average consumer with regard to the "product", understood very broadly. ¹⁰⁸² There is no requirement that the trader concludes a contract with a consumer or otherwise actually causes the consumer to take some other "transactional decision" with or for the benefit of the trader. This very broad approach reflects the general concern of the 2008 Regulations (reflecting the 2005 Directive) with the prevention of unfair commercial practices, rather than with "contract law". However, following the recommendations of the Law Commissions, the 2008 Regulations take here a much more restrictive approach, requiring that one of three types of transaction must have taken place between the trader and the consumer. First, where:

"(a)

the consumer enters into a contract with a trader for the sale or supply of a product by the trader (a “business to consumer contract”). ¹⁰⁸³

This is the broadest category of situation, applying to all contracts for the sale or supply by a trader to a consumer of a product, defined very broadly as “goods, a service, digital content, immoveable property, and rights or obligations”, ¹⁰⁸⁴ though with the restrictions on immoveable property and the exclusion of financial services as earlier explained. ¹⁰⁸⁵

“(b)

the consumer enters into a contract with a trader for the sale of goods to the trader (a ‘consumer to business contract’).” ¹⁰⁸⁶

This situation applies to the converse situation of a “consumer to business contract”, but its ambit is much more restricted than the first situation, as it concerns only sales of goods to the trader (such as the sale by a consumer of a second-hand car or jewellery) and, furthermore, is subject to a further restriction in that it does not apply where the trader supplies or agrees to supply a product to the consumer as well as agreeing to pay the consumer. ¹⁰⁸⁷ Where a consumer enters a contract of part-exchange with a trader, for example, of a second-hand car, it is submitted that such a contract would fall within (a) as “a contract with a trader for the sale or supply of a product by the trader”, even though it also involves the supply of goods to the consumer.

“(c)

the consumer makes a payment to a trader for the supply of a product (a ‘consumer payment’).” ¹⁰⁸⁸

The Law Commissions identified a real social problem in the extent to which unscrupulous traders and others harass consumers into paying debts, whether these are real or invented. ¹⁰⁸⁹ In their view, debt collection following a consumer contract clearly falls within the scope of the 2008 Regulations’ prohibitions, but the position as regards other circumstances (such as wheel-clamping charges, demands in respect of parking charges, requests for compensation for alleged copyright infringements and “civil recovery” against shoplifters) is less clear. ¹⁰⁹⁰ The third situation described at (c) is restricted to payments to a trader for the supply of a product ¹⁰⁹¹ and therefore restricts the application of the new rights to redress for consumers (notably, “unwinding the payment” and damages for any deception (“misleading statement”) or harassment (“aggressive practice”) to this situation. ¹⁰⁹²

Second condition: “prohibited practice”

38-166

Here, the 2008 Regulations require either that the “trader engages in a prohibited practice in relation to the product” or that, in the case of contracts of sale of goods or the supply of digital content, the “producer” does so in certain circumstances. ¹⁰⁹³ For both purposes, the Regulations restrict “prohibited practice” to “misleading actions” under reg.5 and “aggressive commercial practices” under reg.7 and, following the Law Commissions’ recommendations, therefore do not extend the availability of consumer rights to redress to commercial practices qualifying as unfair under the general test. ¹⁰⁹⁴

In the case of commercial practices designated by the Regulations in general as unfair in all circumstances, ¹⁰⁹⁵ the rights to redress are available only if the commercial practice in question satisfies the test for misleading action or aggressive practice. This means in particular that they must cause or be likely to cause the average consumer to take a transactional decision he would not have taken otherwise. ¹⁰⁹⁶

Misleading actions

38-167

Under reg.5, a commercial practice may constitute a “misleading action” either under a very general test of its containing false or deceptive information ¹⁰⁹⁷ or in relation to two special cases. ¹⁰⁹⁸

False or deceptive information

38-168

This is the most important category. Regulation 5(2) provides that a commercial practice constitutes a “misleading action”

“(a)

if it contains false information and is therefore untruthful in relation to any of the matters in paragraph (4) or if it or its overall presentation in any way deceives or is likely to deceive the average consumer in relation to any of the matters in that paragraph, even if the information is factually correct; and it causes or is likely to cause the average consumer to take a transactional decision he would not have taken otherwise.”

(b)

The lists of matters referred to in reg.5(4) are:

“(a)

the existence or nature of the product;

(b)

the main characteristics of the product (as defined in paragraph 5);

(c)

the extent of the trader’s commitments;

(d)

the motives for the commercial practice;

(e)

the nature of the sales process;

(f)

any statement or symbol relating to direct or indirect sponsorship or approval of the trader or the product;

(g)

the price or the manner in which the price is calculated;

(h)

the existence of a specific price advantage;

(i)

the need for a service, part, replacement or repair;

(j)

the nature, attributes and rights of the trader (as defined in paragraph 6);

(k)

the consumer's rights or the risks he may face."

The Regulations then provide details as to what is included in the "main characteristics of the product", ¹⁰⁹⁹ and what are the "nature, attributes and rights" as far as concern the trader, ¹¹⁰⁰ and the "consumer's rights" for these purposes. ¹¹⁰¹

38-168A

⚠ In Canal Digital Denmark A/S ¹¹⁰² ⚠ the Court of Justice of the EU was asked whether art.6(1) of the 2005 Directive governing misleading actions (implemented in UK law by art.5(2) of the 2008 Regulations) applies to a case where a trader has chosen to charge for a television subscription both a monthly and a six-monthly charge, but has particularly highlighted the monthly charge in its marketing, while the six-monthly charge is omitted entirely or presented only in a less conspicuous way. ¹¹⁰³ ⚠ Having noted the significance of the "average consumer" to whom the practice is addressed, ¹¹⁰⁴ ⚠ the Court of Justice held that in determining whether commercial practices of this sort "deceive or are likely to deceive the average consumer in relation to the price" the national court must "determine, having regard to all the relevant circumstances, whether the commercial communication concerned has the effect of suggesting to the average consumer an attractive price which, ultimately, is proven to be misleading". ¹¹⁰⁵ ⚠ For this purpose,

“consideration may be given, where relevant, to the fact that offers for TV channels are characterised by a wide variety of proposals and combinations that are generally highly structured, both in terms of cost and content, resulting in a significant asymmetry of information that is likely to confuse consumers.” ¹¹⁰⁶ ⚠

⚠ On the other hand, the Court of Justice noted that, unlike art.7's provisions governing misleading omissions, art.6(1) “contains no reference to limitations of space or time related to the communication medium used”, so that “time constraints that may apply to certain communication media, such as television commercials, cannot be taken into account when assessing whether a commercial practice is misleading under art.6(1)”. ¹¹⁰⁷ ⚠ However, where the price of a “product” ¹¹⁰⁸ ⚠ is divided into several components, one of which is emphasised in the marketing, while the other is omitted or presented less prominently, the average consumer may be lead to a mistaken perception of the overall offer, particularly in that he is being offered a particularly advantageous price. ¹¹⁰⁹ ⚠ This guidance on the proper approach to the interpretation and application of art.6(1) of the 2005 Directive makes clear that the omission of some information regarding an aspect of the “product” (there, its price) may form part of a misleading action rather than constituting only a misleading omission, thereby taking a broad interpretation of “misleading action” for this purpose. ¹¹¹⁰ ⚠ For this purpose, the Court of Justice also identified an important difference between the two categories of misleading commercial practices (actions and omissions) as a matter of EU law, in that, where “the medium used to communicate the commercial practice imposes limitations of space or time, these limitations and any measures taken by the trader to make the information available to consumers by other means shall be taken into account in deciding whether information has been omitted” whereas no such allowance for the medium used is to be made as regards a misleading action. ¹¹¹¹ ⚠ On the other hand, art.7(4) of the Directive makes special provision regarding certain categories of information (including as to price) in “invitations to purchase” whose omission “shall be regarded as material”, whereas art.6 makes no similar provision regarding invitations to purchase. ¹¹¹² ⚠ Overall, therefore, the Court of Justice accepted that a particular commercial practice may constitute at the same time a misleading action and a misleading omission, subject to the particular conditions and taking account of the particular considerations set out by arts 6 and 7 of the 2005 Directive respectively.

The special cases

38-169

Reflecting the 2005 Directive, ¹¹¹³ reg.5(3) identifies two special cases of a commercial practice constituting a “misleading action”, viz where:

“(a)

it concerns any marketing of a product (including comparative advertising) which creates confusion with any products, trade marks, trade names or other distinguishing marks of a competitor; or

“(b) it concerns any failure by a trader to comply with a commitment contained in a code of conduct ¹¹¹⁴ which the trader has undertaken to comply with, if—

- (i) the trader indicates in a commercial practice that he is bound by that code of conduct, and
- (ii) the commitment is firm and capable of being verified and is not aspirational, and it causes or is likely to cause the average consumer to take a transactional decision he would not have taken otherwise, taking account of its factual context and of all its features and circumstances.” ¹¹¹⁵

Definitions; “transactional decision”

38-170

Both as regards the general test and the special cases, the general definitions of the Regulations apply (including as to “consumer” ¹¹¹⁶ and “average consumer” ¹¹¹⁷), with the exception of “transactional decision” which is defined specially for the purposes of the availability of the rights to redress as:

“any decision taken by a consumer to enter into a contract with a trader for the sale or supply of a product by the trader, or for the sale of goods to the trader, or to make a payment to a trader for the supply of a product.” ¹¹¹⁸

This redefinition for the purposes of the rights to redress is necessary in order to link the definitions of misleading actions and aggressive practices to the circumstances governed by the first condition of the availability of these rights ¹¹¹⁹; the definition of “transactional decision” provided generally for the prohibition of unfair commercial practices by the Regulations (following the Directive ¹¹²⁰) is much wider ¹¹²¹ and reflects their application to practices “before, during and after a commercial transaction (if any) in relation to a product”. ¹¹²²

Comparison with the law of misrepresentation

38-171

Overall, the types of behaviour covered by “misleading action” as defined by reg.5 cover very many, though not all, the behaviour which may be the subject of a claim for misrepresentation under the general law. Under the general law, an actionable misrepresentation requires a false statement of fact or law and, in principle, this excludes false statements of opinion or future fact. ¹¹²³ This means that some pre-contractual statements by a trader may count as a misrepresentation even though they do not constitute a “misleading action” within the meaning of the 2008 Regulations (as not falling within the matters enumerated by reg.5(4) or the special cases). ¹¹²⁴ Conversely, some statements of intention may count as a misleading action under the 2008 Regulations, for example, a “failure by a trader to comply with a commitment contained in a code of conduct which the trader has undertaken to comply with” ¹¹²⁵ though they would not count as an actionable misrepresentation under the general law if at the time the contract was made the trader intended to comply with the code of conduct. Finally, if (contrary to the position adopted above) an isolated misrepresentation by a trader or its employee that was not part of a scheme or within the employee’s actual authority ¹¹²⁶ does not constitute a “commercial practice”, ¹¹²⁷ it would not fall within “prohibited practice” and could not give rise to the new rights to redress. This result would be the unforeseen consequence ¹¹²⁸ of using a legislative scheme designed for the prohibition of trader behaviour enforceable through administrative measures, court orders or penalties, ¹¹²⁹ not requiring the conclusion of any transaction, ¹¹³⁰ and specifically inapplicable to “contract law” ¹¹³¹ as the basis of civil redress for individual consumers in respect of the particular contracts which they make with traders. Certainly, if “commercial practice” cannot extend (or cannot extend in the circumstances) to an isolated case of misrepresentation, then even in consumer cases the general law of misrepresentation will remain of importance. ¹¹³²

Misleading omissions

38-172

⚠ Regulation 6 of the 2008 Regulations specifically includes an “misleading omission” as an example of the unfair commercial practices which they prohibit, explaining that this includes situations where:

- “(a)
the commercial practice omits material information,
- (b)
the commercial practice hides material information,
- (c)
the commercial practice provides material information in a manner which is unclear, unintelligible, ambiguous or untimely, or
- (d)
the commercial practice fails to identify its commercial intent, unless this is already apparent from the context, and as a result it causes or is likely to cause the average consumer to take a transactional decision he would not have taken otherwise.” ¹¹³³

“Material information” is defined as referring to:

- “(a)
the information which the average consumer needs, according to the context, to take an informed transactional decision; and
- (b)
any information requirement which applies in relation to a commercial communication as a result of an EU obligation.” ¹¹³⁴ ⚠

So, in the case of the second category, a trader's failure to provide the information required of traders in respect of distance contracts, off-premises contracts, on-premises contracts or timeshare contracts, ¹¹³⁵ would constitute a misleading omission, subject to it having the designated effect or likely effect on the average consumer's decision-making. ¹¹³⁶  However, following the recommendation of the Law Commissions, the 2014 amendments to the 2008 Regulations do not include "misleading omissions" as defined by reg.6 as a "prohibited practice" for the purposes of the consumer's right to redress. ¹¹³⁷ The effect of this is clear in relation to a "pure omission", so that, notably, a failure in a trader to provide the pre-contractual information required by UK legislation implementing EU law will not in itself give rise to rights to redress in consumers, ¹¹³⁸ nor will a failure to provide information "which the average consumer needs, according to the context, to take an informed transactional decision". ¹¹³⁹ However, the position is less clear in the case of a trader providing information in either of these categories, but doing so inaccurately or incompletely. At first sight, such commercial behaviour by a trader could fall within reg.6(1)(c)'s reference to the provision of "material information in a manner which is unclear, unintelligible, ambiguous or untimely" and therefore outside the scope of availability of the rights to redress. On the other hand, the definition of "misleading action" in reg.5 is very broad, in that it includes both false information and information whose "overall presentation in any way deceives or is likely to deceive the average consumer". ¹¹⁴⁰ It is submitted that "half-truths" and other statements which, while true, are misleading would be caught by reg.5 and therefore attract the possibility of rights to redress for consumers ¹¹⁴¹ and is, therefore, broadly similar to the position under the general law of misrepresentation where such true but misleading statements can be actionable. ¹¹⁴² Such a broad approach to misleading action was taken by the Law Commissions, ¹¹⁴³ which gave as examples a case where a consumer buys a lawnmower, which works satisfactorily but the consumer is not aware that the mower requires an unusual and hard-to-obtain fuel, and the case where a travel agent sells a package holiday in an exotic foreign destination to a consumer, but fails to tell the consumer that there has recently been an outbreak of cholera at the destination. ¹¹⁴⁴ In the case of the first example, if a trader sold the mower as petrol-driven or a "motor-mower", it seems correct that the overall presentation is misleading, but in the second example, to include a failure to provide information as to the cholera as a "misleading action" would obliterate the distinction between positive statements and non-disclosure. On the other hand, after the Law Commission's recommendations and the resulting amendments to the 2008 Regulations were made in 2014, the Court of Justice of the EU in Canal Digital Denmark A/S ¹¹⁴⁵  provided guidance on the interpretation and application of arts 6 and 7 of the 2005 Directive on misleading actions and misleading omissions respectively, making clear, first, that the provision of incomplete information may constitute a misleading action, and that, secondly, the same commercial practice may constitute both a misleading action and a misleading omission, subject in either case to its satisfying the particular conditions and taking into account the particular factors which are required by the 2005 Directive. ¹¹⁴⁶

Aggressive practice

38-173

 Regulation 7(1) provides:

"(1)

A commercial practice is aggressive if, in its factual context, taking account of all of its features and circumstances—

(a)

it significantly impairs or is likely significantly to impair the average consumer's freedom of choice or conduct in relation to the product concerned through the use of harassment, coercion or undue influence; and

- (b) it thereby causes or is likely to cause him to take a transactional decision he would not have taken otherwise.”

“Consumer” , “average consumer” , “product” and “transactional decision” are defined in the same way as they are for the purposes of the rights to redress for consumers in respect of misleading actions. ¹¹⁴⁷ Regulation 7(2) then explains that:

- “(2)
In determining whether a commercial practice uses harassment, coercion or undue influence account shall be taken of—its timing, location, nature or persistence;
 - (a)
 - (b)
the use of threatening or abusive language or behaviour;
 - (c)
the exploitation by the trader of any specific misfortune or circumstance of such gravity as to impair the consumer’s judgment, of which the trader is aware, to influence the consumer’s decision with regard to the product;
 - (d)
any onerous or disproportionate non-contractual barrier imposed by the trader where a consumer wishes to exercise rights under the contract, including rights to terminate a contract or to switch to another product or another trader; and any threat to take any action which cannot legally be taken.”
 - (e)

For these purposes, “coercion” includes the use of physical force ¹¹⁴⁸ and “undue influence” means:

“exploiting a position of power in relation to the consumer so as to apply pressure, even without using or threatening to use physical force, in a way which significantly limits the consumer’s ability to make an informed decision.” ¹¹⁴⁹

There is no definition of “harassment”. ¹¹⁵⁰

Examples; comparison with general law

38-174

As the Law Commissions pointed out, the list of practices unfair in all circumstances illustrates the sort of practices which could fall within the category of aggressive practices: creating the impression that the consumer cannot leave the premises until a contract is formed, conducting personal visits to the consumer's home and ignoring the consumer's legitimate request to leave or not to return, and making persistent and unwanted solicitations by telephone, fax, email or other remote media except in circumstances and to the extent justified to enforce a contractual obligation. ¹¹⁵¹ The Law Commissions recommended that the definition of an aggressive practice for the purposes of the consumer's rights to redress should track the definition in reg.7 with some modifications so as, in particular, to avoid reference to “undue influence” which would cause confusion with the doctrine of undue influence under the general law, to define “harassment” as “unreasonable behaviour which is likely to cause alarm, distress or serious annoyance and inconvenience” and to make clear that no “course of conduct” is required for there to be harassment for this purpose. ¹¹⁵² These recommendations are not, however, reflected in the new law, which simply adopts the definition of “aggressive commercial practice” in the Regulations generally without change as the basis of the consumer's new rights, except in relation to the definition of “transactional decision”. ¹¹⁵³ This has the advantage of relative simplicity, but it does allow the confusion which the Law Commissions foresaw between “undue influence” for the purposes of the new rights for consumers and “undue influence” under the general law, the main difference being that the latter typically involves the abuse of a special relationship of trust between the parties, ¹¹⁵⁴ which is unlikely to be the case in the context of consumer contracts. Moreover, the idea of “undue influence” in the Regulations (following the 2005 Directive) is much broader and less technical than undue influence under the general law, though the significance of vulnerable groups of consumers (notably, by reason of “age, physical or mental infirmity or credulity” ¹¹⁵⁵) for the purposes of “average consumer” and may sometimes have a similar resonance to some of the traditional concerns of the general law of undue influence or, indeed, equitable relief against unconscionable bargains. ¹¹⁵⁶ Indeed, the Regulations' reference to “the exploitation of a position of power” ¹¹⁵⁷ without limiting it to a relationship of trust and confidence suggests that the exploitation of a consumer's urgent need for the product may amount to an aggressive practice. The contrast between the definition of “aggressive practices” and the facts which would attract the common law doctrine of duress is also marked, as the latter typically involves an illegitimate threat to the person, goods or economic interests of the party to the contract. ¹¹⁵⁸ On the other hand, if (contrary to the view adopted above) “aggressive practice” requires a course of conduct in a trader and cannot apply merely to an isolated example of pressure being exerted on an individual consumer, then the general law of duress, undue influence and unconscionable bargains would retain their significance even in the context of consumer contracts and some cases seen by the Law Commissions as requiring a remedy would be left without one. ¹¹⁵⁹

Prohibited practice by a “producer”

38-175

In the preceding discussion of the second condition for the availability of the consumer's rights to redress, the prohibited practice has been engaged in by the trader with whom the consumer has made a contract or to whom the trader has made a payment. However, reg.27A(4)(b) provides that the second condition for the availability of their rights may equally be satisfied in certain cases where it is the producer of goods or digital content which so engages, being:

“(b) in a case where a consumer enters into a business to consumer contract for goods or digital content—

- (i) a producer engages in a prohibited practice in relation to the goods or digital content, and
- (ii) when the contract is entered into, the trader is aware of the commercial practice that constitutes the prohibited practice or could reasonably be expected to be aware of it.”

The Regulations then define “producer” to include a manufacturer, EEA importer or a person who presents themselves as a producer. ¹¹⁶⁰

38-176

The 2008 Regulations generally do not distinguish between different categories of trader which engage in unfair commercial practices: retailers, wholesalers, producers or agents may all fall under their prohibitions and, therefore, the preventive measures or criminal offences which they set out. ¹¹⁶¹ By contrast, the rights to civil redress under Pt 4A of the Regulations require that the trader has made a contract with the consumer, or that the consumer has made a payment to the trader, thereby focussing the consumer’s civil rights against the retailer of goods or services and reflecting the importance of the consumer’s right to unwind the transaction so made. ¹¹⁶² This focus was supported by the Law Commissions, which recommended against allowing consumers to claim directly against producers and perpetrators of unfair practices other than retailers. ¹¹⁶³ The 2014 Regulations as enacted retain this focus but go further and provide that the trader who supplies goods or digital content may be liable to the consumer’s rights to redress where it is their producer, rather than the trader/supplier itself, who has engaged in a prohibited practice (i.e. misleading action or aggressive practice), subject to the condition that, at the time of the contract, “the trader is aware of the commercial practice that constitutes the prohibited practice or could reasonably be expected to be aware of it”. ¹¹⁶⁴ This liability in a retailer of goods or digital content for these types of unfair commercial practices in the producer therefore parallels closely the retailer’s contractual liability for lack of satisfactory quality of the goods or digital content supplied even in circumstances where this failure is caused by their own supplier or their manufacturer. For under the Consumer Rights Act 2015 the question whether goods or digital content supplied under a contract are of satisfactory quality may take into account any public statement made in advertising or labelling about the specific characteristics of the goods or digital content by the producer or trader (or their representatives), but this will not be the case, inter alia, where the trader shows that he was not aware, and could not reasonably have been aware, of the statement. ¹¹⁶⁵ In this way, the new law governing the consumer’s rights to redress for misleading statements reflects closely the new law governing the consumer’s rights in respect of the satisfactory quality of the goods under the contract.

Third condition: “A significant factor in the consumer’s decision”

38-177

The third condition for the availability of the consumer’s rights to redress is that “the prohibited practice is a significant factor in the consumer’s decision to enter into the contract or make the payment”. ¹¹⁶⁶ As earlier explained, the Regulations’ definition of “prohibited practice” for the purposes of the consumer’s rights to redress requires that the misleading action or aggressive practice causes or is likely to cause the average consumer to enter into a contract with a trader or to make a payment to a trader for the supply of a product. ¹¹⁶⁷ However, in addition, the third condition of the availability of the consumer's rights to redress is that the prohibited practice in question is a significant factor in that consumer's decision to enter the contract or make the payment. The Law Commissions rejected the adoption of a test of "but for" causation between the prohibited practice and the consumer's decision, since it would be unrealistic to expect consumers to prove that without the commercial practice they would not have entered the contract at all: "often there will be no way of telling why a consumer acted in that particular way following an aggressive or misleading practice".¹¹⁶⁸ On the other hand, "putting no weight on causation would be inconsistent with the compensatory aim of private rights".¹¹⁶⁹ The "significant factor" test was seen as a compromise position.¹¹⁷⁰ The Law Commissions concluded that:

"In practice, this means that consumers will need to provide some evidence that they saw or heard the misleading statement, or experienced the aggressive practice before making the decision to buy or pay and that they were influenced by it. Thereafter, it will be enough if the misleading or aggressive practice is sufficiently serious to cause a reasonably well informed, observant and circumspect consumer to enter into the contract or to make a payment."¹¹⁷¹

Comparison with the general law of misrepresentation, duress and undue Influence

38-178

Although the Law Commissions thought otherwise,¹¹⁷² the "significant factor" test to determine the causal connection required between the consumer's decision to enter the contract differs from the rules governing misrepresentation, duress and undue influence under the general law. In the case of misrepresentation, the test of "inducement" is that it is sufficient for the claimant to show that the misrepresentation was one of the inducing causes of the misrepresentee's decision to enter the contract¹¹⁷³: what is required is that the misrepresentee would not have entered the contract or would not have entered the contract on the same terms but for the misrepresentation.¹¹⁷⁴ However, an exception to this general pattern is found in the rules governing rescission for fraud, where it is sufficient if there is evidence to show that the misrepresentee was materially influenced by the misrepresentation merely in the sense that it had some impact on his thinking: it is no defence for the misrepresenter to show that the misrepresentee would still have made the contract.¹¹⁷⁵ The courts have applied this special rule for fraud to cases of duress to the person and to cases of actual undue influence,¹¹⁷⁶ but the better view is that the causal requirement for duress of goods and economic duress is that the victim must show that the duress was a "significant cause" of the victim's entering the contract, in the sense that, but for the threat, he would not have entered the contract or would not have entered it on the same terms.¹¹⁷⁷ Given that the Law Commissions foresaw that the "significant factor" test retains some causal role for the prohibited practice in the consumer's decision to enter the contract or to make the payment, it is submitted that the courts are likely to seek to apply their general approach in their interpretation of "significant factor" for the purposes of the consumer's rights to redress under the Regulations with the result that the third condition would be satisfied where the consumer could establish that, but for the prohibited practice, he or she would not have entered the contract or made the payment, or would not have done so on the same terms. However, if the courts wished instead to take a more generous view, they could treat the prohibited practices as more akin to fraud, duress of the person and actual undue influence, with the result that, the trader could not escape liability under the rights to redress merely by establishing that the consumer would anyway have entered the contract or made the payment or would have done so on the same terms. This more generous view may be appropriate as a matter of policy as regards aggressive practices which involve intentional behaviour on the part of the trader ("harassment, coercion or undue influence"¹¹⁷⁸), but may well be less so for misleading actions, which may be committed by a trader purely innocently.¹¹⁷⁹

¹⁰⁷⁵. Defined as "data which are produced or supplied in digital form": 2008 Regulations reg.2(1) "digital content".

- 1076. 2008 Regulations reg.27A(2), (4) and (6).
- 1077. Below, paras 38-165—38-176.
- 1078. Law Commissions Report (2012) paras 6.93–6.118. Their main reasons were that land transactions apart from residential leases are subject to a well-established and understood law of conveyancing, and consumers have access to redress schemes; in the case of financial services, there are already sophisticated mechanisms in place to protect consumers and the remedies they recommend may be unsuited to the considerable amounts of money which these services may involve. On the other hand, consumer credit agreements and debt collection should be included within the new scheme as they are often inextricably linked to the supply of goods and services and cause many problems.
- 1079. The general definition is found in 2008 Regulations reg.2(1) “product”, above, para.38-156.
- 1080. 2008 Regulations reg.27C provides that “product” does not include “immoveable property other than a relevant lease”, defining the latter in relation to England and Wales as an assured tenancy within the meaning of Pt 1 of the Housing Act 1988 or a lease under which accommodation is let as holiday accommodation, but then excluding leases granted by a private registered provider of social housing as defined by s.80(3)(a) of the Housing and Regeneration Act 2008 or by a registered social landlord as understood by Pt I of the Housing Act 1996, leases of a dwelling-house or part of a dwelling-house granted on payment of a premium calculated by reference to a percentage of the value of the dwelling-house or part of or the cost of providing it or under which the lessee (or the lessee’s representatives) will or may be entitled to a sum calculated by reference, directly or indirectly, to the value of the dwelling-house or part and leases granted to a person as a result of the exercise by a local housing authority within the meaning of the Housing Act 1996 of its functions under Pt 7 (homelessness) of that Act: 2008 Regulations reg.27D(1)–(3).
- 1081. 2008 Regulations reg.27D(1) excludes generally from the definition of “product” a service provided in the course of carrying on a “regulated activity” within the meaning of s.22 of the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (as illustrated by the list in Sch.2 of that Act), but then s.27D(2) specifically saves from this exclusion “restricted-use credit agreements” as defined by the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (Regulated Activities) Order 2001 (Order 2001/544) art.60L(1) “restricted-use credit agreements” para.(a) or (b) (but not (c)), i.e. a credit agreement “to finance a transaction between the borrower and the lender, whether forming part of that agreement or not” or “to finance a transaction between the borrower and a person (‘the supplier’) other than the lender”: cf. below, paras 39-027—39-028 on these two categories of “restricted-use credit agreement” and their significance under the Consumer Credit Act 1974 s.11(1). This saving provision is itself subject to an exception in the cases of agreements under which the obligation of the borrower to repay is secured by a legal or equitable mortgage on land (other than timeshare accommodation), “mortgage” including a charge for these purposes and “timeshare accommodation” meaning overnight accommodation which is the subject of a timeshare contract within the meaning of the Timeshare, Holiday Products, Resale and Exchange Contracts Regulations 2010 (SI 2010/2960) reg.7: 2008 Regulations reg.27D(3) and (4). Finally, it is expressly provided that Pt 4A of the 2008 Regulations (and therefore the consumer’s rights to redress) may apply to the supply of a product even though that supply may constitute an activity within art.39F (debt-collecting) of the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (Regulated Activities) Order 2001: 2008 Regulations reg.27D(5).
- 1082. Above, para.38-156.
- 1083. 2008 Regulations reg.27A(2)(a).
- 1084. 2008 Regulations reg.2(6), above, para.38-156.
- 1085. 2008 Regulations regs 27D and 27E, above, para.38-164.
- 1086. 2008 Regulations reg.27A(2)(b).

- 1087. 2008 Regulations reg.27A(3).
- 1088. 2008 Regulations reg.27A(2)(c).
- 1089. Law Commissions' Report (2012) para.4.34.
- 1090. Law Commissions' Report (2012) para.4.35.
- 1091. On the definition of "product" for these purposes, see below para.38-164.
- 1092. Below, paras 38-182 and 38-185.
- 1093. 2008 Regulations reg.27A(4), and see below, paras 38-175—38-176.
- 1094. 2008 Regulations reg.27B. See above, para.38-153 (on the general test) and para.38-160 (for the Law Commissions' views).
- 1095. 2008 Regulations reg.3(4)(d); Sch.1, above, para.38-160 and cf. 38-151.
- 1096. 2008 Regulations regs 5(2)(b), 5(3) and 7(1)(b). Moreover, "transactional decision" is defined specially for these purposes: reg.27B(2), below, para.38-170.
- 1097. 2008 Regulations reg.5(2) and see below, para.38-168.
- 1098. 2008 Regulations reg.5(3) and see below, para.38-169.
- 1099. 2008 Regulations reg.5(5).
- 1100. 2008 Regulations reg.5(6).
- 1101. 2008 Regulations reg.5(7).
- 1102.  Criminal Proceedings against Canal Digital Denmark A/S (C-611/14) of October 26, 2016. ("Canal Digital Denmark A/S (C-611/14)").
- 1103.  Canal Digital Denmark A/S (C-611/14) at para.36.
- 1104.  See Main Work, Vol.I, para.38-157.
- 1105.  Canal Digital Denmark A/S (C-611/14) at para.40.
- 1106.  Canal Digital Denmark A/S (C-611/14) at para.41.
- 1107.  Canal Digital Denmark A/S (C-611/14) at para.42.
- 1108.  On the definition of "product" see art.2(c) of the 2005 Directive; 2008 Regulations reg.2(1) and Main Work, Vol.II, para.38-156.
- 1109.  Canal Digital Denmark A/S (C-611/14) at paras 43–44. The CJEU also explained that "the price is, in principle, a determining factor in the mind of the average consumer, when he has to make a transactional decision" (para.46), this being relevant to the requirement in art.6(1) that the relevant commercial practice must cause or be likely to cause the average consumer "to take a transactional decision that he would not have taken otherwise" (and see 2008 Regulations reg.5(2)(b), though note that in the Regulations the definition of "transactional decision" is defined specially for the purposes of the consumers rights to redress under Pt 4A:

2008 Regulations reg.27B(2) and see Main Work, Vol.II, para.38-170).

- 1110.  For the significance of this for the availability for the consumer of a “right to redress” under Pt 4A of the 2008 Regulations, see Main Work, Vol.II, para.38-172.
- 1111.  Canal Digital Denmark A/S (C-611/14) at paras 42 and 58–63.
- 1112.  Canal Digital Denmark A/S (C-611/14) at paras 52–58.
- 1113. 2005 Directive art.6(2).
- 1114. A “code of conduct” is defined by the 2008 Regulations reg.2 as: “an agreement or set of rules (which is not imposed by legal or administrative requirements), which defines the behaviour of traders who undertake to be bound by it in relation to one or more commercial practices or business sectors”.
- 1115. 2008 Regulations reg.5(3).
- 1116. Above, para.38-156.
- 1117. Above, para.38-157.
- 1118. 2008 Regulations reg.27B(2).
- 1119. 2008 Regulations reg.27A(2) and (3), above, para.38-165.
- 1120. 2005 Directive art.2(k).
- 1121. 2008 Regulations reg.2(1) “transactional decision”.
- 1122. 2008 Regulations reg.2(1) “commercial practice” above, para.38-154.
- 1123. Vol.I, paras 7-006 et seq.
- 1124. Above, paras 38-167—38-169.
- 1125. 2008 Regulations reg.5(3)(b).
- 1126. i.e. the employee did not have express, implied or “usual” authority: see above, paras 31-043 et seq.
- 1127. cf. the discussion above, paras 38-155—38-156 as to the question whether a “commercial practice” may be found in relation to an isolated transaction.
- 1128. The Law Commissions’ Report appears to assume that “commercial practice” can apply to an isolated transaction: paras 2.10 and 2.11.
- 1129. 2005 Directive arts 5(1); 11–13.
- 1130. The definition of “commercial practice” refers to “before, during or after a commercial transaction (if any)”: R. v X Ltd [2013] EWCA Crim 818 at [23]; 2005 Directive recital 13.
- 1131. 2005 Directive art.3(2), above para.38-148.
- 1132. This law will not be excluded: see below, para.38-188.
- 1133. 2008 Regulations reg.6(1).

- 1134. !2008 Regulations reg.6(3) and see Carrefour Hypermarches SAS v ITM Alimentaire International SASU (C-562/15) of February 8, 2017. Further provision is made for information to be supplied where a commercial practice is an invitation to purchase: 2008 Regulations reg.6(4). On “invitation to purchase” see 2005 Directive art.2(i) and Konsumentombudsmannen v Ving Sverige AB (C-122/10) of May 12, 2011 paras 27–33 and esp. at para.28 (“an invitation to purchase is a specific form of advertising to which is attached a stricter obligation to provide information”), where it was held that the list of information deemed material by art.7(4) (implemented by art.6(4) of the 2008 Regulations) is an exhaustive one: C-122/10 at paras 68-72.
- 1135. On which see above, paras 38-093, 38-098 and 38-138.
- 1136. !On the significance of reg.6’s requirements as to misleading omissions generally see OFT v Purely Creative [2011] EWHC 106 (Ch), [2011] E.C.C. 20 at [73]–[74]; Secretary of State for Business, Innovation and Skills v PLT Antimarketing Ltd [2015] EWCA Civ 76, [2015] C.T.L.C.8 at [30]–[31]; Deroo-Blanquart v Sony Europe Ltd (C-310/15) of September 7, 2016 esp. at paras 48–49 (“material information” refers to “key items of information which the consumer needs to make an informed transactional decision”, assessed in all the circumstances).
- 1137. Above, para.38-160.
- 1138. A failure to supply information required by EU legislation in itself constitutes “material information” whose omission falls within reg.6: reg.6(3)(b).
- 1139. 2008 Regulations reg.6(3)(a).
- 1140. 2008 Regulations reg.5(2)(a), above, para.38-168.
- 1141. 2008 Regulations reg.27B(1)(a), above, para.38-166.
- 1142. Vol.I, para.7-020.
- 1143. Report paras 7.22–7.23 arguing that “deceives” in reg.5(2)(a) should be understood in the context to mean “mislead” rather than deliberately mislead.
- 1144. Report paras 7.26–7.28. The examples had been provided by H. Collins, A Private Right of Redress for Unfair Commercial Practices: A Report for Consumer Focus (April 2009) who referred to them as examples of misleading omissions.
- 1145. !Criminal Proceedings against Canal Digital Denmark A/S (C-611/14) of October 26, 2016* and see further the note to para.38-168.
- 1146. 2005 Directive art.5(4)(a); Zentrale sur Bekämpfung unlauteren Weebewerbs eV v Plus Warenhandels-gesellschaft mbh (C-304/08) [2010] E.C.R. I-00217 para.44.
- 1147. 2008 Regulations reg.2(1) “consumer”; reg.2(2)–(6) “average consumer”; reg.27B(2) “transactional decision”: see above, paras 38-156, 38-157 and 38-170 respectively. Regulation 2(1) defines “product” generally (see above, para.38-156), but this definition is then qualified by regs 27C–27D for the purposes of the rights to redress provided by Pt 4A as explained below, para.38-164.
- 1148. 2008 Regulations reg.7(3)(a).
- 1149. 2008 Regulations reg.7(3)(b).
- 1150. !For examples of “aggressive commercial practices” see R. v Waters [2016] EWCA Crim 1112, [2017] E.C.C. 5 (high-pressured sale of furniture to elderly person); R v Jackson [2017] EWCA Crim 78 (pressurising elderly and vulnerable person to agree to pay for work trader said he had carried out).

- 1151. 2008 Regulations Sch.1 paras 24, 25 and 26.
- 1152. Law Commissions' Report (2012) paras 7.67–7.82.
- 1153. 2008 Regulations reg.27B(1)(b), (2) above, para.38-170.
- 1154. Law Commissions' Report (2012) para.7.66 and see Vol.I, paras 8-057 et seq. where the complexities of the general law are explained.
- 1155. 2008 Regulations reg.2(5)(a), above, para.38-157.
- 1156. Vol.I, paras 8-130 et seq.
- 1157. 2008 Regulations reg.7(3)(b).
- 1158. Vol.I, Ch.8 especially 8-010—8-011.
- 1159. Above, paras 38-154—38-155.
- 1160. 2008 Regulations reg.27A(5). This definition is modelled on the one provided by Directive 1999/44/EC on certain aspects of the sale of consumer goods and associated guarantees [1999] O.J. L171/12 art.2(d), implemented in UK law by Sale of Goods Act 1979 s.14(2D)–(2F), 61(1) “producer” and Consumer Rights Act 2015 ss.9(5), 59(1) “producer”, below, paras 38-406 and 38-462 respectively.
- 1161. Law Commissions' Report (2012) para.6.64.
- 1162. Above, para.38-165. Law Commissions' Report (2012) para.6.65.
- 1163. Law Commissions' Report (2012) paras 6.73–6.75.
- 1164. 2008 Regulations reg.27A(4)(b)(ii).
- 1165. Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.9(5), (6) and 7(a) (goods); s.34(5), (6) and (7)(a) (digital content): see below, paras 38-462 and 38-506 respectively.
- 1166. 2008 Regulations reg.27A(6).
- 1167. 2008 Regulations reg.27B and see above, paras 38-168—38-170 and 38-173. The Law Commissions Report 2014 para.7.85 referred to this element as an objective test, seeing it as similar to the “materiality” test of the general law of misrepresentation, on which see Vol.I, para.7-040.
- 1168. Law Commissions Report 2014 paras 7.107–7.108.
- 1169. Law Commissions Report 2014 para.7.108.
- 1170. Law Commissions Report 2014 para.7.114.
- 1171. Law Commissions Report 2014 para.7.115.
- 1172. Law Commissions Report 2014 para.7.109 stating that the “significant factor” test “is in line with existing law, particularly in Scotland”, but referring to a discussion in their earlier Joint Consultation Paper Consumer Redress for Misleading and Aggressive Practices (2011) Consultation Paper No.199, Discussion Paper No.149 paras 8.7–8.8 which describes incompletely the position in English law (describing the “but for” test as requiring the entering of a contract and not also including the entering of a contract on different terms), and which observes that “[i]n Scotland there has been little discussion of misrepresentation and causation".

1173. Vol.I, para.7-037.

1174. Vol.I, paras 7-037—7-038.

1175. Vol.I, para.7-039 relying on Edgington v Fitzmaurice (1885) 29 Ch. D. 459, 483.

1176. Vol.I, para.7-039, 8-026, Barton v Armstrong [1976] A.C. 104 (duress to the person); para.8-072, UCB Corporate Services Ltd v Williams [2002] EWCA Civ 555, [2003] 1 P. & C.R. 12 at [86] (actual undue influence). Cases of presumed undue influence are treated differently, as where it is presumed that one party had influence over the other and that a transaction between them was one "not readily explicable by the relationship" between them, it will be presumed (or inferred) that the transaction was the result of an abuse of an influence unless the presumption is rebutted: Vol.I, para.8-073.

1177. Vol.I paras 8-027—8-028.

1178. 2008 Regulations reg.7(1)(a).

1179. 2008 Regulations reg.5(2) and (3).

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.

Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement

Volume II - Specific Contracts

Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts

Section 5. - Unfair Commercial Practices and the Consumer's Rights to redress

(d) - The New Rights to Civil Redress for Consumers

(iii) - The Three Rights to Redress

Overview of the consumer's rights

38-179

A consumer who enters a contract with, or makes a relevant payment to, a trader as the result of a "prohibited practice" ¹¹⁸⁰ may have a "right to redress" ¹¹⁸¹ in the form of one or more remedies (termed "rights" by the 2008 Regulations): to "unwind" the contract or payment ¹¹⁸² or, in the case of business to consumer contracts, to obtain a discount, ¹¹⁸³ and in either case to claim damages. ¹¹⁸⁴ According to the Law Commissions, the overall strategy of the new rights was "to approximate the outcomes under the current law, but in a simplified way". ¹¹⁸⁵ The consumer may enforce a right to redress by a claim in civil proceedings. ¹¹⁸⁶ The claim will be subject to the Limitation Act 1980 as if it were an action founded on a simple contract. ¹¹⁸⁷

The right to unwind the contract: business to consumer contracts

38-180

If a consumer has entered a "business to consumer" contract ¹¹⁸⁸ and the three conditions of the general availability of the consumer's rights to redress ¹¹⁸⁹ are fulfilled, the consumer will have a right to "unwind" the contract provided that (i) the consumer indicates to the trader that he or she rejects the product within a limited period, ¹¹⁹⁰ (ii) that the "product" remains "capable of rejection" ¹¹⁹¹ and (iii) the consumer has not already exercised the right to discount for the same contract and prohibited practice. ¹¹⁹² The period is 90 days from the later of the day on which the contract was made or, in effect, on which the consumer first received delivery or performance. ¹¹⁹³ The product is incapable of rejection only if (as the case may be) the goods have been fully consumed, services have been fully performed, ¹¹⁹⁴ digital content was available to the consumer for a fixed period that has expired, ¹¹⁹⁵ the lease has expired or the right conferred on the consumer has been fully exercised. ¹¹⁹⁶ If the consumer has a right to unwind (which, as stated above, requires that the consumer has notified the trader that he or she rejects the product), the contract comes to an end and the consumer and the trader are released from their obligations under it ¹¹⁹⁷; the trader must give the consumer a refund ¹¹⁹⁸; and, if the contract was for the sale or supply of goods, the consumer must make the goods available for the trader to collect. ¹¹⁹⁹ Where the consumer has paid money under the contract, in principle the amount paid must be refunded without any deduction for use, ¹²⁰⁰ though this is qualified by detailed provisions governing cases in which the consumer has transferred something other than money ¹²⁰¹ and also where the contract was for the sale or supply of goods on a regular basis. ¹²⁰² This general position is to be compared with the effects of cancellation by a consumer of an off-premises or distance contract, as cancellation also brings to an end the obligations of the parties to the contract, but generates an obligation in the trader to reimburse all payments received from the consumer other than payments for delivery (subject to a possible qualification for diminution in value through their handling) and in principle also an obligation in the consumer to return any goods supplied. ¹²⁰³

The right to unwind the contract: consumer to business contracts

38-181

If the consumer has entered a contract under which the consumer is to sell goods to the trader, ¹²⁰⁴ the consumer has the right to treat the contract as at an end, ¹²⁰⁵ so that the parties are released from their obligations under it. There is no time limit, except as applies under the general limitation period. ¹²⁰⁶ If the consumer exercises the right to unwind, he or she will have a right to the return of the goods transferred if they can be returned in the condition they were in when sold by the consumer, and must refund any payment made by the trader. If the goods cannot be returned in the same condition, the consumer has the right to be paid the amount (if any) by which the market price of the goods when the trader paid for them exceeds what the trader paid for them. ¹²⁰⁷

Unwinding payments

38-182

Where the three general conditions for the availability of a right to redress are satisfied, ¹²⁰⁸ a consumer who has made a payment in full or partial settlement of the consumer's liabilities or purported liabilities to the trader for a product as a result of a prohibited practice, may recover that payment to the extent that the consumer was not required (i.e. legally liable) to make it. ¹²⁰⁹ In other words, the right to unwind a payment applies only if the payment made was not due: the consumer cannot, for example, recover a payment that was due on the ground that the consumer would not have made the payment at that time but for a misleading action or aggressive practice on the part of the trader. ¹²¹⁰

The right to a discount

38-183

In the case of a business to consumer contract, if the consumer has not exercised the right to unwind the contract, ¹²¹¹ the consumer has a right to a discount. ¹²¹² If the consumer has made one or more payments to the trader, the consumer may recover a relevant percentage; if payments are still to be made, they may be reduced accordingly. For these purposes, for most contracts, the 2008 Regulations provide "pre-set bands" ¹²¹³ the relevant percentages are as follows:

- "(a)
if the prohibited practice is more than minor, it is 25%,
- (b)
if the prohibited practice is significant, it is 50%,
- (c)
if the prohibited practice is serious, it is 75%, and if the prohibited practice is very serious, it is 100%." ¹²¹⁴
- (d)

It is clear, therefore, that where the prohibited practice is minor or less than minor, no discount would be available. ¹²¹⁵ The seriousness of the prohibited practice is to be assessed by reference to:

- “(a)
the behaviour of the person who engaged in the practice,
- (b)
the impact of the practice on the consumer, and
- (c)
the time that has elapsed since the prohibited practice took place.” ¹²¹⁶

The Law Commissions accepted that pre-set bands for discounts could operate unfairly in purchases where there is clear evidence of the difference between what the product was worth and what the consumer paid for it, for example, in a £10,000 purchase where the trader can show that the loss was 10 per cent, the court may be faced with a harsh choice if it were only able to give 25 per cent or nothing. ¹²¹⁷ The 2008 Regulations reflect this concern by providing an exception to their application for cases where the amount payable under the contract is more than £5,000 and there is clear evidence that the market price of the product is lower than the contract price: here, the relevant percentage is “the percentage difference between the market price of the product and the amount payable for it under the contract” rather than one of the pre-set bands. ¹²¹⁸ The wording of this provision is ambiguous, but it is submitted that it refers to the percentage by which the contract price exceeds the market price (which on the facts of the example given above would be 11.11 per cent), rather than the percentage by which the market price is lower than the contract price (which on the same facts would be 10 per cent), since if the second percentage were intended, the amount of the discount would be the difference between the contract price and the market price, and it would have been simpler to say so. This replacement of the pre-set bands by this special test means that where traders sell or supply high-value products their behaviour (and therefore any penal element) cannot be taken into account ¹²¹⁹; nor could the time that has elapsed since the prohibited practice took place or the “impact of the practice on the consumer” to the extent to which this is not already reflected in the special percentage discount applicable.

Nature of the right to a discount

38-184

The most obvious purpose of the discount is to provide a simple mechanism to compensate the consumer who has been misled or pressured into buying a product that is worth less than the consumer had agreed to pay, but who cannot (or chooses not to) unwind the contract. ¹²²⁰ However, it is clear that these discounts are not just a form of price reduction, ¹²²¹ since (except where the price is over £5,000) there is no reference to the actual value of the product. Although the Law Commissions’ original intention was that “the consumer would receive compensation in the form of a discount on the Price ... the new [legislation] should use broad bands of detriment”, ¹²²² the Regulations refer to “the seriousness of the prohibited practice” (emphases supplied), not the seriousness of the loss to the consumer. The “impact on the consumer” is just a factor to be taken into account together with the behaviour of the person (trader or producer ¹²²³) and the time that has elapsed since the prohibited practice took place, and is not the measure to be used, while the nature of the trader’s behaviour would not normally be relevant to calculation of damages. Nor is the discount a form of “aggravated” damages (seeking to compensate the consumer for the additional hurt caused by the trader’s practices ¹²²⁴), as this is a head under which the consumer may recover damages. ¹²²⁵ The right to a discount seems therefore to be partly aimed at compensation for loss of value and partly a form of civil penalty. ¹²²⁶ If this is so, then its practical implication could be that its award would not affect any further amount that a consumer may be able to recover on some other basis, such as damages for fraud or for breach of contract, as Pt 4A prevents double recovery only of “compensation”. ¹²²⁷

Damages

38-185

A consumer who has entered a contract as the result of a prohibited practice by the trader, whether or not the consumer unwinds the contract or claims a discount, may recover damages for financial loss other than “the difference between the market price of a product and the amount payable for it under a contract”, ¹²²⁸ and for “alarm, distress or physical inconvenience or discomfort” ¹²²⁹ that would not have occurred otherwise, ¹²³⁰ provided that the loss was reasonably foreseeable at the time of the prohibited practice ¹²³¹ and subject to what amounts to a defence of due diligence on the part of the trader and which was intended to reflect the position under s.2(1) of the Misrepresentation Act 1967, though using the language of the criminal law defence in the Regulations. ¹²³² Thus under reg.27J:

“(5)

A consumer does not have the right to damages if the trader proves that—the occurrence of the prohibited practice in question was due to—a mistake,

(a)

(i)

(ii)

reliance on information supplied to the trader by another person,

(iii)

the act or default of a person other than the trader,

(iv)

an accident, or

(v) another cause beyond the trader’s control, and the trader took all reasonable precautions and exercised all due diligence to avoid the occurrence of the prohibited practice.”

(b)

Damages in respect of payments made as a result of prohibited practices

38-186

The right to damages is not confined to consumers who have entered a contract with a trader as the result of a prohibited practice: it extends to consumers who have made a payment to the trader in respect of a product as the result of a prohibited practice. This includes not only payments that were not in fact due but also payment of sums that were due. ¹²³³ There will seldom be a viable claim for financial loss in such cases, ¹²³⁴ but it is not hard to imagine cases in which the consumer should be compensated for distress caused by an aggressive practice, which consists of “harassment, coercion or undue influence”. ¹²³⁵

Relationship to existing law

38-187

Regulation 27L provides that:

“(1)

Nothing in this Part affects the ability of a consumer to make a claim under a rule of law or equity, or under an enactment, in respect of conduct constituting a prohibited practice.”

The only limitation in reg.27L is that the consumer may not recover compensation under both the Regulations and another rule or enactment. ¹²³⁶ There is no definition of “compensation” for these purposes, and the question is whether it is wider than merely money awards solely aimed at the indemnisation of the loss or harm caused to the consumer. It is submitted that “compensation” is wider than “damages” (which are normally based on loss ¹²³⁷) and, in particular, should be interpreted so as to cover “compensation orders” made by criminal courts, even though the courts take into account factors other than the harm caused to the victim. ¹²³⁸ This interpretation would fit with the intention of the Law Commissions, which foresaw that the consumer’s right to a discount could form part of such a compensation order, though the Regulations do not so provide. ¹²³⁹ Moreover, if this wider interpretation were taken, it would mean that any award of a discount under the Regulations (despite their possibly penal aspect) would also count as “compensation” for the purposes of any award of damages, whether under the Regulations themselves or under the general law.

Misrepresentation Act 1967 s.2 disapplied

38-188

However, the 2014 Regulations also amend the Misrepresentation Act 1967 so that a consumer who has a right to redress under Pt 4A of the 2008 Regulations in respect of the conduct constituting misrepresentation no longer has a right to damages under s.2 of the Act. ¹²⁴⁰ The thinking behind this disapplication was that leaving two possible grounds for consumer claims would lead to greater complexity in litigation. ¹²⁴¹ Nevertheless, the disapplication in the 2014 Regulations is a very strange provision. Its effect is not merely to prevent consumers from claiming damages under s.2 of the 1967

Act where they have a right to damages under the 2008 Regulations, but where they have a right to redress, that is, including a right to unwind the contract or to a discount. This would not matter if it were not for the fact that a consumer could have a right to unwind the contract or to a discount but no right to damages under the 2008 Regulations, notably, where his or her loss was not foreseeable by the trader at the time of engaging in the prohibited practice. In this situation, the consumer would almost certainly have a right to a discount ¹²⁴² (the right to unwind may have expired ¹²⁴³) and therefore could not rely on s.2 in order to recover damages under the more generous (if criticised) rule of remoteness there applicable. ¹²⁴⁴ Moreover, apart from different rules of remoteness of damage, other differences between claims under s.2 and claims for damages under the 2008 Regulations may make them more or less attractive to a consumer depending on context. So, while the right to damages under the Regulations may compensate the consumer's "alarm, distress or physical inconvenience or discomfort", these heads of loss are less clearly recoverable under s.2 ¹²⁴⁵; on the other hand, while the limitation periods for rights to redress and claims under s.2 are both six years, the time of accrual may differ. ¹²⁴⁶ And while contributory negligence may be a defence to a claim under s.2, ¹²⁴⁷ it is less clear that such a defence would apply to a claim for damages under Pt 4A. ¹²⁴⁸ Certainly, the drawing of an exclusive line between claims under s.2 and the consumer's right to redress under the 2008 Regulations places considerable stress on the scope of availability of the new rights, which, as has been seen, is complex. In particular, where the contract does not concern a "product" as redefined for the purposes of Pt 4A, ¹²⁴⁹ the consumer may claim only under s.2 and not under the 2008 Regulations.

Fraud and breach of contract

38-189

The disapplication of s.2 where the consumer has a right to redress under Pt 4A does not apply to the consumer's right to damages for fraud nor to any remedies for breach of contract. Thus if it can be shown that the trader's statement amounted to an element of the description of the product, ¹²⁵⁰ or (because it was information that the trader was required to give under the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 ¹²⁵¹) it was "included as a term of the contract", ¹²⁵² or it amounted to an express term of the contract, ¹²⁵³ and that the statement was false, the consumer may have the right to terminate the contract and will have a right to damages, though the damages must not include compensation awarded under Pt 4A of the 2008 Regulations. ¹²⁵⁴ It may be difficult to determine whether, or to what extent, a consumer who has been awarded a discount has been compensated in respect of the difference between the value the product would have had if it had complied with the contract and its actual value. ¹²⁵⁵

Rescission for misrepresentation, duress or undue influence

38-190

Unlike the right to damages under s.2 of the Misrepresentation Act, the consumer's right to rescind the contract for misrepresentation ¹²⁵⁶ is not taken away by the 2014 Regulations; nor are any rights to rescind the contract for duress or undue influence. ¹²⁵⁷ There may be occasions when the consumer will want to rely on this remedy, rather than on the right to unwind the contract under the 2008 Regulations. ¹²⁵⁸

Waiver or contractual exclusion of rights to redress

38-191

Can the consumer's rights to redress be lost by "waiver" (including, for example, affirmation of the contract so as to lose the right to unwind) or by contractual agreement, whether in the original consumer contract between the parties or subsequently? Unlike the position under the general law of misrepresentation where contract terms which exclude liability for misrepresentation are subject to a test of reasonableness, ¹²⁵⁹ the 2008 Regulations are silent on this specific issue, as is the 2005 Directive—unsurprisingly given that the Directive puts aside "contract law" from its scope. ¹²⁶⁰

However, the 2008 Regulations provide that:

“Except as provided by Part 4A, an agreement shall not be void or unenforceable by reason only of a breach of these Regulations.” ¹²⁶¹

This provision reflects the earlier (and still residual) position that the 2008 Regulations (following the 2005 Directive) do not affect “contract law”, while excepting the situations where Pt 4A does affect contracts, notably, by the grant of rights to unwind the contract, a discount and damages. ¹²⁶² What this means is that the commission of an unfair commercial practice within the meaning of the 2008 Regulations does not itself affect the enforceability of any agreement made between a consumer or a trader except as provided by Pt 4A: it leaves open, therefore, the unenforceability of a contract term or contractual agreement which seeks to exclude or modify the effect of the rights to redress under Pt 4A. In the absence of express provision in the 2008 Regulations, it is submitted that such a contract term in the original consumer contract would fall under the general test of unfairness of terms in consumer contracts as long as it was not “individually negotiated” or, after the coming into force of the Consumer Rights Act 2015, whether it was or not. ¹²⁶³ On the other hand, where a consumer concluded a contract with a trader whose “main subject matter” was to settle or otherwise exclude the consumer’s right to redress under the 2008 Regulations, this contract would not fall to be tested for its fairness as it would fall within the special exclusion for terms that specify the main subject matter of the contract. ¹²⁶⁴ Such an agreement (if contractual) or a payment could themselves give rise to a right to redress under Pt 4A, subject to the general conditions for their availability and any particular conditions applicable to the particular right to redress in question. ¹²⁶⁵ More generally, however, the legislative control of unfair terms in consumer contracts would not affect any non-contractual waiver by the consumer of his or her rights under Pt 4A of the Regulations under the general law, though it could be argued that the absence of waiver or affirmation as an exception to the availability of the rights in Pt 4A means that these doctrines should not apply to the new consumer rights which are designed to be simpler and clearer than the general law. ¹²⁶⁶

^{1180.} Above, paras 38-166—38-176.

^{1181.} 2008 Regulations reg.27A(1).

^{1182.} 2008 Regulations regs 27E–27H; below, paras 38-180—38-182.

^{1183.} 2008 Regulations reg.27I; below, paras 38-183—38-184.

^{1184.} 2008 Regulations reg.27J; below, para.38-185.

^{1185.} Law Commissions Report (2012) para.8.19.

^{1186.} 2008 Regulations reg.27K.

^{1187.} 2008 Regulations reg.27K(5).

^{1188.} i.e. one under which the trader is to supply a product to the consumer: see above, para.38-165.

^{1189.} See above, paras 38-165—38-178.

^{1190.} The drafting of the 2008 Regulations is curious: rather than conferring a right to unwind that the consumer may exercise and that will expire if the consumer does not exercise it within a limited period, the consumer will have a right only if he or she exercises it within the period. If the consumer has the right and exercises it, the contract comes to an end: 2008 Regulations reg.27E(1)(a) and 27F(1).

^{1191.} 2008 Regulations reg.27E(1)(b).

- 1192. 2008 Regulations reg.27E(10).
- 1193. See 2008 Regulations reg.27E(3)–(7). cf. the 30 day period for the consumer’s “short-term right to reject” goods under the Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.20 and 22, below, para.38-481.
- 1194. Law Commissions Report (2012) para.8.77 considered that a consumer who abandons services mid-performance (e.g. a consumer who is misled about a theatre performance and who leaves before the final curtain call) should have a right to a full refund. However, the reason for excluding the right to unwind (with consequential refund) under the Regulations where services have been fully performed is far from clear, given that the prohibited practice may have resulted in the consumer contracting for services that were of no value to him or her even though fully completed, while in other cases a consumer may derive a considerable benefit from services that have only been performed in part yet be entitled to a refund of the whole price. Note, however, that in some circumstances the consumer may obtain a 100 per cent discount of the price (below, para.38-183) as foreseen by Law Commissions Report (2012) para.8.78.
- 1195. Note that the 2008 Regulations clearly contemplate the consumer being entitled to reject digital content, whereas under the Consumer Rights Act 2015 Ch.3, a consumer who has been supplied digital content that does not conform to the statutory requirements has no right to reject, the drafters having taken the view that there cannot be a right to reject when there is nothing to give back: see Consumer Rights Act 2015 ss.42 especially at 42(7), below, para.38-521. It is not clear how digital content that is supplied on a tangible medium is to be treated under the 2008 Regulations, as goods or as digital content. It seems better to view them as goods, so that the consumer must make the tangible medium available for collection by the trader, but if the digital content was to be available to the consumer for only a limited period to regard the goods as “fully consumed” when the period expires, so that the consumer will lose the right to unwind just as with other types of digital content. This distinction would accord with the treatment of digital content under the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 (SI 2013/3134) (above, paras 38-057 et seq.). The 2013 Regulations provide that a consumer who has concluded an off-premises or distance contract for the supply of digital content not on a tangible medium with a right of cancellation, but then qualify this where the trader begins performance with the express consent of the consumer and with an acknowledgement that the right to cancel will be lost: 2013 Regulations reg.36(1) and (2), above, para.38-110.
- 1196. 2008 Regulations reg.27E(8)–(9).
- 1197. 2008 Regulations reg.27F(1)(a). It is not clear whether this would affect obligations that are normally intended to survive termination or avoidance of the contract, such as obligations of confidentiality.
- 1198. 2008 Regulations reg.27F(1)(b); see further below.
- 1199. 2008 Regulations reg.27F(1)(c). Under other legislation the term “contract for the supply of goods” includes contracts for work and materials, which will result in the goods being incorporated into other goods (as when parts are used to repair a car) or land (as in a building contract) (e.g. under the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982 s.1); under the Consumer Rights Act 2015, the contract will be regarded as a mixed contract, partly for the supply of goods and partly for services, see ss.1(3)–(5) below, paras 38-450 and 38-454. The 2008 Regulations also refer to a “mixed contract”, i.e. “a contract relating to a product which consists of any two or more of goods, a service, digital content, immoveable property or rights”, but only for the purposes of setting the “relevant day” for the start of the 90-day period for the right to unwind: reg.27E(5) and (6). If the goods cannot readily be detached (cf. Borden (UK) Ltd v Scottish Timber Products Ltd [1979] 3 W.L.R. 672, CA; Handy Lennox (Industrial Engines) Ltd v Grahame Puttick [1984] 2 All E.R. 152 (QBD)), it can be said that they will have ceased to have an independent existence and therefore should be treated as “fully consumed” within reg.27E(8)(a), with the result that the consumer has no right to redress.
- 1200. 2008 Regulations reg.27F(3). Law Commissions Report (2012) paras 8.83–8.96 rejecting an analogy with the then applicable position under Sale of Goods Act 1979 s.48C(3). This provision is reflected in the “final right to reject” in the Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.24(8)–24(10), below, para.38-484.

1201. 2008 Regulations reg.27F(4)–(6).

1202. 2008 Regulations reg.27F(7)–(10).

1203. Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 (SI 2013/3134) regs 33–38 above, paras 38-118—38-121.

1204. 2008 Regulations reg.27A(3) has the effect that contracts under which “the trader supplies or agrees to supply a product to the consumer as well as paying or agreeing to pay the consumer” (such as part-exchange contracts) are not “consumer to business” contracts; they may instead count as “business to consumer” contracts: above, para.38-165. There are special provisions for “unwinding” contracts under which the consumer has transferred something other than money: see 2008 Regulations reg.27F(4)–(5).

1205. The phrase “treat the contract as at an end” seems to be used here in a different sense from its use in the Consumer Rights Act 2015. Under the Act, it is assumed that a consumer may enjoy “a right to treat the contract as at an end” for breach of an express term and for this purpose “treating a contract as at an end means treating it as repudiated”: Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.19(11)(e) and 19(13) (goods contracts); s.54(7)(f) (services contracts), that is, what is often called termination for breach of contract, which is coupled with a right to damages for breach of contract. The 2015 s.20(4) Act also sees its special consumer rights to reject goods as involving the treating of the contract as at an end and may be accompanied with damages: 2015 Act ss.19(3), (4), 10 and (11)(a): see below, paras 38-478—38-486 and (on the general law) Vol.I, paras 24-001 et seq. It cannot be intended that a consumer who unwinds a consumer to business contract entered into as the result of a prohibited practice by a trader should recover damages for breach of contract; the consumer’s right to damages is governed by reg.27J, see below, para.38-185.

1206. 2008 Regulations 27K(5), applying the general six-year period applicable to actions founded on simple contract under s.6 of the Limitation Act 1980. It seems unlikely that the consumer will lose this right by inaction unless it is possible to infer an agreement (for good consideration) to abandon the right, or possibly a promissory estoppel which prevents the consumer from enforcing the right (see above, paras 4-086 et seq.), but see below, para.38-191 on the question whether these general exclusions of a claim by a consumer apply in the context of Pt 4A rights.

1207. 2008 Regulations reg.27G(6).

1208. Above, paras 38-165—38-178.

1209. 2008 Regulations reg.27H. The Law Commissions Report (2012) para.8.102 acknowledged that a payment made as a result of misleading actions or threats could be recovered under the general law of unjust enrichment, but this law was seen by consumer groups as “complex and difficult” and so the new law should make this recovery “more accessible”. On the general law see Vol.I, paras 29-033 et seq. (mistake) and 29-094 et seq. (compulsion).

1210. Nor is there any right to a discount in relation to consumer payments, below, para.38-183. On the other hand, this restriction limits the right to unwind the payment rather than the consumer’s right to redress more generally, so that the consumer who pays a sum that is due may have a right to damages under reg.27J: see below, para.38-185.

1211. The drafting here seems inconsistent with earlier provisions. In the case of a business to consumer contract, the consumer does not have a right to unwind at all unless the consumer notifies the trader within the stated period, etc. If the consumer has this right, unwinding then seems to follow automatically. (See above, para.38-180 n.1133.) But the intention behind the words “if the consumer has not exercised the right to unwind” seems clear enough.

- 1212. 2008 Regulations reg.27I(1). The fact that the consumer has not exercised the right to unwind in respect of the contract assumes that the consumer had such a right but did not exercise it. This means that a consumer who has made a payment which was due cannot enjoy a right of discount under reg.27I as he or she does not enjoy a right to unwind the contract under reg.27H in these circumstances: above, para.38-182.
- 1213. Law Commissions Report (2012) paras 8.125–8.135.
- 1214. 2008 Regulations reg.27I(4).
- 1215. cf. Law Commissions Report (2012) para.8.137 setting a lowest band of “0 per cent if [the prohibited practice is] negligible”.
- 1216. 2008 Regulations reg.27I(5).
- 1217. Law Commissions Report (2012) para.8.133.
- 1218. 2008 Regulations reg.27I(6).
- 1219. See below, para.38-184.
- 1220. Note that damages recoverable under the 2008 Regulations reg.27J may not include “the difference between the market price of a product and the amount payable for it under a contract”: reg.27J(3), see below, para.38-185.
- 1221. See below, paras 38-483, 38-519 and 38-542 for price reduction in the context of failures in conformity of goods, digital content and services under the Consumer Rights Act 2015.
- 1222. Consumer Redress for Misrepresentation and Aggressive Practices: a Joint Consultation Paper (LCCP 199/SLCDP 149, 2011), paras 14.49–14.50. The Report does not explicitly depart from the emphasis on detriment, though it states that the level of discount should depend on: “(1) the impact of the commercial practice on the value of the product; (2) the trader’s behaviour; and (3) the amount of time that has passed ... ” (para.8.136). The same factors are listed in reg.27I(5), but the behaviour of the person who engaged in the practice is now listed first.
- 1223. Above, para.38-175.
- 1224. See para.26-045. Law Commission Report, Aggravated, Exemplary and Restitutionary Damages Law Com. No.247 (1997), Pt II.
- 1225. See below, para.38-185.
- 1226. cf. Law Commission Report, Aggravated, Exemplary and Restitutionary Damages Law Com. No.247 (1997), para.5.25.
- 1227. 2008 Regulations reg.27L(2)(b) and see below, para.38-187.
- 1228. reg.27J(1)(a) and (3). The Law Commissions described the loss recoverable as “consequential economic loss”, giving the example of a consumer “who is sold a new bed in an aggressive way and then throws away the old bed to make room for it”: Report (2012) para.8.145. The relevant measure of damages under Pt 4A therefore follows the “reliance measures” rather than the “expectation measure” of damages: Report (2012) para.8.3–8.15.
- 1229. reg.27J(1)(b).
- 1230. See reg.27J(1)(a) and (b).
- 1231. reg.27J(4).
- 1232. Law Commissions Report (2012) 8.165–8.173; 2008 Regulations reg.17(1), above, para.38-158.

- 1233. See above, para.38-165. There is no right to unwind nor to a discount if the payment was in fact due: above, para.38-182.
- 1234. In the case of a debt paid, the amount was already due, so there is unlikely to be financial loss, unless, possibly, where in order to pay the trader the consumer resorts to an (even more) expensive form of credit such a pay-day loan. In the case of a payment of a sum that was not due, the normal remedy would be to unwind the settlement agreement. In addition, the exclusion of damages for the difference between the market price of a product and the amount payable for it under a contract (reg.27J(3)), read with the definition of “product” in cases of payment (reg.2(9)), seems to preclude an award under reg.27J for loss caused by paying sums that were not due.
- 1235. 2008 Regulations reg.7, above, para.38-173.
- 1236. reg.27L(2).
- 1237. A possible exception could be punitive damages, but these are not awarded in claims for breach of contract, though they may exceptionally be awarded for claims in tort: Vol.I, para.26-044.
- 1238. Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s.130(4). While the making of an order “is not part of the sentence of the court strictly speaking”, there is an “important relationship between the sentence of the court and the desirability or otherwise of making one”: R. v Brogan [1975] 1 All E.R. 879, 881, 880 per Scarman J.
- 1239. Law Commissions Report (2012) para.5.19 which refers to the consumer’s right to unwind as well as the right to a discount. The power of a criminal court under the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s.130(4) extends to the award of “such amount as the court considers appropriate, having regard to any evidence and to any representations that are made by or on behalf of the accused or the prosecutor” but, as the Law Commissions Report, para.2.43 noted, this has been interpreted restrictively by the courts so as to preclude an award where there was neither agreement nor sufficient proof of the amount of damage: R. v Vivian [1979] 1 W.L.R. 291, 293; R. v Horsham Justices, ex p. Richards [1985] 1 W.L.R. 986.
- 1240. SI 2014/870 reg.5 inserting new Misrepresentation Act 1967 s.2(4). It is provided that this disapplication does not affect claims under Consumer Credit Act 1974 s.75(1) against a creditor under a debtor-creditor-supplier agreement: 1967 Act s.2(5) (as inserted). See below, para.39-032.
- 1241. Law Commissions Report (2012) paras 7.133–7.134.
- 1242. The exception would be where the prohibited practice is not sufficiently serious to qualify as “minor” in the first band of reg.27I(4)(a), above, para.38-183.
- 1243. Above, para.38-180.
- 1244. On this rule see Vol.I, para.7-078.
- 1245. They are recoverable in the tort of deceit (Vol.I, para.7-068) and the fiction of fraud in the Misrepresentation Act 1967 s.2(1) (Vol.I, para.7-078) suggests that they should therefore equally be recoverable in this context.
- 1246. 2008 Regulations reg.27K(5) provides that the period is “as if it were an action founded on simple contract”, thereby attracting a six-year period from the time of accrual of the cause of action, which is normally the breach of contract: Vol.I, para.28-032. Accrual of the cause of action in tort for the purposes of s.2 Misrepresentation Act is often the date when the contract is entered into, but may be a later date: Vol.I, para.28-034.

- 1247. Gran Gelato Ltd v Richcliff (Group) Ltd [1992] Ch. 560, Vol.I, para.7-082.
- 1248. The question would turn on whether the trader's liability to damages under the Regulations qualifies as "fault" as being an "act or omission which gives rise to a liability in tort" within the meaning of s.1(1) and s.4 of the Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act 1945. At no point do the 2008 Regulations classify the trader's liability under reg.27J as tortious, and the limitation period designated is the period applicable to claims under a simple contract (reg.27K(5)); on the other hand the consumer's rights to damages under reg.27J arises from the commission of a "prohibited practice" rather than from any breach of contract.
- 1249. Above, para.38-164.
- 1250. e.g. Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.11 (formerly Sale of Goods Act 1979 s.13).
- 1251. SI 2013/3134.
- 1252. SI 2013/3134 regs 9(3), 10(5) and 13(6); Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.11(4) and 12(2) (goods contracts); ss.36(3) and 37(2) (digital content contracts) and 50(3) (services contracts): see above, para.38-100 and below, paras 38-464—38-465, 38-508—38-509 and 38-535 respectively.
- 1253. See Vol.I, para.13-003.
- 1254. reg.27L(2)(a).
- 1255. See above, para.38-187.
- 1256. On the right to rescission generally see Vol.I, paras 7-111 et seq. The relationship between a consumer's right to redress and the application of s.2(2) of the 1967 Act (damages in lieu of rescission, on which see Vol.I, paras 7-104 et seq.) is not clear. Section 2(4) of the 1967 Act (as inserted by the 2014 Regulations reg.5) provides that "this section does not entitle a person to be paid damages in respect of a misrepresentation if the person has a right to redress under Part 4A [of the 2008 Regulations] in respect of the conduct constituting the misrepresentation" (emphasis added). This could be said to rule out the possibility of an award of damages under s.2(2) as well as damages under s.2(1), unless the discretionary element of s.2(2) were held to mean that a person awarded damages under s.2(2) is not "entitled" to them under the section. If s.2(4) does rule out damages under s.2(2) where a consumer claimant has a right to redress, then it is submitted that the court would no longer enjoy a discretion to refuse rescission, as it could no longer "declare the contract subsisting and award damages in lieu of rescission" as provided by s.2(2).
- 1257. On which see Vol.I, paras 8-054 et seq., 8-101.
- 1258. Above, para.38-181.
- 1259. Misrepresentation Act 1967 s.3 on which see Vol.I, paras 7-143—7-154, which also explains the invalidity of any term which purports to exclude liability for personal fraud. After the coming into effect of the Consumer Rights Act 2015 Pt 2 s.3 of the 1967 will no longer apply to terms of consumer contracts, but they will instead be subject to its own general test of unfairness under s.62 of the 2015 Act: see below, paras 38-341 and 38-358 et seq.
- 1260. 2005 Directive art.3(2), above, para.38-148. cf. Consumer Rights Directive 2011 art.25 which provides that "consumers may not waive the rights conferred on them by the national measures transposing" the Directive, above, para.38-148.
- 1261. 2008 Regulations reg.29.
- 1262. Above, paras 38-160 et seq.
- 1263. Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999 (SI 1999/2083) reg.5, below paras

38-220 et seq.; Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.62(4) and (5), below, paras 38-358 et seq.

1264. SI 1999/2083 reg.6(2)(a), below, paras 38-224 et seq.; Consumer Rights Act 2015 s.64, below, paras 38-363 et seq.

1265. So, for example, a right to unwind a payment made would not exist in the case of payments which were owed under such a settlement contract, but a right to damages could do so: above, paras 38-182 and 38-186.

1266. Above, para.38-160.

Chitty on Contracts 32nd Ed.
Consolidated Mainwork Incorporating Second Supplement
Volume II - Specific Contracts
Chapter 38 - Consumer Contracts
Section 6. - The Control of Unfair Contract Terms
(a) - Introduction

The general position

38-192

English law has long taken the view that the principles of freedom of contract and the binding force of contracts in general rule out review of the fairness of either the contract as a whole or of particular terms of the contract. ¹²⁶⁷ As regards the fairness of particular contract terms, this general position at common law can be seen most explicitly in its approach to the validity of exemption clauses: for once agreed by the parties to a contract, they are effective to exclude liability both in contract and in tort, ¹²⁶⁸ even extending to liability for causing death and personal injuries by negligence. ¹²⁶⁹ The courts have tempered this position by the development of demanding tests for the incorporation of terms, especially exemption clauses, ¹²⁷⁰ restrictive approaches to the interpretation of standard terms contra proferentem, ¹²⁷¹ and the recognition of exceptions (for example, as regards the exclusion of remedies for personal fraud ¹²⁷² and penalty clauses ¹²⁷³), but these rules remain relatively restrained exceptions to the general position.

Legislative control of the fairness of contract terms

38-193

By contrast, the impact of legislation on the fairness of contract terms has been very considerable and particularly so in the case of consumer contracts. Sometimes this control has been effected by the creation of rights or obligations on the parties to particular types of contracts which are not susceptible of contrary exclusion by agreement, notably as regards contracts of consumer credit, ¹²⁷⁴ tenancy ¹²⁷⁵ and employment. ¹²⁷⁶ Other than this regulation of particular types of contract, before 1995 the most important restriction on the effectiveness of contract terms was the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977, which subjected exemption and limitation clauses (and certain related clauses) both as regards persons "dealing as consumer" ¹²⁷⁷ and commercial parties to considerable restrictions. ¹²⁷⁸ While this Act also imposed a requirement of reasonableness on the effectiveness of indemnity clauses in consumer contracts, ¹²⁷⁹ until the UK was required to implement the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Directive 1993 (the "1993 Directive"), ¹²⁸⁰ English law contained no system of control on the basis of fairness applicable to all or most other types of contract term. The 1993 Directive requires Member States to put in place two types of control. First, very broadly, it requires that terms in all types of consumer contracts that have not been "individually negotiated" are binding on consumers only if they are "fair", ¹²⁸¹ with the important exception of terms which define the main subject matter of the contract and as regards the price/quality ratio, provided that they are plain and intelligible (the "core exclusion") ¹²⁸²; it also requires more generally that written terms be plain and intelligible. ¹²⁸³ Secondly, it requires Member States to put in place adequate and effective means to prevent the continued use of unfair terms in consumer contracts. ¹²⁸⁴ The 1993 Directive requires only "minimum harmonisation" and so in principle allows Member States to retain or adopt more protective measures for consumers in national laws within its scope. ¹²⁸⁵

UK legislation implementing the 1993 Directive

38-194

The 1993 Directive was first implemented into UK law by the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1994,¹²⁸⁶ but these regulations were revoked and replaced by the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999 (“the 1999 Regulations”).¹²⁸⁷ The main differences between the two sets of regulations were that the 1999 Regulations followed even more closely the terms of the Directive’s provisions¹²⁸⁸ and they made provision to enable a number of “qualifying bodies” to apply to the courts for injunctive relief against the use or recommendation for use of unfair terms, whereas under the 1994 Regulations this could be done only by the Director General of Fair Trading.¹²⁸⁹ Implementation of the 1993 Directive in this way left unaffected the controls on contract terms in the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977, some of whose provisions governed consumer contracts as understood by the Regulations.¹²⁹⁰

Reform proposals

38-195

The existence of two overlapping legislative regimes governing unfair contract terms attracted considerable criticism and in 2005 the English and Scottish Law Commissions published a joint report recommending major legislative reform.¹²⁹¹ Their proposals included the creation of a unified legislative regime for the control of unfair terms in consumer contracts, putting together the controls provided by the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 and the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999; preserving the protection given by the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 in business contracts; and extending existing protection against unfair contract terms for consumers to small businesses. Meanwhile at the European level, the European Commission proposed changes to the 1993 Directive, placing it in a wider proposal for a Consumer Rights Directive which would have seen the provisions on unfair terms in consumer contracts in the 1993 Directive (with amendments) change from requiring minimum harmonisation to the “full harmonisation” of national laws.¹²⁹² However, the Consumer Rights Directive as enacted in 2011 required no change to the substance of the existing regime of control under the 1993 Directive,¹²⁹³ although one of its provisions may be useful in interpreting aspects of the 1993 Directive.¹²⁹⁴ This left the way open for the UK legislator to reform the national controls on unfair terms without waiting for new legislation at the EU level.

Consumer Rights Act 2015

38-196

🚩 The Consumer Rights Act 2015¹²⁹⁵ 🚩 (“the 2015 Act” or “the Act”) reflects the view of the Law Commissions and the UK government that UK consumer law (and especially consumer contract law) is unnecessarily complex, at times inconsistent (especially in relation to the two sets of legislative provisions governing unfair contract terms¹²⁹⁶) and scattered in an unhelpful way across a series of legislative enactments, some primary legislation and some secondary, some implementing EU legislation and some purely domestic.¹²⁹⁷ However, the 2015 Act does not follow the Law Commissions’ earlier strategy of placing the controls on unfair contract terms in a single Act and, to a considerable extent, a single framework,¹²⁹⁸ but instead divides the control of unfair terms sharply between terms found in consumer contracts (regulated by the 2015 Act, principally in Pt 2) and terms (principally exemption clauses¹²⁹⁹) in other contracts (regulated by the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977). Moreover, the 2015 Act is also concerned to provide new, dedicated rules for consumer rights in respect of goods, digital content and services (Pt 1 of the Act), and as a result deletes provisions governing consumer contracts from other more general legislation, notably, the Sale of Goods Act 1979.¹³⁰⁰ The 2015 Act also introduces significant reforms to the law governing the enforcement of consumer protection laws, domestic and EU, with amendments, inter alia, of Pt 8 of the Enterprise Act 2002 so as to create a new possibility for courts to order “enhanced consumer measures” to individuals affected by breach of a consumer protection measure.¹³⁰¹ These changes affect the powers of regulators in respect of the prevention of unfair contract terms. In summary, the 2015 Act’s strategy in relation to unfair contract terms has four aspects¹³⁰²: first, it re-implements the Directive on unfair terms in consumer contracts, following closely the Directive’s general approach, but modifying some of its rules in a way more protective of consumers; secondly, it amends the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 so as no longer to apply to terms in “consumer contracts” or “consumer notices” as defined by the new Act; thirdly, it provides that the trader’s liability arising from breach of new statutory terms in “goods contracts”, “digital content contracts” and “services contracts” governing the quality, fitness for purpose, etc. of their subject matter do not bind the consumer¹³⁰³; and, fourthly, the Act extends the enforcement measures (injunctions against, and undertakings, by traders¹³⁰⁴) which it puts in place for the control of unfair terms reflecting the Directive to contract terms rendered not binding on consumers under its provisions more generally, as well as to “consumer notices” also rendered not binding on consumers under the Act.¹³⁰⁵

Temporal application of the 2015 Act’s provisions on unfair terms

38-197

 The Act received Royal Assent on March 26, 2015; its substantive provisions governing unfair contract terms were brought into force on October 1, 2015.¹³⁰⁶  The Act provides that the Secretary of State may make “transitional, transitory or saving provision in connection with the coming into force of any provision of this Act” by order made by statutory instrument.¹³⁰⁷ Parts 1 and 2 of the Act were brought into force generally so as to apply to contracts made on or after October 1, 2015.¹³⁰⁸  Thus contracts made before October 1, 2015, and notices that might apply to events that occurred before that date, continue to be governed by the pre-Act law, i.e. the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contract Regulations 1999 and, so far as it affects consumers, the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977.

The structure of this section

38-198

